Born in Paris on September 5, 1831, Victorien Sardou studied medicine and later taught math, literature, and history; he worked as a journalist from 1850–1860. His first play, The Student's Tavern (1854), was a miserable failure, but by 1861 four of his works had been produced to some acclaim, and during that single year, five were running simultaneously. One of these, A SCRAP OF PAPER, secured the playwright's lifelong popularity.

The author of some seventy plays, Sardou has been referred to as the 19th century's ultimate showman. He possessed an acute theatrical sense, understanding his audience as a crowd that was to be entertained, and he rarely sought to do more. Although Sardou found inspiration in contemporary morality, DUMAS FILS saw him as a rival whose plays lacked moral instruction; for Sardou, change was not the object of art. In his stagecraft, if not in his social politics, he was nearly perfect: he practiced drama as a combination of literary artifice and carpentry, and as a formula in which plot took precedence over character. Sardou hybridized previous styles, organizing them under the structure of the well-made play and reinforcing the virtuosity of plot. His plays are not matters of character motivation, but of dramatic causation, mosaics of convenient moments that disregard unity of action: incident is heaped upon incident, consistently disguising the principal action, which only emerges in a manufactured denouement, often involving an inert object like the titular scrap of paper or a fan in Tosca. Sardou bore no illusions about the shallowness of his social observations: his characters are caricatures, drawn very broadly and literally—he sketched types he saw around Paris, preferring general form to precise detail. His characters float on his plots much as his sketches floated on paper.

Sardou was praised for giving spectators what they wanted, without shocking, scolding, or duping them. For him, suspense relied on the tenuousness of scenes whose action consists of misunderstandings one question away from being resolved, or objects one step away from being found. However much he courted popular taste, he did not compromise his art, and he often turned to the current historical moment for inspiration. For example, when Baron Haussmann was redesigning the streets of Paris, Sardou gave The New House, a satire of an architect's ambitions. When civil discord was brewing around the Franco-Prussian War, he wrote Homeland and Hate. Turning his attention to spectacle toward the end of his career, Sardou successfully presented Robespierre, a historical extravaganza with a cast of sixty-nine, plus some two hundred and fifty extras. Dante included a cast of forty-nine and the most advanced stage effects of the period. Although the 1880s saw a rise in interest in the psychological implications of NATURALISM, Sardou weathered its influence by redefining the COMEDY of intrigue with wit, imagination, and endless vigor.

Although critics have panned Sardou for shallow investigation, lack of originality, vulgarity, and a DRAMATURGY of contrivance and implausibility, his works were widely produced across Europe and in America during his lifetime. He was an architect more than a student of modern manners, and his technical virtuosity has rarely been matched. Sardou died in Marly-le-Roi, on November 8, 1908.

[See also France]

SELECT PLAYS: The Students' Tavern (La taverne des étudiants, 1854); The First Arms of Figaro (Les premières armes de Figaro, 1859); The Nervous People (Les gens nerveux, 1859); Our Friends (Nos intimes, 1860); A Scrap of Paper (Les pattes de mouche, 1860); The Strong Women (Les femmes fortes, 1860); Progress (Les ganaches, 1862); The Black Devils (Les diables noirs, 1863); The Neighbor's Apples (Les pommes du voisin, 1864); The Benoît Family (La famille Benoît, 1865); The Old Boys (Les vieux garçons, 1865); The New House (Maison neuve, 1866); Our Good Villagers (Nos bons villageois, 1866); Seraphine (Séraphine, 1868); Homeland (Patrie, 1869); Fernande (1870); Rabagas (1872); Hatred (La haine, 1874); Diplomacy (Dora, 1877); Daniel Rochat (1880); Let's Get a Divorce! (Divorçons, 1880); Odette (1881); Fédora (Fédora, 1882); Theodora (Théodora, 1884); Georgette (1885); The Crocodile (Le crocodile, 1886); La Tosca (Tosca, 1887); Cleopatra (Cléopâtre, 1891); Thermidor (1891); Madame Shameless (Madame Sans-Gêne, 1893); Gismonda (1898); Pamela (Paméla, 1898);

Robespierre (1899); Dante (1903); The Track (La piste, 1906); The Affair of the Poisons (L'affaire des poisons, 1907)

FURTHER READING

Chandler, Frank Wadleigh. The Contemporary Drama of France. Boston: Little, Brown, 1920.

Doumic, René. Portraits d'écrivains [Portraits of Writers]. Paris: Librairie Académique, 1911.

Filon, Augustin. The Modern French Drama. Tr. by Janet E. Hogarth. London: Chapman and Hall, 1898. Originally published as De Dumas à Rostand: esquisse du mouvement dramatique contemporain [From Dumas to Rostand: Sketch of the Contemporary Dramatic Movement]. (Paris: A. Fayard & cie, 1898).

Mauris, Maurice. French Men of Letters. New York: Appleton, 1880.

Matt Di Cintio

SAROYAN, WILLIAM (1908–1981)

I seem to insist that people are good, that living is good, that decency is right, that good is not only achievable but inevitable—and there does not appear to be any justification for this.

—William Saroyan, in a preface to Don't Go Away Mad, 1949

Probably the best clue to understanding the writings of William Saroyan can be found in the statement above from Don't Go Away Mad (1949), a play set in a hospital for incurable diseases. An honest eccentric whose view of life was at once exciting, exasperating, and penetrating in its abrupt simplicity, Saroyan believed in dreams. As Joe, the protagonist in THE TIME OF YOUR LIFE, says: “I believe in dreams sooner than statistics.” Understandably, such an approach to humanity coupled with Saroyan’s happy-go-lucky vision of the theater utterly befuddled his critics. Yet the play won both the Pulitzer Prize and the Drama Critics’ Circle Award. Saroyan, characteristically, refused the Pulitzer Prize on the grounds that the commercial world should not patronize art.

Born on August 31, 1908, in Fresno, California, Saroyan was the child of Armenian immigrants. At his father’s death in 1911, poverty forced his mother to place her children in an orphanage for five years. Reunited with his family in an Armenian neighborhood where physical work was glorified, Saroyan revealed his individuality in his determination to become a writer. When he published the story “The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze” in 1934, which brought him international attention, he quit his job. He made his greatest contributions to American literature and the theater between 1934 and 1943, when he was inducted into the army and married.

Saroyan’s fascination with the stage began in 1939 and never ended, although after World War II, audiences had generally lost interest in all but a few of his early plays. MY HEART’S IN THE HIGHLANDS (1939) seemed to startle everyone. While theatrical offerings during the 1930s ranged from such entertainments as Ann Nichols’s sentimental COMEDY ABIE’S IRISH ROSE (1937) to JOHN HOWARD LAWSON’s aggressive Marxism, there was a pervading political atmosphere that Saroyan’s plays whimsically shattered. Interested in fantasy rather than mobilization, he found discipline of any kind—political, social, or aesthetic—quite beyond him. Seemingly at odds with everything the theater was then promoting, he touched something in that amorphous condition of humanity in ways that held tremendous appeal. With unbounded faith in the goodness of people, he insisted on beauty in life.

Before going into the army, Saroyan had seen ten of his plays produced and four of them favorably received. My Heart’s in the Highlands opened on April 13, 1939, with the oldest message in the world, according to Saroyan: “It is better to be a good human being than to be a bad one.” The Time of Your Life opened at the Shubert Theatre in October and quickly became a modern American classic. In Love’s Old Sweet Song, 1940, Saroyan continued his optimistic saga, centering on a family of migrant workers from Oklahoma who settle on a woman’s lawn in Bakersfield, California. The Beautiful People, 1941, again exploited the sweetness of people. In all of these plays, the plots are so sketchy and improbable that their insignificance seems basic, yet the compelling emotions they evoke reveals Saroyan as a master of the showman’s art.

After the war, plagued by marital upheavals, gambling, and other personal problems, Saroyan essentially lost his theater audience. Only The Cave Dwellers (1957), in which a group of virtuous people squat in an old theater building (representing the world) and discover that all is good, reached Broadway. From 1944 through 1980, he produced or published twenty-eight more plays, plus a number of television and radio plays, all reflecting his buoyant optimism and sentimentality but falling short of his prewar efforts. Saroyan, however, remained a remarkably prolific writer, mainly publishing novels and reminiscences. At a time when optimism and innocence were becoming suspect in America, he created a brave new world without much else. He died on May 18, 1981, in Fresno, having outlived much of his fame, and left much of his fortune to the William Saroyan Foundation.

[See also United States, 1920–1940]

PLAYS: My Heart’s in the Highlands (1939); The Hungerers (1939); The Time of Your Life (1939); The Great American Goof (1940); Hero of the World (1940); Love’s Old Sweet Song (1940); The Ping-Pong Game (1940); Radio Play (1940); Something About a Soldier (1940); A Special Announcement (1940); Subway Circus (1940); Sweeney in the Trees (1940); Across the Board on Tomorrow Morning (1941); The Beautiful People (1941); Hello, Out There (1941); Jim Dandy (1941); The People with Light Coming Out of Them (1941); There’s Something I Got to Tell You (1941); The Agony of Little Nations (1942); Bad Men in the West (1942); Coming Through the Rye (1942); Elmer and Lilly (1942); Opera, Opera (1942); The Poetic Situation in America (1942); Razzle Dazzle, or, The Human Opera (1942); Talking to You (1942); Get Away Old Man (1943); Sam’s Ego House (1947); A Decent Birth, A Happy Funeral (1949); Don’t Go Away Mad (1949); The Son (1950); The Slaughter of the Innocents

(1952); The Oyster and the Pearl (1953); A Lost Child's Fireflies (1954); Once Around the Block (1956); The Cave Dwellers (1957); Ever Been in Love with a Midget (1957); The Accident (1958); Cat, Mouse, Man, Woman (1958); The Dogs, or, The Paris Comedy (1960); Sam, the Highest Jumper of Them All (1960); Settle Out of Court (with Henry Cecil, 1960); High Time Along the Wabash (1961); Ah Man (1962); The Doctor and the Patient (1963); The Handshakers (1963); The Playwright and the Public (1963); This I Believe (1963); Chris Sick, or, Happy New Year Anyway (1969); Making Money (1969); The New Play (1970); Armenians (1974); The Rebirth Celebration of the Human Race at Artie Zabala's Off-Broadway Theatre (1975); Assassinations (1979); Jim, Sam and Anna (1979); Play Things (1980)

FURTHER READING

- Calonne, David Stephen. William Saroyan: My Real Work Is Being. Chapel Hill: Univ. of North Carolina Press, 1973.
- Floan, Howard Russell. William Saroyan. New York: Twayne Publishers, 1966.
- Foard, Elizabeth C. William Saroyan: A Reference Guide. Boston: G. K. Hall and Co., 1989.
- Lee, Lawrence, and Barry Gifford. Saroyan: A Bibliography. New York: Harper & Row, 1984.
- Nathan, George Jean. The Magic Mirror. New York: Alfred Knopf, 1960.
- Whitmore, Jon. William Saroyan: A Research and Production Source Book. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1995.

Walter J. Meserve

SARRAUTE, NATHALIE (1900–1999)

Nathalie Sarraute first became known as a novelist associated with the nouveau roman (new novel) movement. A group of post-war writers, including Alain Robbe-Grillet, Michel Butor, ROBERT PINGET, and MARGUERITE DURAS, sought to define a new REALISM for the novel. They renovated the form with their use of spare or elliptical language, first-person narration, and modern psychology. Because their explorations often depicted dramatically charged studies of interior states of being, it was natural for some of the “new novelists,” most notably Duras, Sarraute, and Pinget, to extend their methods to dramatic form.

Born Nathalie Tcherniak in RUSSIA on July 18, 1900, Sarraute spent her childhood in Russia and FRANCE. She received a degree in English from the Sorbonne in Paris and married Raymond Sarraute in 1923. Her first major work, a series of short sketches entitled Tropisms (Tropismes, 1937) offers a clue how to read her other works. “Tropism” refers to an involuntary response—negative or positive—that an organism makes when stimulated. Sarraute saw this scientific concept as emblematic of all human interaction. All of her works—whether play, novel, or sketch—are, on one level, representative studies of banal experience that nevertheless demonstrate how the subtlest shifts in perception can cause great impacts.

Portrait, her second novel, was published in 1946, and featured a preface by JEAN-PAUL SARTRE in which he coined the term anti-novel to describe Sarraute's writing. This term could describe her plays as well. Anti-Aristotelian and antitheatrical, they are hazy slips of dramatic landscape. Her first play, tellingly titled The Silence (Le Silence), was published in 1964 and first performed three years later at the Théâtre de France, starring the grande dame of Parisian theater, Madeleine Renaud. It features a carefully nuanced world devoid of plot. Six of the seven characters are nameless, differentiated only as Woman 1, Woman 2, Man 1, and so forth. Voices stream in from unknown sources; small wonder that most of Sarraute's plays have been performed as radio dramas.

Her next play, The Lie (Le Mensonge) was broadcast in 1966. Isma (Izzum) was produced in 1973, It Is Beautiful (C'est beau) in 1975, and It Is There (Elle est là) 1980. Among these works, the only play to feature named characters is The Lie. Her last play, For a Yes or a No (Pour un oui ou pour un non) was performed as a radio drama in 1982. Sarraute died in Paris on October 19, 1999.

Sarraute's plays do not feature fantastic plots or romantic liaisons, nor do they reside in the brash, vertiginous worlds that her absurdist contemporaries created. Sarraute prefers to dwell in hidden layers, in sub-conversations, interior landscapes, and communicative silences. Perhaps because of her interest in the subtle and mundane, she received virtually no attention at the beginning of her career. In time, however, French critics embraced her austere vision, and her works began to be translated and performed worldwide. Her semiautobiographical novel L'Enfance (Childhood), published in 1983, was adapted for the stage and performed in New York City.

PLAYS: The Lie (Le Mensonge, 1967); The Silence (Le Silence, 1967); Isma (Izzum, 1970); It's Beautiful (C'est beau, 1975); It Is There (Elle est là, 1978); For a Yes or a No (Pour un oui ou pour un non, 1982)

FURTHER READING

- Besser, Gretchen Rous. Nathalie Sarraute. Boston: Twayne, 1979.
- Knapp, Bettina. Nathalie Sarraute. Amsterdam: Rodopi, 1994.
- Sarraute, Nathalie. Childhood. Tr. by Barbara Wright. London: Calder, 1984.
- Sarraute, Nathalie, with Simone Benmussa. Nathalie Sarraute, quêtes-vous? [Nathalie Sarraute, Who are you?]. Paris: Folio, 1987.
- Sarraute, Nathalie. Tropisms. Tr. by Maria Jolas. New York: George Braziller, 1963.

Kate Bredeson

SARTRE, JEAN-PAUL (1905–1980)

Widely considered the most popular philosopher in the two decades following World War II, Jean-Paul Sartre was also a playwright, novelist, biographer, and essayist of enormous cultural prominence. His elevated status, as Iris Murdoch noted in her fine book Sartre—Romantic Rationalist (1990), derives less from his standing as professional metaphysician than from his role as spokesperson for existentialism, a philosophical movement he helped turn, along with ALBERT CAMUS, into a mid-20th-century literary phenomenon. His plays—perhaps even more than his novels and certainly more than his philosophical essays—were critical in introducing existentialism to a broad public. Yet his reliance on more conventional DRAMATURGY (ranging from staid drawing-room drama to sensational MELODRAMA) places him at a level below his most admired contemporaries, such as BERTOLT BRECHT, SAMUEL BECKETT, and JEAN GENET, all of whom elaborated innovative theatrical forms for their radical visions.

Born on June 21, 1905, in Paris, FRANCE, Sartre grew up in the home of his maternal grandfather, a professor of German language at the Sorbonne. (His father died before he was born.) Sartre graduated first in his class from the prestigious École Normale Supérieure in 1929 with a doctorate in PHILOSOPHY. (Simone de Beauvoir, his short-term paramour and lifelong intellectual companion, ranked second in the same class.) After the university, Sartre served in the French Army from 1929 to 1931 before taking a position as a provincial schoolmaster at Le Havre. His academic career brought him to Berlin, GERMANY, where he studied the works of the German philosopher Edmund Husserl, whose theory of phenomenology was a crucial step in the development of existentialism, as well as the writings of Martin Heidegger, which significantly advanced existentialism from its phenomenological beginnings.

After shuffling through various provincial teaching positions, Sartre finally obtained an academic position in Paris, where he published Nausea (1938), a novel that contains the central preoccupations of his own existential thought. Written in diary form, the work tracks the alienated existence of Antoine Roquentin, a character who plunges headlong into the absurdity of human existence, confronting such quintessential Sartrean ideas as the contingency of phenomenon, the lack of relationship between language and reality, and the semiredemptive nature of art. Most important, however, is the protagonist's queasy recognition of humanity's fundamental freedom. Through the course of his depressive mental journey, Roquentin comes to see that, deprived of metaphysical purpose, our lives are our own responsibility, and that only our bad faith or false social conformity prevents us from accepting our autonomous birthright.

Nausea was soon followed by a collection of short stories, Le Mur (The Wall, 1939), which established Sartre's reputation as the Left Bank intellectual of the day. His literary rise, however, was delayed by the start of World War II. Sartre was taken prisoner with his military unit in 1940 and spent nine months in a German prison camp, where he continued his philosophical studies and even wrote a play for his fellow prisoners. Having falsified his military papers to show that he was unfit for service, he was sent back to France, where he joined the Resistance movement. But political commitment for Sartre meant first and foremost literary production, and the German Occupation turned out to be one of his most prolific periods. During these difficult years he managed not only to write his major philosophical work, Being and Nothingness (1943), but also to have two of his most important plays produced in Paris, THE FLIES (Les Mouches, 1943) and NO EXIT (Huis Clos, 1944).

The Flies, Sartre's first professionally performed play, was directed by Charles Dullin at the Théâtre de la Cité–Sarah Bernhardt in Paris. A retelling of Orestes' revenge against his mother, the drama recasts the ancient myth from a TRAGEDY of fate into a tragedy of freedom. Orestes not only consciously chooses to kill his mother Clytemnestra and her lover Aegistheus in retaliation for the murder of Orestes' father Agamemnon, he willingly assumes full responsibility for his decision in the hope that by embracing his "criminal" act, he can liberate the people of Argos from their submissive penitence. Though The Flies engages many of the core philosophical precepts of Sartrean freedom, the work spoke more powerfully to its original audience as a political commentary on Vichy France. Though the piece, like much of Sartre's dramatic writing, can seem plodding and overly didactic, it continues to resonate beyond its historical circumstances, offering a stirring advocacy of the necessity of resistance over collaboration in the face of authoritarian oppression.

Considered Sartre's dramatic masterpiece, No Exit was the first play to be produced in liberated Paris. Presented at the Vieux Colombier in September 1944, the tightly constructed one-act examines three characters that, confined together in the afterworld, are forced to contend with each other's assessments of their own shameful pasts. The notion that existence precedes essence—or as one character puts it, "You are your life, and nothing else"—takes on a grim finality as exculpatory aims and motives can no longer lighten the burden of the weak and wicked choices the trio made during their previous lives. The refusal to get false validation from one of his fellow damned chambermates provokes the journalist Garcin to utter the oft-quoted Sartrean line, "Hell is other people!" For Sartre the sentiment is not so much universal as it is symptomatic of a life lived in bad faith.

Sartre's other major plays include The Victors (Morts sans sépulture, 1946), The Respectful Prostitute (La Putain respectueuse, 1946), Dirty Hands (Les Mains Sales, 1948), The Devil and the Good Lord (Le Diable et le Bon Dieu, 1951), an adaptation of Dumas's Kean (1953), Nekrassov (1955), THE CONDEMNED OF ALTONA (Les Séquestrés d'Altona, 1959), and an adaptation of Euripides' Trojan Women (Les troyennes, 1965). Though consistently written in modern prose and marked by naturalistic dialogue, his dramatic oeuvre varies stylistically, borrowing freely from Greek tragedy, the well-made play, and bourgeois melodrama. In all cases, however, Sartre's theater is rooted in action, as opposed to character, which should come as no surprise given that his philosophy concerns itself more with concrete deeds than abstract desires. For Sartre existence implies the exercise of freedom. Accordingly, he envisioned a "theater of situations," in which a character is defined by his or her behavior within an often-violent set of extreme circumstances.

Sartre tends to organize his scenarios dialectically around complex social and political issues. For example, in The Respectful Prostitute, he tackles the hierarchical system of race and class in American society by ironically exploring the relationship of a white prostitute and a black man falsely accused of raping her. In The Devil and the Good Lord, he investigates contemporary religious hypocrisy through an atheistic parable set in Reformation Germany. But no matter the era in which the play is set, Sartre believed that the dramatized conflict should shed light on modern social dilemmas (Sartre on Theater, "On Dramatic Style," 1976).

Though Sartre's political solidarity inevitably rested with those whose freedom had been curtailed by history, his literary response was rarely programmatic or rigidly ideological. Sartre (1976) once compared the theater "to a sort of ring in which people battle for their rights." While his melodramatic dramaturgy doesn't quite aspire to Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel's ideal of tragedy as "the collision of equally justified powers" (1998), Sartre can't help allowing the human element to complicate simplistic moral pictures. In Dirty Hands, for example, the character of Hugo is an assassin whose crime was ostensibly committed for political reasons, yet flashbacks reveal that the motive may have been muddled by chance and misunderstanding. Did Hugo shoot his victim for compromising communist ideology or for wounding his friend's fragile sexual ego? Ambiguity provokes more questions than definitive answers. In The Condemned of Altona, the protagonist who has been living in voluntary confinement in his father's house turns out to be both a Nazi hero and someone whose entire life has been cruelly determined by historical and family pressures. In short, he is both perpetrator and casualty—a life that can only reasonably culminate in suicide.

Sartre was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1964, which he declined, claiming, "A writer must refuse to allow himself to be transformed into an institution." Sartre's radicalism, however, ultimately failed to manifest itself on the level of artistic form. As Martin Esslin observes in The Theater of the Absurd (1962), "While Sartre or Camus express the new content in the old conventions, the Theater of the Absurd goes a step further in trying to achieve a unity between its basic assumptions and the form in which they are expressed." Sartre may have been one of the most incisive admirers of Genet's theater (his biography, Saint Genet, is certainly an existential classic), but he was unable to stage a similar dramaturgical rebellion on the level of THE MAIDS and THE BALCONY. Instead, he deployed more orthodox dramatic structures to give trenchant analyses of 20th-century political, social, and philosophical quagmires, and for that he has earned a rightful place in the canon of modern drama. Sartre died on April 15, 1980, in Paris.

PLAYS: The Flies (Les Mouches, 1943); No Exit (Huis Clos, 1944); The Respectful Prostitute (La Putain respectueuse, 1946); The Victors (Morts

sans sepulture, 1946); Dirty Hands (Les Mains Sales, 1948); The Devil and the Good Lord (Le Diable et le Bon Dieu, 1951); an adaptation of Dumas's Kean (1953); Nekrassov (1955); The Condemned of Altona (Les Séquestrés d'Altona, 1959); an adaptation of Euripides' Trojan Women (Les troiennes, 1965)

FURTHER READING

- Bentley, Eric. The Playwright as Thinker. San Diego: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1946.
- Esslin, Martin. The Theatre of the Absurd. London: Eyre Methuen, 1962.
- Hegel, G. W. F. Aesthetics: Lectures on Fine Art, Volume II. Tr. by T. M. Knox. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1998.
- Howells, Christina. Sartre—The Necessity of Freedom. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1988.
- Kern, Edith, ed. Sartre—A Collection of Critical Essays. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1965.
- Murdoch, Iris. Sartre—Romantic Rationalist. London: Vintage, 1999.
- McCall, Dorothy. The Theatre of Jean-Paul Sartre. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1969.
- Sartre, Jean-Paul. What Is Literature? Tr. by Bernard Frechtman. London: Methuen, 1950.
- . Sartre on Theater. Tr. by Frank Jellinek. New York: Pantheon Books, 1976.
- . Basic Writings. Ed. by Stephen Priest. London: Routledge, 2001.
- Thody, Philip. Jean-Paul Sartre—A Literary and Political Study. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1960.
- Wood, Philip R. Understanding Jean-Paul Sartre. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1990.

Charles McNulty

SARUMPAET, RATNA (1949–)

Ratna Sarumpaet, INDONESIA's leading female playwright and director, was born in Tarutung, North Sumatra, in 1949, but moved to Jakarta as a teenager to attend the Catholic University. A performance of W. S. Rendra's The Barzanji Chant (Kasidah Berzanji, 1969) inspired her to study in his Workshop Theatre. She acted with Rendra and other leading theater artists in the early 1970s, taking inspiration from communal living, group improvisations, and staging, which indigenized foreign works by using regional costumes and performance techniques. In 1974 she founded her own production company, One Red Stage (Satu Merah Panggung). Just converted to Islam, she directed her own adaptation of Omar Khayyam's Rubayat, then versions of Hamlet and Romeo and Juliet using Batak cultural elements in 1975. Like many discouraged Indonesian theater artists, she turned to writing for film and television in the late 1970s. She returned to theater in 1989 with indigenous stagings of Othello and JEAN ANOUILH's ANTIGONE.

In the early 1990s, Sarumpaet began researching political persecution of women by the Indonesian government. In 1992, she wrote and produced a documentary on women's roles in Indonesian development, which the national television network refused to air. In May 1993, Marsinah, a young East Javanese woman, was sexually mutilated and murdered several days after leading a strike at the factory where she worked. A group of soldiers was arrested, but the Indonesian court (a far from independent judiciary) deferred justice. Marsinah became a symbol of the Suharto government's crimes, hypocrisies, and underlying corruption. Drawing from this real-life outrage, Sarumpaet wrote her best-known work: Marsinah: Songs from the Underworld (Marsinah: Nyanyian dari Bawah Tanah, 1993). Sarumpaet herself speaks through the character of Marsinah from beyond the grave in accusation of President Suharto. With this piece and a related series of monologues called Marsinah Accuses (Marsinah Menggugat, 1997), Sarumpaet changed from a purveyor of Western classics into an agitational performance artist of Reformasi, the Indonesian reform movement. Imprisoned several times in the mid-1990s for organizing political demonstrations, she became a popular celebrity after Suharto's resignation in 1998.

Although Sarumpaet is best known for her Marsinah plays, she wrote several other works denouncing Suharto between 1994 and 1998, and since his fall she continues to portray injustices that still plague Indonesia. In 2000 she wrote Alia, Wound on the Doorstep to Mecca (Alia, Luka Serambi Mekah), depicting the ongoing confrontation between freedom fighters and the Indonesian military in Aceh. In 2001 she wrote In the Long Darkness (Dalam Kegelapan Panjang) about the children of communist parents who were stigmatized after the anticommunist massacres that brought Suharto to power in 1965. Despite activism on the behalf of women's issues, Sarumpaet does not identify herself as a feminist (a controversial term in Indonesia). Rather, she feels compelled to call attention to crimes against humanity.

PLAYS: Rubayat of Omar Khayam (1974); Marsinah: Songs from Beneath the Earth (Marsinah: Nyanyian dari Bawah Tanah, 1993); Muning's Blood (Darah Muning, 1993); The Final Celebration (Pesta Terakhir, 1994); Shackled (Terpasung, 1995); Marsinah Accuses (Marsinah Menggugat 1997); The King (Sang Raja, 1998); Alia: Wound on the Doorstep of Mecca (Alia: Luka di Serambi Mekah, 2000); In the Long Darkness (Dalam Kegelapan Panjang, 2001)

FURTHER READING

- Bodden, Michael. "Workers' Theatre and Theatre About Workers in 1990s Indonesia." RIMA (Review of Indonesian and Malaysian Affairs) 31, no. 1 (1997): 51–61.
- Morgan, Anne-Marie. "Three Approaches to Modern Theatre in Jakarta in the 1990s: Rendra, Putu Wijaya and Ratna Sarumpaet." Australasian Drama Studies 27 (1995): 70–85.
- Sarumpaet, Ratna, and Robyn Fallick. Marsinah: A Song from the Underworld. Canberra: Aberrant Genotype Press, 1998.
- Sarumpaet, Ratna, and Barbara Hatley. "A Woman Dares to Speak: Ratna Sarumpaet." In Performing Women/Performing Feminisms: Interviews with International Women Playwrights, ed. by Joanne Tompkins and Julie Holledge. Brisbane: Australasian Drama Studies Association, 1997.

Sarumpaet, Ratna, and John H. McGlynn. "Marsinah Accuses." Manoa 12, no. 1 (2000): 155–66.

Evan Darwin Winet

SASTRE, ALFONSO (1926–)

Alfonso Sastre is one of the most controversial figures in contemporary Spanish theater, owing as much to his political views as to his dramatic work. His ideological leanings and political affiliation with the Communist Party led to a number of problems with Francisco Franco's censorship, and as a result, many of his works were neither published nor performed in Spain. Sastre proposes to subvert the very notion of theater through his writings, criticism, theoretical work, and participation in experimental groups. Since the end of the Franco dictatorship, Sastre has achieved greater recognition for his creative work, receiving on two occasions the National Prize for Theater—the first in 1985 for The Fantastic Tavern (La Taberna Fantástica, 1966) and the second in 1993 for Jenofa Juncal, the Red gipsy of Jaizkibel Mount (Jenofa Juncal, la roja gitana del monte Jaizkibel, 1983). The most notable influences in his work are JEAN-PAUL SARTRE, Karl Marx, RAMON DEL VALLE-INCLAN, and BERTOLT BRECHT.

Sastre was born on February 20, 1926, in Madrid. His career as a dramatist began in 1945 with the experimental group Arte Nuevo (New Art), a group that emerged as a reaction to the bourgeois theater of the day and a desire for conceptual renewal. In 1950 with Jose M. De Quinto, he founded El Teatro de Agitacion Social (Theater of Social Unrest), in whose manifesto he proclaims that the social is superior to the aesthetic. Because both he and his wife Eva Forest were incarcerated on different occasions for their political activities, his theater was censored and hardly performed in Spain. Consequently his works were only published and performed in Chile, SWEDEN, Cuba, ITALY, and VENEZUELA. In 1960 he created the Grupo de Teatro Realista (Realistic Theater Group), whose guiding principle was to act upon reality by modifying it. Since 1977 he resides in Basque country, where he continues his untiring intellectual labor, yet without renouncing his revolutionary convictions.

His evolution as a playwright runs parallel to the evolution of his political views, which ranges from a rejection of bourgeois society to revolutionary militance. His initial theater of the 1940s, characterized by symbolism, vanguardist, and existential themes, broke with Spanish theater of the time in both content and form. After this experimental phase, Sastre's theater of the 1950s developed a concern with social issues and revolutionary struggle, although it remained anchored in existential themes. Implicating the viewer, his plays force spectators to face the social reality that constitutes their world.

The debut of Squads Toward Death (Escuadra hacia la muerte) in 1953 marked a milestone in the history of postwar Spanish theater and represented Sastre's definitive arrival as a playwright. Beginning in 1962, he increased his experimentation with form without altering substantively the ideological underpinnings of his work. Sastre refers to these works as “complex TRAGEDIES,” a fusion of the esperpento of Valle-Inclán and epic drama. He structures these plays in scenes with a relationship that is more ideological than narrative and a language that is colloquial and often “offensive” slang. Since 1985 his plays have presented a greater freedom of dramatic construction, are full of magical and fantastic elements, and are noticeably less ideological in content. In ¿Dónde estás, Ulalume, dónde estás?, he expresses his wish to end his dramatic career, but nonetheless, he resumed dramatic writing in 1993 with a series of hybrid, humorous COMEDIES, Rain of Angels Over Paris (Lluvia de ángeles sobre París, 1993–1994) and a detective trilogy Strange Crimes (Los crímenes extraños, 1996–1997).

PLAYS: The Sound of Death (Ha sonado la muerte, 1946); Somnambulant Comedy (Comedia sonámbula, 1946); Uranium 235 (Uranio 235, 1946); Load of Dreams (Cargamento de sueños, 1948); Squad Toward Death (Escuadra hacia la muerte, 1953); The Gag (La mordaza, 1954); Nocturnal Assault (Asalto nocturno, 1958–1959); In the Net (En la red, 1961); M. S. V. (Blood and Ash) (M.S.V. [La sangre y la ceniza], 1965); The Fantastic Tavern (La taberna fantástica, 1966); Roman Chronicles (Crónicas romanas, 1968); Exercises of Terror (Ejercicios de terror, 1970); Askatasuna! (1971); The Dark Comrade (El Camarada oscuro, 1972); The Fantastic Tragedy of the Gipsy Celestina (Tragedia fantástica de la gitana Celestina, 1977–1978); Spectral Analysis of a Commando at the Service of the Proletarian Revolution (Análisis spectral de un Comando al servicio de la Revolución Proletaria, 1978); Now It's No Joke (Ahola no es de leñ, 1979); Jenofa Juncal, the Red gipsy of Jaizkibel Mount (Jenofa Juncal, la roja gitana del monte Jaizkibel, 1983); Men and Their Shadows (Los hombres y sus sombras, 1983); The Infinite Trip of Sancho Panza (El viaje infinito de Sancho Panza, 1983–1984); The Tale of the Reform, or What the Hell Is Going on Here? (El cuento de la reforma o ¿Qué demonios está pasando aquí? 1984); The Last Days of Emmanuel Kant Told by Ernst Theodor Amadeus Hoffman (Los últimos días de Emmanuel Kant contados por Ernesto Teodoro Amadeo Hoffman, 1984–1985); Unexpected Revelations About Moses (Revelaciones inesperadas sobre Moisés, 1988); Too Late for Philoctetes (Demasiado tarde para Filoctetes, 1989); Where Are You, Ulalume, Where Are You? (¿Dónde estás, Ulalume, dónde estás? 1990); Rain of Angels Over Paris (Lluvia de ángeles sobre París, 1993–1994); Strange Crimes (Los crímenes extraños, 1996–1997)

FURTHER READING

- Bryan, Avril T. Censorship and Social Conflict in the Spanish Theatre. The Case of Alfonso Sastre. Washington, D.C.: Univ. Press of America, 1982.
- Ferreras, Juan Ignacio. El teatro en el siglo XX (desde 1939) [The Theater in the Twentieth Century (Since 1939)]. Madrid: Taurus, 1988.
- Huerta Calvo, Javier. Historia del teatro español II. Del siglo XVIII a la época actual [History of Spanish Theater II. From the 18th Century to the Present Epoch]. Madrid: Gredos, 2003.
- Pedraza Jiménez, Felipe, and Milagros Rodríguez Cáceres. Manual de literatura española XIV. Posguerra: dramaturgos y ensayistas [Handbook on Spanish Literature 14. Postwar: Playwrights and Essayists]. Pamplona: Cénit ediciones, 1995.

Ruiz Ramón, Francisco. Historia del teatro español. Siglo XX [History of Spanish Theater. Twentieth Century]. Madrid: Cátedra, 1977.

Esther Lomas-Sampedro

THE SATIN SLIPPER

PAUL CLAUDEL's The Satin Slipper (Le Soulier de satin) is a ten-hour epic drama set in the age of Spanish exploration in the late 16th century. The play was written from 1919 to 1924 and first produced in 1943. It centers on the unconsummated passion shared by the conquistador Don Rodrigue and the noble lady Doña Prouhèze, who are perpetually separated by political and moral circumstances. The play is divided into four “days” rather than acts, has over sixty named characters, and combines elements of medieval public performance, fairground burlesque, and Elizabethan history plays. As in the medieval mysteries, Roman Catholic theology not only governs its psychological motivations but also fills the stage with guardian angels and emblematic visions.

Day One. Doña Prouhèze is in love with Don Rodrigue but married to an aged nobleman, Don Pélage, who governs Spanish territories in AFRICA; all three are in SPAIN when the play opens. Prouhèze wishes to be rescued from her marriage by Rodrigue, but she also vows never to betray her husband—a vow she enacts by offering one of her satin slippers to a statue of the Virgin Mary.

Day Two. Pélage and the King of Spain have now made Prouhèze governor of Mogador in Morocco on the African coast, where she must fight the Moors and govern despite the presence of a lustful second-in-command, Don Camille. The King of Spain, to test Prouhèze's moral strength, sends Rodrigue to Mogador to invite her to return to Spain, but she refuses because of her marital and imperial duties.

Day Three. Ten years later, Rodrigue is Viceroy of the New World. He receives a letter which Prouhèze had written from Mogador in a moment of weakness ten years before, asking him to rescue her. He abandons his conquests to do so, but, arriving at Mogador, discovers that Prouhèze will, once more, not leave with him. After being widowed by her first husband, she had yielded in marriage to Don Camille, by whom she now has a daughter, Doña Seven-Swords. Prouhèze gives Seven-Swords into Rodrigue's protection, but stays to die in the explosion of the Mogador fortress during battle with the Moors.

Day Four. After ten years of changing fortune, Rodrigue now sails the oceans in poverty selling holy images. The Spanish King brings him back to court to offer him the governorship of the British Isles, but it is a false offer, since the recent sinking of the Spanish Armada means Spain will never govern Britain. Rodrigue accepts the trick offer, but with such arrogance that the King imprisons him. Rodrigue ends his life in misery as a slave, knowing that Prouhèze's daughter Doña Seven-Swords survives to marry John of Austria, opening a new era in European history.

The play was premiered at the Comédie-Française in 1943 during the Nazi Occupation in a production by Jean-Louis Barrault, who shortened the text for a two-part presentation on consecutive evenings; Arthur Honegger composed the incidental music. There have been few complete productions since. In 1987, Antoine Vitez produced the full text at Avignon, and in 2003, two other full productions were seen in Paris. But the size of the play and its pro-Catholic, pro-colonial, and anti-Islamic worldview makes revival difficult.

Claudel's use of multiple theatrical traditions to stage an epic story would influence the work of Peter Brook, ARIANE MNOUCHKINE, and Robert LePage. The play is remembered now for its fairy-tale title, in which the satin slipper symbolizes both the resolve to remain upright in a fallen world and the longing for an eternally absent beloved.

[See also France; Religion and Drama]

FURTHER READING

- Cahiers Renaud-Barrault, No. 100: A propos du Soulier de Satin [Renaud-Barrault Notebooks, No. 100: About the Satin Slipper]. Paris: Gallimard, 1980.
- Claudel, Paul. The Satin Slipper, or The Worst Is Not the Surest. Tr. by Fr. John O'Connor. London: Sheed & Ward, 1931.
- Guicharnaud, Jacques, with June Guicharnaud. Modern French Theatre from Giraudoux to Genet. Rev. Ed. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1967.
- Knapp, Bettina L. Paul Claudel. New York: Ungar, 1982.
- Lioure, Michel. L'Esthétique dramatique de Paul Claudel. Paris: Armand Colin, 1972.

David Pelizzari

SATO H MAKOTO (1943–)

Satoh Makoto, Japanese playwright and director, was a leader of the LITTLE THEATER MOVEMENT (ANGURA AND SHŌGEKŌ) that rebelled against SHINGEKI in the 1960s. Central to Satoh's concerns is the question of whether the political and religious extremism that motivates wars, revolutionary movements, and terrorism can achieve its purpose of realizing human redemption. All evidence suggests that it cannot, Satoh concludes, but there is something admirable about the quest.

Satoh's fascination with and skepticism of political extremism comes from his early life experience. His great-uncle Anami Korechika was the fanatical Army Minister in 1945 who opposed JAPAN's surrender and committed suicide rather than capitulate. Satoh learned from his example both the power and the disastrous consequences of political and religious fanaticism.

Although not a Christian, Satoh attended a Christian primary school. In high school, he read St. Augustine and Kierkegaard and majored in Western philosophy at Waseda University before transferring to the Actors Theatre Training School (Haiyūza Yōseijo), from which he graduated in 1965. His class's graduation project was a production of THE HEAD OF MARY, TANAKA CHIKAO's Catholic drama about Nagasaki survivors.

Satoh founded the Freedom Theatre (Jiyū Gekijō) in 1966 with classmates Kushida Kazuyoshi, Yoshida Hideko, and Saitō Ren. In 1969, the Freedom Theatre joined the June Theatre (Rokugatsu Gekijō) to form Theatre Center 68/69 (Engeki Sentā 68/69), also known as the Black Tent Theatre (BTT). His cofounders of the Freedom Theatre left the BTT in 1971, but Satoh remained. During the 1970s, the BTT produced almost exclusively works that Satoh wrote and directed. He now serves as professor of directing at Tokyo Art University.

Satoh began exploring the themes of war, revolution, terrorism, and human redemption from his earliest plays. Ismene (1966) deals with war through the eyes of a child mystified by the bellicose political machinations of her elders. My Beatles (Atashi no Biitoruzu, 1967) concerns the legacy of Japan's colonization of Korea.

From 1969 to 1971, Satoh was engaged in writing a group of plays that interrogate the idea of revolution. Nezumi Kozō: The Rat (Nezumi Kozō Jirokichi, 1969), for which Satoh was awarded the Kishida Kunio Drama Prize, deals with the notion of revolution in Japanese history. The Dance of Angels Who Burn Their Own Wings (Tsubasa o Moyasu Tenshi-tachi no Butō, 1970) is a critical response to PETER WEISS's MARAT/SADE and concerns revolution in the Western context.

Abe Sada's Dogs (Abe Sada no Inu, 1975), The Phantom and the Cinema (Kinema to Kaijin, 1976), and The Killing of Blanqui, Spring in Shanghai (Buranki-goroshi Shanhai no Haru, 1979) together comprise The World of Shōwa: A Comedy, which occupied Satoh throughout the 1970s. The plays concern the unintended but far-reaching and catastrophic consequences of the unsuccessful coup d'état attempted by fanatical army officers on February 26, 1936. All of these plays are musicals in the spirit of BERTOLT BRECHT's THE THREEPENNY OPERA and are headed with epigraphs from Walter Benjamin. They share Brecht's dark cynicism and Benjamin's faith in the possibility of redemption.

Satoh's most recent play, The Absolute Airplane (2003), deals with the terror attacks of September 11, 2001, and is addressed to the lead hijacker, Mohammed Atta. The play continues Satoh's theme of intense ambivalence toward political and religious fanatics.

SELECT PLAYS: Ismene (1966); My Beatles (Atashi no Biitoruzu, 1967); Nezumi Kozō: The Rat (Nezumi Kozō Jirokichi, 1969); The Dance of Angels Who Burn Their Own Wings (Tsubasa o Moyasu Tenshi-tachi no Butō, with Yamamoto Kiyokazu, Saitō Ren, and Katō Tadashi, 1970); Ah, Nezumi Kozō (Aa Nezumi Kozō Jirokichi, 1971); Abe Sada's Dogs (Abe Sada no Inu, 1975); The Phantom and the Cinema (Kinema to Kaijin, 1976); The Killing of Blanqui, Spring in Shanghai (Buranki-goroshi Shanhai no Haru, 1979); Night of Night's Night (Yoru to Yoru no Yoru, 1981); The Sinking of the Titanic (Taitanikku Chinbotsu, 1985); The Absolute Airplane (Zettai Hikōki, 2003)

FURTHER READING

- Goodman, David G. "Satoh Makoto and the Post-Shingeki Movement in Japanese Contemporary Theatre." Ph.D. diss., Cornell Univ., 1982.
- . Fuji-san Mieta: Satoh Makoto ni Okeru Kakumei no Engeki [Mt. Fuji Perceived: The Revolutionary Theatre of Satoh Makoto]. Tokyo: Hakusuisha, 1983.
- Satoh Makoto. Ismene. Tr. by David G. Goodman. In Alternative Japanese Drama: Ten Plays, tr. and ed. by Robert T. Rolf and John K. Gillespie. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1992: 327–362.
- . Nezumi Kozō: The Rat. Tr. by David G. Goodman. In After Apocalypse: Four Japanese Plays of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, ed. by David G. Goodman. Cornell East Asia Papers 71. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell East Asia Program, 1994. 249–319.
- . My Beatles. Tr. by David G. Goodman. In The Return of the Gods: Japanese Drama and Culture in the 1960s, ed. by David G. Goodman. Cornell East Asia Papers 116. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell East Asia Program, 2003. 177–223.
- . "Zettai Hikōki" [The Absolute Airplane]. Serifu no jidai [Age of Drama] 3 (Summer 2003): 6–28.
- Satoh Makoto, et al. The Dance of Angels Who Burn Their Own Wings. In The Return of the Gods: Japanese Drama and Culture in the 1960s, ed. by David G. Goodman. Cornell East Asia Papers 116. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell East Asia Program, 2003.

David G. Goodman

SAVED

Yer never killed yer man. Yer missed that. Gives you a sense a perspective. I was one of the lucky ones . . .

—Harry, Scene 12

Saved by EDWARD BOND premiered at the English Stage Company (ESC) in 1965. The theater reverted to a private club after its managers were denied licenses to produce Bond's Saved and JOHN OSBORNE's A Patriot of Me. The Lord Chamberlain brought and won a suit against the ESC, but the resulting controversy persuaded Parliament to abolish government censorship in 1968, which had been in effect in ENGLAND since 1737.

Bond and his play received overnight notoriety after the first private performance primarily because of a shocking scene in which a baby is stoned to death by its father and several of his friends. Bond was attacked by critics and Saved denounced in its beginning as sensational, offensive, decadent, and preoccupied with the exhibit of disgusting cruelty. However, today the violence within the play is no longer seen as violence for its own sake but as an expression of the cultural poverty for which society is more responsible than the individual. Within Saved, Bond depicts violence rising from the unequal distribution of power and opportunity afforded the lower classes of London. He places the urban poor center-stage in this drama and turns their ordinary corrupted speech into powerful rhythms of poetry. As the playwright aggressively pursues his truth through human bruality, the lives of his characters become a nightmare. After censorship was lifted, largely as a result of plays such as Saved, the Royal Court staged an entire season of Bond plays. Soon after Saved and Bond's play Narrow Road to the Deep North toured Europe under British Council auspices, exposing the writers' concerns about a world in which a lack of compassion breeds a callous society that accepts the horrific as normal.

Saved takes place within the poverty of South London and centers on Len and his attachment to Pam, who like her family and friends has been denied any knowledge of the concept of love or compassion. The dialogue of the play is delivered through a thick dialect of stunted gutter-talk depicting the inherent deprivations of the London youths characterized in the work. The frustrations of the population boil over into acts of mindless savagery owing to a lack of opportunity to seize alternatives. Within the play only the character of Len grasps the notions of kindness and loyalty. After a brief and barren sexual experience with Pam, Len moves in with Pam and her family despite her hostility toward him. He befriends her father Harry, becomes sexually attracted to her adulterous mother Mary, and embraces Pam's infant from an earlier affair. He endures the smoldering anger within the household while Pam attempts every available means to drive him from her life. He is filled with emotional hunger and she with indifferent cynicism throughout the play. Pam feels nothing for her unwanted child and does not mourn its savage murder by Fred, the father. Len continues to remain with her after the death of the child, Fred's trial and release, and Pam's desperate efforts to rid herself of him.

The title of the play, Saved, refers to the final image of the play: Len is mending a broken chair for the family. It is a poetic metaphor delivered in silence voicing the playwright's hopes for the moral regeneration of a desolate society.

FURTHER READING

- Brockett, Oscar, and Franklin J. Hildy. History of the Theatre, 9th ed. Boston: Allyn and Bacon, 2003.
- Cornish, Roger, and Violet Ketels, eds. Landmarks of Modern British Drama: The Plays of the Sixties, Vol. 1. London: Methuen, 1985.
- Hay, Malcolm, and Phillip Roberts. Bond: A Study of His Plays. London: Methuen, 1980.

Marla Dean

SCHMIDHUBER DE LA MORA,
GUILLERMO (1943–)

Guillermo Schmidhuber de la Mora has published more than thirty plays and prose works. Many critics identify Schmidhuber as part of the nueva dramaturgia (new DRAMATURGY) generation. This new generation, which dates from the mid-1980s, follows two generations of Mexican playwrights. The dramatists of this third generation search for theater that adopts a more critical perspective than that of their predecessors, who strived for innovations in techniques and themes. Interestingly, Schmidhuber does not consider himself a participant of this third generation of Mexican playwrights, perhaps since for the most part he follows the spirit of the first generation of Mexican dramaturges in his quest for more universal innovations.

In his early production, his best-known pieces are The Human Cathedral (La catedral humana, 1973–1974), for which he was awarded the Premio de la Sociedad de Escritores de México in 1978, The Futile Heroes (Los héroes inútiles, 1979), and The Heirs of Segismundo (Los herederos de Segismundo, 1980). The latter play received both the Premio Nacional de Bellas Artes de Literatura and the Premio Literario del Gobierno de Zacatecas. In these early works he experiments with several techniques that he will later master and apply with acute astuteness and reflection. The Theft of Moctezuma's Headdress (El robo del penacho de Moctezuma, 1981), The Day Mona Lisa Stopped Smiling (El día que Mona Lisa dejó de sonreír, 1985), and Quartet of My People (Cuarteto de mi gentedad, 1985) belong to his second phase of production. These are works that address the Mexican and Latin American diaspora. In the Lands of Columbus (Por las tierras de Colón, 1985–1986) received the Premio “Letras de Oro” from the University of Miami in 1987. More recently he published The Grandmothers' Armories (El armario de las abuelas, 1989–1990), The Secret Friendship of Juana and Dorothy (La secreta amistad de Juana y Dorotea, 1998), Obituary (Obituario, 1999), and a two-volume compilation of his most stellar plays entitled Thirteen Chances on Theater (Trece apuestas al teatro, 1999), which includes a FARCE titled “Dramasutra.” These later pieces are more abstract in nature and reveal how Schmidhuber plays with concepts of time and space. Many of his plays have been translated into English, French, and German.

Schmidhuber's extensive scholarship includes articles and texts on literary criticism and dramaturgy, and he has contributed extensively to the criticism of Latin American and Peninsular Theater. One of his most significant projects was the discovery of two manuscripts written by Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz.

Schmidhuber's dramaturgy has been described as demonstrating a constant zeal for human liberty through theatrical elements. Schmidhuber holds that the ever-present dilemma of the playwright and the dramatic genre is to strive to dominate time. According to Schmidhuber, a gifted playwright balances the effectiveness of dialogue with astute use of didascalia and proper placement of pauses so that the reader/spectator has the means to recognize that each character thinks in addition to speaking (Schmidhuber, 1998).

In elaborating upon dramaturgy and the role of the playwright, Schmidhuber affirms that, in general, the theater of today initiates an effort to privilege subjective perspectives and images, while other mediums such as television, cinematography, or photography demonstrate preference toward more objective images. He defines theater in three parts: “Theater means three things to me: theater as performance, theater as dramaturgical creation, and theater as cosmos” (Schmidhuber, 1998). Schmidhuber demonstrates a sincere concern for the future of dramaturgy. From his perspective, an alarming number of contemporary dramatic pieces are driven by a director's vision and/or commercial potential rather than a true attempt at the application of dramaturgical prowess.

In turning his attention toward Mexican and Latin American theater, he calls for a change toward more intellectual productions of his contemporaries and of future dramaturges of the region. Schmidhuber defines the challenge of trying to reinterpret the concept of time as a playwright's raison d'être, a trial that he has applied in his own works. He clarifies that dramaturgy “is also living the risk of trying to achieve the impossible” (Schmidhuber, 1998).

[See also Mexico]

PLAYS: Our Sir Quetzalcóatl (Nuestro Señor Quetzalcóatl, 1979); The Futile Heroes (Los héroes inútiles, 1981); The Heirs of Segismundo (Los herederos de Segismundo, 1981); Lacandonia (1982); The Theft of Moctezuma's Headdress (El robo del penacho de Moctezuma, 1982); We Are All King Lear (Todos somos el rey Lear, 1982); The Day Mona Lisa Stopped Smiling (El día que Mona Lisa dejó de sonreír, 1987); In the Lands of Columbus (Por las tierras de Colón, 1987); The Fifth Voyage of Christopher Columbus (El quinto viaje de Colón, 1992); The Secret Friendship of Juana and Dorothy: A Play in Seven Scenes (La Secreta Amistad de Juana y Dorotea: Obra de Teatro en Siete Escenas, 1998); Thirteen Chances on Theater: First Volume and Second Volume (Trece apuestas al teatro: Volúmen Primero y Segundo 1999)

FURTHER READING

- Burgess, Ronald D. The New Dramatists of Mexico, 1967–1986. Lexington: Univ. Press of Kentucky, 1991.
- Martínez, Christine D. “El valor de la libertad en el teatro de Guillermo Schmidhuber de la Mora” [The Value of Liberty in the Theater of Guillermo Schmidhuber de la Mora]. Latin American Theater Review, 24, no. 1 (Fall 1990): 29–39.
- Montañez, Carmen. “Guillermo Schmidhuber: el dramaturgo y su obra” [Guillermo Schmidhuber: The Playwright and His Works]. Ariel, 8 (1992): 56–62.
- Schmidhuber, Guillermo. El Ojo Teatral: 19 lecturas ociosas [The Theatrical Eye: 19 Leisurely Readings]. Guanajuato: Ediciones la Rana, 1998.

Lourdes Betanzos

SCHNITZLER, ARTHUR (1862–1931)

I have often asked myself in wonder where you could have found this or that secret knowledge which I was able to discover only after arduous examination of the object and ended feeling envious of the poet for whom I have always had the deepest admiration.

—Sigmund Freud in a letter to Arthur Schnitzler, May 8, 1906

The culturally fertile and decadently reckless atmosphere of Vienna, AUSTRIA, in the death throes of the obsolete Habsburg Empire, set the stage for Arthur Schnitzler's life and works. Born on May 15, 1862, in Vienna, into an upper-class Jewish family, he was introduced early to the cultural and intellectual pursuits of the privileged, in part because his father, Johann, was a well-known laryngologist whose patients were often performers. Arthur was thus exposed to the stage and began to write plays at a young age.

Although Johannes Schnitzler encouraged his son's artistic tendencies, he did not approve of literature as a profession for him. Accordingly, Arthur studied medicine and became a physician whose specialties were in dermatology, sexually transmitted diseases, and larynx ailments. His medical journal articles reflect his avid interest in psychology (including experimentation with hypnosis), as do his dramas such as ANATOL (1881–1891) and Paracelsus (1898). The fascination with psychology plays such an integral part in Schnitzler's artistic works that they can also be described as studies of the human psyche, as acknowledged by Sigmund Freud (1856–1939) himself, who referred to Schnitzler as his alter ego. Although writing increasingly became a priority for Schnitzler (whose heart was set more on the pursuit of aesthetic and bohemian pleasures than on medicine), he waited until after his father's death in 1893 to resign his position at Vienna's Poliklinik and enter private practice, which afforded him greater opportunities for writing and other aesthetic interests. Because of his medical training, however, Schnitzler approached writing not only with an aesthetic sensibility, but also with the diagnostic eye of a clinician.

At the very minimum, fin-de-siècle Vienna formed the background to all of Schnitzler's work and provided him with abundant material, even if the historical time and place of his texts were occasionally elsewhere. Schnitzler's Vienna has been characterized as a place of frivolity, lightheartedness, and passion combined with the deadly serious. The construction of the Ringstrasse (the grand boulevard that connected the city with its suburbs) in the latter half of the 19th century and its flamboyant, eclectic array of architectural styles signaled not only the extension of the city's boundaries but also an expansion of its identity. While Vienna retained much of its Baroque character, architectural, artistic, literary, philosophical, and scientific experimentation was thriving throughout the city. It was a hotbed of European modernism: home to Freud's PSYCHOANALYSIS; Arnold Schönberg's (1874–1951) atonal music; Ludwig Wittgenstein's (1889–1951) philosophy; urban modernism and Otto Wagner's (1841–1918) functional architecture; and Gustav Klimt (1862–1918) and his fellow Secessionist artists. Vienna also inspired the literary circle called Jung Wien (Young Vienna), a loosely knit group of young men whose meeting place, Café Griensteidl, was located just behind the Hofburg, the imperial Habsburg palace. Schnitzler formed lasting friendships with many of the Jung Wien writers, who included HUGO VON HOFMANNSTHAL, Richard Beer-Hofmann (1866–1945), and Hermann Bahr (1863–1934). The intellectual exhilaration attending the city's social and cultural modernization was also accompanied by dramatic political change and economic turbulence.

For much of Schnitzler's life, Vienna was the capital of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and under the rule of the Habsburgs, who clung firmly to the status quo as they tried to maintain their fading power. The ethnic unrest that besieged the outer territories of the Empire was also felt in the multiethnic capital—and ultimately around the world—as the 1914 assassination of the Habsburg Crown Prince, Franz Ferdinand, in Sarajevo plunged Europe into World War I. Austria's First Republic, which succeeded the disbanded Habsburg empire at the conclusion of the war, was plagued from the outset with conflict among rival political factions as it struggled with hyperinflation and economic depression that led to intolerable social conditions. Economic misery, in turn, exacerbated Austrian anti-Semitism, which had grown increasingly acute in the latter part of the 19th century, particularly among the less privileged and undereducated classes of the overwhelmingly Catholic country. Austrian politicians effectively used anti-Semitic resentments to agitate and manipulate the masses, finding a convenient and identifiable scapegoat to blame for the interwar misery.

As John Simon writes in his "Foreword" to Schnitzler's Night Games, "An empire in its decline is the breeding ground for both a heartbreakingly true art and for epicurean, even convulsively decadent, pursuits" (viii). Indeed, the nervousness, restlessness, and agitation so palpable at the time are vividly captured in Schnitzler's dramas. His early plays—Anatol, LIEBELEI (1894), and REIGEN (La Ronde, 1896–1897), for example—brilliantly present the themes of Eros and Thanatos, sexual love and death. In Schnitzler's works, Eros and Thanatos impart a sense of the precariousness and, on many levels, meaninglessness of life, such that deceit and lies, betrayal and hypocrisy are the norm in relationships. The characters in Schnitzler's works recognize the fragility, brevity, and futility of life; therefore, they engage in power struggles and pursue erotic fulfillment in an effort to find meaning, if only momentarily. The evanescence of the moment thus becomes a preoccupation, and in seeking a diversion from their hopeless and frightening reality, they escape into fantasy and self-deception, "into art, into the attitude of the distanced spectator, even into suicide; at last also into concentration on the immediate, unmediated moment" (Reinhart Müller-Freienfels, in Simon, ix).

Although much secondary literature focuses on Schnitzler's explorations of sexuality and eroticism, his work also deals extensively and perceptively with other important sociopolitical issues of the time, including the anti-Semitism, political intrigue, and bigotry so poignantly portrayed in PROFESSOR BERNHARDI (1912). The opportunism, fueled by envy and anti-Semitism, that ultimately placed in jail the fictional Bernhardt, the impeccably ethical and successful director of the Elisabethium Clinic, was a very real possibility in turn-of-the-century Vienna. Indeed, the drama's plot line was inspired by the political intrigues Schnitzler's own father had faced as director of the city's Poliklinik. The prevalent anti-Jewish sentiment of the time was also frequently reflected in the critical reception of Schnitzler's work.

Even though turn-of-the-century Vienna provided vital subject matter for Schnitzler, the range of issues and motifs he portrays extends far beyond that specific time and place, as illustrated by the several historical plays he wrote. In Paracelsus, for example, Schnitzler uses the scientist and the city of Basel at the beginning of the 16th century as vehicles for exploring the contemporary interest in hypnosis. The title character hypnotizes his former lover Justina in front of her husband Cyprian to reveal her unconscious. However, even Paracelsus, the manipulator of the situation, becomes alarmed when the boundaries between illusion and reality grow murky as a result of the unknown lurking beneath the surface.

Another historical play, The Green Cockatoo (Der grüne Kakadu, 1898), is set in Paris on the eve of the French Revolution of 1789. However important the historical setting and political overtones of this one-act play, the drama also presents many of Schnitzler's favorite themes and motifs, including the intermingling of illusion and reality and a play within a play. The action takes place in Prosper's basement pub, The Green Cockatoo, which metaphorically underscores the political aspect of the play, that is, viewing the revolution from below. Overtly, the action centers on the playacting that goes on in the pub. The characters range from aristocrats and bourgeois guests (who comprise the audience) to actors (who play criminal parts) to actual criminals, and the playacting consists of the "criminals" telling about their crimes and tantalizing the audience. The intermingling of social classes also mixes fiction with fact, and "truth" remains illusive. The action climaxes when Henri, Prosper's best actor, claims to have killed the Duke of Cadignan because of his affair with Henri's new bride. Prosper knows the affair is real and thus reacts in shock. When Cadignan arrives at the pub, Henri, suspecting the truth, really does kill him, and so becomes a hero of the revolution that is occurring outside/above the pub, even though his motives are anything but political.

Several of Schnitzler's historical dramas examine the topic of war and peace through themes that are often identified as his usual bill of fare: the dubious boundaries between Sein and Schein (reality and appearance), gender interactions, and the psychology of the soul. In Beatrice's Veil (Der Schleier der Beatrice, 1899), for instance, 16th-century Bologna is threatened by an impending siege. This five-act play in verse, which reflects its Renaissance-era setting, explores the effects that dreams have on the conscious mind; it also examines the psychological reactions of Bologna's trapped citizens to imminent TRAGEDY. One possible escape route is suicide, which the title character and her lover decide to take. Beatrice, however, loses her nerve and, while fleeing, forgets her veil in the room where her lover has died. She must return for the veil because it is from her husband, Bologna's ruling Duke. The couple's marriage underscores the sense of doom confronting the city, as well as the power of dreams: Beatrice had dreamed that the Duke would marry her, a commoner, and in the chaos and orgiastic mood of a city under siege, dream becomes reality.

Set around the middle of the 18th century, The Way to the Pond (Der Gang zum Weiher, 1921) is an explicit political statement on war and patriotism. Mayenau, a former chancellor to the emperor, is called on for his diplomatic skills, and the play depicts a one-man effort to stem prowar sentiments and avert war that is ultimately unsuccessful. The Young Medardus (Der junge Medardus, 1909), which Schnitzler called "a dramatic history" (the place and time are Vienna in 1809), examines the Napoleonic wars between France and Austria. The longest of his plays and the one with the most complex cast of characters, it demonstrates how conscious intentions are subverted by unconscious desires when Medardus, set on revenging his sister's suicide, actually—and unknowingly—thwarts an assassination attempt on Napoleon Bonaparte.

The illusiveness of appearance and reality is also embodied in the character of the süßes Mädel—a pretty, young, unmarried woman from the suburbs (that is, from the lower classes)—of whom Schnitzler is often viewed as the creator. But because character of the "sweet young thing" was already present in the popular dramas and COMEDIES of Johann Nestroy (1801–1862), it would be more accurate to credit Schnitzler with establishing her notoriety. She is a central character in his works, appearing alongside the actresses, bored housewives, prostitutes, and society ladies, and often functions to expose social mores and double standards. In Liebelei, for example, Christine ignores the rules of the flirtation game and really does fall in love with the young gentleman Fritz, who in the end, dies in a duel arising from his affair with a married woman. Christine realizes that she was simply a plaything, a pleasant diversion for Fritz, and the implication is that she subsequently commits suicide, highlighting the social and gender inequities of the society. Social bias and hypocrisy are evident in The Legacy (Das Vermächtnis, 1898) as well, a drama in which a good bourgeois son reveals on his deathbed his secret life to his parents and elicits a reluctant promise from them to take in and care for his süßes Mädel, Toni, and their son. The parents only agree because they consider their grandson to be their son's legacy, and they never accept Toni. Thus, when the child subsequently dies, they no longer feel tied to their promise. Toni flees, most probably escaping into death.

The theater was often the setting for Schnitzler's plays, providing an ideal venue for depicting gender discrimination and the double standards inherent in the society. In Free Game (Freiwild, 1896), Anna Riedel is an aspiring young actress who dreams about performing in the theaters of Vienna one day, but must begin her career by acting in summer provincial theaters where she is expected to "entertain" the military officers stationed there after theater performances. When she refuses the advances of a lieutenant and the friend who comes to her defense is subsequently killed in a duel, she is forced to abandon her career. It is clear that to become a successful actress, she would have to compromise her sense of morality. The Fairy Tale (Das Märchen, 1891) epitomizes the double standards: Fanny Theren has become the successful actress that Anna Riedel in the later play would hope to become; in the process, Fanny has had lovers. Hence, when the open-minded poet Fedor Denner, whom she loves, claims to believe that women have the same rights as men, she remains hopeful that he will accept her. Although he loves her, he ultimately cannot overcome the social stigma of Fanny's past and abandons her.

At the heart of Schnitzler's work is his skepticism about language and its usage. It is evident that he—as well as many of his contemporaries—distrusted the adequacy of words for communication. Indeed, he was fully aware of how words are often misconstrued; how they can be used to distort or hide the truth; or simply, how a character's personality or psychological perspective can prohibit understanding those around him or her. As early as Anatol, this distrust of language is evident when, for example, in the scene "Questioning Fate" (Die Frage an das Schicksal), Anatol has hypnotized Cora but refuses to ask the burning question—Has she been faithful to him?—because any answer could be variously interpreted. "Yes" could indeed mean that she is true (and truthful), but perhaps only in the very moment. What about yesterday or tomorrow? On another level, the pantomime Pierette's Veil (Der Schleier der Pierette, 1910) epitomizes the questionable role of language by not using any at all. Intentional or not, miscommunication and confusion ensue in Schnitzler's works because words are inadequate and imprecise. The title of his last series of one-act plays, Comedy of Words (Komödie der Worte, 1914), and of his posthumously published fragment, The Word (Das Wort), reflect the author's continued skepticism in light of the paradox that words are nothing, but "we have nothing but words" (Comedy of Words). Schnitzler repeatedly attempts to address and counter this paradox through irony.

This brief summation of various plays reveals a complex image of the author, an image underscored by his critical reception. Schnitzler is the physician who, with a clinician's eye, recorded the excesses of his times, including his own. He is also the writer-dramatist who suffused his work "with a poet's hypersensitive perception" (Simon, ix); the Anatol-look-alike, that dashing, young, upper-class melancholic who pursued "sweet young things" and married women alike; the unhappily married man who cannot prevent his daughter's suicide; and the well-known personality who is the target of anti-Semitic prejudice and thus an outsider, despite his professional success and upper-class social position.

Schnitzler's works provide critical commentary on a vast number of issues. He dissects his society by observing the mundane and the ordinary; he finds the vanity, greed, concupiscence, and double standards endemic to turn-of-the-century Vienna. With a masterful ear for dialogue, he skillfully weaves his observations into tantalizing plots full of fantasy, illusion, and theatricality. A prolific author, Schnitzler wrote twenty full-length and seventeen one-act plays, as well as numerous short stories and novellas, two novels, an autobiography (My Youth in Vienna [Jugend in Wien, 1915–1920]), and aphorisms. He was also the coeditor of his father's medical journal and kept a diary (ten volumes in all) that chronicles his (love) life, work, and times, as do the numerous letters exchanged between him and friends, many of which have been published.

As a dramatist, Schnitzler often felt attacked and misunderstood by critics, by the public, and even by friends who wrote reviews critical of his work. Yet, he was an enormously successful playwright whose works were and still are regularly performed throughout Austria, Germany, and Central Europe. His texts have also been adapted for numerous films; Stanley Kubrick's (1928–1999) Eyes Wide Shut (1999), for example, is based on Schnitzler's Dream Story (Traumnovelle, 1925). One hundred years after fin-de-siècle Vienna, Schnitzler occupies a prominent place in the literary canon and continues to fascinate and intrigue contemporary audiences with his diagnoses of social disintegration. He died on October 21, 1931, in Vienna, Austria.

SELECT PLAYS: Anatol (1888–1891); Anatol's Megalomania (Anatols Größenwahn, 1891); The Fairy Tale (Das Märchen, 1891); The Eccentric One (Die überspannte Person, 1894); Flirtations (Liebeleien, 1894); One-thirty (Halbzwölf, 1894); Free Game (Freiwild, 1896); La Ronde (Reigen, 1896–1897); The Green Cockatoo (Der grüne Kakadu, 1898); The Legacy (Das Vermächtnis, 1898); The Mate (Die Gefährtin, 1898); Paracelsus (1898); Beatrice's Veil (Der Schleier der Beatrice, 1899); New Year's Night (Sylvesternacht, 1900); Living Hours (Lebendige Stunden, 1900–1901); Marionettes (Marionetten, 1901–1904); The Lonely Way (Der einsame Weg, 1903); The Call of Life (Der Ruf des Lebens, 1905); Intermezzo (Zwischenspiel, 1905); Countess Mizzie, or, The Family Reunion (Komtesse Mizzi, oder, der Familientag, 1907); The Young Medardus (Der junge Medardus, 1909); Undiscovered Country (Das weite Land, 1910); Professor Bernhardt (1912); Comedy of Words (Komödie der Worte, 1914); Fink and Fliederbusch (Fink und Fliederbusch, 1916); The Sisters, or, Casanova in Spa (Die Schwestern, oder, Casanova in Spa, 1917); The Way to the Pond (Der Gang zum Weiher, 1921); Comedy of Seduction (Komödie der Verführung, 1923); In the Play of Summer Breezes (Im Spiel der Sommerlüfte, 1928)

FURTHER READING

- Arnold, Heinz Ludwig, ed. Arthur Schnitzler. Text + Kritik 138/139. Munich: Ed. Text u. Kritik, 1998.
- Gay, Peter. Schnitzler's Century: The Making of Middle-Class Culture, 1815–1914. New York: Norton, 2002.
- Lorenz, Dagmar C. G., ed. A Companion to the Works of Arthur Schnitzler. Rochester, N.Y.: Camden House, 2003.
- Perlmann, Michaela L. Arthur Schnitzler. Stuttgart: J.B. Metzler, 1987.
- Simon, Anne-Catherine. Schnitzlers Wien [Schnitzler's Vienna]. Vienna: Pichler, 2002.
- Simon, John. "Foreward" to Night Games and Other Stories and Novellas by Arthur Schnitzler, tr. by Margaret Schaefer. Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2002.

Yates, W. E. Schnitzler, Hofmannsthal, and the Austrian Theatre.
New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1992.

Elizabeth Ametsbichler

SCIENTIFIC AMERICANS

Scientific Americans was written by JOHN MIGHTON, who won the Governor General's Literary Award for Drama for A Short History of Night. Mighton received a Ph.D. in mathematics from the University of Toronto, and this interest in science is central to his plays.

Scientific Americans explores the ethical dilemmas faced by weapons researchers at Los Alamos Laboratory, which produced the first atom bomb. The central scientific concept of the play is control theory, which seeks to understand how one can manipulate the parameters affecting the behavior of a given system to produce a desired outcome. The play focuses on two scientists: Jim, whose specialty is electromagnetic radiation, and his fiancée, Carol, who is working on artificial intelligence. Jim has recently taken a job with Los Alamos, and at the beginning of the play, it is clear that Jim has taken the job primarily because both the facilities and working environment allow him to pursue whatever creative work he desires. Meanwhile, Carol worries that Jim will inevitably work on first-strike weaponry, even as Jim continually assures her that he won't since he is free to work on whatever he pleases.

He, in turn, is often assured (perhaps too often) that this is the case by General Bergen, who explains to Jim, "You can't force creativity. Half the people in your group aren't even working on weapons research. We want you to follow whatever ideas come to you, no matter how wild." However, while the environment at Los Alamos is fairly relaxed, this proves to provide more pressure to produce new ideas (even the most mundane of which are recognized as having military applications), and soon enough Jim is introduced to various weapons projects.

Meanwhile, he begins to defend the work done at Los Alamos to the point that Carol points out that he is beginning to sound like them. After playing a key role in finalizing the plans for the stealth bomber (a first-strike weapon if ever there was one), Carol leaves Jim and Jim attempts suicide. At this point, Jim's inspiration is Carol, and that he can no longer be successfully manipulated to function without her. This fact is metaphoric of the larger dilemmas pointed out by the play, which is devoted to examining the relationship between technological advancement as beneficial to society, on the one hand, and potentially lethal on the other. Even as each and every scientist at Los Alamos has ideal conditions under which they are likely to be the most creative, they also are involved in the production of weapons that could destroy this very same environment that gives rise to their creativity—even as Jim inevitably destroys his relationship with Carol.

When Carol finally corners Jim to try and understand what it was that led him to work on the stealth aircraft, Jim disagrees with her assumption that it was ego, explaining, rather, that he did it because it was easy. The play is ultimately entirely pessimistic about the weapons industry, as even those with the best intentions are seen as all too easily coerced to do its bidding.

[See also Canada]

FURTHER READING

Athabasca University. "John Mighton." The Encyclopedia of Canadian Theatre, <http://www.canadiantheatre.com/dictpl?term=John%20Mighton> (Accessed August 29, 2004).

Athabasca University. "A Short History of Night." Encyclopedia of Canadian Theatre, <http://www.canadiantheatre.com/dict.pl?term=A%20Short%20History%20of%20Night> (Accessed December 21, 2006).

Daniel Jernigan

SCOTLAND

"I am very fond of the drama," claimed the Satanic Mr. Bolfry. Early critics of the genre would not have been surprised. Mr. Bolfry: A Play in Four Scenes (1943), by JAMES BRIDIE, pseudonym of the most eminent modern Scottish dramatist, Glasgow physician Osborne Henry Mavor (1888–1951), reversed prevailing opinions in its claims that establishment Presbyterianism was underwritten by hell. But Bolfry's support both of drama and of the Scottish religious consensus was subtly ironic. The play was satirizing the force that had perhaps more than any other condemned and undermined the stage. In the aftermath of the Scottish Literary Renaissance of the 1920s and 1930s, the dearth of Scottish dramatic writing was being explained by reference to the Calvinism that had, critics contended, decimated Scottish cultural expression. Arguing that the Presbyterians had been right, that drama did indeed reek of sulphur, and that the Presbyterians had been wrong, for their creed also smacked of hell, Mr. Bolfry equivocated on a fundamental and long-standing argument in Scottish cultural history, but implied that Presbyterians and dramatists had far more in common than they dared believe.

Whatever the competing explanations for its absence, critics of Scottish culture agree that drama is the least developed of the Scottish muses. Throughout its history, drama has existed in a fragile and often uncertain relationship with the values of the Scottish establishment and its literary tradition's prioritization of poetry and prose. Edwin Muir, in his biography of John Knox (1929), compared the dramatic glories of Jacobean ENGLAND with the sterility and poverty of Scottish culture in the same period. His argument, amplified by succeeding generations of critics, was straightforward: Scottish Calvinism had dampened—indeed, distorted—Scottish cultural expression. Scottish culture had never recovered from the Reformation's prioritization of the English language over Scots and Gaelic, nor from the removal of the Edinburgh court, with all its opportunities for patronage, to London with the Union of the Crowns in 1603.

Ideas that the Reformation was intrinsically hostile to drama need, however, to be qualified. In his History of the Reformation (1644), John Knox referred to drama as a medium of religious change; George Buchanan, tutor to the young James VI and I, prepared several neo-Latin works on biblical themes; and David Lindsey's Ane Satire of the Three Estatis (1540) was a robust discussion of the corruption of the late medieval church in vigorously dense Scots. Despite this lively beginning, however, the Scottish church was increasingly influenced by English Puritanism's hostility to drama. Throughout the 17th and 18th centuries, suspicion grew of credible links between Satan and the stage. Edinburgh's Carrubber's Close Theatre, operated by Alan Ramsay, was one of several shut down in the aftermath of the Licensing Act of 1737. Yet, at the same time, Scottish dramatic writing achieved some resounding successes. John Home's Douglas (1756) achieved considerable popular appeal, with performances generating the ultimate accolade: "Whaur's yer Wul-lie Shakespeare noo?" (Walker). Home's career as a clergyman made his dramatic success all the more ironic. Perhaps Bol-fry had been right.

Whatever the implications of Home's writing, historians of Scottish drama agree that Douglas was the final curtain call for a dramatic tradition that was revived only at the end of the 19th century. This is not to imply that Scottish theater was dead for a century and a half. Despite the very recent establishment of permanent theaters, 19th-century Scotland enjoyed a strong theatrical tradition. Throughout the 19th century, Scottish drama offered a "cornucopia of riches" (Cameron). Scotland's place in the Romantic imagination created an "insatiable" demand for plays about Scotland and the Scots throughout Britain. In Scotland, the prosperous, pursuing their sentimental nationalism at the stage if not the ballot box, indulged their patriotic nostalgia in Edinburgh's Theatre Royal between 1810 and 1851. Theatre Royal's distinctive national drama often took the form of adaptations of the works of prose writers such as Sir Walter Scott. This was a theater with national purpose, but it provided, largely, "a drama . . . without dramatists" (Craig and Stevenson). Those writers who did engage with the challenge of drama typically lost their nerve when it came to the Scots language. John Galt, James Hogg, and Scott each demonstrated a facility for Scots expression in their prose and poetry; but faced with the opportunity of the stage, they each opted for English. Nor was the situation much better away from the national theater, where the less prosperous indulged their interest in patriotic whimsy in the music halls. There, nightly long programs offered a range of productions in a vein that would be immortalized in the 20th century by Sir Harry Lauder. Adaptations of Robert Burns's long narrative poem Tam O' Shanter, for example, included a pantomime and a harlequinade alongside at least five plays, some of which took astonishing liberties with the text. Trading on stereotypes and capitalizing on the popularity of Burns, Britain's network of music halls presented as many dangers as opportunities for the dramatic expression of Scottish life.

Scotland's national theater entered something of an eclipse, however, after 1870, when the new railway network allowed recently premiered theatrical work to move quickly from London to the provinces. The railway network simultaneously consolidated London's position as the center of the theatrical world and robbed Scottish theater of its independent status. With theaters increasingly depending on London-based companies, fewer Scottish plays were required, and those Scottish dramatists who chose to continue to write began to write more obviously for the market.

But not everyone was content to pander to the values of the age. The end of the 19th century witnessed something of a revival of the CLOSET DRAMA. Among the most prestigious closet dramatists were John Davidson and William Sharp, who would achieve greater fame as the novelist and philosopher Fiona MacLeod, but was also president of the London Stage Society. Opinions vary as to the merit of this writing. Hugh MacDiarmid would hail Davidson's Robert the Bruce as Scotland's best historical play. This interest in history would be developed by Professor Robert Buchanan, who published closet dramas on James I and William Wallace. Serious drama was also cultivated by another Robert Buchanan, who was responsible for a series of successful adaptations from classic novels. His Sophia (1886) was adapted from Tom Jones, and The Sixth Commandment (1890) from Crime and Punishment. The adaptation of successful novels was clearly market driven, but the relationship between novel and drama was not always one way: Robert Louis Stevenson's Deacon Brodie (1884) reads like a first draft for Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (1886). Another successful novelist would be better known as the most important dramatist at the beginning of the 20th century. J. M. BARRIE (1860–1937) enjoyed the success of Walker, London (1892) and The Professor's Love Story (1894) but made his reputation by the success of The Little Minister (1897). By overseeing the stage adaptation of his own novel, Barrie made great advances in its presentation of form and content.

If Barrie represents Scottish drama at its most profitable, his work also demonstrates the provincialism of the Scottish stage. Although he was Scotland's most important dramatist at the beginning of the 20th century, his plays were produced in London and New York—never in Scotland. Paradoxically, Barrie's work is suffused with Scottish themes, although his whimsical and often parochial national vision has been identified as providing for the false consciousness of the kailyard (cabbage patch) writers. At the end of the 19th century, Scottish plays performed by Scottish actors using the Scots language were largely restricted to the geggies, the transportable theaters that moved among the market towns.

Scottish theater embraced a new radicalism at the beginning of the 20th century. In 1900 Scotland could boast thirty-two theaters, but their number had risen to fifty-three within ten years. While major writers continued to depict Scotland as the landscape of the Romantic imagination, new companies were formed and new plays were published with explicit class and urban concerns. In the period between the wars, the Scottish Community Drama Association dominated Scottish theater. Their annual festival of one-act plays generated immense popular interest: in 1926, only four years after its foundation, the festival attracted over three hundred entries. One outstanding play from this period was Joe Corrie's In Time o' Strife (1927). Indeed, the vitality of this creative energy challenges Muir's (1936) claim that Scotland had "no great burst of poetic drama." Ironically, he was living through it, though it is fair to admit that the work of John Brandane, Robert McLellan, Alexander Reid, and Robert Kemp has, in general, not worn well.

The distinctive MODERNIST sensibility cultivated by the Scottish renaissance drew explicit comparisons with IRELAND. The success of the Abbey Theatre in Dublin encouraged the Scottish Repertory Theatre in Glasgow and provided momentum for the formation of the Scottish National Players. Whereas the productions of the Scottish National Players tended to favor rural themes, the Unity Theatre, established in 1941, drew on the political interests of its members to focus its energies on themes relevant to the urban situation of a Scotland at war. Unity assisted the establishment of the Edinburgh Festival Fringe by producing plays without official approval at the first Edinburgh Festival in 1947.

In the same period, James Bridie was doing his utmost to become Scotland's answer to GEORGE BERNARD SHAW. He founded the Citizens' Theatre in Glasgow in 1943, the first dependable outlet for local dramatic writing; he founded the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in 1950; he was chairman of the Scottish Arts Council; and he authored forty-two plays. He was known for his subtle and enquiring Scottish mind and was considered one of the most intellectually fertile contributors to Scottish literature in any genre. Yet Scottish dramatists have been reluctant to pick up his mantle. Ironically, it was in the Church of Scotland's Assembly Hall in Edinburgh that Scottish drama was re-energized. The situation of Tyrone Guthrie's ground-breaking production of David Lindsay's Satire was iconic. In the very heart of the establishment that had sponsored, then cauterized, Scottish drama, Lindsay's Satire finally convinced audiences that the Scots language had the power in drama that the writers of the Scottish Renaissance in the 1920s had recognized in poetry and prose.

Dramatic renewal reflected the artistic implications of a wider cultural crisis in Scotland. Cinema and the advent of television had decimated the music hall tradition and educated Scottish audiences to an appreciation of a drama that had little local connection. By 1970, only fifteen theaters remained in Scotland, though other stages existed elsewhere. With a growing appreciation of political distance from London, Scottish writers embraced an increasing nationalism. Theater, with other literary genres, was increasingly reflecting political debate and popular change. JOHN MCGRATH founded the 7:84 THEATRE COMPANY in 1971, and a Scottish 7:84 in 1973. The company's name was a deliberate polemic: McGrath sourced the numbers in an economic statistic that ascribed 84 percent of British wealth to 7 percent of the total number of taxpayers. The company's first hit confirmed its political commitments. THE CHEVIOT, THE STAG AND THE BLACK, BLACK OIL (1973), a collaborative production, developed a ceildh-house style of theater, mixing music and dance with story and song. Its popularity was immense, revitalizing David Lindsay's political commitment with a dramatic verve that saw the company lead the way in touring the Highlands and Islands with their warning of transnational capitalism. Subsequent productions saw 7:84 pushing audiences into an international awareness and a new skepticism about nostalgic visions of Scottish history. THIS AGITATION-PROPAGANDA drama was developed by a 7:84 off-shoot, WILDCAT, founded in 1978 to retain left-wing commitments while being less overtly orientated toward the working classes.

But the political and cultural commitments of these companies could not disguise the fact that 20th-century drama had grown increasingly marginalized. The outlook at the end of the 1970s, in the aftermath of the scotching of nationalist hopes at the failure of the devolution referendum, seemed bleak. But, as the plays in Alasdair Cameron's Scot-Free: New Scottish Plays (1990) demonstrate, Scottish drama flourished in the 1980s. Writers found new confidence in utilizing the Scots language and new confidence in dealing with the past. Tony Roper's The Steamie (1987), first staged by Wildcat, appeared to offer audiences the kind of sentimentality critics thought they had left behind with the early 20th-century kailyard—until they realized the play's comment on the decimation of the older urban communities to make way for the soul-less and crime-stricken high-rise developments. Cameron's voicing of women's experience was developed in LIZ LOCHHEAD's MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS GOT HER HEAD CHOPPED OFF (1987), a powerful, searching examination of gender and sectarianism in the contemporary imagination. In Mary Queen of Scots, Scottish history met its nemesis. Gender issues were now as important as national concerns.

Drama in the 1990s confirmed the dearth of a nationally focused drama. The newer and more successful writers moved far beyond Glasgow's "smiles better" development campaign and the promise of its status as European City of Culture in 1990. While television drama was now taking time to reflect distinctively Scottish interests and concerns, a national cinema has emerged to address international audiences. Braveheart (directed by Mel Gibson, 1995) and Trainspotting (directed by Danny Boyle, 1996) may not reflect the "polar twins of the Scottish mime," but they certainly suggest the variety and vitality of Scottish interests in cinema's international market.

Perhaps John Home's Shakespearian status was never likely to emerge. But now, at the beginning of the 21st century, Scottish drama has finally demonstrated its return to the potential recognized by David Lindsay. The Reformation is an ironic place to begin the recovery of the national stage—but perhaps, after all, Mr. Bolfray was right.

FURTHER READING

- Cameron, Alasdair. "Scottish Drama in the Nineteenth Century." In The History of Scottish Literature, ed. by Cairns Craig. Aberdeen: Aberdeen Univ. Press, 1988. Vol. III, 429–441.
- Craig, Cairns, and Randall Stevenson, eds. Twentieth-Century Scottish Drama: An Anthology. Edinburgh: Canongate, 2001.
- Findlay, Bill, ed. History of Scottish Theatre. Edinburgh: Polygon, 1998.
- Hutchison, David. "Scottish Drama, 1900–1950." In The History of Scottish Literature, ed. by Cairns Craig. Aberdeen: Aberdeen Univ. Press, 1987. Vol. IV, 163–177.
- McDonald, Jan. "Scottish Women Dramatists Since 1945." In A History of Scottish Women's Writing, ed. by Douglas Gifford and Dorothy McMillan. Edinburgh: Edinburgh Univ. Press, 1997. 494–513.
- Muir, Edwin. Scott and Scotland: The Predicament of the Scottish Writer. London: Routledge, 1936.
- Stevenson, Randall, and Gavin Wallace, eds. Scottish Theatre Since the Seventies. Edinburgh: Edinburgh Univ. Press, 1996.
- Walker, Marshall. Scottish Literature Since 1707. London: Longman, 1996.

Crawford Gribben

THE SCOUNDREL

The Scoundrel (Na vsyakogo mudretsa dovol'no prostoty, 1868)—also known as Even Wise Men Err or Even a Wise Man Stumbles, as well as The Diary of a Scoundrel—is a COMEDY in five acts by ALEKSANDR OSTROVSKY in which a young man, Glumov (the name is associated with "making fun of"), who is determined to rise in the world by any means necessary.

Glumov insinuates himself into his uncle Mamayev's good graces. Mamayev is well-disposed toward Glumov and, on his advice, the young man even pretends to love Mamayev's wife, Kleopatra, a society coquette. Mamayev also introduces Glumov to "a young man of importance," Gorodulin, for whom he writes a speech of "liberal" sentiment, and to General Krutitsky, "an old man of importance," for whom Glumov ghost-writes a "conservative" tract with equal facility. Glumov next adopts a pose of religiosity he does not feel so he will be introduced to a widow, Turusina, who is seeking a virtuous fiancé for her richly dowered niece, Mashenka. Glumov pretends to love Mashenka to get his hands on her fortune. However, when a now jealous Kleopatra goes to his apartment, she finds and steals Glumov's diary, to which he has confided the most unflattering comments on his protectors. She makes the contents of the diary public and thus frustrates the marriage. Although this results in Glumov's banishment from society, Krutitsky foresees that he will eventually be recalled, because everyone needs a Glumov in some way or other.

Like a picaresque hero of 18th-century fiction, Glumov exposes to ridicule one milieu after another, from the merchant class to high society. But above all, he prostitutes his own gifts by putting them at the service now of this, now of that opinion. Glumov is a "wise man" who, with his talents for sale, still makes the one unwise mistake that causes his downfall. The word mudrets (a wise person) was in common parlance among political sages in post-emancipation RUSSIA (i.e., following the liberation of the serfs in 1861). In an ironic sense, Glumov's patrons are also wise men: Mamayev with his advice to all and sundry, Gorodulin with his liberal remedies, and Krutitsky with his conservative wisdom. Themes of deception, role-playing, and self-delusion are not merely examples of Ostrovsky's depiction of mid-19th-century Russian society, but involve the portrayal of complex human behavior. Glumov talks to a civil servant about the role-playing required by his profession: "Don't think, unless you are ordered to. Laugh, whenever your boss fancies he's cracked a joke. Do all the thinking and work for your boss, while at the same time convincing him with all the humility you can manage that it's his . . ." Examples of hypocrisy make for a number of delightfully comic passages, and Ostrovsky exploits to the full the device of dramatic irony.

Glumov reappeared as a mischief-maker in Ostrovsky's later play Easy Money, and the character became an archetype when Mikhail Saltykov-Shchedrin incorporated him in his A Contemporary Idyll (1877–1883). The Soviet Russian critic, Vladimir Lakshin, noted that Ostrovsky had written "a political comedy with deep sociophilosophic meaning." The play's satire has proven relevant to later times as well. It was among the thirteen most frequently staged of all Ostrovsky's plays for fifty years after the playwright's death and is frequently revived to this day.

FURTHER READING

- Hoover, Marjorie L. Alexander Ostrovsky. Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1981.
- Ostrovsky, Alexander. The Diary of a Scoundrel. Adapted by Rodney Ackland. London: Marston, 1948. Also in Vol. 2 of The Modern Theatre, ed. by Eric Bentley (Garden City: Doubleday, 1955). Also published as Too Clever by Half (New York: Applause Theatre Book Publications, 1988).
- . The Scoundrel. In Five Plays. Tr. and ed. by Eugene K. Bristow. New York: Western Publishing Co., 1989.
- Rahman, Kate Sealey. Ostrovsky: Reality and Illusion. Birmingham Slavonic Monographs No. 30. Birmingham: Univ. of Birmingham, 1999.

Liisa Byckling

A SCRAP OF PAPER

In A Scrap of Paper (1860), VICTORIEN SARDOU achieves a high-water mark of dramatic craft through rigorous and imaginative application of the principles of the pièce bien faite or well-made play, developed and perfected by his chief model, Eugène Scribe. Although well-made play structure has been widely applied, from serious social criticism to historical drama to FARCE, A Scrap of Paper reveals a perfect union of structure and subject in a play that owes much to the COMEDY of manners of earlier generations.

The situation is romantic and social: three years prior to the play's action, lovers Prosper and Clarisse were forced apart by Clarisse's arranged marriage to Vanhove; on the night they parted, Clarisse wrote him a final love letter and placed it, according to their custom, under a statue in the drawing room. After a scene in which the household servants explain the prior action, Prosper returns (illustrating the late point of attack common to the form) under a mandate to marry and pays court to Clarisse's sister Marthe, who is in love with a shy, young student Paul. The love letter (or "scrap of paper") is discovered under the statue, undisturbed, and after an elaborate but polite struggle in full view of the assembled company, Prosper gains possession of it, to Clarisse's considerable chagrin. Clarisse then enlists her free-spirited friend Suzanne to retrieve the letter from Prosper; accordingly, she pays a visit to Prosper's rooms, in the course of which they begin to fall in love.

The stolid Vanhove, suspicious of the sudden increase in the level of romantic tension (and unaware that he is a character in the middle of the rising action of a well-made play), arrives at Prosper's lodging in search of his wife. Finding Suzanne there, he conceives the notion (which turns out to be correct in the end) that Suzanne is in love with Prosper, and he promises to further their alliance.

Suzanne, meanwhile, has found the scrap of paper; she convinces Prosper to burn it, and he does so by using it as a match to light a lamp; but he throws the burning paper out the window where, extinguished and still legible, it falls into the hands of one Thirion, amateur entomologist. He uses it to wrap a rare beetle that he has discovered while out hunting with Vanhove, which brings the scrap of paper back into Vanhove's house. Paul finds it and uses the reverse side to write a love note to Marthe; at dinner, the paper is revealed to all, but Vanhove's misunderstanding that Suzanne and Prosper are in love turns out to carry the day—and to be the truth—so all ends happily for the two pairs of lovers, as Paul and Marthe are now free to marry as well.

Despite Sardou's considerable and exceedingly formulaic machinations, the play retains its ability to charm through his bravura skills at the plotting and at drawing the lively characters of Prosper and Suzanne. Though GEORGE BERNARD SHAW coined the term Sardoodledom to deride the playwright's contrivances, we may find ourselves agreeing with the 1886 verdict of Joseph Jefferson, the American actor: "Among modern plays I consider The Scrap of Paper by Victorien Sardou to be the most ingenious of all. If Sardou only had heart he would be one of the greatest dramatists that ever lived."

FURTHER READING

Brockett, Oscar, and Robert R. Findlay. Century of Innovation: A History of European and American Theatre and Drama Since 1870. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1973.

Sardou, Victorien. A Scrap of Paper. Tr. by Léonie Gilmour. In Camille and Other Plays, ed. by Stephen S. Stanton. New York: Hill and Wang, 1957. Also see Stanton's excellent introduction to the dramaturgy of the well-made play as practiced by Scribe, Sardou, Augier, and Dumas fils.

Shaw, George Bernard. Dramatic Opinions and Essays. London: Constable & Co., 1909.

Rick Davis

THE SCREENS

The first French production of JEAN GENET's three-and-a-half-hour panorama of the Algerian War of Independence caused riots in and around the Odéon Theatre, Paris, in April 1966. Light bulbs, eggs, smoke bombs, and bits of metal were hurled at the actors. Right-wing commando protestors stormed the stage, sometimes rappelling down from the upper balcony to do so. Night after night, the fire curtain had to be lowered while artistic director Jean-Louis Barrault (who was in the cast) appealed to the audience for order. An amendment was introduced in the Chamber of Deputies to reduce the Odéon's subsidy by 270,000 francs, the cost of the production.

In Genet's intricate conception, over ninety characters inhabit a seventeen-scene fresco of Algeria fighting for its independence from FRANCE. Colonists, missionaries, Arab insurgents, prostitutes, peasants, and French paratroopers are locked in rituals of incomprehension that are violent and sordid on both sides. At the center of the action, the humanity of an Arab named Saïd, affianced to an ugly woman because he's too poor to afford a desirable wife, slowly erodes: he beats his wife, he steals, he betrays his countrymen to the French. His mother tries to help him, even after her death, but Saïd is beyond the aid of the living or the dead—nor can he be bothered to take sides in their quarrels. He sends himself off with a scatological remark before being gunned down by Arab insurgents, a traitor dispatched in a glorious light of self-realization.

Although the raw language, politically sensitive theme, and unflattering depiction of the military incensed many, the play's vivid poetry of image, action, and word impressed even its critics. As in Genet's preceding plays, characters seem mesmerized by their own images and insensitive to the suffering of others. The titular screens—some painted, some white, some black—serve as décor but also reveal (and conceal) the status of the characters who move behind them. In each scene, Genet calls for everyday objects to set off the brightly painted screens: a wheelbarrow, a galvanized basin, a watering can. At the moment of death, characters plunge through papered screens only to return to the stage (albeit on a lower platform) to comment on the actions of the living. Through a cruel succession of crimes, rebellions, and revolutions, the colonists see their clothes tatter, even as they wear more decorations to cover the scraps. A sergeant's cruelty makes him glow in the dark. A lieutenant is shot by a sniper; his men see him off by farting in the dead officer's face. "It's a duty we have to perform. Even if he isn't buried in Christian earth, at least he'll breathe the air of home as he dies . . ."

The original production was directed by Roger Blin, with costumes, grotesque makeup, and a multilevel set by André Acquart. Given its incendiary themes and its massive production costs, The Screens (Les Paravents) is seldom revived, although Joanne Akalaitis directed a production at the Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1989.

FURTHER READING

Dichy, Albert, and Lynda Peskine. La Bataille des Paravents: Théâtre de l'Odeon, 1966 [The Battle over the Screens: The Odeon Theater, 1966]. Paris: IMEC, 1991.

Genet, Jean. Selected Writings. Hopewell, N.J.: Ecco, 1995.

Sartre, Jean-Paul. Saint Genet, Actor and Martyr. Tr. by Bernard Frechtman. New York: Random House, 1983.

White, Edmund. Genet: A Biography. New York: Vintage Books, 1994.

Robert Schneider

THE SEAGULL

The first of ANTON CHEKHOV's four dramatic masterpieces, The Seagull (Chaika, 1895) marks a key departure in the playwright's development. Having long felt fettered by the so-called well-made play that dominated the Russian stage at that time, Chekhov had battled with its conventions in earlier dramas such as PLATONOV and IVANOV. From his point of view, conventional requirements, such as a dramatic event at each curtain, inhibited the portrayal of real life and nurtured theatrical artifice for its own sake. Such considerations led the playwright away from the play of direct action and toward the play of indirect action. More and more Chekhov eschewed overt dramatic conflict and relied more heavily on mood and atmosphere to reveal the unspoken psychological drama that unfolds among his characters. It is this tendency that has led some commentators to speak of Chekhov's literary impressionism.

Although Chekhov is far removed from Sigmund Freud, the psychological drama of The Seagull is fundamentally Oedipal in nature, but Oedipal in the same sense that the core conflict in Hamlet is Oedipal. Like Hamlet, Konstantin Treplev vies for the affections of his mother, from whom he is estranged. Not only do his emotional needs put him in conflict with his mother's consort, Boris Trigorin, but so do his aspirations: Trigorin's reputation as an established author evokes a peculiar anxiety of influence in Treplev, who dreams of becoming a writer. This tension is further exacerbated when his love interest, Nina Zarechnaia, becomes interested in Trigorin. Despite this emotionally charged atmosphere, these tensions do not result in overt dramatic confrontation. An excellent example arises in Chekhov's handling of Treplev's suicide, which occurs offstage following a few resigned remarks he makes before exiting. Compare this with the ending of Ivanov, in which the main character delivers a quasi-heroic speech before rushing away just far enough from his wife and the other characters to shoot himself in front of them.

Indeed, The Seagull is remarkable for the absence of set pieces and soliloquies. (In this sense, it is important that Treplev is no Hamlet.) As a result, greater emphasis is naturally placed on the ensemble and on the interplay among the actors. (It is perhaps this quality that made the play so attractive to KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY.) The absence of soliloquies should not obscure Chekhov's innovative use of language. Whereas his predecessors had depended heavily on direct discourse, Chekhov emphasized unmarked speech and highlighted what remained unspoken. Chekhov's discourse concerns the failure to communicate. His concern for theatrical discourse becomes evident at other levels as well. By introducing Treplev's quasi-symbolist play into The Seagull, Chekhov draws attention to the metatheatrical discourse of the play; that is, the give and take between different theatrical languages.

That such an innovative and complex text posed problems for its first interpreters comes as no surprise. Several explanations for the failure of The Seagull at the Aleksandrinsky Theater in St. Petersburg in 1896 have been advanced. Some critics attribute it to the company's inability to render Chekhov's innovative discourse in the language of the old theatrical tradition, which the playwright had abandoned but to which the troupe still adhered, despite the participation of forward-looking actors and actresses like Vera Komissarzhevskaja, who played the role of Nina. Others have laid blame at the feet of the critics and the audience, who had come to see a benefit performance and were looking to be entertained.

In contrast, the success that Konstantin Stanislavsky and Vladimir Nemirovich-Danchenko enjoyed with The Seagull at the newly formed MOSCOW ART THEATER in 1898 owed much to a fortunate convergence of Chekhov's poetics and their own. Stanislavsky's emphasis on ensemble work was consonant with Chekhov's approach to characterization. Schooled in NATURALISM and the most innovative drama of the preceding generation, the remarkable cast, which included Chekhov's future wife Olga Knipper as Irina Arkadina and VSEVOLOD MEYERHOLD himself as Treplev, had an innate feeling for Chekhov's language. Perhaps just as important, the Art Theater's audience came to support a company that existed independently, outside of the Imperial Theater system. Their openness played no small role in the play's success. Chekhov himself, however, remained skeptical about Stanislavsky's approach to The Seagull. In particular, he expressed concern about the slow tempo of the performance and about the naturalistic effects the director employed.

The influence of The Seagull has been immense and was felt almost immediately after the Art Theater production. It played no small part in the development of Russian symbolist drama. Chekhov's evocation of mood and atmosphere, the enigmatic quality of the seagull as a symbol, and his new metatheatrical poetics exercised a decisive influence on the Symbolists. Thanks to the foreign tours of the Moscow Art Theater, the play has proven equally influential in Europe and the United States.

[See also Russia and the Soviet Union]

FURTHER READING

- Balukhaty, S. D., ed. "The Seagull" Produced by Stanislavsky—Production Score for the Moscow Art Theatre by K. S. Stanislavsky. Tr. by David Magarshack; introduction by S. D. Balukhaty. London: Dennis Dobson, 1952.
- Chekhov, Anton. The Seagull. Tr. by Michael Frayn, with commentary and notes. London: Methuen Student Edition, 2002.
- Gilman, Richard. Chekhov's Plays: An Opening into Eternity. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1995.
- Peace, Richard. Chekhov: A Study of the Four Major Plays. New Haven and London: Yale Univ. Press, 1983.
- Winner, Thomas G. "Chekhov's Seagull and Shakespeare's Hamlet: A Study of a Dramatic Device." In Anton Chekhov's Plays, tr. and ed. by Eugene K. Bristow. New York: W.W. Norton & Co., 1977. 341–48.

Timothy C. Westphalen

SEAGULL EATERS

You eat sea gulls? Excellent dish. Freedom personified brought down from heaven. Bang!

—Theater Director, Part 1

Seagull Eaters (Måkespisere, 1982), a radio drama by CECILIE LØVEID, had its premiere on Norwegian radio in 1982 and was published along with two other plays in 1983 in Måkespisere; Tre spill for radio og scene. The play was Løveid's breakthrough as a playwright and became an immediate success. The play is lyrical and modernistic, with a documentary style to the plot based in World War II during the German occupation of NORWAY. The main character in the drama is Kristine Larsen. Scenes from her childhood and youth are depicted, starting in Bergen in 1939. Kristine wants to become an actress and opposes the roles her parents, her fiancé, the society, and the language itself has prepared for her. She reaches her goal, but the price turns out to be high.

Seagull Eaters is a COLLAGE, a composition of dialogues and scenes telling the story about, and reflecting over, Kristine Larsen's struggle for the life she wants. A children's choir comments on Kristine and her story. Contours of a tragic plot become gradually visible. The peripety is Kristine's surrender to Olsen, a Nazi sympathizer. The main conflict can be found in the question of how a woman can free herself from oppressive cultural traditions and norms and yet achieve the love she needs. "It gets tiring to play tragedies all by yourself." Kristine is also represented as teller of her story in the drama, suggesting that inside the drama she finally will achieve a true voice of her own.

Intertextuality is another important concept for the drama; different texts and literary traditions are employed and referenced throughout. Henriette Schønberg Erken's Stor Kokebok (1895), for a long time the main cookbook for housewives in Norway, is an important background text. Erken reads selected passages from her book at strategic moments in the drama. The quotes represent advice about how to kill, pluck, singe, prepare, and serve birds—and seem also to describe how to deal with young women. An early reply from Kristine leads to this interpretation: "I love reading the cookbook. Suspense and drama. How to cut animals' throats, fry hens, slaughter geese . . ." A main point in the play is to make visible a certain language code in which tame birds, like goose and hen, serve as metaphors for females. Wild birds, like the seagull, and in general predators, often function as metaphors for males. In this way language itself puts Kristine's project of self-liberation in perspective.

The play is usually interpreted as a protest against traditional views of women and womanhood. The language theme supports this feminist theme. The drama also contains a cultural critique and a political dimension: upper-class people as well as Nazis can also be regarded as seagull eaters.

Seagull Eaters was awarded the Prix Italia in 1983 and has since been produced by, among others, German, Swedish, and French radio companies.

FURTHER READING

- Garton, Janet. Norwegian Women's Writing 1850–1990. London & Atlantic Highlands, N.J.: Athlone, 1993. 220–221.
- Garton, Janet, and Henning Sehmsdorf. New Norwegian plays. Norwich, England: Norvik Press, 1989. 28–30.
- Markussen, Bjarne. "Hverdagslige katastrofer" [Everyday Catastrophes] and "Måkespisere" [Seagull Eaters]. In Livsritualer. En bok om Cecilie Løveids dramatik [Rituals of Life: A Book on Cecilie Løveid's Dramatic Writings], ed. by Merete Morken Andersen. Oslo: Gyldendal, 1998.
- Tjønneland, Eivind. "Fabelens fragmentering—noen strøtanker om Cecilie Løveids Måkespisere" [The Fragmentation of Fabula—Some Incidental Thoughts on Cecilie Løveid's Seagull Eaters]. Nordica Bergensia 17 (1998): 29–37.

Alvhild Dvergsdal

SEARS, DJANET (1959–)

Born in London, England, on August 23, 1959, Djanet Sears is a dynamic and versatile figure in Canadian theater. Although most renowned for playwriting, Sears has excelled as an actress, director, scholar, and pedagogue. At fifteen Sears left ENGLAND, where she had been raised by Guyanese and Jamaican parents, and moved to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, CANADA. After studying at York University, she moved to Toronto to begin an acting career. Sears acted in the first production of her first self-penned play, Afrika Solo, which was staged in 1989 at Factory Theatre; a subsequent CBC radio adaptation (which Sears also acted in) brought Sears's explorations of class, gender, and race to a wider audience. Afrika Solo, a MONODRAMA, is a semiautobiographical narrative about a character seeking IDENTITY in Canada. Sears has always attended to her own multicultural identity. Feeling partially British, Caribbean, and Canadian, Sears looks to AFRICA as her ancestral and spiritual home: she was christened Janet, but visited a town near Mali called Djanet, felt an affinity with the place and people, and changed her name.

Sears's 1990s plays include Double Trouble, Shakes, and Who Killed Katie Ross. Before 2003's ADVENTURES OF A BLACK GIRL IN SEARCH OF GOD, Sears's best-known play was Harlem Duet, which she directed at the Tarragon in Toronto in 1997. The play is a bold prequel to William Shakespeare's Othello. Othello is married to Billie; although both are black, the couple is divided on the race issue. Othello cares little for black identity and even seeks to pass for white; Billie, on the other hand, is fiercely anti-white. Harlem Duet, which is enlivened by a blues soundtrack, reworks Othello so radically and effectively that Sears's work has become acclaimed by Shakespearean scholars and enthusiasts. One significant aspect of Harlem Duet is that there are no white characters; although we are to imagine Mona (Othello's next wife) just offstage, the play illuminates black characters' concerns exclusively. Sears has claimed that some negative reaction to her plays derives from a white discomfort at seeing a stage peopled exclusively with "others," with nonwhites. The number of awards that Sears received for Harlem Duet may indicate that white critics and audiences are quite ready to accept an all-black cast.

Sears's commitment to articulating the black voice through theater is not limited to the promotion of her own work. An energetic campaigner for the efficacy and legacy of black Canadian theatrical writing, Sears celebrates the history of black dramatic writing. She is the artistic director of the AfriCanadian Playwrights' Conference Festival and has produced accessible anthologies of black Canadian playwriting. The two volumes of Testify'n' collect works of Lorena Gale, Andrew Moodie, and George Seremba, among others. In effect, Sears has constructed the first major canon of black Canadian dramatic texts. Sears continues to write acclaimed plays of her own, as well as to promote previous achievements by African Canadian dramatists and to encourage first-time writers, particularly through her drama teaching at University College, University of Toronto, where she is an adjunct professor.

PLAYS: Afrika Solo (1989); Who Killed Katie Ross (1994); Harlem Duet (1997); The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (2003)

FURTHER READING

- Holledge, Julie, and Joanne Tompkins. Women's Intercultural Performance. London: Routledge, 2000. 195–196.
- Kidnie, M. J. "There's Magic in the Web of It: Seeing Beyond Tragedy in Harlem Duet." Journal of Commonwealth Literature 36, no. 3 (2001): 29–44.
- Knowles, Ric. "Othello in Three Time." In Shakespeare in Canada: A World Elsewhere, ed. by Diana Brydon and Irena R. Makaryk. Toronto: Univ. of Toronto Press, 2002. 371–394.
- Sears, Djanet. Afrika Solo. Toronto: Sister Vision Press, 1990.
- . Harlem Duet. In Adaptations of Shakespeare: A Critical Anthology, ed. by Daniel Fischlin and Mark Fortier. London: Routledge, 2000. 285–317.
- . Testifyin': Contemporary African Canadian Drama, Vols. One and Two. Toronto: Canada Playwrights Press, 2000 and 2003.
- Wasserman, Jerry. "Djanet Sears." In Encyclopedia of Literature in Canada, ed. by William H. New. Toronto: Univ. of Toronto Press, 2002. 1031.

Kevin De Ornellas

A SEASON IN THE CONGO

The second of AIMÉ CÉSAIRE's three "epics of decolonization" (after The Tragedy of King Christophe, 1963), A Season in the Congo (1966) depicts in three turbulent acts the final months of historical figure Patrice Lumumba, who briefly served as the first prime minister of the Independent Congo (later known as the Republic of Zaire, and now called the Democratic Republic of Congo).

Much as Georg Büchner used the historical record to critique the French Revolution in Danton's Death, Césaire drew heavily on actual events, figures, and recorded speeches to explore the viability of the African independence movement of the early 1960s. Independence from BELGIUM was granted to the Congo in June 1960; Lumumba created a coalition government with President Joseph Kasavubu and Defense Secretary Mobutu Sese Seko (renamed Kala Lubu and Mokutu, respectively). In the play, the charismatic Lumumba is immediately beset by foreign resistance in the form of European economic interests and American policymakers fearful that the Congo will appeal to the Soviet Union for help, and by internal conflicts in the form of long-simmering tribal interests personified by Mokutu and Msiri. A grotesque chorus of bankers, speaking in mock-Alexandrine verse, abets the secession of the Katanga province, known for its rich copper, diamond, and uranium deposits. Lumumba secures the assistance of a United Nations peacekeeping force (in the person of historical figure Dag Hammarsköld), but its stance of neutrality allows Belgian arms and soldiers to pour into the country and further divide the Congolese people. Stripped of his position and placed under house arrest, Lumumba attempts a final march to power but is killed by Katangese rebels and white mercenaries—a murder arranged by Mokutu.

Lumumba attempts too much too soon for his people, but as the playwright predicts, in death, “he will be even more fearsome.” Insisting that his play was a poetic TRAGEDY and not a Marxist tract, Césaire has stated that his theater “is not an individual or individualistic theater, it is an EPIC THEATER for it always presents the fate of a whole community.” Season is ultimately more Brechtian in its stage techniques—short scenes of alternating scale and tone, didactic speech and song, radio news briefs, etc.—than in its outlook. Season carries forward cultural traditions from African DRAMATURGY with the figure of The Sanza Player, a sometimes ironic, sometimes lyrical commentator and sparring partner to Lumumba, who represents, with his use of African proverbs and jokes, “the good or good common sense of the people.” The Sanza Player has the last word: as the curtain falls, he steps forward to sing “. . . a beginning is only a beginning / And if we’re going to do this thing / Let’s not do it by halves . . .” This reminds us, as does the title itself, that other seasons will come for both the Congolese people and the ideals of pan-African solidarity for which Lumumba lived and died.

Under the direction of Jean-Marie Serreau, A Season in the Congo received its premiere at the Venice Biennale of 1967, before transferring to the Théâtre de L’Est Parisien, a community cultural center in the heart of a working-class district of Paris.

[See also Africa; France]

FURTHER READING

Benimadhu, P. “Une Saison au Congo: Problématique de la décolonisation” [A Season in the Congo: Issues of Decolonization]. Indian Cultural Review (1980): 33–46.

Brichaux-Houyoux, Suzanne. Quand Césaire Écrit, Lumumba Parle. Édition commentée de “Une Saison au Congo” [When Césaire writes, Lumumba speaks. Critical edition of A Season in the Congo]. Paris: Éditions L’Harmattan, 1993.

Césaire, Aimé. A Season in the Congo. Tr. by Ralph Manheim. New York: Grove Press, 1968.

Hale, Thomas A. “Aimé Césaire: A Bio-Bibliographical Note.” Callaloo 17 (1983): 134–136.

Rowell, Charles H. “It Is Through Poetry That One Copes With Solitude: An Interview with Aimé Césaire.” Callaloo 38 (1989): 49–67.

Sekora, Karin. “‘Il y avait un tabou à lever.’ Intertextualité dans Une Saison au Congo d’Aimé Césaire” [“There’s a taboo to lift.” Intertextuality in A Season in the Congo by Aimé Césaire]. Œuvres et Critiques 19, no. 2 (1994): 243–265.

Lam-Thao Nguyen

THE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY

Killed herself? Yes—yes. So everybody will say. But I know—I helped to kill her. [She beats her breast] If only I had been merciful!

—Ellean, Act 4, Scene 1

ALFRED WING PINERO’s The Second Mrs. Tanqueray is one of the best-known late Victorian PROBLEM PLAYS. In tracing a fallen woman’s failed attempt at reformation and exposing society’s sexual double standard, Pinero both reflects and challenges Victorian conventions of gender and respectability. When this play was first produced in 1893, it was widely criticized for immorality and the sense of unpleasantness that pervades the tale; however, it has since been seen as one of the first truly literary plays of the Victorian period. Mrs. Patrick Campbell, who played Paula Tanqueray in the original production, was widely praised for her performance. Despite lighting effects that emphasized Aubrey Tanqueray as the hero, audiences and critics alike seemed to view Campbell as the star of the play. Indeed, The London Times (May 29, 1893) review of this production calls Paula “a masterpiece of execution by author and actress alike.”

The play opens in Aubrey Tanqueray’s bachelor lodgings. Aubrey is hosting a dinner to announce his marriage and bid farewell to his closest friends. Aubrey’s first marriage to a reserved Roman Catholic was unhappy, but when she was dying, he promised to have their daughter reared in a convent. As a result, he has almost no relationship with Ellean. Believing that his daughter has decided to take her vows, Aubrey has decided to marry Paula, an adventuress who has been ill-used by the many men with whom she has been linked. He believes, through patience and a respectable marriage, he will eventually be able to return Paula to society.

Trouble arises when Ellean changes her mind about becoming a nun and comes to live with her father and his new wife in Highercombe, the rural home Aubrey had shared with her mother. Although Aubrey shields her from Paula’s past, Ellean senses something in Paula that prompts her to withhold her affection, something the older woman desperately craves. Ellean’s reserve, Paula’s jealousy, and the isolation in which they live have combined to divide Paula and Aubrey. A visit from her vulgar friends underscores the fact that Paula’s character has grown, but she cannot offer Ellean the social advantages appropriate to the girl’s class position. Against Paula’s wishes, Aubrey sends Ellean to Paris with a friend of the family, further alienating his wife. In Paris, Ellean falls in love with Captain Ardale and returns unexpectedly to obtain her father’s blessing. Ellean has forgiven Ardale for his dissolute past, but when it is revealed that he was involved with Paula, she cannot forgive her stepmother. Feeling that she has lost any chance of winning the girl’s love and believing that she will soon become a distasteful burden to her husband, Paula retires to her room and commits suicide. Ellean’s final lines emphasize the play’s message about the injustice of society’s sexual double standard.

[See also England, 1860–1940]

FURTHER READING

Pinero, Arthur Wing. The Second Mrs. Tanqueray, Trelawny of the 'Wells' and Other Plays. Ed. and introduction by J. S. Bratton. Oxford and New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1995.

"St. James's Theatre." [Review of The Second Mrs. Tanqueray by Arthur Wing Pinero.] The Times (May 29, 1893): 8.

Robin A. Werner

SECRET SERVICE

The grandfather of all spy thrillers and a star vehicle for its author, Secret Service by WILLIAM GILLETTE was first produced on May 13, 1895, in Philadelphia with Maurice Barrymore in the leading role. It then re-opened on October 5, 1896, in New York City with Gillette himself as Thorne. Subsequent productions ran in Boston, London, Paris, Hartford, and San Francisco, and Gillette played the lead in 1,791 performances.

Richmond is under siege during the Civil War. Lewis Dumont, of the United States Secret Service, has infiltrated the city disguised as Captain Thorne of the Confederate Artillery. He loves Edith Varney, the daughter of a Confederate general. She has succeeded in obtaining a special commission for him to assume command of the telegraph office, which attracts the suspicion of Benton Arrelsford of the Confederate Secret Service, who knows that someone has been using the telegraph system to subvert the Southern cause. Arrelsford has captured Dumont's brother, Henry, and tries to use him as bait to expose "Thorne," but the Yankee exploits the set-up to receive a message from Henry and then to make it appear that he has recaptured the prisoner in an escape attempt. In the play's climactic scene, "Thorne" manages to send part of Henry's message in spite of Arrelsford's efforts to stop him; Edith uses the special commission to save "Thorne" from Arrelsford's arrest, knowing full well that "Thorne" is an enemy agent; and the Yankee, torn between his love for Edith and his loyalty to the North, finally cuts the message short. Later, "Thorne" returns to the Varney home for one last conversation with Edith, and Arrelsford's men capture him. They are about to send him before the firing squad when General Randolph arrives to inform Arrelsford that "Thorne" never sent the subversive message and that the Confederate battle strategy has succeeded. "Thorne" is sent to prison as Edith swears her love.

A secondary story line concerns the comic romance between Caroline Mitford and young Wilfred Varney, who aspires to join his father on the front line in spite of his mother's objections.

Gillette was considered courageous by some for daring to make his hero a spy. William Dean Howells (1897) wrote, "The atmosphere of the piece is Confederate, and the patriotism is for the bad cause which the playwright does not make us wish well in making us sympathize with the generous devotion of so many of his brave people to it." The Athenæum (May 22, 1897) review reported:

What is most remarkable of all, Mr. Gillette demands and forces our sympathy for treachery, and holds up loyal and constant service to ridicule, if he does not present it as positive villainy. . . . That Mr. Gillette contrives to interest us in the proceedings of [Thorne and Edith] shows how well he judges the pulse of the public.

The 1977 Broadway Theatre Archive video version of the play, based on a 1976 production by the Phoenix Theatre, features John Lithgow in the Gillette role with Meryl Streep as Edith and Mary Beth Hurt as Caroline.

[See also Melodrama; United States, 1860–1929]

FURTHER READING

Cullen, Rosemary, and Don B. Wilmeth. Plays by William Hooker Gillette. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1983.

Howells, W. D. "Life and Letters." Harper's Weekly 41 (January 30, 1897): 107.

Nichols, Harold J. "William Gillette: Innovator in Melodrama." Theatre Annual 31 (1975): 7–15.

Jeffrey D. Mason

SEI PERSONAGGI IN CERCA D'AUTORE

See SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR

SENDA KOREYA (1904–1994)

Senda Koreya, Japanese SHINGEKI stage director, actor, translator, and producer, became JAPAN's foremost interpreter of BERTOLT BRECHT. Senda was a mainstay of shingeki's reestablishment after World War II, a leader of the Actors Theatre Company (Haiyūza), and directed plays until his death. Senda Koreya (Sendagaya Korean) is the name he took in 1923 after being mistaken as a Korean and beaten by Japanese vigilantes near Sendagaya, Tokyo, in the chaos following the Great Kanto Earthquake. Senda, a committed socialist who took part in some of the most important artistic and political developments in modern Japanese drama, always had a political dimension to his work.

In 1924, his knowledge of foreign languages landed Senda a job in on the editorial staff of the newly formed Tsukiji Little Theatre (Tsukiji Shōgekijō). He soon began acting. Throughout his life, Senda agreed with the founders of the Tsukiji Little Theatre, who felt that that traditional Japanese theater forms were anachronistic and detrimental to the development of a socially relevant drama.

In addition to the hectic production schedule at the Tsukiji Little Theatre, Senda was active in proletarian theater. He left the Tsukiji Little Theatre in 1926 to devote his entire energy to the proletarian movement. In 1927, he went to GERMANY and was accepted into leftist director ERWIN PISCATOR's Piscatorbühne, but soon left to join a smaller amateur group run by workers. During four and half years in Germany, Senda became a socialist and learned many techniques of agit-prop theater that he brought back in Japan in 1931. While in Germany he made trips to Moscow to see productions by KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY and VSEVOLOD MEYERHOLD. However, his main influence was Brecht, and in 1932, he produced the first Japanese language adaptation of THE THREEPENNY OPERA.

Socialism was a particular target of Japan's right-wing government until the end of World War II, and Senda was jailed briefly upon his return from Germany. Although not a member of the Communist Party, Senda recanted his socialist beliefs in 1942 to secure his third release from prison. He trained the actors who became the Actors Theatre. After the war, the company trained many actors and steadily built an audience base while producing both Japanese and Western plays. Senda directed William Shakespeare and ANTON CHEKHOV, not to mention Brecht and ABE KŌBŌ. Senda both translated and directed the original Japanese productions of most of Brecht's major works. He also directed most of Abe's plays from 1955 to 1965.

Although the Actors' Theatre was part of the left-wing coalition that opposed the renewal of the U.S.–Japan security Treaty, by the 1960s, shingeki was labeled as establishment, commercialized theater against which younger practitioners were rebelling. A group of younger actors split from the company in 1971. Senda, however, as the leader of the Actors Theatre, maintained his artistic and political beliefs and continued an active presence in Japanese theater.

FURTHER READING

Goodman, David. Japanese Drama and Culture in the 1960s: The Return of the Gods. Armonk, N.Y.: M.E. Sharpe, 1988.

Ortolani, Benito. The Japanese Theatre: From Shamanistic Ritual to Contemporary Pluralism. Princeton: Princeton Univ. Press, 1995.

Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Change and Continuity. London: Japan Library, 2002.

"Senda Koreya: An Interview," Concerned Theatre Japan 1, no. 1 (1970): 47–79.

Senda Koreya. Mō Hitotsu no Shingekishi [One More History of Shingeki]. Tokyo: Chikuma Shōbō, 1975.

Senda Koreya and Fujita Fujio. Gekihaku: Senda Koreya [Theatre Confessions: Senda Koreya]. Tokyo: Orijin Shupatsu Sentaa, 1995.

John D. Swain

LA SEÑORA EN SU BALCÓN See THE LADY ON HER BALCONY

SENS DE LA MORT See CALIGULA

LES SÉQUESTRÉS D'ALTONA See THE CONDEMNED OF ALTONA

SERAFÍN ÁLVAREZ QUINTERO See ÁLVAREZ QUINTERO, JOAQUIN

SERBIA

The beginning of the history of Serbian drama can be marked by an interesting coincidence. HENRIK IBSEN died in 1906, the same year that the most important Serbian Ibsen-style naturalist play appeared. The play in question is Our Sons (Naši sinovi), and its author, Vojislav Jovanović Marambo, is the only true representative of NATURALISM in the history of Serbian drama. Marambo does not belong to the group of classic authors readily performed today, but the historical importance of his works is beyond doubt: at the time it was written, his small opus represented a sharp break with the then-dominant trend of well-made plays. The naturalist characteristics of Our Sons and other Marambo plays are typical of the genre: an authentic depiction of the social setting (the family, financial circles, or the press) and topics such as the breakup of the middle-class family unit, poverty as a source of moral downfall, and the destruction of progressive ideals under outside pressure.

Between the two world wars (1918–1941), Serbian drama did not experience the transformation that, under the influence of European modernist trends, was underway in other genres of Serbian literature. Theater scholar Mirjana Miočinović is of the opinion that this is because the Belgrade National Theatre, a sluggish institution with a national and social mission, was not a suitable place for the development of new dramatic trends, and Belgrade had no other theaters at the time. The theater's management followed the rules of traditional esthetics and the demands of contemporary market, neither conducive to artistic experiment.

Continuity in drama development is also reflected in the fact that during the period Branislav Nušić (1864–1938) was still the leading Serbian playwright. Nušić started his playwrighting career in late 19th century when he wrote his first COMEDIES, Member of Parliament (Narodni poslanik, 1883) and The Suspect (Sumnjivo lice, 1887), under the influence of Nikolai Gogol's social satire. In the modern period, Nušić's work entered a mature phase that would conclusively affirm his position as the preeminent writer in the history of Serbian comedy and drama. His most important works during this period include The Minister's Wife (Gospođa ministarka, 1929), The Mourning Family (Ožalošćena porodica, 1934), and his last play, The Deceased (Pokojnik, 1937).

Nušić's comedies depict petty bourgeois circles whose inertia and sluggishness are suddenly broken by a dramatic event. The event throws the characters off balance, and they begin to have certain ambitions (gaining political power, amassing a fortune, social recognition, and so forth) far beyond their otherwise modest intellectual and business capabilities. These characters thus become the epitomes of the negative social phenomena and psychological traits that the comedy aims to criticize: greed, love of power, or upstart mentality. The best example of this is the character of Živka in The Minister's Wife, a humble housewife who undergoes a complete transformation when her husband becomes a government minister and who, seeking to be recognized in high society, makes a circus both of herself and her house.

However, the criticism of negative character traits and/or social phenomena is never too sharp in Nušić's comedy. The social setting in them is not portrayed with the authenticity of a naturalist play, and the desire to create a comic effect is so predominant that these comedies often contain some elements of lighter genres. Some contemporary critics therefore believe that Nušić's attitude to his comic characters is too benevolent. A sharper note of criticism, amounting to resignation in the face of man's helplessness against an immoral world, is present in Nušić's last play, The Deceased, which can thus only conditionally be classified as a comedy.

In the Serbian drama and theater between the two world wars, tradition easily dominates innovation—and this balance of power has, with brief exceptions, been a constant in Serbian culture. Thus it is important to mention some dramatists and plays that brought a breath of MODERNIST DRAMA into the Serbian theater of the period. One of these is The Mask (Maska, 1918) by Miloš Crnjanski (1893–1977), a leading Serbian poet and novelist. The play, which the author classified as a poetic comedy, is poetic not only because it was written in verse, but also because it creates a lyrical feeling of melancholy, resignation, and being thwarted. In view of the fact that the main character commits suicide in the end, The Mask is not a real comedy: the comedy lies in the contrast between the tragic fates of some characters and the frivolous world of 19th-century Vienna ballrooms where the play is set. The main theme of this gloomy drawing-room comedy is the fear of death stemming from the knowledge that youth and beauty must inexorably fade.

Two other modernist undertakings in this period are the plays The Centrifugal Dancer (Centrifugalni igrač, 1929) by Todor Manojlović and At "The Eternal Tap" (Kod "Večite slavine," 1938) by Momčilo Nastasijević. The former takes place in a nonspecified European resort, its characters are stylized, and the plot revolves around a love story that is ruined by a young man's desire to be free. The mood is elegiac, and the main point is mystical: cosmic ties bring together people separated by distance or death. The play At "The Eternal Tap" is unique for its free composition, which breaks up the chronology of the narration: the prologue and epilogue take place in the present, whereas the main plot is set in the past, and the action is presented from the end to the beginning. The reverse development is justified because the origin of the fatal love between the main characters is found at their birth: they are brother and sister. Its dark, psychoanalytical treatment of sexuality and its authentically presented social setting bring some naturalistic elements into this drama.

The first decade after World War II (1945–1955) did not yield any significant plays. The artistic inferiority of the plays written in the period stemmed mostly from the new political situation. With the communist system's ideological control of art, the works of the early communist period were written in the spirit of SOCIALIST REALISM, with a clear political message based on the "good guys and bad guys" stereotype. In this decade the authors who managed to break the constraints of propaganda were rare; they include, primarily, the Pirandellian dramas of Josip Kulundžić.

The first major turnaround happened in 1956 when two new playwrights, Đorđe Lebović and Aleksandar Obrenović wrote, The Heavenly Squad (Nebeski odred). Based partially on personal experience (Lebović spent two years in German concentration camps), they wrote a play about a group of Auschwitz prisoners who agreed to work on the cremation of their fellow sufferers to prolong their lives by three months. Slobodan Selenić notes the paradox that, after a decade of official swearing by REALISM, The Heavenly Squad was the first truly realistic play. Apart from the critical depiction of a monstrous situation, this play has some higher philosophical and anthropological content. In discord with the prevalent propaganda of optimism, this play poses some essential questions about human nature, the limits of ordeal, and the relativity of moral principles in inhumane situations.

Echoes of contemporary tendencies in world drama begin to appear in Serbia only in the early 1960s. It is interesting to note that ABSURDISM did not have a great impact (with the exceptions listed below), but the philosophical or polemic plays of French authors JEAN-PAUL SARTRE, ALBERT CAMUS, JEAN ANOUILH, and JEAN GIRAUDOUX, which most frequently used myths to pose modern intellectual issues, exerted great influence on the Serbian drama at the time. There are at least two explanations for this kind of influence. First, official Yugoslav policy began to be more open to the West in the 1960s, thus making Western literary influence acceptable. Second, a reinterpretation of classical myths provided good cover for tackling current political and ethical issues.

The most prominent representative of this trend was Jovan Hristić, who used the classical myths of Orestes and Oedipus, following Sartre's model, to raise important moral and philosophical issues. Whether one should avoid his or her human responsibilities to keep a clear conscience is addressed in Clean Hands, (Čiste ruke, 1960)—a polemic response to Sartre's Dirty Hands. Whether revenge has any point if the wrongdoers are no longer the same people they once were, when one needs to bring to mind recollections of their earlier selves is addressed in Orestes (1961). In contrast to Hristić, Velimir Lukić did not use existing myths but created his own, and not for the purpose of raising philosophical issues but, using the language of fairy-tale-like FARCE, to address the problems of power, in The Long Life of King Oswald (Dugi život Kralja Osvalda, 1962) and The Affair of Innocent Annabelle (Afera nedužne Anabele, 1969). Lukić's plays are structured according to a strict pattern: there is always a rebellion against tyranny that appears absurd in the end, as this world is irredeemably evil. This kind of radical pessimism, as Slobodan Selenić correctly notes, has a paradoxical consequence—it encourages social conformism.

A special place in this trend is reserved for an excellent play Banović Strahinja (1963), written by one of the leading intellectuals of the time, Borislav Mihajlović Mihiz. Setting aside Hristić's classical myths and Lukić's imaginary myths, Mihiz found the source for this play in the Serbian medieval mythology. The inspiration of Mihiz is not so much reminiscent of Sartre's existentialism as of the sharp polemics of Shaw. The action is focused around Banović Strahinja, a knight who decides to forgive his wife's infidelity, going against the political interests of his wife's family. His is a brave struggle for deeper moral principles and the right to decide his own fate.

As we have already mentioned, the influence of the theater of absurd on the Serbian drama was much lighter. Some of it can be found in the works of ALEKSANDAR POPOVIĆ (1929–1996), although he is probably the most original Serbian dramatist. His plays break with the classical drama: there is no causality in the plot development, and the characters lack psychological content. The main dramatic tool in these plays is language—the jargon of various guilds from the city outskirts, which apart from providing the comic effects, also gives the plays some of BERTOLT BRECHT's distancing effect. Popović's plays are classified as farces, although their topics are not always typical of the genre: thus the topic of Ljubinko and Desanka (Ljubinko i Desanka, 1964) is the futility of waiting, similar to SAMUEL BECKETT's tragic farce Waiting for Godot.

Faint echoes of the theater of absurd can also be found in the works of Dušan Kovačević, a leading contemporary Serbian dramatist. His comedies always start with a typical setting and the development of a realistic situation, and then, by various dramatic means, turn toward the absurd. In Marathon Runners Run the Lap of Honour (Maratonci trče počasni krug, 1973), we encounter the Topalović family, consisting of several generations of male members (all the women in the family having passed away), the eldest being 126 years old, his son 102, his grandson seventy-nine, and so on. Since the Topalović family are a destructive and dangerous group, the great span of generations becomes a strong metaphor for the criminal patriarchal world. What characterizes the comedies of Dušan Kovačević is that they do not deal with social deviations typically found in absurdist drama; on the contrary, they examine the lasting anomalies of the Serbian national being. This is why, although he has been called the heir of Nušić, Kovačević is much more bitter than his great predecessor. His other important works are Radovan III (1973), The Assembly Centre (Sabirni centar, 1982), Balkan Spy (Balkanski špijun, 1983), The Professional (Profesionalac, 1990), and Larry Thompson, A Youth's Tragedy (Lari Thompson, tragedija jedne mladosti, 1996).

The great poet Ljubomir Simović started writing plays relatively late in his career, and with only three works performed, created one of the most important opuses in the history of Serbian drama. In the play Hassan Agha's Wife (Hasanaginica, 1973), the author takes the material from national mythology to treat it in a modern way: this poetic depiction of frustrated longing (both the erotic and the longing for motherhood) also raises the problems of sexual frustration in marriage and the right of individual choice. A Miracle in 'Šargan' (Čudo u 'Šarganu', 1975) portrays, through a strange mixture of rough realism and poetic SYMBOLISM, the pathetic world of an outskirts tavern and develops the idea that suffering is the only pivotal point of a man's character. The Šopalović Traveling Company (Putujuće pozorište Šopalović, 1985) is set during World War II, when a troupe of traveling actors tries to perform in an occupied city. The main theme of the play, the relationship between the real and theatrical reality, raises several essential questions: Is it moral to work in the theater during a war? Where is the borderline between the theater and reality? Can theater change the world?

The last decade of the 20th century saw a dramatic increase in the number of interesting authors. The most important new figure in the Serbian drama at the end of the 20th century, and the only woman mentioned so far, is Biljana Srbljanović. Her dramatic form is an unusual combination of a complex and metaphorical structure and an elliptical and withering dialogue. She turns a sharp focus on, and then proceeds boldly to dismantle the disastrous cultural models (machismo, nationalism, and gerontophilia) at the foundation of all wars and misfortunes in former Yugoslavia. Her dramas from the 1990s sharply criticize the tyranny of the Slobodan Milošević regime: The Belgrade Trilogy (Beogradska trilogija, 1997), Family Stories (Porodične priče, 1988), and The Fall (Pad, 2000). Her new plays—Supermarket (2001) and America, Part II (Amerika, drugi deo, 2003)—examine the most current phenomena of the contemporary world, a united Europe and the UNITED STATES.

FURTHER READING

- Jovićević, Aleksandra. "Milošević i njegovi savremenici" [Milošević and His Contemporaries]. Teatron Magazine 119/120. Belgrade: Serbian Theatre Museum, 2002. 19–32.
- Marjanović, Petar. Srpski dramski pisci XX stoleća [The 20th Century Serbian Playwrights]. Belgrade: Faculty of Drama Arts, 2000.
- Miočinović, Mirjana. Foreword to Drama između dva rata [Drama between the Two World Wars]. Belgrade: Nolit, 1987.
- . Foreword to Aleksandar Popović, Izabrane drame [Aleksandar Popović. Selected Plays]. Belgrade: Nolit, 1987.
- Medenica, Ivan. "Srpske i druge drame" [Serbian and Other Plays]. Teatron Magazine 119/120. Belgrade: Serbian Theatre Museum, 2002. 7–18.
- Selenić, Slobodan. "Savremena srpska drama" [Contemporary Serbian Drama]. Foreword to Antologija savremene srpske drame [Anthology of contemporary Serbian drama]. Belgrade: SKZ, 1977.
- Stamenković, Vladimir. Foreword to Dušan Kovačević, Izabrane drame [Dušan Kovačević. Selected Plays]. Belgrade: Nolit, 1987.

Ivan Medenica

SERJEANT MUSGRAVE'S DANCE

You can't cure the pox by further whoring.

—Private Attercliffe, Act 3

JOHN ARDEN's reputation continues to be determined by Serjeant Musgrave's Dance. The play was not an immediate commercial or critical success, despite opening at the Royal Court Theatre in October 1959 with esteemed personnel: Lindsay Anderson produced, Dudley Moore wrote the music, and Jocelyn Herbert designed the elaborate staging. However, the Royal Court run lasted for only twenty performances, and the theater was, on average, only twenty percent full.

The play's fame grew in the 1960s, largely owing to significant productions directed by Peter Brook (Théâtre de l'Athénée, Paris, 1963), Jane Howell (in a Royal Court revival, 1965), Herbert Blau (Actors Company of San Francisco, 1965), and Ed Sherin (Arena, New York, 1966). The play was performed regularly for the rest of the century, and it has found its way onto schoolchildren's examination syllabi. Fully aware of the disparity between Serjeant Musgrave's fame and the commercial failure of most of his other plays, Arden has commented ruefully that Musgrave "pays the bills." The play continues to be performed. In 2003 Sean Holmes directed a production at Greenwich Theatre, London: Holmes asserted that the revival of Musgrave was intimately associated with the then recent American and British declaration of war against Iraq. Indeed, Serjeant Musgrave's Dance is a play that, without crass emoting or grandstanding, decries the brutality of war.

Arden's antiwar convictions are rather hidden by the play's incapacity to allow the audience to feel empathy for any of the characters. At this stage of his playwriting career, Arden was highly influenced by BERTOLT BRECHT's alienating devices. Rather than presenting a series of rounded characters, Arden constructs two sets of dialectically opposed types: Musgrave and his fellow soldiers, deserters from the British Army, who are intent on broadcasting the horrors of war to spread their pacifist message, and the residents of the northern English mining town where Musgrave's men visit seek proactive military action, some of whom want to break a strike, while others want to perpetuate the disorder.

Arden does not allow any sympathy to develop for either the doves or the hawks: each "side" is as reprehensible as the other. Musgrave, with single-minded arrogance, strives to make the consequences of military fighting material and real for the civilians. Using shock tactics, he displays the skeleton of a favorite son of the town and, in the play's extraordinary climax, climbs onto a stage and points a Gatling gun at his audience; the play's audiences also have this machine gun pointed toward them. Musgrave's actions result in violent chaos, making the play's thesis very clear: pacifistic drives must be expressed by peaceful means; physical fighting will inspire only further fighting. The pivotal comment that expresses this moral is made by Private Attercliffe, the character who comes nearest to fulfilling any criteria for common sense: "You can't cure the pox by further whoring." Critics tend to over-complicate Serjeant Musgrave's Dance, but for two generations of theater goers, Arden's lesson about the contradictory folly of pacifists using physical force has been clear and stirring.

[See also England, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Arden, John. Serjeant Musgrave's Dance. London: Methuen, 1960.
- Bruster, Douglas. "Why Read Arden." In John Arden and Margaretta D'Arcy: A Casebook, ed. by Jonathan Wike. New York: Garland, 1995. 41–50.
- Counts, Michael L. "John Arden." In British Playwrights, 1956–1995: A Research and Production Sourcebook, ed. by William W. Demasters. Westport and London: Greenwood Press, 1996. 3–14, especially 5.
- Hunt, Albert. Arden: A Study of His Plays. London: Methuen, 1974. 52–63.
- Malick, Javed. Towards a Theater of the Oppressed: The Dramaturgy of John Arden. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1995. 73–99.
- Russell Taylor, John. Anger and After: A Guide to the New British Drama. London: Methuen, 1962. 72–82.

Kevin De Ornellas

SERUMAGA, ROBERT (1939–1980)

Robert Bellamino Serumaga was born in 1939 and brought up by a single mother, a situation that was uncommon in Uganda at that time. He grew to become a man of many talents and achievements: from an economist, to a politician, to a successful theater artist and writer. Renowned as East AFRICA's "renaissance writer," his artistic work survived through the turbulent times of politically unstable Uganda.

Serumaga attended Makerere University in Uganda and later went to Trinity College in Dublin, where he received a master's degree in economics; while in Europe, he worked in drama at the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC). The experience of working at the BBC was useful when he went back to Uganda in 1966 and cofounded the semiprofessional theater company, Theatre Limited, which later changed its name to Abafumbi. Abafumbi produced performances that toured various parts of the world including Jamaica, the Netherlands, Germany, the Philippines, France, and the United States, among others. In his political career, Serumaga served as an economist in Uganda's government and later became minister of commerce under President Yusuf Lule.

In his first novel, Return to the Shadows, Serumaga used humor and cynicism to deal with the political and social upheavals of an African country struggling to hold together soon after colonialism. On returning home to Africa, the main character, an economist, has to deal with the agonies of the reality of a military coup in his home country, and in his determination to play his role in all these, he is caught between insecure ideals and the realities of power. These issues remain the focus of the plays he wrote later.

The innovation of his playwriting was in his blending of song, dance, and movement almost to the point of supplanting dialogue, particularly in his highly acclaimed Renga Moi, a play in which the innovative use of movement without dialogue can be read as an artistic style employed to satirize and ridicule the brutal politics of Idi Amin. Influenced by artistic innovations and revivals of indigenous performance traditions around the continent, Serumaga was opposed to the widening chasm between the popular masses and the neocolonial governments. Like NGUGI WA THIONG'O, WOLE SOYINKA, and TSEGAYE GABRE-MEDHIN, Serumaga studiously tried to politicize his art by creating highly engaging theatrical spectacles and language in his drama. He dedicated his life to creating plays that metaphorically called the people to return to decolonizing their nations from neocolonial dictators. Tortured in prisons, in 1980 Serumaga became Uganda's example of a political artist who used his drama to contest dictatorship. Fearing for his life, he went into exile during Idi Amin's presidency, and he was to die in exile in 1980.

PLAYS: A Play (1962); The Elephants (1971); Renga Moi (1972); Amayirikiti (1974); Majanguwa (1974)

FURTHER READING

Cook, D. African Literature: A Critical View. London: Longman, 1977.
Irele, A. The African Experience in Literature and Ideology. London: Heineman, 1981.

Bantu Ndung'u

7:84

The 7:84 Theatre Company took its name from a statistic announced in The Economist magazine in 1966: 84 percent of the United Kingdom's wealth was held by 7 percent of the population. The original 7:84 company was an English group formed in 1971, but the Scottish offshoot of the company has proved more enduring and successful. The Scottish 7:84 Theatre Company was formed in 1973 by JOHN MCGRATH and Elizabeth and David MacLennan. The company was brought together to produce a new play, THE CHEVIOT, THE STAG, AND THE BLACK, BLACK OIL. This play, which compared the 19th-century clearance of the Scottish Highlands for sheep-farming with the modern off-shore oil boom, was designed to include the kind of rural and working-class community deterred by traditional middle-class theater going. The Cheviot was modeled after a ceilidh—a traditional form of Highland celebration—and addressed (and included) its audience with songs, music, drama, and forthright political analysis. The first production was a tremendous success among audiences and led to 7:84 securing funding from the Scottish Arts Council for future works.

The first wave of plays put on by both the English and Scottish 7:84 companies during the 1970s were inspired by the success of The Cheviot. They were politically motivated dramas with a strong socialist agenda, but refused the bland assurances of either conventional left-wing (or Scottish nationalist) politics. Such plays cemented 7:84's strengths in popular drama, a form normally overlooked by the importance of Brechtian EPIC THEATER to politically minded dramatists. The company broke down the conventions of NATURALISM, but also took care to graft themselves onto existing popular modes of entertainment such as the ceilidh and pantomime.

Faced with criticism that 7:84 productions were becoming formulaic, the Scottish company varied their output with a series of revivals of popular drama in the early 1980s. These included plays such as Joe Corrie's In Time o' Strife, first produced in 1927 by the Fife Miner Players, and Ena Lamont Stewart's feminist view of working-class life, Men Should Weep (1947). The revivals were a success and were incorporated into 7:84's touring repertory.

The 1980s, however, saw what would become a recurring theme throughout the rest of 7:84's history. For as much as they put on successful productions, the company could not survive without subsidy, primarily from central government via the Arts Councils. The problem was worse for the English 7:84, which folded when its funding was entirely withdrawn in 1984. To protect the Scottish company's funding, McGrath resigned in 1988, and the company took a more politically emollient direction toward new drama and personal politics. But even the establishment of a devolved, and (left-wing) Labour-dominated Scottish Parliament in 1999 seems to have done little prevent recurrent crises in 7:84's funding. The company continues, however, with a vigorous program of political theater and a strong commitment to disenfranchised communities and minority groups.

[See also England, 1940–Present; Scotland]

FURTHER READING

DiCenzo, Maria. The Politics of Alternative Theatre in Britain, 1968–1990: The Case of 7:84 (Scotland). Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1996.
McGrath, John. A Good Night Out: Popular Theatre: Audience, Class and Form. London: Methuen, 1981.
Mackennay, Linda. "The People's Story: 7:84 Scotland." In Scottish Theatre Since the Seventies. Ed. by Randall Stevenson and Gavin Wallace. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press. 65–72.
MacLennan, Elizabeth. The Moon Belongs to Everyone: Making Theatre with 7:84. London: Methuen, 1990.

Gavin Miller

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

Written, published, and produced in 1913, Seven Keys to Baldpate by George M. Cohan is typical of the popular farcical COMEDIES that Cohan churned out during his heyday and is considered to be his best and most lucrative play. It "thrilled Broadway audiences during a year-long run," subsequently moving to Cohan's Grand Opera House in Chicago as well as touring for another three seasons, remaining a favorite with summer stock and amateur companies until well after World War II.

Like many of Cohan's plays, Seven Keys to Baldpate is adapted from another work, in this case a novel of the same title by Earl Derr Biggers, also published in 1913. Subtitled "A Mysterious Melodramatic Farce," the play is set in the isolated mountain resort of Baldpate Inn, now closed for the season, on a wintry night, with a storm raging outside. To this desolate place comes William Hallowell Magee, writer of popular dime-store novels, who has made a $5,000 bet with the inn's owner, Hal Bentley, that he can hack out a novel in twenty-four hours. Magee plans to begin work precisely at midnight, certain that he will be undisturbed, as the inn's caretaker has provided him with the only key to the place. "You're positively certain that this key is the only key to Baldpate in existence?" asks Magee, to which Quimby replies, "Yes, sir; I'm sure."

Magee settles down to work but is soon interrupted by the surreptitious entry of a stranger, who places a large stash of money in the safe and who, when confronted by Magee, insists that his is the only key to Baldpate. This intruder is followed by a series of others, including crooked politicians, a murderer, a ghost, corrupt policemen, and blackmailers—all of whom claim to possess the sole key to the Inn. At the end, the criminals turn out to be a group of actors who have put on this performance at Bentley's whim to prove "how perfectly improbably and terrible those awful stories you've been writing would seem if such things really and truly happened." Still, Magee wins the bet by turning this play-within-a-play into the promised novel, appropriately titled Seven Keys to Baldpate.

Cohan leaves to the audience the question of whether the events of the play actually occurred or they reflect the novel Magee is writing. One critic noted, "The improbabilities are so well sustained that no one can guess how it will all turn out," but New York Times (October 19, 1913) reviewer Adolph Klauber suggested the author underrated the audience's ability to put the pieces together, noting that the epilogue would be illuminating enough to clarify the joke. Still, that was a minor point: Klauber praised Cohan's play as "the exceptional entertainment of the season" for its originality, ingenuity, and adroit handling of "flamboyant MELODRAMA." The huge success of this play, along with Cohen's theatrical virtuosity as an actor, songwriter, and vaudevillian, helps illuminate why Cohen exerted such a profound influence on Broadway in the early decades of the 20th century.

[See also United States, 1860–1929]

FURTHER READING

- Cohan, George M. Twenty Years on Broadway and the Years It Took to Get There. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1925.
- Morehouse, Ward. George M. Cohan: Prince of the American Theatre. New York: Lippincott, 1943.

McCabe, John. George M. Cohan: The Man Who Owned Broadway. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1973.

Karen Blansfield

THE SEVEN STREAMS OF THE RIVER OTA

One fascinating aspect of French Canadian Robert Lepage's The Seven Streams of the River Ota is its authorship; Methuen Drama attributes the copyright to Lepage and his twelve-member creative ensemble Ex Machina. Expecting devastation and misery in post-atomic-bombed Hiroshima on his first visit to JAPAN, Lepage found instead robust, sensual vitality, and on his return to Quebec in January 1994, he commenced collaborative work in which the physical set, consisting of a wooden rectangle, was the starting point for development of script, plot, and characters, rather than the opposite, more traditional process of playwriting in which stage design is one of the last elements. Through improvisation and egalitarian discussion, the "writing" of psyche preceded scene, and a script was set down only days before its premiere full-length performance in Quebec on May 17, 1996. Additionally, an original adaptation of a scene from GEORGES FEYDEAU's The Lady of Maxim was devised and included by the cast. In Seven Streams, as Karen Fricker wrote, "the actors are the authors."

Seven Streams exists in three separate versions of three, five, and eight hours' duration, and while entire characters and plotlines are excised from the shorter versions, the resounding theme of mirror opposites remains a constant. The polarities of East and West, male and female, TRAGEDY and COMEDY, death and rebirth are illustrated through the mirror motif and the recurring theme of photography. An American soldier, Luke O'Connor, is sent to document the after-effects of the World War II atomic bomb assault on Hiroshima, but he encounters love and respect for a Hibakusha (a scarred survivor), Nozomi. His assignment is to photograph physical damage to housing, but instead the soldier is confronted by Nozomi's stoic request to document her physical deformity. Coin-operated photo booths also figure prominently as Seven Streams demonstrates that, like a mirror, a photograph is a reflection of you, but it is not you. Other issues touched on include suicide, AIDS, marital infidelity, Nazi anti-Semitism, and of course French nuclear testing in the Pacific. The set's mirrors transform, metaphorically and literally, into doorways to alternative understandings of these controversial subjects.

Another interesting aspect of Seven Streams is its reliance on technology, particularly the use of video projection, with which the on-stage actors interact and, apparently, dexterously manipulate. Supertitles are used to translate the occasional passages of Japanese, German, and Québécois French, but many scenes are devoid of speech entirely. Other scenes in this multimedia spectacle are played out in silhouette or by life-sized puppets.

In a way, the authorship question of who wrote, owns, or takes responsibility for Seven Streams is the question of who wrote, owns, or takes responsibility for Hiroshima and many more of the ills of late-20th-century humanity. Despite the breadth and gloom of its subject material, Seven Streams is an uplifting epic on survival over resignation, forgiveness over blame, and collaboration over auteurism. When Nozumi's scars initially repulse O'Connor, she asks, "Is it my ugliness?" He responds, suggesting generic Western ownership and responsibility, "No . . . it's mine."

[See also Canada]

FURTHER READING

Dundjerovic, Aleksandar. The Cinema of Robert Lepage: The Poetics of Memory. London, New York: Wallflower Press, 2003.

Lepage, Robert, and Ex Machina. The Seven Streams of the River Ota. London: Methuen Drama, 1996.

Feydeau, Georges. Théâtre Complet [Complete Plays]. Paris: Editions du Béliet, 1948–1956.

D. Bruno Starrs

SEWELL, STEPHEN (1953–)

Stephen Sewell—born in Sydney, New South Wales, AUSTRALIA, March 13, 1953—has been a giant on the periphery of mainstream Australian theater for more than a quarter of a century. Sewell received a bachelor of science degree from the University of Sydney in 1974.

At first his status as troublesome outsider was defined in terms of a "new internationalism," which in the late 1970s was eagerly anticipated by some critics as an overdue antidote to the coarsely comic, aggressively Australian male plays that characterized the "new wave." Traitors (1979), with its treatment of the grim atrocities of Stalinism, and Welcome the Bright World (1982), with its esoteric references to nuclear theory in the course of probing the moral compromises made by Jewish physicists in Nazi Germany, proclaimed a challenging writer who was actually interested in ideas and history. This was not in itself a misleading impression, but the assumption that those intellectual passions had little to do with contemporary Australian life proved well wide of the mark.

What characterizes Sewell's theater is a refusal to compromise. It is apparent in pragmatic matters like the length of his plays and the size of his casts as well as in the fierceness of his politics and his readiness to shock his audiences. His interest is in people in extremity. The stakes are always high in the confrontations of his plays, and while historical police-states guarantee a certain level of intensity, Sewell's major writing has found it as much in his own society. The three blockbuster plays that he wrote in the 1980s—The Blind Giant Is Dancing (1983), Dreams in an Empty City (1986), and Hate (1988)—all find that vein and open it relentlessly in a mixture of savagely apocalyptic satire, proselytizing zeal, and moral fury. The subjects are local and specific: Blind Giant deals with political corruption, particularly in the left wing of the Australian Labor Party; Dreams is about the moral bankruptcy of the new plutocracy; and Hate invokes both and directs them particularly to the ways in which Australia's power elites have denied their responsibility to the remnants of indigenous culture. In each case the real enemy is despair, promoted by the politics of cynicism and only refutable by a spiritual fervor that is equally absolute. In each of the plays the local references are broadened, and the voice of outrage channeled and controlled, by powerful organizing metaphors: the Faustus myth in Blind Giant, the temptation and crucifixion of Christ in Dreams, and the trappings of Greek TRAGEDY in Hate.

Sewell's work in the 1990s shrinks in scale, reflecting the smaller repertoire of the subsidized theater. Some bold flourishes remain, like the phantasmagoric fable King Golgrutha (1991), but the close-up intensity of plays like the two-hander Sisters (1991) and The Sick Room (1999) is more characteristic of this decade. Sewell turned increasingly to writing for film. In 2003, though, the appearance of Myth, Disaster and Propaganda in Nazi Germany and Contemporary America, every bit as confronting and provocative as its title promises, marked the triumphant return of the familiar Sewell and of an individual voice that still demands attention in the Australian theater.

SELECT PLAYS: Traitors (1979); Welcome the Bright World (1982); The Blind Giant Is Dancing (1983); Dreams in an Empty City (1986); Hate (1988); King Golgrutha (1991); Sisters (1991); The Sick Room (1999)

FURTHER READING

Australasian Drama Studies 14 (1989). This special issue contains four articles on Sewell.

Carroll, Dennis. Australian Contemporary Drama from 1909, 2nd ed. Sydney: Currency Press, 1995.

Fitzpatrick, Peter. Stephen Sewell: The Playwright as Revolutionary. Sydney: Currency Press, 1993.

McCallum, John. "The World Outside: Cosmopolitanism in the Plays of Nowra and Sewell." Meanjin 43 (1984): 286–96.

Peter Fitzpatrick

SEXUAL PERVERSITY IN CHICAGO

First produced by the Organic Theater Company in Chicago in 1974, DAVID MAMET's one-act Sexual Perversity in Chicago is regarded by most critics as the play that launched Mamet's long and distinguished playwriting career. Named Best Chicago Play of 1974, Sexual Perversity was subsequently produced OFF-OFF-BROADWAY in 1975 at St. Clements Theatre in New York, where it was paired with a shorter Mamet piece, The Duck Variations (both plays directed by Albert Takazaukas). After a successful run at St. Clements, the production transferred to the off-Broadway Cherry Lane Theatre, where it earned an Obie Award as the Best New American Play of the 1975–1976 season. The play has become a staple of regional and university theater production and was the basis of the 1986 film About Last Night . . .

The play chronicles the on-again, off-again courtship of Dan and Deborah, two urban singles in their twenties. Through a series of brief, episodic scenes—some as short as five or six lines—spanning approximately nine weeks, we see Dan and Deborah meet, become sexually intimate, move in together, and break up. Along the way, their relationship is complicated, and eventually sabotaged, by the advice they receive from their respective friends: Bernie, a loud-mouthed chauvinist, and Joan, an acerbic kindergarten teacher.

The focus of the play, however, is not on the boy-meets-girl plotline, but on the satiric and explicit dialogue with which all four characters discuss (or, more often, avoid discussing) their sexual and emotional needs. While some critics derided the play's lack of narrative coherence and its less-than-flattering depiction of women, virtually all agreed that Mamet demonstrated a gift for capturing the rhythm and wit of 1970s urban culture in all its vulgarity and cynicism. "Mamet's extraordinary promise," wrote Ross Wetzsteon in the Village Voice, "resides not so much in his insights into male-female relationships . . . as in the exhilarating perfection of the language with which he expresses it" (2001).

Mamet himself has suggested that the characters' deft use of language functions as a defense mechanism that prevents them from achieving true intimacy. Dan's humor, Deborah's cynicism, Joan's intellectualism, and Bernie's overbearing profanity are all responses to the insecurity caused by the shifting gender expectations of the 1970s. Unclear about what is expected of them in this new sexual landscape, the characters deal with their frustration and alienation by articulating elaborate and ill-conceived rationalizations for their behavior. They do not talk to one another so much as they talk at one another. The failure of these articulations either to resolve or to explain the differences between men and women is demonstrated by the play's ending, where we see the two male characters just as they were at the beginning, engaged in a banal and denigrating discussion of women and their body parts.

Critics in New York and London responded less enthusiastically to later revivals of Sexual Perversity, suggesting that, in an age when frank language about sex is commonplace, the play has lost some of the shocking force it carried when it premiered. Yet few plays have so adeptly and unflinchingly satirized the spirit of their era.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Bigsby, Christopher, ed. The Cambridge Companion to David Mamet. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2004.

Blansfield, Karen. "Women on the Verge, Unite!" In Gender and Genre: Essays on David Mamet, ed. by Christopher C. Hudgins and Leslie Kane. New York: Palgrave, 2001. 125–142.

Dean, Anne. David Mamet: Language as Dramatic Action. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1990.

Kane, Leslie. David Mamet in Conversation. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 2001.

Wetzsteon, Ross. "David Mamet: Remember That Name." In David Mamet in Conversation, ed. by Leslie Kane. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 2001. 9–15.

Henry Bial

THE SHADOW OF A GUNMAN

Subtitled A Tragedy in Two Acts, Shadow of a Gunman by SEAN O'CASEY is more TRAGICOMEDY than TRAGEDY, and the reviewers of the first Abbey production (April 1923) complained of the excessive amount of COMEDY that endangers the tragic mood. But it is actually the blend of the comedic and the serious that lends Gunman its modern, ever-relevant impact.

It concerns Donal Davoren, a would-be poet who shares a room in a Dublin tenement with a door-to-door salesman, Seumas Shields. The time is 1920, when the Anglo-Irish War of Independence was raging and ordinary citizens could feel "sure of your life nowhere now." Davoren is mistaken by the other residents of the house for an IRA (Irish Republican Army) gunman on the run because of his reclusive lifestyle; out of vanity and because the good-looking Minnie Powell regards him as a hero, he allows the myth to grow around him. Against Shields's advice, Davoren flirts recklessly with Minnie and ignores the little man, Maguire, who arrives to leave a bag in the room for safe keeping and then vanishes.

While Davoren strives to find privacy for his writing, a neighbor, Gallogher, arrives accompanied by others, including Minnie, looking for Davoren's approval of a letter Gallogher has written to the IRA for redress against noisy children in the tenement. In an amusing scene, Davoren is put in the position of literary critic capable of correcting Gallogher's flamboyant style while agreeing to forward the ridiculous letter to the IRA. That night, as Davoren and Shields lie awake discussing the street warfare that terrorizes them, the house is raided by the Black and Tans. The two men panic, fearing the reputation of the dreaded British auxiliary force. Davoren's real character begins to emerge as he searches for the incriminating letter from Gallogher. Minnie bursts in and asks if he has any arms she might hide in her room. An inspection of the bag left by Maguire reveals a cache of Mills bombs. Davoren goes to pieces while Minnie, emerging as the real hero, takes away the bag.

Contrary to expectations, the Black and Tans search Minnie's room as well as terrifying everyone else in ways that bring out comic reactions. Davoren and Shields cower in their room as the bombs are found and Minnie is arrested. She is heard in the street crying, "Up the Republic!" and gunfire is sounded. A neighbor enters to say Minnie has been shot in an IRA ambush while jumping off the truck. In his ensuing shock, Davoren recognizes that Minnie sacrificed herself for a worthless man.

LADY GREGORY told O'Casey that his strong point was characterization. Here he introduces a gallery of colorful characters from lower-class urban life and lets them individually impress themselves on the audience without necessarily being tied into a plot. Yet behind the entertainment lie the enduring themes of identity, authenticity, and role-playing. The play endures also as an intense exploration of the politics of survival.

[See also Ireland]

FURTHER READING

- Kearney, Colbert. The Glamour of Grammar: Orality and Politics and the Emergence of Sean O'Casey. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2000. 49–74.
- Murray, Christopher. A Faber Critical Guide: Sean O'Casey. London: Faber and Faber, 2000. 21–52.
- Schrank, Bernice. "‘You needn't say no more': Language and the Problem of Communication in Sean O'Casey's The Shadow of a Gunman." In The Dublin Trilogy: A Casebook, ed. by Ronald Ayling. London: Macmillan, 1985. 67–80.

Christopher Murray

SHAFFER, PETER (1926–)

Peter Levin Shaffer was born in Liverpool, England, on May 15, 1926, seconds after his identical twin Anthony, who like Peter was also to become a Tony award-winning playwright. After his education at London's St. Paul's School and Cambridge University, Shaffer shuttled between New York City and England, working at various jobs including music critic. During the early 1950s, Shaffer published three mystery novels, two written in collaboration with his twin. He also wrote two probing television dramas and a BBC radio play. Each concerned seminal moral issues, as did his first stage hit, Five Finger Exercise (1958), whose worldwide acclaim convinced him to follow a life in the theater.

Peter Shaffer has carved out an individual path among his contemporaries. His earliest works, including Five Finger Exercise, use dramatic REALISM. But mostly he uses realism to underpin highly theatricalized formats. Existentialist thought appeared in Shaffer's work without the Absurdist enigmatic plots. Drawing on a similar questioning of God's existence, Shaffer acknowledges His presence but as an unreliable figure with little inherent benevolence. Time and again in Shaffer's powerful dramas, protagonists seek validation of God. All end up disappointed and disillusioned, just as are Absurdist heroes.

Three of Shaffer's dramas—Royal Hunt of the Sun, EQUUS, and Amadeus—and two of his comedies—Black Comedy and Lettice & Lovage—enjoyed extended runs in London and New York. Equus and Amadeus took Best Play Tony awards in 1975 and 1981, respectively, and Black Comedy and Lettice & Lovage were nominated for Tonys in 1967 and 1990, respectively. Films were made of Royal Hunt, Equus (Oscar nomination), and Amadeus (eight Oscars). Verbal articulateness and dazzling theatrical structures have remained Shaffer's great strength and earned him a knighthood in 2001.

The serious plays expand on questions regarding godhead and human conduct. Pizarro in Royal Hunt admits he is "god-hunting," but through Atahualpa discovers the Incan Sun God is as false a deity as any European God. In Equus, the psychiatrist Dysart finds that his book-learning cannot "account for me," in the Horse-God's insistent call. Amadeus presents a war between an "unjust" God and Salieri, Mozart's court rival who refuses to accept God's arbitrariness.

Tied into the issues of deity are fundamental contradictions between personal morality and social norms. Shaffer shapes crucial conflicts between what FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE termed the Apollonian and Dionysian in human nature. The Apollonian impulse is that which seeks orderliness and perfection; the Dionysian represents the more creative, often chaotic, self-expressive drive. Pizarro seeks order and understanding of godhead, and Atahualpa represents unlimited actions based on religious power. Dysart is Apollonian, redirecting Alan's psyche toward society's norms, away from the wild Dionysian spirit who creates a horse-god to worship. Salieri in Amadeus expects ordered justice from god; Mozart is depicted as uninhibitedly Dionysian in violating standards of society. Shaffer implies that elements of both, in balance, make for the ideal individual and society, though such integration is difficult to attain.

[See also England, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: Five Finger Exercise (1958); The Private Ear (1962); The Public Eye (1962); The Royal Hunt of the Sun (1964); Black Comedy (1967); White Lies (revised as The White Liars, then as White Liars, 1967); Equus (1973); Shrivings (originally The Battle of Shrivings, 1974); Amadeus (1979); Lettice and Lovage (later Lettice; Lovage, 1988); Yonadab (1989); Whom Do I Have the Honour of Addressing? (radio play, later stage play, 1989); The Gift of the Gorgon (1993)

FURTHER READING

- Cooke, Virginia, and Malcolm Page, comp. File on Shaffer. London and New York: Methuen, 1987.
- Gianakaris, C. J. Peter Shaffer. London and New York: Macmillan and St. Martin's, 1992.
- , ed. Peter Shaffer: A Casebook. New York and London: Garland Publishing, 1991.
- Innes, Christopher. Modern British Drama: The Twentieth Century. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2002.
- Klein, Dennis A. Peter Shaffer. In Twayne English Authors, rev. ed. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1993.
- Plunka, Gene A. Peter Shaffer: Roles, Rites, and Rituals in the Theatre. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1988.

C. J. Gianakaris

SHANGE, NTOZAKE (1948–)

I'm a consciously feminist person. I use tools that are available to me as a feminist reconstructing history. I don't understand when things are glossed over by misogynist historians and intellectuals, "the experts." Everything I write and have written comes from being a woman-centered person.

—Ntozake Shange, 1990

American playwright, poet, and novelist Ntozake Shange was born on October 18, 1948, in Trenton, New Jersey, as Paulette Williams to an upper-middle-class African American family. Her intellectually stimulating childhood led her to Barnard College, where she graduated with a degree in American studies in 1970. Three years later she gained a master's degree in the same subject from the University of California, Los Angeles, after which she began to teach and perform in the San Francisco area.

Deeply influenced by feminism and the civil rights movement, Shange rocked a generation of gender relations with her most famous play, for colored girls who have considered suicide / when the rainbow is enuf, in which she portrays the pain and humiliation of African American women at the hands of African American men. The will to survive and transform the internal divisions wrought by a racist society gave inspiration and strength to women and men of all walks of life. In all her plays, Shange portrays the ways in which African Americans have suffered tremendous sacrifice to achieve the equality that should be a birthright.

Equal to her explosive content is Shange's experimental dramatic form of the "choreopoem," which combines music, dance, poetry, and a narrative that progresses through sequential monologues. Shange attacks the formality and structures of white culture with her self-invented orthography, which results in her characters speaking colloquial and firebrand English. In 1971 she adopted two words from the Xhosa language of the Zulu people as a new name: Ntozake, meaning "she who comes with her own thing," and Shange, "she who walks like a lion."

Shange's awards include a 1977 Obie, the Outer Critics Circle Award, an AUDELCO Award, and the Mademoiselle Award for for colored girls who have considered suicide/when the rainbow is enuf; a Guggenheim fellowship in 1981; and an Obie for her adaptation of BERTOLT BRECHT's MOTHER COURAGE AND HER CHILDREN, performed at the New York's Public Theatre.

[See also Black Arts Movement; Political Theater in the United States, 1940–Present]

PLAYS: for colored girls who have considered suicide/when the rainbow is enuf (1975); Where the Mississippi Meets the Amazon (1977); Boogie Woogie Landscapes (1978); Black and White Two Dimensional Planes (1979); spell #7 (1979); Mother Courage and Her Children (adapted from the play by Bertolt Brecht, 1980); A Photograph: Lovers in Motion (1981); Bocas (1982); Educating Rita (1983); From Okra to Greens: A Different Kind of Love Story (1985); Three Views of Mount Fuji (1987); Betsey Brown: A Rhythm and Blues Musical (co-authored with Emily Mann, 1989); Love Space Demands: A Continuing Saga (1991); I Heard Eric Dolphy in His Eyes (1992)

FURTHER READING

Lester, Neal A. "At the Heart of Shange's Feminism: An Interview."

Black American Literature Forum 24, no. 4 (Winter 1990).

Richards, Sandra A. "Conflicting Impulses in the Plays of Ntozake."

Black American Literature Forum 17, no. 2 (Summer 1983).

Timpone, John. "The Poetry of a Moment: Politics and the Open Form in the Drama of Ntozake Shange." In Modern American Drama:

The Female Canon, ed. by June Schlueter. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1990.

Carol Martin

SHANLEY, JOHN PATRICK (1950–)

This play is dedicated to everyone in the Bronx who punched me or kissed me, and to everyone whom I punched or kissed.

—Dedication of Danny and the Deep Blue Sea, 1984

Playwright, screenwriter, and director John Patrick Shanley, born October 13, 1950, in New York City, is best known for his Oscar-winning screenplay for Moonstruck (1987). Dubbed by Moonstruck's director, Norman Jewison, as the bard of the Bronx, Shanley's most celebrated works for theater also reflect his New York upbringing and have achieved most consistent success OFF-BROADWAY.

Of growing up in an Italian Catholic family in New York City's East Bronx, Shanley commented (in an interview with Robert Coe, 2005), "I grew up in a violent place where people did not communicate well, but where there were big feelings and big longings, and I remember that some of the most interesting people were also the most doomed, because they had no tools to save themselves." After completing a degree in educational theater at New York University and serving in the Marines, Shanley wrote his first play, Danny and the Deep Blue Sea (1984), while working as a bartender.

The majority of Shanley's plays reflect his experiences. Typically set in and around cafés and bars in New York City, they are populated by damaged individuals who are disillusioned with life and unable to discover their reasons for being. The protagonists are often romantic dreamers who discover that reality fails to live up to the idealized expectations of their youth. As they approach middle age, they find themselves trapped in an embittered state of limbo. Shanley has frequently characterized this malaise as "the big funk," a term he also used for the title of a 1990 play.

Despite the specificity of his mise-en-scène, Shanley's plays are philosophical dramas that examine metaphysical problems. Through the lives of his characters, Shanley holds the mirror up to the soul in an attempt to examine the perennial problems humanity inflicts on itself. The problems are tackled head-on and the issues clearly underlined through explicit dialogue, blatant symbolism, and occasionally high COMEDY. In the allegorical TRAGICOMEDY The Big Funk (1990), Jill is an insecure middle-class woman who is constantly involved in dysfunctional relationships with inappropriate men. When she is first introduced, she is sitting at a bar and has been physically covered in grease by her date—a metaphor for the way she allows herself to be constantly smeared through low self-esteem. Similarly, the virginal status of the protagonist in Savage in Limbo (1985) reflects her loneliness in life, and Kissing Christine (1997) involves a woman whose dreams of becoming a dancer ended when she literally fell into a hole. The quack psychiatrist in Psychopathia Sexualis (1998) who is unable to cure his patient of his fetish for argyle socks is called Dr. Block.

Most of Shanley's dramas are "talking-head" plays, in which the protagonists attempt to break past the inadequacy of their lives through straight talking and rigorous PSYCHOANALYSIS. Interestingly, given the metaphysical nature of their problems and the psychoanalytic means by which they try to solve them, Shanley's characters are often working-class individuals who, no matter what their profession, speak the everyday street vernacular of New York City cab drivers and plumbers. While appropriate to the mise-en-scène, the distinctiveness of such dialogue also results from and reflects upon the limitations of their lives. Consequently, when these individuals attempt to articulate their need for more in life, their vocabulary is often insufficient to express the enormity of their vision.

Shanley has experimented with a variety of styles ranging from SURREALISM to formalism, with settings as diverse as the Wild West and seaside towns. His more recent works reflect such diversity. In DOUBT (2004), he returns to the familiar territory of his youth. Set in a Catholic school in the Bronx in the 1960s, the play examines a nun's suspicions about a priest's relationship with a schoolboy. A Sailor's Song (2004) is a surreal love story set in an imagined seaside town, where the characters dance to Johann Strauss.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

PLAYS: Welcome to the Moon (1982); Danny and the Deep Blue Sea (1984); The Dreamer Examines His Pillow (1985); Savage in Limbo (1985); Women of Manhattan (1986); All For Charity (1987); Italian-American Reconciliation (1988); The Big Funk (1990); Beggars in the House of Plenty (1991); Four Dogs and a Bone (1993); Missing/Kissing (1996); Psychopathia Sexualis (1996); Cellini (2001); Where's My Money? (2001); Dirty Story (2003); Doubt (2004); Sailor's Song (2004)

FURTHER READING

- Coe, Robert. The Evolution of John Patrick Shanley. Theater Communications Group (November 2004). <http://www.tcg.org/publications/at/Nov04/shanley.cfm>
- Shanley, John Patrick. 13 by Shanley: Thirteen Plays by John Patrick Shanley. New York: Applause American Masters Series, 1992.
- . Four Dogs and a Bone and The Wild Goose. New York: Dramatists Play Service, 1995.

———. Missing/Kissing: Missing Marisa, Kissing Christine. New York:

Dramatists Play Service, 1997.

———. Psychopathia Sexualis. New York: Dramatists Play Service, 1998.

Olivia Turnbull

THE SHAPE OF THINGS

The action of NEIL LABUTE's The Shape of Things opens in a museum in a "conservative midwestern town," in front of a naked sculpture of God that has been, at the request of influential members of the community, altered: its bare crotch has been covered with a fig leaf. It is here, in front of this censored sculpture, that Adam, a college student and part-time security guard at the museum, encounters Evelyn, an art student who intends to restore the sculpture to its true form by spray-painting a penis on the makeshift fig leaf.

After a flirtatious banter, Adam and Evelyn decide to date, but the implicit conditions of their nascent relationship—that Adam must modify many aspects of his lifestyle—soon become explicit and cause a radical change in Adam's self-perception. Indeed, Evelyn's suggestions—to lose weight and work out, to cut his hair, to change the way he dresses, and so on—imbue Adam with an unprecedented degree of confidence that turns out to be both a gift and a curse. Although he begins to feel better and more comfortable around women, he also becomes more easily agitated and, in a scene occurring offstage, cheats on Evelyn with his best friend's girlfriend. Only when he severs ties with his best friend and discovers, at a public demonstration, that he is merely an art project—a walking, talking, breathing sculpture that Evelyn has been manipulating for her degree—does he reflect on the type of person he has quickly become. At the play's close we find him alone in the auditorium, exploring the art exhibit Evelyn has manufactured out of various videotapes—some recorded secretly—and Adam's personal belongings.

Labute's frequent, overt allusions to the fall of humankind, especially as portrayed and problematized in John Milton's Paradise Lost, serve in part as an open invitation for spectators to compare The Shape of Things with the countless retellings of the Genesis narrative. In the play's protagonists we see Labute's take on the Adam and Eve figures and the power games they play. Although one may at first sympathize with Adam's fate—his life becomes public domain—one is quick to realize that, as in other versions of the Fall, Adam could not be forced into any action; Evelyn may have coaxed him into refashioning himself, but Adam always had a choice. Evelyn, in the play's penultimate scene, reminds her audience—and also Labute's audience—of this: "[Adam's] free will was always at the forefront of each decision. [I] coaxed, made suggestions, created the illusion of interest and desire, but never said 'please do this.'"

Juxtaposing this speech about free will with the recognition that Labute deliberately omitted the supernatural characters of the Genesis narrative—the tempting serpent and the punishing

God—we find in The Shape of Things an overwhelmingly secular realm, one that places power and its consequences solely in the hands of human beings. Therefore, the play can only end in “silence [and] darkness.”

[See also England, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Isstel, John. “Who Is Neil Labute and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things About You?” American Theatre 18, no. 9 (November 2001): 38–42.
- Jays, David. “The Shape of Things (Films).” Sight & Sound 14, no. 1 (January 2004): 57–58.
- Lahr, John. “The Makeover Artist.” New Yorker 77, no. 16 (June 16, 2001): 170–171.
- Macnab, Geoffrey. “Loving London.” Sight & Sound 17, no. 7 (July 2004): 79.

David L. Orvis

SHARED EXPERIENCE THEATRE

In the past twenty-eight years since its 1975 founding by Mike Alfreds, Shared Experience Theatre has established itself as one of Britain's most inventive and enduring alternative theater companies, producing an eclectic body of work including novel adaptations, experiments with classic dramas, and new scripts. Its focus has been on the power of the physical presence of the actor and the process and possibilities of storytelling. It was Shared Experience's work in the 1970s that sparked the reinvigoration of the British interest in stage adaptations of literature with their landmark productions of Arabian Nights (1975) and Charles Dickens's Bleak House (1977), which was itself a major influence on the Royal Shakespeare Company's famed Nicholas Nickleby (1981). Under the artistic leadership of Mike Alfreds, the actors employed the narrative of the novel as a wellspring of theatrical possibility, transforming themselves through the slightest of physical gestures. These experiments paved the way for the subsequent physical theater boom in the 1980s and 1990s, enabling new innovations by companies such as Cheek By Jowl, Théâtre de Complicité, and Method and Madness.

From the late 1980s, under the joint artistic direction of Nancy Meckler and subsequently, Polly Teale, Shared Experience has earned international acclaim for its passionate and visceral novel adaptations, including productions such as Anna Karenina (1992), Mill on the Floss (1994), War and Peace (1996), Jane Eyre (1997), and later, Angela Carter's The Magic Toyshop (2001) and E. M. Forster's A Passage to India (2002). The company is predominantly woman-centered, experimenting with stories that create space for female experience and understanding of the world. With Meckler and Teale, the company's approach to novel adaptation continues to be as innovative as Alfreds's methods during the early years of the London Fringe, yet takes a significantly different path. The style is distinctly and powerfully physical and “expressionistic”; the company excels in revealing the inner, subjective experience of the characters. Thus, rehearsals are an exploration of what the story feels like, rather than what it looks like in reality. The company explores this sensory approach to drama by examining characters' secret, inner worlds through image and movement. The company is interested in theater that expresses those areas of human experience that are inside our heads, the world of images, memory, and hidden thoughts.

The director, along with the actors, designers, movement directors, and other practitioners, all contribute to discovering the images of a theater piece. The creative focus is on finding physical ways to release people together to create a new language to tell a story. The use of ritualized gestures, split characters, and the physicalization of characters' fantasies and dreams have all become hallmarks of the Shared Experience approach. With these tools, Meckler and Teale have cracked open the secrets hidden inside the heart of the novel for the British stage. Through the interweaving of text, gesture, and movement, the cultural pasts within the novels are rediscovered, explored, and reconstructed anew. Through the living memory of the actors' bodies, cultural memories are reimagined and redefined, offering a particular “reading” of a novel, a touchstone for a way to stage a cultural past and an understanding of the world.

[See also England, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Alfreds, Mike. “A Shared Experience: The Actor as Story-Teller.” Theatre Papers 6 (1979–1980): 1–24.
- . Shared Experience: 1975–1984. London: Shared Experience, 1985.
- Alfreds, Mike, and Clive Barker. “Shared Experience: from Science Fiction to Shakespeare.” Theatre Quarterly 10, no. 39 (1981): 12–22.
- Gardner, Lyn. Shared Experience: Past & Present. 2000. Shared Experience Theatre website, <http://www.setheatre.co.uk/> (Accessed August 26, 2003).
- Goodman, Lizbeth. Feminist Stages: Interviews with Women in Contemporary British Theatre. London and New York: Harwood Academic Publishers, 1996. 103–106.
- Hay, Malcom. “Shared Experience.” Plays and Players (April 1985): 8–11.
- Lustig, Vera. “Hidden Riches.” Plays and Players (March 1990): 7–9.
- Rea, Kenneth. “The Theatre of Mike Alfreds.” Drama 1, no. 163 (1987): 3–8.
- Stephenson, Heidi, and Natasha Langridge. Rage and Reason: Women Playwrights on Playwriting. London: Methuen, 1997.

Kristin A. Crouch

SHARMA, TRIPURARI (1956–)

Tripurari Sharma (born in Delhi, INDIA) graduated from the National School of Drama in Delhi in 1979, when the political street theater movement was gaining momentum. Not all of Sharma's work is street theater, but her work does reflect the concerns and agendas of the movement. She has dealt with a broad range of topics: communalism, the effect of the dollar on the Indian economy, governmental corruption, and rape. Sharma's work takes several forms: she and her company, Alarippu (Blossoming), perform plays in the streets and conduct theater workshops with children, she develops plays and productions collectively in community workshops, and she redirects classical plays in mainstream theater spaces. Sharma is dedicated to giving voice to those who are not often heard and to political issues that are not being discussed. In conversation, as well as in her methods of work and in her productions, Sharma is not interested in providing answers or solutions to problems. She is more interested in opening dialogue, presenting multiple points of view, and providing a forum for exchange.

Sharma is perhaps best known for the scripts she develops collectively. She first developed such a script in 1979 when she was asked by a group of factory workers in Nagda to create a production about working conditions. Because no extant script was appropriate, the group created the play by using acting exercises to extend and develop stories told by the factory workers. Sharma claimed that one of the mistakes she made was writing the script down: since most of the actors could not read, writing made their own words alien to them. Since then she has never written down her community-created scripts.

Later, Sharma was approached by the women's group Manushi to conduct a workshop with college girls. They created a piece about how it feels to be "not exactly discriminated against, but treated differently" (qtd. in Mee, 1997). Sharma wanted to include a scene in which the women felt uncomfortable or threatened by men while waiting for a bus. Concerned that it would not be taken seriously if she replicated the scene realistically, she did the scene without any men at all, shifting the focus onto the women and how they felt. "I learnt then," she says, "the necessity of going beyond REALISM and abstracting from an experience what may be the essence" (Sharma, 2002). While creating the piece, many of the women expressed anger, sorrow, and bitterness. In some situations, Sharma says, "you don't have to do anything—you don't have to probe, you don't have to make [the actors] become aware of their anger, you just have to create the space" for them to speak (qtd. in Mee, 1997).

When UNICEF asked Sharma to run some workshops as part of a communication package designed to educate people about leprosy and to deal with prejudices blocking the diagnosis and effective treatment of the disease, she ended up writing The Wooden Cart (Kaath Ki Gaadi), one of her best-known pieces. Sharma developed the play from interviews conducted with patients and from workshops with paramedical doctors. After one of her workshops in a leprosy-prone area, a villager stepped into the playing space to say: "I'm cured of leprosy, and I'm saying this so that [others] who might be hiding [their disease] will see that there is no reason to hide." In that moment Sharma realized that theater is a forum. "It's not so important for the play to say everything, the fact that you bring something out in the open in itself sends out vibrations which are in some way liberating, and get people talking. Earlier I felt it was necessary to put everything about the issues into the play, to make everything clear, but the fact that you create this forum is itself an event, and it leads to many other kinds of events" (qtd. in Mee, 1997).

Sharma later worked with performers in khayal (operatic drama with dance, popular in Rajasthan), nautanki (operatic drama performed in Rajasthan, Uttar Pradesh, and Punjab), tamasha (a popular entertainment of Maharashtra, performed in Marathi), and pandavani (a genre of musical storytelling that originated in the Chhattisgarh region of Madhya Pradesh) to see how they can portray women in new ways in these four traditional genres. Her project is designed to address the issue of gender, but also to address the unequal relationship created between urban theater artists and practitioners of traditional performance in situations where urban artists take elements of traditional performance and use them in productions that are performed exclusively for urban audiences on proscenium stages.

When asked whether she thought she could change anyone's mind through performance, Sharma said:

It's very difficult to measure how people change by seeing plays. I believe there is a basic goodness in people, and I feel that if a play points out something positive, it appeals to that positiveness in them. . . . If they didn't get support from outside, then the negative which exists would get strengthened, which is why I feel it is important, even if I am unable to measure, or to feel that I'm doing a very important social service by changing people's minds, [to keep working,] because somewhere it will strengthen something positive, which will have an effect. . . . I don't think . . . that in forty-five minutes you can change a forty-five year experience, but I feel that it adds to something somewhere—it gives people something to think about and keep in mind. (qtd. in Mee, 1997)

Sharma's strength as a writer lies in presenting "other" points of view in ways that cannot be ignored: she provides a place in which people can listen to each other and exchange views.

SELECT PLAY: The Wooden Cart (Kaath Ki Gaadi)

FURTHER READING

- Katyal, Anjum. "Playwright, Director, Activist: An Interview with Tripurari Sharma." Seagull Theatre Quarterly 20/21 (1999): 99–132.
- Mee, Erin. "Tripurari Sharma: Out in the Open." Performing Arts Journal 55 (1997): 12–19.
- Sharma, Tripurari. The Wooden Cart. In Drama Contemporary: India, ed. by Erin Mee. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2001.
- . "Unfinished Journeys." In Muffled Voices, ed. by Lakshmi Subramanyam. Delhi: Shakti Books, 2002.

Erin B. Mee

SHAW, GEORGE BERNARD (1856–1950)

Playwright, novelist, critic, and political activist George Bernard Shaw was born at 3 Upper Synge Street (later renamed 33 Synge Street), Dublin, IRELAND, on July 26, 1856. He was the third child of the marriage of George Carr Shaw (1814–1885), a grain merchant who had begun his career as a civil servant in the Dublin Four Courts, and Lucinda Elizabeth (Bessie) Shaw (née Gurly, 1830–1913), an accomplished musician who played leading roles as a mezzo-soprano in operatic productions in Dublin and later became a teacher of singing in London. The two other children of the marriage were Shaw's elder sisters, Lucinda Frances (1853–1920), who became a star singer in musical COMEDIES, and Elinor Agnes (1855–1876), who died from tuberculosis at the age of twenty. Shaw's family belonged to a large clan of Irish Shaws, some of whom rose to positions of great eminence in the social, political, and judicial systems of the Protestant Ascendancy regime as lawyers, bankers, merchants, soldiers, and members of parliament. One of the clan, Sir Robert Shaw (1774–1849), established a large estate at Bushy Park, Terenure, Dublin, which the playwright visited during his childhood. The prosperous and powerful Bushy Park Shaws were the point of contrast in the playwright's famous description of his immediate family's position in the social scale as belonging to a class of "the Shabby Genteel, the Poor Relations, the Gentlemen who are No Gentlemen" (Shaw, 1930).

Shaw's accounts of his family background, which have generally been uncritically adopted and elaborated upon by biographers, are questionable on several grounds. Shaw presented his parents' marriage as having been a disastrous and loveless relationship from the outset, following his mother's alleged discovery on the honeymoon that she had married an alcoholic, and her return in total disillusionment to a domestic "hell" in Dublin. There is strong documentary evidence (including a revealing and largely unpublished collection of fifteen affectionate and good-humored letters written by his father to his mother in the summer of 1857) suggesting that the early years of the marriage may well have been quite happy, and that the son probably exaggerated both the extent of his father's drinking problem and of the family's poverty. For reasons which can only be guessed at, Shaw was impelled to create in his autobiographical writings and correspondence a picture of his own rise to success from a background of miserable failure and familial dysfunction. His parents' marriage did eventually break up—amicably, according to Shaw's childhood friend, Mathew McNulty—but this was not until 1873, as Shaw was turning seventeen. Shaw omitted mention in his autobiographical writings of the keen and intelligent interest his father took in the writing of his early novels.

Shaw revered his "wonderful mother," as a Fabian contemporary described her, Bessie Shaw. The style of a scrap of her autobiographical writing describing her extremely strict piano lessons as a child in Dublin suggests a spirited lady with a keen sense of humor. Scattered reports by Shaw of her comments about various people show that she was also an incisive and shrewd judge of character. Katharine Tynan (1913) said of her that "like her son, she was very witty, very satirical." Although he was full of praise for her in some ways, Shaw also presented some very negative views about his mother, saying that she had "no comedic impulses" (contradicting comments by several others as well as Tynan) and that she was lacking in ordinary maternal feeling. But his mother's continued interest in and concern about her children, her prolonged grieving over the death of her daughter Agnes, whose spirit she tried to reach in séances, and the eighteen years of companionable relations she had with Shaw when he was living in her house in London before his marriage in 1898, cast doubt on the son's perceptions. Psychobiographical accounts of Shaw suggesting that he was emotionally maimed by lack of maternal love in childhood are based on questionable evidence and tend to lead to reductive and simplistic explanations of his life and achievements, and of his engagement with emotional issues both in his life and art.

Although he presented a largely negative view of his father, Shaw did assert that his own comedic spirit and delight in comic anticlimax was inherited from him. The young Shaw was strongly influenced by two other father figures, a Rabelaisian maternal uncle, Walter Gurly, a ship's surgeon, who frequently entertained the household with ribald tales and limericks, and George Vandeleur Lee, a conductor, musical entrepreneur and exponent of a method of voice production, who founded a Dublin Amateur Musical Society in 1852. Bessie Shaw collaborated with Lee in his musical enterprises, and from 1866 until 1873, the Shaws shared with Lee a summer cottage on Dalkey Hill and a house at 1 Hatch Street, Dublin. The idea pursued by some commentators that Lee was the biological father of Shaw through an illicit affair with his mother is based entirely on circumstantial evidence and is rendered improbable by other evidence, which includes Shaw's physical resemblance to relatives on the Carr Shaw side of the family.

As a schoolboy, Shaw was a gifted and well regarded student (coming top in English and Latin on two recorded occasions and receiving a certificate for good conduct on another), but he heartily detested the several schools he attended in and around Dublin, and counted as the three "colleges" of his "university" Lee's Musical Society, the National Gallery of Ireland, and the hillside of Dalkey Hill, with its splendid views of sea and sky. He was keenly interested in art, and attended classes in freehand drawing in 1870. He grew up in a musical household, and the knowledge and love of music that Shaw developed in his childhood profoundly influenced his entire creative career. John Bunyan, Charles Dickens, and William Shakespeare were prominent among the authors of his boyhood reading, and they remained a permanent part of the Shawian mental landscape. He was also powerfully impressed in his childhood by the charismatic figure of Mephistopheles in Charles Gounod's Faust. On the whitewashed walls of his room at Torca Cottage in Dalkey, Shaw painted watercolor frescoes of Mephistopheles "as the patron saint of sceptics and deriders," explaining to a would-be biographer that at this time, "for the most part my intellectual attitude & affectation was Mephistophelean." His admiration for the oddly assorted childhood heroes of Mephistopheles and John Bunyan, and his Mr. Valiant for Truth, foreshadow the peculiar combination in the adult Shaw of jesting iconoclast and world-betterer with a sense of religious mission.

In 1873, Bessie Shaw departed from Ireland with her two daughters, and established herself as a music teacher in London. Bernard Shaw remained in Dublin in lodgings with his father until 1876, working as an office boy, and later cashier, in the "highly respectable" estate management firm owned by C. Uniacke Townshend, a distant relative of the family into which Shaw married in 1898. A precipitating factor in Shaw's own decision, just before his twentieth birthday in the summer of 1876, to join his mother in London was the death of his sister Elinor Agnes. Immediately after hearing this news he traveled to London, and then to Ventnor on the Isle of Wight, where Agnes died and is buried. The main reasons Shaw (1930) gave in later writings for his decision to migrate to London were that it was "the literary centre of the English language," and that "every Irishman who felt that his business in life was on the higher planes of the cultural professions felt that he must have a metropolitan domicile and an international culture: that is, he felt that his first business was to get out of Ireland."

Despite his self-exile, Shaw remained an Irishman in spirit. He tended to view matters from an Irish rather than English perspective, and many of his dramatic and nondramatic writings are concerned with Irish subjects. After his departure at the age of nineteen in 1876, he did not return to Ireland until July 1905, but thereafter made quite frequent visits, enjoying especially the West of Ireland, where he and his wife Charlotte stayed at times with LADY GREGORY at Coole Park and at the Great Southern Parknasilla Hotel in County Kerry. Some of his play SAINT JOAN (1923) was written at the Parknasilla Hotel, and Shaw was staying there during the production of his playlet The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet at the Abbey Theatre in 1909. Shaw was involved with W. B. YEATS in the founding of the Irish Academy of Letters in 1932, with Shaw as its first president. In 1946 he was honored by being made a Freeman of Dublin.

In his early years in London, Shaw attempted to establish himself as a novelist, with the rapidly executed writing of five remarkable works: Immaturity (1879), The Irrational Knot (1880), Love Among the Artists (1881), Cashel Byron's Profession (1882–1883), and An Unsocial Socialist (1883). The novels, which contain substantial components of autobiography and anticipations of many themes in Shaw's dramatic works, presented humorously critical, angular, and wry analyses of the class system and social mores of contemporary English society, and penetrating reflection on contemporary political and social issues. They were rejected with monotonous regularity by leading English publishers as unsuitable for the reading public of the day. The serial publication of An Unsocial Socialist in the monthly magazine To-Day in 1884 led to Shaw's meeting and association with William Morris. It was through Morris that Shaw met W. B. Yeats in 1888 and Florence Farr in 1890, and he formed a close friendship with Morris's daughter, May. Cashel Byron's Profession, which became his most commercially successful novel, was serialized in To-Day in 1885–1886. The Irrational Knot and Love Among the Artists were published serially in Mrs. Annie Besant's magazine Our Corner in 1885–1887 and 1887–1888, respectively. Immaturity was first published, in a more extensively revised form than Shaw revealed, in 1930 with an important autobiographical preface.

During his early years in London, Shaw was heavily dependent on his mother and father for support, although he did have a period of employment with the fledgling Edison Telephone Company, and gained some small income from ghost-writing articles of music criticism for Vandeleur Lee in The Hornet, and occasionally from other forms of casual employment. Beginning in October 1880 with his joining of the Zetetical Society, he became involved with numerous literary, philosophical, political, and economic societies and study groups. He claimed that he was converted to the cause of Socialism after hearing a speech in 1882 by Henry George, the American author of Progress and Poverty. When his close friend William Archer first observed Shaw in the Reading Room of the British Museum early in 1883, he found the young man with "pallid skin and bright red hair and beard . . . day after day, poring over Karl Marx's Das Kapital and an orchestral score of Wagner's Tristan und Isolde" (Archer, 1931). In 1884 Shaw joined the recently formed Fabian Society, of which he was soon to become one of the leading committee members and trumpeters of its gradualist Socialist principles. His membership in the Fabian Society further developed his already established association with two of the Society's leading figures, Sidney and Beatrice Webb. He became renowned for his superb performances as a "platform spellbinder" and was much in demand as a speaker on political and social topics.

Shaw had numerous love affairs and philanderings with women during his early London days, beginning with a lengthy and tempestuous relationship with Alice Lockett, a young woman he met at his uncle Walter Gurly's house in Leyton. Although he described himself as an "incorrigible philanderer," he was often, like the Don Juan in his early short story "Don Giovanni Explains," the object of pursuit, rather than the pursuer in love affairs. He was also a critic of the conventional ideas of love and romance prevalent in Victorian fiction and social life. On his twenty-ninth birthday, he surrendered his virginity to an Irish widow, Mrs. Jane ("Jenny") Patterson, who subsequently became extremely possessive, and fiercely jealous of her chief rivals Mrs. Annie Besant and the actress Florence Farr. An early play, The Philanderer (1893), draws on Shaw's experiences in this triangular relationship.

Shaw had a gift for forming meaningful and mostly long-lasting relationships with both men and women. In the case of his relations with women, tensions frequently arose from the clashes that occurred between his ideal, probably influenced by Percy Bysshe Shelley, of free, disinterested friendship between people and the claims of possession normally created in sexual relationships. These tensions were strongly evident in his personal life and reflected in his early creative writing. But, as his own testimony and correspondence with Mrs. Patterson indicate, Shaw greatly enjoyed the experience of heterosexual intercourse and was evidently a successful and passionate, if sometimes reluctant, lover.

It was not until 1898, when he was forty-two, that he relinquished his bachelorhood and on June 1 married a wealthy Irish heiress, Charlotte Payne-Townshend, whom he had met through her association with Sidney and Beatrice Webb, and who had been deeply impressed by Shaw's writings. The marriage was preceded by a lengthy period of courtship, during which Shaw alternated between moods of deepening affection for Charlotte and unwillingness to commit himself to marriage, largely out of anxiety about his own reliability in relationships with women. The marriage was finally decided upon during a time when Shaw suffered a serious breakdown in health partly caused by the pressure of his work and partly by a necrosis of a bone in the foot, which eventually required an operation. He attended his wedding on crutches, and thereafter went through a lengthy period of convalescence, during which he wrote his play Caesar and Cleopatra (1898).

There is clear evidence in Shaw's correspondence with Charlotte that during their courtship they engaged in a good deal of physical intimacy in the form of kisses and embraces. It is impossible to determine precisely what became of the sexual side of their relationship after marriage, but as she told T. E. Lawrence (Lawrence of Arabia) in 1927, Charlotte was averse to the idea of having children. Shaw gave as the reason for their deciding on a nonsexual marriage the fact that at her age—she was married at forty-one—a pregnancy would have been dangerous. So the marriage was possibly unconsummated and was without issue. After the wedding, Charlotte, who had inherited a large fortune from her father, an Irish property owner and successful investor, and her mother settled on Shaw an annuity of £300 per annum. This was an important financial arrangement since Shaw did not begin to make a really substantial income from his writings until late in the Edwardian period. The mostly amicable and affectionate marriage of companionship between Shaw and Charlotte lasted until her death in 1943. Shaw engaged in numerous flirtations and affairs with other women during his marriage, the most serious of which in the early years of the marriage were those with Erica Cotterill and the actress Mrs. Patrick (Stella) Campbell. His correspondence with American actress Molly Tompkins suggests that their relationship may have been physically consummated in Italy when he was in his early seventies.

Shaw first began to establish his literary reputation in the field of journalism, as a music, art, and theater critic and book reviewer in various London periodicals. In this sphere he was assisted in obtaining appointments by his friend, the first English translator of HENRIK IBSEN, William Archer, who wrote of Shaw's outstanding qualities as a music critic that, "he had a peculiar genius for bringing day-by-day musical criticism into vital relation with aesthetics at large, and even with ethics and politics—in a word with life" (Henderson, 1911). The same virtue of cross-fertilization between various fields of interest is present in the trenchant and witty theater criticism he wrote for Frank Harris's Saturday Review in the 1890s. Shaw described his series of amusing and often devastating reviews of the theatrical entertainments of the day as "a siege laid to the theater of the 19th century" (Shaw, 1906). A special target of attack was the so-called well-made play among whose most notable practitioners were French dramatists VICTORIEN SARDOU and Eugene Scribe; Shaw coined the term Sardoodledom as an epithet for their mechanical and artificial plotting. He was also a trenchant critic of pseudo PROBLEM PLAYS such as ARTHUR PINERO's The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith and THE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY, which he saw as exploiting the sensational value of topical subjects, such as the situation of the "fallen woman" and the female revolt against male authority, only to end up by endorsing fundamentally conservative Victorian positions. The plays of Ibsen were invoked by Shaw as a foil to the comparative banality of much of the late 19th-century drama in ENGLAND. On July 18, 1890, he delivered a lengthy expository lecture on Ibsen at a meeting of the Fabian Society at St. James's Restaurant in London, which was subsequently published in expanded form as "The Quintessence of Ibsenism" (1891). Another early cultural hero of Shaw's was RICHARD WAGNER, about whom he wrote "The Perfect Wagnerite" (1898), a treatise on The Ring.

Shaw's career as a publicly performed playwright began in 1892, with the completion of his Widowers' Houses and its first production by J. T. Grein's Independent Theatre Company at the Royalty Theatre, Soho. By 1896 he had completed the seven plays that were gathered together under the title Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant (1898), and by the end of the century he had completed three further works that were published under the title Three Plays for Puritans in 1901. Widowers' Houses and the third play in the Plays Unpleasant group, MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION (1893), reflect Socialist politics more explicitly than any of Shaw's later dramatic works. In these plays, the outward behavioral forms of bourgeois society, its codes of ladylike and gentlemanly behavior and its rules of good taste and decency, are seen as part of a conspiracy that conceals underlying, and underpinning, systems of brutal exploitation of labor and conditions of human degradation. Slum tenant houses owned by ruthless landlords, chains of brothels, and factories with appalling working conditions are focal points in these exposures of the dark underside of Victorian gentility and prosperity.

ARMS AND THE MAN, the first of the Plays Pleasant group, had its premiere in 1894, with W. B. Yeats's The Land of Heart's Desire as a curtain-raiser, at Florence Farr's Avenue Theatre in London. The first authentic notes of Shavian satirical laughter have been rightly traced by one commentator to the treatment of Dr. Parimore's absurd medical experiments in the second play of the Plays Unpleasant group, The Philanderer. In the Plays Pleasant group, Shaw's comic powers were further developed with a series of plays in which twists of fortune in personal relations, flirtations and love affairs, and satire on idealized conceptions of romance and heroism loom larger than social, economic, and political themes. While retaining a sharp edge of thematic originality and unorthodoxy, these plays tend to sport with follies rather than with crimes. The crowning work of this period was You Never Can Tell (1895–1896), one of the richest of the early comedies and a work that contains a good deal of masked autobiography.

In Three Plays for Puritans, Shaw conducted a two-edged critical campaign. On the one hand, he attacked narrow and unimaginative conceptions of RELIGION—the wrathfully vindictive and appropriately named Mrs. Dudgeon in The Devil's Disciple (1896) is an epitome of joyless and rigid Puritanism. On the other hand, Shaw himself took a Puritanical stance in these plays in his subversion of the conventions of sentimental romance and in his critique of the idolatry of love. In Caesar and Cleopatra, he developed the interest in historical subjects and in towering historical figures that had earlier been displayed in a one-act play about Napoleon, The Man of Destiny (1895).

At the turn of the century, Shaw began the composition of MAN AND SUPERMAN (1901–1902), a major work in which he first announced his new “religion” of Creative Evolution. He was strongly influenced in the formation of his ideas about Creative Evolution and the Life Force by the writings on evolution of Samuel (“Erewhon”) Butler, who, believing that Charles Darwin had “banished mind from the universe,” wrote numerous polemics against his theories of evolution. Other influences on Shaw's ideas included FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE and Arthur Schopenhauer. Shaw later associated his Life Force theories with the idea of the Élan Vital propounded by Henri Bergson, though Bergson himself was evidently not comfortable with Shaw's understanding of his theory. (“It is not quite zat,” Bergson is reported to have interjected when he listened to Shaw expounding Bergsonian theory at a luncheon in the French philosopher's honor in London in 1911 [Russell, 1956]).

In Shaw's view, evolution is a series of experiments by the Life Force toward the creation of more and more highly organized forms of life. Individuals can contribute to this process by the exercise of imagination, will, and intelligence. The meliorist and teleological thrust of these ideas is counterbalanced in Man and Superman, and elsewhere in Shaw's writings, by deeply pessimistic and skeptical reflections on the human species and by ironic comedy. One of the sections of the Handbook attached to the published text of Man and Superman and headed “Progress an Illusion” describes history as marked by continual relapses of humanity into conditions of savagery, and the Devil in the Dream scene of the play itself delivers a Swiftian diatribe in which man is described as the most destructive and predatory of all the animals.

Shaw's ascendancy to the position of leading dramatist of his day in England, with a strongly developing international reputation, began in the first decade of the 20th century. From 1904 to 1907 he was engaged in a highly successful partnership with the actor-manager HARLEY GRANVILLE-BARKER and with J. E. Vedrenne at the Court Theatre in Sloane Square. Eleven of Shaw's plays were presented at the Court during this period, including the new works JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND (1904), How He Lied to Her Husband (1904), MAJOR BARBARA (1905), and The Doctor's Dilemma (1906). A command performance of John Bull's Other Island at 10 Downing Street before King Edward VII was a significant mark of Shaw's elevation in public esteem.

After the Court seasons, Shaw made increasingly bold experiments in the discussion-play form with Getting Married (1907–1908) and Misalliance (1909). In contrasting style was the strongly plotted action in the play-within-the play of Fanny's First Play (1910–1911) and Androcles and the Lion (1911), the latter combining elements of pantomime and action-packed historical drama. In Fanny's First Play, which had an all-time record first run for Shavian plays of 622 performances, Shaw settled old scores with some of his newspaper theater critics by introducing easily recognizable satirical caricatures of them into a frame-play that surrounds the work supposedly written by Fanny O'Dowda, a student at Cambridge and member of the Cambridge Fabian Society, who has written a revolutionary play quite at odds with the expectations of her old-fashioned father, Count O'Dowda. The culmination of Shaw's success in the pre–World War I period was reached in 1912 with the composition of the comic classic, PYGMALION, in which middle-class morality and the artificiality of class divisions are among the subjects of satire in a dramatic narrative that follows the transformation of a cockney flower-seller into a duchess by speech training from a professor of phonetics. The play became the basis of the highly successful musical My Fair Lady.

Apart from his continued activities as a dramatist, Shaw was in the vanguard of action in numerous political, social, and cultural causes during the Edwardian and early Georgian period. He was closely involved in the agitation for women's suffrage in the Edwardian years and in fact had delivered a speech supporting women's suffrage as early as April 26, 1892, at a stormy meeting in St. James's Hall, London. His book The Quintessence of Ibsenism, published in the previous year, contained a lively attack on the Victorian conception of the womanly woman. In March 1907 he spoke in favor of women's suffrage at a meeting in Queens Hall, London, under the auspices of the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies, and in the following year, in company with his wife Charlotte and his cousin Georgina ("Judy") Gilmore, he joined one of the largest suffragette demonstrations ever held in London. His Edwardian playlet, Press Cuttings, which presents satirical portraits of different types of female antisuffragette figures, was written to be presented at the Court Theatre in aid of the London Society for Women's Suffrage and was later performed in tandem with Cicely Hamilton and Christopher St. John's prosuffrage play How the Vote Was Won. While he was an unwavering supporter of equality for women, and many of his plays created fine portraits (and role models) of emancipated women, the female characters in some works, such as Candida (1904), Misalliance (1909), and Heartbreak House (1916–1917), reflect the angel–demon dichotomy in Victorian constructs of the feminine.

Another cause vigorously pursued by Shaw in the Edwardian years was his campaign against the system of stage censorship. Shaw had clashed with the censorship system in England in the 1890s with his play Mrs. Warren's Profession, for which a license for public performance was impossible to obtain and which he had to revise extensively for its publication in 1898. The play was not licensed for public performance in England until 1924. In the Edwardian period two of his shorter plays, The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet and Press Cuttings, were banned from public performance. In the face of opposition from the authorities of Dublin Castle, Lady Gregory and W. B. Yeats collaborated in mounting a production of Blanco Posnet at the Abbey Theatre. On opening night, August 25, 1909, representatives of virtually all the major newspapers in England as well as journalists from Frankfurt and Milan were present. Also in the audience was James Joyce, who reviewed the play for Piccolo della Sera, Trieste. The production was a triumph and regarded as a major victory in the struggle for the independence of Ireland from the English censorship system.

In the years leading up to the First World War, Shaw had two relationships with women that severely strained his marriage to Charlotte and had important consequences for his creative work. Erica Cotterill, a woman in her early twenties, cousin of Rupert Brooke and daughter of a Socialist schoolmaster, became infatuated with Shaw in 1905. An attractive, intelligent, and uninhibited woman with considerable gifts as a creative writer, she pursued Shaw to his and Charlotte's homes in Adelphi Terrace and Ayot St. Lawrence, where she showered him with caresses, declarations of love, and marriage proposals. Shaw's eventual rejection of these approaches did not prevent him from drawing on the relationship in the composition of Getting Married (1907–1908), Misalliance (1909), and in the conception of the "spiritual marriage" between the ancient Captain Shotover and the young Ellie Dunn in Heartbreak House.

His love affair with the "perilously bewitching" Mrs. Patrick Campbell began in 1912. Unlike the affair with Ellen Terry, which was entirely conducted by correspondence, that with Stella Campbell involved frequent clandestine visits to her house and a good deal of unconsummated physical intimacy. The relationship reached a crisis in the late summer of 1913 when Stella ran away from a meeting, evidently intended by Shaw to bring the affair to sexual consummation, in a hotel at a seaside resort in Kent. In April of the following year, during rehearsals for Pygmalion, in which she played Eliza, Stella married George Cornwallis-West, who left her in 1919. The captivating, witty, and perceptive, but often exasperating, character of Stella Campbell influenced Shaw in his creation of the characters of Hesione in Heartbreak House (1916–1917), the Serpent in Back to Methuselah (1918–1920), and Orinthia in The Apple Cart (1928).

Immediately after the outbreak of World War I, Shaw wrote a polemical essay, "Common Sense About the War" (1914), in which he attacked the official British rationale for entry into the struggle and described the war itself as, essentially, a clash between rival imperial powers brought on by Junker militarists on both sides of the English Channel. The essay caused outrage in England and various groups ostracized its author. His major creative achievement in the War years was Heartbreak House, a work written in the atmosphere of apocalyptic doom evoked by Zeppelin air raids on civilian targets in London and other English cities. The horror and carnage of the War (which Shaw witnessed first hand when he was invited to visit the Front in 1917) also left a deep imprint on the postwar cycle of plays on evolutionary themes, Back to Methuselah.

A pinnacle of international fame and recognition in Shaw's career was reached in the 1920s with the triumphant success on both sides of the Atlantic of his new play, Saint Joan, and the 1925 Nobel Prize for Literature. Saint Joan was described by fellow playwright LUIGI PIRANDELLO in 1924 as "a work of poetry from beginning to end" ("Pirandello Distills Shaw," New York Times, Jan. 13, 1924). Some controversy has surrounded the play in later critical commentary, but it has retained its high reputation in the theater. The title role has been played by many of the 20th century's most celebrated actresses, and the work has influenced playwrights as diverse as T. S. ELIOT and BERTOLT BRECHT. A further accolade for Shaw came in 1929 with the founding, in his honor, of the Malvern Festival, a series of annual theater festivals in which new and revived Shavian works were the major attraction. Shaw's "political extravaganza" The Apple Cart was one of the offerings at the first festival. His long silence as a playwright between Saint Joan and The Apple Cart is partly explained by the fact that he was writing a major political treatise, "The Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialism and Capitalism" (1928), in the intervening years.

During the last twenty-five years of his life, Shaw continued to be vigorously productive as a playwright. Many of the late plays are remarkable for their experimental formal characteristics and for exotic scenarios that reflect an increasing interest in Eastern and other non-European religions and cultures. Plays such as On the Rocks (1933), about conditions in England at the beginning of the Great Depression, and Geneva (1938) reveal, with the accompaniment of a great deal of farcical comedy, a sense of near despair on Shaw's part about national and international political organizations. Other plays, however, such as The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles (1934), The Millionairess (1935), and Buoyant Billions (1946–1948) contain some qualified reaffirmations of faith in life's continually renewed prospects of change, surprise, and wonder. Shaw's last completed dramatic work was the puppet play Shakes Versus Shav (1949), in which Shakespeare and Shaw engage in a battle royal of fisticuffs and quotations. A "little comedy," Why She Would Not, was written in 1950, but Shaw evidently regarded this work as unfinished. He died a few months after his ninety-fourth birthday, on November 2, 1950, following an illness precipitated by a fall in his garden at Ayot St. Lawrence, Hertfordshire. Shaw's final illness and death attracted huge media attention throughout the world, and when the death was announced, theater audiences in various places stood in silence, and the lights on Broadway were dimmed in tribute. Shaw's birthplace in Dublin has been restored to resemble its probable appearance in the mid-19th century and was opened to the public in 1993. His country residence in England, "Shaw's Corner" at Ayot St. Lawrence, is also open to the public under the auspices of the British National Trust. New productions of his plays are regularly presented in the annual Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake in CANADA.

Shaw once described himself as being "up to the chin" in the life of his time, and this comment is borne out by the extraordinary range of his activities and associations. As his own fame grew, and even earlier in some cases, he came into contact in one way or another with a remarkable number of leading figures in the long period of history through which he lived. The normal round of his life came to include such events as exchanging correspondence with LYOV TOLSTOY; entertaining Winston Churchill and his mother to lunch; proposing a toast to Albert Einstein at a dinner in his honor; meeting Joseph Stalin in company with the first British woman Minister of Parliament, Nancy Astor; and having lunch with Charlie Chaplin, Marion Davies, Louis B. Mayer, and Clark Gable in Hollywood, before going on to stay with Randolph Hearst.

None of his other public activities impeded Shaw's prolific output as a playwright, author, and political activist. He wrote twenty-eight full-length plays (counting the five-play cycle Back to Methuselah as one work), nineteen playlets, and the puppet play Shakes versus Shav. In addition to his five early novels, he wrote a very large number of other nondramatic works in the form of music, theater, and art criticism, treatises, prefaces, essays, and tracts. He is estimated to have written more than a quarter million letters and several thousand contributions to periodicals.

Most of the plays of Shaw's early and middle period, up to and including Heartbreak House, were developed from the mould of late 19th-century NATURALISM. Some radical departures from naturalism occurred in this period, in the dream scene of Man and Superman, for example, and in the pantomime form of several scenes in Androcles and the Lion (1912). With Back to Methuselah, Shaw entered into a final phase of his playwriting career in which fantastic characterization and incident become increasingly common. Back to Methuselah has a time span from the Garden of Eden to the year A.D. 31,920, and much in this work resembles science fiction and utopian and dystopian fable. Later plays, such as Too True to Be Good (1931) and The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles contain equally extravagant ingredients. The characters in Shaw's early and middle plays are generally drawn with great psychological insight and lively individuation; in later works, characterization tends toward allegory, and in the case of the political plays, cartoon.

During his lifetime Shaw achieved almost legendary status as playwright, pundit, and wit. In the 1930s his partly sympathetic public comments about European Fascist leaders (which were not completely cancelled by his lampooning of them in Geneva), his unqualified support of Russian Communism under Stalin, and public bewilderment about the intellectual directions of some of his new plays led to a decline in his popularity. But his profile as a public figure and commentator on social issues remained high. As a writer of lucid, effective, and vivacious critical and expository prose, Shaw has only a handful of rivals in the English literary tradition. He had an extraordinary ability to bring abstract philosophical, economic, and political subjects to life, an unerring instinct for the natural rhythms of English, and an inexhaustible fund of apt allusion and lively illustration of ideas. As a born iconoclast he employed these gifts successfully in the exposure of humbug and hypocrisy in his time and in the subversion of sanctimonious and sentimental value systems. While he declared his intellectual affiliations with crusading revolutionaries and "artist philosophers" such as Bunyan, Shelley, and William Blake, he was much more influenced by the comic muse than any of these mentors.

As a playwright Shaw made a major contribution to the renovation of the 19th-century dramatic tradition in England, which had been dominated by a vigorously flourishing but intellectually unchallenging medley of FARCES and MELODRAMAS, pièces bien faites, historical costume dramas, pseudo problem plays, grandiose productions of Shakespeare, and other forms of theatrical entertainment. Shaw's work brought a new dimension of vital engagement with fundamental ideological and cultural assumptions as well as a unique combination of comic inventiveness and critical intelligence. In 1924 T. S. Eliot described Shaw as "the intellectual stimulant and the dramatic delight of twenty years" ("Commentary," Criterion III [October 1924]). W. B. Yeats in his Autobiographies (1954) declared that from the moment in 1894 when Shaw delivered a brilliant repartee to a member of the first-night audience of Arms and the Man, he became "the most formidable man in modern letters." (To a man who uttered a single boo from the gallery amid the laughter and cheers from the rest of the audience at a curtain call after the performance, Shaw responded: "My dear fellow I quite agree with you, but what are we two against so many" [Collected Letters, Vol. 1, 1965].) Less favorable remarks about Shaw by both Eliot and Yeats have contributed to his neglect and downgrading in the mainstream of 20th-century literary criticism.

In theatrical circles and in the broad public domain, Shaw's standing as a major dramatist has not been seriously questioned, and a large number of his works have become a seemingly permanent part of the international repertory of modern classics. His reputation in academic circles has remained controversial and uncertain, despite the existence of a very large body of generally favorable critical writing that has included, in the period since the end of World War II, more than forty book-length studies.

Shaw's plays engage in entertaining and exciting ways with social, political, moral, and philosophical issues, and that quality is an important part of their attraction and interest. But, as he rightly maintained, whatever ideas they may deal with, his dramatic works were not written as "economic essays" but as "plays of life, character, and human destiny." This is what makes the tag "drama of ideas," which is sometimes attached to them, misleading as a pointer to the experiential character of Shaw's works as scripts for the theater. Typically, the end of a play by Shaw leaves not the sense of a proven thesis but an awareness of open-ended possibilities and irreducible complexity. In the development of action in the plays, reason and theory are generally swept aside by human vitality, instinct, and impulse. His characterization, especially in the early and middle works, is distinguished by its depth, subtlety, and rich humor. Some of the plays contain a good deal of talk—a fact about which Shaw occasionally makes even his dramatis personae complain—but the talk is generally closely related to dramatic action. In the theatrical domain, as his sometimes very critical friend Beatrice Webb acknowledged, Shaw is an artist to the tips of his fingers. Like his character Ann Whitefield in Man and Superman, Shaw is "one of the vital geniuses."

PLAYS: Widowers' Houses (1892); Mrs. Warren's Profession (1893); The Philanderer (1893); Arms and the Man (1894); Candida (1894); You Never Can Tell (1895–1896); The Devil's Disciple (1896); Caesar and Cleopatra (1898); Captain Brassbound's Conversion (1899); Man and Superman (1901–1902); John Bull's Other Island (1904); Major Barbara (1905); The Doctor's Dilemma (1906); Getting Married (1907–1908); Misalliance (1909); Fanny's First Play (1910–1911); Androcles and the Lion (1912); Pygmalion (1912); Heartbreak House (1916–1917); Back to Methuselah (1918–1920); Saint Joan (1923); The Apple Cart (1928); Too True to Be Good (1931); On the Rocks (1933); The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles (1934); The Millionairess (1934–1935); Geneva (1936–1938); In Good King Charles's Golden Days (1938–1939); Buoyant Billions (1945–1946)

FURTHER READING

Archer, C. William Archer: Life, Work and Friendships. London: George Allen & Unwin, 1931.

- Evans, T. F. Shaw: The Critical Heritage. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1976.
- Gibbs, A. M. Bernard Shaw: A Chronology. London & New York: Palgrave, 2001.
- . Bernard Shaw: A Life. Gainesville: Univ. Press of Florida, 2006.
- Henderson, Archibald. Bernard Shaw: His Life and Works. London: Hurst & Blackett, 1911.
- Holroyd, Michael. Bernard Shaw, 4 vols. New York: Random House, 1988–1992.
- Laurence, Dan H. Bernard Shaw: A Bibliography. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1983.
- Morgan, Margery. File on Shaw. London: Methuen Drama, 1990.
- Peters, Margot. Bernard Shaw and the Actresses. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1980.
- Russell, Bertrand. Portraits from Memory. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1956.
- SHAW: The Annual of Bernard Shaw Studies. University Park, Penn.: Pennsylvania. State Univ. Press.
- Shaw, Bernard. Dramatic Opinions and Essay. New York: Brentano's, 1906.
- . Immaturity. London: Constable, 1930.
- . Sixteen Self-Sketches. New York: Dodd, Mead & Company, 1949.
- . Collected Letters, 4 vols, ed. by Dan H. Laurence. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co., 1965–1988.
- . The Bodley Head Bernard Shaw: Collected Plays with Their Prefaces, 7 vols. Ed. by Dan H. Laurence. London: Max Reinhardt, 1971–1974.
- . Shaw's Music, Vols. I–III. Ed. by Dan H. Lawrence. London: Bodley Head, 1981.
- . Bernard Shaw: The Diaries 1885–1897, 2 vols. Ed. by Stanley Weintraub. University Park: Penn State Univ. Press, 1986.
- . Shaw: Interviews and Recollections. Ed. by A. M. Gibbs. Iowa City: Univ. of Iowa Press, 1990.
- . The Drama Observed. Ed. by Bernard Dukore. University Park: Penn State University Press, 1993.
- . The Matter With Ireland, 2nd ed. Ed. by Dan H. Laurence and David Greene. Gainesville: Univ. Press of Florida, 2001.
- Tynan, Katharine. Twenty-Five Years: Reminiscences. London: Smith Elder, 1913.
- Yeats, William Butler. Autobiographies. London: Macmillan, 1954.

A. M. Gibbs

SHAWN, WALLACE (1943–)

American playwright and actor Wallace Shawn was born on November 12, 1943, in New York City, and educated at Harvard University and Oxford. Shawn's father was the renowned William Shawn, editor-in-chief of the New Yorker, and Wallace grew up in a prosperous world of literary sophistication and liberal political ideas. A self-consciousness about the privileges he had been born into was to haunt, inform, and drive Shawn's writing for the theater, and produced a spare, economic, and clear DRAMATURGY, while also resulting in intellectual complexity and subtle, moral ambiguity.

Shawn's career as a playwright began in obscurity, despite social and family connections. His day job was operating a Xerox machine, and he wrote plays that were neither produced nor published. Then a mixture of obscure presentations in prestigious venues resulted in a lucrative career as a film actor and a growing, if controversial, reputation as a dramatist. Obscurity entered the work at this time. Shawn's turn toward the subject of sex created in a new tension between play and audience. For example, the Obie-Award winning Our Late Night (1975), directed by Andre Gregory for the Manhattan Project, was set in a smart, stylish urban flat rife with salacious dialogue and orgiastic narrations. The play's action includes sex acts and vomiting, and was described by Brendan Gill in the New Yorker as "ribald and joyous"; Shawn himself saw the production as "upsetting and horrifying." A Thought in Three Parts (1975) and Marie and Bruce (1978), both with London and New York productions, continued the pornographic element and the often vicious exploration of urban, heterosexual couples.

Critics have suggested that with Aunt Dan and Lemon (1985) Shawn began to give up on traditional dramatic structure altogether, largely dispensing with dialogue and plot and depending instead on direct address. The Fever (1991), which followed, certainly bolsters this contention. Originally conceived as a piece to be presented in apartments to small groups, the two-hour monologue was performed initially by Shawn himself in both private and public venues. Finally The Designated Mourner (1995), using three vivid characters, continues mostly in direct address. Some critics have suggested that the plays are not theatrical at all. This perhaps ignores the reason for Shawn's reduction of dramaturgy to single, speaking voices: the result is a focus on content.

Aunt Dan and Lemon posits one character that admires the Nazis for their successful efficiency in the extermination of Jews and another who admires Henry Kissinger and his courage in overseeing the bombing of North Vietnam. The Fever confronts well-to-do, sophisticated audiences with their connection to ongoing torture and killings in remote Third World countries. The Designated Mourner depicts a futuristic Gotham City replete with a totalitarian oligarchy, a rioting underclass, and the death of the last man who can read and care about literature. Each of these plays has resulted in critical outrage and audiences shouting back at the stage. However, the three plays must be acknowledged for their formal accomplishment and their sustained and relentless examination of central moral, ethical issues. They provoke thought. Shawn also wrote with Andre Gregory the screenplay for My Dinner With Andre (1981).

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

PLAYS: In the Dark (libretto, 1975); Our Late Night (1975); A Thought in Three Parts (1976); The Mandrake (after Machiavelli, 1978); Marie and Bruce (1978); My Dinner With Andre (with Andre Gregory, 1980; film released 1981); The Music Teacher (libretto, 1983); Aunt Dan and Lemon (1985); The Fever (1990–1991); The Designated Mourner (1996)

FURTHER READING

- Billington, Michael. "Fascism Echoes Patrician Culture." Manchester Guardian (April 25, 1996).
 Brustein, Robert. "Two Couples," a review of Marie and Bruce. New Republic (April 5, 1980).
 King, W. D. Writing Wrongs: The Work of Wallace Shawn. Philadelphia: Temple Univ. Press, 1997.
 "Shawn, Wallace." In Contemporary Dramatists. Ed. by James Vinson. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1977.

Stanley R. Richardson

SHA YEXIN (1939–)

Sha Yexin was born in July 1939 in Nanjing, CHINA, to parents of Hui muslim. His father, a grocery store owner who had many clients among actors and actresses, encouraged Sha to learn Peking opera at an early age, an experience that influenced his future career choice. At sixteen Sha's first short story appeared in Jiangsu Literature and Art (Jiangsu wenyi). In 1959 he was admitted to East China Normal University. After graduating in 1961, he was selected for a two-year graduate program in dramatic literature at Shanghai Drama Academy. Since 1963 Sha has been the scriptwriter for Shanghai People's Art Theatre. His first theatrical piece, the one-act COMEDY A Penny (Yifen qian, 1965) was staged in 1965, but as with a majority of Chinese artists, Sha's career was unexpectedly suspended for ten years during the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976).

He rose to prominence again soon after that period of repressive censorship and political terrorism. His first political satire, The Impostor (Jiaru woshi zhende), premiered in Shanghai in 1979 and was an immediate success. The play confronts the myth of social and economic equality under communism and exposes with comic ambiguity the social as well as material privileges party officials enjoyed in post-Cultural Revolution China. Based on the news that a young man assumes the identity of the son of a high government official in an attempt to obtain special favors reserved for the political elite, the play applies classic comic mechanisms such as dramatic irony and mistaken identity to its advantage. At the same time, Sha uses the play-within-a-play structure framed by Nikolai Gogol's The Inspector General. The play begins with a character addressing the audience in a Brechtian manner, saying Gogol's play is delayed because an important guest, a high-ranking official, has not yet arrived. The interruption of normal scheduling coincidentally imitates real life situations, particularly in the theater, during and after the Cultural Revolution. Stratified admission for cultural exhibits and theatrical performance was common during that period. The protagonist is therefore compelled to present himself as someone else to be admitted to the privileged group in the theater and on the stage. Structured comparisons and associations thus blurred the boundaries between audience and players. The audience is invited not only to audit Gogol's and Sha's play but also to observe the similar drama that unfolds in their everyday reality. The protagonist is banished from the stage when his true identity is discovered, yet the play on the stage continues, as does the real-life drama outside the theater. The play triggered a heated debate on whether the stage should highlight only positive or uplifting images of Chinese society. The Impostor, apparently not confined by the socialist realist didacticism, was shelved after three months of stage performances. Nonetheless, it signals a transition from post-Mao to contemporary political culture.

Apart from illuminating the unprivileged and the ordinary in Chinese society, Sha's "everyday" approach embraces issues such as gender relations and family life versus ideology. Starting in 1980 with Mayor Chen Yi (Che Yi shizhang), Sha continues his exegesis of the everyday with The Secret History of Marx (Marx mishi, 1983) and the historical play Qiang Qing and Her Husbands (Qiang Qing he tade zhangfumen, 1991), both of which show the personal facet behind the glamorous public image of spiritual or political leaders. Sha critiques both Marx and Mao as individuals, focusing on the misogyny they exhibit in their in-family life.

SELECT PLAYS: A Penny (Yifen qian, 1965); The Impostor (Jiaru woshi zhende, 1979); Mayor Chen Yi (Che Yi shizhang, 1980); History of Marx (Marx mishi, 1983); Jesus, Confucius and John Lennon (Yesu, Kong zi, Pi-tou-shi Lienong, 1988); Qiang Qing and Her Husbands (Qiang Qing he tade zhangfumen, 1991)

FURTHER READING

Chen, Xiaomei, ed. Reading the Right Text: An Anthology of Contemporary Chinese Drama. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 2003. Contains Sha's play Qiang Qing and Her Husbands.

———. Acting the Right Part: Political Theatre and Popular Drama in Contemporary China. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 2002.

———. Occidentalism: A Theory of Counter-Discourse in Post-Mao China, 2nd ed. New York: Rowman and Littlefield, 2002.

Sha Yexin. "The Impostor (If I Were You)" [Jiaru wo shi zhende].

Tr. by Daniel Kane. In Trees on the Mountain: An Anthology of New Chinese Writing, ed. by Stephen C. Soong, et al. Hong Kong: Chinese Univ. Press, 1984. 333–369.

Donghui He

SHELDON, EDWARD (1886–1946)

Edward Sheldon was born on February 4, 1886, into a wealthy Chicago family and was fascinated by the theater from earliest childhood. At eighteen he enrolled at Harvard, where he attended GEORGE PIERCE BAKER's playwriting class. Soon after his graduation in 1907, he began work on SALVATION NELL, a daring, realistic drama featuring a scrubwoman's triumph over her environment through membership in the Salvation Army. It opened on Broadway in 1908 and established Sheldon as a force to be reckoned with in an era when socially conscious plays were rarely seen on the American stage. EUGENE O'NEILL

(1888) later wrote to him, "Your Salvation Nell, along with the work of the Irish Players on their first trip over here, was what first opened my eyes to the existence of a real theater as opposed to the unreal—and to me then, hateful—theater of my father, in whose atmosphere I had been brought up."

Three sociorealistic plays followed: The Nigger (1909) dramatized racial problems in the South through the story of a white Southern politician who discovers that he has an African American grandmother. The Boss (1911) focused on machine politics. The High Road (1912) examined the issues of women's rights and political corruption. By age twenty-six, Sheldon was regarded by many of his contemporaries as the most gifted and ambitious of serious-minded American playwrights.

To those who knew him, Sheldon's talent as a playwright was equaled by his personal charm and by his ability to offer sympathetic advice. Warm, open, incurably romantic, with patrician good looks and a probing intelligence, he became artistic advisor to numerous actors and actresses. Ironically, Sheldon's concern for his friends in the theater led him to depart from social REALISM to devote himself to a series of romantic vehicle plays in many ways similar to the commercial COMEDIES and dramas that ruled Broadway at the time. The most successful of these was Romance (1913). It became an American and international phenomenon; the London production ran for 1,049 performances.

In 1915, at age twenty-nine, Sheldon was stricken abruptly with the first symptoms of what would prove to be progressive and crippling rheumatoid arthritis. Within a decade he was permanently bedridden, and by 1931 he was paralyzed and blind.

After his health began to fail, Sheldon devoted himself largely to adaptations and collaborations. He adapted Peter Ibbetson (1917) and The Jest (1919) for John Barrymore; in the mid-1920s he collaborated with SIDNEY HOWARD on Bewitched (1924) and with Charles MacArthur on Lulu Belle (1926).

The severity of his illness forced Sheldon to retire in 1930. He endured his infirmity with serene grace and regularly provided friendship and advice to the many playwrights and actors who made the pilgrimage to his New York penthouse apartment. He advised ROBERT E. SHERWOOD and THORNTON WILDER on a number of plays including ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS and OUR TOWN. Sheldon died on April 1, 1946, in New York City.

[See also United States, 1860–1929]

PLAYS: Salvation Nell (1908); The Nigger (1909); The Boss (1911); The Princess Zim-Zim (tour, 1911); Egypt (tour, 1912); The High Road (1912); Romance (1913); The Garden of Paradise (adaptation, 1914); The Song of Songs (adaptation, 1914); Camille (adaptation, 1917); Peter Ibbetson (adaptation, 1917); Redemption (adaptation, 1918); The Jest (adaptation, 1919); Richard III (adaptation, 1920); The Lonely Heart (tour, 1921); The Czarina (adaptation, 1922); Bewitched (with Sidney Howard, 1924); The Proud Princess (with Dorothy Donnelly, 1924); Lulu Belle (with Charles MacArthur, 1926); The Age of Innocence (adaptation, with Margaret Ayer Barnes, 1928); Jenny (with Margaret Ayer Barnes, 1929); Dishonored Lady (with Margaret Ayer Barnes, 1930)

FURTHER READING

- Barnes, Eric Wollencott. The Man Who Lived Twice. New York: Scribner's, 1956.
- Cohen Albert. "Salvation Nell: An Overlooked Milestone in American Theatre." Educational Theatre Journal 9 (March 1957): 11–22.
- Jasper, Lawrence. "Edward Sheldon." In American Playwrights, 1880–1945: A Research and Production Sourcebook, ed. by William W. Demastes. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1997.
- O'Neill, Eugene. Selected Letters of Eugene O'Neill. Ed. by Travis Bogard and Jackson R. Bryer. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1988.
- Ruff, Loren K. Edward Sheldon. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
- . "Edward Sheldon: Theatrical Spokesman in the Progressive Era," Southern Theatre, 20, no. 3 (Summer 1977):

Michael A. Morrison

SHEANDOAH

First produced in 1888, when the nation was beginning to heal old wounds, Shenandoah by BRONSON HOWARD builds from two intersectional romances arranged in a symmetrical pattern: Robert Ellingham of the 10th Virginia is in love with Madeline, whose brother, Kerchival West of Sheridan's cavalry, is in love with Robert's sister, Gertrude.

The men are West Point graduates, professionals who care about patriotism, loyalty, and honor more than the specific politics that divide them; Kerchival assures his friend that "one of us will be wrong in this great fight, but we shall both be honest in it." Not one of the lovers argues a sectional position to the point of jeopardizing friendship or romance, and Howard interprets the war itself as a courtship gone awry, so love and war become metaphors for each other. The action presents the South as a tempestuous woman whom the masculine North must dominate but without desecration, while the lovers' courtships mimic military tactics.

The villain, Thornton, is neither Northerner nor Southerner but a Copperhead whose loyalty is artificial and so untrustworthy. Within the play's strict and narrow bounds of honor, he compromises Constance, the wife of General Haverhill, and insults Thornton; the incident leads to a duel that leaves Thornton scarred and resentful. Kerchival later captures him, confiscates a miniature of Constance he is carrying, and then falls in an ambush; an officer finds the miniature in his pocket and gives it to Haverhill, who concludes that his wife has betrayed him with Kerchival. After the war, only a letter from Haverhill's dead son reveals the truth: Thornton took the miniature from him while he was a prisoner, and both Kerchival and Constance are innocent. All who fought honorably are reconciled.

The theatrical climax of the play is the Battle of Cedar Creek, when Sheridan rode his black horse to restore the morale of the Union troops, who reverse their retreat and win the day.

The New York Times praised the verisimilitude of the production—the crowds, the battle noises, the torch signals, and Sheridan's ride—but assured its readers that "the battle for the Nation is kept in the background, and the battle of a few human hearts is the subject of the play" (Sept. 10, 1889). The New York Dramatic Mirror noted, "Heroism instead of partisanship is its theme, and there is an even-handed recognition of the bravery of Northern and Southern men that will make the play just as acceptable in South Carolina as it will be in Boston" (Wheeler, 1889). Harper's New Monthly Magazine (June 1890) observed, "For our own selfish pleasure we could have wished to have no pursued and doubted wife in the piece. We believe that the pursuit of wives by villains is so very uncommon in our society as to be scarcely representative or typical, where there is any pursuit of the kind, the energy and initiative of our women would rather imply that it is the pursuit of villains by wives."

[See also United States, 1860–1929]

FURTHER READING

- Bloomfield, Maxwell. "Mirror for Businessmen: Bronson Howard's Melodramas, 1870–1890." Midcontinent American Studies Journal 5 (Fall 1964): 38–49.
- Felheim, Marvin. "Bronson Howard, 'Literary Attaché.'" American Literary Realism 2 (Summer 1969): 174–179.
- Gottlieb, Lois C. "The Antibusiness Theme in Late Nineteenth Century American Drama." The Quarterly Journal of Speech 64 (1978): 415–426.
- Mason, Jeffrey D. "Shenandoah (1889) and the Civil War." Melodrama and the Myth of America. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1993. 155–86.
- Ryan, Pat G. "The Horse Drama, With Supernumeraries: Bronson Howard's Semi-Historical Shenandoah." Journal of American Drama and Theatre 3 (Spring 1991): 42–69.
- Wheeler, Andrew C. ["Nym Crinkle"]. Review of Shenandoah. New York Dramatic Mirror (September 14, 1889). In Theatre U.S.A. 1665 to 1957, ed. by Bernard Hewitt. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1959. 254–56.

Jeffrey D. Mason

SHEPARD, SAM (1943–)

The stories my characters tell are stories that are always unfinished, always imagistic—having to do with recalling experiences through a certain kind of vision. They're always fractured and fragmented and broken. I'd love to be able to tell a classic story, but it doesn't seem to be part of my nature.

—Sam Shepard, 1984

Sam Shepard is arguably the most influential and critically acclaimed playwright of his generation. Coming of age in the 1960s, he created a distinctive mode of experimental drama that displayed a unique fusion of language, myth, and stage action, and drew on the period's political and cultural energies to redefine what was "American" about American drama. His many awards include eleven Village Voice Obies for plays written between 1965 and 1982, and a special Obie for Sustained Achievement in 1980; the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award for A Lie of the Mind in 1985; the Pulitzer Prize for Drama for BURIED CHILD in 1979; the Golden Palm Award at the 1984 Cannes Film Festival for his screenplay for Wim Wenders's Paris, Texas; and the Gold Medal for Drama from the American Academy of Arts and Letters in 1992. His prolific writings include over fifty full-length and one-act plays, ten screenplays, as well as poetry and short stories. Shepard maintains a longstanding relationship with the Magic Theatre in San Francisco, and during its 1996–1997 season, New York's Signature Theatre devoted its entire season to staging seven of his works.

Born Samuel Shepard Rogers III on November 5, 1943, in Fort Sheridan, Illinois, to a military family, Shepard spent his youth constantly on the move, finally settling down for high school in Duarte, a small town in Southern California, where his father bought an avocado farm. He was nicknamed Steve to distinguish him from his father and was brought up Episcopalian in a strict home environment. His mother was a schoolteacher, and his father was a World War II fighter pilot who finished college through the GI Bill and became a Fulbright Scholar. And yet Shepard's "Old Man" also was an often violent alcoholic whose presence and absence would haunt much of Shepard's writing.

Young Steve held many jobs: he was a "hot walker" at the Santa Anita Race Track (walking horses after their morning exercise) as well as a sheepshearer, herdsman, and orange picker. As a member of the 4-H Club, he won awards at the Los Angeles County Fair. Shepard considered a career as a veterinarian and enrolled in a local community college, but soon drifted into theater, acting in campus productions of Harvey and THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH and writing his first play, The Mildew. According to Shepard, the greatest influence on his writing at this time was SAMUEL BECKETT's WAITING FOR GODOT.

Bored with school and anxious to escape his dysfunctional family, Shepard answered a newspaper ad to join a Christian drama group, the Bishop's Company Repertory Players, and spent almost a year performing a range of plays—from A. A. MILNE to CHRISTOPHER FRY—in churches across the country. "It really gave you a sense of the makeshift quality of theater and all the possibilities of doing it anywhere. That's what turned me on most of all," Shepard recalled; "I realized suddenly that anyone can make theater. . . . You just make it with a bunch of people. That's still why I like it" (Shewey, 1997). Although his name had been handed down to him through seven generations, Steve Rogers seized his acting debut as an opportunity to reinvent himself as Sam Shepard.

Arriving in New York City in 1963, Shepard roomed in the East Village with Charles Mingus, Jr. (son of the JAZZ bassist and composer), who guided him through the bohemian art scene and got him a job as a busboy at the Village Gate, where they regularly heard such jazz greats as Eric Dolphy and Nina Simone and such comedians as Woody Allen and Flip Wilson. Ralph Cook, a waiter at the Gate, started Theater Genesis at St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bowery, dedicated to producing new plays. Shepard's one-acts, Cowboys and The Rock Garden, were premiered there on October 16, 1964. Village Voice critic Michael Smith, an advocate for OFF-OFF-BROADWAY theater, was one of the first to recognize Shepard's talent and noted in his review of the one-acts that Shepard was "working with an intuitive approach to language and dramatic structure and moving into an area between ritual and NATURALISM, where character transcends psychology, fantasy breaks down literalism, and the patterns of ordinariness have their own lives" (October 22, 1964). The off-off-Broadway experimental theater movement of the 1960s was well underway, responding to the theatrical innovations of Beckett, ANTONIN ARTAUD, JEAN GENET, EUGÈNE IONESCO, and HAROLD PINTER, as well as the political theater of BERTOLT BRECHT. It nurtured interdisciplinary exploration among poets, actors, musicians, and artists and rejected the rules and values of traditional commercial theater. "Everything influence[d] me," Shepard remembered of that time, "Art wasn't a career or anything intellectual—it was a much more active, playful thing, a way to inhabit a life" (Kakutani, 1984).

During this first phase of his career, until the mid 1970s, Shepard wrote many short plays and had them regularly performed at La Mama, Caffé Cino, the Judson Poets' Theatre, and other Village venues, sometimes acting in or directing them. The predominant form of these plays was a COLLAGE of extended monologues, vivid images, and often ritualistic stage action. Fourteen Hundred Thousand (1966) is a good example: here Tom and Donna are building a bookcase for her 140,000 books, with help from Ed, Mom, and Pop. While Tom and Donna install the shelves, they argue and cover each other in paint; Mom and Pop recite passages about a great snowfall and plans for a linear city from the books they have been carrying. The others join in, and finally Tom, Donna, and Ed hum "White Christmas." The play is not held together by plot or character, but instead by a pattern of action, language, sound, and light changes, similar to Donna's method of collecting books: "Without concern for what they're about or what they mean to me and who wrote them when. Just in terms of size and shape and color." The real-time process of experiencing texture, form, rhythm, and image is the pleasure. As Michael Smith astutely commented at that time, "All Sam's plays use the stage to project images: they do not relate to the spectator by reflecting outside reality. . . . rather they relate to reality by operating directly on the spectator's minds and nerves" (Shewey, 1997).

From his early plays on, Shepard's writing has been influenced by Joseph Chaikin's experimental Open Theatre (1963–1973). Shepard contributed material to their productions of Terminal, Nightwalk, and Re-Arrangements. Chaikin and the Open Theatre made collage-like ensemble pieces of highly distilled images, music, sound, and movement. One of their techniques was the "transformation," by which actors abruptly switched personas or styles of acting from scene to scene or moment to moment, freed from the need for psychological motivation. "Instead of the idea of a whole character," Shepard wrote in his note to actors for Angel City (1976), "with logical motives behind his behavior into which the actor submerges himself, he should consider instead a fractured whole with bits and pieces of character flying off a central theme . . . more in terms of collage construction or jazz improvisation." The transformation became a major theme and structural device of Shepard's own work, in which characters are preoccupied with inventing roles and identities, and actors are required to shift quickly between realistic and highly stylized modes of performance. Chaikin and Shepard sustained their working relationship until Chaikin's death in 2003; they collaborated on several theater pieces including Tongues (1978), Savage/Love (1979), and The War in Heaven (1983) in which they both also appeared as performers.

Shepard's analogies to music and improvisation are apt, since the works of his second phase have been informally termed his "rock and roll plays," featuring titles reminiscent of rock groups of the period: these include Melodrama Play (1967), Forensic and the Navigators (1967), Operation Sidewinder (1970), Mad Dog Blues (1971), The Unseen Hand (1970), and the culmination of this period, The Tooth of Crime (1972). Shepard was a drummer and guitarist for two progressive bands, the Holy Modal Rounders and the Moray Eels, and he wrote songs and extended music riffs directly into many of his plays using the discursive, improvisational feeling of a jam session to inform their structure and pacing. The plays are populated by visionaries—shamans, cowboys, artists, criminals, rock stars, space aliens, and mythic figures (like MAE WEST or Paul Bunyan)—who seek psychic freedom but often end up being spiritually co-opted by a corrupt society. "You got the genius," the Gambler tells Cody in Geography of a Horse Dreamer (1974), but "somebody else got the power."

The subversive and liberating qualities of rock drove Shepard's language to a high pitch of visceral power. This is particularly true of The Tooth of Crime, in which a violent duel between the aging rock star Hoss and the upstart Crow is fought in torrents of invented language from the worlds of rock music, drugs, car racing, politics, Mafia wars, and old movies. By the late 1960s, Shepard's work was getting more mainstream exposure with productions of La Turista (1966) at London's Royal Court Theatre in 1969 and Operation Sidewinder at Lincoln Center's Vivian Beaumont Theatre in 1970. Although his rock music connections included collaborations with Patti Smith and Bob Dylan, Shepard was conscious of his commitment to a theater audience: after attending a revival concert by The Who, Shepard quipped, "It took me a long time to give up the fantasy that a play could ever have the same unanimous impact as a piece of music" (Shewey, 1997).

Although many of his characters pride themselves on being "escape artists," during Shepard's third playwriting phase he sought more directly to explore his own past, particularly his troubled relationship with his father. Unlike most of his previous work, the full-length plays of this period—including CURSE OF THE STARVING CLASS (1976), Buried Child (1978), TRUE WEST (1980), FOOL FOR LOVE (1982), and A Lie of the Mind (1985)—are written in a more realistic style. They are "family plays," located at the intersection of family bonds and cultural myths, and set against the backdrop of the American West. "I thought for years it was boring . . . to write about the family," Shepard concedes, "but the interesting thing about taking real blood relationships is that the more you start to investigate those things as external characters, the more you see they're also internal characters. The mythology has to come out of real life, not the other way round" (Freeman, 1985).

Although mining deeply disturbing elements of American family life, including incest and murder, these plays are infused with Shepard's mordant humor and arresting images. The characters are ravaged by loneliness, delusions, and guilt, and crave attention; the father figures are wizened and spent and marked by violence, while their children confront the past and seek an elusive sense of truth. "I drive on the freeway every day," says Austin in True West, "I swallow the smog. I watch the news in color. I shop in Safeway. . . there's no such thing as the West anymore! It's a dead issue!" Set in Southern California or the Midwest, the plays are nostalgic for a West that promised the best of the American Dream, but Shepard's characters find themselves psychologically and spiritually adrift in a contemporary landscape of suburban developments and failing farms. The endings of the plays bring no closure or catharsis: Tilden confronts the family with the corpse of the dead infant in Buried Child, the rival brothers of True West are locked in a threatening stalemate, and the other plays end in images of fire. "The stories my characters tell are stories that are always unfinished, always imagistic," insisted Shepard, ". . . I'd love to be able to tell a classic story, but it doesn't seem to be part of my nature" (Kakutani, 1984).

In addition to his accomplishments as a writer, Shepard has acted in more than thirty films (including Days of Heaven, Resurrection, Raggedy Man, and Fool for Love) and garnered an Oscar nomination for his portrayal of Chuck Yeager in The Right Stuff (1983).

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: The Rock Garden (1964); Chicago (1965); 4-H Club (1965); Icarus' Mother (1965); Fourteen Hundred Thousand (1966); La Turista (1966); Red Cross (1966); Forensic and the Navigators (1967); Melodrama Play (1967); Operation Sidewinder (1970); The Unseen Hand (1970); Cowboy Mouth (with Patti Smith, 1971); The Tooth of Crime (1972); Action (1974); Geography of a Horse Dreamer (1974); Angel City (1976); Curse of the Starving Class (1976); Suicide in B-Flat (1976); Buried Child (1978); Tongues (with Joseph Chaikin, 1978); Savage/Love (with Joseph Chaikin, 1979); True West (1980); Fool for Love (1982); A Lie of the Mind (1985); States of Shock (1991); Simpatico (1994); The Late Henry Moss (2001); The God of Hell (2005)

FURTHER READING

Bottoms, Stephen J. The Theatre of Sam Shepard. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1998.

Dugdale, John, ed. File on Shepard. London: Methuen, 1989.

Freeman, Samuel G. "Sam Shepard's Mythic Vision of the Family." New York Times (December 1, 1985).

Kakutani, Michiko. "Myths, Dream, Realities—Sam Shepard's America." New York Times (January 29, 1984).

Marranca, Bonnie, ed. American Dreams: The Imagination of Sam Shepard. New York: Performing Arts Journal Publications, 1981.

Roundané, Matthew, ed. The Cambridge Companion to Sam Shepard. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2002.

Shewey, Don. Sam Shepard. New York: Da Capo Press, 1997.

Wilcox, Leonard, ed. Rereading Shepard: Contemporary Critical Essays on the Plays of Sam Shepard. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1993.

Mary Fleischer

SHEPPEY

Sheppey premiered at Wyndham's Theatre, London, in 1933 in a production directed by John Gielgud and starring Ralph Richardson as the eponymous hero. Based on an early short story, this play was rather different from W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM's previous stage successes. Dramaturgically, for example, it owed much to the morality play and its locus was the urban working class.

The play, which is set in contemporary London, centers on the barber John Miller, known to all as Sheppey because of his birth on the Isle of Sheppey in Kent, who works in a fashionable Jermyn Street barbershop. He is a jovial and engaging character, the heart of the business and the center of the life of the shop where the first act is set.

The plot—or more accurately the character study—really begins when Sheppey learns that he has won a sweepstake prize of £8,500. Immediately his place in the world shifts. The proprietor of the barbershop offers him a partnership that would secure his financial and social future as well as reward his skills and valuable role in the business. Instead, Sheppey decides to resign and give away the money to those poorer and more needy than himself. The decision leads to conflict with his family, with the medical establishment (who interpret his generosity as an indication of madness and wish to see him in an asylum), and even with those he tries to help, such as the thief and the aging whore Bessie Legros. After experiencing an extraordinary and disturbing vision of Death, who appears to both Sheppey and the audience in the guise of Bessie, Sheppey dies.

The play references the morality play, and Sheppey and his psychological journey are not to be read as a realistic drama or black COMEDY. His journey is mythic, and the figures he meets are personifications of values and positions, not fully realized characters. As characters rail and argue against Sheppey, the play considers whether a good man, or even a good act, can exist unpunished in modern society. Sheppey himself is an odd combination of an Everyman figure traversing an increasingly hostile world and a Christ-figure tempted and teased by demons and vice before he finally falls victim to a cruel and decidedly un-Christian world. This style of drama was to achieve some significant success in the decade to come through the writing of CHRISTOPHER FRY, T. S. ELIOT, and JAMES BRIDIE, but in 1933 it proved too much of a change of direction for Maugham's audiences, and it achieved only limited success.

Sheppey was Maugham's final play. Although he lived until 1966, his subsequent output was in prose form and he never again wrote drama.

[See also England, 1860–1940]

FURTHER READING

Cordell, Richard. Somerset Maugham: A Biographical and Critical Study. London: Heinemann, 1961.

Curtis, Anthony. The Pattern of Somerset Maugham: A Critical Portrait. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1974.

—. Somerset Maugham: Writers and Their Work. Windsor: Profile Books, 1982.

Morgan, Ted. Somerset Maugham. London: Jonathan Cape, 1980.

Rogal, Samuel J. A William Somerset Maugham Encyclopedia. Westport, Conn., and London: Greenwood Press, 1997.

Whitehead, John. W. Somerset Maugham: The Critical Heritage. London: Routledge, 1987.

Adrienne Scullion

SHERMAN, JASON (1962–)

Jason Sherman was one of the most highly regarded Canadian playwrights at the start of the 21st century. His plays combine biting wit and almost Borscht-belt humor with a keen interest in historical, political, and moral questions. Theatrically, Sherman's plays are striking for the way he makes actors shift characters and time frames (some bridging centuries) instantaneously.

Born on July 28, 1962, in Montreal, CANADA, to parents who emigrated from ENGLAND following World War II, Sherman graduated from York University. Starting out as an editor and journalist, he switched to playwriting in his mid-twenties and first achieved prominence in Canada with his third play, THE LEAGUE OF NATHANS (1992), which was co-produced by Orange Dog and Theatre Passe Muraille and won the Chalmers Award. This play about three Jewish-Canadian friends named Nathan and their changing relationships to Judaism and Israel over more than a decade introduced Sherman's dramatic alter ego, Nathan Abramowitz, who reappears in his controversial DOCUMENTARY-based READING HEBRON (Factory Theatre, 1996), based on the 1994 massacre of thirty Arabs, the subsequent Israeli inquest, and Sherman/Abramowicz's attempts to research the inquest.

Other notable plays include the political mystery/thriller Three in the Back, Two in the Head (1994), an indictment of covert actions by the UNITED STATES and a metaphor for the economic and political domination of Canada by its neighbor to the south, which won the Governor General's Award for Drama; Patience (1998), a contemporary retelling of the Job theme, which won another Chalmers Award; and It's All True (2001), about Orson Welles's 1937 production of MARC BLITZSTEIN's musical THE CRADLE WILL ROCK. These three plays premiered at the Tarragon Theatre, where Sherman was playwright-in-residence from 1992 to 1999, working frequently with director Richard Rose and DRAMATURG and director Brian Quirt.

Sherman is known for the collaborative nature of his playwriting. His preferred method is to work with director, actors, and dramaturg in workshops, starting either with a working draft of a new play or (as in the case of Reading Hebron) research material, discussing motivation and plot, rewriting or cutting-and-pasting on the spot.

A number of his plays have been performed in the United States, in New York as well as in regional theater, often to strong critical acclaim, but none has moved on to Broadway. Like many Canadian writers, he feels his chances for financial success have been limited by what he has described as a "double colonial status" of English-language Canadian drama in relationship to both Broadway and London. In later years he has worked on a wide range of adaptations. An Acre of Time, from a book by Phil Jenkins, is an ambitious effort to combine a surveyor's attempt to come to terms with the drowning death of her young daughter with an exploration of Canadian history. He has also adapted ANTON CHEKHOV and ARTHUR SCHNITZLER, and current projects include adaptations of The Brothers Karamazov, BERTOLT BRECHT's THE LIFE OF GALILEO, and S. Ansky's THE DYBBUK.

PLAYS: A Place Like Pamela (1991); To Cry Is Not So (1991); The League of Nathans (1992); The Merchant of Showboat (1993); What the Russians Say (1993); Three in the Back, Two in the Head (1994); Reading Hebron (1996); The Retreat (1996); Patience (1998); It's All True (1999); An Acre of Time (2001); Reigen/La Ronde (adaptation of Schnitzler, 2001); Absolutely Chekhov: The Old Business (2002); Remnants (a fable), (2003); The Message (unproduced)

FURTHER READING

The Canadian Encyclopedia, www.thecanadianencyclopedia.com.

Encyclopedia of Canadian Theatre, www.canadiantheatre.com.

Sherman, Jason. Jason Sherman: The Plays. Toronto: Ediciones Boreal, 2001. (Contains League of Nathans; Three in the Back, Two in the Head; The Retreat; Reading Hebron; Patience; and It's All True. Introduction by Urjo Kareda.)

———. An Acre of Time. Toronto: Playwrights Union of Canada, 2001.

Walter Bilderback

SHERMAN, MARTIN (1938–)

Born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on December 22, 1938, Martin Sherman, the gay playwright of Russian Jewish parentage, wrote many plays before his 1979 breakthrough, Bent, and his 1980 move to ENGLAND. After growing up in Camden, New Jersey, and studying at Boston University in the late 1950s, he acted in and contributed to the writing of many amateur plays. His first full-length, individually written play, produced when Sherman was the playwright-in-residence at Mills College, Oakland, California, was the 1963 rock musical A Solitary Thing. Music is often significant in his plays. Sherman's writing career began to flourish with his move to England.

Before 1980, Sherman was appreciated more in Britain than in the UNITED STATES. The theatrical fortunes of Passing By illustrate the difficulties that Sherman faced in the United States. Written in 1972, the play was not performed until 1974, and that in a New York production that irritated Sherman. The play is a serious intervention on behalf of the gay community, one that insists that partners in gay relationships can support one another with the same loving intensity that is possible in heterosexual families. Set in the New York studio apartment of the artistic Toby, Passing By dramatizes the improbable romance between Toby and the sportsmanlike Simon. Toby's plans to move to Paris are wrecked by Simon's declining health. The seriousness of the play was undermined by actors who, Sherman claims, cowardly camped up the homoeroticism of the piece, lest they become too identified with homosexuality.

Better revivals of Passing By were produced in the United States after Bent made Sherman's name, but Sherman noted that a 1975 London production, directed by Drew Griffiths and starring Simon Callow as Toby, dignified the uncompromising, serious homosexuality of his text. This Almost Free Theatre production convinced Sherman that his plays would be better received in England, and most of his later plays were premiered in England. Sherman is often self-effacingly humorous about the mixed fortunes of his plays in America. Remarking on a flat, 1976, OFF-BROADWAY production of Cracks, a "whodunit" parody in which Sherman infuriates the audience by not revealing the murderer's identity, Sherman noted "the stunning spectacular sound of silence. You could hear a pin drop. You shouldn't hear a pin drop in COMEDIES."

Since the enduring triumph of Bent and his move to England, Sherman's plays have attracted first-class actors. He is renowned for writing substantial roles for women as well as for gay male leads. For example, various productions of the 1985 play about the dancer Isadora Duncan, When She Danced, have been illuminated by the energies of, among others, Elizabeth Ashley, Sheila Gish, and Vanessa Redgrave. Rose, written in 1999, is a one-actress dramatization of the necessarily peripatetic life of the eighty-year-old Rose, a Jewish veteran of a traumatic century. Olympia Dukakis thrived in the role of Rose, attracting warm reviews for her Nancy Meckler-directed performances in London and New York. Although Sherman spends a lot of time writing for the screen, he remains a potent force in both British and U.S. theatrical landscapes.

[See also Gay and Lesbian Drama]

PLAYS: Passing By (1974); Cracks (1975); Soaps (1975); Rio Grande (1976); Bent (1979); Messiah (1982); When She Danced (1985); Madhouse in Goa (1989); Some Sunny Day, Rose (1999); The Boy from Oz (2003)

FURTHER READING

- Boles, William C. "Martin Sherman." In The Dictionary of Literary Biography, Vol. 228: Twentieth-Century American Dramatists, Second Series, ed. by Christopher J. Wheatley. Detroit: Gale, 2000. 230–240.
- Cott, Thomas. "A Conversation with Martin Sherman." www.lct.org/calendar/platform_detail.cfm?id_event=90216083 (Accessed October 5, 2006).
- Dace, Tish. "Martin Sherman." In Contemporary American Dramatists, ed. by K. A. Berney. Detroit: St. James Press, 1994. 533–536.
- Hischak, Thomas S. American Theatre: A Chronicle of Comedy and Drama, 1969–2000. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 2001.
- Sherman, Martin. Passing By. In Gay Plays, ed. by Michael Wilcox. London: Methuen, 1984.
- . Plays 1. London: Methuen, 2003.
- . Rose. New York: Samuel French, 2002.
- Sierz, Aleks. In-Yer-Face Theatre: British Drama Today. London: Faber and Faber, 2001. 157–168.

Kevin De Ornellas

SHERRIFF, ROBERT CEDRIC (1896–1975)

English playwright, screenwriter, and novelist Robert Cedric (R.C.) Sherriff is best known for the play JOURNEY'S END (1928), a boldly realistic play about front-line soldiers that drew on his own experiences as an officer in the trenches in World War I.

Sherriff—who was born on June 6, 1896, at Hampton Wick, Middlesex—served as a captain in the East Surrey Regiment during World War I and had a career in his father's insurance business before the remarkable and international success of his seventh play, Journey's End, allowed him to become a full-time writer.

His early work for the theater was produced in the amateur sector before the Stage Society produced a play that had been rejected by commercial managements across London. Journey's End was presented for just two performances—at the Apollo Theatre in a production directed and designed by James Whale and featuring Laurence Olivier in the lead role of Stanhope. The critical response was very positive. The influential critic James Agate gave over his entire week's radio broadcast to the play, and its reputation was secured. The success of the initial short run by the Stage Society led to the commercial production of Journey's End at the Savoy Theatre in 1929 (where it ran for more than 590 performances), a highly successful Broadway production in the same year (some 485 performances), and a film version also directed by Whale in 1930.

Although touched by a whiff of MELODRAMA, Journey's End captured a distinctive and, at the time, unfamiliar authenticity about the wartime experience of a generation of young men. Its clear-eyed and generally unsentimental approach to the horrors of the trenches marked it as something highly original, and it was an influential catalyst for a raft of new serious dramatic writing about the war.

Disappointed by the reception of his next play—the rather quaint and certainly overly naturalistic rustic COMEDY Badger's Green (1930)—and financially secure as a result of Journey's End, Sherriff studied briefly at New College, Oxford, before being invited by Whale to Hollywood to write the screenplay for The Invisible Man (1933). There followed a further brief term at Oxford before he returned to writing full time for both stage and screen.

Sherriff never again achieved the success of Journey's End but still maintained a high-profile career. He wrote well-crafted, popular thrillers, including Miss Mabel (1948) and Home at Seven (1950); the ghost story, The White Carnation (1953); historical dramas such as St. Helena (1935) on Napoleon and The Long Sunset (1955) on Roman Britain. The last of these was first produced on radio but subsequently produced by Barry Jackson at the Birmingham Rep and Bernard Miles at the London Mermaid. Sherriff also produced assured and bankable screenplays for the British film industry, including the scripts for Goodbye Mr. Chips (1936), The Four Feathers (1939), Odd Man Out (1945), and The Dam Busters (1955). His plays, however, fell increasingly out of step with modern sensibilities, and his last drama, A Shred of Evidence (1960), was a critical disaster, despite a successful provincial tryout.

Journey's End had a short-lived Broadway production in 1939 but was revived in London in 1972 and again in 1998 with Samuel West in the leading role of Stanhope. Sherriff's autobiography, No Leading Lady, was published in 1968, and he died at Kingston Hospital, Kingston-upon-Thames, on November 13, 1975.

[See also England, 1860–1960]

SELECT PLAYS: The Woods of Meadowside (1922?); Profit and Loss (1923); Cornlow-in-the-Downs (1924?); Mr. Bridie's Finger (1926); Journey's End (1928); Badger's Green (1930); Windfall (1933); Two Hearts Doubled (1934); St. Helena (1935); Miss Mabel (1948); Dark Evening (1949); Home at Seven (1950); The Kite (1952); The White Carnation (1953); The Long Sunset (1955); The Telescope (1957); A Shred of Evidence (1960)

FURTHER READING

- Barker, Clive, and Maggie B. Gale, eds. British Theatre Between the Wars. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2000.
- Pellizzi, Camillo. The English Drama: The Last Great Phase. London: Macmillan, 1935.
- Sherriff, R. C. No Leading Lady: An Autobiography. London: Gollancz, 1968.

Adrienne Scullion

SHERWOOD, ROBERT E. (1896–1955)

Born into a New York family of wealth and social position on April 4, 1896, Robert E. Sherwood was destined for a Harvard education, but his indifference to academic discipline prompted him to leave that university in 1917, when the United States entered World War I. Rejected by the U.S. Army because of his height (six feet seven inches), he enlisted in the Canadian Black Watch Battalion, to be gassed and wounded in France and discharged in early 1919. Back in New York he wrote for Vanity Fair (1919–1920), reviewed movies for Life, and associated with those clever writers and playwrights then holding forth at the Round Table in the Algonquin Hotel, who were to draw international attention to American drama.

At Harvard Sherwood enjoyed writing for the Lampoon and the Hasty Pudding, which produced his youthful effort Barnum Was Right (written with Samuel P. Sears). Throughout his life Sherwood confessed to a love for “hokum”—a love that would also be a constant annoyance because, as he also confessed, he always started his plays with a “big message and ended up with nothing but good entertainment.” Building on his military service and his consequent hatred of war, he began his Broadway career with an ostensibly antiwar play, The Road to Rome (1928). Concerned with the “human equation,” which Sherwood considered more beautiful than war, the play addressed the question: Why did Hannibal not destroy Rome when he had the opportunity? But it was not a pacifist argument that deterred Sherwood’s Hannibal; it was a beautiful woman. In Reunion in Vienna (1932), Sherwood intended to satirize the conflict of science and humanity in the guise of a cuckolded and presumably intellectual psychiatrist, but audiences enjoyed only the rollicking, bed-rolling FARCE and its two excellent actors, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne.

In THE PETRIFIED FOREST (1935), Sherwood again attempted to express the despair of the vanishing intellectual, “Homo-Semi-Americanus—a specimen of the in-between age,” but again created first-rate theatrical entertainment linking the gunman and the poet. Sherwood’s antiwar sentiments resurfaced in IDIOT’S DELIGHT (1936), set in an Italian resort hotel where a song-and-dance troupe and various guests are stranded as war breaks out. The horror of conflict is expressed as a German scientist excoriates the “obscene maniacs” whom he feels he must join, while a Frenchman rages against the “League of Death”—the munition makers of the world. Yet Sherwood’s romantic plot line again undercut his serious theme as falling bombs brought down the final curtain. Not until ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS (1938) did Sherwood manage to avoid hokum in dramatizing that period of Lincoln’s life leading to his presidential candidacy.

As Lincoln found 1861 a terrible year to be president, so was 1938 a time of anguish for Sherwood, who struggled with the contradictory virtues of national interest and pacifism. Finally, in There Shall Be No Night (1940), he demanded that people “stand up and fight for their freedom against forces of atavistic despotism.” A brilliant stage success, this play won a third Pulitzer Prize for Sherwood, both Idiot’s Delight and Abe Lincoln in Illinois having received the award. For the student of theater as an instrument of propaganda, it demonstrates that Franklin Delano Roosevelt did well to select Sherwood as his speech writer and director of the overseas branch of the Office of War Information. Unfortunately, after this climactic period in Sherwood’s life, he was unable to write successfully for the stage. Again and again he made the attempt: The Rugged Path (1945), Miss Liberty (with Irving Berlin, 1949), Small War on Murray Hill (1957). During the postwar years his best efforts were his historical study Roosevelt and Hopkins (1948), for which he received his fourth Pulitzer Prize, and the movie script for The Best Years of Our Lives (1946).

As a dramatist, Sherwood believed that the theater should perform two essentially equal functions: to entertain and to reveal reality. An extremely persuasive idealist, he tried to accomplish both and—because critics could not comprehend the serious purpose within the framework of his plays—inevitably failed. In only one play did he attempt to express his message unadorned by his glittering wit: choosing fifth century B.C. for Acropolis (1933), he pitted practical men of war against thoughtful men concerned with life and beauty. The play was not successful on stage, however, and Sherwood was never able to write a satisfactory revision. Trying to believe Socrates’ confession “that there are no final answers,” Sherwood realized that he was incapable of resting comfortably on paradox or ambiguity. Constantly frustrated in his attempt to dramatize his “human equation,” he found the simple and direct platform he required only once in his life—in his writing of There Shall Be No Night. An honest man and a remarkably skillful writer of MELODRAMA, Sherwood constantly attempted to live up to the demands of both life and the theater.

[See also United States]

PLAYS: A White Elephant (1916); Barnum Was Right (1918); The Love Nest (from the story by Ring Lardner, 1927); The Road to Rome (1927); The Queen’s Husband (1928); This Is New York (1930); Waterloo Bridge (1930); Reunion in Vienna (1931); Acropolis (1933); The Petrified Forest (1935); Idiot’s Delight (1936); Tovarich (from the play by Jacques Deval, 1936); Abe Lincoln in Illinois (1938); There Shall Be No Night (1940); The Rugged Path (1945); Miss Liberty (music by Irving Berlin, 1949); Second Threshold (completion of a play by Philip Barry, 1951); Small War on Murray Hill (1957)

FURTHER READING

- Brown, John Mason. The Worlds of Robert E. Sherwood: Mirror to His Times, 1896–1939. New York: Harper & Row, 1965.
- . The Ordeal of a Playwright: Robert E. Sherwood and the Challenge of War. New York: Harper & Row, 1970.
- Meserve, Walter J. Robert E. Sherwood: Reluctant Moralist. New York: Western Publishing Co., 1970.

Sahu, N. S. Theatre of Protest and Anger: Studies in Dramatic Works of Maxwell Anderson and Robert E. Sherwood. Blaby Leicester, England: Advent Books, 1988.

Shuman, R. Baird. Robert E. Sherwood. New York: Twayne, 1964.

Walter J. Meserve

SHIMIZU KUNIO (1936–)

Shimizu Kunio, Japanese playwright, was born and raised in Niigata near the Sea of JAPAN and entered Waseda University in 1956 to study design. In Waseda's atmosphere, simmering with leftist initiatives and AVANT-GARDE theater experimentation, Shimizu was coaxed into his brother's small theater group and soon abandoned design. Like most of his contemporaries, he was swept up in the fervor surrounding the renewal of the U.S.–Japan Mutual Security Treaty in 1960, though political inclinations are hardly evident in his work. Unlike many other students, however, he actually graduated, completing his senior thesis on TENNESSEE WILLIAMS, whose dialogue he cites as influential in his plays. Shimizu has been versatile beyond theater, writing film scenarios (for the noted director Hani Susumu), television documentaries (on the 1963 Miike coal mine incident that inspired his play Those Days), and fiction (nominated for the Akutagawa Prize in 1988).

Shimizu's budding career took off in 1969 when Such a Serious Frivolity (Shinjō Afururu Keihakusa, 1968) was staged by Ninagawa Yukio at the Art Theatre Shinjuku Bunka (an important space also for Shimizu's contemporaries BETSUYAKU MINORU, TERAYAMA SHŪJI, and KARA JŪRŌ). Shimizu's collaboration with Ninagawa has been particularly fruitful. They founded Modern Man's Theatre (Gendaijin Gekijō) in 1969, and Ninagawa has directed many Shimizu plays. In 1976, Shimizu established his own company, Winter Tree Troupe (Mokutōsha), with his wife, the actress Matsumoto Noriko. His plays have garnered respected awards, including the Kishida Kunio Drama Prize in 1974 for When We Go Down That Heartless River (Bokura ga Hijō no Taiga o Kudaru Toki, 1972), the Kinokuniya Drama Award in 1976 for Night, Night of Youth That Raises My Hackles with Screams and Anger (Yoru yo Ore o Sakebi to Sakage de Mitasu Seishun no Yoru yo), and the Teatoro Theatre Award in 1990 with Little Brother! A Message to Sakamoto Ryōma from Otome, His Older Sister (Otōto yo—Ane, Otome kara Sakamoto Ryōma e no Dengon). He is one of the pivotal playwrights—and the most literary—to emerge from the counterculture of the 1960s.

Shimizu's work traffics in the gaps between reality and illusion, change and decay, present and past, or memory of the past, always with overtly realistic dialogue. He often refracts his principal concerns through the lenses of memory as affected by the endemic social disorientation of the era. The issue in Those Days (Ano Hitachi, 1966), for example, is how to deal with the amnesia afflicting coal miners after an accident—by re-creating the past exactly as it was, including the miners' relationships, or by abandoning the effort as impossible and starting anew? Re-creating the past is at best confusing—whose account is one to believe?—but ignoring it can leave one rootless. Shimizu regards identity as rooted in relationships, but recognizes that the unsettled nature of relationships in our helter-skelter age virtually precludes apprehending one's identity through them. That is the crux of The Sand of Youth, How Quickly (Seishun no Suna no Nan to Hayaku, 1980), for example, in which the characters are confused about whether and how they may be related. Two of them, Older Man and Man, might be the same person at different stages on life's way. Yet, caught in the jetlag wrought by blinding change, the best they can do is to conclude uncertainly that they are merely “passing strangers” with themselves. Relationships are up for grabs and identity remains elusive.

SELECT PLAYS: Tomorrow I'll Put Flowers There (Ashita Soko ni Hana o Sasō yo, 1960); Those Days (Ano Hitachi, 1966); Such a Serious Frivolity (Shinjō Afururu Keihakusa, 1968); When We Go Down That Heartless River (Bokura ga Hijō no Taiga o Kudaru Toki, 1972); By Illusion His Heart Pushed to Madness—Our Masakado (Maboroshi ni Kokoro mo Sozoro Kuruoshi no Warera Masakado, 1975); Night, Night of Youth That Raises My Hackles with Screams and Anger (Yoru yo Ore o Sakebi to Sakage de Mitasu Seishun no Yoru yo, 1976); The Dressing Room (Gakuya, 1977); Older Sister, Burning Like a Flame (Hi no yō ni Samishii Ane ga Ite, 1978); My Spirit Is the Sparkling Water (Waga Tamashii wa Kagayaku Mizu Nari, 1980); Sand of Youth, How Quickly (Seishun no Suna no Nan to Hayaku, 1980); Tango at the End of Winter (Tango—Fuyu no Owari ni, 1984); Dreams Departed, Orpheus (Yume Sarite, Orufe, 1986); Little Brother!—A Message to Sakamoto Ryōma from Otome, His Older Sister (Otōto yo—Ane, Otome kara Sakamoto Ryōma e no Dengon, 1990)

FURTHER READING

- Ozasa, Yoshio. Contemporary Plays and Playwrights [Dōjidai Engeki to Gekisakkatachi]. Tokyo: Gekishobō, 1980.
- Rolf, Robert T., and John K. Gillespie, tr. and eds. Alternative Japanese Drama: Ten Plays. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1992.
- Scholz-Cionca, Stanca, and Samuel L. Leiter, eds. Japanese Theatre and the International Stage. Leiden: Brill, 2001.
- Senda, Akihiko. Gekiteki Ruessansu—Gendai Engeki wa Kataru [Theatrical Renaissance: The Modern Theatre Speaks]. Tokyo: Riburopōto, 1983.
- . The Voyage of Contemporary Japanese Theatre. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1997.
- Shimizu Kunio. Tango in Winter. Adapt. by Peter Barnes. London: Amber Lane Plays, 1991.

John K. Gillespie

SHINGEKI

Shingeki (literally “new theater”) refers to the international style of theatrical modernism and the movement to establish it in JAPAN. Shingeki shares with modern theaters everywhere a common repertory of plays; a set of conventions regarding ACTING, DIRECTING, and staging; and assumptions about the nature of reality that are essentially rationalistic, secular, and tragic.

Shingeki was born out of a rupture with the premodern theater tradition. During the late 19th century, numerous attempts were made to create a modern theater from traditional forms, especially kabuki. These attempts failed, however, because the basic characteristics of kabuki, including its use of male actors to play female roles (onnagata), its emphasis on song and dance, its plethora of supernatural characters, and its ahistorical understanding of time, were incompatible with rational, scientific modernism. The trauma of this rupture with tradition haunted and shaped the shingeki movement.

The transition to an authentically modern theater in Japan came after the Russo-Japanese War (1904–1905) with the discovery of the work of HENRIK IBSEN. Ibsen had been introduced to Japan in 1889 by the writer MORI ŌGAI, and a collection of eight of his social plays, including ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE and A DOLL'S HOUSE, had been published in 1901. It was not until 1907, however, when an Ibsen Society was founded, counting among its members many of the most prominent intellectuals of the day, that interest in Ibsen began in earnest. Japan had become an industrialized society with all its attendant problems, and Ibsen's social criticism, the intense inner struggles of his characters, the naturalness of his language, and the nontheatricality of his staging seemed supremely pertinent to the Japanese condition.

The first troupe to produce an Ibsen play was the Free Theater (Jiyū Gekijō), which premiered JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN on November 27, 1909. Named after ANDRÉ ANTOINE's Théâtre Libre, the Free Theater was founded by OSANAI KAORU and the kabuki actor Ichikawa Sadanji II and sought to retrain professional actors like Sadanji in modern techniques. "Our purpose in establishing the Free Theater was none other," Osanai proclaimed to a thrilled audience on opening night. "It was in order to live!" (Soda, 1999). Creating a modern theater in Japan was not simply a technical matter; it was a life and death struggle to come to terms with the modern world.

The 1911 production of A DOLL'S HOUSE by the Literary Arts Society (Bungei Kyōkai) was, if anything, even more significant. Founded in 1906 by TSUBOUCHI SHŌYŌ, a prominent literary theorist, professor of English literature, and translator of William Shakespeare, and the young critic Shimamura Hōgetsu, the Literary Arts Society was reorganized in 1909, when Tsubouchi built a theater and acting school on the grounds of his Tokyo estate to train amateurs as modern theater actors. One of these amateurs, Matsui Sumako, caused a sensation with her portrayal of Nora in A Doll's House. Not only did her performance establish her as Japan's first modern actress, but it galvanized the modern Japanese women's movement and contributed to the foundation the same year of the Blue Stocking Society (Seitō), Japan's first feminist organization.

Many writers experimented writing Ibsen-style plays during the 1910s. These included well-known authors like Mushakōji Saneatsu, KIKUCHI KAN, YAMAMOTO YŪZŌ, and Tanizaki Junichirō. Not everyone was happy with the new realistic drama, however. Tsubouchi disbanded the Literary Arts Society in 1913 because he could not accept the new direction; and writers like IZUMI KYŌKA wrote many popular plays infused with the supernatural.

The carnage of World War I and the shock of the Russian Revolution made the need to deal with historical reality and the inability of kabuki to do so clearer than ever. In Europe, AVANT-GARDE movements from EXPRESSIONISM to DADAISM and Constructivism to Proletarian theater emerged to modify orthodox REALISM and interpret the new situation. The Tsukiji Little Theatre (Tsukiji Shōgekijō) was the vehicle for these trends in Japan. Founded in 1924 by Osanai Kaoru and Hijikata Yoshi, the Tsukiji was both Japan's first theater building devoted exclusively to modern plays and a production company. Disillusioned by years of failed attempts to reconcile kabuki with modern theater, Osanai announced just prior to its opening that for the first two years the Tsukiji would produce only translated foreign works. "Above all, the enemy we must fight against . . . is the traditional theater, that is, kabuki drama," Osanai later told his actors. "We must first wage war on this tradition. We must destroy kabuki patterns, we must create completely separately our own theater art, new and free" (Osanai, 1975; emphasis in the original). Osanai's controversial decision alienated many of Japan's native playwrights, but by the time it staged its first Japanese work in March 1926, the Tsukiji had mounted forty-four productions of plays by a wide range of Western playwrights—including Ibsen, ANTON CHEKHOV, MAURICE MAETERLINCK, KAREL ČAPEK, GEORG KAISER, GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, AUGUST STRINDBERG, Roman Rolland, and LUIGI PIRANDELLO—and it trained an entire generation of modern theater actors, directors, playwrights, dramaturgs, and designers.

If there was any challenge to the Tsukiji's supremacy in Japan's modern theater, it came from the native playwrights it excluded. Foremost among these was Kishida Kunio, who had returned to Japan in 1923 after spending two years studying in Paris with JACQUES COPEAU and the Vieux Colombier company. With the publication of Old Toys (Furui Omoicha) in 1924, Kishida emerged as the leader of the playwrights Osanai had so alienated. Over the next decade and a half, Kishida would write dozens of mostly one-act plays that were almost devoid of action and had no particular "message" but plumbed the psychology of the alienated modern Japanese. "One does not write a play in order 'to say something,'" Kishida famously asserted. "One 'says something' in order for there to be a play" (Abe, 1980). In 1932, Kishida founded Playwriting (Gekisaku) magazine and mentored younger playwrights, including TANAKA CHIKAO, Uchimura Naoya, and MORIMOTO KAORU. In 1937, along with Kubota Mantarō and Iwata Toyoo, Kishida founded the Literary Theatre (Bungakuza), which continues to perform today.

Following Osanai's untimely death at the age of forty-seven on December 25, 1928, the Tsukiji company dissolved into warring factions. The basic line of division was between politically engaged and literary groups. The politically oriented faction coalesced around Hijikata Yoshi; the designer, playwright, and director Murayama Tomoyoshi; and the playwright KUBO SAKAE. The literary faction centered on Kishida Kunio and Playwriting magazine.

Factionalism was exacerbated by the increasingly repressive political environment. The Asia-Pacific War began with the Manchurian Incident on September 18, 1931, and government repression of political dissent steadily increased through the decade until, in August 1940, the leaders of the left-wing theater movement, about a hundred people in all, were arrested en masse and their troupes ordered to disband. Because it resisted this pressure and realized a theater of social concern along the lines defined by Ibsen, Kubo Sakae's LAND OF VOLCANIC ASH (Kazanbaichi, 1937–1938), staged in 1938, is often cited as the pinnacle of Japanese playwriting in the prewar period. The monumental seven-act work with a cast of more than fifty characters and an expansive vision depicts the complex social and economic life of a contemporary agricultural village in Hokkaido, tying its local conditions into national and international trends. Although flawed, the play largely succeeds in realizing Kubo's ideal of achieving "a unification of scientific theory and poetic form" (Kubo, 1993).

From 1940 to 1942, Kishida Kunio collaborated with the war effort as head of the cultural section of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association, and during the conflict, many erstwhile left-wing shingeki artists promoted Japan's "holy war" as members of propagandistic mobile theater companies. In the postwar period, however, it was not these wartime activities that were remembered but shingeki's prewar legacy of social concern and activism, and the movement's prestige soared to unprecedented heights. The movement reconstituted prewar alliances in three major troupes, the People's Art Theatre (Mingei), the Actors Theatre (Haiyūza), and Kishida's Literary Theatre. By the mid-1950s, the differences among these troupes were less significant than their commonalities, and together they constituted a theatrical establishment, enforcing a modernist orthodoxy.

KINOSHITA JUNJI, MISHIMA YUKIO, and ABE KŌBŌ were among the most important shingeki playwrights to emerge in the postwar period. Kinoshita inherited the realist legacy of Kubo Sakae, and his plays Turbulent Times (Fūrō, 1939–1947) and Between God and Man (Kami to Hito to no Aida, 1970) display this influence. Mishima, whose modern work was often performed by the Literary Theatre, also wrote for kabuki and nō. His Modern Nō Plays (Kindai Nōgaku Shū, 1956) recast the nō classics as one-act plays. His most renowned modern plays, MADAME DE SADE (Sado Kōshaku Fujin, 1965) and My Friend Hitler (Waga Tomo Hitotara, 1968) explore the relationship between art and evil. Abe Kōbō, who worked with the Actors Theatre for many years, is best known for plays like FRIENDS (Tomodachi, 1967), which can be compared with the work of HAROLD PINTER.

After 1960, shingeki came under increasing pressure from a new postwar generation, who vehemently attacked it and created a post-modern, post-shingeki alternative theater popularly known as ANGURA. Today, the word shingeki, which once denoted the most advanced experimental theater, is often used pejoratively to describe a form that once flourished but is now quaint and out of date.

FURTHER READING

- Abe Itaru. Kindai Gekibungaku no Kenkyū [Studies in Modern Dramatic Literature]. Tokyo: Ōfūsha, 1980.
- Havens, Thomas R. H. Artist and Patron in Postwar Japan: Dance, Music, Theater, and the Visual Arts, 1955–1980. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Univ. Press, 1982.
- Horie-Webber, A. "Modernisation of the Japanese Theatre: The Shingeki Movement." Modern Japan Aspects of History, Literature and Society. Ed. by W. G. Beasley. Univ. of California Press, 1975.
- Kano, Ayako. Acting Like a Woman in Modern Japan: Theater, Gender, and Nationalism. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2001.
- Kishida, Kunio. Five Plays by Kishida Kunio. Expanded ed. Ed. by David G. Goodman. Cornell East Asia Papers 51. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell East Asia Program, 1995.
- Kubo Sakae. Land of Volcanic Ash. Rev. ed. Tr. by David G. Goodman. Cornell East Asia Papers 40. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell East Asia Program, 1993.
- Osanaï Kaoru. Osanaï Kaoru Zenshū [Complete Works of Osanaï Kaoru]. Vol. 6. Kyoto: Rinsen Shoten, 1975.
- Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Continuity and Change. London: Japan Library, 2002.
- Rimer, J. Thomas. Toward a Modern Japanese Theatre: Kishida Kunio. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Univ. Press, 1974.
- Soda Hidehiko. Osanaï Kaoru to Nijisseiki Engeki [Osanaï Kaoru and Twentieth Century Theater]. Tokyo: Bensei Shuppan, 1999.

David G. Goodman

SHIN KABUKI

Shin kabuki simply means "new kabuki." These plays, mainly historical dramas, represent kabuki's attempt to survive in the modern age as a living theater. Classical kabuki was characterized by numerous highly styled conventions of music, posing, movement, and voice. For historical plays, authenticity was not an issue.

Kabuki fans resisted attempts by the actor Ichikawa Danjūrō to vary the popular conventions by introducing some historical verisimilitude in the 1880s. His katsureki-geki (living history plays), written by KAWATAKE MOKUAMI, were the forerunners of shin kabuki plays in their abandonment of certain presentational methods. In the 1890s TSUBOUCHI SHŌYŌ and MORI ŌGAI established the right of drama to be discussed as literature; their efforts and those by others of like mind prepared the ground for shin kabuki proper.

Tsubouchi wrote what are considered the first shin kabuki plays, starting with A Leaf of Paulownia (Kiri Hitoha) in 1894–1895. Concerning the decline and fall of the house of Toyotomi at the beginning of the 17th century, this play had to wait ten years before it was first performed (in 1904), but from this time a range of playwrights (including Matsui Shōyō and Takayasa Gekkō) wrote regularly for kabuki.

Shin kabuki playwrights, writing for classically trained kabuki actors, had to decide how far to go in expressing their dramas through words (thereby broadening the spectrum of responsive spectators and intensifying the psychological shading). OKAMATO KIDŌ tried to avoid diluting the audience's classical theatrical experience. Hasegawa Shin let his wandering gambling heroes speak for themselves as they upheld their own code of honor and protected the weak. MAYAMA SEIKA, by contrast, sometimes immobilized kabuki actors' bodies with lengthy dialogue, but often he achieved a balance between stretching his actors and allowing them to do what they did best.

Okamoto and Mayama were still performed after the war, while other prewar playwrights such as Uno Nobuo and HŌJŌ HIDEJI continued writing for kabuki. In the 1950s the style of shin kabuki playwrighting changed as novelists, inexperienced in the practical kabuki theater, wrote for spectators whose kabuki attendance was less regular than had been customary. Funahashi Seiichi wrote a dreamlike adaptation of the 11th-century classic Tale of Genji (Genji Monogatari, 1951–1954), and Osaragi Jirō's Nobunaga in His Young Days (Wakaki Hi no Nobunaga, 1953) was a sensitive portrait of the 16th-century warlord Oda Nobunaga. MISHIMA YUKIO, the famous novelist, had a number of plays performed by kabuki.

In the 1980s the kabuki actor Ichikawa Ennosuke III further advanced shin kabuki with his “super kabuki.” Beginning in 1986 with Yamato Takeru, about a 4th-century Japanese hero, Ennosuke speeded the action and introduced recorded accompaniment (including contemporary music). These spectacles (seven so far), in which Ennosuke built on his previous work in restoring much of kabuki's former stage “business,” have brought new audiences into kabuki theaters.

Shin kabuki in all its manifestations has demonstrated to kabuki actors that their traditional acting skills can be applied to a wide range of theater. At the beginning of the 21st century, kabuki actors are in many cases involved in a greater variety of performance genres than ever before.

[See also Japan]

FURTHER READING

Kagayama Naozō. Shin Kabuki no Sujimichi [The Method of Shin Kabuki]. Tokyo: Bokujisha, 1967.

Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature of the Modern Era: Poetry, Drama and Criticism. New York: Henry Holt, 1984.

Leiter, Samuel L. New Kabuki Encyclopedia: A Revised Adaptation of Kabuki Jiten. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1997.

——, ed. A Kabuki Reader: History and Performance. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 2002.

Powell, Brian. Kabuki in Modern Japan: Mayama Seika and His Plays. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1990.

——. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Continuity and Change. London: Japan Library, 2002.

Brian Powell

SHINPA

JAPAN's first overture toward a modern theater, shinpa was created in the 1880s as a kind of AGITATION-PROPAGANDA theater for the Liberal Party by Sudo Sadanori and KAWAKAMI OTTOJIRŌ. Early in its history, it was called sōshi shibai or shosei shibai, “radical theater” or “student theater,” indicating its political and amateur tendencies. By the early 1890s, Kawakami's roughhousing, realistic style earned it the name shinpa, “new school,” as opposed to the “old school” (kyūha) of kabuki, but Kawakami later preferred to call it “straight drama” (seigeki), in emulation of the European spoken theater that he and his wife, Kawakami Sadayakko, helped introduce to Japan.

Sudo Sadanori's student theater could never compete with Kawakami, but in 1891 another actor, Ii Yōhō, with backing from playwright and theater reformist Yoda Gakkai, founded a nonpolitical theater company, called Seibikan, whose style would rival and eventually overcome Kawakami's. The Seibikan and its successor the Seibidan maintained the use of female impersonators (onnagata) and kabuki-style offstage music, eventually ensuring that shinpa settled into a form closer to kabuki than to modern theater. But by the early 1900s, it had surpassed kabuki in topicality and was riding a crest of popular and critical success.

Shinpa won large audiences with dramatizations of melodramatic fiction by such popular writers as Ozaki Kōyō, IZUMI KYŌKA, and Tokutomi Roka, attracting first-rate playwrights. It commissioned MORI ŌGAI's first play, The Jeweled Comb Box and the Two Urashimas (Tamakushige futari Urashima, 1902), and both OSANAI KAORU and MAYAMA SEIKA served several years as shinpa dramatists. But even during its heyday, critics called shinpa to task for pandering to popular sentiment, its MELODRAMA, amateurish acting, and lack of a critical engagement with social and political issues. The European plays it staged were adaptations rather than authentic translations, and experiments in mixing live theater with film (renstageki), by actor/directors like Inoue Masao (1881–1950) were dismissed by some as “the REALISM of train whistles.” (Inoue was one of the many shinpa actors who starred in early Japanese film.) By 1910, the foundations of shingeki, a truly modern, Westernized theater, were laid down by reformists like TSUBOUCHI SHŌYŌ and Osanai Kaoru.

But great performances by onnagata like Kitamura Rokurō and Hanayagi Shōtarō and actresses like Mizutani Yaeko ensured shinpa a popular following long after it had ceased to be the cutting edge of theatrical innovation. Its scripts remained strong well into the 1930s, thanks in large part to the work of playwrights like Kawaguchi Matsutarō, KUBOTA MANTARŌ, MAFUNE YUTAKA, YAMAMOTO YŪZŌ, and MIYOSHI JŪRŌ.

After 1945, the various smaller shinpa troupes amalgamated into Gekidan Shinpa (the shinpa company). Faced with the loss by the 1970s of a great generation of actors, shinpa maintained its appeal with guest appearances by kabuki stars Kataoka Nizemon XV and Bando Tamasaburō V, but today relies on a repertory of plays mostly from before 1945. It celebrated its one hundredth anniversary in 1988 with sold-out houses, indicating that there is still a popular following for melodrama, and continues to reinvent itself by inviting guest directors like Kanō Yukikazu from the neo-kabuki company Hanagumi Shibai.

[See also Shingeki; Shin Kabuki]

FURTHER READING

Hagii Kōzō. Shinpa no Gei [The Art of Shinpa]. Tokyo: Tōkyō Shoseki, 1984.

Kano, Ayako. Acting Like a Woman in Modern Japan: Theater, Gender, and Nationalism. New York: Palgrave, 2001.

Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era: Poetry, Drama, Criticism. New York: Henry Holt, 1984.

Komiya Toyotaka. Life and Culture in the Meiji Era. Vol 2: Music and Drama. Tr. and adapt. by Donald Keene and Edward Seidensticker. Tokyo: Obunsha, 1956.

Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Continuity and Change. London: Japan Library, 2002.

Yanagi Ejirō. Shinpa no Rokujūnen [Sixty Years of Shinpa]. Tokyo: Kawade Shobō, 1948.

M. Cody Poulton

SHI WU GUAN, KINGQU See FIFTEEN STRINGS OF CASH

SHŌJO KAMEN See THE VIRGIN'S MASK

SHORE ACRES

Them free thinkers is hard to get shut of. They're dangerous to young folks' religion.

—Josiah Blake, Act 1

Opening as Shore Acres Subdivision at Chicago's McVicker's Theatre on May 23, 1892, and retitled Uncle Nat after the first week, the play barely covered expenses in its initial run. However, later productions as Shore Acres, including a five-year tour, made playwright JAMES A. HERNE a millionaire. Begun in 1888 as The Hawthornes, the play actually predates MARGARET FLEMING and illustrates Herne's increasing interest in social issues. Revisions, however, relied on sentimentality, melodramatic plot devices, and external realism for effect and audience appeal.

Confrontation between youth and tradition join a conflict between urban and rural values to drive the romantic COMEDY. The script indirectly engages feminism and Herne's suspicion of business and repressive religious fundamentalism, but those concerns remain secondary to the domestic and romantic elements. Central to the play's popularity, Herne's creation of Uncle Nathaniel Barry also updated the traditional Yankee character.

Martin Barry, a traditional patriarchal tyrant, forbids his independently minded daughter Helen to see the free-thinking young doctor, Sam Warren, because he intends to marry her to Josiah Blake, the local businessman who has persuaded him to risk his farm on a vacation property boom. Martin mortgages the property to Blake, who plans to divide it into speculative vacation lots. The family's consequent forced relocation to Boston will include Martin and Nathaniel's mother, who will be disinterred and reburied there. Helen refuses Blake's proposal and leaves for the West with Warren. A storm rises as the couple's boat sails, and the enraged Martin tries to stop Nathaniel from lighting the farm's lighthouse to warn the boat from foundering on the rocks. Nathaniel subdues his younger brother and struggles, near collapse, to climb the tower stairs. The scene shifts to reveal the storm-tossed passenger boat nearing the rocks; in the distance, a light gradually moves up the lighthouse windows, and the beacon alerts the vessel in time.

The final act brings the now-married couple back at the moment Martin learns his speculation has failed and ruined him. The investment company has collapsed, forcing the now impoverished Blake to demand payment or foreclosure. Reconciliation with the couple, motivated by their child, seems to pose a hazardous solution when Warren offers to cover the debt by mortgaging their home. Nathaniel's long-overdue soldier's pension solves the problem, and he pays the debt on condition that Martin sign the farm over to his wife. Following the general resolution, Herne leaves Nathaniel on stage alone for a silent prolonged scene, in which he secures the house for the night, then exits upstairs, satisfied.

Herne altered the script radically to meet the producer's condition for its premier. The original lacked Nathaniel's last-minute rescue, and the upbeat revisions clashed with Herne's growing commitment to REALISM. Consequently, Herne's original indictment of land speculation and bigotry shifted to a romantic comedy that focused on Nathaniel's stylized rural character. The realistic actions in the final scene, though clearly sentimental, produced a highly unconventional ending that producers resisted. Herne restored the scene for the Boston production, drawing audience approval and mixed critical response.

[See also United States, 1860–1929]

FURTHER READING

Cather, Willa. "James A. Herne's Shore Acres." In The World and the Parish: Willa Cather's Articles and Reviews, 1893–1902, Vol. 1, ed. by William M. Curtin. Lincoln: Univ. of Nebraska Press. 469–471.

Durham, Weldon B. "James A. Herne." In American Playwrights, 1880–1945, ed. by William W. Demastes. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1995. 145–155.

Eich, Louis M. "The Stage Yankee." Quarterly Journal of Speech 27, no. 1 (February 1941): 16–25.

- Jones, Betty Jean. "James A. Herne: The Rise of American Stage Realism." Ph.D. diss., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, 1983.
- McConachie, Bruce A. "Herne, Shore Acres and the Family in the Tradition of the Irish-American Theater." Theatre Studies 30 (1984): 17–28.

Ron West

SHUZENJI MONOGATARI See TALE OF THE SHUZENJI

SHVARTS, YEVGENY LVOVICH (1896–1958)

Yevgeny Lvovich Shvarts was a Russian playwright, screenwriter, prose writer, and diarist based in Leningrad whose dramatic satires, written in the style of the fairy tale or fantasy story, were among the most popular of the post-Stalin period in the Soviet Union. After spending a short time acting, he began working in the 1920s in the field of children's literature as an author, an editor, and occasionally performer of his own sketches and poems. Shvarts's first produced play, Underwood (Undervud, 1929), combined fairy-tale and realistic characters and established the pattern for most of his subsequent works, the best of which were clever, daring spoofs of tyrants and the docile subjects who help them remain in power. In A Common Miracle (Obyknovennoye chudo, 1954), a magician salvages a young couple's love and turns the king into a bird so he will fly away. Shvarts had notable success writing plays for puppet theater in the 1930s and 1940s.

Censorship problems dogged Shvarts from the beginning (Underwood was banned after a short run) and rarely let up thereafter. His major plays—The Naked King (Goly Korol'), The Shadow (Ten'), and The Dragon (Drakon), written in 1934, 1940, and 1944, respectively—had extended success only in the 1960s. The minor One Night (Odna noch'), uncharacteristically a realistic account of people enduring the Leningrad Blockade, was written in 1942 but staged only in 1975. Films based on Shvarts's scripts were made in the 1930s and 1940s, but the peak of his popularity in cinema occurred between the late 1950s and the late 1970s, when the number of films made from his plays and scripts was so high that his literary legacy had a major influence on that period's style of political satire. Despite a boom in publications of his works around the time that the Soviet Union collapsed in 1991, interest declined somewhat in Shvarts's drama when the need declined in Russia to express daring truths in veiled, indirect ways—commonly called "Aesopian language."

The Naked King, in which a swineherd and a princess salvage their love by humiliating her royal father when he plans to give her in marriage to a neighboring ruler, and The Shadow, about a kind scholar whose shadow begins living its own evil life, drew on Hans Christian Andersen fairy stories for character and plot. The Dragon, about a monster that assumes human form and has despotically ruled a town for four hundred years, was derived in part from the Arthurian legend of Sir Lancelot. Written during the rise and reign of Nazism in GERMANY, these plays go beyond Soviet satire. Shvarts's drama, though full of fantasy, was grounded in a philosophical belief that the nature of oppression, which always conjoins the tyrant and the tyrannized, is universal. Some commentators find links between Shvarts and European strains of metaphorical and/or EPIC drama as expressed in the works of JEAN GIRAUDOUX, BERTOLT BRECHT, JEAN ANOUILH, FRIEDRICH DÜRRENMATT, HEINER MÜLLER, and others.

[See also Russia and the Soviet Union]

SELECT PLAYS: On Contemporary Youth (O sovremennoi molodyozhi, not produced, 1927); Three and a Half (Tri s poltinai, with Veniamin Kaverin, not produced, 1929); Underwood (Undervud, 1929); Island 5-K (Ostrov 5-K, 1932); Nonsense (Pustyaki, 1932); The Treasure (Klad, 1933); The Adventures of Hohenstaufen (Pokhozheniya Gogenshtaufena, 1934); The Naked King (Goly Korol', 1934; produced 1960); A Ceremonial Conference (Torzhestvennoye zasedaniye, 1935); Brother and Sister (Brat i sestra, 1936); Little Red Riding Hood and the Gray Wolf (Krasnaya shapochka i sery volk, 1938); Puppet City (Kukol'nyy gorod, 1939); The Snow Queen (Snezhnaya koroleva, 1939); The Shadow (Ten', banned 1940, revived 1960); The Tale of Lost Time (Skazka o poteryannom vremeni, 1940); Beneath the Limetrees of Berlin (Pod lipami Berlina, with Mikhail Zoshchenko, 1941); The Distant Land (Dalyokii kraj, 1942); One Night (Odna noch', 1942, produced 1975); The Dragon (Drakon, banned 1944, revived 1962); The Tale of the Courageous Soldier, also known as Tsar Vodokrut (Skazka o khrabrom soldate, 1946); Ivan the Saintly Workman (Ivan chestnoi rabotnik, not produced, 1947); 100 Friends, also known as Magicians (Sto друзей, aka Volshebnyki, 1947); A Common Miracle (Obyknovennoye chudo, 1954); Two Maples (Dva klyona, 1954); The Tale of the Newlyweds (Povest' o molodykh suprugakh, 1957)

FURTHER READING

- Golovchiner, Valentina. Epicheskii teatr Yevgeniya Shvartsa [The Epic Theater of Yevgeny Shvarts]. Tomsk: Tomsk Univ., 1992.
- Loseff, Lev. On the Benificence of Censorship: Aesopian Language in Modern Russian Literature. Tr. by Jane Bobko. Munich: Otto Sagner in Kommission, 1984.
- Metcalf, Amanda J. Eugenii Shvarts and His Fairy-Tales for Adults. Birmingham Slavonic Monographs, 8. 1979.
- Segel, Harold B. Twentieth-Century Russian Drama from Gorky to the Present. Rev. ed. New York: Performing Arts Journal Publications, 1993.
- Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich. The Naked King, The Shadow and The Dragon. Tr. with an intro. by Elisaveta Fen. London: Boyars, 1976.
- Shvartz, E. Three Plays. Intr. and notes by Avril Pyman. New York: Pergamon Press. 1972.

John Freedman

SIGURJONSSON, JOHANN (1880–1919)

Johann Sigurjonsson was born on June 19, 1880, at Laxamári, ICELAND, and died on August 31, 1919, in Copenhagen, DENMARK.

After years of veterinary studies in Copenhagen, Sigurjonsson quit the university to become a full-time writer, a poet and a playwright. Since few people master Icelandic, he decided to write simultaneously in Danish and Icelandic to gain a wider audience.

He made his debut with the realistic drama Dr. Rung, a play about a scientist who risks his own life while experimenting with a new medicine he has discovered. The form is conventional, but the language is not especially realistic. In fact, Sigurjonsson, a fine poet in his own right, had been influenced by the neo-romantic movement that emerged in literature as a revolt against the down-to-earth REALISM, and perhaps made a stronger mark in poetry.

His poetic sensibility was all the more obvious in his next play, The Farmer at Hraun (Bondinn á Hrauni) first performed in Reykjavik in 1908, and a few years later in Denmark. Again a moral conflict is at the core of the action, a problem well known to the Icelanders when the migration from the old farms to the villages took place. An earthquake symbolizes the strong emotions of the characters.

Strong dramatic emotion is also characteristic of his next drama, Eyvind of the Mountains (Fjalla-Eyvindur), which had its first performance in Reykjavik in 1911 and subsequently was produced in some twenty cities in Europe and North America. Again his setting is Iceland, this time based on a well-known tale of outlaws in the 18th century; the approach, however, is modern, with strong psychological conflicts carrying the action. The first act confronts love and moral conscience (the lover turns out to be a thief); the second act, love and money and social recognition. In the third act, the heroine sacrifices the love for her child for the love of the outlaw she has followed to the mountains, and in the last act, love is confronted with yet another basic instinct, hunger. The language is poetic, somewhat in the vein of the Irishmen J. M. SYNGE and W. B. YEATS. The play was filmed by the Swede Victor Sjöström in 1917–1918. No less dramatic passion characterizes Sigurjonsson's next play, The Wish (Galdra-Laftur), which also traveled widely, including Paris, after its first production in Reykjavik in 1914. This powerful portrayal of a youngster with the ambition of trying to master the powers of darkness in order to be able to do some undefined good deeds is bustling with scenic life, even if some critics have claimed that its construction leaves something to be desired.

Sigurjonsson's last play, The Liar (Mörður Valgarðsson), was based on episodes from Njals saga and never found the same response with the audience, not least the Icelanders who prefer the original.

Sigurjonsson died young, but the expectations he awakened in Europe are evident in the following quotation of the French critic Leon Pineau in La Revue Scandinave 1914: "Now the name Sigurjonsson is associated with Ibsen, Björnson and Strindberg; one day perhaps it will surpass them all."

PLAYS: Dr. Rung (published 1905, staged 1940); The Farm at Hraun (Bondinn á Hrauni, Gaarden Hraun, 1908); Eivind of the Mountains (Fjalla-Eyvindur, published under the Danish title Bjerg-Eyvind og harts Hustru, 1911); The Wish (Galdra-Laftur, published under the Danish title Onsket, 1914); The Liar (Mörður Valgarðsson, published and staged under the Danish title Lögneren, 1917)

FURTHER READING

Einarsson, Sveinn. Íslensk leiklist II [Icelandic Theater II]. Reykjavík: Hið íslenska bókmenntafélag, 1996.
Jónsson, Jón Viðar. Kaktusblómið og nóttin [Cactus Blossom and Night]. Akureyri: Hólar, 2004.
Toldberg, Helge. Johann Sigurjonsson. Copenhagen: Rasmus Fischers Forlag, 1965.

Sveinn Einarsson

THE SILVER TASSIE

Although famously rejected by W. B. YEATS and the Abbey Theatre in 1928, SEAN O'CASEY's The Silver Tassie has established itself as one of the great antiwar plays of the 20th century. Its successful transformation into an opera by Mark Antony Turnage in 2000 would appear to acknowledge its continuing appositeness in modern times. The title comes from a love song by Robert Burns.

The plot concerns a footballer, Harry Heegan, who wins the cup (the eponymous Silver Tassie) for his local team before being shipped to the front in France during the 1914–1918 war. There he is seriously wounded. When he returns in a wheelchair and an operation fails to cure his paralysis, his world falls apart. He loses his girlfriend Jessie to his friend Barney, who saved his life on the battlefield. At the victory dance in the football club, soured and angry, Harry gets into a fight with Barney and crushes the Silver Tassie beneath the wheels of his chair as a symbol of his despair. He and his comrade Teddy, blinded in the war, are sent home while the dance (symbolizing life) goes on without them.

The play was controversial because of the style O'Casey adopts in act 2, which is set in the war. The play shifts from the familiar REALISM of act 1 into EXPRESSIONISM to show as in a dream the dehumanization of war. As O'Casey put it in the fifth book of his autobiography, Rose and Crown (1949), he intended to "show the garlanded horror of war . . . in a new way." Instead of plot there is atmosphere; instead of characters there are types and men in masses; instead of realistic dialogue there is poetic chant and a rough kind of poetry. Also in act 2 is a deliberate use of blasphemy to underline the blasphemy of war itself. Harry is not visibly present in this act, although he may be deemed to be part of the mass of exhausted soldiers. The remaining two acts of the play are in a different style. Yeats's main objection to the play was that it lacked artistic unity; GEORGE BERNARD SHAW disagreed vehemently with Yeats and saw the Tassie as "a hell of a play," intensifying from act to act.

A second objection Yeats launched at the play was that it did not reflect O'Casey's direct experience in the way his earlier plays had done: he had not personally known the horrors of the 1914–1918 war and so wrote propaganda. In the controversy that arose with Yeats about the play, O'Casey declared that an artist does not necessarily have to experience first-hand what he writes about. The imagination can penetrate minds, hearts, and conditions without direct knowledge and thereby create from secondary sources. This was the principle on which O'Casey based his later plays, which were written in exile in ENGLAND about an IRELAND with which he no longer had direct contact.

In 1935, after they were reconciled, Yeats accepted Tassie for production at the Abbey. As Ireland was then undergoing a rapid shift to conservatism and virtually to a church-dominated state, the play met fierce opposition from Roman Catholics and was taken off after a week. This fresh controversy convinced O'Casey that there was no future in a changing Ireland, and he never again offered a new play to the Abbey. But the Tassie, though it will always be a challenging text, endures as a powerful representation of "the war to end all wars."

FURTHER READING

- Kleiman, Carol. Sean O'Casey's Bridge of Vision: Four Essays on Structure and Perspective. Toronto: Univ. of Toronto Press, 1982. 21–48.
 Kosok, Heinz. O'Casey the Dramatist. Gerrards Cross: Colin Smythe; Totowa, N.J.: Barnes & Noble, 1985. 94–113.
 Krause, David. Sean O'Casey: The Man and His Work. Rev. ed. New York: Macmillan, 1975. 94–131.
 Schrank, Bernice. "Reception, Close Reading and Re-Production: The Case of Sean O'Casey's The Silver Tassie." Canadian Journal of Irish Studies 26, no. 2 (Fall 2000)/27, no. 1 (Spring 2001): 34–48.
 Scrimgeour, James. Sean O'Casey. Boston: Twayne, 1978. 111–128.

Christopher Murray

SIMARD, ANDRE (1945–)

Gymnast, acrobatic choreographer, aerial visionary—such is the reputation of Canadian theater artist Andre Simard. Born in Montréal, Québec, in 1945, Simard has spent the past thirty years perfecting his craft and earning a place as one of the world's most innovative and important practitioners of the "circus arts." The key to his success has been a career-spanning practice in three distinct fields: fine arts, elite sports, and circus.

Simard pursued studies at the Graphic Arts Institute in Montreal while training to compete in the 1972 Munich Olympic Games. He previously competed at several World Championships before being named Senior Canadian Champion (1969, 1970, 1971) and Senior Pan-American Champion (1971). His work has appeared in the productions of Cirque du Soleil, the National Circus School in Montreal, and his own company, Studio de Creation les Gens d'R.

Simard's distinctive style is characterized by constant, fluid motion, evocative of ballet. His role is that of a technician, assessing his performers and guiding them toward making impossible acts of aerial movement seem simple. The key to this approach is a focus on "biomechanics"—for Simard, the principles of muscular action and mechanics, as used in advanced sports training, are as essential as aesthetics to the creation of acrobatic works of art.

Simard has trained prospective gymnasts and acrobats in a number of roles, coaching and teaching students both for competition (as Head Coach of the men's section for the Canadian National Gymnastics team from 1981 to 1987) and for the circus (at schools in FRANCE as well as at the National Theatre School in Montreal and Cirque du Soleil). In 1989, Simard coached the Mouvance trapeze duo (Hélène Turcotte and Luc Martin) to a gold medal at the Festival Mondial du Cirque de Demain in Paris, the first Canadians to have won.

In 1995, he founded Les gens d'R with the goal of experimenting with artistic expression through aerial movement. The company combines theater, music, circus, dance, and the plastic arts to create a kind of acrobatic dance, and performs at festivals and theaters around the world. Their most recent project is the innovative showcase piece, Échos (2002), now on an international tour. Since 1997, Simard has served as Aerial Designer and Research and Development Coordinator of aerial techniques for the Cirque du Soleil productions of La Nouba (1998), O (1998), Dralion (1999), Varekai (2002), and Zumanity (2004).

A wizard of technique, Simard is responsible for several innovative practices considered revolutionary in the contemporary circus arts. In 1994, Simard created Aerial Silk acrobatics, working with French contortionist Isabelle Vaudelle. In Aerial Silk, trapeze artists move through the air suspended by or swinging from lengths of fabric. The effect is fluid and kinetic, the performers seeming to soar through space. In 1989, working with the National Circus School, he developed a security system for trapezes and other aerial swings, that are now considered indispensable in any high-flying act.

[See also Canada]

SELECT PLAYS: Mouvance (1989); Ephemeral (Éphémère, 1995); Trails of the Nazca (Les pistes de Nazca, 1995); The Nave (La Nef, 1996); Echoes (Échos, 2001)

FURTHER READING

- Babinski, Tony. Cirque Du Soleil: 20 Years Under the Sun—An Authorized History. New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2004.
 Bartlett, Roger. Introduction to Sports Biomechanics. London: E&FN Spon, 1997.
 Vial, Veronique. Varekai: Cirque du Soleil. New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2003.
 ——. O: Cirque du Soleil at Bellagio. New York: PowerHouse Books, 2001.

Wangh, Stephen. An Acrobat of the Heart: A Physical Approach to Acting Inspired by the Work of Jerzy Grotowski. New York: Vintage Books, 2000.

Daniel Goldberg

SIMON, NEIL (1927–)

I think any comment that you make about the way people live can be serious. That is what I try to do. I do it through the medium of comedy, but I don't do it just to evoke a laugh from an audience. I do it also to show them how absurdly we all live our lives. To me, that is the point that I try to make in all the works.

—Neil Simon, 1969

One of the most prolific and successful playwrights of the American theater, Neil Simon practically defined COMEDY on Broadway in the latter half of the 20th century. The author of twenty-eight produced plays, five musicals, and twenty-three films, his legacy continues to influence comedy writers in all genres.

Simon was born in New York City on July 4, 1927. He early acquired the nickname “Doc” and started writing comedy with his older brother Danny after World War II, first for CBS radio and then for Phil Silvers, Sid Caesar, and other stars of the Golden Age of live television—a world he would look back on in his 1993 play Laughter on the 23rd Floor. The brothers also began writing material for the theater, including the review New Faces of 1956.

It was not until 1961 that Simon had a full-length play of his own produced—Come Blow Your Horn, a semiautobiographical story of two adult brothers trying to escape the yoke of their overweening parents. While critical opinion of its dramatic substance varied, uproarious audience response to Simon's sharp one-liners and build-up of farcical tensions was already palpable. The same proved true with Barefoot in the Park (1963), featuring newcomers Robert Redford and Elizabeth Ashley as bickering young newlyweds. Buoyed by these early successes, Simon followed with an impressive succession of hit comedies well into the next decade: THE ODD COUPLE (1965), which won a first Tony award; The Last of the Red Hot Lovers (1969); The Prisoner of Second Avenue (1971); and The Sunshine Boys (1972). The humor in all these shows derived from Simon's highly obsessive, usually cantankerous, characters being thrown into extreme conflicts with each other amid the tumult of New York City life.

Meanwhile, a more serious side of his work was beginning to emerge, as well—first in the opening act of the mini-trilogy Plaza Suite (1968) and then in The Gingerbread Lady (1970), about an alcoholic celebrity. God's Favorite (1974), Chapter Two (1977), and I Ought to Be in Pictures (1980) featured somewhat autobiographical writer-protagonists suffering through romantic and family relationships. Although these plays were not devoid of wit, the laughs were now based more on character than on FARCE, and audiences generally supported Simon's transition to a more sober brand of comedy-drama. Some experiments—an adaptation of ANTON CHEKHOV stories, The Good Doctor (1973), and the Sholem Alechem-inspired tale Fools (1981)—were less popular. Critics increasingly berated Simon for abandoning his gift for light comedy in favor of misguided concepts and increasingly sentimental indulgences.

He rebounded, though, with his popular autobiographical trilogy—Brighton Beach Memoirs (1983), Biloxi Blues (1985), and Broadway Bound (1986)—which traced the lovably neurotic Eugene Morris Jerome and his family through the Depression, World War II, and after. These plays were hailed as Simon's most satisfying mix of comedy and sentiment. Similar praise soon followed (as did another Tony and a Pulitzer Prize) for the bittersweet period drama Lost in Yonkers (1991).

The 1990s confronted Simon with a changing theater landscape. The dark sex comedy Jake's Women, a fantasy play in which he stretched beyond REALISM for the first time, closed out of town—a first for a Simon play—before finally coming to Broadway in a heavily revised 1992 production. In 1995 London Suite became the first of his plays not to open on Broadway after its producers decided on a safer, less expensive OFF-BROADWAY run. Even on Broadway the middling reception for The Dinner Party (2000), 45 Seconds from Broadway (2001), and especially the nostalgic drama Proposals (1997) indicated Simon was still more appreciated for laughs than for meaning, and further, that even his sense of humor was no longer the box office gold it used to be.

Wavering critical reception notwithstanding, honors have certainly not eluded Simon, who has been awarded a total of four Tony Awards (including one for lifetime achievement), the Kennedy Center Honor in 1995, and even a Broadway theater named after him in 1983. As a LIBRETTIST he wrote the book for such Broadway musicals as Sweet Charity (1966), Promises, Promises (1969), and a 1993 adaptation of his 1977 film, The Goodbye Girl.

The sheer longevity of Simon's career is a testament to the underlying craft of his work and to his continued willingness to challenge himself in both form and content. Yet a new direction was signaled in Rose's Dilemma (2003), loosely based on the historical relationship between Dashiell Hammet and LILLIAN HELLMAN. A famously obsessive tinkerer and perfectionist whose first memoir was appropriately entitled Rewrites, Simon is a writer who has always taken comedy very seriously.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

PLAYS: Catch a Star! (co-writer, 1955); New Faces of 1956 (co-writer, 1956); Come Blow Your Horn (1961); Little Me (1962); Barefoot in the Park (1963); The Odd Couple (1965); Sweet Charity (1966); The Star-Spangled Girl (1966); Plaza Suite (1968); Promises, Promises (1968); The Last of the Red-Hot Lovers (1969); The Gingerbread Lady (1970); The Prisoner of Second Avenue (1971); The Sunshine Boys (1972); The Good Doctor (1973); God's Favorite (1974); California Suite (1976); Chapter Two (1977); They're Playing Our Song (1979); I Ought to Be in Pictures (1980); Fools (1981); Brighton Beach Memoirs (1983); Biloxi Blues (1985); The Odd Couple (female version, 1985); Broadway Bound (1986); Rumors (1988); Lost in Yonkers (1991); Jake's Women (1992); The Goodbye Girl

(1993); Laughter on the 23rd Floor (1993); London Suite (1995); Proposals (1997); Hotel Suite (2000); The Dinner Party (2000); 45 Seconds from Broadway (2001); Oscar and Felix (2002); Rose's Dilemma (2003)

FURTHER READING

- Bloom, Harold, ed. Neil Simon. Philadelphia: Chelsea House Publishers, 2002.
- Konas, Gary, ed. Neil Simon: A Casebook. New York: Garland Publishers, 1997.
- Koprince, Susan Fehrenbacher. Understanding Neil Simon. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 2002.
- Simon, Neil. The Play Goes On: A Memoir. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1999.
- . Rewrites: A Memoir. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1996.

Garrett Eisler

SINGAPORE

The small, densely populated island nation of Singapore, situated at the tip of the Malaysian peninsula, possesses a wide range of theater traditions that reflect its ethnic, cultural, and linguistic diversity. Colonized by the British until 1959, Singaporeans today use English as the language of business, government, and education. The country has a sizable ethnic Chinese majority (77.2 percent), followed by Malays (14.1 percent), Indians (7.4 percent), and Eurasians.

Before the post-independence government began encouraging the widespread use of English, Singaporeans typically supported theater in their respective mother tongues, which include English, Malay, the Indian languages of Tamil and Malayalam, and numerous Chinese dialects. Among Chinese Singaporeans the many forms of jingju (known as Chinese Opera in the West) in the dialects of Hokkien, Teochew, and Cantonese were heavily patronized, though their future today is less secure. Also popular was the street theater of amateur troupes performing on portable, raised stages, a tradition that today is largely limited to the eighth month of the Chinese lunar calendar.

Popular among ethnic Malays in the colonial era was the musical form of bangsawan, which featured stereotypical characters and elaborate sets and costumes. Indian Singaporeans supported a range of dance-drama traditions, and in the post-war era the South Indian form of bharata natyam has become increasingly popular.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s as Singapore's ruling People's Action Party (PAP) began to place the country on a firm capitalist footing, many in the Chinese-speaking community sought to use theater to question the country's rush toward modernization and urbanization. Playwright and practitioner KUO PAO KUN (1939–2002) was the most prominent artist to use theater in this fashion, resulting in his detention by the government from 1976 to 1980, effectively quashing the tradition of political protest theater. During the 1960s, English-language theater struggled to find an authentically Singaporean voice as the first post-independence generation of playwrights continued to rely on British models of dramatic construction and language use. A few early pioneers of English-language drama persisted, the most notable being Lim Chor Pee and Goh Poh Seng, both of whom penned relatively naturalistic plays set against the backdrop of contemporary Singapore. The 1980 production of Robert Yeo's political play One Year Back Home, though considerably less polemical than Kuo's Chinese-language work, marked a significant milestone in that it tackled contemporary political and social issues using an English that moved a step closer to the rhythms of Singaporean speech.

During the 1980s a number of new companies were created by young theater artists who were committed to using the medium to entertain, challenge, and provide a window into Singaporean life. Under the leadership of Artistic Director ONG KENG SEN, TheatreWorks (founded in 1985) expanded the audience for English-language theater by offering a number of popular Singapore-themed musicals by lyricist Michael Chiang and composer Dick Lee. The company provided a model for greater professionalism in theater and contributed to raising the overall standards of Singaporean theater. Director Alvin Tan and playwright Haresh Sharma used their company, The Necessary Stage, to create and stage plays dealing with concrete social concerns. The Practice Performing Arts School, which Kuo Pao Kun had established in 1965 with his wife, choreographer Goh Lay Kuan, formed its own company in 1986, and in 2001 created a three-year full-time professional training program for actors, the Theatre Training and Research Programme (TTRP). Other groups—such as Action Theatre, H! Theatre, Singapore Repertory Theatre (SRT), and the late William Teo's influential Asian-Theatre Research Centre—are just a few of the many that have made significant contributions to the field.

Malay-language theater companies include Teater Kami, Teater Ekamatra, and the Teater Artistik, as well as the group Sriwana, which presents traditional Malay performance forms. The Indian companies Agni Koothu, Kairalee Kala Nilayam, and the Ravindran Drama Group reflect the concerns of that community. A number of companies produce work in Mandarin, either occasionally or exclusively, including Page to Stage Studio under Artistic Director Lim Jen Erh, Goh Boon Teck's Toy Factory Ensemble, and Ang Gey Pin's Theatre OX.

From the mid-1980s to the mid-1990s, the number of plays that were able to find producing organizations, venues, and potential audiences greatly increased. Kuo Pao Kun's dramatic monologues THE COFFIN IS TOO BIG FOR THE HOLE (1984) and No Parking on Odd Days (1986) set a high standard for theatrical writing while reaching both English- and Mandarin-speaking audiences. The colorful character of Emily, the proud and iron-fisted matriarch in STELLA KON's monologue Emily of Emerald Hill (Singapore premiere, 1985), has become the country's best-known dramatic persona, and the play continues to be Singapore's most frequently produced work. Other noteworthy playwrights include Ovidia Yu, Tan Tarn How, Russell Heng Hiang-Kheng, Haresh Sharma, Eleanor Wong, and Malaysian LEOW PUAY TIN. Though Singaporean theater continues to be subject to censorship, the boundaries of expression have expanded considerably since the 1980s.

Increasingly Singaporean theater has toured overseas, primarily to international arts festivals. TheatreWorks' Artistic Director Ong Keng Sen has been a significant presence in the export of a performance practice that involves bringing together Asian artists from different cultures and traditions to create new work based loosely on a dramatic text or theme. Among the more significant touring works created in this manner are Lear (1997) and Desdemona (2000).

Partly as a consequence of this shift away from the text, opportunities for Singaporean playwrights to have their work professionally produced have declined. TheatreWorks' Singapore Writer's Lab, which nurtured playwrights in the early 1990s, has ceased functioning, and Stella Kon, as well as many of the promising younger playwrights in the generation that followed her, have stopped writing for the theater. Compounding the loss is the death in 2001 of Kuo Pao Kun, the country's most respected theater practitioner and playwright. The career of Singaporean-born Chay Yew, who has built a highly successful playwriting career largely in the UNITED STATES, reinforces the perception that Singapore is a difficult country in which to produce plays that deal with challenging themes. Two of his finest and most critically acclaimed works, Porcelain (1993) and A Language of Their Own (1995), deal unflinchingly with gay sexuality and have not been produced in Singapore.

FURTHER READING

- Jit, Krishen. "Modern Theatre in Singapore: A Preliminary Survey." Tenggara 23 (1989): 201–226.
- Krishnan, Sanjay, ed. 9 Lives: 10 Years of Singapore Theatre. Singapore: The Necessary Stage, 1997.
- Leverett, James. "Model City/Model Art." Yale Theater 32, no. 2 (Summer 2002): 70–75.
- Lim Chor Pee. "Is Drama Non-Existent in Singapore?" Temasek 1 (January 1964): 42–44.
- Oon, Clarissa. Theatre Life!: A History of English-Language Theatre in Singapore through the Straits Times (1958–2000). Singapore: Singapore Press Holdings, 2001.
- Peterson, William. Theatre and the Politics of Culture in Contemporary Singapore. Middletown, Conn.: Wesleyan Univ. Press, 2001.

William Peterson

SIRCAR, BADAL (1925–)

Badal Sircar (formal name, Sudhindra Sircar) was born in 1925 and was educated as an engineer, specializing in urban planning. But after working for a while as a town planner in ENGLAND and Nigeria, Sircar eventually found his true vocation in the theater as playwright and director, administrator, and performer.

And Indrojit (EBONG INDROJIT, 1962) was Sircar's first play, and it remains his most famous. While working in Nigeria, however, Sircar wrote a number of plays including Remaining History (Baki Itihas, 1965), Delirium (Pralap, 1966), Thirtieth Century (Tringsha Shatabdi, 1966), and Mad Horse (Pagla Ghora, 1967). His work focused on the pointlessness of human existence and the responsibility of the middle class in a world of increasing violence, inhumanity, and conformity.

In 1967 Sircar formed his own theater company, Shatabdi. During the first five years of its existence, Shatabdi produced a number of his plays, but then the group became inactive. This prompted Sircar to question the limitations of the proscenium stage: the way it creates a passive observer who can see from only one angle, the concomitant push toward REALISM, and the need for expensive sets, lights, costumes, and make-up. More importantly, however, Sircar began to question the social limitations of a theater that depended on ticket sales, and therefore on a middle-class audience. He began to develop anganmancha (literally, courtyard stage) or Third Theatre, in which he combined the thematic sophistication of socially committed urban theater with the direct communication of rural performance forms such as jatra. In 1969 Sircar reorganized Shatabdi, and they began performing in found spaces both indoors and outdoors, taking theater to the people.

He discovered that his Third Theatre required a different dramaturgical structure, a different approach to acting, and allowed for a different relationship between production and participant. Sircar himself describes his goals: "I have been trying to break through this system of 'story' and 'characters' and in my plays 'theme' and 'types' respectively began to replace them gradually. Working on the Third Theatre I began discovering new possibilities of using . . . words addressed directly to spectators more than 'dialogue' between stage characters, using physical 'acting' more than 'language.' . . . Third Theatre liberated from the bondages of stage, auditorium, lighting, sets, props, . . . is very much feasible. We found that theatrical experience rather than narration of a story is more relevant to the Third Theatre for it affords much more directness in communication than the conventional proscenium."

Shatabdi first made use of the arena stage with their productions of Sagina Mahato (based on the life of a Nepali trade union leader) and Spartacus (based on Howard Fast's play) in the early seventies. Since then, under the continuing leadership of Badal Sircar, Shatabdi has gone on to present some of the most important Bengali plays in the Third Theatre mode, including Michhil (The Procession, 1974) and Bhoma (1976), which was written and produced collectively with members of a village.

[See also India]

SELECT PLAYS: And Indrojit (Ebong Indrojit, 1962); The Other History (Baki Itihas, 1964); Remaining History (Baki Itihas, 1965); Delirium (Pralap, 1966); Thirtieth Century (Tringsha Shatabdi, 1966); Mad Horse (Pagla Ghora, 1967); Procession (Michhil, 1972)

FURTHER READING

- Bharucha, Rustom. Rehearsals of a Revolution: The Political Theater of Bengal. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1983.
- Crowe, Brian, and Chris Banfield. An Introduction to Post-Colonial Theatre. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1996.
- Pandey, Sudhakar, and Freya Barua, eds. New Directions in Indian Drama. Delhi: Prestige Books, 1994.
- Sircar, Badal. The Third Theatre. Calcutta: (self-published), 1978.
- . The Changing Language of Theatre. Delhi: Indian Council for Cultural Relations, ca. 1982.
- . Three Modern Indian Plays. Delhi: Oxford Univ. Press, 1989.
- . Voyages in the Theatre: Shri Ram Memorial Lectures, 1992. Calcutta: BIT Blits, 1992.
- . Ebong Indrajit, tr. by Girish Karnad. In Modern Indian Drama: An Anthology, ed. by G. P. Deshpande. Delhi: Sahitya Akademi, 2000.

Sudipto Chatterjee

SISTERS IN LAW

Sisters in Law (Les belles soeurs), written by MICHEL TREMBLAY in 1968, features a cast of fifteen women of all ages and personalities. The group of women includes sisters, sisters-in-law, friends, and neighbors from the Fabre neighborhood (Tremblay's own neighborhood) in Montréal, CANADA. The plot is more concerned with character development than action; however, the main action in the play revolves around the event of Germaine Lauzon's windfall of a million stamps that need to be glued into books so that she can trade the stamps for new household items featured in a catalog.

The stamps become the source of envy for some of the women, who are as underprivileged as Germaine but not so lucky. While the women stick the stamps into the stamp booklets, they discuss their lives, loves, relationships, hopes, children, money, jealousies, church, pregnancy, family, and bingo. Germaine does not realize that her stamps are being pocketed by the women until near the end of the play. Her discovery of this thievery and betrayal initiates a brawl, and the stamps are scattered over the stage. This play offers little in the way of redemption, but instead a glimpse of the toughness and roughness, alienation and isolation of working-class people at the time.

When Sisters in Law premiered in 1968, the play stirred controversy and discussion on a grand scale. Hailed as the first true Québécois play, Sisters in Law drew attention to working-class women in a working-class neighborhood in Montréal. They speak in a working-class idiom of French, called joual, liberally dotted with scatological and liturgical curse words. The play's language inspired some critics to hotly condemn the play, and others to praise the arrival of a true theater of Québec that did not apologize for its characters' identity, nor try to imitate continental French. While joual is technically a dialect of standard French, in the theater it is not simply a dialect; the use of joual is a savvy political move on Tremblay's part and reveals the playwright's own desire to see Québec dramas portray the real Québec, not the fictionalized, folkloric, authorized identity frequently imitated and imposed upon it by colonial ideals. Indeed, Tremblay even refused translation rights of the play until after the Separatists' Parti Québécois took power in the province in 1976, fearing that until then, the threat to Québécois culture was too real to allow other languages to appropriate the plays.

In addition to the language controversy, the characters themselves drew attention because they speak about working-class interests, which drew criticism that the play celebrated vulgarity, profanity, mediocrity, and a cultural decline (joual also features many Anglicisms); alternatively, detractors of the play saw the entry of joual upon the stage as a sign of defeat and alienation. Yet, others saw the play as a victory and as a revolutionary voice that celebrates the real Québec and displays an identity finally freed from colonial influence.

Even if the play's language suggests an assertion of cultural identity, the play itself enacts fatigue and alienation. The phrase maudite vie plate (damn senseless life) is the dominant theme of the play, revealing the emotional and spiritual starvation of the working-class women in this neighborhood, as does their lack of solidarity as a community.

FURTHER READING

- Moss, Jane. "Québécois Theatre: Michel Tremblay and Marie Laberge." Theatre Research International 21, no. 3 (1996): 196–207.
- Oddipov, Helene. "French Variation and the Teaching of Québec Literature: A Linguistic Guide to a literature *joual*isante." The French Review 67, no. 6 (1994): 944–953.
- Usmiani, Renate. Michel Tremblay. Vancouver: Douglas and McIntyre, 1982.

Jolene Armstrong

SISTER XIANGLIN

The Yue opera (Yueju) play Sister Xianglin (also translated as Xianglin's Wife) (Xianglin sao), an adaptation of the great left-wing writer Lu Xun's short story "The New Year's Sacrifice" ("Zhufu," 1924), premiered in May 1946 in the Mingxing Theater in Shanghai. The play was scripted and directed by Nan Wei (1921–1989), and noted actress Yuan Xuefen (1922–) played the title role.

The play tells a tragic story of an unfortunate peasant woman who has married twice and been widowed twice. Both of her husbands died in sickness and poverty, and wolves consumed her only son. Local superstitions have convinced her that she is to be blamed for her loved ones' misfortunes, owing to her bad karma from previous lives. A fellow servant at the household of Master Lu, where she works as a domestic helper, tells her that, after she dies, the King of the Underworld will cut her into two halves so that she may serve her two husbands in the other world. Villagers scorn her as bringing bad luck to whatever she might touch. For the same reason, Master Lu eventually fires her. Wandering in the streets with a beggar's stick in her hand, she asks people passing by, "Tell me, does the soul exist after a person dies?" No one seems able to answer her question, and people try to avoid her. Cold and hungry, she perishes in the streets one New Year's eve.

Lu Xun's work had rarely been adapted for stage, owing both to its political sensitivity and to the difficulties of translating Lu Xun's artistry, its nuance and rich meaning, into stage performance. This was the first time since the mid-1930s that a story by Lu Xun was put on stage, at a time when Lu Xun's work had become even more politically sensitive than ever on the eve of an all-out civil war between the Nationalist Party and the Communist Party. Because of this, a lowbrow theater as Yue opera for the first time in its history attracted attention from the leftist cultural elite. Under the invitation of Lu Xun's widow Xu Guangping, and out of their respect for the master Lu Xun, a group of left-wing intellectuals including TIAN HAN, HONG SHEN, Huang Zuolin, Shi Dongshan, Fei Mu, Zhang Junxiang, LI JIANWU, Ding Cong, and Hu Feng attended the show. Hardly expecting that a "vulgar" local opera was able to do justice to Lu Xun's work, they were nonetheless impressed by the performance. Tian Han, for example, profusely praised the performance: "This is from real life, humanistic, accurate, and convincing" (Xuesheng juwu bu, 1946: p. 186).

The play also caught the attention of the Nationalist Government and eventually made Yue opera a site of political contention between the two political rivals during the ensuing Civil War (1946–1949). From the conflict emerged an alliance between the Yue opera actresses and left-wing intellectuals: These intellectuals helped make the actresses media icons, while Yue opera in turn provided these men access to the realm of popular entertainment and thereby to a large population characterized by relatively low literacy, political apathy, and indifference to intellectual discourse.

Yuan Xuefen and her colleagues at the Shanghai Yue Opera House reworked and restaged the play in 1962 and again in 1977, making it a classic in the Yue opera repertoire. In 1978, the play was filmed in a joint project by the Shanghai Film Studio and the Hong Kong Phoenix Studio.

[See also China]

FURTHER READING

Jiang, Jin. "Women and Public Culture: Poetics and Politics of Women's Yue Opera in Republican Shanghai, 1930s–1940s." Ph.D. diss. Stanford Univ., 1998.

Shanghai Yueju Yuan, comp. Shuoxi lunyi: Shanghai Yueju Yuan jianyuan sanshi zhounian wutai yishu wenxuan [Discussing the arts of the theater: Selected essays on the art of the stage on the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of Shanghai Yue Opera Institute]. Shanghai: Shanghai Yueju Yuan, 1985.

Xuesheng juwu bu, comp. Xuesheng jinian kan [Memorial issue of Xuesheng Company]. Shanghai: Xuesheng juwu bu, 1946.

Yuan Xuefen. "Chong yan Xianglin sao" [Restaging Sister Xianglin]. In Xianglin Sao [Sister Xianglin]. [1960 version] Yueju [Yue opera script]. Original story by Lu Xun. Adapted by Wu Sheng, Zhuang Zhi, Yuan Xuefen, and Zhang Guifeng. Shanghai: Shanghai wenyi chubanshe, 1978.

Zhang Lihui and Gao Yilong. Yuan Xuefen de yishu daolu [The artistic path of Yuan Xuefen]. Shanghai: Shanghai wenyi chubanshe, 1984.

Jin Jiang

SITI COMPANY

ANNE BOGART and SUZUKI TADASHI founded the Saratoga International Theatre Institute (now simply known as SITI) in 1992 to explore international collaboration in contemporary theater in the United States. Originally envisioned as a summer institute, SITI has grown into a year-round program based in New York City with a summer season in Sarasota Springs, New York. The company is a collaborative, ensemble-based company whose three ongoing investigations include the creation of new work, the training of young theater artists, and international collaboration. Of more than twenty company productions, some of their most noted include Small Lives/Big Dreams (1994), Culture of Desire (1997), Cabin Pressure (1999), and the trilogy on American artists Bob (1998), Room (2000), and Score (2002).

As a collaborative company, SITI creates new works, usually conceived and directed by Bogart, the artistic director, and performed by the SITI Company. For the creation of the trilogy Bob, Room, and Score, based on the lives of ROBERT WILSON, Virginia Woolf, and Leonard Bernstein, respectively, the company looked to these artists' original words. Bogart pulled together text from interviews, letters, recorded interviews, and so forth. The raw text, after being explored in workshops by the actors, was crafted into a script by Irish writer Jocelyn Clarke. During rehearsal, all members of the company including actors and designers contribute to the creation of the performance, producing a truly company-created show.

Noted for their strong physical style, the SITI Company utilizes two unique training systems—Viewpoints and the Suzuki Method. Founded by choreographer Mary Overlie, Six Viewpoints is a system for exploring time and space in postmodern dance. Bogart adapted Overlie's work for actors. Viewpoints enhances an ensemble's ability to work together spontaneously and intuitively. As a communication and improvisational tool, Viewpoints allows the SITI Company to create bold, highly theatrical work in a short period of time. The Suzuki Method comes from the company's cofounder, internationally acclaimed director Suzuki Tadashi, and his work with the Suzuki Company of Toga (SCOT). The Suzuki Method emphasizes strength and seeks to enhance the actor's ability to be fully present emotionally and physically in each moment of a performance. The combination of these two training systems makes the SITI Company unique in their approach to actor training and to the creation of new work, where the physicality of the production assumes as important a role as the text.

Fully committed to training young theater artists, members of the SITI Company are faculty members at The Julliard School and Columbia University in New York City, where they teach sessions in the fall and spring. They also offer an intensive summer workshop and teach master classes at universities around the country.

SITI has performed and taught around the country and world at places such as The Wexner Center for the Arts (Columbus, Ohio); The Walker Arts Center (Minneapolis, Minnesota); The Miami Light Project (Florida); UCLA Performing Arts Center; Portland Institute of Contemporary Art (Oregon); The Hebbel Theater (Berlin); Theater Archa (Prague); The Beckett Theater (Ireland); and international theater festivals in Paris, Holland, Poland, and Edinburgh.

[See also United States, 1960–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Bogart, Anne. A Director Prepares: Seven Essays on Art and Theatre. London: Routledge, 2001.
- Dixon, Michael Bigelow, and Joel A. Smith, eds. Anne Bogart: Viewpoints. Lyme, N.H.: Smith and Kraus, 1995.
- Suzuki Tadashi. The Way of Acting: The Theatre Writings of Tadashi Suzuki. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1986.

J. Briggs Cormier

SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR

Six Characters in Search of an Author (Sei personaggi in cerca d'autore) by LUIGI PIRANDELLO premiered in Rome, ITALY, on May 9, 1921, in the Theater Valle with Vera Vergani and Luigi Almirante. The performance was a fiasco, with the audience sharply divided between heated supporters and detractors. It opened in Milan on September 27 in the Theater Manzoni with astounding success. From that moment Pirandello's name was linked to this play, making a nationally acclaimed playwright into the international figure who changed theater and theatergoers' expectations forever.

During the rehearsal of a play by Pirandello, six unnamed characters—Father, Mother, Son, Step-daughter, Boy, and Little Girl—enter the theater and approach the Manager, claiming that their author had created but subsequently abandoned them. Forever trapped in the form of defined characters, they are looking for an author to allow them to enact their drama. Hoping to convince the director to stage their story, the Father, Step-daughter, and Mother tell their vicissitudes. Despite contradictory statements, their story unfolds as follows: After the birth of her Son, the humble Mother falls in love with her husband's secretary. Realizing their affinity, the Father lets her go. The new couple has three children: the Step-daughter, Boy, and Little Girl. Unbeknown to the Father, however, the secretary's death has plunged the family into dire economic straights. They return to the city, where the Mother becomes a tailor employed by Madame Peace (Madame Pace) in a shop that is also a brothel. The Step-daughter also works in the brothel until she and the Father, without recognizing each other, prepare to embrace. The Mother, seeing them together, stops their encounter.

The horrified Father decides to house the Mother and her three children. The Son, however, who had stayed with his Father, does not accept this arrangement. While the mother wants to beg her Son to forgive her desertion, tragedy befalls: the Little Girl drowns in a small pool and the boy shoots himself. Amid confusion between questions of reality or fiction, the Manager puts an end to the unresolved story. Cloaked in darkness, the Step-daughter runs toward the exit.

Written between October 1920 and January 1921, the idea for this play stayed with Pirandello for many years. He had written two short prose-pieces—in 1911 “The Tragedy of a Character,” and in 1915 “Conversations with Characters”—that suggest the idea Pirandello was grappling with for a novel. In Six Characters Pirandello pulls together themes from his past and ideas that will develop in the immediate future. RIGHT YOU ARE is the older play that posits the first elements to be developed in Six Characters, Each in His Own Way, and TONIGHT WE IMPROVISE: the trilogy, as he defined it, of the “theater in the theater,” a metatheatrical reflection on the factors that make theatrical representation possible. Six Characters ushered in modern theatrical themes and practices, which were shocking at the time: audiences entered the theater to find the curtain up, the stage still under construction, activity and dialogue on the stage and in the auditorium, dissecting the relationship between art and life, between form and life. Thus Pirandello expresses his discomfort with the author's creative process, cautioning about the difficult transition from life experience to the actor's rendition of art. He criticizes the Manager and his actors for their attention to technical details and their lack of insight into the author's process of creation. As Pirandello states in his Preface to the 1924 edition, we will always face the “inherent tragic conflict between life (which is always moving and changing) and form (which fixes it, immutable).” Even theater cannot guarantee the fulfillment of characters' desires: the Son denies the drama that makes him a character, the Mother wants to enact the scene with her Son that never happened, but both fail. The COMEDY illustrates the vain attempt to stage the characters' drama, while the incomprehension that surrounds them is fully exposed.

The first English version was staged in London on February 27, 1922. The play opened in New York on October 30, 1922, at the Princess Theater with Moffatt Johnston, Margaret Wycherly, Florence Eldridge, and Ernest Cossart, and it was followed by innumerable representations in the United States and worldwide. Memorable is the the April 10, 1923, production in Paris by Georges Pitoëff with the Comédie des Champs-Élysées.

FURTHER READING

Bentley, Eric. "A Translator's Introduction." Six Characters in Search of an Author, English Version and Introduction by Eric Bentley. New York: Signet Classic, 1998. vii–xvii.

Lorch, Jennifer. Pirandello. Six Characters in Search of an Author. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2005.

Pirandello, Luigi. "Pirandello Confesses: Why and How He Wrote 'Six Characters in Search of an Author.'" Virginia Quarterly Review 1 (April 1925): 36–52. Reprinted as "Author's Preface." In Naked Masks: Five Plays by Luigi Pirandello, ed. by Eric Bentley. New York: E.P. Dutton and Co., 1952.

Stefano Giannini

SIZWE BANSI IS DEAD

Sizwe Bansi Is Dead by ATHOL FUGARD opens with Styles, a photographer, in a sparse studio reading a newspaper. He critiques some news articles and extrapolates on others, such as the visit of American directors to Ford Motor Factory. During the monologue, Styles not only reveals how he became an independent entrepreneur and photographer, but also the kind of social setting that made photography and representation crucial to daily living in apartheid SOUTH AFRICA. For him, a photograph is both a witness to despair and a dream of transcending alienation.

Styles's long monologue is interrupted by a knock from a rather over-dressed man who introduces himself as Robert Zwelinzima, who desires a photograph for his wife in the homelands. The scene changes through an epistolary device in which Robert dictates a letter to his wife to accompany his photograph. In the flashback Robert becomes Sizwe and Styles his friend Buntu whom he is visiting to help with acquiring a passbook. Both men go out to a shebeen for a drink and afterward discover a body in a dump. On searching the body they find the dead man had a valid passbook with the name Robert Zwelinzima. The rest of the play is Buntu's attempt to persuade Sizwe to take over the identity of the dead man. It is not an easy task for Sizwe to change his name; the play becomes another ludic frame within which Fugard and his collaborators, John Kani and Winston Ntshona, beg the question about what a name means in a subject-less world. The play switches back to Styles's studio, where Sizwe, now Robert, poses for his photograph—suit, tie, hat, pipe in one hand and cigarette in the other.

Sizwe's dilemma once again illustrates the existential themes in Fugard's plays. As Sizwe, Robert—or indeed any black man in apartheid South Africa—is by law simply an object of labor and oppression. Styles does not spare him any limits of black subjectivity. It is, however, not a fatalistic play. Rather in documenting the despair, the play underscores the latent and possible overthrow of the present by a more egalitarian future that guarantees subjectivity and effective citizenship for the black population.

Being part of Fugard's collaborative work with the Serpent Players, this play, like The Island, draws attention to the "challenge and response" model he used in writing some of his plays. Fugard and his collaborator-actors use their personal experiences to produce metaphors of being, belonging, and becoming. With John Kani and Winston Ntshona as the most consistent members of the group, Fugard developed stories through improvisations in which the actors brought their realities to explore human determination in the face of social marginalization.

Athol Fugard is no doubt one of AFRICA's most versatile and productive playwrights whose works, particularly during apartheid, exposed the atrocities of South Africa's political realities to the world. Against the backdrop of his past works that form an archive of cultural engagements with an alienating political and cultural context, it will be interesting to see how Athol Fugard responds to the new existential issues emerging in post-apartheid South Africa.

FURTHER READING

Orkin, M. Drama and the South African State. Manchester: Manchester Univ. Press, 1991.

Vandenbroucke, R. Truths the Hand Can Touch. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1985.

Walder, D. Athol Fugard. London: Macmillan, 1984.

Awam Amkpa

THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH

When you're at war you think about a better life: when you're at peace you think about a more comfortable one.

—Mr. Antrobus, Act 3

THORNTON WILDER's The Skin of Our Teeth (1942) was first performed at Plymouth Theatre in New York on November 18, 1942, and won the Pulitzer Prize the following year. This play reinforces the idea that people are who they are because of the trials and tribulations wrought by generation after generation. Great minds from our past shaped history, philosophy, and all of humanity. In the The Skin of Our Teeth, all of human history is reduced to the experiences of a New Jersey family named Antrobus—derived from the Greek word for man, anthropos. Their ordinary lives are altered by the extreme and arbitrary conditions of nature, as well as by free will. The action covers three periods: the Ice Age, the Great Flood, and a Catastrophic War. In each environmental and/or historical disaster, fragile humans manage to survive by the skin of their teeth.

The American audiences of World War II had very few, if any, theatrical experiences that employed such an absurd plot and bizarre settings to convey serious content. This fantastic parable deals with humankind's age-long struggle to achieve civilization and save the human race from extinction. The human race, despite the destructive powers of natural disasters or the brutalities of fascism, communism, and Nazism, somehow manages to survive. World wars can destroy; people can be forced to live underground, but peace will come again. Man's destiny is his own to forge.

The two main struggles are those caused by nature and those caused by people themselves. People cannot avoid natural catastrophes, but they do have the free will to choose good or evil. Mr. and Mrs. Antrobus represent reason, whereas the vain Sabina epitomizes passion, especially lust for erotic pleasure or political power. Henry (Cain), through his murderous nature, represents pure evil and wicked passion. No single character represents love, yet the Antrobus family unit does perform some loving deeds such as sharing their hearth with refugees and refusing to enter the ark without Henry. Through clever staging and characters, especially Sabina, Wilder includes the audience as part of the Antrobus (human) family. Finally, there is one experience and one memory. The present is then both real and imaginary, past and future.

In its first productions in 1942, Americans found The Skin of Our Teeth highly entertaining and rather zany, if not downright crazy. The play is, however, basically a parody of vaudeville and stock company productions. On that superficial level the play is both hilarious and effective. However, if the audience simply views The Skin of Our Teeth superficially, the theatergoer misses Wilder's deeper messages. As Wilder (1957) himself stated, the play "mostly comes alive under conditions of crisis." Wilder wrote this play for Americans and bomb-scarred European audiences. Over sixty years later, it has been performed on every continent in the world. Since economic crisis, despair, natural disaster, terrorism, and war have hardly disappeared from our global society, The Skin of Our Teeth promises to remain a vital part of the world's theater experience.

[See also United States, 1920–1940]

FURTHER READING

Goldstein, Malcolm. The Art of Thornton Wilder. Lincoln: Univ. of Nebraska Press, 1965.

Haberman, Donald. The Plays of Thornton Wilder: A Critical Study. Middletown, Conn.: Wesleyan Univ. Press, 1967.

Kuner, M. C. Thornton Wilder: The Bright and the Dark. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1972.

Wilder, Thornton. Three Plays: Our Town, The Skin of Our Teeth and The Matchmaker. New York: Harper, 1957.

Meg Walters

THE SKRIKER

If she can't guessing game and safety match my name then I'll take her no mistake no mister no missed her no mist no miss no me no.

—The Skriker

CARYL CHURCHILL's The Skriker, a one-act play which premiered at the Royal National Theatre in London in 1994, is an audacious reimagining of the traditional superstitions, folk tales, and fairy tales of the British Isles into a modern urban setting. Figures such as the Kelpie (part-man, part-horse, a shapeshifter who seduces young women while in human form and lures them to their deaths), Jenny Greenteeth (a fairy who lurks beneath green scum at the edges of deep water to drown children), the Brownie (a helpful if unpredictable household spirit), and Rawhead-and-Bloody-Bones (a nursery goblin who waits in dark cupboards) constantly swirl about, overlapping and underlying the story proper: the tale of two girls who run away into the deep dark city, without so much as sprinkling breadcrumbs behind them, but with something sinister in pursuit. Neither Lily nor Josie—the former sweet but ineffectual, and very pregnant; the latter more streetwise but unstable, and responsible for the death of her own baby before the play begins—have the resources to protect themselves from a menacing environment or from the very needy spirit who attaches itself to their lives.

In folklore, the Skriker is "a shapeshifter and death portent," a creature that wanders the woods at night emitting piercing shrieks. In Churchill's play it hounds Josie and Lily through a series of shifting identities; it speaks in a charged and dizzying language that is also in continual metamorphosis, from catchphrase to catchphrase and from cliché into old tale into obscenity, most dazzlingly in the five-page monologue that starts the play: "Don't put your hand in the fountain pen and ink blot your copy catching fishes eyes and gluesniffer. So he puts his hand in and wail whale moby dictated the outcome into the garden maudlin. . . . I'll give you three wishy washy. An open grave must be fed up you go like dust in the sunlight of heart. . . . Ready or not here we come quick or dead of night night sleep tightarse."

The Skriker feeds off its young hosts—"now I've some blood in my all in veins"—but it is far from all-powerful: the Skriker is "ancient," but it is also "damaged" and must operate in a world it no longer understands and that no longer recognizes its kind. There are humorous scenes in which the Skriker tries to figure out things like television and sleep. Traditionally, fairies and humans have never really gotten along, yet they can't quite leave each other alone. It is a compulsive relationship: "When you've lost her," Josie says of her addictive acquaintance, "you want her back."

The Skriker is a cautionary tale about urban survival and about humanity set on self-destruction. Linguistically it resembles the powerfully fractured verbal experimentation of Blue Kettle (1997), and thematically it anticipates the all-inclusive world war of people, animals, and seemingly inanimate objects in FAR AWAY (2000). The Skriker is a play where language and folk tales break free from any comfortable associations, and where young and vulnerable things go missing, or become very, very lost in the dark.

[See also England, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Bradley, Ben. "A Land of Fairy Tales Creepily Come True." New York Times (May 16, 1996): C15. [Review of New York production.]
- Rabillard, Sheila, ed. Essays on Caryl Churchill: Contemporary Representations. Winnipeg: Blizzard Publishing, 1998.
- Remshardt, Ralf Eric. "The Skriker." Theatre Journal 47, no. 1 (March 1995): 121. [Review of London production.]

Kevin Ewert

SLOVAKIA

Modern Slovak drama started to develop under adverse circumstances as part of the Austro-Hungarian empire at the beginning of the 20th century. Its founder Jozef Gregor Tajovský (1874–1940) successfully combined principles of traditional realistic drama with deep insight into the inner world of his characters, both in his one-acts, Sin (Hriech, 1911) and In Service (V službe, 1911), and in his full-length plays, New Life (Nový život, 1901) and Estates-Mistakes (Statky-zmätky, 1909).

In his traditional COMEDIES and satires, Ivan Stodola (1888–1977) criticizes opportunism, snobbery, and the reactionary views of the middle-class bourgeoisie in contrast to the bravery of the simple man in Jožko Púfik and His Career (Jožko Púfik a jeho kariéra, 1931) and Ants and Crickets (Mravci a svrčkovia, 1943).

Modernists Vladimír Hurban Vladimírov, known as VHV (1884–1950), and Július Barč-Ivan (1909–1953) represented a trend more connected with artistic movements of the period, especially SYMBOLISM and EXPRESSIONISM. In Záveje (Snowdrifts, 1913) and Milica Nikoličová (1922), VHV depicts the tragic situation of his heroines in harsh times and circumstances. The visionary Matka (Mother, 1943) by Barč-Ivan, author of philosophical dramas, is unique in its combination of realism and mysticism; in Dvaja (A Couple, 1945) the fog of the dusky mountains symbolizes the impossibility of escaping one's own conscience.

Tanec nad plačom (Dance at Cry, 1943), an anti-illusionist allegory in verse by Peter Zvon, pseudonym of Vladimír Sýkora (1913–1942), aims verbal and situational comedy, parody, and black humor at the totalitarian regime. Jánošík (1941) by Mária Rázusová-Martáková (1905–1964), another major play in verse, uses national mythology dealing with robbery to comment on the situation in the Slovak state from 1939 to 1945.

The next generation of dramatists made their debuts during the war, before the communist take-over in 1948. Marked by the war and inspired by EXISTENTIALISM, they wrote model dramas of ethical conflicts. These include the formally innovative plays of Štefan Králik (1919–1983): The Last Obstacle (Posledná prekážka, 1946) and A Play without Love (Hra bez lásky, 1946); the dramas with expressive contradictory characters of Leopold Lahola, the pseudonym of Arje Friedmann (1918–1968): Four Sides of the World (Štyri strany sveta, 1948) and Assassination (Atentát, 1949); and the plays of PETER KARVAŠ (1920–1999): Meteor (1945) and Return to Life (Návrat do života, 1946).

This promising development was cut short by the dogmas of SOCIALIST REALISM. Slovak drama freed itself from such schematism only at the end of 1950s and into the 1960s when Karvaš wrote his best plays. Ivan Bukovčan (1921–1975) returned to the model of the situation drama containing strong social criticism in his plays An Ostrich Party (Pštroší večerok, 1967) and Before the Cock Crows (Kým kohút nezaspieva, 1969). Leopold Lahola's Inferno (1960) belongs to the same current, whereas his Spots on the Sun (Škvryny na slnku, 1955) shows a certain affinity with absurdist drama.

In the 1960s a new group of dramatists, who would dominate the coming decades, emerged as a result of the political liberalization creating an opening for influences from abroad, especially the AVANT-GARDE and theater of the absurd. The structure of drama was further loosened, and alternative theater developed. Dramatists pictured the everyday problems of modern man and woman in socialist society, thereby documenting its gradual decline. Sawdust (Pílina, 1965) by Rudolf Skukálek (1931), the groundbreaking Slovak absurdist play, is a devastating critique of the totalitarian regime. Playful, absurd, intellectual humor that remains accessible characterizes the productions of the legendary comedians Milan Lasica (1940–) and Július Satinský (1941–2002) in Not Waiting for Godot (Nečakanie na Godota, 1967), Soirée (1968), and A Day of Joy (Deň radosti, 1986). Igor Rusnák (1936–) gained attention with Good Night, Foxes (Líšky, dobrú noc, 1964), depicting the conflict of generations and values.

In the sixties Stanislav Štepka (1944–), a folk humorist, started to write for his famous Radošinské naivné divadlo (Radošina Naive Theater). Ľubomír Feldek (1936–) wrote untraditional plays for puppet theater and poetic plays that contain growing social criticism: A Metaphor (Metafora, 1977), Jánošík according to Vivaldi (Jánošík podľa Vivaldiho, 1979), and A Rehearsal (Skúška, 1989). Karol Horák (1943–), who came from the experimental theater of poetry, succeeded in the repertory theaters with his plays A Man between Wars (Medzivojnový muž, 1984), Apocalypse according to Janko (Kráľ) (Apokalypsa podľa Janka [Kráľa], 1994), and The Music (La musica 2000). Rudolf Sloboda (1938–1995) proved his dramatic talent with Armagedon on the Grb Hill (Armagedon na Grbe, 1993) and A Stepmother (Macocho, 1995), which are brilliant examples of playful magical REALISM. Poetic symbolism and existentialism color the plays of Božena Čahojová (1949–), including Studňa (A Well, 1989) and Cesta pre bosých (A Road for the Barefooted Ones, 1993).

The realistic counterpoint of this generation is represented by Peter Kováčik (1936–) in A Pub under the Green Tree (Krčma pod zeleným stromom, 1976), Osvald Zahradník (1932–) in A Solo for Striking Clock (Sólo pre bicie [hodiny], 1972), and Ján Solovič (1934–) in Meridián (1974).

At the end of the 1980s, a new postmodern generation began to shape the development of Slovak drama. It is still a text-based playwright's theater, but one of many voices and styles, informed by existentialism, post-absurd drama, and HAPPENINGS. The dramatic works are more fragmented than ever before, the scenes loosely connected by association, and the language highly subjective, using puns, neologisms, and slang. At the Stoka Theatre, productions are created collectively under the direction of Blaho Uhlár (1951–). The playful and often absurd dramatic texts, such as Eo ipso (1994), Monodramas (Monodrámy, 1997), and Let's Get out of Here (Hetstato, 2000), are homogeneous in style. The Stoka has given rise to the bizarre surreal humor of Laco Kerata (1961–) in Woolfishness (Zvlčenie, 1994) and Dinner Above Town (Večera nad mestom, 1995).

GUnaGU is a popular text-based theater that is home to Viliam Klimáček (1958–), who uses poetic language and images in his multilayers dramas Mária Sabína (1995) and The Gothic (Gotika, 1996). Some plays at GUnaGU have been created collectively, such as the mafia comedy English Is Easy, Csaba Is Dead (2001). Other successful postmodernists include well-known theater directors like Martin Čičvák (1975–), with Frankie Is O.K., Peggy Is Fine and the House Is Cool (Dom, kde sa to robí dobre, 1995), Jozef Gombár (1973–) with Hugo Carp (Hugo Karas, 1999), and Silvester Lavrík (1964–) with Katarína (1996). Roman Olekšák (1978–), with his “cool” play Negativists (Negativisti, 2001), is an adherent of the poetics of the new drama.

Although there are many notable new Slovak plays, they are less likely to be staged in the established repertory companies than in the past. Because of the changed social status of theater in the postcommunist era, the major companies are afraid to run risks. Opportunities for new drama are greater in the fringe theaters.

FURTHER READING

- Karvaš, Peter. Zamyšlení nad dramatem [Thinking about Drama]. Praha: Československý spisovatel, 1964.
- . Zamyšlení nad dramaturgií [Thinking about Dramaturgy]. Praha: Československý spisovatel, 1969.
- Pašteka, Július. Pohľady na slovenskú dramatikú, divadlo a kritiku I. [Views on Slovak Drama, Theatre and Criticism], Vol. I. Bratislava: Národné divadelné centrum, 1998.
- Slovník slovenských spisovateľov [Slovak Writers Dictionary]. Praha: Libri, 1999.
- Vrbka, Stanislav. Cestami slovenskej drámy. [Byways of Slovak Drama]. Bratislava: Divadelný ústav, 1969.

Juraj Sebesta

SMITH, ANNA DEAVERE (1950–)

I take the words I can get and try to occupy them. Using the idea that my grandfather gave me—"If you say a word often enough it becomes you"—I borrow people for a moment, by borrowing their words.

—Anna Deavere Smith, 2000

Anna Deavere Smith is an acclaimed monologist and a leading performance artist in the United States. An African American playwright and performer, she has developed a form of docu-MENTARY theater that combines journalism and social commentary to investigate cultural conflict. With tape recorder in hand, Smith gathers dramatic material by conducting numerous interviews compiled from men and women across a range of age, racial, and economic differences. Verbatim excerpts are then memorized and used as texts for one-woman shows.

Fires in the Mirror: Crown Heights, Brooklyn and Other Identities (1992) addressing the problem of racial healing in contemporary America, was her first solo performance to receive wide recognition. This one-woman docudrama had its premiere at the New York Shakespeare Festival, won an Obie Award, and was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize the same year. The violent circumstances that inspired the play occurred in August 1991 when the Grand Rebbe of the Lubavitcher sect of Hasidic Jews was returning to Crown Heights, Brooklyn. A car from his motorcade jumped the curb and killed an African American child, Galvin Cato. In retaliation for what some African Americans perceived as the murder of a helpless child by the Hasidim, a nearby group of black youths surrounded a Hebrew scholar, Yankel Rosenbaum, and stabbed him to death. These events sparked three days of widespread arson and rioting in which citizens, police, and journalists were beaten.

Performing at the Public Theatre a year later, Smith recreated the events of Crown Heights based on taped interviews taken from the residents of the neighborhood, street people, journalists, academics, and artists. She then edited the interviews, reconstructing the crisis based on these subjective accounts. Mimicking the vocal and physical patterns of her informants, the artist refracted the events through a series of personal monologues that made evident the group's racial, sexual, and generational tensions. Through categories like “Hair,” “Wigs,” “Ovens,” “Race,” “Rage,” and “Rhythm,” the tragedy was retold through the experience of blacks, Caribbeans, Jews, Gentiles, men, and women. What emerged from the performance was a multiplicity of perspectives rarely expressed within black-Jewish dialogue.

Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992 (1993) is a similar form of theater forged in the aftermath of the race riots in Los Angeles following the initial verdict in the Rodney King case. The civil disturbance occurred when four white police officers who had been accused of severely beating a black man, Rodney King, were legally acquitted of any wrong-doing. Smith created a performance from the interviews of nearly two hundred people, including relatives of King, an ex-gang member, jury members, an uncalled witness to the beating, and Los Angeles Police Department personnel including former chief Daryl F. Gates. The performance received an Obie Award and was nominated for a Tony Award.

Both Fires in the Mirror and Twilight: Los Angeles are part of a series of performances begun in the early 1980s called On the Road: A Search for American Character in which the performer interviews people and later performs using their words. The project's main objective was to find the character of America in the way people speak. These are plays about the relationship between language and IDENTITY. Smith was specifically interested in how the language of an individual reflects the character of a group.

House Arrest (1998) chronicles her observations of political life in Washington, D.C., based on historical texts as well as interviews with politicians, historians, and journalists during the 1996 presidential campaign. This play examines the relationship between the American presidency, the press, and national identity. Unlike her previous one-woman performances, this play was performed by a multiracial group cast. Her latest work, Piano (2000), is about race, class, and exploitation in an affluent Cuban family on the eve of the Spanish-American War.

Smith's provocative plays enable communication across trenchant racial divides when media coverage of events frequently exacerbates communal tensions. Rather than dramatizing a singular and objective viewpoint, Smith looks at contentious events from multiple perspectives. Her performances are fragmented and often end abruptly, allowing the audience to create their own interpretation. Her lauded series of one-woman plays is a unique genre of documentary theater, one that explores race, community, and character based on interviews with diverse people from communities in crisis.

[See also Performance Art; United States, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: On the Road: A Search for American Character (1982); Aunt Julia's Shoes (1983); Aye, Aye, Aye, I'm Integrated (1984); Charlayne Hunter Gault (1984); Building Bridges Not Walls (1985); Chlorophyll (1985); Post-Modernism and the Mother Goddess: A Convers/Ation (1988); Voices of Bay Area Women (1988); Gender Bending: On the Road, Princeton University (1989); From the Outside Looking In (1990); Gender Bending: On the Road, University of Pennsylvania (1990); On Black Identity and Black Theatre (1990); Fragments (1991); Identities Mirrors and Distortions (1991); Fires in the Mirror: Crown Heights, Brooklyn and Other Identities (1992); Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992 (1993); House Arrest (1997); Piano (2000)

FURTHER READING

- Fitzgerald, Sharon. "Anna of a Thousand Faces." American Visions. (October–November 1994): 14–15.
- Martin, Carol. "Anna Deavere Smith: The Word Becomes You: An Interview." In A Sourcebook of Feminist Theatre and Performance, ed. by Carol Martin. London: Routledge, 1993. 185–204.
- Pelligri, Ann. Performance Anxieties: Staging Psychoanalysis, Staging Race. New York: Routledge, 1997.
- Reinelt, Janelle. "Performing Race: Anna Deavere Smith's 'Fires in the Mirror.'" Modern Drama (Winter 1996): 609.
- Schechner, Richard. "Anna Deavere Smith: Acting as Incorporation." TDR: The Drama Review 37, no. 4 (1993): 63–64.
- Smith, Anna Deavere. Talk To Me: Listening Between the Lines. New York: Random House, 2000.

Molly Castellor

SNART KOMMER TIDEN See SOON THE TIME WILL COME

SOCIALIST REALISM, SOVIET UNION

Officially adopted at the First Congress of Soviet writers in 1934, socialist realism was a prescriptive term for the way in which Soviet literature, drama, and criticism were to be created. Writers were required to reflect a socialist view of history and social development and to serve the interests of the Party. The theater, as a state institution and a tool of propaganda, should play an important role in the construction of communism.

Using readily comprehensible subject matter, dramatists were to eschew abstract, symbolic, and other forms pejoratively termed "formalist" in favor of a realistic style. Indeed, by a rewriting of theater history, socialist realism was promoted as the heir of a performance tradition conceived as exclusively realist (going back to Mikhail Shchepkin and successfully developed by the MOSCOW ART THEATRE). However, since the Soviet Union was to be seen as moving inexorably toward a brighter, happier, prosperous future, the dominant tone of drama must be optimistic. Thus, it was necessary, and indeed "more realistic," not only to stress what was positive in the present but also to point the way forward.

Not surprisingly, factories, farms, and laboratories provided the settings and themes for many plays of the time, since the introduction of socialist realism coincided with the end of the First Five Year Plan (1928–1932), which had seen the creation of a centrally controlled command economy, the development of heavy industry, and the collectivization of agriculture. More importantly, artists (Joseph Stalin's "engineers of the soul") used metaphors of reforging or the smelting of new alloys to depict this process as they were expected to promote the idea of a "New Soviet Man," the product (according to current evolutionary theories) not of nature but of an improving society. Many plays centered on idealized protagonists (sometimes scientists) who journeyed through doubt toward political conviction. Others demonstrated how courage and self-sacrifice in the present would ensure the eventual triumph of ideals. Some, demanding monumental settings, celebrated events from Revolutionary history and the Civil War; others foresaw the heroism of the Soviet people in future conflicts.

MAKSIM GORKY lent socialist realism the considerable weight of his authority as a theorist and playwright, and other leading dramatists whose works merit study, at least as documents of an era, include Vsevolod Vishnevsky, Nikolai Pogodin, Aleksandr Kirshon, and Aleksandr Afinogenov. But in general the theory produced many third-rate plays, with predictable plots and pasteboard characters who were little more than parrots of Party propaganda. The silencing of more innovative writers and directors, the imposition of state and self-censorship, the need to write to formulae, and nonsensical notions such as Nikolai Virla's "conflictless drama," had a disastrous effect on the development of Russian theater. After Stalin's death, the more liberal policies of Khrushchev's thaw allowed greater innovation from a new generation of writers, but until the early 1980s, the terminology of socialist realism was still employed, by conservative critics and in Party literature, as a means of censoring "formalist" directors and writers.

FURTHER READING

- Blake, Ben, ed. Four Soviet Plays. New York: Benjamin Blom, 1972.
Reissue of Lawrence & Wishart, 1937. (Includes Vishnevsky's An Optimistic Tragedy, Pogodin's Aristocrats, and Maksim Gorky's Yegor Bulychov and Others).
- Lyons, Eugene, ed. Six Soviet Plays. New York: Greenwood Press, 1968.
Reissue of Houghton Mifflin 1934. (Includes Kirshon's Bread, Pogodin's Tempo, and Afinogenov's Fear).
- Russell, Robert. Russian Drama of the Revolutionary Period. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1988.
- Segel, Harold B. Russian Drama from Gorky to the Present, rev. ed. Baltimore and London: Johns Hopkins Univ. Press, 1993.
- Solovyova, Inna. "The Theatre and Socialist Realism, 1929–1953." In A History of Russian Theatre, ed. by Robert Leach and Victor Borovsky. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1999. 325–357.
- Vaughan, James C. Soviet Socialist Realism. London: Macmillan, 1973.

Ros Dixon

SOCIALIST REALISM OUTSIDE THE SOVIET UNION

Based on the writings of Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, and Vladimir Lenin, socialist realism proposes that drama advocate a positive view of socialist society utilizing a realistic style easily understood by the masses. As communism spread throughout Europe, Asia, and the world during the 20th century, socialist realism became the dominant mode. Theater mirrored Soviet writers such as MAKSIM GORKY, Alexander Pushkin, and Fyodor Dostoevsky; KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY was the model for ACTING. Socialist realism tended to feature positive heroes who relinquish personal gain for the betterment of the community.

In the German Democratic Republic (GDR), paradigms based on the Soviet model were developed in writers' conferences sponsored by the Socialist Unity Party of GERMANY from 1947 to 1963. In 1947 the first Stanislavsky school was established by Maxim Vallentin, Otto Fritz Gaillard, and Otto Lang to train actors and writers in the state-sponsored approach. Early works of HEINER MÜLLER (particularly The Scab in 1956 and The Correction in 1958) complied with state mandates, though they remained critical of the dogmatic form. Volker Braun, THOMAS BRASCH, and CHRISTOPH HEIN also presented positive views of socialist society, despite their formal experimentation. Although theater artists in the GDR (including BERTOLT BRECHT) accepted the premises of socialist realism, issues of form remained unresolved.

In Eastern Europe the most important proponent of socialist realism was Hungarian Georg Lukács, who proposed that art should present the "objective essence of reality." His greatest critic was Brecht, who rejected the notion that art must be limited to one style. The debate among Brecht, Lukács, and others took place between 1952 and 1956, resulting in a model that allowed for some formal experimentation. The Yugoslav Drama Theatre, founded in Belgrade in 1947 by Bojan Stupica, adopted the style of the MOSCOW ART THEATRE. The doctrine of socialist realism in POLAND was in force from 1949 to 1956 and yielded works best described as Stalinist, given their views on sacrificial contributions to the state: The Germans (1949) by Leon Kruczkowski, Nothing Unusual (1950) by Adam Tarn, and House of Cards (1953) by Emil Zegadlowicz.

After Communism spread to Mainland CHINA in 1949, drama was placed under the Ministry of Cultural Affairs, and socialist realism became the only acceptable form. Under Mao, traditional plays were revised or banned, and techniques such as stage attendants and stylized movement were abolished. New works were written to replace the "harmful" and "backward" ones. Of these, The Red Lantern (1964), Taking Tiger Mountain by Strategy (1964), and On the Docks (1967) are the most important.

Dramas loosely based on the Soviet model appeared on New York stages during the 1930s. The Theatre Union staged Brecht's THE MOTHER in 1932, and the GROUP THEATRE brought radical theater to Broadway in 1934–1935 with productions such as AWAKE AND SING! and WAITING FOR LEFTY. Socially conscious dramas (though short of true socialist realism) have been written by Albert Bein, MARC BLITZSTEIN, Harold Rome, and ARTHUR MILLER. Seldom written or produced since the mid-20th century, social realist dramas have been virtually absent from world theater since the decline of communism in the West.

FURTHER READING

- Ermolaev, Herman. "Socialist Realism." In Marxism and Communism in Western Society, Vol. 8. New York: Herder & Herder, 1972.
- Huettich, H. G. Theatre in the Planned Society: Contemporary Theatre in the German Democratic Republic. Chapel Hill: Univ. of North Carolina Press, 1978.
- Lahusen, Thomas, and Evgeny Dobrenko, eds. Socialist Realism Without Shores. Durham, N.C.: Duke Univ. Press, 1997.
- Levine, Ira. Left-Wing Theory in the American Theatre. Ann Arbor, Mich.: UMI Research Press, 1985.

Steve Earnest

I SOGNI DE CLITENNESTRA See THE DREAMS OF CLYTEMNESTRA

DER SOHN See THE SON

SOLÓRZANO, CARLOS (1922–)

An artist of mestizo (mixed blood) origins, Guatemalan Carlos Solórzano fuses diverse art forms to create a stylized drama of existential despair that is universal in content and Indo-Hispanic in its theatricality to challenge social and religious norms. He grew up among the oligarchy surrounded by millions of starving Indians under a military dictatorship, moved to MEXICO in 1939 to study at the National University, married, and became a playwright, drama critic, and professor. The paradox between the privilege and misery of his early life assumed center stage in his drama, and priests, patriarchs, and tyrants became the antagonists.

Solórzano's major plays, THE HANDS OF GOD (Las manos de Dios), The Puppets (Los fantoches), and The Crucified (El crucificado), combine religion and politics to question the authority of church and state. In The Hands of God (1956), the heroine tries to rescue her brother from an unjust imprisonment, a metaphor for the fear of God. The Puppets: A Mime-Drama for Marionettes (1958) depicts Solórzano's vision of the human condition: The characters are wired with explosives. Periodically, the old Puppet Maker and his daughter, a child masked as "Smiling Death" (la muerte catrina) explode a puppet to make room for the new ones he creates. The Crucified: A Tragic Farce (1958) is a provocative play-within-a-play. The young men who portray Christ and his disciples in the Passion become so drunk that they crucify the actor, a tragedy not unknown in Mexican villages.

Similarly, Solórzano's other plays challenge the oligarchy and God. And Death Brought Forth the Light (La muerte hizo la luz, 1951) denounces despots. Doña Beatriz, the luckless woman (Doña Beatriz, la sin ventura, 1952), recounts the life of the first female governor of the Americas. A volcanic eruption, symbolic of her repressed sexuality, destroys her utopian Catholic society; only the mestiza survive. The Sorcerer (El hechicero, 1954) portrays the search for the Philosopher's Stone. Mea culpa (1958) and The Angel's Forty Winks (El sueño de un angel, 1960) are rituals of confession that annihilate the human spirit. The Shoe (El zapato, 1966) plays out an Oedipal relationship, and in Crossroads (Cruce de vías, 1959), a man falls in love with the sensuous voice of a woman but recoils when he sees her wizened face.

Solórzano's drama charts the key points of life: birth, consciousness, and death. His characters seek God but find only silence. Instead of consolation, religious myths terrorize them; the rites do not deliver the promised transcendence. Unable to reconcile faith and reason, people suffer in solitude. As the protagonist of The Hands of God discovers, once humans discard their illusions of immortality, they cast off their fear of damnation. Beatriz redeems her soul to determine her destiny now, not in some unattainable afterlife. The winner of numerous prizes and honors, Solórzano has also written two novels and significant drama history and criticism that enhance his prominence in Latin American drama.

FURTHER READING

Feliciano, Wilma. El teatro mítico de Carlos Solórzano [The Mythic Theater of Carlos Solórzano]. Mexico City: Univ. Nacional Autónoma de México, 1995.

Rivas, Esteban. Carlos Solórzano y el teatro hispanoamericano [Carlos Solórzano and the Hispanic American Theater]. Mexico: Anahuac, 1970.

Quackenbush, L. Howard. Devotas irreverencias: el auto en el teatro latinoamericano [Irreverent Devotions: The Miracle Play in Latin American Theater]. Mexico: Univ. of Tlaxcala, Brigham Young Univ., and D. M. Kennedy Center for International Studies, 1998. 88–95.

Solórzano, Carlos. Teatro [Theater]. Mexico City: Univ. Nacional Autónoma de México, 1992.

—. Crossroads and Other Plays by Solórzano. Tr. and ed. by Francesca Colecchia. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickenson Univ. Press, 1993.

Versényi, Adam. Theatre in Latin America. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1993. 129–32.

Woodyard, George. "Theater of the Absurd in Spanish-America." Comparative Drama 3 (1969): 183–192.

Wilma Feliciano

THE SON

This drama is incarnation. The indirect route of the Created to reach his archetype; the play of the Son to his Father, the prologue of the Citizen to his Country.

—Walter Hasenclever, 1916

Literary EXPRESSIONISM's rebellion against Wilhelmine GERMAN's repression of the essential human was articulated in calls for brotherhood, humanity, freedom, and individual vision. In the playbill to the 1916 Prague premiere of The Son (Der Sohn, 1914), WALTER HASENCLEVER explains that the twenty-year-old Son's "revolt of the spirit against reality" is projected not by way of causal or mimetic representations of reality, but through the "soul" of the individual. The generational rage of youth betrayed by the historical crisis of the First World War resonated powerfully in postwar productions of The Son, beginning with the 1918 public premiere in Mannheim, thanks to the directorial and lighting strategies of Richard Weichert and Ludwig Sievert, respectively. Unlike the realist staging for the 1916 Prague and Dresden premieres, in Mannheim the Son's psychic landscape was projected into abstract images and symbolic events as he progressed from his immature and vitalist beginnings to the expressionist "New Man." Combined with Ernst Deutsch's overly expressive ACTING style for the 1918 Berlin performance, The Son became a dramatic sensation.

The influence of the Sturm und Drang is apparent in the generational conflict and political connotations of the play, although prewar expressionist dramas such as The Son were more focused on Nietzschean personal realization and transforming societal attitudes than on real-world politics. The drama's challenge to psychological REALISM and German NATURALISM is seen in the juxtaposition of verse, prose, monologues, and hymnic reveries to highlight the Son's inner development and ecstatic rejection of familial and Wilhelmine tyranny as he surpasses the limitations of social types cast around him, including the Tutor, the Friend, and the Father.

After failing his high school examinations despite the best efforts of the Tutor, the Son rejects his Father's tyrannical hold on him at the end of act 2 and escapes house arrest with the aid of a mysterious Friend. The Friend's hypnotic powers enable the Son to address a gathering at the "Club for the Preservation of Joy" in act 3, where he reveals his father's injustices and denounces the world of the Father to wild applause and the singing of the Mar-seillaise, the song of the French Revolution. In act 4 the Son continues his journey into manhood at the side of the prostitute Adrienne, and then surpasses the nihilistic decadence of the Friend who commits suicide. But whether the Son is destined to new horizons beyond the world of the Father is unclear, since he has failed, as he states in act 4, "after so many stations . . . to do something completely." He owes his successes as a leader to the hypnotic powers of the Friend, and as he steels himself to kill his Father, the ultimate revolutionary act, the Father dies on the spot of a stroke. The play ends with the Son's ecstatic emotional embrace of his role as the "New Man," although this remains vaguely defined: "My mind is fully creative on this day. / With me for what is vital to unite / I have not shunned Death's eternal might. / Now man's great power to proclaim / Toward freedom, is my heart's new aim!"

FURTHER READING

- Hoelzel, Alfred. Walter Hasenclever's Humanitarianism: Themes of Protest in His Works. New York: Lang, 1983.
- Löb, Ladislaus. " 'The Second Time as Farce?' Hasenclever's Der Sohn and Schiller's Don Carlos." The Modern Language Review 88, no. 2 (1993): 375–388.
- Schurer, Ernst, ed. German Expressionist Plays (The German Library: Vol. 66). New York: Continuum Publ. Co., 1997. [Includes The Son, tr. by H. Marx.]
- Sheppard, Richard William. "Unholy Families: The Oedipal Psychopathology of Four Expressionist Ich-Dramen." Orbis Litterarum 41, no. 4 (1986): 355–383.
- Spreizer, Christa. From Expressionism to Exile: The Works of Walter Hasenclever (1890–1940). Rochester, N.Y.: Camden House, 1999.

Christa Spreizer

SÖNDAGSPROMENADEN See

THE SUNDAY PROMENADE

A SONG AT TWILIGHT

He has never had the courage or the humility to face the fact that it was not whom he loved in his life that really mattered, but his own capacity for loving.

—Carlotta, Act 2

A Song at Twilight is the first play in a trilogy by NOËL COWARD entitled Suite in Three Keys (with Shadows of the Evening and Come into the Garden Maud). All three are set in a hotel room in Switzerland, and each requires a cast of four. Written in 1965, the first London production of A Song at Twilight took place in April 1966 at Queen's Theatre to good reviews with Coward in the role of the main character, Hugo Latymer.

The title refers to Johann Wolfgang von Goethe's warning against self denial. This is the pivot on which this essentially moral melodramatic play turns. Sir Hugo Latymer is a celebrated elderly satirical writer with a secret that he is desperate to conceal from his public. The play opens with Latymer's wife Hilde on the phone, stressing to his agent Latymer's right to control his reputation.

The preservation of Latymer's reputation is central to the play. When in act 1 Latymer has dinner with ex-lover Carlotta Gray, it is because of his reputation that he denies her permission to use his old love letters in her autobiography. Carlotta accepts this but tells him before the curtain falls that she has his love letters to the "only true love of your life," the dead Perry Sheldon, Latymer's male secretary whom he had spurned many years earlier.

Act 2 begins with a shift in power from Latymer to Carlotta. Latymer is desperate to preserve his heterosexual public image, while Carlotta is determined to make him admit his hypocrisy and dishonesty in pretending to be heterosexual.

Homosexuality moves to the foreground and is hotly debated. Into this crossfire a slightly tipsy Hilde returns from a dinner engagement. Carlotta confronts her about Latymer's sexuality. Hilde admits her knowledge of her husband's homosexuality but stays loyal to him despite Carlotta pointing out that Latymer has exploited her.

After further verbal fencing, the play ends with Carlotta surrendering the Sheldon letters to Latymer. In a reciprocal gesture Latymer gives her permission to use his letters in her memoirs. Hilde escorts Carlotta out, and Latymer's isolation is emphasized as he sits reading the letters Carlotta has left him. It is apparent from the stage directions that he is "deeply moved." Hilde does not seat herself next to him when she returns. The play ends in isolation and regret as the curtain falls with them apart.

Although a review in The Times on April 15, 1966, stated that the play "seems, beyond question, to be based on the last years of SOMERSET MAUGHAM," a parallel might as successfully be drawn between Latymer and Coward. In A Song at Twilight Coward comes as close to confronting his own homosexuality on stage as he ever did in any of his plays. The plea for homosexual tolerance in the play is clear, but Coward, like Latymer, cannot successfully articulate his own vulnerability, possibly because of his own concern with his public reputation.

[See also England, 1960–1980]

FURTHER READING

- Elsom, John. British Post-War Theatre. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1981.
- Lahr, John. Coward the Playwright. London: Methuen Ltd., 1982.
- Lesley, Cole. The Life of Noel Coward. London: Jonathan Cape, 1976.
- Morley, Sheridan. A Talent to Amuse. London: Heinemann, 1969.

Weightman, John. "Theatre: On Not Appreciating Mr. Coward."

Encounter (27 July 1966).

Gregory Hacksley

SOON THE TIME WILL COME

I try to buy time, so one has time to have time.

—Hilbert, Act 1

Staged in 1998 and published in 1999, Soon the Time Will Come (Snart Kommer Tiden) marked a turning-point in the career of LINE KNUTZON and a remarkable success for two seasons at the Dr. Dantes Aveny Theatre in Copenhagen. It went on to tour throughout DENMARK.

This play is characterized by a more complex DRAMATURGY and less focus on youth and more on couplehood than in Knutzon's earlier plays. "When you are in your twenties you hunt a lot of dreams, and at a certain point you have realized them all. . . there is nothing more to dream about. Now you find yourself in reality! That is a shell shock. What then? You can have a concrete fear of death. . . . It becomes serious. Serious-serious." The couplehood of main characters Rebekka and Hilbert has all but dissolved, and they ought to divorce. Even though time apparently has not passed, they nevertheless suddenly have children. Hilbert has hired a house-maid Oda as a birthday present to Rebekka, so that she may have time to have time. Ambiguous "Little Oda" presents herself as descendant of an entirely childless family. Rebekka fears that Oda has come to kill her and her children. Nevertheless, she orders Oda to arrange her thirty-fifth birthday party; they expect their daughter, the Knutte-child, to come. Even Rebekka's former lover John and his fiancée Ingrid are guests. Knutte turns up; she is fifty-five years old!

The second act is the birthday party. Gradually it becomes apparent that the characters have lived their lives without having noticed nor remembered. It is in fact Rebekka's eighty-fifth birthday, she has had her divorce, Ingrid and Hilbert have had an affair, and so forth. Time is dissolved; things that have happened, happen, fifty years have passed and at the same time they have not. It is not my fault that you have to die, says the Knutte-child. Rebekka declares that although her and Hilbert's relationship is impossible, she cannot control her love for him: "I love you when I hate you." "Take good care of me," says the Knutte-child, and she disappears in a white light.

Some critics had reservations concerning the second act (actually, the second act was written during the rehearsals). Me Lund wrote in Berlingske Tidende that Knutzon's plays "have meant a kind of revolution for Danish theater. But as a matter of fact they were also chaotic and philosophically immature. She is still no methodical person in terms of dramaturgy. But the decisive difference between Soon the Time Will Come and the rest of her oeuvre—and what we could call one of the most happy quantum leaps in Danish drama—is that Line Knutzon as a playwright has obtained so much distance from her material that she now seems to control her effects and is able, in the middle of the chaotic satire of life style, to insist on small poetic oases, pure monologues that hit precisely and deeply in significant existential scruples."

FURTHER READING

Hessela, Birgitte. Vi lever i en tid. Line Knutzens dramatik [We live in a time. Line Knutzon's Plays]. Copenhagen: Borgen, 2001.

Theil, Per, and Lise Garsdal. Hvem der? Scener fra 90'erne [Who's There? Scenes from the 90's]. Copenhagen: Høst og Søn, 2000.

Bent Holm

SORESCU, MARIN (1936–1996)

Marin Sorescu belongs to the generation of writers and poets who emerged during post-World War II communist ROMANIA that shares many common traits in thematics and style. In Sorescu's writings, one feels above all the sense of entrapment and the despair of "no exit" from a suffocating atmosphere in which words, written or spoken, are suspicious and censored.

In addition to many volumes of poetry, Sorescu also wrote nine plays. Three of them—JONAH (Iona, 1968), The Verger (Paradisul, 1970), and The Origin (Matca, 1973)—belong stylistically to the Theater of the Absurd, reminiscent of EUGÈNE IONESCO and SAMUEL BECKETT. These plays deal with humanity's search for the Absolute in an alienated society in times of existential uncertainties. Sorescu makes use of metaphoric language with frequent references to religious and mythical symbols.

Other important plays—such as The Chill (Raceala, 1976), The Third Stake (A Treia Teapa, 1980), and Shakespeare's Cousin (Varul Lui Shakespeare, 1990)—belong to a cycle of historical dramas, written in Brechtian EPIC-dramatic style. In these plays, Sorescu evokes the Romanian past for parallels and analogies to the present. For example, The Third Stake brings to the stage the 15th-century Romanian cruel despot, Vlad, the Impaler (Vlad Tepes), nicknamed Dracul (Bram Stoker's model for Dracula), engaged in his 1461 campaign against Turkish domination under Mehmed II. The stage is strewn with victims, each impaled on a stake, who endure their fate stoically—a symbol, perhaps, of the cross the nation is bearing in silence, or a veiled allusion to the dictatorship in the playwright's own time. In the end, Vlad impales himself on the third stake. Shakespeare's Cousin, a five-act play in the historical cycle, is a meditation on the condition of the artist in an ungrateful society. A prologue presents the philosophical theme: life as a play in perpetual rehearsal with changing settings. "We stumble blindly upon the same play which we try to rewrite and in which the lines are dictated to us and uttered eternally by bygone generations." Sorescu presents William Shakespeare as harassed by his contemporaries, implying a parallel to the modern playwright being plagued by the authorities, who keep demanding "full page declarations." Censorship spares nobody; even Yorick's skull risks being impaled on a stake if it continues to utter the forbidden.

Jonah is Sorescu's first play and the most important. It enjoyed instant success when it appeared in 1968 and established its author as a major player on the Romanian stage. The play, a poetic monologue on the human condition, is a cry from the depth, expressing the world's existential angst. As in the Bible, Jonah is trapped in the belly of the big fish, but here the similarity ends. Knife in hand, he tries unsuccessfully to carve a hole in the fish in an attempt to escape. Like the little fish with which he plays in his aquarium, Jonah feels played upon by blind forces from which only his suicide provides liberation.

PLAYS: Jonah (Iona, 1968); The Verger (Paracliserul, 1970); The Matrix (Matca, 1973); Medusa's Raft (Pluta Medusei, 1974); Nerves Do Exist (Exta Nervi, 1974); The Chill (Raceala, 1976); The Third Stake (A treia Teapa, 1980); Shakespeare's Cousin (Varul Lui Shakespeare, 1990); The Fighter on Two Fronts (Luptatorul Pe Doua Fronturi, 1981)

FURTHER READING

Cocora, Ion. Privitor Ca La Teatru II [Onlooker at the Theater]. Cluj-Napoca, Romania: Editura Dacia, 1977.

Iosif, Mira. Teatrul Nostru Cel De Toate Serile [Our Daily Theater]. Bucharest: Editura Eminescu, 1979.

Sorescu, Marin. Iona, A Treia Teapa, Varul Shakespeare [Jonah, The Third Stake, Shakespeare's Cousin]. Prefata de Dumitru Micu. Nota Bibliografica de Virginia Sorescu [Preface by Dumitru Micu. Bibliographic Note by Virginia Sorescu]. Bucharest: Editura Minerva, 1993.

———. Varul Shakespeare Si Alte Piese. Teatru [Shakespeare's Cousin and Other Plays]. Bucharest: Cartea Romanesca, 1992.

Moshe Yassur

SORGE, REINHARD JOHANNES (1892–1916)

Reinhard Johannes Sorge, one of the earliest German expressionist poets and dramatists, based his works on his own aspirations and experiences. Born on January 29, 1892, in Rixdorf, Berlin, GERMANY, the son of a Protestant building inspector, Sorge worked as a clerk and bank apprentice after his father's mental breakdown in 1905. Following his father's death in 1908, he attended courses in Greek philology at the University of Jena before abandoning his studies to become a poet and dramatist.

His earliest poems, although influenced by the Sturm und Drang and the Romantic movements, as well as by Stefan George (1868–1933) and Richard Dehmel (1863–1920), are not lyrical compositions but rather hymnic proclamations steeped in Sorge's deep religious convictions. Early dramatic attempts, such as the one-scene Zarathustra (1911) and Antichrist (1911), demonstrate the tensions and contradictions Sorge felt between the ecstatic mysticism of one devoted to God and the iconoclastic, FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE-inspired teachings that so informed the expressionist generation. After experiencing a vision in 1912, Sorge converted to Roman Catholicism in 1913, thus breaking with his Protestant upbringing and Nietzschean philosophy. In 1912 he received the Kleist Prize for his most famous drama, the five-act The Beggar (Der Bettler, 1912), considered the first expressionist play.

In the autobiographical Der Bettler, expressionist characteristics—such as an episodic structure, a rejection of psychological REALISM, ecstatic verse, and character types instead of individuals—illustrate the Poet's "dramatic mission" to found a new theater to renew both himself and society. In a bold advance of staging and dramatic structure, Sorge calls for the Poet to be illuminated from steep angles to highlight his lofty potential, in contrast to representative social figures that appear as barriers or facilitators in his quest. Such revolutionary staging and lighting strategies, realized during the 1917 Berlin premiere, serve to blur the boundaries between subject and object as realistic scenes shift to evocations of a vision-like state of being. But after a series of events, including poisoning his mentally deranged father to alleviate his torment, which also allows the Poet to break from his origins to "create anew," the protagonist experiences only the everyday. In the end his mission to unify art and life eludes him, and he is able to speak "through symbols of eternity" only within the confines of his own play. He accepts his fate as a beggar and social outcast in his drive to renew himself and the world.

Whereas in Der Bettler the Poet is still seeking transcendence to become the expressionist New Man, in Sorge's second full-length play, Guntwar: The School of a Prophet (Guntwar. Die Schule eines Propheten, 1914), he has already taken on the role of a modern prophet who will work tirelessly toward the ecstatic unity of humankind. The play culminates in an apocalyptic vision of Judgment Day, followed by the rise of a new generation illuminated by God's grace. Sorge also wrote two Biblical plays before his untimely death in 1916: King David (König David, 1916) and Christ's Victory (Der Sieg des Christos, 1916). Sorge was preparing for theological training to enter the priesthood as World War I began. He volunteered for military service and died of wounds suffered at the battle of Ablaincourt-Somme on July 20, 1916, in France.

[See also Expressionism]

SELECT PLAYS: Guntwar: A Development (Guntwar. Ein Werden, 1911); The Beggar: A Dramatic Mission (Der Bettler. Eine dramatische Sendung, 1912); Guntwar: The School of a Prophet (Guntwar. Die Schule eines Propheten, 1914); Metanoëite: Three Mysteries (Metanoëite. Drei Mysterien, 1915); Christ's Victory: A Dramatic Vision (Der Sieg des Christos. Dramatische Vision, 1916); King David (König David, 1916)

FURTHER READING

Cardullo, Bert, and Robert Knopf, eds. Theater of the Avant-Garde, 1890–1950: A Critical Anthology. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 2001. 207–260.

Lincoln, Peter. "Aspects of Sorge's Imagery: A Reappraisal of His Position Within Expressionism." German Life and Letters 34, no. 4 (1981): 374–384.

Shearier, Stephen. "Modernist Consciousness and Mass Culture:

Alienation in Der Bettler by Reinhard Sorge." German Studies Review 11, no. 2 (1988): 227–240.

Sheppard, Richard William. "Unholy Families: The Oedipal Psychopathology of Four Expressionist Ich-Dramen." Orbis Litterarum 41, no. 4 (1986): 355–383.

Christa Spreizer

LE SOULIER DE SATIN See THE SATIN SLIPPER

SOUTH AFRICA

South African literature has developed in four broad stages: the colonial period, extending to the outbreak of World War II, in which most work was either derivative or of local interest; the nationalist period, through the 1940s and 1950s, which was increasingly dominated by the Afrikaners; the period of protest, from the 1960s through the 1980s and the overthrow of the apartheid system, during which some South African authors gained major international reputations; and the immediate post-apartheid period, extending through the present, in which the full diversity of voices in the reconstituted nation have sought expression but, not surprisingly, have not yet found a focal subject with the resonance of revolt. South African drama had a rather negligible presence in the first two stages of this literary history, but became a major force for both cultural and political change during the protest period.

The first recorded production of a South African play occurred in 1838, with the Graham's Town Amateur Company's performance of Andrew Geddes Bains's Kaatje Kekkelbeck or Life among the Hottentots. But for the most part, the Calvinistic religions of the Dutch colonials caused them to view theater-going as a vice. Still in the 1910s and 1920s, missionaries to the black African communities began to use simple plays based on Bible stories that illustrated moral lessons as a tool to reach converts. At the Marianhill missionary station, Father Bernard Hess went so far as to stage some plays derived from Zulu folk tales, as well as some secular light COMEDIES.

It is not surprising, then, that in the late 1920s and the early 1930s, the first theatrical troupes in South Africa were organized in the black townships. Most notable were the Methethwe Lucky Stars and the Bantu Dramatic Society. Although both emphasized productions that represented facets of Bantu cultural traditions and social life, the Bantu Dramatic Society pointedly supported the efforts of black playwrights. In the 1950s, another very influential group, the Orlando Boy's Club Dramatic Society, was formed. Johannesburg's black district, Sophiatown, became a lively and volatile center of black theatrical work, providing a stimulating juncture of black cultural and criminal life comparable to New York's Harlem during the 1920s. Innovations in theater were closely linked to new directions in music and dance. Long after Sophiatown and other black districts were cleared to create greater separation between the white and black populations, several highly regarded productions have sought to capture their vibrant place in South Africa's cultural and social history. One of these, Kat and the Kings (1999), by David Kramer and Taliep Peterson, received the Laurence Olivier Award for the best new musical produced in London.

The first black playwright of real note was Herbert Dhlomo, who emerged as a singular voice in the 1940s. His play The Girl Who Killed to Save (1936) draws on a historical incident to present anticolonial themes within a truly dramatic frame. It is generally acknowledged to be the first published play by a black South African. By the 1950s, however, the apartheid laws would effectively remove black playwrights, actors, and directors from international and even national view. Under the apartheid laws, plays by black playwrights could not be staged, and black actors could not perform in white theaters. Publishers were prohibited from producing books, including plays, written by blacks. Nevertheless, Dhlomo's example inspired other black dramatists, most notably Lewis Nkosi, whose achievements, like Dhlomo's, may never be fully appreciated. In his first produced play, The Rhythm of Violence (1964), Nkosi treats the volatile racial tensions very near the surface of daily life in Johannesburg. His most notable later play has been Malcolm (1972).

Within little more than a half-century of their bitter defeat in the Boer War, the Afrikaners had achieved a predominant position in the political, economic, and cultural life of South Africa. Their sense of self-determination found expression in a brief renaissance of nationalistic (that is to say, white) South African literature, particularly that written in Afrikaans. In the late 1940s, the segregated National Theater was created, in part, to provide a venue that would encourage playwriting by white South Africans. Guy Butler received some attention for his plays The Dam (1953) and The Dove Returns (1956), and N. P. Van Wyk Louw, a university professor and a literary critic of some note, wrote the creditable verse drama Germanicus (1956), as well as The Plume's Seed Blows Far (Die pluimsaad waai ver, 1966), about the Boer War.

During the 1950s, however, the South African theatrical production that received the most international notice was the musical King Kong (1959), which resulted from the collaboration of whites and blacks. Some white producers and playwrights had been willing to risk government persecution and social ostracism because of their involvement in integrated theatrical productions. In the early 1950s, Ian Bernhardt helped to organize the Bareti Players, a black theatrical troupe that sought to honor both European dramatic traditions and black South African folk traditions. A decade later, Bernhardt guided the establishment of the Union of South African Artists and its offshoot, the African Music and Drama Association. King Kong was the culmination of the latter group's promotion of South African experiments with JAZZ, indigenous musical forms, and musical theater.

From the 1960s onward, almost all noteworthy drama in South Africa, including that written in Afrikaans, was at least indirectly critical of the national retrenchment into the ever more strictly enforced system of racial apartheid. Among the dramatists writing in Afrikaans, Andre Brink continues to be a major figure. Known primarily as a novelist outside of South Africa, Brink has consistently produced work for the theater for more than three decades. His plays, many of which have been translated into English, include: The Bond around Our Hearts (Die band om ons harte, 1959); Caesar (1965); The Guardian Angel (Die beskermengel, 1962); Bagasie: Triptiek vir die toneel (which includes Die koffer, Die trommel, and Die tas, 1965); Elsewhere Fine and Warm (Elders mooiweer en warm, 1970); The Rebels (Die Rebelle: Betoogstuk in nege episodes, 1970); Die verhoor: Verhoogstuk in drie bedrywe (1975); Knots in the Cable (Kinkels in die kabel: 'n verhoogstuk in elf episodes, an adaptation of William Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing, 1971); Afrikaners Make Merry (Afrikaners is plesierig, two one-act plays, 1973); Pavane (1974); The Hammer and the Witches (Die hamer van die hekse, 1976); Toiings on the Long Road (Toiings op die langpad, 1979); and Die Jogger (1997). In his plays, as in his novels, Brink has focused on the strains of living within a society that has institutionally justified terrible injustice and that treats any demonstration of moral doubt as dissent.

Other noteworthy plays by white dramatists that critically examined the effects of apartheid were David Herbert's A Kakamas Greek (1960) and Basil Warner's Try for White (1959), both of which treat the risks of being "colored" and trying to pass for white, and Lewis Sowden's The Kimberly Train (1959), which focuses on an interracial romance.

Yet, undoubtedly, the major voice in South African drama of the protest period and, indeed of any period, has been ATHOL FUGARD. Some have asserted that he is the most important writer in any genre that South Africa has ever produced. Others have argued that he is the most important dramatist writing in English of the last quarter of the 20th century, if not of the entire post-World War II period. Certainly his achievement has been widely recognized. The awards that he has received have included Tony Award nominations for best drama, for Sizwe Banzi Is Dead and The Island (1975), for A Lesson from Aloes (1981), for "MASTER HAROLD" . . . AND THE BOYS (1982), and for THE BLOOD KNOT (1986); the Drama Desk Award and New York Drama Critics Circle Award for best play (1983) and the Evening Standard Award (1984), all for "Master Harold" . . . and the boys; the New York Drama Critics Circle Award for A Lesson from Aloes (1982); an Obie Award for Boesman and Lena (1971); a Plays & Players Award for best new play for Sizwe Banzi Is Dead (1973); the London Theatre Critics Award (1974); the Commonwealth Award for contribution to the American theater (1984); the Drama League Award (1986); the New York Drama Critics Circle Award (1988); and the Helen Hayes Award for direction (1990). His work has been not only widely reviewed but also the subject of much formal criticism.

The son of a British father and an Afrikaner mother, Fugard grew up in a household in which racial separatism was embraced by his expressive but volatile father and quietly undermined by his barely educated but highly principled mother. At the center of his plays is the presence, or the absence, of a common sort of decency that forces one to recognize the inhumanity in racial prejudice. To great emotional effect, the plays gradually reveal the competing capacities within each individual for human understanding and for self-absorbed but socially conditioned meanness. Every character confronts his or her own versions of this fundamental tension, often while being forced to recognize it or deal with it in another character. Each play is like a box of gears of different sizes in which the sprockets engage imperfectly or sometimes hardly at all. Fugard's plays address national and even universal themes, but do so through the very immediately realized relations between completely credible individual characters.

More than Fugard's plays themselves, however, his whole attitude toward the theater transformed it into a force for social change in South Africa. From the initial production of his first staged play, No Good Friday (1956), he featured black South Africans not only as actors in his plays but in every aspect of their production. He has consistently acknowledged that he found his voice as a dramatist by submerging himself in the black theater movement that was beginning to develop in Johannesburg and by working collaboratively with black playwrights, actors, and directors. His collaborations with John Kani and Winston Ntshona, in particular, very much defined his early work and the subsequent emphases in his career. Typically Fugard's early plays were performed in front of integrated audiences in out-of-the-way and sometimes improvised theaters. Yet, even the initial performances of plays such as The Blood Knot, which focuses on two mixed-race brothers, one of whom has much lighter skin, had a profound social impact across all segments of South African society. When such transformative events are ignored in the mainstream media, the credibility both of that media and of the social assumptions that it supports are undermined, giving hope to the oppressed and adding to the uneasiness of the oppressors. In South Africa, the apartheid system was undermined not only by revolutionary expression, which can be suppressed, but also by self-expression, which can never be silenced.

Fugard's reputation both owed a debt to and to some extent legitimized what became known as the township theater movement. In the 1960s and 1970s, black townships had few entertainment venues, and the government treated any sort of black self-expression as potentially seditious. Traveling theatrical troupes moved within and among the black townships, performing in improvised theaters and providing an underground cultural and political forum for black South Africans and for some white playwrights committed to the end of apartheid. Often, these traveling troupes ceased to exist when their main players were arrested, then were reconstituted when those players were released from police custody.

The most legendary figure among those involved in the township movement was Gibson Kente, based in the Transvaal. Recruiting mostly inexperienced actors to play the supporting roles, Kente himself played the leads in efficient but spare productions of such plays as Can You Take It, The Jazz Prophet, Laduma, Mama and the Load, Manana, and Sikalo. Two of Kente's protégés, Percy Mtwa and MBONGENI NGEMA, created Woza Albert!, a musical tour de force that proceeds from the premise that Jesus Christ has returned to earth in racially divided South Africa. Through the efforts of Barney Simon, the artistic director of the influential Market Theater, the play was eventually staged in the United Kingdom and the UNITED STATES, then toured internationally. Widely acclaimed, the play has been honored with the Fringe First Award at the Edinburgh Festival, the British Theatre Association Award, the Los Angeles Drama Critics Award, the San Francisco Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle Award, and the Obie Award. Mtwa later wrote Bopha! (1986), and Ngema later wrote the acclaimed musical Sarafina (1987) about the student uprising of 1976.

Maishe Maponya was the driving force behind the Bahu-mutsi Drama Group that used a church auditorium in Soweto as its main venue. Maponya's Gangsters (1985) shows the linkage between poetry and violent resistance to racial oppression. His other works have included The Cry (1976), Peace and Forgiveness (1977), Umongikazi (1983), Bring Back the Drums (1986), The Valley of the Blind (1986), Jika (1986), The Hungry Earth (1979), and Western Deep Levels (1994), the last of which dramatizes conditions in South Africa's mines.

Some of the other noteworthy theater troupes were the Imitha Players in East London, the Inkhwezi Players in Grahamstown, and the Shah Theatre Academy in Durban. In the 1970s, several troupes produced creative adaptations of classic plays in the Western canon. The Phoenix Players developed Phiri, an adaptation of Ben Jonson's Volpone set in a South African township. Working with the Theater Workshop Company in Durban, Welcome Msomi created Umabatha, a Zulu version of MacBeth. At the other end of the spectrum, one of the most iconoclastic of these theater troupes was the Junction Avenue Theatre Company, which staged improvisational plays such as The Fantastical History of a Useless Man, Randlords and Rotgut, and Tooth and Nail. In 1979, this company dramatized the issues involved in a strike by the Food and Canning Workers Union in a play called The Sun Will Rise for the Workers. The play proved so successful that the company developed a dozen other dramas addressing labor-related issues.

In the 1970s, as a complement to the township theater movement, several multiracial theaters were opened in South African cities, most notably the Space Theater in Capetown, the Stable Theater in Durban, and the Market Theater in Johannesburg. Those who operated these theaters defied apartheid at a time when the government had committed itself to using any means necessary to suppress dissent. Therefore, these theaters always faced a precarious future, relying on the government's hesitancy to provoke further international condemnation by completely censoring artistic expression. Often, rather than simply forcing the closing of the theaters, the authorities attempted to undermine them less directly by stigmatizing those involved in the productions, by intimidating those who might wish to attend performances, and by disrupting the performances themselves. The Space Theater passed through several sets of owners who were committed to keeping it open at all costs, but it finally did become clear that it would be prohibitively costly to continue to operate it. Before it closed, the Space Theater staged FATIMA DIKE's The Sacrifice of Krel (1976). Initially staged at the theater during the Soweto uprising, the play would become the first by a South African black female dramatist to be published in book form. It focuses on a Xhosa king who chose exile over enslavement and thereby demonstrated the multiform nature of resistance to racial oppression.

The Market Theater in Johannesburg did outlast apartheid, in large part because Fugard's plays of the period were staged there: A Lesson from Aloes (1978), "Master Harold" . . . and the boys (1982), The Road to Mecca (1984), A Place with the Pigs (1987), My Children! My Africa! (1989), and Playland (1992). Although the earliest and most recent of these plays premiered at the Market Theater, the plays of the 1980s were staged first in the United States, and the attention they received overseas then made it difficult for the government to prohibit their staging in South Africa. Strict prohibitions were maintained, however, against publishing or distributing printed copies of Fugard's work. Ironically, in the post-apartheid period, some critics have argued that the attention paid to Fugard's achievement has, in effect, diminished the recognition of the work of those black dramatists who have come to the fore under apartheid and in its aftermath. Although it may often be true that critics tend to focus on a major figure at the expense of some of his or her contemporaries, these complaints about the attention to Fugard's work typically seem to have more to do with Fugard's being white than with his being over-rated. Given the moral force of his vision, the risks that he accepted in giving it dramatic expression, and his promotion of the contributions of blacks to the development of South African theater, it seems a serious misrepresentation to assert that he has to any degree exploited the conditions under apartheid to enhance his own reputation.

In addition to plays by Gibson Kente, Maishe Maponya, Welcome Msomi, Percy Mtwa, and Mbongeni Ngema, the Market Theater also staged and first brought to broader attention the work of many other significant dramatists, including Reza de Wet (Crossing), P. G. du Plessis (Siener in die Suburbs, 1981), Kessie Govender (Working Class Hero, 1976), Zanemvula ("Zakes") Mda and Deon Opperman (Dear Mrs. Steyn, 1999), Paul Slabolepszy (Saturday Night at the Palace, 1984), Adam Small (Kanna's Homecoming [Kanna hy kō hystoe], 1965), Bartho Smit (The Maimed [Die verminktes], 1961), and Pieter-Dirk Uys (Paradise Is Closing Down, 1989). Perhaps the most prolific of these playwrights has been Matsemela Manaka, whose plays have included Egoli: City of Gold (1979), Blues Afrika Café (1980), Vuka (1981), Mbumba (1984), Children of Asazi (1986), Domba, the Last Prince (1986), Pula (1986), Size (1987), Toro (1987), Koma (1988), Goré (1989), Ekhaya: Coming Home (1991), Ekhaya: Museum over Soweto (1991), and Yamina (1993). But the most important of these playwrights may ultimately be Zanemvula ("Zakes") Mda, whose plays have included We Shall Sing for the Fatherland (1973), The Hill (1978), The Road (1982), The Nun's Romantic Story (1992), and The Dying Screams of the Moon (1995). Mda has also written highly regarded novels and poetry.

Ironically, the Market Theater floundered financially after the end of apartheid. The rising crime rates in South Africa's cities reduced the audiences at downtown theaters and other cultural venues much more sharply than the secret police had been able to do. In addition, the relaxed restrictions on many forms of entertainment meant that drama no longer enjoyed the advantages that it had had under apartheid, when it had become not only the primary medium for undermining apartheid but also the preeminent form of entertainment.

In the postapartheid period, the following playwrights have produced noteworthy work: Fiona Coyne, Craig Freimond, Nazli George, Rajesh Gopie, Mark Lottering, Mondli Mayepu, Xoli Norman, Oscar Petersen, Lesego Rampolokeng, and Heinrich Reisenhofer. Although it is difficult to generalize about what has been the most wide-ranging and stylistically varied body of work ever produced for the South African theater, these playwrights have tended to focus on the causes and effects of social issues such as the AIDS epidemic, violent street crime, deepening impoverishment, ethnic tensions, and the appeal of various kinds of political extremism. The profound impact of the AIDS epidemic on all segments South African society was reinforced to the South African theater community when Gibson Kente announced that he had been diagnosed with AIDS and ultimately died of the disease.

FURTHER READING

- Barrios, Olga. "Commitment and Performance in Black South African Theatre under Apartheid." New England Theatre Journal 11 (2000): 19–46.
- Fourie, Lorraine. "The Early Days of South African Theatre." South African Digest 12 (October 1979): 14–16.
- Frank, Heike. Role-Play in South African Theatre. Bayreuth, Germany: Thielmann and Breiting, 2004.
- Fuchs, Anne. "The New South African Theatre: Beyond Fugard." In Post-Colonial English Drama: Commonwealth Drama since 1960, ed. by Bruce King. New York: St. Martin's, 1992. 165–180.
- . "The Body of Change and the Changing Body in the Plays of Junction Avenue Theatre Company." In South African Theatre as/and Intervention, ed. by Marcia Blumberg and Dennis Walder. Amsterdam: Rodopi, 1999. 127–135.

- Horn, Andrew. "South African Theater: Ideology and Rebellion." Research in African Literatures 17 (Summer 1986): 211–233.
- Larlham, Peter. "The Impact of the Dismantling of Apartheid on Theatre in South Africa." South African Theatre Journal 6 (September 1992): 43–48.
- Maree, Cathy. "Resistance and Remembrance: Theatre during and after Dictatorship and Apartheid." South African Theatre Journal 12 (May–September 1998): 11–33.
- Oliphant, Andries. "Isolate the Enemy: Community and Conflict in Popular Theatre." South African Theatre Journal 6 (September 1992): 18–29.
- Peterson, Bhekizizwe. "Apartheid and the Political Imagination in Black South African Theatre." Journal of Southern African Studies 16, no. 2 (1990): 229–245.
- Schauffer, Dennis. "The South African Indian Contribution to the Developing Concept of an Indigenous South African Theatre." South African Theatre Journal 6 (September 1992): 84–92.
- Sitas, Ari. "Description of a Struggle: South African Theatre since 1970." World Literature Today 70 (Winter 1996): 83–87.
- "South African Theater." South Africa.info. http://www.southafrica.info/ess_info/sa_glance/culture/drama.htm (Accessed October 5, 2006).
- Spitzok von Brinsinski, Marek. "Rethinking Community Theatre: Performing Arts Communities in Post-Apartheid South Africa." South African Theatre Journal 17 (2003): 114–128.
- Steadman, Ian. "Stages in the Revolution: Black South African Theater since 1976." Research in African Literatures 19 (Spring 1988): 24–33.
- Steadman, Jim. "Performance and Politics in Process: Practices of Representation in South African Theatre." Theatre Survey 33 (November 1992): 188–210.
- Steinberg, Carol, and Malcolm Purkey. "South African Theater in Crisis." Theater 25, no. 3 (1995): 24–37.

Martin Kich

SOWERBY, GITHA (1876–1970)

Little is known about Githa Sowerby's life. She was born on October 6, 1876, in Gateshead, Durham, was raised there, moved to London, married John Kendall (who died in 1952), and died in London on June 30, 1970. With her sister, the illustrator Millie Sowerby, she produced numerous, unexceptional children's books.

Sowerby was lauded during the 1910s, owing to the commercial and critical success of her 1912 play, RUTHERFORD AND SON. On the basis of that play's call for emancipatory politics, Emma Goldman (1914) called her a "genius," asserting that Sowerby's "exceptional maturity is a phenomenon rarely observed." Since the 1980s, theatrical revivals and reprints of Rutherford and Son have boosted Sowerby's reputation, which rests solely on that one play. The texts of her subsequent full-length plays—A Man and Some Women (1914), Sheila (1917), The Stepmother (1924), and The Policeman's Whistle (1934)—have never been published and have been rarely performed. Sheila was poorly received and ran for only seventeen performances at St James's Theatre, London. The New Theatre run of The Stepmother was equally unsuccessful. The other two full-length plays were never performed.

However, the one-act Before Breakfast was performed in 1912 and published in 1913, and six theatrical pieces for children were published in 1910. The quality of both Before Breakfast and the Little Plays for Little People collection indicates that scholars of Sowerby's work should not limit themselves to Rutherford and Son. Performed as a curtain-raiser over sixty times at The Playhouse during 1912, Before Breakfast is set in Sir George Linton's house in London's Belgrave Square. The play shows the cold and unsocial conditions under which servants work and satirizes both the servants' acquiescence in the class system and the hypocrisy of rich people's calls for equality. The bad-tempered, reactionary servant, Mrs. Gray, demands extra productivity from her hapless young colleague, Jinny, and condemns "these new-fangled ideas—socialism or whatever they call it." Sir George's son, the rakish young George, calls himself a "socialist" and excoriates Jinny's servile demeanor. But, reverting to snobbery, he lambasts gossip-spreading journalists for consulting "footmen and kitchen maids." George's damaging, class-crossing relationship with Jinny's sister is revealed and he flees in self-interest. With earthy dialogue, Before Breakfast is fast-paced and strikes its targets sharply.

The Little Plays for Little People also show dramatic deftness. Bearskin reads like a happily ending King Lear. Old Woodcutter is abused by two selfish daughters but nursed by the hard-working Beauty. She agrees to marry the unprepossessing Bearskin so that her family will receive money, and she is rewarded when Bearskin is revealed as a handsome prince. The callousness of Woodcutter, who cherishes only material comforts, scarcely deserves Beauty's loyalty. Fortunatus and Cassandra approvingly dramatizes two siblings' refusal to be impoverished. After visiting Fortune's Castle, the young heroes reject notions of chance and fate, and acquire riches for their hitherto impoverished Grandparents. The moral is that the downtrodden should fight for improvements to their lives. Thus, this children's piece, together with Before Breakfast, is as central to Sowerby's oeuvre as Rutherford and Son.

[See also England, 1860–1940]

SELECT PLAYS: Before Breakfast (1912); Rutherford and Son (1912); A Man and Some Women (1914); Sheila (1917); The Stepmother (1924); The Policeman's Whistle (1934)

FURTHER READING

Gardner, Viv. "Introduction." In New Woman Plays, ed. by Linda Fitzsimmons and Viv Gardner. London: Methuen, 1991. vii–xv.
Goldman, Emma. The Social Significance of Modern Drama. Boston: Richard G. Badger, 1914. 235–249.
Sowerby, Githa. Little Plays for Little People. London: Henry Frowde and Hodder & Stoughton, 1910.

———. Before Breakfast: A Comedy in One Act. London and New York: Samuel French, 1913.

———. Rutherford and Son. Ed. by Linda Fitzsimmons. London: Methuen, 1994.

Kevin De Ornellas

SOYA, CARL ERIK (1896–1983)

What else am I than a rather intelligent petit bourgeois, walking around extracting laws from what happens—happens with him and around him? Does not everything I have written—plays, novels, short stories, essays—contain a thought, picked up from Soya's philosophy of life or one may say: his cracker-barrel philosophy.

—Carl Erik Soya, 1972

Carl Erik Soya started his career as an enfant terrible of the contemporary Danish theatre. He was a rebel against the middle-class milieu to which he belonged. His father was an admired, but rather conventional painter of idyllic watercolors. Soya, on the contrary, saw it as his mission to prick holes in the idyllic surface and unveil the hypocrisy and double standards behind the respectable façade, but he did not totally break away from the liberal conservatism of his youth. His most original plays were written in the 1930s and 1940s; whereas later ones can seem a little repetitious. Satire and a marvelous sense for dialogue are Soya's strengths as a dramatist.

Soya's first play, THE PARASITES (Parasitterne, published 1929), was too controversial for The Royal Theatre, which preferred to stage his more harmless The Laughing Maiden (Den leende Jomfru, 1930). The Laughing Maiden explored sexual taboos, a recurrent theme in Soya's work.

In 1935, the same year as KJELD ABELL's The Melody That Got Lost ran in Riddersalen Theater, Soya's Umbabumba was performed in a private Copenhagen theater. Both plays are revue COMEDIES, but whereas Abell kept within the compass of the petty bourgeois family, Soya made the political world his stage. The play takes place in a primitive African state—Abell designed the imaginative jungle décor for the performance—in which Benito Mussolini, Adolf Hitler, and well-known Danish and European politicians are portrayed under pseudonyms such as Muga, Toto, and Wunga. Soya uses a parable technique popularized by BERTOLT BRECHT, which he might have known from the playwright's Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny (Aufstieg und Fall der Stadt Mahagonny, 1927–1929), performed in Copenhagen three years earlier. After indirect German pressure, The Royal Theatre abandoned plans to stage Umbabumba. His novel A Visitor (En Gæst, 1941), which portrays a family tyrannized by an enormous insect, was banned and Soya was interned by the German occupation forces. In 1945 he was forced to flee to SWEDEN.

Soya's plays are pervaded by moral indignation. With misanthropic delight he exhibits the hideous sides of human nature, but his growing fascination with PSYCHOANALYSIS made him more conciliatory toward his fellow creatures. In Who Am I? (Hvem er jeg?, 1932), a modern Everyman learns to cope with his destructive instincts when he is guided through his unconscious by Doctor Paprika, a Freudian psychoanalyst, magician, and mountebank.

During the 1940s Soyá's plays became more philosophical, dealing with questions such as fate and guilt and discussing whether life is predetermined or a matter of pure coincidence. In a tetralogy that includes Pieces of a Pattern (Brudstykker af et Mønster, 1940), Two Threads (To Traade, 1943), Thirty Years Respite (30 Aars Henstand, 1944), and the satiric drama Free Choice (Frit Valg, 1948), Soyá illuminated the question from different angles without providing any answers. He also changed style to what he called a neo-REALISM, which he felt allowed room for the accidental and the unpredictable.

[See also Denmark]

SELECT PLAYS: The Parasites (Parasitterne, published 1929); The Laughing Maiden (Den leende Jomfru, 1930); Who Am I? (Hvem er jeg?, 1932); Lord Nelson Drops the Fig Leaf (Lord Nelson lægger Figenbladet, 1934); Umbabumba (1935); My Top Hat (Min høje hat, 1939); Pieces of a Pattern (Brudstykker af et Mønster, 1940); Two Threads (To Traade, 1943); Thirty Years Respite (30 Aars Henstand, 1944); After (Efter, 1947); Free Choice (Frit Valg, 1948); In the Summer Night (I den lyse Nat, 1956); Petersen in the Land of the Dead (Petersen I Dødsriget, 1957); The Departed Jonsen (Afdøde Jonsen, 1966); Only a Falling Tile (Bare en Tagsten, 1966); The Family Kristensen (Familien Kristensen, 1970)

FURTHER READING

Bredsdorff, Elias, ed. Contemporary Danish Plays: An Anthology. London: Thames and Hudson, 1955.
 Mitchell, P. M. A History of Danish Literature. 2nd ed. New York: Kraus-Thomson Organization, 1971.
 Wamberg, Niels Birger. Soyá. Copenhagen: Borgen, 1966.

Kela Kvam

SOYINKA, WOLE (1934–)

Wole Soyinka, born in 1934 in the Yoruba town of Abeokuta, is widely acknowledged as AFRICA's most accomplished dramatist. Educated at University College, Ibadan, and Leeds University, ENGLAND, Soyinka was a play reader for the Royal Court Theatre in London and has been a director, actor, teacher, and writer in Nigeria.

Using traditions established in Africa's other modern literary forms, Soyinka's plays portray themes of nationalist and transnational crises while embodying penetrating philosophical, political, and metaphoric investigations of African cultures. No other African combines political activism, inventive art, and philosophical analyses with so much eloquence and elegance, energy and intellectual rigor, as does this 1986 Nobel laureate in literature. Soyinka's works focus on a decolonizing attitude toward emergent and residual tyrannies, whether local or global. They seek to create a space for radical constructions of postcolonial IDENTITY that endows people with "the simultaneous act of eliciting from history, mythology and literature, for the benefit of both genuine aliens and alienated Africans, a continuing process of self-apprehension whose temporary dislocation appears to have persuaded many of its non-existence or irrelevance in contemporary world reality" (Soyinka, 1976, x–xi).

Soyinka's notions of postcolonial identity and agency permeate his versatile body of works spanning well over five decades from the late 1950s; for purposes of cataloguing, they may be placed under three broad but fluid categories. Plays such as Dance of the Forests (1960), Kongi's Harvest (1965), The Lion and the Jewel (1959), Trials of Brother Jero (Jero's Metamorphosis (1974), Opera Wonyosi (1981), Play of Giants (1984), Requiem for a Futurologist (1983), From Zia with Love (1992), The Beatification of Area Boy (1995), and King Ubaku (2001) may be classified as political satire. Others including The Strong Breed (1962), Madmen and Specialists (1971), The Road (1965), The Bacchae of Euripides (1973), and Death and the King's Horseman (1976) may qualify as metaphysical drama. The third category, political street theater skits, is numerous and includes Before the Blackout, After the Blowout, Priority Projects, Trials and Tribulations, and Rice. Soyinka fashioned the satire of his political sketches into a low-budget film titled Blues for a Prodigal and a long-playing record labeled Unlimited Liability Company.

Throughout his plays and philosophical pronouncements, Soyinka has consistently sought an adequate language of resistance through an aesthetic comprising mythology, politics, and activism. Such an attitude is best understood through his seminal essay "The Fourth Stage" and eloquently illustrated by his play Death and the King's Horseman. "The Fourth Stage" was first published in an anthology of essays dedicated to the Renaissance scholar G. Wilson Knight in 1969 and later presented as one of a series of lectures at Churchill College, Cambridge. As a philosophical statement, the essay broke controversial new ground by calling for a revision of how cultural and political agencies are envisioned in Africa, particularly as its overlapping modernities sometimes freeze the dynamics of change on the continent. The essay, which elicited varied critical responses from within and outside Africa, suggests that Soyinka's DRAMATURGY, although inherently political, does not conform to prescriptive models for knowing or describing individual and collective political identities. In the dramatist's own words:

I have been preoccupied with the process of apprehending my own world in its full complexity, also through its contemporary progression and distortions. . . . For after (or simultaneously with) an externally directed and conclusive confrontation on the continent must come a reinstatement of the values authentic to that society modified only by the demands of a contemporary world. (Soyinka, 1976, ix) cosmology—the worlds of the unborn, the living, and their ancestors. In such a structure, the acts of being born, of living, and of dying are seen as natural processes of transition. The birth of a child is an occasion for celebration, as is the death of an old person. The world of the living is an arena for reparations through sacrifices, rituals, and mythology. Soyinka, however, complicates and subverts the triplicity of the Yoruba world by suggesting a fourth stage, which he insists should be the most sought and fundamentally most fulfilling of all transitions. This fourth stage catalyzes social action; rather than a simple movement from one point to the other, it is a process that summons a consciousness for change without necessarily naming the manner of such change beyond its immediate anticolonial directions. According to Soyinka, such consciousness can happen in the worlds of the living, the ancestors, and even the unborn. The goal of the fourth stage is disalienation as a constant process of deconstructing domination and seeking a language of equity and justice.

To apprehend his world, Soyinka in the "Fourth Stage" takes his readers and audiences into the tripartite structure of Yoruba

To support his thesis on the fourth stage as the ultimate act of using culture to stimulate subjectivity, Soyinka delves into a Yoruba legend describing the origin of the world. According to this legend, a supreme deity called Orisa-Nla, whose life symbolized the cosmic stability of the world, was struck while tending his garden with a rock thrown by his servant Atunda—thereby the holy symbol of cosmic unity was shattered into a thousand and one pieces. Soyinka had earlier celebrated this rebellion in a poem called “Idanre”: “All hail saint Atunda, first revolutionary / Grand iconoclast at genesis and the rest is logic” (Soyinka, 1968, 83).

Returning to the legend in “The Fourth Stage,” Soyinka explains that the fragments of the disintegrated symbol of cosmic wholeness signify various godheads in the Yoruba pantheon, thereby assigning them different but complementary metaphysical functions in the mythologies of Yorubas. He goes on to explain that the dusts of cosmic disintegration formed the world of human beings. Consequently Atunda’s insubordinate act led to the physical formation of two divided worlds: those of the gods and of human beings. Alienated and impassioned by a desire for cosmic wholeness, the helplessness of these disparate worlds was symbolized by the huge gulf separating them. Soyinka summons up frightening metaphors to underscore not only the enormity of the alienating gulf between these two worlds, but also of the impending violence that promised to attend any act of transgression in either world. The physical gulf and the social alienation between gods and human beings that it symbolized became a factor of constant concern for the gods, in particular, as they tried in vain to fulfill various functions bestowed on them by Orisa-Nla’s parts. One of the more daring of their number, characterized simultaneously by creative and destructive impulses, became a prominent actor in his persistent quest to span the chasm between the gods and the humans. That god, Ogun, drew iron ore from the core of the earth to construct a bridge. Leading a brigade of other gods, as Ogun walked the bridge in search of disalienation, he was thwarted by the violence of natural elements guarding the structure. Dismembered, but not with the finality of disintegration experienced by Orisa-Nla, Ogun was reconstituted and came back to enact his walk many times more. As a regenerative principle, this god’s indefatigable pursuit of disalienation made him attractive enough for the dramatist to adopt him as his “patron saint.”

Soyinka’s use of the legend of Ogun in “The Fourth Stage” illustrates the sociopolitical themes and aesthetic features that characterize much of the playwright’s dramatic legacy. It is his conception of TRAGEDY and the notion of agency it incorporates that has made “The Fourth Stage” the subject of intense scrutiny as a marker of Soyinka’s dramatic style.

For Soyinka, tragedy is a song of lamentation expressing conditions of alienation and stimulating intense motivations for change. The tragic, for him, does not signify paralysis nor blind adherence to constituted mythology; rather it is a situation that sets up ontological certainties only to destabilize them to enable creativity and the pedagogy of self-reproduction. In developing what he calls African Tragedy, Soyinka proposes an aesthetic principle in which the direction of tragic art is to provoke a catharsis not to terrorize and consign a community to fatalism, but rather to hyper-sensitize the community to conditions of inequity and prompt the harnessing cultural resources to achieve disalienation. As Ogun’s perseverance suggests, what makes this approach to a constructive, socially activist tragedy unique is its stress on repetitive, cyclical, and perpetual action as the essence of agency and anticolonial subjectivity.

“The Fourth Stage” challenged the assumptions of the West by depicting seamless transitions between past, present, and future and between the worlds of gods and of humans. Yet, its epistemological challenge to European modernity did not translate into an automatic endorsement of the supposed purity or supremacy of indigenous mythology. Instead, in a neocolonial context, Soyinka’s approach suggests that the quest for decolonizing social and political identities must go beyond essentializing pristine traditions and structures conveniently remembered and kept intact through mythology. Unlike the anticolonial nationalisms of such movements like Negritudism and Afrocentrism, he urges the development of a consciousness of power relations within and between discourses of domination. To Soyinka, mythology, as an ideological and epistemological resource, is a site not for canonizing tradition and arresting social development, but for energizing the human spirit’s desire for self and communal reproduction. As Soyinka himself states, the purpose of the tragic paradigm is to signify human beings as socially active and acting beings. The value of Yoruba mythic tragedy lies in its symbolic representations of the essence of human subjectivity and social agency, the impulse to act:

To act, the Promethean instinct of rebellion, channels anguish into a creative purpose which releases man from a totally destructive despair, releasing from within him the most energetic, deeply combative inventions which, without usurping the territory of the infernal gulf, bridges it with visionary hopes. (Soyinka, 1976, 146)

Soyinka's use of the tragic paradigm of Yoruba mythology to define notions of subjectivity and issue calls for positive social change emerges most distinctly in his classic play, Death and the King's Horseman. It is also this work that most clearly illustrates his use of tradition as a site for inter-modernist and intra-modernist struggles for the signs of agency.

SELECT PLAYS: The Lion and the Jewel (1959); Dance of the Forest (1960); The New Republican (1964); Before the Blackout (1965); Kongi's Harvest (1965); The Road (1965); The Bacchae of Euripides (1973); Death and the King's Horseman (1976); Requiem for A Futurologist (1983); Before the Deluge (1991); A Scourge of Hyacinths (1991); From Zia with Love (1992); Beatification of Area Boy (1995); Boy Soldier (1997); Travel Club (1997); Document of Identity (1999); King Babu (2001)

FURTHER READING

Dunton, Chris. Make Man Talk True: Nigerian drama in English Since 1970.

London : Hans Zell, 1992.

Soyinka, W. Idanre and Other Poems. New York: Hill and Wang Publishers, 1968.

———. Myth, Literature and the African World. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1976.

Awam Amkpa

SPAIN

The development of modern Spanish theater can be divided into three broad periods. The first consists of dramas produced between 1860 and 1936, ending with the start of Spain's devastating Civil War. The second period spans the nearly four decades of the dictatorial regime of Francisco Franco, beginning with his ascent to power in 1939 and ending with his death in 1975. The third includes the post-Franco transition to democracy during the last twenty-five years of the 20th century and continues into the new millennium.

MODERN SPANISH THEATER BEFORE THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR: 1860–1936

Spain's theater at the end of the 19th and beginning of the 20th centuries developed three concurrent but distinct styles, ranging from traditional bourgeois high comedies and thesis plays, to the satirical and often lowbrow COMEDY of the teatro por horas (theater by the hour), to the experimental dramas of Spain's most important intellectuals. Although these three classes of dramatic production coincide historically, they differ greatly in both form and function.

Traditional commercial playhouses targeting middle-class audiences primarily produced thesis dramas and drawing room comedies that served to reinforce established social norms. Any criticism of Spanish society invariably fell comfortably within the boundaries of middle-class morality, limited to such themes as the condemnation of vice or the privileging of love, honor, and fidelity over brute lust and materialism. JOSÉ ECHEGARAY (1832–1916), whose melodramatic, neoromantic plays dominated the commercial theater scene in Spain during the last half of the 19th century, was the most popular dramatist of his time. He penned more than eighty plays, including THE GREAT GALEOTO (El gran galeoto, 1881) and The Son of Don Juan (El hijo de Don Juan, 1892), and won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1904. His popularity inspired other playwrights to follow his lead, such as Joaquín Dicenta (1863–1917), whose social drama Juan José (1895) remains one of Spain's most frequently performed plays. However, Echegaray's popularity would not be matched until 1894, with the first works of the extraordinarily successful and prolific JACINTO BENAVENTE (1866–1954). Among his more than 170 plays, Benavente's two most acclaimed dramas are the 1907 play The Bonds of Interest (Los intereses creados), which drew from the commedia dell'arte tradition to satirize a society based on hypocrisy and corruption, and the 1913 rural drama The Ill-beloved (La malquerida), dealing with themes of blind passion and forbidden love in a brilliantly crafted murder mystery. Although Benavente's style differed significantly from the melodramatic tendencies of Echegaray's works, exhibiting a more natural dialogue and an emphasis on the psychological depth of the characters, the large majority of his work still falls within the boundaries of traditional bourgeois theater. Benavente also won the Nobel Prize in 1922.

Alongside the melodramatic and often moralistic alta comedia of Echegaray and the later, more realistic dramas of Benavente, another style of theater also developed. At the end of the 19th century, a number of playhouses in Madrid were dedicated exclusively to teatro por horas, presenting a wide variety of comic or satiric one-act plays and sketches, with or without music, which employed the colorful language and stereotyped characters of the working class. These short plays, based on the tradition of the SAINETE and entremes of Spain's Golden Age, became known as the género chico or "little genre." One of the most popular and critically acclaimed writers of género chico plays was Carlos Arniches (1866–1943), with his one-act cuadros de costumbres (life portraits) like The Saint of the Isidra (El santo de la Isidra, 1898) and later more experimental and socially critical comedias grotescas (grotesque comedies) such as Miss Trevélez (La señorita de Trevélez, 1916).

However, while commercial playhouses, both traditional and teatro por horas, catered to "una España satisfecha consigo misma [a self-satisfied Spain]" (Ruiz Ramón, 1997), many of Spain's literary elite began to challenge bourgeois social norms with experimental plays that questioned the rigid moral structure and adherence to social convention that characterized so much of Spanish theatrical production of the era. BENITO PÉREZ GALDÓS (1843–1920), best known for his realist novels that called into question Spain's restrictive middle class values, brought that same commitment to REALISM and serious social issues to the Spanish stage with plays such as Reality (Realidad) in 1892 and Electra in 1901. In many ways, Galdós's dramatic works represent a bridge between commercial theater and the more experimental and innovative drama of Generation of '98 writers like Miguel de Unamuno (1864–1936), Azorín (1873–1967) and Jacinto Grau (1877–1958), whose plays demonstrated a preoccupation with the decline of Spanish society, a rejection of the blatant commercialization of conventional Spanish theater, and a desire to explore more universal problems of the human condition.

RAMÓN DEL VALLE-INCLÁN (1866–1936), one of Spain's most innovative and influential writers, shared the concerns of his fellow Generation of '98 authors and rejected the naturalist tradition in favor of a more epic and universal style with his symbolist trilogy The Savage Comedies (Comedias bárbaras, 1907–1922). His later dramas, called esperpentos, moved away from epic theater to incorporate grotesque and absurdist tendencies that anticipated the work of playwrights like ANTONIO ARTAUD of the mid-20th century. The concept of the esperpento, a grotesque representation of the distortion, degradation, and inhumanity of Spanish society, is explicitly laid out in the dramatist's 1920 play BOHEMIAN LIGHTS (Luces de Bohemia) and reiterated a year later in The Horns of Don Friolera (Los cuernos de Don Friolera).

FEDERICO GARCÍA LORCA (1898–1936) was the other monumental figure in the world of Spanish theater in the years leading up to and including the Spanish Civil War. Spain's best-known playwright, Lorca joined Valle-Inclán and Unamuno in his rejection of facile commercial theater and searched for new methods to revitalize Spain's dramatic tradition. His early works treat universal issues through experimental dramas that incorporate the techniques of European movements such as SYMBOLISM and SURREALISM, while his trilogy of rural TRAGEDIES BLOOD WEDDING (Bodas de Sangre, 1933), YERMA (1934), and THE HOUSE OF BERNARDA ALBA (La casa de Bernarda Alba, 1936) brings together the vanguard techniques of earlier plays and a sharp criticism of narrow-minded Spanish society, demonstrating the tragic consequences of its restrictive social conventions. Lorca's brilliant career as dramatist and poet was cut short when he was executed by nationalist forces at the start of the Civil War.

The outbreak of hostilities between Nationalist and Republican forces in 1936 saw the end of a period of great vitality in Spanish theater. Although dramatic activity continued during the war, primarily in the form of AGITATION-PROPAGANDA plays in support of the Republican cause by playwrights like Rafael Alberti (1902–1999) and Max Aub (1902–1972), many of Spain's most important prewar dramatists either died or went into exile between 1936 and 1939.

SPANISH THEATER UNDER THE FRANCO REGIME: 1939–1975

The first decade of Francisco Franco's regime saw little dramatic production of any consequence. Commercial theater continued to cater to the comfortable middle class with evasionist dramas that ignored the devastating effects of the recent conflict. The plays emphasized realistic characters, plot, and dialogue and served to reinforce accepted social norms, much as their prewar predecessors did. Some of the more successful writers of this type of escapist drama were Joaquín Calvo Sotelo (1905–1993) with his 1954 play The Wall (La muralla), José María Pemán (1898–1981), who wrote historical verse dramas and contemporary moralist plays, and Julia Maura (1910–1970), one of the few Spanish women playwrights to find significant success during the Franco era. Whereas some exiled playwrights, like Aub and Alberti, continued to write dramas critical of the Spanish situation, ANTONIO BUERO VALLEJO (1916–2000) was the first to address the social problems of postwar Spain from within the country with his 1949 drama The Story of a Staircase (Historia de una escalera). Despite the severe censorship imposed by the dictatorship, Buero Vallejo continued to address both universal themes and current problems with plays that combined social commitment and innovative dramatic techniques. The Maids of Honour (Las meninas, 1960), The Skylight (El tragaluz, 1967), and The Sleep of Reason (El sueño de la razón, 1970), among others, made him Spain's premiere playwright of the postwar era.

A contemporary of Buero, ALFONSO SASTRE (1926–) employed expressionist and symbolist techniques to protest tyranny and violence in plays like The Condemned Squad (Escuadra hacia la muerte, 1954) and Night Assault (Asalto nocturno, 1959), though all of his work was severely censored during the dictatorship. Other significant figures in the development of Spanish theater under Franco include Carlos Muñiz (1926–), who also employed expressionist techniques to criticize Spanish society in The Inkwell (El tintero, 1960), Lauro Olmo (1923–1994), whose use of stark realism in plays like The Shirt (La camisa, 1962) and English Spoken (1968) highlighted the desperate situation of Spain's working classes, José Martín Recuerda (1925–), whose esperpento-like plays such as The Savages in Puente San Gil (Las salvajes en Puente San Gil, 1963) revealed the narrow-mindedness and hypocrisy of Andalusian society, and Jaime Salom (1925–) whose combination social realism and innovative dramatic technique appears in The Dolphins (Los delfines, 1969). MIGUEL MIHURA (1905–1979) demonstrated the potential for similar innovation in comic theater with the debut in 1952 of Three Top Hats (Tres sombreros de copa), an absurdist comedy originally written in 1932, which advocates personal freedom in the face of restrictive social norms. However, Mihura's later works appear to have more in common with the well-made plays of bourgeois commercial theater of the time.

The work of FERNANDO ARRABAL (1932–) in the last decades of the Franco dictatorship is also significant to the study of postwar Spanish theater, although the dramatist spent much of that time in FRANCE, and the majority of his plays have debuted there. Arrabal's most acclaimed play, THE ARCHITECT AND THE EMPEROR OF ASSYRIA (El arquitecto y el emperador de Asiria, 1967), with its emphasis on circularity, role-playing, and the diametric opposition of creation and destruction, reveals the profound influence of both absurdist techniques and the Panic Theatre movement of the 1960s. ANA DIOSDADO (1938–) emerged as a promising playwright in the waning years of the dictatorship as well, with her 1973 play Yours for the Asking (Usted también podrá disfrutar de ella), which exposed the personal and commercial exploitation of women in Spanish society.

The death of Francisco Franco in 1975 marked a crossroads for Spain's theatrical production with the elimination of censorship and the opportunity for greater freedom of expression on stage. Although almost all of the significant playwrights of the Franco period would continue to work after the fall of the dictatorship, the new political and social circumstances of post-Franco democracy provoked significant changes in the landscape of Spanish theater.

CONTEMPORARY SPANISH THEATER: 1975 TO PRESENT

The lifting of censorship restrictions produced two radically different reactions in the world of Spanish theater in the years immediately following Franco's death. Numerous important and previously suppressed works by Lorca, Valle-Inclán, Alberti, and Buero Vallejo and some new material by established playwrights like Buero Vallejo were presented; at the same time a flood of poor quality plays of a political or blatantly sexual nature also appeared. However, support for the fine arts was part of the new political agenda in the transition to a democratic Spain, and the late 1970s and early 1980s saw the establishment of several important governmental institutions dedicated to the furtherance of the dramatic arts, including the National Centre for Drama, the General Administration of Theatre and Spectacle, and the Centre for Theatre Documentation. In addition, a number of literary prizes were established during the last decades of the century to encourage the creation and production of new drama.

In addition to the continued presence of recognized dramatists like Buero Vallejo and Martín Recuerda, the 1980s saw the emergence of a new generation of playwrights that included a significant number of women writers, including CARMEN RESINO (1941–), who had started to publish shortly before Franco's death, PALOMA PEDRERO (1957–), and Concha Romero (1945–). Some significant dramatists among their numerous male counterparts include José Luis Alonso de Santos (1942–), Ernesto Caballero (1957–), and Fermín Cabal (1948–). The dramas produced by this new generación democrática—such as Pedrero's Lauren's Call (La llamada de Lauren, 1985), Romero's A Scent of Amber (Un olor a ámbar, 1983), Caballero's Squash (1986), Cabal's Dragonfly (Caballito del Diablo, 1983), and Alonso de Santos's Going Down to Marrakech (Bajarse al moro, 1985)—treat contemporary problems of individual sexuality, drug abuse, racial and social intolerance, and women's issues with realist techniques, although frequently that realism is interrupted by incursions into dream worlds or the juxtaposition of reality and fiction on stage.

These breaks with the realist mode anticipate the techniques of the next wave of Spanish playwrights to appear in the 1990s. Among these postmodern dramatists are Sergi Belbel (1963–), Itziar Pascual (1967–), and Lluïsa Cunillé (1963–), who writes in Spanish and Catalán and is widely recognized as one of Spain's best new playwrights. All have plays whose postmodern perspective is characterized by a sense of ideological and historical relativism, the absence of universal truths, and the radical experimentation with form and language that in many ways recalls the grotesque distortion of the esperpento and other AVANT-GARDE techniques. Frequently their dramas take the form of monologue—like Belbel's 1987 collection Elsa Schneider, Pascual's 1999 Postcard from the Sea (Postal del mar [Holliday Art]), and Cunillé's 1995 Pedestrians (Vianants)—revealing the conflicting desires for individual self-expression and a core cultural identity (Parker), as well as the pressures of a market economy that requires innovative, often hybrid techniques and/or minimalist approaches to facilitate production. However, whether realist or experimental, this youngest generation of Spanish dramatists seems to continue in the tradition of its most talented predecessors, working to explore and expose the problems of a modern, or postmodern, Spain.

FURTHER READING

- Edwards, Gwynne. Dramatists in Perspective: Spanish Theatre in the Twentieth Century. Cardiff: Univ. of Wales Press, 1985.
- Ferreras, Juan Ignacio. El teatro en el Siglo XX (desde 1939) [Theatre in the Twentieth Century (since 1939)]. Madrid: Taurus, 1989.
- Holt, Marion P. The Contemporary Spanish Theater (1949–1972). Boston: Twayne, 1975.
- Parker, Mary, ed. Modern Spanish Dramatists: A Bio-Bibliographical Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2002.
- Ruiz Ramón, Francisco. Historia del teatro español. Siglo XX. [A History of Twentieth-Century Spanish Theatre], 11th ed. Madrid: Cátedra, 1997.

Heather Campbell-Speltz

SPEWACK, BELLA (1899–1990)

SPEWACK, SAM (1899–1971)

As Jewish immigrants who began their writing careers in the newspaper business and achieved their greatest success with a musical adaptation of William Shakespeare, the husband-and-wife duo of Sam and Bella Spewack were among the top COMEDY writers of the 1930s and 1940s, shuttling comfortably between Broadway and Hollywood and between straight plays and musicals. Other than a facility for gag-writing, their work was marked by no particular style; the subject of each piece dictated the tone.

Their backgrounds were remarkably similar. Each came to the United States as a child and grew up in New York: Sam was born on September 16, 1899, in Ukraine and graduated from Columbia University; Bella, who was born on March 25, 1899, in ROMANIA, was educated through high school. Each became a newspaper reporter. They married in 1922, pursued individual careers as foreign correspondents for New York papers, and had their first Broadway play produced in 1928. It was a failure, as were three more before Boy Meets Girl delighted audiences and critics in 1935. A Hollywood satire with a firm grounding in experience (the Spewacks had written the screenplay for the 1934 film The Cat and the Fiddle), BOY MEETS GIRL ran for an impressive 669 performances.

Three years later, the Spewacks dusted off their 1932 comedy Clear All Wires and proposed it to Cole Porter as the basis for a musical. The result, Leave It to Me, was a mild satire about a U.S. ambassador to Moscow trying desperately to get himself recalled. Although a modest success, it is chiefly remembered as the show in which Mary Martin became a star singing "My Heart Belongs to Daddy."

After a Hollywood hiatus that produced two successful scripts, My Favorite Wife and Weekend at the Waldorf, the Spewacks again teamed with Porter for what would become their (and his) biggest triumph, Kiss Me, Kate. Bella, whose contribution to the project was larger than her husband's, initially resisted the idea of turning Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew into a musical, but relented after she conceived of it as a play-within-a-play set among a troupe of Shakespearean actors.

Porter, too, had to be persuaded to do the musical, and the creative process was marred by an ongoing feud between Bella and coproducer Arnold Saint Subber. When the show opened in 1948, however, it was an immediate smash, eventually running for 1,077 performances and winning the Tony Award as the season's best musical, plus individual Tonys for Porter and the Spewacks. Often revived, it has become a staple of musical repertory.

In 1953, the year Kiss Me, Kate became a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film, the Spewacks had their last Broadway critical success. Adapted from a play by Albert Husson and set in French Guiana at Christmas, 1910, My Three Angels is a sweetly amusing fable about a family of French expatriates whose affairs of money and the heart are set right by a trio of lovable convicts working around the house. It had a respectable run but did not make money. After one final Broadway failure in 1955, the couple never collaborated again, although Sam wrote two further unsuccessful comedies on his own. Sam died on October 14, 1971, in New York; Bella died on April 27, 1990, also in New York.

[See also United States]

SELECT PLAYS: The War Song (1928); Clear All Wires (1932); Boy Meets Girl (1935); Leave It to Me (1938); Kiss Me, Kate (1948); Two Blind Mice (Sam alone, 1949); My Three Angels (1953); Festival (1955)

FURTHER READING

McBrien, William. Cole Porter: A Biography. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1998.

Mordden, Ethan. Beautiful Mornin': The Broadway Musical in the 1940s.

New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1999.

Spewack, Bella. Streets: A Memoir of the Lower East Side. New York:

The Feminist Press at the City Univ. of New York, 1995.

Clifford A. Ridley

SPIRÓ, GYÖRGY (1946–)

Unique among contemporary Hungarian playwrights, György Spiró has opened a series of windows onto an era of transition: out of the bane of Communism and into the bane of uncertainty. His plays reveal the crisis of the community, connecting the contemporary individual with history.

Born in Budapest, HUNGARY, on April 4, 1946, Spiró's first success, The Impostor (1982), a tribute to a previous generation of playwrights, falls within a tradition that assumes the efficacy of human action. The play is about a great 19th-century Warsaw actor making a guest appearance at the Polish theater in Vilnius, a city suffering under Russian oppression. On stage, the actor changes the end of Tartuffe into a criticism of the Czar, then vanishes, leaving the Poles with a sense of triumph.

Chickenhead (1985) is a major contribution to a generational shift in Hungarian drama. Spiró came of age in the seemingly hopeless stasis of the Soviet Bloc. The playwrights of his generation, bearing no responsibility for the events that got them into this situation, viewed their world with the clarity of outsiders, and their work is based on the absence of a moral order that could give meaning to human action. Set in the depths of urban decay, the naturalistic Chickenhead ends in a meaningless murder. The fragmentary dialogue reflects a level of consciousness that complicates questions of personal responsibility. The issue of the then-socialist society's responsibility for such conditions is less complicated.

After the 1989 change of regime, Spiró's work reveals a civil society that won its freedom but lost its moral footing after decades of subservience. In two satiric plays he tackles the ruthlessness of the new capitalism. In Latest Zrinyiade (1991), a 16th-century military hero, reincarnated in modern times, becomes a tycoon. Racket (1996) is a nightmarish FARCE about a town where the only virtue is selfishness. These plays take place in a world in which the time-honored role of the intellectual has been all but devalued. This is the theme of Dobardan ("good day" in Serbo-Croatian; 1994), in which an engineer tries to adopt a Bosnian orphan as an act of human solidarity, only to be abandoned by his wife and daughter and to lose the respect and support of the outside world.

Spiró's masterly portrayals of the losers and aggrieved in a region savaged by history is evident in his latest plays. Quartet (1996) is a homecoming of sorts. Alienated by life in the West, a man returns to Budapest after a forty-year absence, seeking the community and human connections he remembers from boyhood. Instead, he finds a society at least as atomized and alienating as the one he left behind. The issue of Jewish identity in Hungary is the subject of two recent Spiró plays. Set in 1941, Blackout (2001) shows how not even the sincere and deep love of a married couple can survive the brutality of history. The legacy of that history is examined in Soap Opera (1998). As a playwright, Spiró is the most dedicated chronicler of the current, rapidly changing era in Hungary.

SELECT PLAYS: Evening Program (Esti műsor, 1981); The Impostor (Az impostor, 1982); The Garden (A kert, 1983); Chicken Head (Csirkefej, 1985); Latest Zrinyiade (Legújabb Zrinyiász, 1991); Good Day (Dobardan, 1994); Racket (Vircsajt, 1996); Quartet (Kvartett, 1996); Domestic Bliss (Honderű, 1997); Soap Opera (Szappanopera, 1998); Blackout (Elsötétítés, 2001)

FURTHER READING

- Bécsy, Tamás. Kalandok a drámaúval, Magyar dráma 1945–1989 [Adventures with Drama, Hungarian Dramas 1945–1989]. Budapest: Balassi Kiadó, 1996.
- Ézsás, Erzsébet. Mai magyar dráma [Hungarian Drama Today]. Budapest: Kossuth Könyvkiadó, 1986.
- Radnóti, Zsuzsa. Lázadó dramaturgiák [Dramaturgies in Revolt]. Budapest: Palatinus, 2003.

Eugene Brogyányi

SPLIT BRITCHES

Split Britches was formed in 1980, three years after the chance meeting of its two founding members, Peggy Shaw (who was then performing with the all-male drag group Hot Peaches) and Lois Weaver (performing with Spiderwoman, a multiethnic feminist performance group). Their first play, entitled Split Britches, premiered at the Allcraft Center, St. Marks Place, New York City, in 1980. Shaw and Weaver spent the next year developing this production with performance artist DEB MARGOLIN. The second Annual WOW Festival (1981) premiered their final version of Split Britches. The three collaborated on plays such as Beauty and the Beast (1982), Upwardly Mobile Home (1984), Little Women (1988), and Lesbians Who Kill (1992). These projects placed them at the center of the feminist and lesbian radical performance culture.

Split Britches continued to dismantle the male and female binaries by reconsidering the performance of IDENTITY and power relations through their representations of femme and butch in collaboration with performance artists such as BlooLips (Belle Reprieve, 1991) and Stace Makishi (Salad of the Bad Cafe, 2000). As such, one might liken their work to Charles Ludlum's Ridiculous Theatrical Company. Like Ludlum's characters, Split Britches allow for multiple sexual identities to be played out on the stage. The characters of Split Britches plays are not defined as transvestite roles as Ludlum's characters often are. But what the two companies do share is the making of plays in which characters perform the spectrum of politics, gender, and sexuality that are a vital part of the queer community.

Perhaps no work demonstrates their bold theatrical arsenal better than Dress Suits for Hire (1987), a play spun out of an East Village myth about two sisters who live in a rental clothing store until one is murdered by a topless bar owner named Little Peter. A collaboration with playwright and performance artist Holly Hughes, this "dyke-noir" premiered at P.S. 122 in New York City. Dress Suits carries the Split Britches tradition of employing different performance genres (such as folklore, autobiography, pulp fiction, erotic fantasy, and cabaret) to create a sociocultural montage of contradictory realities that shatters metaphors of gender and sexuality.

Now in their twenty-fifth year, Split Britches has won Best Ensemble from The Villager in 1985 and the Obie in 1991 for their collaboration with BlooLips on Belle Reprieve. Shaw herself has earned two Obies for acting (Deelux in Dress Suits, 1988; Menopausal Gentleman, one-woman show, 1999). In 1991, Weaver became the co-Artistic Director of Gay Sweatshop in ENGLAND and has since directed Shaw and Hughes in their one-woman shows as well as created her own performance piece entitled Faith and Dancing. Margolin has gone on to create a career as a solo performance artist, penning and performing works assembled in the collection Of All the Nerve: Deb Margolin, edited by Lynda Hart. Her work earned her the Obie for Sustained Excellence in Performance for the year 1999–2000.

Split Britches's legacy to American theater can be traced through new theater festivals including Throws Like a Girl (Austin, March 2005), which celebrates and promotes the work of female American theater artists, through the success of performers with whom Shaw and Weaver have collaborated, and through the emergence of other gender- and norm-challenging theater companies such as FIVE LESBIAN BROTHERS. Split Britches plays are an invaluable part (and intervention into) Modern American drama and culture.

[See also Gay and Lesbian Drama; United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Case, Sue-Ellen. Split Britches. New York: Routledge, 1996.
- Davy, Kate. "Reading Past the Heterosexual Imperative: 'Dress Suits to Hire.'" The Drama Review 33, no. 1 (1989): 153–170.
- Dolan, Jill. "Performance, Utopia, and the 'Utopian Performative.'" Theater Journal 53, no. 3 (2001): 455–479.
- Hart, Lynda, and Deborah Margolin. Of All the Nerve. New York: Cassell Academic, 1999.
- Hart, Lynda, and Peggy Phelan. Acting Out: Feminist Performances. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1993.
- Shaw, Peggy, Deborah Margolin, and Lois Weaver. "Split Britches: A True Story." Women and Performance 4, no. 2 (1989): 68–95.

Jessica Kaplow Applebaum

SPÖKSONATEN See THE GHOST SONATA

SPRAWA DANTONA See THE DANTON CASE

SPREADING THE NEWS

Spreading the News, a one-act COMEDY by LADY GREGORY (Isabella Augusta Persse), was first performed by the Irish National Theatre Society on the opening night of the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, IRELAND, in a double-bill with On Baile's Strand by W. B. YEATS, on December 27, 1904. It became a popular and often revived play in the repertory of the Abbey. The plot is laid in the imaginary village of Coon in the West of Ireland, a setting used in a number of Gregory's plays. The characters—a policeman, magistrate, women shopping for goods or selling them in the market, and so forth—speak a version of Hiberno-English Gregory invented and called Kiltartan. The idiom influenced the stage-speech of JOHN MILLINGTON SYNGE's plays.

The story is characteristic of early Abbey plays in its folk simplicity. A casual remark by Mrs. Fallon that her often unfortunate husband Bartley had "gone up the road following Jack Smith with a hayfork" is changed as it is told by one person to another, as in a game of Chinese whispers, until it becomes a racy tale that Bartley Fallon has killed Jack Smith with a fork and run off to America with Smith's wife. Although no one was less likely to commit the daring crimes of adultery and murder—he is far too feckless—Fallon is about to be sent to prison by the new magistrate (on the look-out for Irish atrocities), when the whole tale unravels with the arrival of Jack Smith. The speed and agility with which the collective fantasy is built up makes the play enjoyable to act and to watch.

The play is all words, but not a word is wasted. Its representation of an "innocent people" who escape poverty by collaboratively inventing a richer world of fantasy had its impact on other Irish dramatists. This analysis of the Irish temperament, for instance, is also found in THE PLAYBOY OF THE WESTERN WORLD and BRIAN FRIEL's TRANSLATIONS. The Irish characters in the play are not deeply satirized—they are themselves conscious that they have no other business but minding other people's business—but they are made to appear so lovable that the comedy can appear condescending.

FURTHER READING

McDiarmid, Lucy, and Maureen Waters, eds. Lady Gregory: Selected Writings. New York: Penguin, 1995.

Saddlemeyer, Anne, and Colin Smythe, eds. Lady Gregory: Fifty Years After. Gerrards Cross, Buckinghamshire: Colin Smythe, 1987.

Adrian Frazier

SPRING AWAKENING

FRANK WEDEKIND's Spring Awakening (Frühlings Erwachen: Eine Kindertragödie, 1891) was first produced by MAX REINHARDT in 1906 in Berlin, fifteen years after it was written. Even so, the text had to be severely modified to meet standards of decency. Despite all the obstacles and precautions (Wedekind paid for the drama's publication with his own funds), Spring Awakening has remained one of Wedekind's best-known and longest-running plays.

Wendla Bergmann has just turned fourteen, and her mother is reluctant to explain the facts of life to her. Meanwhile, Melchior Gabor and Moritz Stiefel discuss their first experiences with "masculine stirrings." Melchior promises Moritz to elucidate the secrets of human reproduction in an essay. Soon after, Melchior and Wendla meet in the woods, where he agrees to her request to be beaten; during a subsequent meeting in a hayloft, the two have intercourse. Moritz, in the meantime, has failed his school examinations and asks Melchior's mother to finance his fleeing to America. Moritz fears his own parents' reaction and threatens suicide if Frau Gabor denies his request. She does just that, however, and Moritz shoots himself on the riverbank. Moritz's father disowns him at the funeral, and the school authorities decide to expel Melchior: His essay on procreation is seen as the cause of Moritz's demise and as a potential threat to the school. Melchior's father convinces Frau Gabor that she has been too liberal in raising their son, who is then sent to a reformatory to learn discipline and "moral principles." At news of Wendla's pregnancy, her mother swiftly arranges an abortion, which leads to Wendla's death.

Following his escape from the reformatory, Melchior stumbles across the headstones of Moritz and Wendla and blames himself for the deaths. An apparition of a headless Moritz appears, beckoning Melchior to join the dead and mock the living. He is interrupted, however, by a Masked Man who convinces Melchior to follow him—and thus affirm life—as the drama ends.

Spring Awakening lacks a traditional dramatic development of conflict and resolution; the scenes are largely self-contained and loosely connected. Critics have compared Wedekind's drama to Georg Büchner's (1813–1837) Woyzeck (written 1836–1837, published 1879) in its form and use of language. Spring Awakening is considered Wedekind's break with NATURALISM and a precursor to EXPRESSIONISM. Although subtitled "A TRAGEDY," the drama does not follow traditional principles of the genre and should also be seen in its relationship to COMEDY.

Spring Awakening offers a scathing attack on the social institutions of the Wilhelmine era. Parents are portrayed as prudish and selfish; schoolmasters caricatured as vain, pedantic, and strict beyond reason; the church aloof and literal in its use of scripture; the reformatory brutal and impersonal. The children submit to natural sexual impulses partly in defiance, partly in ignorance of societal expectations. Scenes of masturbation, sadomasochism, intercourse, homosexual intimacy, suicide—and even reading Faust—stand in stark contrast to the "moral world order" and bourgeois bliss imagined by the adults.

The Masked Man (played by Wedekind in the original production), who defines “real” morality as the product of both (individual) desire and (objective) duty, ultimately acts as a kind of arbiter between the polarized entities of individual vitalism and social repression.

[See also Germany]

FURTHER READING

Boa, Elizabeth. The Sexual Circus: Wedekind's Theatre of Subversion. Oxford: Blackwell, 1987.

Lewis, Ward B. The Ironic Dissident: Frank Wedekind in the View of His Critics. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1997.

Pickerodt, Gerhart. Frank Wedekind: Frühlings Erwachen [Frank Wedekind: Spring Awakening]. Frankfurt: Diesterweg, 1984.

Wagener, Hans, ed. Erläuterungen und Dokumente. Frank Wedekind: Frühlings Erwachen [Commentary and Documents. Frank Wedekind: Spring Awakening]. Stuttgart: Reclam, 1980.

Martins Masulis

STAGE DIRECTIONS AND STAGE SETS

Plays written and printed before the 19th century contained very few stage directions. They became important in the early MELO-DRAMA, which featured much more physical action than classical drama. Often the directions in the ACTING versions were technical and intended for actors, not readers. “In the side flat, R.2E, is the door” meant the door was in the piece of painted canvas placed at the second entrance (for the actors) at the right side of the stage (from the actor's point of view). The rise of the realistic drama, with the replacement of the wings and flats with more solid scenery and the positioning of furniture about the stage, called for more direction. Similarly, as acting became more life-like, instructions for the actor became more detailed. The directions for the tea party in CASTE (1867) by T. W. ROBERTSON, who was a director as well as an actor, afford a fine example of the change that was taking place.

HENRIK IBSEN was largely responsible for bringing about this change. Much of his income came from the printed play, and his stage directions were intended to aid the reader as much as the actor. (His directions are from the audience's point of view, as are EUGENE O'NEILL's). The very lengthy descriptions in GEORGE BERNARD SHAW's early plays show the extent to which he had readers in mind.

Those stage directions having to do with what the eyes see often have a much more powerful effect on the viewer than on the reader, who after reading the direction once may easily forget it. The conscientious reader will draw a sketch of the scene as a reminder of what the stage looks like. A visual symbol will have a much greater and longer lasting impact on the stage than on the page. In Shaw's Candida, Titian's painting of the Assumption of the Virgin has a central place in the set, serving as a constant, at times subliminal, reminder of the psychological relationship of the two principal characters, the adolescent Eugene and the motherly Candida.

Portraits can afford a way of keeping the past always present in the action. The portrait of the murdered man in ÉMILE ZOLA's THÉRÈSE RAQUIN is as inescapable as the punishment that will come to the murderers. In Ibsen's HEDDA GABLER, every time our eye glimpses the portrait of Hedda's father in the uniform of a general, we are reminded of how much this manly woman owes to him. In Ibsen's ROSMERSHOLM, “the walls are hung with past and recent portraits of clergymen, officers and officials in their robes and uniforms,” powerful visual symbols of the spell cast by family tradition and established society, the dead still present among the living. O'Neill in MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA uses portraits for the same purpose but intensifies the stage effect: “In the flickering candlelight the eyes of the Mannon portraits stare with a grim forbiddingness.”

The Christmas tree in the first act of Ibsen's A DOLL'S HOUSE establishes the warm atmosphere of a happy home. When we see it in the next act stripped of its decorations, we sense that Nora's marriage is in trouble. If Ibsen (who had a painter's eye) had not introduced the bare, unadorned tree, an insightful designer would have.

O'Neill's stage directions seem too numerous, encumbering the text. “Lavinia trying to break away from her, half putting her hands up to her ears,” “Then suddenly—with a strange jealous bitterness”: directions like this seem to belong in a novel, not a play script. Many actors resent being dictated to in this way, but when they violate O'Neill's directions, the ear catches a false note. O'Neill grew up in the theater and he knew how to create the effect that he wanted.

The original production of THE ICEMAN COMETH (1946), which O'Neill himself saw through rehearsals, had a set designed by his long-time friend ROBERT EDMOND JONES that perfectly captured the thrust of the plot. The first two acts took place in the back room of the tavern, but in the third act, as the characters made their feeble attempts to rid themselves of their pipe dreams, the set showed the barroom close to the street, with some light coming in. When the play is staged in the round, as it often is, that highly suggestive movement toward the light is lost.

In the best set designs, thanks either to the dramatist or the designer or to both, the whole set serves a symbolic function. In Shaw's HEARTBREAK HOUSE, the room represents part of “an old-fashioned high-pooed ship,” and all the talk in the play about the ship of state running aground has a visual backing. In AUGUST STRINDBERG's THE DANCE OF DEATH, the set is a round room in a fortress, underscoring both the plight of the main characters, a man and wife trapped in an unhappy marriage, and the circular form of the plot. For ARTHUR MILLER's DEATH OF A SALESMAN, Jo Mielziner devised a unit set that memorably captured the subjective nature of the drama. SAMUEL BECKETT's set for WAITING FOR GODOT is as visually eloquent as Beckett's text.

O'Neill complained that no one had ever realized the set for DESIRE UNDER THE ELMS as he wished it. His own sketch shows what he wanted, a visual equivalent of what he describes in words: the elms "bend their trailing branches down over the roof. . . . There is a sinister maternity in their aspect, a crushing, jealous absorption."

One of the most striking visual effects in modern drama occurs at the end of Ibsen's GHOSTS. After nearly three acts of rain, the sun bursts forth as Oswald goes insane. This is also one of the most cruelly ironic effects in drama, since the sun symbolizes the joy of life that Oswald has lived for and believed in.

Stage props (properties) are sometimes emblematic of what the whole play is about. The songbird in a cage in Strindberg's MISS JULIE, the pistol in Hedda Gabler, and the seagull in ANTON CHEKHOV's play THE SEAGULL are virtual stand-ins for the main characters. Some props bring to light what is buried in the dialogue (SUBTEXT). The cigar that Nora lights for Dr. Rank in A Doll's House and the fire poker that Candida holds in her hand in Shaw's play (act 3) were especially potent symbols in an age of sexual repression.

Sound can be hauntingly effective in the theater. The foghorns in LONG DAY'S JOURNEY INTO NIGHT conjure up an image of the fog surrounding the house and of a family drifting away from reality. The sound of a breaking string in Chekhov's THE CHERRY ORCHARD and of axes chopping down the trees well up from the very heart of the drama.

[See also Dramatic Dialogue]

FURTHER READING

Ashley, Leonard R. N. "A Note on Stage Directions." In Nineteenth-Century British Drama, ed. by Leonard R. N. Ashley. New York: Scott, Foresman, 1967. 18–21.

Evert Sprinchorn

STAGE DOOR

A play in three acts by GEORGE S. KAUFMAN and EDNA FERBER, Stage Door was first produced by Sam H. Harris on October 22, 1936, at the Music Box Theatre in New York. It was directed by Kaufman himself, starred Margaret Sullavan, and ran for 169 performances.

The play is set in the Footlights Club in New York City, a residence for aspiring stagestruck women. A few lucky ones work on Broadway, but this is during the Depression and jobs are scarce; most spend months working as a salesclerks in department stores or dancing in nightclubs. One leaves for Hollywood. Another has intimate relations with a rich married man and leaves the Club. Still another, penniless and discouraged, commits suicide.

With a cast of twenty-one women and eleven men, the story revolves around Terry Randall. In one sense, it is Terry's success story, as she gains both work and marriage in the end. Terry holds to her dream, earning her living elsewhere, and finally gets "a really fine" play to star in. Its producer-to-be is David Kingsley, also stagestruck, working as a Hollywood agent in New York. Terry and David have been dating for several months, and at the end of the play, they find themselves in love and working together for theater.

One issue implanted in Stage Door is its playwrights' unmistakable attitude toward Hollywood. Terry twice giving up a chance to become a movie star is contrasted with Keith Burgess, a radical playwright with whom Terry had worked writing a play for a year. The play opens on Broadway starring another woman, and when Keith becomes successful, he moves to Hollywood with a $2,000-a-week contract, as so many other talented playwrights did during this period. After a year's stay, Keith comes back, but says he's signed up "for another year." He is described by Terry's friend Judith as "one of those fellows started out on a soapbox and ended up in a swimming pool." Before he left for Hollywood, Keith told Terry, "I'll write their garbage in the daytime, but at night I'll write my own plays," but he didn't keep his promise. Terry dismisses him: "When you walked out on me a year ago, you walked out on yourself, too."

Terry's roommate, Jean Maitland, shares this attitude. Jean left for Hollywood a year ago, became a big movie star, and returns to New York to star on Broadway. However, after two weeks' rehearsal, she's found unable to act, and Hollywood executives decide to sell the play to David with Terry to star in it.

These gibes at Hollywood notwithstanding, Stage Door was turned into a very successful film, as so many of Ferber's novels and plays were. For stage and screen, Stage Door proved a good vehicle for actors to show their talents, portraying, with much laughter and music, young women's realistic choices, valid in any profession.

[See also United States, 1929–1940]

FURTHER READING

Gilbert, Julie. Ferber: Edna Ferber and Her Circle. New York: Applause, 1999.
Goldstein, Malcolm. George S. Kaufman: His Life, His Theater. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1979.
Shafer, Yvonne. American Women Playwrights 1900–1950. New York: Peter Lang, 1997.

Misako Koike

STANISLAVSKY, KONSTANTIN (1863–1938)

Born on January 5, 1863, in Moscow, Konstantin Stanislavsky was the son of a rich factory owner. He saw his task as both actor and director to bring together the creative actor, as defined by Russian realistic traditions, and the organically conceived production as staged by the Meiningen troupe. In 1898 he founded the MOSCOW ART THEATER (MAT) with Vladimir Nemirovich-Danchenko, and together they headed the MAT for forty years.

A new theatrical language was created by Stanislavsky and Nemirovich-Danchenko in ANTON CHEKHOV's THE SEAGULL (1898), for which Stanislavsky wrote the production plan. Stanislavsky, who did not at first understand the play, discovered that detailed physical action revealed the inner state of thought and emotion. Creating the illusion of life, Stanislavsky also revealed the novelty of Chekhov's dialogue, which he called the SUBTEXT, the repressed emotion underlying conversation. The method elaborated in Chekhov's plays was applied to other realistic playwrights, but proved inimical to TRAGEDY and to the work of William Shakespeare, both of which were seldom directed by Stanislavsky at the MAT and, usually, with qualified success.

He emphasized historical authenticity in drama by Aleksei Tolstoy (1898). In LYOV TOLSTOY's THE POWER OF DARKNESS (1902), he reproduced a peasant environment, although the tragic spirit of the drama became buried under a wealth of naturalistic detail. DIRECTING MAKSIM GORKY's first plays, Stanislavsky was interested in their depiction of modern life rather than the political views of the author, and this approach turned The Merchant Class (1901) into a dreary family history, Children of the Sun (1905) into a benign portrait of the intelligentsia, and THE LOWER DEPTHS (1902) into a combination of NATURALISM with ROMANTICISM. HENRIK IBSEN's AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE (1901) was the most successful of Stanislavsky's four Ibsen productions. Critics saw affinities between his own personality and that of Dr. Stockmann in Ibsen's play, with his passionate idealism, the same commitment to truth, as well as an understanding of the COMEDY of character.

His excursions into symbolist theater led to interesting, yet never wholly satisfactory, attempts to stage works by MAURICE MAETERLINCK, LEONID ANDREEV, and KNUT HAMSUN, while Stanislavsky's own unfinished play, The Comet (1908), shows the influence of Russian SYMBOLISM. Attempts to stage ALEKSANDR BLOK's poetic plays Song of Destiny and The Rose and Cross continued for years, but because Stanislavsky found they contradicted his concept of human nature, he never staged them. Soon after beginning to elaborate his system of actors' training, he staged Ivan Turgenev's A MONTH IN THE COUNTRY (1909) as a laboratory experiment designed to capture "the inner life of the human spirit" in a psychological manner. In order to broaden the Theatre's experience, he invited Edward Gordon Craig to stage Hamlet (1911) and "World of Art" designer Aleksandr Benois to direct and design productions of Molière's The Imaginary Invalid (1913) and Carlo Goldoni's The Mistress of the Inn (1914), among others.

In the crisis at the MAT during World War I, Stanislavsky saw the creation of studios as a means of establishing a new generation of directors and actors. He welcomed the 1917 revolution "as the miraculous liberation of RUSSIA," despite its involving the expropriation of the Alekseyev factories and the loss of his personal fortune. His production of Lord Byron's Cain, in 1920, reflected the pain of revolution and civil war. During the years 1918–1922, Stanislavsky continued to play major roles for new popular audiences, taught "the system," and directed new, or revived old, productions. He led foreign tours to Berlin, Paris, and the UNITED STATES in 1922–1924, with consequences for ACTING and stage production in America that reverberate to this day. Back in Moscow, he reinvigorated stage REALISM with productions of ALEKSANDR OSTROVSKY's An Ardent Heart (1926) and Pierre Beaumarchais's The Marriage of Figaro (1927). He supported MIKHAIL BULGAKOV by codirecting DAYS OF THE TURBINS (1926), and he welcomed the same dramatist's FLIGHT, although this was banned before production. Vsevolod Ivanov's Armoured Train 14–69 (1927) confirmed MAT's status as a Soviet theater, although this was something of a sell-out by Stanislavsky, who did not favor SOCIALIST REALISM in the arts.

Searching for contemporary writers, he directed controversial social satires such as Valentin Kataev's The Embezzlers and Leonid Leonov's Untilovsk (both in 1928). He also coproduced Aleksandr Afinogenov's Fear (1931), Ostrovsky's Talents and Admirers (1933), and collaborated, unhappily, with Bulgakov on productions of the latter's Molière (1936) and his dramatization of Nikolai Gogol's Dead Souls (1932), in all of which he pursued pure acting achievement unencumbered by production values. The production of Molière's Tartuffe, on which he worked exhaustively, was premiered in 1939 after his death on August 7, 1938, in Moscow. Stanislavsky, a life-long Christian, was buried in the Novo-Devichy monastery graveyard in Moscow, but his grave was not allowed a cross until 1994.

FURTHER READING

- Amiard-Chevreil, C. Le Theatre Artistique de Moscou (1898–1917) [The Moscow Art Theatre]. Paris: CNRS, 1979.
- Benedetti, Jean. Stanislavski, a Biography. London: Methuen, 1988.
- Carnicke, Sharon Marie. Stanislavsky in Focus. Harwood: Amsterdam, 1998.
- Rudnitsky, Konstantin. Russian and Soviet Theatre: Tradition and the Avant-Garde. Tr. by Roxanne Permar. London: Thames & Hudson, 1988.
- Slonim, Marc. Russian Theatre from the Empire to the Soviets. London: Methuen, 1963.
- Smeliarsky, Anatoly. Is Comrade Bulgakov Dead? Mikhail Bulgakov at the Moscow Art Theatre. Tr. by A. Tait. London: Methuen, 1993. An abridged version by the author of his Mikhail Bulgakov v Khudozhestvennom teatre [Mikhail Bulgakov at the Art Theatre], 2nd ed. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1989.
- Stanislavski, Constantin. My Life in Art. Tr. by J. J. Robbins. Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1967.
- Worrall, Nick. The Moscow Art Theatre. London and New York: Routledge, 1996.

DEN STARKARE See THE STRONGER

STEFANOVSKI, GORAN (1952–)

Goran Stefanovski (born on April 27, 1952, in Bitola, MACEDONIA) received his bachelor of arts degree in English language and literature at the Faculty of Philology in Skopje. He then studied DRAMATURGY at the Faculty of Dramatic Arts in Belgrade. He was awarded a master's degree in 1979 upon presentation of his dissertation entitled Stage Directions as the Foundation of the Theatre of SAMUEL BECKETT. He worked as a script editor in the Drama Department of the Macedonian Television from 1974 to 1978. He was an assistant professor at the Philological Faculty in Skopje (1978–1986) and a full professor of dramaturgy at the Faculty of Dramatic Arts in Skopje (1986–1998). Later, in Canterbury, ENGLAND, he taught scriptwriting at the Canterbury Christ Church University College and at Kent University. He is a member of the Macedonian Academy of Arts and Sciences and a member of the Macedonian PEN Center.

Stefanovski is a crucial representative of modern Macedonian dramatic writing and one of the most important and widely performed Macedonian playwrights of all time. As a representative of the third wave of Macedonian writers, he did not lose his national voice, despite his European influences. In his plays he masterfully covers every thematic aspect that Macedonian drama had dealt with before him, but he is always looking ahead and never returning to ground that he has already covered. Stefanovski has an original and modern way of looking and analyzing the Macedonian traditional templates.

Stefanovski is the winner of major national and international writing awards. His play Sarajevo was published in the United Kingdom in Storm magazine and in the United States in Performing Arts Journal and Balkan Blues. BkMk Press published HI-FI & The False Bottom in 1985.

PLAYS: Jane Zadrogaz (1974); Wild Flesh (1979); Flying on the Spot (1981); Hi-fi (drama, 1983); The False Bottom (1984); The Dishevelled Alphabet (television serial, 1985); Tattooed Souls (1985); The Black Hole (1987); Long Play (1988); Shades of Babel (1989); Chernodrinski Is Coming Home (1991); Sarajevo (Tales from a City) (1992–1993); Bacchanalia (1996); Casabalkan (1997); Euralien (1998); Hotel Europa (2000)

FURTHER READING

Šeleva, Elizabeta. Otvoreno pismo: Studii za Makedonskata literatura i kultura [Open Letter: Studies for Macedonian Literature and Culture]. Skopje: Magor, 2003.

Todorovski, Gane. Podaleku od zanesot, poblitku do bolot. Beleski kon Divo meso vo knigata Jane Zadrogaz; Divo meso od Goran Stefanovski [Faraway from Ecstasy, Closer to Pain. Notes about Wild Flesh in the book Jane Zadrogaz; Wild Flesh from Goran Stefanovski]. Skopje: Mislja, 1981.

Risto Stefanovski

STEIGERWALD, KAREL (1945–)

Born April 11, 1945, in Vacíkov near Příbram, CZECHOSLOVAKIA, Karel Steigerwald is another Czech playwright who came to the theater after schooling at the Prague Film Academy. In the Normalization period after 1968, he found that theater offered a greater degree of freedom for a writer than film, television, or even radio. The four plays that made his reputation as a biting critic of contemporary Czech society in the 1980s were written for the Drama Studio in Ustí nad Labem. They indirectly attack the short-sightedness, compromises, self-delusions, and hypocrisy of Czechs in the Normalization years, although none of the plays is set in that era.

Tartar Fair (Tatarská pouť, 1979, first produced in 1988) is set in the years bridging the 1950s and 1960s. A young narrator, himself a well-meaning compromiser, describes the struggles of his father to remain true to his essentially upright principles while being pressured and manipulated by a local official. Formally, the play is interesting for its fluid treatment of time from present to past. Period Dances (Dobové tance, 1980) shifts the action back to 1852, when Hapsburg authorities were investigating the actions of various townspeople during the failed revolution of 1948. Those who have done the most boasting about their revolutionary activity are the ones who quickly back off and try to find a scapegoat, glibly rationalizing their lack of backbone. Foxtrot (1982) presents a much broader picture, the years of the First Republic, 1918–1938. The Neapolitan Disease (Neapolská choroba, 1984, first produced in 1988) takes place in a field hospital in a forest at an unspecified time after some cataclysmic event. The surviving regime is corrupt and fatally self-deluded, and the ordinary people, including medical professionals, are weak if not incompetent. In all these plays, the dominant tone of satiric COMEDY in a realistic frame ranges from the mildly farcical to the grotesque.

In Sorrow, Sorrow, Fear, the Noose and the Pit (Hoře, hoře, strach, oprátka a jáma, 1990), comedy and satire are virtually nonexistent. The play transcends Steigerwald's focus on Czech society; it evokes the victims of European totalitarianism from the 1930s through the 1980s through a group of wandering refugees. Time and place and identity are in constant flux, and actors assume a variety of archetypal roles. In Nobel (1994), grotesque satiric comedy with a dark undertone is once again aimed at specifically Czech targets, now in the new Czech Republic. The characters are no longer victims of a Communist system but of their own illusions and deformed values.

Journalism has been Steigerwald's main activity in recent years, but not exclusively. Play Comedy (Hraj komedii, 2000) focuses on contemporary Czech society with a clear plot and distinct characterizations. He presents the new millennium as an age of rampant media distortions of truth and exploitation of personalities, including those of three actresses whose pasts harbor controversial activities in the Communist era. Steigerwald's moral stance is as sharp as ever as he questions the truth of historic events and human motivations.

SELECT PLAYS: Tartar Fair (Tatarská pouť, 1979); Period Dances (Dobové tance, 1980); Foxtrot (1982); Neapolitan Disease (Neapolská choroba, 1984); Sorrow, Sorrow, Fear, the Noose and the Pit (Hoře, hore, strach, oprátka a jáma, 1990); Nobel (1994); Play Comedy (Hraj komedii, 2000)

FURTHER READING

Burian, Jarka M. "Czech Theatre, 1988: Neo-Glasnost and Perestroika," Theatre Journal 41, no. 3, Performance in Context (October 1989): 381–395.

Jarka M. Burian

STEIN, GERTRUDE (1874–1946)

Gertrude Stein was born on February 3, 1874, in Allegheny, Pennsylvania. As a child Stein lived in Europe until her wealthy German-Jewish family relocated to Oakland, California, when she was five. She led a privileged and independent childhood, reading prodigiously and frequently attending opera and theater. She attended Radcliffe (then Harvard Annex), studied psychology with William James, and attended medical school at Johns Hopkins before expatriating to Paris with her brother Leo. There, she became a prescient collector of modern painting (Paul Cézanne, Henri Matisse, Pablo Picasso), the hostess of an enormously influential salon, the life-partner of Alice B. Toklas, an icon of the AVANT-GARDE, and the author of more than six hundred literary works. She achieved commercial success at age fifty-nine and was lionized by the media and public during her lecture tour of the United States in 1934. Although her celebrity outshone her artistic achievements in the popular imagination, Stein's subversive, experimental writing has influenced the generations after her, and scholars and theater practitioners have become increasingly interested in her work.

Although her best-known work, The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas, is a straightforward if whimsical narrative, her importance as a writer comes from the thoroughness and breadth of her experiments in a wide range of genres. Important texts include her massive novel The Making of Americans, a cubist-inspired series of portraits called Tender Buttons, as well as a number of texts that bring together her singular poetic voice with her interests in philosophy, psychology, language, and the rhythms of consciousness. Her style affects a naïveté that is analogous to fauvism in art, a complexity and multidimensionality that gives her affinities with the cubists, and a penchant for strategies of nonmeaning that link her with DADAISM. Her mixture of lush poetry and cryptically encoded eroticism anticipates both progressive queer writing and language poetry.

Stein's eighty plays, many of which remain unproduced, constitute modernism's most thoroughgoing departure from dramatic conventions, completely re-imagining our expectations of story, incident, and time, and dismissing entirely conventional notions of character and dialogue. With few exceptions, her plays take place in a "continuous present" in which they are perpetually in a state of beginning and their revision is a frequent subject of the plays themselves. In later plays, like FOUR SAINTS IN THREE ACTS, she expanded her aesthetic to include the notion of the play as landscape. While the theoretical dimension of her playwriting is heady and abstract, the texts themselves pay earthy, sensuous homage to the everyday, often incorporating letters, advertisements, and lists and characters from history, from her life, and from the newspapers. Her lecture/essay "Plays" is one of the most searching and vigorous theoretical documents of the modern theater.

Stein, who died on July 27, 1946, in Paris, FRANCE, has had a crucial influence on the development of American avant-garde theater; her plays have been produced by the LIVING THEATRE, Judson Church, The Wooster Group, ANNE BOGART, James Lapine, RICHARD FOREMAN, and ROBERT WILSON. Her influence is also keenly felt in the writing of her contemporary THORNTON WILDER as well as Lee Breuer, SUZAN-LORI PARKS, and David Greenspan, and her notion of the play as landscape paved the way for environmental theater, site-specific theater, and performance art.

(See also United States, 1860–1940)

SELECT PLAYS: Geography and Plays (1922); Operas and Plays (1932); Four Saints in Three Acts (music by Virgil Thomson, 1934); Byron, A Play (1935); Doctor Faustus Lights the Lights (1938); In Savoy, or, Yes Is for a Very Young Man (1945); The Mother of Us All (music by Virgil Thomson, 1947); Last Operas and Plays (edited by Carl Van Vechten, 1949)

FURTHER READING

Dydo, Ulla. Gertrude Stein: The Language That Rises, 1923–1934. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern Univ. Press, 2003.

Marranca, Bonnie. Ecologies of Theater. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Univ. Press, 1996.

Robinson, Marc. The Other American Drama. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1994.

Ryan, Betsy Alayne. Gertrude Stein's Theatre of the Absolute. Ann Arbor: UMI Research Press, 1984.

Stendhal, Renate, ed. Gertrude Stein in Words and Pictures. Chapel Hill, N.C.: Algonquin, 1994.

Mark Lord

STERNHEIM, CARL (1878–1943)

Just why Carl Sternheim has been so ignored in the English-speaking world is a difficult yet significant question. Born on April 1, 1878, in Leipzig, GERMANY, it was there he had a first round of popularity that began with the staging of THE UNDERPANTS, also translated as The Bloomers (Die Hose, 1911), and only ended when his plays were banned during World War I. His revival picked up right after 1945, when The Snob (Der Snob, 1914) was one of the first plays to be performed in occupied Berlin, and plays from the cycle Scenes from the Heroic Life of the Middle Classes (Aus dem bürgerlichen Heldenleben) continue to be popular.

Cynics might point to the dearth of home-grown German COMEDIES as the reason for Sternheim's standing; the ready supply of genuine comedies in English would explain why he has not been imported.

Even in Germany, however, Sternheim's reception has been one-sided, consisting mainly of the comedies played with a light touch. (He is frequently compared to Molière). Other plays by Sternheim, such as Tabula Rasa (1916) about political struggles among factory workers, or Uznach School (Die Schule von Uznach, 1926), a hilarious send-up of Neue Sachlichkeit (NEW OBJECTIVITY), are relatively unknown.

One factor shaping Sternheim's reception is that he cannot be easily classified as belonging to a specific movement. He was neither a decided expressionist nor consistent in his political views, despite an involvement with the leftists around the periodical The Action (Die Aktion). Another obstacle is Sternheim's idiosyncratic style of language, which omits verbs and modifiers, inverts syntax, and operates with bizarre similes. For example, the title character in Paul Schippel, Esq. (Bürger Schippel, 1913) says of himself: "Was yesterday yet a hare which fearfully crouched in the cabbage. Is now however such colossal activity alive that knives grow from my toes, sabres from my teeth." Unlike the language experiments of EXPRESSIONISM, which were mainly confined to poetry and came in small doses, Sternheim's make extended demands on audiences.

A clue to understanding Sternheim may lie in the fact that one of his last plays, before he went into exile and fell silent, was about OSCAR WILDE, the prototypical dandy. Dandyism as a philosophy presumes that style is substance. Sternheim's worlds are ones in which surface appearances are all there is. Hence, in The Underpants, Theobald Maske is so outraged when his wife displays her underpants in public because he knows that clothing makes identities in contemporary society. Audiences want to laugh at such notions, but if fashion is everything, then all conflicts turn on matters of taste without any governing moral standards. That, as Sternheim saw all too clearly, meant that the choice between good and evil had become irrelevant. The implications become clear in Uznach School, where the headmaster of the girls' school reduces them to objects according to the latest fashion so that they will be marketable products. Although Sternheim could not foresee the rise of the Nazis to power, he too was alert to the dangers Walter Benjamin (1892–1940) saw in the aestheticization of politics. In short, the triumph of fashion would turn into the triumph of the will. He died on November 3, 1942, in Brussels, Belgium.

SELECT PLAYS: The Underpants (Die Hose, 1911); The Strong Box (Die Kasse, 1912); Paul Schippel, Esq. (Bürger Schippel, 1913); The Snob (Der Snob, 1914); The Candidate (Der Kandidat, adapted from Flaubert, 1914); 1913 (1915); Tabula Rasa (1916); The Grouser (Der Stänker, 1917); The Mask of Virtue (Die Marquise von Arcis, after Diderot's Jacques le Fataliste et son maître, 1918); The Contemporary Unbound (Der entfesselte Zeitgenosse, 1920); The Adventurer (Der Abenteurer, 1922); The Good-for-Nothing (Der Nebbich, 1922); The Fossil (Das Fossil, 1925); Oscar Wilde (1925); Uznach School (Die Schule von Uznach, 1926); John Pierpont Morgan (1930)

FURTHER READING

- Chick, Edson M. "Sternheim's 1913 as Satire: Fantasy and Fashion." In Studies in the German Drama: A Festschrift in Honor of Walter Silz, ed. by Donald H. Crosby and George C. Schoolfield. Chapel Hill: Univ. of North Carolina Press, 1974. 213–224.
- Dedner, Burghard. Carl Sternheim. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
- Gittleman, Sol. "Sternheim, Wedekind, and Homo Economicus." The German Quarterly 49, no. 1 (1976): 25–30.
- Hays, Michael. "Carl Sternheim's Don Juan: An Artist in Search of His Art." The Germanic Review 53, no. 3 (1978): 115–123.
- Myers, David. "Carl Sternheim: Satirist or Creator of Modern Heroes?" Monatshefte 65 (1973): 39–47.
- Sternheim, Carl. The Underpants. Adapted by Steve Martin. New York: Theia/Hyperion Books, 2002.
- Williams, Rhys W. "Carl Sternheim's Image of Marx and His Critique of the German Intellectual Tradition." German Life & Letters NS 32 (1978–1979): 19–29.

Arnd Bohm

STICKS AND BONES

That's what I am—a young . . . blind man in a room . . . in a house in the dark, raising nothing in a gesture of no meaning toward two voices who are not speaking.

—David, Act 1

Composed and redrafted between 1969 and 1971, Sticks and Bones is the second play of DAVID RABE's Vietnam trilogy. It premiered at Villanova University in 1969 and debuted in New York City at the Public Theatre in 1971, following the success of Rabe's first professionally produced work, The Basic Training of Paulo Hummel, earlier that year. For a time, both plays were running simultaneously, which was remarkable because no playwright besides William Shakespeare had had more than one work produced at the Public at the same time. Producer Joseph Papp later moved the play to Broadway, and in 1972, Sticks and Bones received the Tony Award for Best Play.

Although the crisis is precipitated by the homecoming of David, a soldier blinded in the Vietnam War, Sticks and Bones is not a condemnation of war, but rather an indictment of racism, religious hypocrisy, and moral decay thinly camouflaged by the veneer of middle-class American respectability. The principal characters are named after the Nelsons, whose ideal (and real) television family appeared weekly on the American Broadcasting Corporation network (The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet, 1952–1966). David is haunted by memories of war and of his relationship with a "yellow girl," Zung. Though David abandoned her, the indelibility of his memories is signified by the girl's ghostly presence in the home. The family becomes increasingly disturbed by David's isolation, obsessions, and apparent loathing of them all. His mother, Harriet, summons Father Donald, a Catholic priest, to intervene, but David repudiates him violently.

David remains unrepentant about his relationship with the "alien" Zung, an Asian prostitute whom his loved ones consider a cultural and moral monstrosity. Unable to disguise its repugnance toward his miscegenation, the family comes to view David as a contaminant who threatens to undermine the household, which represents white, middle-class America. The family saves itself by encouraging David to cut his wrists with a razor they provide; in the end, they surround David as he bleeds to death in the living room, while brother Ricky plays an up-tempo tune on his guitar. Walter Kerr observes that David had "already described this home as his coffin. . . . if the people in it could ever see themselves, they would see that there was no one there. Why shouldn't he be as dead as they are?"

Sticks and Bones was scheduled to air on the Columbia Broadcast System in March, 1973, as part of a series of televised versions of plays produced by Joseph Papp; however, network chairman William S. Paley abruptly cancelled the program. American prisoners of war recently had begun to return home, and network affiliates feared that the broadcast would be too "abrasive." Eventually, the play was aired but without commercial sponsorship. Though topical and controversial in its day, a revival by the Actors' Theatre of Washington did not "take a 1996 audience to any surprising new places," according to Nelson Pressley of the Washington Times.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Epstein, Helen. Joe Papp: An American Life. Cambridge and New York: Da Capo Press, 1996.

Rabe, David. "Introduction." In The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel/Sticks and Bones: Two Plays by David Rabe. New York: Viking Press, 1973.

Shaw, Marilyn, and Jeniffer Terry. Vietnam, Perspectives & Performance: Two Plays About Real People Affected by the Legacy of the Vietnam Conflict, 2nd ed. Cedar Falls, Iowa: Association for Textual Study & Production, 1996.

Zinman, Toby Silverman, ed. David Rabe: A Casebook. New York and London: Garland Publishing, 1991.

Bill Conte

STILL STANDS THE HOUSE

GWEN PHARIS RINGWOOD's one-act Still Stands the House (1939) was one of the first plays to present the Canadian prairie experience. It is still considered one of the finest examples of Canadian folk drama ever written. The play has an authentic feel because Ringwood drew on her firsthand experiences of growing up on the Alberta prairie. The play also contains rich symbolism and carefully crafted, poetic language, reminiscent of JOHN MILLINGTON SYNGE and SEAN O'CASEY.

The setting is the main room of a small farmhouse situated in a remote area of the Alberta prairie. The room is furnished in an austere manner. The one bright spot in the room is a bunch of blooming hyacinths. A blizzard rages outside. The play opens with Ruth Warren discussing the possible sale of the farmhouse with real estate agent Arthur Manning. Ruth is twenty-six, pretty and vibrant. She is also pregnant and longs to move closer to town. Hester Warren, Ruth's sister-in-law, then enters the room. She is forty years old with a very stern demeanor. Hester becomes extremely angry when she discovers that Manning was inquiring about purchasing the farm. Hester says that she will not allow the farm to be sold. She has lived in this farmhouse her entire life and has strong ties to it. She has even maintained her father's room exactly as it was at the time of his death six years previous. She deeply resents Ruth. Hester asks whether the lanterns have been filled, and Ruth insists that she will fill them "in a minute."

Bruce returns home. He is a rugged man of about thirty. He and Ruth exit to the kitchen, and while they are out of the room, Hester angrily crushes one of the hyacinth stalks on the table, symbolically killing the life Ruth is trying to inject into the house. When Ruth and Bruce return, the two discuss selling the farm. At first, Bruce resists, but Ruth begs him to reconsider for their unborn child's sake. Bruce finally agrees. He then takes a lantern and goes out into the blizzard to check on a mare that may have her foal that night. Suddenly, Ruth realizes with horror that she has forgotten to fill the lanterns. Bruce will lose his way in the blizzard and freeze to death. Ruth decides she must go after him. Hester offers to fill the other lantern while Ruth is getting ready. Hester does not fill the lantern, however, and sends Ruth out into the blizzard with an almost empty lantern where both she and Bruce will now meet their deaths. Hester then hallucinates that her father is in the room, and she calmly reads to him from the Bible as the blizzard continues to swirl outside.

In this one-act, Ringwood presents the struggle of the resolute human spirit against the unyielding forces of nature. No matter what, Hester and the house will remain on the prairie forever. She will not abandon her roots. Still Stands the House is still being performed today, a testament to its quality and timelessness.

[See also Canada]

FURTHER READING

Anthony, Geraldine. Gwen Pharis Ringwood. Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1981.

Ringwood, Gwen Pharis. The Collected Plays of Gwen Pharis Ringwood.

Ed. by Enid Delgatty Rutland. Ottawa: Borealis Press, 1982.

Beth A. Kattelman

STOPPARD, TOM (1937–)

Tom Stoppard, arguably Britain's foremost dramatist at the start of the 21st century, happened to be born Czech, not English. His earliest years, like those of many others displaced by World War II, were traumatic. Qualities discernible in his plays often reflect a consciousness formed by early imprinting experiences. For instance, his years in journalism enrich crucial scenes on journalistic ethics in Night and Day. His serving as theater critic lends authority to The Real Inspector Hound. Indian Ink distinctly benefits from his having lived in India during his youth. Several marriages and alliances in Stoppard's life elicit honest, sometimes painful observations about love in The Real Thing. His early indoctrination into ABSURDISM through SAMUEL BECKETT clarifies the techniques behind ROSENCRANTZ AND GUILDENSTERN ARE DEAD. Stoppard's fascination with natural laws of physics and mathematics energize plays like Hapgood (quantum physics) and ARCADIA (Fermat's Last Equation). Few events from his life are left unmined. Stoppard's eclectic themes and wildly varied theatrical structures are readily identifiable as his by theatergoers and critics.

FIRST STEPPING STONES

In July of 1937, Tomas Straussler (his natal name) was born to Eugen and Martha Straussler in Zlin (Moravia), CZECHOSLOVAKIA. The senior Straussler was a physician with the Bata shoe firm, one of the largest employers in the region. On March 14, 1939—the day the Nazis invaded Czechoslovakia—the entire Straussler family left with other Jewish families working for Bata and headed for the company's factories in SINGAPORE. Before he ever mastered the Czech language, Tomas was introduced to English at a British school in Singapore. At four years old, Tomas, his older brother Peter, and his mother were evacuated to INDIA because of the Japanese invasion. His father remained behind, however, and was killed.

The brothers attended an English-speaking boarding school in Darjeeling from 1943 until 1946. Their mother, then managing a local Bata shoe store, in 1945 married a British Army officer named Kenneth Stoppard. After moving his new family to England, the senior Stoppard officially adopted his two stepsons, thereby giving them the Stoppard surname. As a youth Stoppard attended school in Nottinghamshire and Yorkshire when the family moved to Bristol. He left school at seventeen to become a journalist on Bristol's Western Daily Press, later switching to the Bristol Evening News.

At twenty-three in 1960, Stoppard faced a crossroads. He chose to quit his full-time work as journalist and try writing plays. To help stay afloat financially, he wrote two columns a week as a freelancer. That year he wrote a play called A Walk on the Water (revised as Enter a Free Man in 1968). The 1960s as a whole proved productive for him; he wrote a great number of works in a great variety of genres. Between 1960 and 1961 he wrote the one-act play The Gamblers and The Stand-Ins (later revised as The Real Inspector Hound). He became drama critic at London's Scene magazine for two years (1962–1963), during which time his play A Walk on the Water was telecast, and two television plays (I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby and Funny Man) were written though not produced. The year 1964 overflowed with writing: Three short stories were published, two BBC (British Broadcast Corporation) radio plays were aired (The Dissolution of Dominic Boot and "M" Is for Moon Among Other Things), the unproduced television play This Way Out with Samuel Boot was penned, and—while in Berlin on a Ford Foundation grant—his earliest work, A Walk on the Water, was staged in Hamburg, GERMANY. He also wrote the one-act piece Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Meet Lear.

Stoppard garnered further success in 1965. His play The Gambler (in two-act form) received its first staging at Bristol University, and his teleplay A Paragraph for Mr. Blake (adapted from a short story) was broadcast. Several episodes written for a BBC World Service drama series also were aired. The year 1966 found Stoppard at the threshold of a major career in writing. During that single year he published the novel Lord Malquist and Mr. Moon, aired a radio play, If You're Glad I'll Be Frank, televised A Separate Peace, and staged a translation (co-authored) of SLAWOMIR MROZEK's play Tango produced by the Royal Shakespeare Company. Most noteworthy of all, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead was produced by the Edinburgh Festival Fringe. With so many fertile seeds spread so broadly, there was no way Stoppard could be ignored in the theater world.

A WATERSHED IN STOPPARD'S CAREER

Kenneth Tynan, influential theater critic and literary manager for England's National Theatre, read a rousing review of the Edinburgh staging of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. On that basis, he telegraphed Stoppard requesting a script.

Within a year the COMEDY was produced at the National (1967). After the National's production of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern transferred to Broadway that same year, it earned 1968 Tony Awards for Best Play, Producer, Scenic Design, and Costumes. Altogether it received eight nominations—an amazing accomplishment for a beginner in the theater. British critics jumped aboard, as well, honoring the comedy with the John Whiting Award and the Evening Standard Drama Award. Positive reviews in 1967 also came for his plays Teeth and Another Moon Called Earth televised on BBC television; likewise for his BBC radio play Albert's Bridge. The prolific Stoppard became the toast of London and New York, based on an ingenious spin-off of William Shakespeare's Hamlet—his chief calling card.

There was little let-up in his productivity the following year. Both Enter a Free Man (revised from A Walk on the Water) and The Real Inspector Hound were given productions, while Neutral Ground appeared on television. Newly formatted Albert's Bridge and If You're Glad I'll Be Frank were staged in 1969, while his radio play Where Are They Now? was aired. Additionally, an earlier work, The Dissolution of Dominic Boot, was expanded to become The Engagement and was seen both in the movies and on television. In 1971 his stage works After Magritte and Dogg's Our Pet were produced.

Stoppard's pace quickened by 1972 with several new or reworked pieces. Stoppard's intricate and innovative play Jumpers was staged by London's National Theatre, and Artist Descending a Staircase was heard on the radio in Great Britain. New York City saw productions that year of The Real Inspector Hound and After Magritte. Stoppard turned to stage directing in 1973 with GARSON KANIN's comedy Born Yesterday, the same year his adaptation was staged of FEDERICO GARCÍA LORCA's grim THE HOUSE OF BERNARDA ALBA. New York productions of two of his works were mounted, Jumpers and Enter a Free Man, making 1974 a landmark year. Equally consequential for his career was the Royal Shakespeare Company's staging of TRAVESTIES, a work many still consider among his very finest. Stoppard turned to film and television in 1975. His adaptation of Jerome K. Jerome's Three Men in a Boat appeared on British television, as did a co-authored play (with Clive Exton), The Boundary. More important, however, was the transfer to New York of Travesties in 1975. The following year Travesties copped two Tonys, including Best Play. Stoppard's career was becoming rooted in the UNITED STATES as well as in England.

He continued writing plays over the next few years, during which period two directions became dominant. First, he toyed with the myriad spin-off possibilities of Shakespeare's dramas, and second, he began expressing increased political concern through his writing. In 1976 Stoppard spun out an agile knock-off of Shakespeare titled The (15 Minute) Dogg's Troupe Hamlet, performed outside the newly opened National Theatre home on London's South Bank. A revival of Jumpers in fact was chosen to launch the new National's inauguration. His play Dirty Linen moved to London's West End (comparable to New York's Broadway for commercial theater). Shakespeare reappears on Stoppard's radar in 1979 with tours in England and the United States of Dogg's Hamlet, Cahoot's Macbeth, a teasing work with political undercurrents.

STOPPARD AS POLITICAL MAN

From the mid-1970s through the mid-1980s, political themes infiltrated his theatrical work. Specifically, Stoppard was aggrieved by terrible injustices stemming from Soviet rule of Eastern Europe—in particular, in his native Czechoslovakia. In 1976 he spoke out publicly against Soviet mistreatment of dissidents in the Russian-controlled Iron Block countries. By the next year, a group of Czech intellectuals—including Czech dramatist VÁCLAV HAVEL—published a declaration of dissent titled Character 77 that became a rallying call to fight Soviet domination. It also led to the imprisonment of many involved, Havel among them. Stoppard visited Czechoslovakia and published his findings regarding the iron-fisted repression of all dissidents. Direct results of these experiences were several works by Stoppard for the stage and for television. In 1977 his television drama Professional Foul documented the house arrest of a fictionalized Czech writer who must smuggle the "truth" about his nation to the outside world. That same year, Stoppard's extraordinary, innovative play Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (built around a musical mnemonic) showcased a boy being separated from his politically dissident father. The plot paralleled an actual case behind the Iron Curtain. Making the work even more original was Stoppard's inclusion of a full symphonic orchestra on stage to serve as a character along with the actors. The world-renowned conductor and composer Andre Previn composed music specifically for the orchestra. The work was first performed in the United States the following year.

Every Good Boy was staged on several more occasions, with its protest theme eliciting support from the Western world, as Stoppard became more deeply immersed in speaking out about persecuted Czech dissidents and Soviet Jews. He served as chairman of the worldwide movement leading to the release of a boy in the U.S.S.R. to join his mother. In 1980 Stoppard traveled to Munich to participate in a protest over the imprisonment of Havel. When Polish leader Lech Walesa and his Solidarity protest union were forcibly detained by the puppet government in Poland, Stoppard wrote a television drama, Squaring the Circle (1982), about the Solidarity movement. Four years later Stoppard participated in a rally protesting the restrictions placed by the Soviets on 10,000 Russian Jews seeking to emigrate. Ironically, upon the demise of the Communist rule, both Havel and Walesa were to become presidents of their respective nations.

Another display of a politicized Stoppard exists in his powerful 1978 drama Night and Day. The year before, a union representing journalists in England argued for a closed shop. A former journalist himself, Stoppard saw problems regarding freedom of expression in the union position, and he wrote publicly of his opposition. This experience has parallels to Night and Day, in which the plot centers on two contrasted journalists, only one whose sole cause is to report the truth. Stoppard does not reveal passionate views on usual Marxist-Capitalism themes, as have some playwrighting peers in England (e.g., DAVID HARE, HOWARD BRENTON, JOHN ARDEN, ARNOLD WESKER, and EDWARD BOND). But his writings and pronouncements verify a firm conscience, leading him to do battle in political arenas that mean the most to him.

STOPPARD'S MULTIPLE THEATRICAL INTERESTS

Movies always were vital in the career of Tom Stoppard. His output of fine film scripts accelerated in the 1970s just as his plays were establishing his overall reputation. It also was the time he became active politically. A simple listing of his original film plays include The Romantic Englishwoman (1975), co-authored with Thomas Wiseman, and Brazil, for which he received an Academy Award nomination in 1985. Stoppard has uncredited contributions to screenplays for Steven Spielberg's movies Always and Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade in 1989, and he wrote the screenplay for Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, released in 1991. That movie took the Golden Lion medal at the Venice Film Festival. Not all his attempts succeeded for revising his own plays as movies. His 1995 adaptation of Hapgood remains unfilmed, and efforts to adapt Arcadia for the screen have not met with success so far. His 1994 full-length animated movie version of Cats to date remains unproduced, as well.

His banner year was 1999. Stoppard and co-author Marc Norman shared an Academy Award for the film script of Shakespeare in Love—a movie that earned a total of seven Oscars, including Best Picture. That year, he co-authored Vatel, a French film released the following year. Meantime, Stoppard adapted to film numerous works written by others including Vladimir Nabokov's novel Invitation to a Beheading (1978) and Graham Greene's novel The Human Factor (1980). For the 1987 movie Empire of the Sun (directed by Steven Spielberg), Stoppard adapted J. G. Ballard's novel by that name. His movie scripts adapted from John le Carré's spy novel The Russia House (1990), from E. L. Doctorow's novel Billy Bathgate (1991), and from Robert Harris's novel Enigma (2000) were successfully filmed. Certain of his completed screenplays, though, have not been filmed. His 1988 movie script adapted from Laurens van der Post's novel A Far Off Place has not made it to the screen; likewise, his film version of Nicholas Mosley's novel Hopeful Monsters (1993).

Clearly, Stoppard evidences a lively mind ever searching for other writers' works to adapt. Throughout his career he has not hesitated to consider novels and plays to adapt for the stage, as well as for film. His original use of Shakespeare's Hamlet is an early case in point. During the decade he was active responding to Soviet oppression, Stoppard often turned to adapting for the stage. As is true of his adapted movie scripts, his stage adaptations have proven popular. His first staged adaptation (1973) was Federico García Lorca's The House of Bernarda Alba. His Undiscovered Country (1979) and On the Razzle (1981) were taken from German plays by ARTHUR SCHNITZLER and Johann Nestroy, respectively. The German Schnitzler again was Stoppard's source for an adaptation of Dalliance (1986), and Stoppard freely reworked Rough Crossing (1984) from the Hungarian Ferenc Molnár's Play at the Castle. More recently, Stoppard's version of ANTON CHEKHOV's THE SEAGULL was produced in 1997, directed by Peter Hall. If you were to count Stoppard's translations as adaptations, other staged adaptations would include his 1966 translation (with Nicholas Bethell) of Mrożek's Tango, his 1983 translation of the libretto for Sergei Prokofiev's opera The Love for Three Oranges, and his 1987 translation of Havel's Largo Desolato.

ASCENDING THE LADDER OF SUCCESS

Even though involved in selected political actions from the mid-1970s on, Tom Stoppard sustained a line of uncompromisingly fine dramas. Not all were popular with all audiences, and dramatic adaptations became more common, as noted. In 1982 Stoppard's new romantic comedy THE REAL THING was produced in London to strong reviews. Later, in New York with a different cast, a tidal-wave response led to almost a clean sweep. The Real Thing earned five 1984 Tony Awards from its seven nominations, including Best Play, Best Lead Actor, and Best Lead Actress. No other Stoppard play has won so many top honors on Broadway. Coincidentally, a 1999 revival of Real Thing led to three Tony Awards in 2000, including Best Play Revival.

The drama Hapgood (1988), in contrast, was coolly received in London and scarcely better in New York despite a revised script. The play remains one of Stoppard's rare disappointments. Coincidence or not, most of Stoppard's writing gravitated toward movies and television for a while, as noted above. All that changed in 1993 with the staging of his mind-teasing comedy Arcadia at the National Theatre. Arcadia enjoyed an extended run in London at the National Theatre and then in the West End. Its transfer to Broadway also was successful, earning it three Tony nominations, though no awards. Indian Ink, a stage version of his radio play In the Native State, opened in 1995 to strong reviews, suggesting that Stoppard had another winning streak going. His INVENTION OF LOVE (1997) at the National Theatre reinforced the judgment that he was back in top form. That show's shift to Broadway brought it five 2001 Tony nominations, including two wins, but not for Best Play. With the stunning success of the film Shakespeare in Love, which he helped write, Stoppard became arguably the most successful dramatist writing at the start of the new millennium.

Nor has Tom Stoppard slowed down, despite a shower of accolades. His most recent theatrical endeavor is an ambitious trilogy called THE COAST OF UTOPIA. Opening in 2002 at London's National Theatre, the three self-contained plays—Voyage, Shipwreck, and Salvage—constitute a biographical, political, and psychological chronicle beginning with events in 1852. Initial critical reaction has been only lukewarm, though audiences have appreciated the vastness of the enterprise it represents.

A FINAL, BRIEF OVERVIEW

From the above survey, it is evident Stoppard masters a myriad of topics in his plays, while shaping them into highly unique structures. Certain standout qualities define Stoppard's writing, with language and wit near the top. Only an acute intellect could write such razor-sharp dialogue imbued with engaging wit. Also central in Stoppard's writing arsenal is an irrepressible willingness to try out new modes and patterns. The variety of formats is extensive. Ultimately, the final effect is one of theatrical playfulness.

More constrained works such as Night and Day and The Real Thing hew closer to conventional NATURALISM in form. Deft plotting generates some surprises, all the same, such as cleverly planted ambiguities in Real Thing. Travesties, set in a Zurich library, offers a fictional conjunction of world famous figures—James Joyce, Vladimir Lenin, and Tristan Tzara (co-founder of DADAISM). Their personae are brilliantly interwoven by the writer to produce laughter and provoking thought. Arcadia and The Invention of Love, to a lesser extent, marvelously braid different time coordinates to reveal connections between different generations.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern delights using escapees from Hamlet as pilgrims seeking to understand life and self. Their tenuous lifeline to a “mother ship” is their connection to Shakespeare’s “real” drama Hamlet. The spin-off construct leads to a fresh style of theatrical narrative. Every Good Boy Deserves Favour transforms an orchestra into a character in the plot. Before Stoppard, such outrageous technical experiments were scarcely imaginable.

Thanks to an imagination of enormous breadth and a derring-do rare in today’s theater, Tom Stoppard continues to amuse, entertain, and—importantly—provoke serious thinking.

[See also England, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: A Walk on Water (1960, revised as Enter a Free Man, 1968); The Gamblers (one-act play, 1960–1961); The Stand-Ins (1960–1961, revised as The Real Inspector Hound, 1968); Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Meet King Lear (one-act play, 1964); Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (1966); Albert’s Bridge and If You’re Glad I’ll Be Frank (revised radio plays, staged together, 1969); After Magritte (1970); Dogg’s Our Pet (1971); Jumpers (1972); Travesties (1974); Dirty Linen (1976); The [15 Minute] Dogg’s Troupe Hamlet (1976); Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (1977); Night and Day (1978); Dogg’s Hamlet, Cahoot’s Macbeth (1979); Undiscovered Country (adapted, 1979); On the Razzle (adapted, 1981); The Real Thing (1982); Rough Crossing (adapted, 1984); Dalliance (adapted, 1986); Artist Descending a Staircase (revised radio play, 1988); Hapgood (1988); Arcadia (1993); Indian Ink (1995); The Invention of Love (1997); The Coast of Utopia (trilogy of Voyage, Shipwreck, and Salvage, 2002); Rock ‘n’ Roll (2006)

FURTHER READING

Billington, Michael. Stoppard: The Playwright. London: Methuen, 1987.
 Bloom, Harold, ed. Tom Stoppard: Modern Critical Views. New York: Chelsea House Publishing, 1986.
 Jenkins, Anthony. The Theatre of Tom Stoppard. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1987.
 Kelly, Katherine E. The Cambridge Companion to Tom Stoppard. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2001.
 Londré, Felicia Hardison. Tom Stoppard. Modern Literature Series. New York: Frederick Unger, 1981.
 Sammells, Neil. Tom Stoppard: The Artist as Critic. London: Macmillan, 1988.

C. J. Gianakaris

STOREY, DAVID (1933–)

Born in Wakefield, Yorkshire, England, on July 13, 1933, David Storey studied at the Wakefield College of Art and the Slade School of Fine Art in London, from which he received a diploma in 1956. While enrolled at the Slade School, Storey played rugby professionally for the Leeds club. Throughout his writing career, in both his plays and his novels, there has been a dramatic and thematic tension between the compulsive athlete and the reflective artist.

Other recurring subjects in Storey’s work have included the tensions in working class life, most specifically the tension between the need to remain connected to one’s background and the need to exceed the usual expectations of someone from that background; the forces in contemporary life that oppress individuality and the corrosive ramifications of that oppression; the tension between the values associated with stoicism and those associated with revolt; and the thin line between the iconoclast and the misfit.

Storey has received many honors for both his plays and for his novels. For The Restoration of Arnold Middletown (1966), which treats the maddeningly dreary life and prospects of a married school teacher, Storey received the Evening Standard award for most promising playwright. For The Contractor (1969), a comic allegory involving the erection of a tent for a wedding, he received the London Theatre Critics award, the Variety Club of Great Britain’s Writer of the Year award, and a New York Drama Critics Circle Award. For Home (1970), a drama set in a mental hospital that presents broad-reaching social commentary and has underlying allegorical elements, he received the Evening Standard drama award, the New York Drama Critics Circle Award, and a nomination for the Tony Award. And for The Changing Room (1971), which explores the comradery among the members of a rugby team, he received a New York Drama Critics Circle award and a Tony nomination.

For his novels, Storey has received the Macmillan Award for This Sporting Life (1960), the Geoffrey Faber Memorial Award for Pasmore (1972), and the Booker Prize for Saville (1977).

[See also England, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: The Restoration of Arnold Middletown (first produced 1966, first published 1967); The Contractor (produced 1969, published 1970); In Celebration (1969); Home (1970); The Changing Room (1971); Cromwell (1973); The Farm (1973); Life Class (produced 1974, published 1975); Mother’s Day (produced 1976, published 1977); Early Days (1980); Sisters (produced 1978, published 1980); Phoenix (1984); The March on Russia (1989); Caring (1992); Stages (1992)

FURTHER READING

Hutchings, William. The Plays of David Storey: A Thematic Study. Carbondale: Southern Illinois Univ. Press, 1988.
 Hutchings, William, ed. David Storey: A Casebook. Garland Reference Library of the Humanities; Casebooks on Modern Dramatists, No. 1293. New York: Garland, 1992.
 Liebman, Herbert. The Dramatic Art of David Storey: The Journey of a Playwright. Contributions in Drama and Theatre Studies, No. 71. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1996.
 Quigley, Austin E. “The Emblematic Structure and Setting of David Storey’s Plays.” Modern Drama 22 (1979): 259–276.
 Reinelt, Janelle. “The Central Event in David Storey’s Plays.” Theatre Journal 31 (1979): 210–220.

Solomon, Rakesh H. "Man as Working Animal: Work, Class, and Identity in the Plays of David Storey." Forum for Modern Language Studies 30, no. 3 (July 1994): 193–203.

Martin Kich

STOREY, RAYMOND (1956–)

Raymond Storey was born in Orillia, Ontario, CANADA, in 1956. He developed a love of theater very early. He wrote his first play when he was in the fourth grade, and as a teenager he was active in his high school plays, summer stock, and community theater. When he was seventeen, Storey attended a summer theater program at York University, where he made such an impression that he was offered early admission to York's theater department. Unfortunately, he did not have the grade point average to enter York, so he enrolled in the National Theatre School in Montreal. Storey experienced a very contentious time at the theater school and was asked to leave. He then moved to Toronto, where he worked as a part-time actor and full-time bartender.

In 1979 he moved to Edmonton and began to write plays. In 1980 he became playwright-in-residence for the Theatre Network. That same year he began his collaboration with composer John Roby. Their first production was Country Chorale, which premiered at the Blyth Festival in 1982. The two would continue their successful collaboration with two more musicals, The Girls in the Gang, which premiered in 1987, and The Dreamland, which premiered in 1989. Girls in the Gang won the Dora Mavor Moore Award for Outstanding New Revue/Musical in 1988.

Storey's plays are based strongly in character. His Saints & Apostles is a contemporary love story in which the characters must cope with the complication of HIV infection, and Cheek to Cheek is about a relationship that develops on the Trocadero Ballroom dance floor between a shy widower and a waitress. Both plays received the Sterling Award for Outstanding New Play. His critically acclaimed piece, The Last Bus, also relies heavily on relationships for its effect. The piece deals with the relationship between a young widow and her dead husband's best friend. The ability to write succinct dialogue that still reveals the complexity of his characters is what has most captivated audiences, and it is this skill for which he has received the most praise among critics.

Storey sets many of his plays and musicals in the past. Cheek to Cheek is set in the 1960s, and Girls in the Gang chronicles the women who were involved with the notorious, bank-robbing Boyd gang of the 1950s. Another of his award-winning plays, The Glorious Twelfth, involves an encounter between Ku Klux Klan recruiters and a rural Ontario family that takes place in 1927. The piece won the Dora Mavor Moore Award for Outstanding New Play.

One of Storey's most ambitious pieces to date is The Dreamland, a musical collaboration with John Roby. The piece is a large musical with a cast of twenty-seven people. The story opens in 1966 on the day of an auction to sell memorabilia from The Dreamland dance pavilion. Rose, the owner of building, is on hand for the sale, and her memories of The Dreamland's heyday are triggered by the event. The rest of the play jumps between the 1930s and the 1960s. The musical premiered at the Blyth Festival. It received critical acclaim and is recognized as one of the best Canadian musicals. Storey's most recent play is Lulie the Iceberg, an adaptation of a book written by Her Imperial Highness Princess Takamodo of Japan.

SELECT PLAYS: Country Chorale (1982); Angel of Death (1984); The Girls in the Gang (1987); The Last Bus (1987); The Dreamland (1989); Cheek to Cheek (1990); Saints & Apostles (1990); God and the Big Blue Chair (1991); In Principle (1991); Adventures in Turning Forty (1992); The Glorious Twelfth (1992); South of China (1997); Lulie the Iceberg (2001)

FURTHER READING

Citron, Paula. "Unlikely Duo Make Beautiful Musicals." Toronto Star (April 12, 1991): D-2.

Playwrights Union of Canada. Who's Who in the Playwrights Union of Canada, 3d. ed. Toronto: Playwrights Union of Canada, September, 1997. 130.

Wagner, Vit. "Toronto 'Piousness' Gives Playwright a Pain." Toronto Star (February 17, 1989): D-16.

Beth A. Kattelman

THE STORY OF BUTTERFLY LOVERS

The Story of Butterfly Lovers (Liang Shanbo yu Zhu Yingtai, Zhejiang yueju) by Xu Jin is the best-known romantic folk story in Chinese cultural history, comparable as the Chinese equivalent of Romeo and Juliet. As an oral folk legend, the folk story had its origins somewhere around A.D. 400 in the Jin Dynasty, although most of what has been transmitted to the contemporary audience was recorded from the Song Dynasty or later because very little was recorded on paper as the legend passed through the Six Dynasties, the Sui Dynasty, and the Tang Dynasty. For Chinese people, the romantic folk legend is the perfect love story in which both lovers remain faithfully devoted to each other until death. The tale also presents two eternal themes: the fundamental gender inequality in imperial CHINA and the utter absence of individual freedom in marriage and the resulting suffering of young people under feudal rites and family rules. The tale underwent changes throughout its long history of transmission, performance, and interpretation.

The folk tale has been interpreted for the stage many times. The version staged by the Yueju Opera (also known as Shaoxing Opera) is the most popular and successful theatrical rendition in modern China; it was produced as a film adaptation in 1953. In this version, talented and beautiful Zhu Yingtai dresses as a boy to study at boarding school and falls in love with her classmate Liang Shanbo. Liang proposed to the Zhu family only to find out that they have arranged her marriage to another man. Liang dies of love-sickness soon after. On her wedding day and on the way to the bridegroom's home, Zhu visits Liang's tomb, which was cracked by a sudden thunderbolt. She entered the tomb to be reunited with her lover. The two were then transformed into a pair of dancing butterflies, a traditional symbol of lovers.

The Butterfly Lovers was first staged as Yueju Opera in 1945 by the legendary actresses Yuan Xuefen and Fan Ruijuan. In 1951, it was restaged by the Eastern China Yueju Opera Troupe with Huang Sha as director, Xu Jin as playwright, Chen Jie and Xue Yan as composers of its musical score, and Xing Xi and Su Shifeng as stage designers. Fan Ruijuan played Liang Shanbo, and Fu Quanxiang played Zhu Yingtai. It won numerous prizes at the First National Festival of Classical and Folk Drama in 1952, including screenplay, acting, musical score, choreography, and stage design. In 1953, it was adapted into the first colored regional opera film by Shanghai Film Studio, codirected by Sang Hu and Huang Sha, and screenplayed by Xu Jin and Sang Hu. Yuan Xuefen played Zhu Yingtai, and Fan Ruijuan played Liang Shanbo. The 1953 adaptation focuses on the themes of gender equality and freedom of marriage, which was excellent propaganda for the Marriage Law of May 1950 that enacted equal rights of men and women and outlawed arranged marriages.

FURTHER READING

Yang Hsien-yi and Gladys Yang, tr. Love under the Willows [Liu yin ji].

Peking: Foreign Languages Press, 1956.

Mackerras, Colin. Chinese Drama: A Historical Survey. Beijing: New World Press, 1990.

Munro, Stanley, tr. and ed. The Eternal Love: The Story of Liang Shanbo and Zhu Yingtai. Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, and Hong Kong: Federal Publications, 1991.

Hongwei Lu

STRANGE INTERLUDE

Oh, Mother God, grant that I may some day tell this fool the truth!

—Nina, Act 7

Strange Interlude by EUGENE O'NEILL was first produced by the THEATRE GUILD on January 30, 1928, with designs by Jo Mielziner and featuring Lynn Fontanne as Nina.

Nina mourns Gordon, her lover who was killed flying in the war; she feels guilty for not having had sexual relations with him before he left. Through Nina's predicament, O'Neill explores the conflict between passion and conventional morals; her "body ached" but her "cowardly brain" prevailed and she remains "Gordon's silly virgin." Eager to give of herself in any way she can, she becomes a nurse.

After Nina's father dies, Ned Darrell, the ironic physician, believes that Nina should seek treatment for what he perceives as a self-sacrificial martyr complex, but she decides to marry brash young Sam Evans. Pregnancy fulfills her; where her face was once strangely fascinating, all that remains are "her unchangeably mysterious eyes." In a naturalistic plot device, Sam's mother explains that insanity runs in Sam's father's family—Sam himself was an "accident" after his parents spent the evening drinking and dancing—so Nina has an abortion but then becomes pregnant by Ned. Sam feels so guilty over not giving Nina a child that he's ready to offer her a divorce, but when Ned tells him he's to be a father, his hope is rekindled.

After young Gordon is born, the relationships among Nina, Sam, Ned, and Charles Marsden, an old family friend, are fraught with guilt, resentment, and suspicion, and Nina is quite aware that all three of the men are in love with her: "I feel their desires converge in me." Twenty years later, Nina envies her son both his youth and his fiancée Madeline. Ned has managed to liberate himself from his obsession with Nina, and although he prevents her from telling Madeline the truth about Gordon's paternity, she reveals the truth to the shocked Marsden. Sam suffers a massive stroke and dies several months later, leaving the others to deal with their memories.

In this play, O'Neill broke new ground by writing out the characters' interior monologues, which the actors performed in a series of full-stage freezes. Like the voice-overs of later films, the monologues revealed exactly what the people were thinking, so they were able to disclose thoughts and feelings to the audience without conveying them to each other. We hear their fears, conflicts, and anxieties as they make their way through their overt interactions. The ideas of Sigmund Freud were not yet common knowledge in the United States, so the play introduced many in its audience not only to frank exploration of abortion and adultery but also to a psychological perspective on inner turmoil and the contradictory complexity of personality. O'Neill raised the question of outward behavior deriving from inner neurosis.

O'Neill also explores his interest in how to stage the development of a character through time. Nina begins as striking and athletic, "tall with broad square shoulders, slim strong hips and long beautifully developed legs." A year later, "her eyes try to armor her wounded spirit with a defensive stare of disillusionment." When first pregnant, "her face has a contented expression, there is an inner calm about her." In her second pregnancy, "there is a triumphant strength about her expression, a ruthless self-confidence in her eyes." Another year, and "she looks noticeably older, the traces of former suffering are marked on her face." Eleven years later, Nina is thirty-five, "in the full bloom of her womanhood. . . . Her eyes are tragically sad in repose and her expression is set and mask-like." After another ten years, her hair is white, she wears too much make-up, and "her face is thin, her cheeks taut, her mouth drawn with forced smiling." In her last scene, twenty-six years after her first, "resignation has come into her face, a resignation that uses no make-up, that has given up the struggle to be sexually attractive and look younger." Throughout, all men wish to become part of her, and they regard her as mother, whore, and metaphor for the sea; she is especially the Jungian mother to whom each man strives to return.

The New York Herald Tribune's critic Percy Hammond (February 5, 1928) called the monologues "more of a whip than a cushion to our imagination." Barrett H. Clark praised O'Neill's "extraordinary gift for understanding and laying bare some of the complexities of the human mind and heart" (Houchin, 1993). Joseph Wood Krutch, also writing for the New York Herald Tribune (March 11, 1928), argued that O'Neill had put Freudian psychology to effective use, and acknowledged the spoken thoughts as taking the drama into territory formerly restricted to the novel.

Despite a performance time of nearly six hours, including a ninety-minute dinner break, the play ran for seventeen months, led to two touring companies, earned $275,000 (nearly $3 million in 2002 dollars) for O'Neill, and won the Pulitzer Prize. José Quintero directed the 1963 Actors Studio Theater revival with Geraldine Page; the 1985 Broadway revival featured Glenda Jackson.

[See also United States, 1860–1929]

FURTHER READING

Gross, Robert F. "O'Neill's Queer Interlude: Epicene Excess and Camp Pleasures." Journal of Dramatic Theory and Criticism 12 (Fall 1997): 3–22.

Houchin, John H. The Critical Response to Eugene O'Neill. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1993.

—. "Eugene O'Neill's 'Woman Play' in Boston." Eugene O'Neill Review 22 (Spring–Fall 1998): 48–62.

Kennicott, Leigh. "Asides in O'Neill's Strange Interlude: An Empirical Study." On-Stage Studies 20 (1997): 48–64.

Mandl, Bette. "Gender as Design in Strange Interlude." The Eugene O'Neill Review 19 (Spring–Fall 1995): 123–28.

Murphy, Brenda. "O'Neill's America: The Strange Interlude between the Wars." In The Cambridge Companion to Eugene O'Neill, ed. by Michael Manheim. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1998. 135–147.

Wolff, Tamsen. "Eugenic O'Neill and the Secrets of Strange Interlude." Theatre Journal 55 (May 2003): 215–234.

Jeffrey D. Mason

STRAUSS, BOTHO (1944–)

That a people wishes to assert its moral laws against another and is prepared to sacrifice blood to do so is something we no longer understand and, in our liberal-libertarian self-delusion, view as false and damnable.

—Botho Strauss, 1993

Born on December 12, 1944, in Naumburg-Saale, GERMANY, Botho Strauss is one of the most important playwrights of the contemporary German stage. The author of many novels and essays, he is best known for his complex, often surreal plays. Strauss has always shied away from publicity. He does not attend his premiers, nor does he appear in person to receive the literary prizes he has been awarded. He studied German and sociology in Cologne and Munich before becoming a theater critic and, in 1967, editor of the influential German magazine Theater heute (Theater Today). In 1970, Strauss became DRAMATURG at Berlin's Schaubühne am Halleschen Ufer and worked with the artistic director Peter Stein (1937–) for several years. He currently lives in Berlin, Germany.

The disruption of reality, fears of being lost, and the intrusion of the supernatural into everyday life constitute prominent themes in Strauss's plays. The atmosphere in his dramas is often gloomy, reminiscent of the German Romantic tradition. A member of the upper middle class and its culture-loving elite, Strauss criticizes this group time and again. His characters often function well in their familiar surroundings but become frightened and lost when confronted with unknown situations.

Big and Little (Gross und klein, 1978), Strauss's best known play, depicts a woman who is lost in time and place, suffering because she cannot understand the world and its lack of sensitivity and hope. Kalldewey, Farce (1981) questions current psychoanalytical approaches when a couple succumbs to obscure therapists and is driven into a surreal world. In The Park (Der Park, 1983) Strauss uses characters from William Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream. The fairies Oberon and Titania enter our world, only to learn that humans cannot understand the beauty of the fairy world and are lost in reality.

In such plays as The Tour Guide (Die Fremdenführerin, 1986), The Visitors (Die Besucher, 1988), Seven Doors (Sieben Türen, 1988), and Time and the Room (Die Zeit und das Zimmer, 1988), Strauss presents characters whose reality is changed and who cannot adjust to the new circumstances. A teacher in The Tour Guide, for example, falls in love with a tour guide in Greece, whom he eventually murders because she does not share his feelings.

Strauss's pessimistic approach reaches new heights in Final Chorus (Schlußchor, 1991), a drama exploring the shattered dreams of Germans upon the fall of the Berlin Wall. A chorus arbitrarily shouting the word "Germany" throughout the play underscores the individual tragedies and criticizes the nationalistic tendencies flaring up at the time. Strauss revisits this topic in The Balance (Das Gleichgewicht, 1993), set in Berlin in 1992, when the problems of a united Germany appeared insolvable. The play depicts an social order imbalanced not only by increased prices in Eastern Germany but also because the fall of Communism leaves the Germans with a blank set of values.

Strauss is considered a major representative of New Subjectivity, a literary movement seeking to deconstruct misconstrued and alienated notions of Western subjectivity. Strauss, however, departs from the deconstructivist conclusion that humankind is inevitably destined to a form of subjectivity in which the self is rendered homeless.

Strauss's controversial reputation stems in large part from his essay "Swelling Bock Song" ("Anschwellender Bocksgesang," 1993) in which he condemns leftist political views and positions himself politically and culturally on the Right, while simultaneously trying to distance himself from right-wing extremism.

SELECT PLAYS: The Hypochondriacs (Die Hypochonder, 1972); Familiar Faces, Mixed Feelings (Bekannte Gesichter, gemischte Gefühle, 1974); Reunion Trilogy (Trilogie des Wiedersehens, 1976); Big and Little (Groß und klein, 1978); Kalldewey, Farce (1981); The Park (Der Park, 1983); The Tour Guide (Die Fremdenführerin, 1986); Seven Doors (Sieben Türen, 1988); Time and the Room (Die Zeit und das Zimmer, 1988); Visitors (Besucher, 1988); Angela's Clothes (Angelas Kleider, 1991); Final Chorus (Schlußchor, 1991); Balance (Das Gleichgewicht, 1993); Ithaca (Ithaka, 1996); Jeffers—Act I and II (Jeffers—Akt I und II, 1998); A Kiss of Forgetting (Der Kuß des Vergessens, 1998); Similar Ones (Die Ähnlichen, 1998); Fantasy of Lot (Lotphantasie, 1999); The Idiot and His Wife Tonight in Pancomedia (Der Narr und seine Frau heute abend in Pancomedia, 2001); Unexpected Return (Unerwartete Rückkehr, 2001)

FURTHER READING

- Adelson, Leslie A. Crisis of Subjectivity: Botho Strauß's Challenge to West German Prose of the 1970s. Amsterdam: Rodopi, 1984.
- Calandra, Denis. New German Dramatists. New York: Grove Press, 1983.
- DeMeritt, Linda C. New Subjectivity and Prose Forms of Alienation: Peter Handke and Botho Strauß. New York: Lang, 1987.
- Englhart, Andreas. Im Labyrinth des unendlichen Textes: Botho Strauß' Theaterstücke 1972–1996 [In a Labyrinth of Endless Texts: The Plays of Botho Strauss]. Tübingen: Niemeyer, 2000.
- Willer, Stefan. Botho Strauß zur Einführung [An Introduction to Botho Strauss]. Hamburg: Junius, 2000.

Britta Kallin

STREERUWITZ, MARLENE (1950–)

Shakespeare doesn't interest me. What is interesting about Shakespeare is the interest the contemporary theater has in him. Reactionary males roar on all political levels draped in rich costumes. Therefore, I take his characters and put them in different contexts, to show who Romeo really was: someone who speaks sweetly in the bedroom but is a warmonger like all the other aristocrats of his time.

—Marlene Streeruwitz, 1995

Born on June 28, 1950, in Baden, AUSTRIA, Marlene Streeruwitz studied art history and Slavic language and literature in Vienna, writing a dissertation on Russian drama. She worked as a journalist, directed theater and radio plays, and lectured at the universities of Tübingen and Frankfurt. In 1996, Streeruwitz received the literary prize of the Austrian Government's Cultural Division, and in 2000 she was writer-in-residence at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

Streeruwitz's first successes on the German-language stage were productions of Waikiki-Beach (1992) and New York, New York (1993). Critics identify intertextuality, montage, feminist undertones, and a Brechtian approach as major characteristics of Streeruwitz's dramas. Her plays are critical of mainstream culture and capitalist tendencies, highlighting her feminist intentions by questioning gender roles.

In Waikiki-Beach, Streeruwitz's most successful play to date, the mayor's wife and her lover realize that their love is coming to an end when suddenly a homeless couple is beaten to death by skinheads who walk onto the scene. Three housewives appear on stage and comment on the action as if walking through an art exhibition. The use of the unperturbed onlooker is present in a number of Streeruwitz's plays, including Sloane Square (1992) in which tourists watch as a group of punks torment one of their own. New York, New York takes place in a public restroom in Vienna where a pimp beats a prostitute unconscious while the cleaning lady, Mrs. Horvath, watches without interfering.

Streeruwitz's plays are marked by violence, fantasy-world references, and literary allusions. In her dramas, she repeatedly quotes such authors as William Shakespeare (1564–1616), Goethe (1749–1832), Heinrich von Kleist (1777–1811), and HUGO VON HOFMANNSTHAL (1874–1929). In Ocean Drive (1993), for example, a play in which an actress meets a journalist on a glacier, Streeruwitz uses scenes from Shakespeare's Richard III and Hofmannsthal's COMEDY The Difficult Man (Der Schwierige, 1921). Streeruwitz also integrates characters from television shows and other forms of popular culture into her dramas. In Bagnacavallo (1993), for instance, Tick and Trick (i.e., Huey and Dewey), two of Donald Duck's nephews, appear on stage.

Streeruwitz's plays often present images causing the audience to question the banalities of life. In Elysian Park (1993) three nurses push strollers containing old men instead of babies. The scenes are then interrupted by Streeruwitz's recurring figure of a homeless person. In Tolmezzo (1994) an Austrian Jewish woman, having survived persecution by the Nazis, returns to Vienna from her U.S. exile only to find that the mindset of Austrians in the 1990s has not changed as much as she had hoped. The woman then gets entangled in a television-like game show where she competes with Barbie dolls.

Dentro (1995) is a retelling of Shakespeare's King Lear, presenting the audience with a syphilitic king who sexually abuses his daughters. Boccaleone (1999) discusses the abuse of asylum seekers, ill patients, and dead corpses by a Viennese company in a science-fiction world. In Sapporo (2002), Streeruwitz comments upon the current political situation in Austria using the 1972 Olympic games in Sapporo, Japan, as a backdrop.

Since the mid-1990s, Streeruwitz has also published numerous critically acclaimed novels. She currently lives in Vienna, Austria, and Berlin, GERMANY.

SELECT PLAYS: New York, New York (1987); Brahm's Square (Brahmsplatz, 1990); Sloane Square (1992); Waikiki-Beach (1992); Bagnacavallo (1993); Elysian Park (1993); Ocean Drive (1993); Tolmezzo (1994); Dentro (1995); Boccaleone (1999); Sapporo (2002)

FURTHER READING

- Fuchs, Christian, ed. Theater von Frauen: Österreich [Theater by Women: Austria]. Frankfurt: Eichborn, 1991.
- Hempel, Nele. Marlene Streeruwitz: Gewalt und Humor im dramatischen Werk [Violence and Humor in Her Dramatic Works]. Tübingen: Stauffenburg, 2001.
- Kallin, Britta. "In Brecht's Footsteps or Way Beyond Brecht? Brechtian Techniques in Feminist Plays by Elfriede Jelinek and Marlene Streeruwitz." Communications from the International Brecht Society 29, nos. 1–2 (2000): 62–66.
- Streeruwitz, Marlene. New York: New York. Tr. by Udo Borgert and Laura Ginters. In Women's Words, Women's Works: An Anthology of Contemporary Austrian Plays by Women. Ed. by Udo Borgert. Riverside, Calif.: Ariadne Press, 2001.

Britta Kallin

A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE

Whoever you are—I have always depended on the kindness of strangers.

—Blanche, Scene 11

A Streetcar Named Desire, TENNESSEE WILLIAMS's searing, lyrical 1947 drama, explores the tragic mental disintegration of the deeply troubled Blanche DuBois. For many critics, Williams reached the pinnacle of his achievement as a dramatist with this poetic study of a fragile, mentally unstable woman unable to cope with the losses of her past, her present reduced circumstances, and the realities of the world that are in stark conflict with her frequent retreats into romantic illusion. "I want magic," Blanche insists, but the colored paper lanterns she hangs to dim and soften the light around her does not keep reality, as represented by the brutality of her animalistic brother-in-law, Stanley Kowalski, from exposing and destroying her.

Blanche is a faded middle-aged woman whose delicate manner suggests the sheltered upbringing of a Southern aristocrat. She arrives in the steamy French Quarter of New Orleans on the streetcar named Desire, seeking the home of her only sister, Stella, and Stella's husband, Stanley. Blanche is distressed to discover Stella married to a man Blanche regards as beneath her in class. That Stella's home is merely a cramped flat in a rough, rundown neighborhood exacerbates Blanche's distress.

Despite the fact that she is nearly destitute and in need of a safe haven with Stella, Blanche cannot resist being mockingly critical of Stanley's crude ways. Blanche's affected air of superiority and Stanley's low-brow vulgarity strain relations in the close quarters of the flat. Stanley's coworker, Mitch, a gentle man who lives with his ailing mother, is attracted to Blanche's sensitivity and charm. She encourages a relationship with Mitch in hopes that a marriage with him will provide safety and security, carefully hiding her age and the harsh facts of her life behind a variety of illusory effects. The intense sexual bond between Stanley and Stella disturbs Blanche, and she is horrified when she learns that Stella is pregnant. Despite the impending arrival of a child, and to Stanley's intense annoyance, Stella allows Blanche to stay on with them. He demands to know the status of Belle Reve, the family home, half of which, he believes, belongs to Stella—and, thanks to the "Napoleonic code," to him. When Blanche admits that the property has been lost because the expenses of caring for dying family members depleted their funds, Stanley is unconvinced. He secretly contacts a friend in Blanche's hometown and learns that she has been sexually promiscuous. Worse yet, she was fired from her high school teaching job on the suspicion of an inappropriate relationship with a male student, culminating in her departure from town.

Blanche is also troubled by the past. The memory of her young husband, Alan, whom she caught in bed with a man, haunts her. Alan shot himself in shame, and the incidents surrounding his death continually replay themselves in her turbulent mind as her hold on reality grows more and more tenuous. Blanche's attraction to inappropriately young men is demonstrated by a brief encounter with a newspaper delivery boy, but Williams makes it clear that the heartbroken, guilt-ridden Blanche is in a futile search for the young husband she has lost.

When Stanley tells Mitch of Blanche's background, Mitch at first refuses to accept it. He drunkenly confronts Blanche and finally sees through the illusions in which she has enveloped herself. Blanche's hopes of a marriage are dashed as Mitch flees. When Stella goes to the hospital to give birth, the animosity between Stanley and Blanche explodes and he sexually assaults her. Unhinged by this trauma, Blanche is subsequently unable to convince Stella of the rape. As Mitch watches helplessly, Stella reluctantly goes along with Blanche's commitment to a mental institution. As the play ends, Blanche is escorted away by a nurse and doctor, to whom she sadly states, "I have always depended on the kindness of strangers." As Blanche departs, Stella's passions drive her back to Stanley's arms, despite her lingering suspicions that Blanche's version of events may be true.

Under the direction of Elia Kazan, the original cast of A Streetcar Named Desire was led by Jessica Tandy. Her Blanche exposed the contradictions and complexities of a woman who is at once fragile and strong, sensitive and cruel, damaged and poetic. Tandy's performance was matched by Marlon Brando's star-making interpretation of Stanley, an image of potent and overt male sexuality previously unseen on the Broadway stage. The play's frankness smashed taboos that had been firmly in place in American theater, bringing to serious drama the possibility of exploring themes and attitudes previously unavailable to dramatists.

A Streetcar Named Desire was awarded the 1948 Pulitzer Prize for Drama, as well as numerous other honors and critics' awards, and it was filmed in 1951 with most of its original stage cast, including Karl Malden as Mitch and Kim Hunter as Stella, under Kazan's direction. Vivien Leigh, in an Academy Award-winning performance (Malden and Hunter also won Oscars), replaced Tandy on screen, but Brando again played Stanley, and his performance launched him as one of the iconic male stars of post–World War II Hollywood films. A Streetcar Named Desire has been revived frequently on both stage and screen.

Critics and audiences have consistently ranked A Streetcar Named Desire as one of the three greatest American plays, along with EUGENE O'NEILL'S LONG DAY'S JOURNEY INTO NIGHT and ARTHUR MILLER'S DEATH OF A SALESMAN. Its enduring qualities—Williams's poetic language, his sensitive and haunting depiction of his characters, and the play's bold themes—contrive to keep Streetcar a constant presence on stages throughout the world.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Adler, Thomas P. A Streetcar Named Desire: The Moth and the Lantern. Boston: Gale, 1990.
- Bloom, Harold, ed. Tennessee Williams's A Streetcar Named Desire (Modern Critical Interpretations). New York: Chelsea House, 1988.
- Hurrell, John D., ed. Two Modern American Tragedies: Reviews and Criticism of Death of a Salesman and A Streetcar Named Desire. New York: Scribner's, 1961.
- Kolin, Philip C. Williams: A Streetcar Named Desire. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2000.
- Kolin, Philip C., ed. Confronting Tennessee Williams' A Streetcar Named Desire: Essays in Critical Pluralism. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1992.
- Miller, Jordan Y., ed. Twentieth Century Interpretations of "A Streetcar Named Desire". Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1971.

James Fisher

STREET SCENE

Street Scene by ELMER RICE opened at the Playhouse in New York on January 10, 1929, in a production directed by the playwright and designed by Jo Mielziner. In obvious imitation of Greek drama, Rice keeps the action of Street Scene in a public outdoor space and limits the time of the play to about twenty-four hours. The play has been called dull, undramatic, socially conscious, and compassionate; the disparity of critical appraisal results from Rice's combination of naturalistic elements within a melodramatic plot.

The play is set entirely on the sidewalk and front steps of a New York City tenement. Rice describes the building in a lengthy stage direction that includes details about ambient sound that underscore the entire play: "the distant roar of El trains, automobile sirens, and the whistles of boats on the river . . . musical instruments, a radio, dogs barking and human voices." Thus, Rice creates an impression that we are witnessing events in a very particular time and place. Adding to this spectacle is the vast number of people who fill the stage with bustling city activity. The script calls for more than sixty characters, most of whom are named and given unique attributes, representing a variety of ages and ethnicities in working-class New York. Their diverse dialects further contribute to the naturalism Rice is trying to achieve.

Against the backdrop of this working-class neighborhood, Rice's characters engage in acts of ordinary life: reading the newspaper on the front stoop, arguing over politics, walking to the grocery store, and gossiping, mostly about the budding romance between Irish Rose Maurrant and Jewish Sam Kaplan. Sam is studying to be a lawyer, and his family worries that his interest in Rose might distract him from his education.

A darker subject of local gossip is the affair between Rose's mother, Anna, and the milkman, Steve Sankey. Rose's father, Frank, becomes suspicious of his wife and ultimately murders Anna and Sankey in the family's apartment. He flees but is quickly caught by the police, and a grief-stricken Rose announces her plans to get out of New York and find a new life for herself and her younger brother, Willie.

Sam offers to give up his career plans and follow her: "I don't care what I do. I'll be a day laborer; I'll dig sewers—anything. Rose, don't leave me!" He professes his love for Rose and argues that they belong to one another. After the recent violence in her family, however, Rose does not believe this claim of romantic love: "I don't think people ought to belong to anybody but themselves. I was thinking, that if my mother had really belonged to herself, and that if my father had really belonged to himself, it never would have happened." Rose leaves, the play ends, and the bustle of life on the street resumes without her.

A film version of Street Scene was released in 1931, and the play was set to music by composer Kurt Weill and poet LANGSTON HUGHES in 1947.

[See also United States, 1860–1929]

FURTHER READING

- Chametzky, Jules. "Elmer Rice, Liberation, and the Great Ethnic Question." In From Hester Street to Hollywood: The Jewish-American Stage and Screen, ed. by Sarah Blacher Cohen. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1983.
- Murphy, Brenda. "The Final Integration: Innovations in Realistic Thought and Structure, 1916–1940." In American Realism and American Drama: 1880–1940. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1987.
- Rabkin, Gerald. "Elmer Rice and the Seriousness of Drama." In Drama and Commitment: Politics in the American Theatre of the Thirties. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1964.
- Rice, Elmer. Minority Report: An Autobiography. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1963.

DeAnna M. Totten Beard

STRICTLY DISHONORABLE

Maybe good women are good because . . . because it takes two to be bad . . . and they can't find anybody.

—Isabelle, Act 3

Strictly Dishonorable by Preston Sturges opened at New York's Avon Theatre on September 18, 1929, and ran for 557 performances. Brock Pemberton and Antoinette Perry staged the play, and Brooks Atkinson called it a "well-nigh perfect COMEDY" (New York Times, Sept. 19, 1929).

Henry and his fiancée, Isabelle, enter a New York speakeasy for a nightcap before heading home to New Jersey. Henry is rude to everybody and dominates Isabelle, an innocent southern belle. Gus, the Count Di Ruvo, arrives to the sound of operatic music. Isabelle rhapsodizes about Tino Caraffa's singing, and she is overwhelmed to learn that Gus is Tino Caraffa. While Henry is outside handling a parking problem, Gus and Isabelle dance and become mutually infatuated. When Henry returns, he demands Isabelle leave with him, but she refuses. Gus offers Isabelle accommodations for the night in his apartment.

Isabelle: What are your intentions toward me?

Gus (smiling): Strictly dishonorable, Isabelle.

In Gus's apartment above the speakeasy, he and Isabelle experience their first tentative moments. The Judge arrives, intent on saving Isabelle from Gus and herself. Gus leaves to deal with a visitor, while the Judge urges Isabelle to "look well before the leap." Isabelle declares, "Don't you think it's better to be very happy for a little while . . . than never to be happy at all?" When Gus returns, he prepares Isabelle for bed in a very provocative scene for its day. As Isabelle trembles, Gus says, "Life is beautiful . . . and its most beautiful moments are called . . . love. They are very rare, my Isabelle, such moments as this . . . to be accepted tenderly . . . and without fear." He carries her to bed and leaves, seeking accommodations upstairs with the Judge.

The next morning, the Judge congratulates Isabelle for coming to her senses and sending Gus away the night before. Later, Gus arrives while Isabelle is in the shower, tells the Judge of his desire to marry Isabelle, and leaves to dress at the Judge's place. Henry comes to apologize. Gus returns and tells Isabelle that he considered marrying her but knows he would be inconsiderate to ask her to travel so much because of his career. Believing that he is merely being gentlemanly, Isabelle resigns herself to marrying Henry and leaves. To drown their sorrow, the Judge heads to his apartment for liquor but returns with Isabelle instead.

The dialogue is full of subtle humor and irony. The Judge displays fatherly wisdom and wit. Isabelle is a complete woman with both passion and determination. Gus, the debonair man of the world with a heart of gold, finds his ideal woman.

The play offers the choices of staying safe and secure or experiencing and growing with the world. Isabelle has led a very sheltered life, and her future with Henry promises to be unsatisfying. In contrast, she is offered the risky possibility of traveling the world with Gus. Some see in this the clash between advocates of American isolationism and advocates of America accepting a role in world affairs. Strictly Dishonorable was Sturges's major stage success before his film career began.

[See also United States, 1929–1940]

FURTHER READING

Curtis, James. Between Flops: A Biography of Preston Sturges. New York: Limelight Editions, 1984.

Jacobs, Diane. Christmas in July: The Life and Art of Preston Sturges. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1992.

Sturges, Preston. Preston Sturges. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1990.

Robert Lewis Smith

STRINDBERG, AUGUST (1849–1912)

No particular form shall bind the author, for the theme dictates the form.

—August Strindberg, 1908

A pioneering Swedish playwright, novelist, short story writer, essayist, and poet, August Strindberg produced truly innovative work also as a painter and photographer, whereas his explorations in the field of natural science have met with more skepticism. Although his prose works and his poetry have renewed and expanded Swedish literature and language, and although he is now regarded as one of the world's outstanding letter writers, it is as a dramatist that he has had the greatest international impact.

The new edition of Strindberg's Collected Works, soon to be completed, will consist of about seventy-two volumes. The recently published edition of his letters runs to twenty-two volumes. In addition there is a huge number of manuscripts, most of them in the Strindberg Collection of the Royal Library in Stockholm.

From his earliest works, Strindberg's life and letters are closely interwoven and constantly cross-fertilizing each other. Unlike HENRIK IBSEN, his foremost Scandinavian rival in the field of drama, Strindberg led a very varied life. He married and divorced three times, had five children, and frequently moved from one place to another and one country to another. He also had a tendency immediately to put on paper what he experienced and let it remain there unchanged. At the same time, he frequently experienced what he was writing as exceedingly real.

Johan August Strindberg was born in Stockholm, SWEDEN. His father, with whom he had a difficult relationship, was a steamboat broker. His mother, to whom he was very attached, was a waitress before she married. When she died and his father remarried, Strindberg, at the age of thirteen, found himself confronted with a hated stepmother. After various unsuccessful occupations—university studies in Uppsala, journalism, teaching, translating, acting—Strindberg became an assistant at the Royal Library. In 1877 he married the Finland-Swedish noblewoman Siri von Essen, recently divorced from Baron Carl Gustav Wrangel. Siri was to bear him two daughters and a son.

Having made himself known to the Swedish establishment as a "seducer of the youth" because of his outspokenness in various matters, including sexual, Strindberg chose to go into voluntary exile with his family in 1883; they stayed mainly in FRANCE, SWITZERLAND, GERMANY, and DENMARK. After his divorce from Siri in 1891, Strindberg married the Austrian journalist Frida Uhl, whom he had met in Berlin, in 1893. They had a daughter. This marriage was informally dissolved by the time Strindberg moved to Paris a year later. Here he devoted himself to alchemy, occultism, and attempts to make gold. He also experienced a series of mental crises, usually designated as the Inferno crisis after his novel by that title. In 1899 he returned to Sweden and settled in Stockholm for the rest of his life.

In 1901 he married the Norwegian actress Harriet Bosse, with whom he had one daughter. Harriet was to take leading parts in many of his plays. Although the marriage was dissolved in 1904, Strindberg retained an intimate relationship to her—at times telepathically—for several years thereafter. In 1908 he moved from their common flat to a newly built apartment house, which he called the Blue Tower. This last domicile is now part of the Strindberg Museum. At the end of his life he initiated what is known as the Strindberg Feud, a debate on various aspects of Swedish social, political, and cultural life. Although never awarded the Nobel Prize for literature by the Swedish Academy, he was offered a substantial gift by forty thousand people when he turned sixty-three, and in the evening the Stockholm Workers' Union hailed him in a torchlit procession below his balcony. Against his wishes, he was given what amounted to a state funeral, but in conformance with his wishes, his grave in Stockholm is among those of the common people, "not in the rich people's part, the market of vanity."

It has been said of Strindberg that "no one has a shorter way from the blood to the ink," and his gigantic output seems to bear this out. When asked about his working habits three years before his death, he said that when writing he first felt comfortably feverish, then ecstatic. Sometimes, he added,

I believe I'm a kind of medium, for it happens so easily, half unconsciously, with little calculation! But it lasts only for three hours (usually between 9 and 12 A.M.). And when it's over, "it's just as boring again!" until next time. But it doesn't come when ordered and not when it suits me. . . . Most often and most successfully after huge crashes. (Strindberg, 1909)

While "watchmaker" Ibsen would spend many months on each of his plays, Strindberg usually finished his admittedly often shorter dramas in a matter of weeks, sometimes days. He believed in the value of swift and spontaneous writing and did not care much about rewriting or proofreading. Even when he, himself, could not quite understand why he had inserted a passage or even a character, he would tend to let it remain as written, trusting that it must have had a meaning at the time of writing. This does not mean that he rigidly insisted that actors should stick to his text at all costs. Strindberg's rich language with its associative leaps and bold imagery is an enormous challenge for the translator. Even the titles present problems. His Ovåder has been rendered in English as Storm, The Storm, The Thunderstorm, Storm Weather, Stormy Weather, and Thunder in the Air.

Strindberg's spiritual development follows a meandering pattern, as could be expected from a man who regarded changeability as a sign of vitality and constancy as akin to sterility. Brought up in an atmosphere of evangelical pietism within the Lutheran state church, Strindberg at an early age found himself more in sympathy with the liberal unitarianism of Theodore Parker. At an early stage he was also, like many other Scandinavians, deeply influenced by the Danish philosopher Søren Kierkegaard's severe demands for taking a clear either-or standpoint, a standpoint given dramatic force in Ibsen's Brand and, indirectly, in his Peer Gynt, plays much admired by Strindberg.

During the politically oriented 1880s, he felt attracted first to anarchism, then, influenced by Jean-Jacques Rousseau's criticism of civilization, to agrarian socialism—this in contrast to the industrial socialism promoted by the Social Democrats.

Through the Dane Georg Brandes, the dominating critic in Scandinavia at the time, he came in contact with FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE's ideas. Influenced also by the aristocratic writer-colleague Verner von Heidenstam, he now exchanged his former sympathy for the lower classes for admiration of the superman. Applying a Darwinian perspective, he argued that male power in society was a natural result of a long evolution, and that women could have no right to the same position after only a few decades. Sharing Nietzsche's misogyny, impressed by the Italian criminologist Cesare Lombroso, and seeing it as his task to fight the emancipation movement, Strindberg became an intense hater of what he called half-women: women who by competing with men were traitors to their own sex. This, however, did not prevent him from arguing for a great amount of equality between the sexes and from marrying only career women. Strindberg's views about "the woman question" alienated him from the radical writers of the 1880s, who called themselves Young Sweden and who had earlier regarded him as their leader. A sharp observer of human behavior and fearing for his own sanity, Strindberg was at this period also an avid reader of psychiatric literature. Arguing that "the naturalist has erased guilt along with God," he became for a while an atheist (Strindberg, 1888). But the feeling of guilt remained.

The Inferno crisis in the mid-1890s meant a break with Nietzschean ideals. Far from being dead, God, usually referred to as the Powers, now came to rule both his life and his writing. Along with Arthur Schopenhauer, he tried to accept that life means suffering. Nourished by Emanuel Swedenborg, who was to be his most important spiritual guide for the rest of his life, he even at times welcomed the suffering, seeing it either as a punishment for sins committed in a former existence or as an ordeal to make him worthy of a better life after death. In his later years, he often explicitly referred to life a purgatory or hell from which we are released when we die, or a nightmare from which we awaken at the moment of death. With Swedenborg he believed in "correspondences" between the earthly existence and the life beyond.

Strindberg's religion had more room for a punishing Jehovah than for a Christ who suffers for believers. "Can God forgive?" he once asked and characteristically answered: "Yes, when he has punished."

Often describing his protagonists as innocently suffering scapegoats, he early discovered the pleasure of martyrdom. In his autobiography The Son of a Servant (Tjänstekvinnans son) are several episodes showing how Johan, his alter ego, consciously or unconsciously strives to be treated unjustly so that those victimizing him will suffer from pangs of conscience and repent.

NONDRAMATIC WORK

Although he first wrote plays, Strindberg's breakthrough came in 1879 with the novel The Red Room (Röda rummet), subtitled "Scenes from the lives of artists and writers," a satirical attack on the humbug in various parts of society in the spirit of Charles Dickens and Mark Twain, propelled by the dissatisfaction with the parliamentary reform of 1866. Borrowing its title from the room in a Stockholm restaurant where a group of artist-bohemians used to assemble, The Red Room now counts as the first modern Swedish novel in both content and style.

The attack on Swedish society was continued, even more violently, in the pamphlet The New Nation (Det nya riket, 1882).

In the two-volume cultural history The Swedish People (Svenska folket, 1882), Strindberg argues that the history of Sweden is essentially the history of its people, not the history of its kings as the lauded historian and writer Erik Gustav Geijer had maintained.

A great number of short stories, later collected under the title Swedish Fates and Adventures (Svenska öden och äventyr), may be seen as the often successful result of his historical research for The Swedish People.

Strongly opposed to the emancipation movement and its supporters, notably his rival in the field of drama, Henrik Ibsen, whom he liked to belittle as "the Nora man," Strindberg in 1884 published a collection of short stories entitled Married (Giftas). In these he describes upper-class women, with good humor, as lazily profiting from their breadwinning husbands. "A Doll's House" (Ett dockhem) was intended as a healthy antidote to Ibsen's famous play. Officially because of his blasphemous comments on Holy Communion in "The Rewards of Virtue" (Dyddens lön) but presumably from an attempt of feminists to silence him, Strindberg was brought to trial. He was acquitted, but the event left its mark. In Married II (Giftas II, 1885), a much more sarcastic volume than the first one, he took revenge on the bluestockings.

The most explicitly autobiographical of Strindberg's many semiautobiographical works is the four-part novel The Son of a Servant, subtitled "The Story of the Development of a Soul." The first two parts were written and published in 1886, the third part appeared in 1887, the fourth not until 1909. Skeptical about the value of fiction, Strindberg in the eighties encouraged everyone to write about the life one knows best, one's own. In The Son of a Servant he set the good example. Although the work shows an inclination to describe the past somewhat in the light of his marital problems at the time of writing and although it is not always true to the facts, it remains one of the truly important documents humans in its effort to relate its central figure Johan (Strindberg's first Christian name) to the social and intellectual context of his time.

The Defense of a Madman was written in French in 1887–1888 under the title Le plaidoyer d'un fou, first published in German as Die Beichte eines Thoren in 1893, published in French in 1895, and much later rendered into Swedish as En dåres försvarstal. It is a passionate roman à clef about Axel's and Maria's (i.e., August's and Siri's) difficult relationship. The book has been called a detective novel in the reverse, meaning that both crime and criminal are more enigmatic at the end than at the beginning.

In his most popular work, The People of Hemsö (Hemsöborna, 1887), a tragicomic novel bringing the enterprising mainlander Carlsson to the rural population of the Stockholm archipelago, Strindberg depicts the resulting controversies and excels in naturalistic descriptions of people and nature.

This is true also of the more serious novel By the Open Sea (I havsbandet, 1890), set in the same area but this time with a Nietzschean superman doomed to destruction.

Short stories and essays written and published around 1890 reveal the Nietzschean ideology Strindberg embraced at the time as well as more original ideas that were to prove very fruitful in his dramatic work. The titles are telling: "The Battle of the Brains" (Hjärnornas kamp), "Hallucinations" (Hallucinationer), "Nemesis Divina," "Mysticism—So far" (Mystik—tills vidare), and "Psychic Murder" (Själamord), the last being an analysis of Ibsen's ROSMERSHOLM.

The so-called Inferno crisis is documented in the Parisian Inferno (1897) and Legends (Légendes, 1898), both written in French. Even more than in most of his other works, it is in these generically unusual works difficult to determine the distinction between fact and fiction. In these highly original works the narrating I sees the world through a pre-Kafkaian lens.

Alone (Ensam, 1903) is a contemplative, highly autobiographical novella, thematically related to the chamber play Thunder in the Air, about a lonely man's sharing, in his imagination, the lives of others living in the same apartment house.

Quite different is the mood in Black Banners (Svarta fanor, 1907) a roman à clef that violently satirizes several well-known Swedes, especially his former friend, the writer Gustaf af Geijerstam. It caused a tremendous scandal and made it even more difficult for Strindberg to be accepted by the establishment.

The Scapegoat (Syndabocken) and The Roofing Feast (Taklagsöl), both published in 1907, are two powerful novellas. In the latter Strindberg approaches the interior monologue technique later made famous by James Joyce.

In The Occult Diary (Ockulta dagboken) we have a remarkable day-to-day record of thoughts, events, emotions and, not least, works by himself and others that occupied Strindberg in the period 1896–1908.

Closely related to this are the four Blue Books (Blå böckerna, 1907–1912). In page-long pieces, Strindberg here deals with a broad spectrum of topics—linguistics, natural science, astronomy, religion, philosophy, history, geography, among others—in an extremely subjective way. Strange coincidences, correspondences, and other signs from the Powers are discovered everywhere.

Although Strindberg was usually skeptical about poetry and spent little time on it, the efforts he did make were innovative. He was one of the first Swedes to write in free verse. In his best known poem, “The Boulevard System” (Esplanadsystemet), he welcomes the tearing down of old buildings to make room for new ones, a “Darwinian” standpoint that was to return in the preface to Miss Julie.

DRAMATIC WORK

“The secret of all my stories, novels, tales,” Strindberg wrote late in his life, “is that they are dramas. . . . when the theaters closed their doors on me for long periods of time, I hit upon the idea of writing my dramas in epic form—for future use” (In a letter to Emil Schering, May 6, 1907). The statement explains the dramatic quality of Strindberg’s prose works and corroborates that he was at heart a dramatist. His propensity for drama has to do with his tendency to experience the world in terms of conflict, whether based on gender, class, intelligence, morality, or religion. Writing in general and playwrighting in particular, he declared in an interview toward the end of his life, was a blissful escape from merely living: “Only then am I alive!” (Strindberg, 1909).

The first preserved play by his hand, The Freethinker (Fritänkaren, 1870), an immature CLOSET DRAMA published under pseudonym, demonstrates his skepticism against Christ’s satisfactio vicaria, a view that was to stay with him throughout his life.

In The Outlaw (Den fredlöse, 1871), a one-act play set in 12th-century Iceland, several themes that were later to occupy Strindberg can be sensed, notably the power struggle both between God and man and between man and woman, the latter in its characteristic Strindbergian form of the love-hate relationship.

National-historical drama being a popular genre at the time, Strindberg chose to write a play about MASTER OLOF, Sweden’s Martin Luther, hoping in this way to increase his chances of getting the play produced. His hopes were quickly dashed when The Royal Theater rejected the play. Written in prose rather than verse, containing a number of anachronisms, and showing little respect for and similarity to the real-life counterparts of the portrayed characters, the play in no way agreed with what was considered appropriate for an historical drama. Nine years after it was written, a new version was successfully produced, signified Strindberg’s breakthrough as a dramatist. It is now generally recognized as the first important Swedish drama. Much later the playwright was to summarize his dramatic technique in all the historical plays “from the first Master Olof” as follows:

My purpose was, as it was my teacher William Shakespeare’s, to depict human beings both in their greatness and their triviality; not to avoid the right word; to let history be the background and to compress historical periods to fit the demands of the theater of our time by avoiding the undramatic form of the chronicle or the narrative. (Strindberg, 1967)

Both a revised prose version and a verse version of the play were rejected by the theaters.

Having married a woman with histrionic ambitions, Strindberg wrote several plays in which Siri could play prominent roles. The first of them is The Secret of the Guild (Gillet hemlighet, 1880), thematically somewhat related to Ibsen’s THE MASTER BUILDER, a comparison unflattering for Strindberg, who certainly did not build his play masterfully. Playing in the 15th century, it is a somewhat declamatory “COMEDY” about the rivalry between Jacques and Sten concerning the completion of Uppsala cathedral.

A more central part than in this drama was intended for Siri in Sir Bengt’s Wife (Herr Bengts hustru, 1882), set in the early 16th century. The play is of interest mostly as the first drama in which Strindberg discusses “the woman question.” Like Ibsen’s Nora, Margit wants to divorce her husband. But unlike the end in A Doll’s House, Strindberg’s play ends with a couple determined to stay together.

Written as a Christmas play for children, Lucky Per’s Journey (Lycko-Pers resa, 1882) combines childish fairy elements derived from Hans Christian Andersen and Dickens with social satire more intelligible for adults. As the title indicates, it is a pilgrimage drama owing much to Ibsen’s Peer Gynt. As such it anticipates the composition of the post-Inferno station dramas.

With Comrades (Kamraterna, 1888), about the rivalry between two Parisian artists who are also husband and wife, Strindberg began writing in the present. The battle between the sexes is here fought between Bertha and her husband Axel, a name Strindberg often gives to his alter egos. Bertha is a woman who, lacking a personality of her own, figuratively sucks the blood of her husband. She is the first in a row of the dramatist’s vampires.

Strindberg’s international breakthrough came with THE FATHER (Fadren, 1887), a study in what he called psychic murder. Though characterized as naturalistic by Strindberg himself, possibly in a hope to get ÉMILE ZOLA interested in it (a hope that was not fulfilled) the play has subjectivism in common with the post-Inferno dramas.

In his following three one-act plays, like The Father limited to one setting, Strindberg reduced the number of characters further to suit the meager means at his disposal when, after the model of ANDRÉ ANTOINE’s Théâtre Libre, he tried to create a Scandinavian Experimental Theater. The attempt failed. But the plays are among the most vigorous that ever came from his pen.

Best known is MISS JULIE (Fröken Julie, 1888), the most frequently performed of all Strindberg's plays. Here and in other contemporary work Strindberg reveals his fascination with hypnosis. Almost as famous as the play itself is the preface to it. In this play, and even more in CREDITORS (Fördringsägare, 1889), is provided a useful summary of what NATURALISM meant in the theater at that time.

Although Strindberg never became an out-and-out naturalist and, as in his essay "On Modern Drama and Modern Theater" (1890), rejected what he called petty naturalism—the concern for life-like veracity—the eleven one-act plays he wrote between 1888 and 1892 are usually referred to as naturalistic. Considering the author's personal situation at the time, it is not surprising that matrimonial relations play a central role. The cynical tone in these plays has much in common with the French comédie rosse.

A congruence of playing time and scenic time characterizes THE STRONGER (Den starkare, 1890), Pariah (Paria, 1890), The First Warning (Första varningen, 1893), and The Bond (Bandet, 1893); in all four the unity of place is also strictly observed. Contrary to what is often assumed, Miss Julie is marked by a certain discrepancy between the playing time (an hour and a half) and the scenic time (around twelve hours). This discrepancy is disguised by having dancing peasants invade the kitchen. Time seems extended. There is no need for a curtain. As a consequence, the illusion of the spectator is never broken. To indicate that we are dealing with representative cases rather than individuals—the scientific pretensions of naturalism are evident here—Strindberg in these plays often designates his characters merely by blood or other relationship (father, daughter, son-in-law), sometimes by profession, and sometimes by abstraction (Mr. X, Miss Y).

Based on a short story by Strindberg's contemporary Ola Hansson, Pariah is at once a detective story (Strindberg was fascinated by Edgar Allan Poe) and a human vivisection. As is clarified by the scenery, Mr. X and Mr. Y are playing an intellectual and moral game of chess. Both are unpunished criminals. In Nietzschean fashion, Strindberg's directions depict Mr. X as a superman and Mr. Y as a pariah. Still frequently performed, the play's outdated Lombrosian racism presents problems for present-day directors.

More strictly than any of his other one-act plays, The Bond follows the slice-of-life formula. Although the trial in the play does not conform with legal practice in Sweden at the time, as a description of a marital conflict over the care of the couple's single child after their divorce, the play has hardly lost its actuality. Moreover, here as often elsewhere, Strindberg indicates that behind husband and wife, the first man and woman can be discerned, and that the trial in the last instance is a metaphor for a cruel world order.

Comedy was hardly Strindberg's genre. When he nevertheless provides his quite successful Playing with Fire: Comedy in One Act (Leka med elden: Komedi I en akt, 1893), with this generic subtitle, we must realize that it is a rather black comedy. In later correspondence (a letter to Svea Åhman, January 31, 1908), he indicates that TRAGICOMEDY might have been a more suitable designation and that the play is "a very serious comedy, where the characters hide their TRAGEDY behind a certain cynicism." Strindberg varies the traditional erotic triangle by letting both husband and wife be attracted by their friend, who functions as a kindler for their nearly extinguished marital passion. Given the chance to marry the wife whom he claims to love, the friend fails to live up to the high morals he has earlier preached to the others and takes to his heels.

After a break of six years, Strindberg returned to playwriting with the first part of his trilogy TO DAMASCUS (Till Damaskus I–II, 1898, 1900), a milepost in modern drama. From now on the battle fought in his plays was not so much between human intellects or even sexes as between the protagonist and the Powers. Strindberg's problem was now how to make this interiorized form of drama theatrically arresting. He did it in To Damascus by turning the protagonist's surroundings into semiprojections of himself (they are quite realistic and recognizable), a logical subjectivism by an author who kept insisting that you know only one self, your self. Strindberg did not at first understand how revolutionary his play was; he was too close to it.

ADVENT (1899) makes a striking change from idyll to nightmare, reflected visually, as the double protagonists begin to see themselves not as they appear, even to themselves, but as they are. Thematically related is CRIMES AND CRIMES (Brott och brott, 1899). Set in contemporary Paris, it deals with the relationship between evil deeds and evil thoughts.

With The Saga of the Folkungs (Folkungasagan, 1899), Strindberg returned to historical drama, a genre he would cultivate for many years. Starting with this drama, set in the Middle Ages, he was to proceed chronologically for the next seven plays. The Saga of the Folkungs, though rich in atmosphere, suffers from having a weak hero. King Magnus is a Christlike victim, more sinned against than sinning.

In GUSTAV VASA (1899), often considered the best constructed of the historical dramas, Strindberg instead settled for a powerful protagonist who struggles with the question of whether God sanctions the cruel deeds he feels forced to commit in the national interest. The play follows a pattern that Strindberg applies in several of his post-Inferno dramas: the protagonist (almost always a man) makes himself guilty of hubris, is punished for this by the Powers, then is forgiven.

The last bit, forgiveness, is lacking in ERIK XIV (1899), which ends with the imprisonment of the king and the struggle among his inheritors for the throne, a chaotic situation apparently meant to illustrate the madness of life.

Gustav Adolf (1900), named after the 17th-century king who defended Protestantism against the Catholics in Germany, is Strindberg's longest and one of his least successful plays.

Syncretism being its message, he called it, after Gotthold Lessing, his Nathan the Wise. Those who regard Strindberg as anti-Semitic, an easily defensible opinion, will be confused to find that the play's noblest character is a Jew. Despite efforts to see it as a pre-Brechtian EPIC drama, it remains an unwieldy play.

All the more compact is EASTER (Påsk, 1901), which Strindberg himself called a chamber play. In its combination of seasonal and religious resurrection, it is one of Strindberg's most poetical dramas, largely because of its thematically central character, the Christlike Eleonora, a part that has proved exceedingly difficult to recreate adequately on the stage.

On the surface, the famous THE DANCE OF DEATH (Dödsdansen, 1900), named after the medieval idea of Death dancing with the living, seems to signify a return to the naturalistic dramas of the 1880s: one realistic set, three characters, marital strife. On the other hand, the hubris-nemesis pattern—atheistic self-glorification punished by the imminence of death—defines it as a post-Inferno drama.

The Crownbride (also called The Bridal Crown; Kronbruden, 1902), a folkloristic drama inspired by Swedish ballads and set in the heart of Sweden, deals with Mats and Kersti and their feuding families; Kersti's murder of her newborn child; her agonized conscience, manifest in her visions of specters and mythical figures; and her final atonement for her crime.

CARL XII (also called Charles XII, 1901) is very different from the other historical plays. It is largely a mood drama focusing on the enigmatic and laconic king, whom Strindberg contemptuously liked to call "the destroyer of the nation." The sense of ominous waiting is broken when Strindberg in a loosely integrated act shows Carl quarreling with three archetypal women. Strindberg has him killed in a Swedenborgian manner worthy of a tragedy: mysteriously, from Above.

Thanks to Harriet Bosse, for whom the play was written, Strindberg included Queen Christina (Kristina, 1903) in his series on Swedish royalty. Daughter of Gustav II Adolf, who fought the Catholics in Germany, and of a German mother, Kristina betrays her father when she converts to Catholicism. In his rather unhistorical portrait of the queen, Strindberg stresses her egocentricity, her childishness, and her role-playing faculties: she is an actress on the throne.

Gustav III is known in Swedish history as a king who cared for the arts. Himself a dramatist, he was especially interested in theater. Fittingly, he was assassinated at a bal masqué in the opera. In Gustav III (1903), Strindberg chose to describe instead a situation a few years earlier when Gustav, after a badly planned war against Russia, was threatened with a coup d'état by the nobility. Stressing the king's histrionic qualities, the complicated plot, in the tradition of the well-made play, shows him as a major role-player surrounded by an ingratiating court. Anckarström, who was later to murder the king and who is negatively presented in the history books, is symptomatically portrayed in this drama. His hatred of the king, it is indicated, is that of someone who had fallen victim as a young man to Gustav's homosexuality.

Next to THE GHOST SONATA, A DREAM PLAY (Ett drömspel, 1902) is undoubtedly Strindberg's most original and seminal contribution to modern drama. As it opens we see the Daughter and a growing castle, symbol both of the growing of the world and of man's growing in the course of his life. On top of the roof is "a flower-bud resembling a crown," a good example of Strindberg's ability to vitalize imagery. When the Daughter at the end enters the burning castle to return to her heavenly Father, "the bud on the roof bursts open into a giant chrysanthemum." The whole play takes place in the time it takes for the chrysanthemum, symbol of divine grace, to bloom. In line with the play's leitmotif of waiting and hoping, it is a boldly visual and deeply meaningful way to compare life on earth with budding and death with blooming.

Strindberg's last important contribution to world drama came with his CHAMBER PLAYS written for his and August Falck's Intimate Theater (1907–1910), with its small and rather primitively equipped stage, youthful semiprofessional ensemble, and intimate 161-seat venue. Far from being plotless, these plays are so complicated that they are almost impossible to unravel—deliberately so, for the plots have largely a metaphoric importance. They show us an intricate web of more or less incomprehensible human relations to make us sense that this is precisely what life is. So in these plays, plot becomes theme. It is precisely the theme orientation of these plays, their dense texture, their combined verbal and visual leitmotifs, that explains their pioneering nature. Each of them—Thunder in the Air (Ovåder, I, 1907), The Burned House (also called After the Fire; Brända tomten, II, 1907), The Ghost Sonata (Spöksonaten, III, 1907), The Pelican (Pelikanen, IV, 1907), and The Black Glove (Svarta handsken, V, 1909)—is given an opus number to remind us of the connection between this truly new drama form and chamber music. It is no coincidence that Strindberg in this period had friends playing string quartets in his apartment. Music forms an important integral element in many of his later plays.

Strindberg's last play, the station drama The Great Highway (Stora landsvägen, 1909), was regarded by the author as a closet drama, but despite mixing prose and verse has nonetheless proved quite stageable.

Strindberg's international reputation as a dramatist is usually connected with two enterprises. Before the so-called Inferno crisis in the mid-1890s, he is an eminent representative of naturalistic drama. His famous preface to Miss Julie is generally recognized as the most important manifesto of the movement. After the Inferno crisis, he writes his pre-expressionistic plays, in which the protagonists are more in conflict with themselves and with what Strindberg termed the Powers than with each other. Strindberg's other contributions to modern drama—the one-act plays, the fairy plays, the historical dramas—have received considerably less attention and recognition. Yet German specialist on the one-act play Diemut Schnetz (1967) unequivocally states that "since Strindberg's theoretical debut in 1889, the one-act play must be considered an independent genre." As for the plays about Swedish royalty, we would have to go back to Shakespeare to find a counterpart.

The Swedes were slow in recognizing the significance of Strindberg's dramatic work, sixty-two plays. Master Olof, now recognized as the best Swedish play to date, was not performed until nine years after it was written. Miss Julie, his best-known play, had to wait eighteen years for a professional Swedish performance. Many of the plays had their world premières abroad, in Germany, Austria, Denmark, even Finland. The first staging of A Dream Play was a fiasco. The chamber plays, first performed at Strindberg's own Intimate Theater, did not fare well with the critics. With few exceptions, notably some of the historical plays, Strindbergian drama was not palatable to the Swedes. Not until the German-speaking countries had discovered their true value did the situation change. It was especially MAX REINHARDT's guest performances in Sweden with A Dream Play and The Ghost Sonata that drew attention to them. Reinhardt stressed the nightmarish aspect of these plays; Olof Molander, long the leading Strindberg director in Sweden, was influenced by Martin Lamm's biographical readings and opted for more realistic, recognizably Swedish scenery while retaining a dreamlike quality. The trademark of INGMAR BERGMAN, the most prominent Strindberg director in recent decades, is an almost bare, "universal" stage on which the actors and their faces are presented primarily through the lighting.

In the years around World War I, Strindberg was, except for Shakespeare, the most frequently performed playwright on the German stage. The young dramatists who were to shape expressionistic drama received their decisive inspiration from his post-Inferno dramas, notably the dream plays and the chamber plays. While the naturalistic plays are still the ones most frequently performed, it is the pre-expressionistic plays that have had the greater impact upon later drama, whether expressionist, surrealist, or absurdist.

Numerous playwrights have recognized their indebtedness to Strindberg. One of them, EUGENE O'NEILL, in 1924, declared him "the greatest interpreter in the theater of the characteristic spiritual conflicts which constitute the drama—the blood—of our lives today" (Deutsch and Hanau, 1931).

PLAYS: The Freethinker (Fritänkaren, 1870); The Outlaw (Den fredlöse, 1871); Master Olof (Mäster Olof, verse version, 1878, 1890; prose version, 1881); The Secret of the Guild (Gillets hemlighet, 1880); Lucky Per's Journey (Lycko-Pers resa, 1882, 1883); Sir Bengt's Wife (Herr Bengts hustru, 1882); The Father (Fadren, 1887); Comrades (Kamraterna, 1888, 1905 in Austria); Miss Julie (Fröken Julie, 1888, 1889 in Denmark); Creditors (Fördringsägare, 1889); Pariah (Paria, 1890, 1889 in Denmark); Simoom (Samum, 1890); The Stronger (Den starkare, 1890, 1889 in Denmark); The Keys of Heaven (Himmelrikets nycklar, 1892, 1927 in Germany); The Bond (Bandet, 1893 in Germany, 1902 in Germany); Debit and Credit (Debet och kredit, 1893 in Germany, 1900 in Germany); The First Warning (Första varningen, 1893); In the Face of Death (Inför döden, 1893 in Germany); Motherly Love (Moderskärlek, 1893 in Germany, 1894 in Germany); Playing with Fire (Leka med elden, 1893 in Germany); To Damascus I–II (Till Damaskus I–II, 1898, 1900); Advent (1899, 1915 in Germany); Crimes and Crimes (Brott och brott, 1899, 1900); Erik XIV (1899); Gustav Vasa (1899); The Saga of the Folkungs (Folkungasagan, 1899, 1901); The Dance of Death (Dödsdansen, 1900, 1905 in Germany); Gustav Adolf (1900, 1903 in Germany); Charles XII (Carl XII, 1901, 1902); Easter (Påsk, 1901); Midsummer (Midsommar, 1901); The Bridal Crown (Kronbruden, 1902, 1906 in Finland); A Dream Play (Ett drömspel, 1902, 1907); Swanwhite (Svanevit, 1902, 1908 in Finland); Gustav III (1903, 1916); Queen Christina (Kristina, 1903, 1908); To Damascus III (Till Damaskus III, 1904, 1922); The Burned House (Brända tomten, 1907); The Ghost Sonata (Spöksönat, 1907, 1908); The Pelican (Pelikanten, 1907); Thunder in the Air (Oväder, 1907); The Black Glove (Svarta handsken, 1909); The Great Highway (Stora landsvägen, 1909, 1910)

FURTHER READING

- Dahlström, Carl. Strindberg's Dramatic Expressionism, 2nd ed. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1968.
- Deutsch, Helen, and Stella Hanau, eds. The Provincetown: A Story of the Theatre. New York: Farrar & Rinehart, 1931.
- Lamm, Martin. Strindberg's dramer [Strindberg's Plays], Vols. 1–2. Stockholm: Albert Bonniers Förlag, 1924–1926.
- . August Strindberg. Tr. and ed. by Harry G. Carlson. New York: Blom, 1971.
- Meyer, Michael. Strindberg: A Biography. New York: Random House, 1985.
- Ollén, Gunnar. Strindberg's dramatik [Strindberg's Plays]. Stockholm: Sveriges Radios förlag, 1982.
- Schnetz, Diemut. Der moderne Einakter. Bern: Francke, 1967.
- Sprinchorn, Evert. Strindberg as Dramatist. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1982.
- Steene, Birgitta. August Strindberg: An Introduction to His Major Works. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1982.
- Strindberg, August. Preface to Fröken Julie [Miss Julie]. Stockholm: Jos. Seligmanns, Strindberg, August 1888.
- . "August Strindberg om sig själv" [August Strindberg about himself], Bonniers månadskräften (January 1909).
- . Open Letters to the Intimate Theatre, tr. by Walter Johnson. Seattle: Univ. of Washington Press, 1967.
- Törnqvist, Egil. Strindbergian Drama: Themes and Structure. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1982.

Egil Törnqvist

THE STRONGER

The Stronger (Den starkare), a MONODRAMA by AUGUST STRINDBERG, was written in 1888–1889, published in 1890, and first performed at the Dagmar Theater in Copenhagen, DENMARK, in 1889. It describes the random meeting of two actresses who are rivals for the same man, Bob. The meeting takes place in a café on Christmas Eve. In the course of the short play both the recipient and the single speaker, Mrs. X, married to Bob, discover that the silent character, Miss Y, has been, and perhaps still is, Bob's mistress. Strindberg has designed the two ladies as professional parallels and social contrasts. Mrs. X is employed at the Grand Theater, where Bob has an important position, and she has three children in her marriage with him. Miss Y is unmarried, has no children and is no longer employed at the house in question.

Impressed by the French quart d'heure plays, Strindberg wrote The Stronger for the Scandinavian Experimental Theater he was trying to launch in the late 1880s, and it is likely that he intended not only the part of Mrs. X but also that of Miss Y for his own wife, the Finn-Swedish actress Siri von Essen. In performances in SWEDEN, Siri could play the speaking part; in performances in the other Scandinavian countries, she could play the mute one. The play may well have been written to demonstrate that the monologue need not be excluded from naturalist drama.

The criticism of both the text and the performances based on it has focused on the question of how the title should be interpreted: Who is the stronger? For a long time critics were inclined to ascribe the strength to the speaking character, Mrs. X. But in more recent productions, the silent Miss Y has come over as the stronger person. At times the strength has been so evenly distributed between the two women that spectators could arrive at different conclusions.

Strindberg was himself divided on this issue. When commenting on the play sixteen days before it was staged, he remarked that "the heroine does not say a word." A few days before the opening of the play, he gave his wife Siri, who was to play the first Mrs. X, written instructions on how she should act the part. Mrs. X, he now declared, is "the stronger, i.e. the softer. For the rigid person breaks, whereas the pliable one bends—and rises again." Compare this to Mrs. X's line close to the end of the play: "You couldn't learn from others, you couldn't bend—and therefore you broke like a dry reed—but I didn't!"

The Stronger has had a strong impact on later drama. It inspired EUGENE O'NEILL's early monodrama Before Breakfast, PER OLOF ENQUIST's "counter-drama" THE NIGHT OF THE TRIBADES, and INGMAR BERGMAN's film Persona. Its reverberations can be sensed also in HERMAN HEIJERMANS's Dutch piece Boredom (Verveling), in JEAN COCTEAU's La voix humaine, and in SAMUEL BECKETT's KRAPP'S LAST TAPE.

FURTHER READING

Törnqvist, Egil. "Monodrama: Term and Reality." In Essays on Drama and Theatre, ed. by Paul Binnerts, et al. Amsterdam: Moussault, 1973. 145–158.

———. Strindbergian Drama: Themes and Structure. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 1982. 64–70.

———. Ibsen, Strindberg and the Intimate Theatre: Studies in TV Presentation.

Amsterdam: Amsterdam Univ. Press, 1999. 127–133.

Egil Törnqvist

THE STRUGGLE OF THE NAGA TRIBE

The Struggle of the Naga Tribe (Kisah Perjuangan Suku Naga, 1975, published in English in 1979) by Indonesian playwright-director W. S. RENDRA, debuted in Jakarta, INDONESIA, in 1975, but was banned in other cities. The production grew out of undercover fieldwork Rendra and the Bengkel Teater (literally, Workshop Theater) conducted in Wonoroto in Central Java detailing the social injustices experienced by cotton farm laborers. This play has great historical importance in modern Indonesian drama: not only does it represent a daring critique of the repressive dictatorship under President Soeharto, but, by using traditional performance elements in a contemporary play, it provides a model for freeing Indonesian modern drama from the constraints of its Western-influenced theatrical conventions.

The Struggle draws upon the structure of Javanese wayang (puppet theater, masked theater, and dance drama) that includes stories from the Mahabharata, a Hindu epic. The play begins with a prologue by a dalang (puppeteer), who announces: "This story does not—I stress once again, does not—take place in Indonesia. So don't get uptight and censor the story." Rather, it takes place in the mythical kingdom Astinam, a reference to Astina from the Mahabharata. This prologue is followed by the sabranan, scenes that introduce the ogres who live overseas; then jejer, or audience scenes, in which the main characters are presented and their kingdoms are described; and the play concludes with the adegan perang or battle scenes. Also in the tradition of wayang, The Struggle was accompanied by original music of a gamelan (percussive orchestra).

Astinam is ruled by Sri Ratu, the Queen, and run by the Prime Minister, Cabinet, and Parliament. They are plagued by diseases, the physical manifestations of sick souls. There are two ogre choruses: one of machines symbolizing dehumanized workers who live by mantras of money and the other of bumbling foreign ambassadors. Sri Ratu and her cronies are intoxicated by development. They argue that progress must include foreign aid and capital investments and silence internal criticism. The Queen orders implementation of a foreign mining project that will displace the Naga tribe from their village. Unlike the rulers and ogres, the Naga tribe's existence is marked by "the unity of soul and body" that keeps them in tune with nature.

During the final battle scenes over the future of the village, war is waged with words as weapons. Through clever verbal play, Abisavam, leader of the Naga tribe, twists the government representatives' arguments. Cultures must not be annihilated in the name of economic development. Participation in government programs must allow for more than contributing to the GNP, and these so-called superiors are representatives of the people and should act in the public's interest rather than for an elite few. Finally, under increasing pressure not to create an international incident, it is decided to implement the mining project but not to process the copper in situ, which spares the Naga village. The play ends with the dalang, who delivers a direct challenge to the audience to defend the need for balance.

FURTHER READING

- Gillitt, Cobina. "Challenging Conventions and Crossing Boundaries: A New Tradition of Indonesian Theatre From 1968–1978." Ph.D. diss., New York Univ., 2001.
- Lane, Max. "Introduction." In The Struggle of the Naga Tribe. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1979.
- Verburgt, Ron. "'I Am Because You Are; You Are Because I Am': An Interview with Rendra." Australasian Drama Studies 25 (October 1994): 6–16.

Cobina Gillitt

STUFF HAPPENS

DAVID HARE's play Stuff Happens opened at London's National Theatre on September 1, 2004. A huge cast dramatizes events leading up to the 2003 invasion of IRAQ. Characters include real-life politicians, ordinary westerners, and Iraqis. Some dialogue is lifted directly from speeches recorded in the media; other dialogue was written by Hare, as he imagined events occurring behind closed doors. A character called simply Actor functions as a chorus, explaining the scenes' significance and delivering factual information chosen to advance Hare's argument. The play is a determined polemic against what Hare argues was a hasty, unjustified war caused by a short-sighted American drive to topple a second-rate dictator, Saddam Hussein.

Donald Rumsfeld, former U.S. Secretary of Defense, is afforded particular scorn. The play's title is lifted from an offhand remark he makes about lawlessness and looting in post-invasion Baghdad. "Stuff happens," he casually tells a journalist. Privately, Rumsfeld relishes a "war on terror": "That way we can do anything," he asserts gleefully. President George W. Bush, although not crudely caricatured as a toxic, witless thief, as he often is in anti-Republican satire, is vilified for sidelining the cautious Colin Powell. Powell presciently notes that there is "Ten times more excitement about going in [to Iraq] than there is about how the hell we get out," but his warnings are ignored by his senior government colleagues.

However, Stuff Happens is very much a play written for Britons, as indicated by cameos from middle-ranking British politicians and by a joke about the company, Railtrack, which Americans surely would not comprehend. British Prime Minister Tony Blair is lambasted virulently. He supports Bush's hawkish determination to pursue an invasion of Iraq, even though he knows that no weapons of mass destruction have been located by United Nations inspectors. Blair cares more about party politics than about the long-term consequences of military action.

Like Bush—who, it is noted, lost the popular vote in the 2000 Presidential election—Blair has contempt for public opinion. The Actor tells of a worldwide, antiwar demonstration by "a hundred million protestors." These masses are ignored. The invasion proceeds. Months later, David Kay, heading a group seeking Saddam's elusive weapons, notes ruefully that he has found nothing: "I've barely found lunch." Although facetious, Kay's reference to food illuminates a major division between the West and the Iraqis, material ease. The Iraqis endure serious poverty, whereas western politicians seem always to be eating "fried chicken, cornbread, mashed potatoes," "being served by waiters in white coats," and being "at lunch with editors." The Actor remarks that Bush's family retreat has "sixteen hundred acres of oak groves, cattle, creeks, and freshly stocked ponds."

The life of elite westerners is gilded, argues Hare, whereas "Iraqis have been crucified" by "Saddam's sins, by ten years of sanctions, and then this [invasion]." The haves of the world despise and exploit the have-nots. Hatred of "lesser" peoples such as Iraqis, Hare argues, ensures that decisions made about intervening in "lesser" nations' affairs will depend only on the interests of western elites. This darkly pessimistic play's underlying assumption is that democracy is limited, because populations cannot stop administrations from pursuing irresponsible aggression.

(See also England, 1940–Present)

FURTHER READING

- Billington, Michael. Review of Stuff Happens. The Guardian (September 11, 2004). <http://www.guardian.co.uk/arts/politicaltheatre/story/0,,1302327,00.html>.
- Blix, Hans. "Reviewing Myself." The Guardian (September 14, 2004). <http://www.guardian.co.uk/arts/features/story/0,,1304248,00.html>.
- Boon, Richard. About Hare: The Playwright and the Work. London: Faber and Faber, 2003. 1–56.
- Cook, Robin, and Polly Townbee, et al. "For or Against." The Guardian (September 21, 2004). <http://www.guardian.co.uk/arts/politicaltheatre/story/0,13298,1296666,00.html>.
- Hanks, Robert. Review of Stuff Happens. The Independent (September 14, 2004).
- Hare, David. Stuff Happens. London: Faber and Faber, 2004.
- Hiley, Nicholas. Review of Stuff Happens. The Times Literary Supplement (September 17, 2004): 20.
- Patterson, Michael. Strategies of Political Theatre: Post-War British Playwrights. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2003. 125–137.

Kevin De Ornellas

SUBTEXT

The term subtext refers to the thought or feeling that is hidden behind the spoken words of the play. The term came into use through the instructive writings of the Russian actor and director

KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY. He developed his ideas about subtext in large part while staging ANTON CHEKHOV's plays. In December 1919 in a lecture delivered at the Art Theatre in Moscow, Stanislavsky spoke of "undercurrents in the text [podvodnye techenie]," saying that the principal ideas flowed with these undercurrents. The term subtext entered the English language through Elizabeth Reynolds Hapgood's translation of Stanislavsky's Building a Character (1949).

In the first act of Chekhov's THE THREE SISTERS, the unhappily married Masha says she is bored and will not stay for her sister's nameday party. Then Officer Vershinin enters and the conversation becomes quite lively. Masha takes off her hat and says she has decided to stay after all. The subtext behind her line, "I'm staying for lunch," is that she has fallen in love with Vershinin. She is not fully aware of what has happened, but her change of mind and her gesture of taking off her hat reveal what is in the subtext. It is up to the actress to convey to the audience what the line by itself does not say.

Of course, actors before Stanislavsky were well aware of the need to convey more than what is stated in a line of dialogue. They called it ACTING "between the lines," and it meant the use of an inflection or a facial expression to evoke more than the single reading the dialogue itself offered. With the advent of subtle dramatists like HENRIK IBSEN and Chekhov, however, so much meaning lay beneath the lines that their playscripts were compared to icebergs, ninety percent of the meaning lying beneath the surface. In psychologically complicated and subtle plays, the main theme that unites the scenes—what Stanislavsky called the through-line—lies in the subtext, and often it runs wide and deep.

When reading a play it is easy to ignore the subtext, since the plot moves forward above it, while in a good performance the actor or director will bring it unexpectedly to light. Even an experienced theater person can miss much that lies in the written text. When the English actor and director HARLEY GRANVILLE-BARKER saw the MOSCOW ART THEATRE staging of Chekhov's THE CHERRY ORCHARD, he remarked that reading "the play afterwards was like reading the libretto of an opera, missing the music." As an example of the kind of "music" that Stanislavsky provided, one can study his production book for Chekhov's THE SEA GULL, which has been published.

In didactic or propaganda plays, the subtext barely exists. In the discussion plays of GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, for example, there is virtually no subtext, as Stanislavsky uses the word. Subtexts exist mainly in realistic or naturalistic plays, where, as in real life, much of what is going on in the minds of the characters is revealed in speech inflections and body language.

In acting the major roles in Ibsen, James Hunecker said the actor "must reconstruct a living human from a mere bone of a word. These words seem detached, seem meaningless, yet in action their cohesiveness is unique; dialogue melts into dialogue, action is dovetailed to action, and fleeting gestures reveal a state of soul. Ibsen does not read as well as he acts. He is extremely difficult to interpret for the reason that the old technic of the actor is inadequate" (Iconoclasts, 1905).

The subtext may in many instances be difficult to interpret. A reader of novels will usually have gestures and hidden thoughts explained. Such a reader may wonder why Chekhov could not be more helpful and tell in a stage direction that Masha's boredom has turned to love. But a naturalistic dramatist may provide only what the audience would see and hear. Either the dramatist expects fine actors and directors to make the subtext available or he or she expects the wiser sort in the audience to figure out what is going on.

What is one to make of Dr. Chebutykin's dropping of the clock in act 3 of Chekhov's The Three Sisters? To begin to understand the subtext, the viewer must have in mind the fact that the clock belonged to the sisters' mother and that Chebutykin had once been in love with her. Disappointed in love, he has become a cynical old man, a dog in the manger, who envies the happiness that others may feel.

Perhaps no play has a deeper subtext than Ibsen's ROSMER-SHOLM, with commentators still trying to discern what is going on in its murkiest depths. Heroine Rebecca West has hesitated at nothing to win the love of Rosmer, even removing his wife from the scene through a kind of psychological murder. Yet when he proposes marriage, she staggers and says that is not possible. What is going on in her mind, subconscious or unconscious, is still the subject of debate among scholars as they minutely examine the text. The force of her reaction indicates that she has been caught off guard and that his proposal has set off a subterranean earthquake; she herself does not know what is happening in the depths of her soul. As James Hunecker wrote in 1905, "Not a half-dozen actresses on the globe have grasped the complex skeins of Rebecca West's character, and grasping them have been able to send across the footlights the shivering music of her soul. . . . It is a new virtuosity, a new fingering of the dramatic keyboard, that is demanded" (Iconoclasts).

[See also Dramatic Dialogue; Stage Directions and Stage Sets]

FURTHER READING

Hunecker, James. Iconoclasts: A Book of Dramatists. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1905.

Stanislavsky, Konstantin. My Life in Art. Tr. by G. Ivanov-Mumjiev.

Moscow: Foreign Languages Publishing House, 1958.

Stanislavsky, Constantin. An Actor Prepares. Tr. by Elizabeth Reynolds Hapgood. New York: Routledge, 1945.

Evert Sprinchorn

SUDDENLY LAST SUMMER

I think we ought at least to consider the possibility that the girl's story could be true . . .

—Dr. Cukrowicz, Scene 4

Suddenly Last Summer, a long TENNESSEE WILLIAMS one-act grotesquerie originally performed on a double-bill, Garden District, with Williams's one-act, Something Unspoken, was first staged OFF-BROADWAY in 1958. It offers perhaps the darkest vision of all Williams's plays; set in a sinister primeval garden on a crumbling Southern gothic estate owned by the imperious Violet Venable, Suddenly Last Summer's gruesome portrait of a predatory universe—as represented by a monstrous Venus fly-trap dominating Mrs. Venable's garden—examines madness, homosexuality, family dysfunction, the artistic temperament, even cannibalism.

Mrs. Venable intends to employ her vast wealth to arrange for her disturbed niece, Catherine Holly, to undergo a lobotomy. The previous summer, Catherine accompanied Sebastian, Mrs. Venable's poet son, on a European tour during which Sebastian died under mysterious circumstances. Catherine's version of Sebastian's demise outrages Mrs. Venable for, as Catherine ultimately explains, he was a promiscuous homosexual whose only interest in Catherine was as bait for prospective lovers. In past years, Mrs. Venable had accompanied Sebastian on his annual tour, so the implication of Catherine's account is that Mrs. Venable served a similar purpose when she was still able to attract young men. Mrs. Venable's romanticized view of herself as muse for Sebastian's writing drives her to want to silence Catherine permanently. She makes a lucrative offer to the financially strapped Lion's View Hospital if one of its surgeons, Dr. Cukrowicz, will perform the lobotomy aimed at expunging Catherine's version of Sebastian's death. Despite considerable pressure, Cukrowicz refuses to accommodate Mrs. Venable's wishes until he has examined Catherine. He manages to draw out the partially blocked Catherine, who finally recalls the ghastly events in their entirety. Sebastian, she divulges, died at Cabeza del Lobo as a result of a cannibalistic attack by a mob of young men he had sexually exploited. As the recounting of this horror releases Catherine from her disturbed state, the defeated Mrs. Venable descends into madness.

Williams's frequent use of grotesque elements is at its most florid in this play, with savage images of predatory birds gutting baby turtles on the Galapagos Islands and depictions of Sebastian as the martyred Saint Sebastian. In some respects, Suddenly Last Summer is an American Grand Guignol, but one that employs its horrors in service of Williams's recurrent themes of the struggle for survival of the fragile or artistic soul in a brutal cosmos. The unseen Sebastian is both victim and victimizer, whereas the ruthless Mrs. Venable is a victimizer who fails to prevail over Catherine, her vulnerable prey. In many respects, Suddenly Last Summer employs imagery Williams first explored in his 1950 novella, The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone, and the use of a central character as both victim and victimizer was typical of many of his works, none more effectively than Blanche DuBois of A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE.

Suddenly Last Summer was well received by critics in its original production, which opened at New York's York Theatre on January 7, 1958, although many considered it a minor work by a major playwright. It remains one of Williams's most frequently produced plays, and it has been filmed twice, in 1959 for the screen and in 1993 for television.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Clum, John M. "The Sacrificial Stud and the Fugitive Female in Suddenly Last Summer, Orpheus Descending, and Sweet Bird of Youth." In The Cambridge Companion to Tennessee Williams, ed. by Matthew C. Roudané. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1997. 128–146.
- Gross, Robert F. "Consuming Hart: Sublimity and Gay Poetics in Suddenly Last Summer." Theatre Journal 47 (1995): 229–251.
- Konkle, Lincoln. "Puritan Paranoia: Tennessee Williams's Suddenly Last Summer as Calvinist Nightmare." American Drama 7, no. 2 (Spring 1998): 51–72.
- Parker, Brian. "A Tentative Stemma for Drafts and Revisions of Tennessee Williams's Suddenly Last Summer." Modern Drama 41, no. 2 (Summer 1998): 303–326.
- Saddik, Annette J. "The (Un)Represented Fragmentation of the Body in Tennessee Williams's 'Desire and the Black Masseuse' and Suddenly Last Summer." Modern Drama 41, no. 3 (Fall 1998): 347–354.
- Sofer, Andrew. "Self-Consuming Artifacts: Power, Performance, and the Body in Tennessee Williams's Suddenly Last Summer." Modern Drama 38 (1995): 336–347.

James Fisher

SUDERMANN, HERMANN (1857–1928)

Gag us, stupefy us, shut us up in harems or in cloisters—and that perhaps would be the best. But if you give us our freedom, do not wonder if we take advantage of it.

—Magda, Act 4, Heimat

Together with GERHART HAUPTMANN, Hermann Sudermann brought NATURALIST drama to the German stage. During the 1890s and early 1900s, Sudermann was the more popular of the two playwrights, but today he is essentially forgotten. Sudermann was born on September 30, 1857, and raised in Matziken, East Prussia (currently Macikiai, LITHUANIA). After studying at the University of Königsberg, he moved to Berlin where he continued his university studies while earning his living as a tutor and journalist. Sudermann's first success as an author came with the psychological novel Frau Sorge (Dame Care, 1887).

In October 1889, just ten days after Hauptmann's breakthrough with BEFORE DAYBREAK (Vor Sonnenaufgang) at Berlin's Freie Bühne (Free Stage), Sudermann's first play, Honor (Die Ehre, 1889), premiered on the same stage and became an instant success. Honor is set in a typical Berlin building in which an upper-class family (the Mühlingks) lives in the Vorderhaus (the front building), and a lower-class family (the Heineckes) in the Hinterhaus (the building behind). The main character, Robert Heinecke, is employed by the Mühlingks and returns from a business trip to find his own family in a degraded state of affairs. His sister is prostituting herself to the Mühlingks's son to receive singing lessons. As part of his attempt to escape the constraints of his lower-class background, Robert has adopted the honor code of the corrupted bourgeoisie and thus challenges the son to a duel. But Robert's honor code is proven false by the intervening Count Trast, who serves as the voice of reason in the play.

With its emphasis on heredity and the environment, its detailed STAGE DIRECTIONS, and its depiction of class conflict, prostitution, alcoholism, and female emancipation, Honor is a typical naturalist drama. Yet the happy ending in which Count Trast talks Robert out of the duel and then provides him with a new job and a bright future is considered a fairy-tale conclusion inappropriate for a naturalist play. Moreover, the drama's structural progression from a marked beginning to a climax and a happy denouement deviates from the paradigmatic naturalist slice-of-life DRAMATURGY. Sudermann's second play, The Destruction of Sodom (Sodoms Ende, 1891) depicts the degenerate lifestyle of Berlin's artistic circles and was banned by the authorities on account of its graphic content.

In Magda (Heimat, 1893), Sudermann's most famous play, he takes the theme of female emancipation further than his naturalist contemporaries HENRIK IBSEN or Hauptmann. Whereas they portrayed the plight of women in an oppressive male-dominated society, Sudermann presents a woman who has managed to combine her life as a single mother with a successful career. The play begins with the main character, Magda, a world famous singer, returning to her home after a seventeen-year absence. Magda had been forced to leave at age eighteen when she refused to marry the man her father had arranged for her. Upon her return, it appears as if a reconciliation could be possible. But when Magda's father discovers that she has an illegitimate child, he considers his honor destroyed and is prepared to kill his daughter. Before being able to carry out his misdeed, however, he dies of a stroke.

Magda must be seen in the tradition of the German bürgerliches Trauerspiel (bourgeois TRAGEDY), a tradition in which a young woman frequently becomes pregnant and is then sacrificed by her family in order to preserve their honor. Sudermann is the first to subvert the conventions of this tradition by having the father, not the daughter, be the victim of the old order. The success of Magda resulted not only from the appealing and fast-moving plot, but also from the fact that some of the most famous actresses of the time, including Sarah Bernhardt (1844–1923) and Eleanora Duse (1849–1924), played the role of Magda.

In other plays, Sudermann continued his use of naturalist themes. The Joy of Living (Es lebe das Leben, 1902) is a drama about adultery and corrupt politics in Wilhelminian GERMANY. The Fires of St. John (Johannisfeuer, 1900) depicts one of the naturalists' central themes, determinism; the drama poses the question whether a gypsy girl brought up by a well-to-do farming family can escape the genetic heritage of a degenerate mother.

As was the case with Hauptmann, it was OTTO BRAHM who promoted Sudermann. However, Brahm valued Hauptmann's talents more than Sudermann's, despite the fact that Sudermann's plays were his top box office hits. Following his initial successes, Sudermann was treated poorly by literary critics, including a group led by Alfred Kerr (1867–1948). In a move that served to worsen the situation, Sudermann mounted a counter-attack in several articles. More recent scholars, however, have argued that Sudermann's works deserve renewed attention, not only because of their masterful techniques and important contributions to the development of naturalist drama, but also because these plays have far more depth and poetic beauty than has been acknowledged to date.

Sudermann died on November 21, 1928, in Berlin, Germany.

SELECT PLAYS: Honor (Die Ehre, 1889); The Destruction of Sodom (Sodoms Ende, 1891); Magda (Heimat, 1893); The Battle of the Butterflies (Die Schmetterlingsschlacht, 1895); The Vale of Content (Das Glück im Winkel, 1896); St. John the Baptist (Johannes, 1898); The Fires of St. John (Johannisfeuer, 1900); The Joy of Living (Es lebe das Leben, 1902); Stormbrother Socrates (Der Sturmgeselle Sokrates, 1903); Stone among Stones (Stein unter Steinen, 1905); Morituri (1910)

FURTHER READING

Rix, Walter T., ed. Hermann Sudermann. Werk und Wirkung [Work and Reception]. Würzburg: Königshausen und Neumann, 1980.
Whiting, Raleigh. "Self-Consciousness in Die Ehre: A Revised View of Hermann Sudermann's First Drama." Journal of English and Germanic Philology 89, no. 4 (1990): 461–474.

Kerstin T. Gaddy

THE SUICIDE

The Suicide (Samoubiitsa, ca. 1929–1930), a tragic COMEDY by NIKOLAI ERDMAN, is one of the most banned and most important plays of the Soviet period. It was rehearsed at the MOSCOW ART THEATER (1931–1932) and the Meyerhold Theater (1932) but dropped by both when prohibitions issued between 1930 and 1932 were not rescinded. Attempts to stage it during the Thaw around 1957 and 1965 failed before rehearsals began, as did efforts to publish it in 1933 and 1968. The world premiere took place in 1969 in Göteborg, SWEDEN, after the text was smuggled to CZECHOSLOVAKIA. A planned 1968 production in Prague was halted when Soviet troops occupied that city. Interest in the play swept through GERMANY in the 1970s, ENGLAND in the late 1970s and early 1980s, and the UNITED STATES in the early 1980s. It was first performed in RUSSIA at Moscow's Satire Theater in 1982 but banned after six performances. The Perestroika-era revival of that same production in 1987 was followed by dozens of stagings throughout the Soviet Union.

The play focuses on Semyon Podsekalnikov, whose name suggests he has been "cut down" or "hooked" like a fish, while echoing the name Podkolyosin from The Marriage by Nikolai Gogol, who was a major influence on Erdman. Yearning for a quiet life but depressed by his failure to find work, the antihero Podsekalnikov is nearly driven to suicide through a series of comic misunderstandings and immoral schemes. The idea is not his but arises when his wife wonders aloud if he might kill himself. Kalabushkin, an unscrupulous neighbor, turns this "information" into an evil money-making plan. He "sells" the potential suicide to disenfranchised individuals—an intellectual protesting political tyranny, a writer opposing the repression of art, a priest lamenting the demise of religion, a prostitute mourning the death of romanticism—who hope to draw attention to their causes by convincing Podsekalnikov to name them in his suicide note.

The notion of dying for a grand cause "brightens" Podsekalnikov's "miserable, inhuman life," and he resolves to kill himself, although cowardice saves him. It does not save Fedya Petunin, a youth whom we never see but who is inspired to commit suicide off-stage by stories about Podsekalnikov's intentions. Petunin technically is the title character (the noun of the Russian original refers to a person rather than the act), and his shadowy presence in the finale injects TRAGEDY, tainting Podsekalnikov's survival.

In the dialogue Erdman employs rhythm, rhyme, oratorical technique, and puns as might a poet. Meanwhile, Podsekalnikov's humorous attempts to make sense of his predicament cause him to utter undiluted truths that were deemed treasonable by Soviet authorities and that remain subversive in most modern societies. Thus, language transcends mere style, becoming an element of the play's themes. Characters often commit actions not because they intend to but because someone's unguarded words establish an almost incontrovertible chain of events. Language in The Suicide is a powerful instrument that, if wielded carelessly, may have tragic consequences. Podsekalnikov is a victim of those who would promote their causes with his death, but the unseen Petunin may be considered a victim of Podsekalnikov's failure to take responsibility for his own words.

[See also Vsevolod Meyerhold]

FURTHER READING

- Erdman, Nikolai. The Mandate and The Suicide. Tr. by Marjorie Hoover, George Genereux, Jr., and Jacob Volkov; intr. by Hoover and Genereux. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Ardis, 1975.
- . The Suicide. Tr. by Peter Tegel. London: Pluto Press, 1981.
- . The Suicide. Adapt. and Tr. by Eileen Thalenberg and Alan Richardson. Oakville, Canada: Mosaic Press, 1992.
- . The Major Plays of Nikolai Erdman: The Warrant and The Suicide. Tr. and ed. by John Freedman. Amsterdam: Harwood Academic Publishers, 1995.

Freedman, John. Silence's Roar: The Life and Drama of Nikolai Erdman. Oakville, Canada: Mosaic Press, 1992.

John Freedman

SUMMER AND SMOKE

So that is your high conception of human desires. What you have here is not the anatomy of a beast, but a man. And I—I reject your opinion of where love is, and the kind of truth you believe the brain to be seeking!—There is something not shown on the chart.

—Alma Winemiller, Scene 8

TENNESSEE WILLIAMS's 1948 drama won only moderate critical approval under Margo Jones's direction in its original production, but the play featured one of Williams's quintessential heroines, Alma Winemiller, effectively portrayed by Margaret Phillips. The back-to-back triumphs of Williams's THE GLASS MENAGERIE in 1945 and A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE in 1947 somewhat obscured the merits of Summer and Smoke, a disappointment that kept Williams revising the play well into the 1970s.

The character of Alma is another variation on the sexually repressed, dysfunctional heroines of Williams's oeuvre, a woman caught between the social constraints of rigid era and her own passions. Summer and Smoke offers a poetic examination of the tension between the desires of the body and the longings of the spirit, a frequent theme in Williams's greatest plays. That tension is poignantly embodied in Alma, a character whose persona falls somewhere between the fragile, asexual Laura Wingfield of The Glass Menagerie and the hysterical, promiscuous Blanche DuBois of A Streetcar Named Desire.

Alma lives in the straightjacket of rigid Christian morality in Glorious Hill, Mississippi, a small Southern town in 1916. She is the pure-minded daughter of the distant, pompous Rev. Winemiller and his mentally disturbed wife whose problems stem, in part, from the stifling repressions of their lives. Although she is keeping company with the effeminate Roger Doremus, Alma is powerfully drawn to the virile, sexually liberated Dr. John Buchanan, her next-door neighbor. Williams uses Alma and John to debate the differences between spiritual love and carnality. John's credentials as a doctor and his worldliness lead him to conclude that spiritual love does not exist and that sex is merely a matter of biology. He spends much of his time drinking and indulging himself at a local brothel. Alma is shocked by John's behavior, which she equates with bestiality; for her, love is in the meeting of minds and in a mutual appreciation of beauty and goodness.

Alma longs to find a fulfilling spiritual love, but gets little guidance from her family. Her fear (and expectation) of sinking into arid spinsterhood or a lifeless marriage to Roger incites a crisis in her attitudes. She has rejected John's advances and lectured him on morality, but when she can resist him no longer it is too late. She learns that John has changed his views and plans to marry an innocent young woman from a local family. This revelation sends Alma into an emotional tailspin that ends with her seduction of a strange man in the local park.

Some critics described the play as an allegory of good (Alma) versus evil (John), but others found it a rehashing of themes Williams had explored to greater effect in earlier plays, particularly A Streetcar Named Desire. Williams's own dissatisfactions with this talky, structurally conventional work led him to revise the play in 1976. Renaming it The Eccentricities of a Nightingale, Williams maintained the central strengths of Summer and Smoke—its characters, language, and central theme—while streamlining the play's language and structure. Despite a fine production featuring Blythe Danner and Frank Langella, The Eccentricities of a Nightingale ran only briefly at New York's Morosco Theatre before being filmed for television. Summer and Smoke had previously been filmed in 1961 under the direction of Peter Glenville, with Geraldine Page as Alma and Laurence Harvey as John.

Summer and Smoke, along with its revision The Eccentricities of a Nightingale, is a significant work in Williams's canon not only because Alma is an essential figure in his gallery of dramatic heroines, but also because the play amplifies Williams's career-long obsessions with the survival of fragile beings and the conflict of body and spirit.

(See also United States, 1940–Present)

FURTHER READING

- Adler, Thomas P. "Before the Fall—and After: Summer and Smoke and The Night of the Iguana." In The Cambridge Companion to Tennessee Williams, ed. by Matthew C. Roudané. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1997. 114–127.
- Brooking, Jack. "Directing Summer and Smoke: An Existentialist Approach." Modern Drama 2 (February 1960): 377–385.
- Clum, John M. "From Summer and Smoke to Eccentricities of a Nightingale: The Evolution of the Queer Alma." Modern Drama 39 (Spring 1996): 31–50.
- Kramer, Richard E. "Summer and Smoke and Eccentricities of a Nightingale." In Tennessee Williams: A Guide to Research and Performance, ed. by Philip C. Kolin. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1998. 80–89.
- Sahayam, V. Sam. "How Broadway Proved Williams Wrong: A Comparative Study of The Eccentricities of a Nightingale and Summer and Smoke." In A Mosaic of Encounters, ed. by Desai Mutalik, V. K. Malhotra, T. S. Anand, and Prashant K. Sinha. New Delhi: Creative, 1999. 15–20.

James Fisher

SUMMERFOLK

Summerfolk (Dachniki), a play in four acts by MAKSIM GORKY, was written and first performed in 1904 but turned down by Nemirovich-Danchenko for the MOSCOW ART THEATRE, much to Gorky's disgust. It was premièred in November in St. Petersburg at Vera Komissarzhevskaya's theater with Komissarzhevskaya as Varvara. A new departure in social setting for Gorky, Summerfolk focuses on the professional intelligentsia. It is part of his on-going dialogue with ANTON CHEKHOV's plays, particularly with THE CHERRY ORCHARD, and represents an attempt to fire the intelligentsia into social and political action.

Set in a summer village of dachas (wooden villas) a commutable distance from a large town, the play centers on a lawyer, Basov, his wife, Varvara, and their less-than-happy marriage. The inhabitants of the dachas—lawyers, architects, doctors, writers, and entrepreneurs—represent the range of views in the educated professional classes of the period. The wealthy, complacent Basov and his colleagues are juxtaposed with a radical female doctor, Marya Lvovna, and the easy-going but free-thinking entrepreneur, Dvoietochiye. These people spend their summer in poetry readings, picnics, casual love affairs, and amateur theatricals.

Their prize guest Shalimov, a famous writer, deeply disappoints his once ardent fan, Varvara, while his all-male talk with her husband, which is dismissive of women, causes her to take a hard look at her own marriage. Irritated by the idle ways of the group and their complacent politics, Marya Lvovna confronts them with their social responsibilities and urges them to use their gifts for the betterment of RUSSIA. For this she is branded a troublesome woman. She has also fallen in love with Varvara's brother, Vlas, who is the same age as her own daughter, Sonia, which provides an opportunity for all kinds of antifemale prejudice to be voiced. In the end Varvara, her eyes opened to their indolent lifestyle and insulted by her husband's behavior, walks out on her marriage and joins forces with Marya Lvovna, Vlas, Sonia, and Dvoietochiye.

Echoes of HENRIK IBSEN as well as Chekhov are evident in this play. Varvara takes Henrik Ibsen's Nora (A DOLL'S HOUSE, 1886) a step further by upgrading her marital rebellion to a social and political one, while Marya Lvovna's rhetoric is a broadside at the lack of social conscience among Chekhov's gentrified intellectuals. Summerfolk also places "the woman issue" at the forefront. The characters who take the brave steps are principally women (Vlas is as yet a young, but forthright, apprentice lawyer, and Dvoietochiye has already made his millions). Varvara, Marya, and Sonia are set against a series of complacent women whose main interests focus on children, love affairs, and obscure poetry.

Also evident in this play is a conscious THEATRICALITY and a melodramatic thread that infuse the structure and content: an amateur production on an open-air stage is being prepared in the background; a young student in love with Varvara attempts suicide. Gorky uses these devices to accentuate the artificial lifestyle and lack of concern shown by this group for Russian social injustice, which he sees as the real issue. As Varvara states: “. . . we do nothing and we talk much too much . . .” Glimpsed in his two earlier plays, Philistines and THE LOWER DEPTHS, Gorky's COMEDY is here generated at the expense of the middle-class intelligentsia, often laughable in their crass behavior and delusions of idealism. For the first time Gorky displays the political power of his blend of satire and MELODRAMA, which together verge on the grotesque, in the presentation of his negative characters.

FURTHER READING

- Gorky, M. Summerfolk. Adapt. by Nick Dear from a literal tr. by Vera Liber. London: Faber and Faber, 1999.
- Harussi, Yael. “Realism in Drama: Turgenev, Chekhov, Gorky, and Their Summer Folk.” Ulbundus Review 2, no. 2 (1982): 131–148.
- Marsh, Cynthia. “Gorky and Chekhov: A Dialogue of Text and Performance.” The Slavonic and East European Review 77, no. 4 (1999): 601–619.
- Rischbieter, Henning. “Peter Stein's Gorky—A Review of Summerfolk in West Berlin.” Yale Theatre, 7, no. 2 (Gorky Issue), 1976.

Cynthia Marsh

THE SUNDAY PROMENADE

The Sunday Promenade (Söndagspromenaden), a “play in three acts and an epilogue” by LARS FORSSELL, was first performed at the Royal Dramatic Theater in Stockholm, SWEDEN, in 1963 and published the same year. The title of the play, Forssell's most successful to date, refers to the promenade that Justus Coriander and his family take around their dinner table every Sunday. According to Forssell himself, this unusual Sunday habit is based on what really happened in his own family—which does not exclude the possibility that the work of HJALMAR BERGMAN has served as a further inspiration.

Coriander is a grocer in a small and dull Swedish town at the turn of the century. He has invented the Sunday promenade to escape the dreary confines of small-town life. Justus, we learn, is “a poet,” “an actor,” “a real rascal.” While walking round the table with their picnic baskets, the participants imagine themselves to be in “God's free nature.” They describe what they see and sing a song especially composed for the occasion. In this way the contrast between fantasy and reality is illustrated in a slightly absurdist manner.

A rudimentary erotic plot keeps the play together. It concerns Angelica, Coriander's daughter, and Abraham (one of Forssell's Christian names), his goodhearted clerk. Both are set off from Coriander's verbose fantasies, Angelica by being deaf-mute, Abraham by being unimaginative.

Other contrasts concern ideological differences. Pitted against Coriander's dream about the beauty of life—a dream about the present that can come true only through separation from the world at large—are the dream of the vicar about a heavenly paradise and the dream of Carl Michael, Coriander's invalid Marxist son, about a true brotherhood on earth, once the world revolution has been accomplished. These two dreams, however different, are similar in their concern for the future. In the words of Corrigan:

For Justus Coriander the only acceptable reality is the moment of here and now, which he attempts to shape and control with his extraordinary imaginative powers. The future is always to be feared because in its unpredictability it can always get out of control.

What Justus attempts is to conquer time: “Time is our enemy. Let's not talk about anything but now. Now we're alive, now we exist.” When Coriander by the fictive campfire asks his mother to tell a story, she tells about “The Man Who Wanted to Murder Time.” The only way to murder time, to be set free, it appears from the story, which is a premonition of Coriander's fate, is to kill oneself.

This Sunday, as it grows dark outside—a thunderstorm is coming—the participants turn into soldiers reciting nostalgic monologues in blank verse the night before a decisive battle. The thunder and lightning that follow stem not from the clouds but from the cannons of two armies.

Suddenly something unusual happens. Carl Michael has an attack and loses consciousness. For a moment not only the promenaders but also the spectators are uncertain as to whether this is simulated or real. When they realize that it is real, the family rushes to help the stricken boy, whereas Justus struggles to keep the fiction alive even at the expense of his son's life. When told that “this is no game now, Mr. Coriander,” he breaks down. Promising God that if the boy's life is saved, he will go to Mongolia as a missionary, Justus declares: “I've been a dreamer, now I'm going to face reality.” Carl Michael's life is saved, and true to his promise, Justus sets out with his family for Mongolia.

In the Epilogue, seven years later, we learn that Coriander has been killed by the Mongolians and that his last words before they cut out his tongue were: “I didn't know the world was that big.” Confronted with brutal reality, all the dreams have been destroyed. The only one who survives the journey to the Far East is Abraham, the most unimaginative character in the play.

The Sunday Promenade, Forssell (1977) said, “deals with man's tragic lack of consciousness, a lack which causes his destruction.” Corrigan points in the same direction when claiming that in the play “the disengaged man is revealed as a betrayer who is ultimately betrayed.” Even so, “there is something almost noble in his impossible quest.”

FURTHER READING

- Corrigan, Robert W. “Introduction.” In The New Theatre of Europe 3: Four Contemporary Plays from the European Stage. New York: Dell, 1965. 23–29.
- Forsell, Lars. Teater I – II [Theater I–II]. Lund: Cavefors, 1977.
- Syrén, Gunnar. Osäkerhetens teater: Studier i Lars Forsells dramatik [The Theater of Uncertainty: Studies in Lars Forsell's Plays]. Uppsala: Lundequistska, 1979. 137–180.

Törnqvist, Egil. "Lars Forssell: Söndagspromenaden (1963)." In Svenska dramastrukturer [Swedish Drama Structures]. Stockholm: Prisma, 1973. 128–158.

Egil Törnqvist

SURREALISM

Surrealism, pure psychic automatism, which has the aim of expressing, whether verbally, in writing, or by other means, the actual functioning of thought outside of any control of reason and beyond all aesthetic or moral preoccupation.

—André Breton, Manifesto of Surrealism, 1924

Opposed, on principle, to creating works of art, surrealism nevertheless has left an indelible influence on the visual, cinematic, and theatrical arts. Motivated less by the desire to produce objects than to liberate "the marvelous," the surrealists worked from the early 1920s until after World War II to establish creative processes that relied not on reason and form, but on chance, the logic of dreams, and the provocative power of paradox. Their movement, begun in Paris and rapidly expanded throughout Europe, AFRICA, and the Americas, was a collective search for the means of permanent personal, social, and creative revolution, grounded in opposition to bourgeois values of positivism, logic, and REALISM.

Surrealism claimed a wide but coherent family of influences. In its early days, what the leader of the movement, André Breton, labeled the "intuitive epoch" (1919–1925), inspiration was drawn mostly from literature and the arts, with an emphasis on eccentric visionary figures, including Comte de Lautréamont, Arthur Rimbaud, Stéphane Mallarmé, Charles Baudelaire, ALFRED JARRY, the Marquis de Sade, and earlier AVANT-GARDE movements such as SYMBOLISM, FUTURISM (Italian), and DADAISM. One scientific figure, however, profoundly shaped the surrealist vision: Sigmund Freud. Later, as surrealism became more involved with the sociopolitical world in its second, or "reasoning," epoch (after 1925), figures such as Karl Marx, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, and Pancho Villa entered the vocabulary. Throughout their decades of investigation and creation, the surrealists remained committed to the power of the image, the fusion of dream and reality, and "the revolution of the mind."

Surrealism emphasized collective activity, and its history is one of intensely shared pursuits as well as painful divergences of principle. Its organization, with endless periodicals, pamphlets, meetings, and manifestos, set the stage for future movements that worked across genres and disciplines, such as lettrism and situationism. The common ground, defined by André Breton (1896–1966) and shared by Philippe Soupault (1897–1990), Louis Aragon (1897–1982), Robert Desnos (1900–1945), Paul Éluard (1895–1952), and others in the Manifesto of Surrealism (1924), was belief in "the superior reality of certain forms of association neglected heretofore, in the omnipotence of dream, and in the disinterested play of thought." Their attraction to the unknown drew from both the Symbolist idea of noumenon as well as Sigmund Freud's proposition that the unconscious is much bigger than the conscious. They sought to unleash the powers of the imagination by creating conditions favorable to extra-logical events, teaming trance, hypnotism, seances, and occult and scientific experiments with extensive investigations of automatic composition. Essential to this "arranged derangement of the senses" was the creation of games such as the Exquisite Corpse (in which each person supplies one part of a sentence, and the whole is revealed only at the end). Banishing reason and premeditation from the creative process was the underlying goal of all surrealist endeavors, and working in collaboration (to prevent the preponderance of any one vision) was encouraged; many surrealist works are signed collectively, or not at all. Surrealism had several journals under its editorial control, including two runs of the antiliterary Littérature (1919–1924), the more politically engaged La Révolution surréaliste (1924–1929), and le Surréalisme au service de la révolution (1930–1933).

The second, "reasoning," epoch of surrealism centered on revolution in all forms, introducing an explicitly political bent. Opposition to fascism and an antitotalitarian, anticolonial stance led them to ally themselves with the French Communist Party, with whom they collaborated on several projects; this, however, led to perpetual disputes over the possibility of functioning within a political framework. Surrealism sought a political role throughout its existence: many members joined the Party, some to renounce surrealism; gallons of ink were spilled on surrealism's relationship to politics, the war, and revolution; and Breton began a project with Leon Trotsky, whom he met in exile in MEXICO in 1928, to unite writers in opposition to totalitarianism. Through it all, surrealism tried to reconcile its desire for "total revolution" with the widespread social and political upheavals of the time without becoming merely a polemic, a party tool, or succumbing to one way of thinking that would necessarily close the doors to others. The insistence on the freedom of the imagination (and writing and creation) always inserted itself as a wedge between the surrealist project and complete political commitment.

The search for uncharted territories of the mind led the surrealists to a set of concerns that unified their stylistically diverse output: the transcription of dreams, revelation of the unconscious, fusion of dream and reality, paradox, l'amour fou, and CHANCE. They formulated not an aesthetic but a process (Aragon [1928]: "Surrealism is not a refuge from style"), with, however, characteristic results. In literary experiments, automatic writing generated stories with alogical progression, surprising juxtapositions, and heavy emphasis on imagery, beginning in 1919 with the first purely automatic text, The Magnetic Fields, cowritten by Soupault and Breton. In photography, Man Ray led the quest for new methods of producing images (such as rayographs); in visual art, Max Ernst invented frottage (rubbing over a textured surface) and grottage (scraping the canvas) and mastered COLLAGE; Breton, Jean Arp, and Francis Picabia extended the Dadaist use of found objects; and several artists, notably André Masson, employed automatic drawing. Some artists used the art work as a provocative image for the audience: René Magritte's disconcertingly juxtaposed images invite imaginative leaps, and Salvador Dalí's "paranoiac critical" method promotes the idea that the forcefully creative viewer can realize the "true" reality of any image. In surrealist cinema, dreamlike logic dictated the flow of images, often shocking (Luis Buñuel and Salvador Dalí's Un Chien Andalou [The Andalusian Dog, 1928]), mysterious (ANTONIN ARTAUD and Germaine Dulac's The Seashell and the Clergyman, 1928), or inexplicably beautiful (Fernand Léger's Ballet Mécanique, 1923). In all art works, surrealism tended to mix genres: a canvas might hold poetry, sculpture, collage, photography, and found objects.

Surrealism's period of activity in the theater was brief, 1919 to 1925. Inspired by Dada in Zurich and its program to rouse a complacent public, the soon-to-be surrealists, headed by Breton, aligned themselves with Tzara, who had moved to Paris to promote Dada in 1920. The Dadas provided valuable experience in the new world of inciting audiences and creating audaciously unacceptable performances, but the surrealists soon broke from Dada's "merciless iconoclasm." The dozen or so plays produced by members of the surrealist circle were created during this period, including works by Breton and Soupault (If You Please, 1920, and You Will Forget Me, 1920), Roger Vitrac (Free Entry, 1922, and The Mysteries of Love, 1923), Aragon (At the Foot of the Wall, 1923, and The Mirror Wardrobe One Fine Evening, 1923), and Artaud (JET OF BLOOD, 1924). They shared a pervasive emphasis on imagery, visual and verbal, over plot and character, abandoning rational communication in favor of evoking a new kind of poetry in theater. But surrealist theater as such was short-lived; as opposed to creating a new dramatic aesthetic as to participating in a bourgeois commercial enterprise, surrealists began reprimanding members for their interest in drama.

Nevertheless, much theater created around this period clearly embodies surrealist goals. One of the first recognizable pieces of surrealist theater was Parade (1917), a work written by JEAN COCTEAU, commissioned by Diaghilev with the command: "Astonish me!" The result was a ballet danced by the Ballets Russes, with music composed by Erik Satie and sets and costumes by Pablo Picasso. GUILLAUME APOLLINAIRE, the "patron saint of Surrealism," is credited with coining the term "surrealism" when he described the production with the same word, sur-réaliste, he used for his production of THE BREASTS OF TRESIAS (also 1917): "When man wanted to create walking, he created the wheel, which doesn't resemble a leg. In the same way, he has created Surrealism without knowing it." In both pieces, as well as Cocteau's 1921 The Wedding on the Eiffel Tower, dramatic events flowed without regard to logical progression; imagery and surprise took precedence over story. The text became a springboard for a theatrical event relying more heavily on design, movement, and sound than on narrative and reason. Sets, costumes, and actors often merged, creating a moving mise-en-scène that itself gave the event meaning.

Many theater artists have nourished themselves on surrealist drama and theater; the first works of Artaud, ROGER VITRAC, and ARMAND SALACROU (especially Circus Story, 1923, and The Glass Ball, 1924) helped liberate the dramatic event from the confines of a narrative-bound premise. Surrealism also inspired postwar dramatists including EUGÈNE IONESCO, JEAN GENET, FERNANDO ARRABAL, STANISLAW WITKIEWICZ, and RAMON DEL VALLE-INCLÁN. Imagery and dream structure have infiltrated modern drama as surely as they have visual and commercial culture; dream sequences can be found on Broadway as easily as in experimental theater or a music video. While the surrealist project centered more on revolution than on art, its wide-ranging investigations into the unconscious have led to the now common joining of the "real" and the "unreal" and the preponderance of dream syntax in modern art, confirming Breton and Paul Eluard's (1929) poetic insight: "In the poet / . . . / It is intelligence, waking that kills; / It is sleep that dreams and sees clearly."

FURTHER READING

- Aragon, Louis. Traité du style. Paris: Gallimard, 1928.
- Balakian, Anna. Literary Origins of Surrealism: A New Mysticism in French Poetry. New York: King's Crown Press, 1947.
- Breton, André. What Is Surrealism? Selected Writings. Ed. and intro. by Franklin Rosemont. New York: Pathfinder, 1978.
- Breton, André, and Paul Eluard. "Notes sur la poésie" [Notes on poetry], La Révolution surréaliste, no. 12 (December 1929): 53–55.
- Gershman, Herbert S. The Surrealist Revolution in France. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1969.
- Matthews, J. H. Theatre in Dada and Surrealism. Syracuse: Syracuse Univ. Press, 1974.
- Melzer, Annabelle. Latest Rage the Big Drum: Dada and Surrealist Performance. Ann Arbor: UMI Research Press, 1980.
- Nadeau, Maurice. The History of Surrealism. New York: Macmillan, 1968.
- Polizzotti, Mark. Revolution of the Mind. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1995.
- Zinder, David G. The Surrealist Connection: An Approach to a Surrealist Aesthetic of Theater. Ann Arbor: UMI Research Press, 1976.

Kimberly Jannarone

SUSPECT CULTURE

Since its inception in 1990, Suspect Culture has proved itself to be one of SCOTLAND's most energetic and inventive experimental groups, constantly evolving and seeking out new ways of working and creating theater. Unlike conventional artistic structures, the work of Suspect Culture is the product of the collective imaginations of artistic director Graham Eatough, DRAMATURG DAVID GREIG, and musical director Nick Powell. Originally founded in ENGLAND while Eatough and Greig were students at Bristol University, the company has maintained permanent residence in Glasgow, Scotland, since the mid-1990s. This Scottish base of operations reflects one of the company's key missions. Not only did Greig wish to explore the roots of his Scottish childhood, but the artistic and cultural links available between Scotland and Europe allow the company to bypass geographical boundaries and to investigate the connections between local, national, and global concerns.

Suspect Culture is well-known for its unique collaborative working methods, in addition to the unusual form and techniques with which the productions are presented. Rehearsals for a Suspect Culture production never begin with a completed script. Instead, all members of the production team—designers, directors, and performers—contribute to the process of devising a show from inception to opening. The production team, for example, may meet in a small arts centre on the Isle of Mull to explore a variety of possible theatrical languages, including space, gesture, music, movement, and video technology. Coproductions and workshops with a variety of local and international venues and artists extend and rejuvenate their theatrical influences and impulses. One key example that suggests the benefits of such international networking includes a production of The Golden Ass (1998), codirected by Graham Eatough and Brazilian director Mauricio Paroni De Castro, and devised by the entire Suspect Culture team in collaboration with Sergio Romano, a leading Italian actor, and a group of eight young people from the local Gorbals community in Glasgow. Other tours have taken the company throughout Scotland, as well as England, Ireland, Spain, Germany, and Italy.

These collaborations, as well as the content and form of the productions, are focused on the connections and possibilities between places, people, and ideas. Recurring thematic obsessions such as “home,” “belonging,” “memory,” and “loss” fuel the group's artistic imagination. In addition, many of the shows are set in stations, airports, hotels, and at borders—all public locations where people might arrive, depart, meet for a moment of intimacy, hide, or escape. Here the performers enact the desire to connect and communicate, as well as the attempts and failures to make contact with another human soul. The action is postmodern and fragmented in form: episodic scenes, snatches of dialogue, repeated catch-phrases, nameless characters, subversive gestures, and layers of dislocated images emanating from video screens all express a theatrical world of constantly shifting identity and endless possibilities.

Notable performances since 1995 include One-Way Street (1995), Airport (1996), Timeless (1997), Mainstream (1997), and Lament (2002). From a Fringe First award for Stalinaland at the 1992 Edinburgh Festival to the achievement of four-year funding from the Scottish Arts Council in 1998 and Lottery Funding in 2000, Suspect Culture represents a healthy combination of artistic and financial health that is possible through a spirit of theatrical transformation and renewal.

FURTHER READING

- Carter, Pamela, ed. Suspect Culture Web site [online]. Opticski, Designer. <http://suspectculture.com/> (Accessed August 26, 2003).
 Cavecchi, Mariacristina. “Suspect Culture: The Process Is the Thing.” In A Theatre That Matters: Twentieth-Century Scottish Drama and Theatre, ed. by Valentina Poggi and Margaret Rose. Milano: Edizioni Unicopli, 2000. 209–223.
 Greig, David. “Internal Exile.” Theatre Scotland 3, no. 11 (1994): 8–10.
 ——. “One-Way Street.” In Scotland Plays, ed. by Philip Howard. London: Nick Hern, 1998.
 ——. Casanova: A Suspect Culture Text. New York: Faber and Faber, 2001.

Kristin A. Crouch

SUTHERLAND, EFUA THEODORA (1924–1996)

We didn't need to persist in that maddening blind alley of drama that begun with William Shakespeare and ended with Sheridan. . . . I wanted to create theatre which would obtain its strength and inspiration from Ghanaian life.

—Efua Theodora Sutherland, 1962

Efua Theodora Sutherland is undeniably the chief pioneer of contemporary Ghanaian theater. One of the few female African playwrights, her contributions to Ghanaian theater and culture are well known. Born in Cape Coast in the central region of Ghana, her mother died in a truck accident when Efua was only five months old, and she was left in the care of her maternal grandmother. After her basic education in Cape Coast, she won a scholarship to train as a teacher at the St. Monica's Training College at Asante Mampong. She was so impressed by the nuns who ran the training college that she would have herself become a nun, had her grandmother not intervened. After nearly six years of teaching, she went to Homerton College, Cambridge University, where she earned a BA degree. She then spent another year at the School of Oriental and African Studies in London, where she specialized in African languages, English linguistics, and drama.

She returned to Ghana in 1950 to continue her teaching career and was soon caught up by her great interest in creating a better society for her people through appropriate cultural education. Soon after Ghana's independence in 1957, she together with others presented the idea of a National Theatre Movement, which was to serve as a cultural institution that would fuel the new nation's rapid development. She was also a founder of the Ghana Society of Writers, and under her direction, the Ghana Experimental Theatre Company was created in 1958. Sutherland's vision was to create an authentic Ghanaian theater that was not merely a replica of the European models introduced by the colonialists. Her research and experimentation resulted in what she called Anansegoro or Ananse play, a unique dramatic form that drew its inspiration from traditional storytelling. The classic example of Anansegoro is her play The Marriage of Anansewa.

Driven by her desire to see a flourishing theater in Ghana, she mobilized funds from the Ford Foundation and the Government of Ghana to build the Ghana Drama Studio, which was designed to conform to the demands of African theater practice. This studio provided the needed performance space for Kusum Agromba, a full-time drama company, The Drama Studio Players, and the Workers' Brigade Drama Group, all of which enjoyed her creative leadership. When in 1963 Sutherland joined the Institute of African Studies as a Research Associate, she handed the Drama Studio to the University of Ghana to be used as "an extension division of the School of Music Dance and Drama," now the School of Performing Arts.

In 1993, the Drama Studio was demolished to make way for The National Theatre building, but a replica of the old structure was rebuilt at the School of Performing Arts, which has been named after Sutherland in recognition of her contributions to Ghanaian Theater. Among her many achievements are her village theater project at Atwia, which was the subject of the ABC television documentary "Araba: The Village Story" in 1967. Her published plays include Edufa (London: Longman, 1967), Foriwa (Accra-Tema: Ghana Publishing Corporation, 1971), and Vulture! Vulture! and Tahinta: Two Rhythm Plays for Children (Accra: Ghana Publishing House, 1968). Her other plays include Blood Is Mysterious, The Rumor Monger's Fate, God's Time Is the Best, Love for Your Neighbor, and Ananse and the Dwarf Brigade (all 1971).

Her commitment to the welfare of children led her to establish the Ghana National Commission on Children, which she chaired from 1983 to 1999. She received recognition and sponsorship for her work from the Ghanaian Government as well as some major international agencies, including the Valco Trust Fund, UNESCO, UNICEF, and the Rockefeller Foundation. The University of Ghana honored her with a degree of Doctor of Laws in recognition of her commitment to the development of dramatic arts and her efforts on behalf of children.

[See also Africa]

SELECT PLAYS: Edufa (1962); Tahinta (1968); Vulture! Vulture! (1968); Ananse and the Dwarf Brigade (1971); Blood Is Mysterious (1971); Foriwa (1971); God's Time Is the Best (1971); Love for Your Neighbor (1971); The Marriage of Anansewa (1971); The Rumor Monger's Fate (1971)

FURTHER READING

Anyidoho, K., and J. Gibbs, eds. ForTomFrom: Contemporary Ghanaian Literature, Theater and Film. Amsterdam and Atlanta: Rodopi, 2000.
"Ghana Gains a Living Theatre." Drum (February 1962): 19–21.

Awo Mana Asiedu

SUZUKI SENZABURŌ (1893–1924)

With their focus on infidelity, sexual perversion, and crime, Japanese playwright Suzuki Senzaburō's plays typically highlight extreme and abnormal states of human behavior. His work reflects the decadence of Taishō (1912–1925) Japanese culture and in many respects resembles the stories and plays of his contemporary, Tanizaki Jun'ichirō.

Born in Tokyo, Suzuki wrote classical poetry and discovered kabuki in his teens. In 1913 he won an important drama prize, the Mitsukoshi Award, launching his career as a playwright. The following year, he began work at Genbunsha, a publishing house where he remained an editor until the company folded in 1923, financial victim of the Great Kantō earthquake. Suzuki honed his critical skills writing reviews under a variety of pseudonyms for several leading theater magazines, including Theatre Arts Illustrated (Engei Gahō) and New Theatre Arts (Shin Engei). Between 1913 and 1924, he wrote twenty-two plays, of which only fourteen are included in his Complete Plays; his first anthology was published in 1920. His plays were staged in practically every theatrical style then current: SHIN KABUKI, Shinkokugeki, SHINPA, and SHINGEKI. He produced his best work in the last two years of his life, while bedridden from the illness that was to take his life.

Suzuki's earlier dramas tend to be rather contrived and superficial, focusing on the twisted acts of his protagonists, like the sadistic Imura in Auto da Fé (1921), who paints his mistress tied to a stake and attempts to set her alight when he discovers that she has fallen in love with his student. Suzuki's later plays, however, demonstrate considerable subtlety in their psychological portrayal of character, great economy in dramatic structure, and witty, piquant dialogue. The shocking events that drive The Valley's Depths (1921), a one-act play in twelve short scenes, pale compared with the shattering self-awakening of Toshiyo, whose desperate acts of murder and suicide seem both natural and inexorable. Two Widows (1922) avoids sensationalism altogether in plumbing the relationship between two women, Reiko and Tokiko, and the man who had been Reiko's husband and Tokiko's lover.

Though most of Suzuki's plays were set in contemporary times, the works that have endured most are set in the Edo period (1603–1868) and were written for kabuki actors. His death at age thirty-one stopped short a brilliant career, but his masterpiece, Koheiji Lives (1924), remains one of the great Japanese plays of the 20th century. It has been filmed twice and staged countless times. Based on kabuki dramas by Tsuruya Nanboku IV and KAWATAKE MOKUAMI, Koheiji Lives stripped away every extraneous detail from the earlier versions that would detract from his themes of infidelity, obsessive love, and mortal fear. Suzuki demonstrated here how a playwright could take traditional materials and create modern, fully rounded, and psychologically compelling characters.

[See also Japan]

SELECT PLAYS: Father to the Foreigner's Whore (Rashamen no chichi, 1919); Auto da Fé (Hiaburi, 1921); The Valley's Depths (Tanisoko, 1921);

Two Widows (Futari no Mibōjin, 1922); The Confessions of Jirōkichi (Jirōkichi Zange, 1923); Koheiji Lives (Ikite Iru Koheiji, 1924)

FURTHER READING

- Oyama Isao. Kindai Nihon Gikyokushi [A History of Modern Japanese Drama], Vol. 2, Taishō era. Yamagata: Kindai Nihon Gikyokushi Kankōkai, 1969.
- Suzuki Senzaburō. Suzuki Senzaburō Gikyoku Zenshū; [Complete Plays of Suzuki Senzaburō]. Osaka: Puratonsha, 1925.
- . "Burning Her Alive" (Hiaburi). In New Plays from Japan, tr. by Yoan Iwasaki and Glenn Hughes. London: Ernest Benn, 1930. 109–125.
- . "Living Koheiji." In The Passion and Three Other Japanese Plays, by Mushanokōji Saneatsu, tr. by Noboru Hidaka. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1971 (Originally published 1933). 25–54.

M. Cody Poulton

SUZUKI TADASHI (1939–)

Suzuki Tadashi began his career while a student at Waseda University during the turbulent period of the 1960s, when many Japanese artists and intellectuals manifested their resistance to the war in Vietnam, in particular because American forces involved in the conflict were stationed in JAPAN and Okinawa. Suzuki was the cofounder, with playwright BETSUYAKU MINORU, of the Waseda Little Theatre (Waseda Shōgekijō) in 1966. The group soon became one of the most important companies promoting new styles of politically oriented playwriting and acting, producing a number of works now considered classics of the postwar Japanese stage, including works by Betsuyaku, KARA JÜRŌ, and an early success of Suzuki himself, the collage play On the Dramatic Passions I (Gekiteki maru mono o megutte I, 1970). When this play's second part was written and performed as On the Dramatic Passions II, Suzuki began his collaboration with the remarkable actress Shiraishi Kayoko, who would perform central roles in a number of his most important productions.

In 1974, the first version of one of Suzuki's most respected adaptations, his version of The Trojan Women of Euripides, was performed in Tokyo. The production has been revised and restaged several times and been presented internationally. The production revealed Suzuki's mature style, which he defined in an interview in 1982 as "a sense of corpus—the relationship between the word and the body. . . . The classical Japanese theater shows us that the word is a kind of gesture, and thus I have been working in this mode. Japanese words, all of them, involve this sense of body—they are very physiological, very close to the Japanese sense of corpus" (Beeman, 1982, 89). Suzuki's training technique for actors involves the use of a strong physical presence combined with elements from classical Japanese theater performance to create a new and powerful stage energy. Suzuki has trained actors from a number of countries, and many non-Japanese have participated in his productions, often speaking in their native language.

Other notable productions adapted from Greek TRAGEDY include Oedipus, The Bacchae, Dionysus, and Clytemnestra.

In 1976 Suzuki took his troupe to the village of Toga, in Toyama Prefecture in the mountains of central Japan, where he founded the Suzuki Company of Toga (SCOT), presenting during summer festivals both his own productions and work by visiting companies. During the rest of the year, his group frequently toured both in Japan and abroad. In 1988 his powerful The Tale of Lear, based on William Shakespeare, involved an all-male cast, using actors from four leading American repertory companies who trained with Suzuki before touring with the production.

In recent years, Suzuki has worked with two other outstanding creative artists: the architect Arata Isozaki, with whom he has collaborated on the design of several contemporary theaters, and the American director ANNE BOGART, founding a company dedicated to bringing Suzuki's vision and training methods to American students and performers. In recent years, Suzuki has extended his activities into the field of production, working closely with the Shizuoka Performing Arts Center and other groups in Japan.

SELECT PLAYS: The Folkloric Analysis of the Lower Depths (Donzoko ni okeru minzoku-gaku-teki bunseki, 1968); On the Dramatic Passions I, II, and III (Gekiteki maru mono o megutte I, II, and III, 1969–1972); Re-Dyed and Later Appearance (Somekaete gonichi no omemie, 1971); Don Hamlet (1972); The Tale of Lear (1974); The Trojan Women (Toroia no onna, 1974); Night and Clock (Yoru to tokei, 1975); Night and Feast I (Utage no yoru, 1976); The Bacchae (1978); Clytemnestra (Higeki: Atereusu ke no hōkai, 1980); The Chekhov (1989); Dionysus (1990)

FURTHER READING

- Allain, Paul. The Art of Stillness: The Theatre Practice of Tadashi Suzuki. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2003.
- Beeman, William O. "The Word Is an Act of the Body" (Interview of Suzuki Tadashi), Performing Arts Journal 6, no. 2 (1982): 88–92.
- Carruthers, Ian, and Takahashi Yasunari. The Theatre of Suzuki Tadashi. Cambridge and New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2004.
- Suzuki Tadashi. The Way of Acting: The Theatre Writings of Suzuki Tadashi. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1986.

J. Thomas Rimer

SWEDEN

Around 1860 Sweden was still a largely agrarian, fairly poor country with an ethnically, linguistically, culturally, and religiously homogeneous population. Its citizens were born into the Lutheran state church and most of them stayed there. The country played a dominant role in its somewhat strained union with "brother country" NORWAY, established in 1814, under their common Swedish king until the union was peacefully dissolved in 1905.

Politically, modern Sweden was shaped in 1866 when a parliamentary system replaced the four estates. The throne retained a certain power that has gradually diminished until, in recent decades, it fulfills a purely symbolic role. Universal suffrage, first for men, then for women, was introduced in the period from 1907 to 1921. The industrial revolution came late, but after World War I industry began to be Sweden's major source of income.

Related to this development is the emergence of the Social Democratic party. From 1932 until the present day, the Social Democrats have dominated Swedish politics. Gradually the Swedish welfare state, popularly called "the people's home," was created, a development profiting from the fact that the country has known no war since 1815. Unlike most other European countries, Sweden retained its somewhat dubious neutrality even during World War II. Since the 1960s the country has known an increasing influx of immigrants. Its former homogeneity has been replaced by pluriformity. Because of its nonalliance policy, Sweden has been able to play a modest international role after World War II, not least because of the commitment of Prime Minister Olof Palme, assassinated in Stockholm, the Swedish capital, in 1986 by a still unidentified murderer. In a shrinking, globalized world, Sweden has come closer to the rest of Europe and is now a member of the European Union.

A nation blessed with peace for decades, knowing few indigenuous turmoils, and with a strong lyrical tradition, Sweden cannot boast any drama of significance until AUGUST STRINDBERG wrote his MASTER OLOF in 1872. From that time Strindberg overshadows all and influences most dramatists in Sweden. No Swede either during this period or after can compete with the author of THE FATHER, MISS JULIE, A DREAM PLAY, or THE GHOST SONATA, to mention only a few of his most famous plays.

What can modern Swedish drama offer? Until World War I, not very much. Gertrud by Hjalmar Söderberg (1869–1941) and Johan Ulfstjerna by Tor Hedberg (1862–1931), both from 1907, are among the few plays from this period that have proved restageable.

Gertrud, best known through Carl Dreyer's film adaptation, is a well-constructed drama in which the title figure is placed in relation to three men: her past love, dramatist Gabriel Lidman; her husband, politician Gustav Kanning; and her present love, proletarian composer Erland Jansson. The theme, formulated by Lidman—"I believe in the lust of the body and the incurable loneliness of the soul"—has become proverbial.

Johan Ulfstjerna (translated by Helga Colquist, 1921), inspired by Eugen Schauman's assassination of the Russian governor in Finland, is a realistic, Ibsenite play with a tragic protagonist and a firmly handled plot. The theme concerns the imbalance between words and deeds; when this imbalance is resolved—i.e., when Ulfstjerna matures enough to be able to shoulder his son's responsibility and murder the tyrant—the drama reaches its conclusion. Hedberg is also known as a writer of witty COMEDIES, a genre not very popular in Sweden, that mildly satirize all things Swedish, as in The National Monument (Nationalmonumentet, 1923).

At the end of the World War I, new signals were heard in HJALMAR BERGMAN's short Marionette Plays (Marionettspel, 1917) and PÄR LAGERKVIST's one-act trilogy The Difficult Hour (Den svåra stunden, 1918; i.e., the moment of dying). In Bergman's Mr. Sleeman Is Coming (Herr Sleeman kommer 1917), as in his other marionette plays, the idea that we are pulled by unseen strings is featured. Next to this fatalistic idea is another one: "born as human beings, we grow old as trolls." With Swedenhielms (1925), a COMEDY about a supposedly very Swedish family, Bergman reached the broad public. Lagerkvist's trilogy is supported by the manifesto "Modern Theater" (Modern teater), which rejects Ibsenite drama in favor of Strindberg's post-Inferno plays. The author here, in expressionistic fashion, pleads for stylization, visualization of inner processes, and concentration on "a single emotion, the intensity of which constantly keeps growing."

In the 1930s the economic depression, the threat of Nazism, and the ambition to turn Sweden into a social welfare state promoted a topical kind of drama. With his novella THE HANGMAN (Bödeln, 1933), successfully dramatized a year later, Lagerkvist was one of the first writers in Scandinavia to warn against the dictatorship and racism in GERMANY. But the play is primarily a timeless drama, indicated by the fact that the Hangman, the tool of evil, straddles its two parts, the first set in the Middle Ages, the second in modern times.

The expressionist trend is continued in a sociopolitical spirit by Rudolf Värnlund (1900–1945), whose The Holy Family (Den heliga familjen, 1932) is the first Swedish play to deal seriously with workers' conditions and issues.

Unlike Värnlund, whose plays never found much response in the theater, Vilhelm Moberg (1898–1973) has been exceedingly popular. His essential contribution concerns another social category, farmers. The first to give a convincing dramatic depiction of Swedish rural life in The Wife (Hustrun, 1928), Moberg continued to draw inspiration from this area in several other plays including Fulfillment (Mans kvinna, 1943). His dramatizations of his novels Ride This Night! (Rid i natt!, 1941), set in the 16th century to disguise its anti-Nazi message to the Swedish censor, and A Time on Earth (Din stund på jorden, 1967) have reached large audiences.

Impulses from Franz Kafka and French existentialism are apparent in STIG DAGERMAN's debut play, The Condemned (Den dödsdömde, 1947). Dagerman's fear is related to Lagerkvist's anguish. In this neo-expressionistic drama, he deals with a man who is sentenced to death, released when it appears that he is innocent, and who after having killed a woman, is returned to prison to await capital punishment. Psychologically, the action is about a man's attempt to make his social persona fit his experience of himself. Existentially, it concerns our collective guilt for the atrocities in the world.

INGMAR BERGMAN, later to become world renowned as a theater and film director, started as a dramatist. Finding little favor with the theater critics, he turned to film script writing and, especially, directing. In recent years he has written dialogue that is unspecified with regard to medium. As a director, he has taken considerable interest in the plays of Björn-Erik Höijer (1907–1996), whose Isak Juntti Had Many Sons (Isak Juntti hade många söner, 1954), a drama about religious puritanism and burning sensuality in isolated northern Sweden, is considered his best play.

The break from illusionism became quite obvious when, in the mid-1960s, it was combined with a strong social and political commitment. At the time of the Vietnam war, left-wing groups in Sweden found theater an effective means of attacking what they considered American infiltration in southeast Asia. AGITATION-PROPAGANDA theater became the standard fare of the so-called independent groups, a powerful way to bring Marxism to the people and promote the idea of a global classless society. The playwrights now literally placed themselves in the theater and wrote their plays more or less together with those who were to produce and act in them. The most memorable result are three plays about the Swedish situation for which Kent Andersson (1933–) was mainly responsible: The Raft (Flotten, 1967), The Home (Hemmet, 1967), and The Sandbox (Sandlådan, 1968). The Home, written with Bengt Bratt (1937–), effectively attacks the situation in Swedish homes for old people. We witness a series of tableaux, connected in their criticism of the welfare state. Each character has a story to tell; the stories are acted out by the others who, in this way, keep playing different roles. We are often taken from a painful present to an idyllic past. The break with illusionism appears in the absence of scenery and in the inclusion of songs which, in the manner of EPIC THEATER, place the events in a wider social and political perspective, indicating, for example, that the home for old people actually represents Sweden, where the average lifetime was and is nearly the longest in the world.

In a period characterized by rapid technical development within the theater, enabling directors to handle light and sound in radically new ways, the verbal element has become marginalized. Dramatists have swept aside dialogue to make room for directors, the true creators of theatrical events.

Nevertheless, a few playwrights have helped to put Sweden on the international map in their endeavor to create a theater in which the word still plays a central role. There is the poet and playwright LARS FORSSELL, the novelist and playwright PER OLOV ENQUIST, and the poet and dramatist LARS NORÉN.

Forssell has been writing plays of various kinds—contemporary and historical drama, comedy, FARCE, MONODRAMA—for several decades. French ABSURDISM and Brechtian epic theater have influenced him to create a poetry of the theater rather than merely in the theater. The most prominent Swedish playwright in the 1950s and 1960s, Forssell combines playfulness with stylization. His best play, the TRAGICOMEDY THE SUNDAY PROM-

ENADE (Söndagspromenaden, 1963), has been successful on both stage and screen. Forssell has also tried his hand at historical drama in, for example, The Madcap (Galenpannan, 1964), a play set in the early 19th century about the deposed and exiled Gustav IV Adolf of Sweden.

Per Olov Enquist had an immediate international success with his semi-DOCUMENTARY play THE NIGHT OF THE TRIBADES (Tribadernas natt, 1975), dealing with Strindberg-the-male, caught between his wife Siri and her friend Marie David, who oppose the roles he has written for them and who finally reject him. Another semi-documentary, Rainsnakes (Från regnormarnas liv, 1981), about Hans Christian Andersen and the theatrical Heiberg couple, has been almost equally successful.

Showing a marked inclination to portray famous writers—he is also responsible for a television series about Strindberg, a film about KNUT HAMSUN, and a stage play about Selma Lagerlöf—Enquist has met with some opposition from critics who deny the biographical correctness of his portraits. Enquist obviously here permits himself the same freedom as Strindberg did when portraying Swedish monarchs.

Of all the modern Swedish playwrights, August Strindberg excepted, Norén has received the greatest international recognition. Especially in Holland and Germany, his plays, now amounting to more than thirty, have been frequently staged.

Having devoted himself to poetry for a long time, Norén had his breakthrough as a dramatist with NIGHT IS MOTHER TO THE DAY (Natten är dagens mor), opening in 1982 and published the year after, to be followed by two more plays about virtually the same family. These plays, modelled on EUGENE O'NEILL'S LONG DAY'S JOURNEY INTO NIGHT, deal with the complicated interaction between four family members locked together in one room, much as the couple in Strindberg's THE DANCE OF DEATH, the play Norén selected for his debut as a director in 1993. Frequent repetitions of snatches of dialogue increase the sense—also for the audience—of being closed in. No escape is possible until the masks have been dropped. The theatrical event becomes a therapeutic experience for both characters and spectators.

The most successful playwrights of the last two decades include Agneta Pleijel (1940–), Staffan Göthe (1944–), Stig Larsson (1955–), and Jonas Gardell (1963–). Agneta Pleijel's Summer Nights (Sommarkvällar på jorden, 1986; translated by James Mark, 1992) is the account of three sisters and their husbands who meet every summer in the summer house of their childhood. Recalling both Chekhov's THREE SISTERS and Ingmar Bergman's Cries and Whispers, Pleijel's works are more concerned with topical gender problems.

Staffan Göthe has written plays both for adults and children. His much acclaimed A Stuffed Dog (En uppstoppad hund, 1986), the second play in a trilogy about the fate of a family, shows a sensitivity for theater that may ascribed to his experience as an actor.

Stig Larsson's debut drama, the three-act mini-play Red Light (Röd gubbe, translated by Duncan Foster, 1992), records the somewhat Beckettian or Pinteresque conversations between Jim and Tim, Tim and Tom, and Jim and Tom while waiting for a traffic light to change. His MD (i.e., Managing Director, VD, 1987), a rather farcical play about power, was a hit when produced at the Royal Dramatic Theater.

Jonas Gardell, an outstanding stand-up comedian, writes tragicomedies about ordinary, unsuccessful people. His Polar Bears (Isbjörnarna, 1990) is an entertaining and sad family drama in which the characters at times address the audience directly.

In vast but thinly populated Sweden (currently only about nine million people live there), regional theater has become increasingly important. Regional theater heightens the communal feeling that otherwise tends diminish with increasing mobility and urbanization.

Thus the director of The Great Wrath (Den stora vreden, 1988), based on Sven Viksten's stage adaptation of Olof Högberg's regional novel of the same title, published in 1906, chose to have the exceedingly long play performed in an old steel factory, an environment directly related to the theme of the play; during the intermission, the audience was offered food from the region.

Internationally significant is the Swedish contribution to children's theater. Ever since it became an independent branch of the Stockholm City Theater, Unga Klara has devoted itself to this kind of theater. Rejecting the traditional fairy plays, the group has systematically attempted to do new plays that reflect the children's point of view, their needs and problems. The artistic leader, Suzanne Osten (1944–), never tires of declaring that children, even more than women, form a repressed group in society. Both as a playwright and as a director, she has devoted much attention to the problems of both groups. If parents get divorced, children often blame themselves for it. Osten, who like Lars Norén is psychoanalytically oriented, wishes to relieve children of their guilt feelings by expressing their "right to their own experiences in dramatic form." Her highly successful Medea's Children (Medeas barn, 1975), a "child tragedy" cowritten with Per Lysander (1944–) and inspired by Euripides' Medea, describes how two children experience their parents' divorce.

The theater debate, more lively and more in rapport with foreign impulses from the 1960s, has concerned such matters as the location of performances in or outside traditional theaters, the repertoire—a smörgåsbord for every taste or an ideologically consistent fare and the balance of native and foreign plays, whether the dramatist is active or passive in relation to the performers, the director's right to make changes in the text, whether rehearsals are open or closed to the public, the role of the audience, the position of the theater critic (Ingmar Bergman marked his standpoint by physically attacking one of them)—and the choice of medium.

The conditions for Swedish dramatists to get their plays produced are favorable. Stockholm boasts a greater number of theaters per capita than any other city in the world, and The National Touring Company (Riksteatern), founded in 1933, is the largest single theater anywhere. On the other hand, a comparison between the plays performed (as listed by Bengt Liljenberg in his survey of the relationship of theaters and theater critics to the plays written and staged in Sweden) and those published, reveals that few dramas, except those by a handful of playwrights, have found their way to the printer. Reading drama is obviously not a favorite occupation with the Swedes.

Apart from the stage, there is radio and television. Since its beginning in 1925, Swedish radio has been the largest producer of drama in the country, including drama written especially for the theater of the ear. Many playwrights made their debut as radio dramatists. With his Pilot from the Moluccas (Lotsen från Moluckas, 1935), a lyrical play about Magellan's circumnavigation of the earth, Nobel Prize winner Harry Martinson (1904–1978) wrote a radio play that is now considered a classic. Another radio classic is Hjalmar Bergman's adaptation of his own novel God's Orchid (Markurells i Wadköping; the novel was published in 1919, the play was broadcast on January 1, 1930, and staged August 16, 1930). In the 1940s radio drama became a concept. The two leading writers for this medium, Sivar Arnér (1909–1997) and Björn-Erik Höijer (1907–1996), wrote many plays for broadcasting. Previously a successful novelist, Arnér later limited himself to this medium. In his Lonely on the Headland (Ensam på udden, 1949), one of the most medium-oriented Swedish radio plays, Arnér cleverly knew how to make stream-of-consciousness dramatically arresting.

When regular television was introduced in Sweden in the mid-1950s, the opportunities for dramatists further increased, especially while the TV Theater produced a play every week. Swedish television drama was born in 1955 when Werner Aspenström's (1918–1997) The Noose (Snaran), written directly for the new medium, was published and produced. For quite some time Aspenström was the most frequently produced television dramatist. Ingmar Bergman showed an early interest in the new medium when producing his own The Rite (Riten, 1969) on television, a play about three artists and their censor. And long before his plays found favor in the theater, Lars Norén elicited strong response through the small screen with his Amala, Kamala (1971), a play about colonialism, racism, and western man as a thinly disguised brute.

FURTHER READING

- Anderman, Gunilla. "Contemporary Swedish Theatre: An Introduction." In New Swedish Plays, ed. by Gunilla Anderman. Norwich: Norvik Press, 1992. 9–32.
- Brandell, Gunnar, and Jan Stenkvist. Svensk litteratur 1870–1970 [Swedish Literature 1870–1970], Vol. 2. Stockholm: Aldus, 1975. 271–294.
- Hallingberg, Gunnar. Radiodramat: Svensk hörspelediktning-bakgrund, utveckling och formvärld [The Radio Drama: Its Background,

- Development and Structure with Reference Mainly to Radio Playwriting in Sweden]. Stockholm: Sveriges Radios Förlag, 1967. English summary, 251–263.
- Liljenberg, Bengt. Svenska stycken efter Strindberg: Anteckningar kring den svenska scendramatiken och dess författare 1910–1960 [Swedish Plays after Strindberg: Annotations around Swedish Stage Drama and Its Authors, 1910–1960]. Stockholm: Carlsson, 1990.
- . Dramat, dramatikerna och verkligheten: Anteckningar kring den svenska scendramatiken och dess författare 1960–1990 [The Drama, the Dramatists and the Reality: Annotations around Swedish Stage Drama and Its Authors, 1960–1990]. Stockholm: Carlsson, 2000.
- Marker, Frederick J., and Lise-Lone Marker. A History of Scandinavian Theatre. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1996. 193–342.
- Törnqvist, Egil. “20th Century Drama in Sweden.” In 20th Century Drama in Scandinavia, ed. by Johan Wrede, et al. Helsinki: Univ. of Helsinki, 1979. 43–50.
- Warne, Lars G., ed. A History of Swedish Literature. Lincoln: Univ. of Nebraska Press, 1996.

Egil Törnqvist

SWITZERLAND

Any discussion of Swiss drama and theater requires a brief overview of Switzerland's history and unique cultural diversity. Modern Switzerland consists of 15,941 square miles and is home to approximately seven million Swiss, of whom seventy percent speak German, eighteen percent French, ten percent Italian, and one percent Romansh. The country's linguistic and cultural plurality renders the notion of a singularly “Swiss” drama moot. Swiss-German playwrights must decide whether to write in standard High German (and thus be able to reach German-speaking audiences beyond Switzerland's borders) or in Schwyzerdütsch, the Swiss-German dialect consisting of many Alemannic versions differing in grammar, phonology, syntax, and vocabulary.

Historically, Switzerland grew together over centuries because the cantons found favor with a free and democratically oriented society, unlike any of the surrounding monarchies. Switzerland had neither royal courts nor their attending cultural centers, which served to attract artists. In fact, the Calvinist and Zwingli protestant traditions came to spurn the theater. Festspiele (folk pageants) became a political tool for unifying the culturally diverse Swiss, and the open-air pageant performed by amateurs in Swiss-German dialect became Swiss theater. Drama in High German was considered a cultural import.

HISTORY OF SWISS DRAMA

To understand contemporary Swiss-German plays, one must understand the unique evolution of drama in Switzerland. Early Swiss drama emerged from the church. Religious leaders used drama to expand and augment the liturgy. Evidence of this drama, as early as 1300, is to be found in the monasteries of Muri (Aargau) and Einsiedeln. These early religious dramas eventually found their way into towns in the form of Passion plays in which the townspeople participated in coproductions with church authorities. Thus, the folk theater was born. Renward Cysat (1545–1614) was perhaps the most successful example of a cantonal clerk who authored and directed Passion plays in the medieval tradition. The Jesuits reclaimed the Passion plays for the church, establishing a Jesuit Theatrical Center in Fribourg. Although they banned the open-air performances in Lucerne in 1677, the folk theater had by then taken root. Political, moral, and religious issues relating to Swiss sovereignty constituted prevalent themes of folk drama. Wilhelm Tell, authored by an unknown playwright, first performed around 1511 and repeatedly thereafter, attests to the popularity of folk theater.

The Swiss intellectual centers of Basel, Bern, Geneva, and Zurich remained opposed to theater well into the Enlightenment. Beyond Switzerland's borders, by contrast, the theater flourished, promoting the growth of professional actors and acting companies whose performances in Switzerland whetted the Swiss appetite for drama. Enlightened Swiss luminaries such as Johann Jakob Bodmer (1698–1783) firmly believed that it was better to read dramas than to see them on stage. The Puritan disposition persisted. In Catholic Lucerne, the Enlightenment influenced the locals to reject the Jesuit influence. Josef Ignaz Zimmermann (1737–1797), a former Jesuit schoolteacher, created an enlightened version of Wilhelm Tell—A Tragedy (Wilhelm Tell—ein Trauerspiel, 1777), which served Friedrich Schiller (1759–1805) as a source for his definitive reworking of the material. Schiller's Tell (1805) would become the Swiss national epic.

THE BIRTH OF MODERN SWISS DRAMA

In the 19th century, Swiss merchants who became enamored of theater companies while traveling abroad returned home to help establish theaters in their own country. The leading playwrights of the day were Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749–1832), Gotthold Ephraim Lessing (1729–1781), and Schiller. Their dramas required professional actors from GERMANY and AUSTRIA, since Switzerland did not have professionally trained actors of its own. The language of the stage thus became High German, leading to the breach that persists today between the Swiss professional stage, on which one hears High German, the language of “high culture,” and the popular theater, where the Swiss-German dialect Schwyzerdütsch predominates.

The prose author Gottfried Keller (1819–1890) originally planned to become a playwright and even wrote one dramatic fragment, Therese (1849). However, Keller channeled his dramatic energies into his novellas because he understood how difficult it would be to have his dramas published and performed in a climate unsupportive of highbrow drama in High German. The Puritan principle of utility persisted well into the 19th century; the Swiss were not willing to fund the arts. Since Keller sought to live from his writing, he turned to the literary journals of the day, in which he published his novellas. Keller's “Das Schillerfest am Mythenstein" ("Tribute to Schiller," 1860), delivered at the dedication of the Swiss National Monument to Schiller (for his William Tell), envisioned great pageants staged by large acting companies composed of average citizens participating in patriotic Swiss dramas that they themselves would have written and performed. Although his works do include descriptions of such festivals and pageants, Keller himself never wrote a script for one.

The pageants envisioned by Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712–1778) and Keller did take place in late-19th-century Switzerland. Swiss government officials viewed these pageants and folk festivals as a means of instilling in the culturally diverse Swiss a patriotic fervor for Switzerland that would transcend their French, German, Italian, or Romansh heritage. The discrepancy between popular theater in dialect and professional theater in High German evolved into a debate over the ideological position of Swiss theater in the national context. Switzerland's industrial revolution did not produce large urban centers, so the folk element in cultural life remained strong. Swiss Nobel laureate Carl Spitteler (1845–1924) took up Keller's lament in 1889, arguing that there would be no Swiss-German stage if a compromise could be reached between the professional stage and Swiss audiences. Spitteler criticized the peculiar Swiss inclination to subjugate aesthetic concerns to patriotic purpose. Amateur folk theater was so popular because it is one-third artistic and two-thirds patriotic.

The establishment of the Bernese Heimatschutztheater (Theater for the Protection of the Homeland), an amateur folk theater, for the 1914 National Exposition confirms Spitteler's analysis. This theater staged pageants that revived historical themes and promoted a national Swiss heritage. By 1950, some 130 plays had been published by Franke in Bern for this theater alone. Successful TRAGEDIES such as Paul Haller's (1882–1920) Marie und Robert (1916) possessed universal appeal and had international potential, had it not been written in Haller's Aargauer dialect. The Swiss rejected expressionist theater, the international AVANT-GARDE, and other forms of modern drama as imported highbrow culture.

THE WAR YEARS: THE 1930S AND 1940S

Switzerland in the 1930s suffered as much economically as the rest of Central Europe. Despite some 85,000 unemployed by the mid-1930s, the Swiss were less inclined to the radical totalitarian solutions sought by their neighbors. While some Swiss demanded forced economic intervention and a suspension of constitutional powers, they remained in the minority and were soundly defeated in a 1935 plebiscite. The political storm gathering beyond Switzerland in the north and the south raised the level of Swiss patriotic fervor, influencing the climate for the arts and fueling the continued subjugation of aesthetic concerns to the demand for cultural patriotism. The economic and political situation was hardly conducive to the fledgling theater industry.

Jakob Bührer (1882–1975) was one of the most productive Swiss playwrights in the 1930s and 1940s, writing some thirty dramas, numerous dramatic sketches, and one-act plays. At least seven of his dramas were staged in Swiss-German professional theaters, while others were performed by amateurs. Bührer composed satires and COMEDIES in dialect, social dramas, and period pieces (Zeitstücke) in High German. His 1923 Ein neues Tellenspiel (A New Tell Play) sought to reveal the unheroic in the Tell material. Bührer viewed literature as a means of questioning social practices. His play The Picket Makers (Die Pfahlbauer, 1932) prepared the viewer to recognize exploitation in the workplace. Subordinating aesthetics to the political message, Bührer intended his works as critiques of the Swiss bourgeoisie. His The Life of Galileo Galilei (Galileo Galilei, 1933) aimed to unmask the hero that Galileo had become and present a common, innocent, aging human being with all his human frailties. Historical drama, Bührer maintained, should (re-)discover the truth.

Cäsar von Arx (1895–1949) is the only Swiss dramatist of the first half of the 20th century whose plays are still occasionally performed in amateur and professional theaters. No other playwright had so many of his plays regularly staged in Switzerland between 1930 and 1950, and no other Swiss dramatist before FRIEDRICH DÜRRENMATT had so many works performed on prominent international stages. Arx's first major success was History of General Johann August Suter (Geschichte vom General Johann August Suter, 1929), in which Arx dramatizes the life of the famous adventurer from Basel (1803–1880) in twelve scenes. Continuing with heroic themes, Arx authored The Treason of Novara (Der Verrat von Novara, 1933), an historical three-act VOLKSTÜCK (popular drama) in classical style set in 1500. The drama relates the woeful tale of an Urner farmer who struggles to keep his homestead. Arx transforms the historically unsavory figure Erni Turmann into a solid, God-fearing, aspiring hero. In selecting Swiss historical material, Arx made a political statement. The Treason of Novara became Arx's greatest success on German stages, with some fifty-four productions before all of Arx's work was banned there in March 1941. During the 1940s, Arx became the official Swiss pageant author and was asked to write the Federal Pageant (Bundestfestspiel) of 1941, commemorating the 650th anniversary of the founding of Switzerland. Arx's oeuvre reveals innovative and creative experimentation with modern dramatic forms. He wrote both folk pageants and high dramas, preferring intellectual openness to the excesses of Swiss cultural patriotism.

The Haus am Pfauen, the main stage of the Zurich Schauspielhaus, gained a reputation during the war years as the last free bastion of German-language theater. Well-known actors and directors came from Germany and Austria to seek refuge in Zurich to continue their work. Arx was a staunch supporter of these émigrés. Some of the productions, such as Goethe's Götz von Berlichingen (1773) or Schiller's Don Carlos (1787) and Wilhelm Tell, helped the Swiss to articulate their own fears concerning Swiss sovereignty. BERTOLT BRECHT's MOTHER COURAGE AND HER CHILDREN (Mutter Courage und ihre Kinder, 1939–1940), THE LIFE OF GALILEO (Leben des Galilei, 1939), and THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN (Der gute Mensch von Sezuan, 1939–1940) all premiered in Zurich, as did GEORG KAISER's Private Tanaka (Der Soldat Tanaka, 1940).

SWISS-GERMAN DRAMA IN THE POSTWAR YEARS

After the war most of the emigrant playwrights returned to their former stages. Friedrich Dürrenmatt and MAX FRISCH emerged as the new Swiss-German playwrights who would dominate the theater scene for the next few decades. In Dürrenmatt's THE VISIT OF THE OLD LADY (Der Besuch der alten Dame, 1956), wealth purchases justice. THE PHYSICISTS (Die Physiker, 1962) raises questions about the social responsibilities of the scientist. Both of these plays became part of the international German repertoire. The dramas of Dürrenmatt's contemporary Max Frisch, including The Great Wall of China (Die chinesische Mauer, 1946), The Firebugs (Biedermann und die Brandstifter, 1958) and ANDORRA (1957), thematize the responsibility of private individuals who must make important public decisions. Both Dürrenmatt and Frisch set universal themes in provincial Swiss settings that have both local and international appeal. The two playwrights worked closely with the Zurich Schauspielhaus. For the first time in the history of Swiss drama, one can speak of a symbiosis between the playwright and the theater.

The Swiss public had grown accustomed to the repertoire of Swiss heroes and the theme of freedom that comprised an important part of the cultural defense and permeated productions during World War II. In the postwar period Dürrenmatt and Frisch sought to break this complacency. In his 1954 novel Stiller (I'm not Stiller), Frisch creates a remarkably dramatic scene in which the sculptor Stiller destroys all of the plaster figures and busts in his atelier, in effect obliterating the false images and past idols as if to invite a new, critical beginning. The Switzerland known for its neutrality, its thriftiness, its cleanliness, and its magnificent landscapes contrasted sharply with the other Switzerland known for its ruthless entrepreneurs, its commerce in weaponry, its bank secrets, and its unwillingness to discuss its recent history.

A younger wave of Swiss authors, including Hansjörg Schneider (1938–), Urs Widmer (1938–), and Thomas Hürlimann (1950–), began to re-examine and deconstruct Swiss icons, images, and historical themes in search of the truth. Women's suffrage also came to Switzerland in 1971 and brought several female voices, most notably the poet Erica Pedretti (1930–), the essayist and novelist Laure Wyss (1913–2002), and the novelist Gertrud Leutenegger (1948–), whose autobiographical Dusk (Vorabend, 1975) became a much revered early feminist text. Once again it was Frisch who led the way in 1971 with his slim volume Wilhelm Tell: A School Text (Wilhelm Tell für die Schule) in which he deconstructs the Tell myth. Following Frisch's lead, Herbert Meier (1928–) questions contemporary Swiss politics in Stauffer-Bern (1975). Thomas Hürlimann explores the problematic past of Switzerland during World War II in his play Grandfather and Half Brother (Grossvater und Halbbruder, 1981) in which a village extradites a Jewish refugee, supposedly Adolf Hitler's half brother, and his host. Hansjörg Schneider, perhaps inspired by the rebellious youth in Zurich, dramatizes the Swiss generation gap in Indian Summer (Altweibersommer, 1984).

To celebrate the 700th anniversary of Switzerland, Herbert Meier was commissioned by the Government Council of Schwyz to write an open-air pageant. The resulting Festspiel, written in High German, was titled Mythen-Play (Mythenspiel, 1991) after the two mountains (die Mythen) that tower over the cantonal capital Schwyz and form the backdrop for the pageant. Following a traffic accident, the main character Teiler seeks to find his companion Barbara. In his search he stumbles upon Swiss ghosts, historical figures, traditions, and Swiss myths, realizing through these encounters that the moral and ethical development of his world has little in common with the enduring dreams and ideals of the ancient Swiss. Hence, the double meaning of the title Mythenspiel, which literally translates as “playing with myths.” Meier brought together professional drama in High German with the atmosphere of the folk pageant to stage a production performed by both professional and amateur actors.

Maja Beutler (born 1936) is the first known female Swiss playwright. Her Lady Macbeth Doesn't Wash Her Hands Anymore (Lady Macbeth, wäscht sich die Hände nicht mehr, 1992) premiered at the Zurich Schauspielhaus in 1994. Beutler's title evokes images of William Shakespeare's character repeatedly washing her hands to cleanse herself of the immense guilt she feels toward her husband and all those who have perished because of her greed and quest for power. Beutler transports Shakespeare's figure into modern-day Switzerland. Hetti Bickel, Beutler's Lady Macbeth, decides on her fiftieth birthday to transform the life she leads with her enormously successful entrepreneurial husband; he lives only for Matchless Chemical, the firm he created. Hetti locks him up at home to prevent him from flying to Hamburg and carrying out the corporate takeover scheduled for that day. She then deals mockingly with company business and persuades him to take his vast fortune and escape with her to begin a new life on a new continent where his endless work would not stand between them. Beutler's Hetti possesses none of the guilt of her Shakespearean predecessor. She is a modern Lady Macbeth who takes control of her husband's life and overcomes the tragedy of her marriage, transforming it into a vision of a better existence.

Staged in 2000 in front of the monastery at Einsiedeln, the site where Swiss theater began, Thomas Hürlimann's The Einsiedler World Theater (Das Einsiedler Welttheater, 2000) blends Calderón de la Barca's (1600–1681) 1641 play with such contemporary Swiss concerns as globalization, xenophobia, the exploitation of the average citizen by the government and the wealthy, and the economic violation of sacred places and traditions. The author who calls the six characters to life speaks Spanish, and the characters themselves speak a mixture of Schwyzerdütsch and High German. These characters explore questions of faith and bemoan the condition of the world, and true to the original, even the monks question how God could allow such catastrophes to occur. The figures on stage experience the transitory nature of life, running from birth to death in a play that has no acts, but instead five scenes representing four seasons and the Plague, the equivalent of a five-act classical drama framed by a prologue and an epilogue. With Hurlimann's play, the now-secularized Swiss theater returned to where it began, the religious setting of the monastery at Einsiedeln.

FURTHER READING

- Amstutz, Hans, Ursula Käser-Leisibach, and Martin Stern. Schweizertheater 1930–1950 [Swiss Theater 1930–1950]. Zurich: Chonos, 2000.
- Bänziger, Hans. Frisch und Dürrenmatt [Frisch and Dürrenmatt]. Bern: Franke, 1960.
- Delecretaz, Anne-Lise, Daniel Maggetti, Michael Pfister, Vincenzo Todisco, and Lucia Walther, eds. Schriftstellerinnen und Schriftsteller der Gegenwart [Contemporary Swiss Authors]. Aarau: Sauerländer, 2002.
- Demetz, Peter. Postwar German Literature. New York: Pegasus, 1970.
- Geissler, Rolf. Zur Interpretation des modernen Dramas [Interpreting Modern Drama]. Frankfurt: Arche, 1971.
- Gut, Katrin. Das vaterländische Schauspiel [The Homeland Play]. Freiburg: Universitätsverlag Freiburg, 1996.
- Matt, Peter von. Die tintenblauen Eidgenossen [The Ink-Stained Swiss Federalists]. Munich: Hanser, 2001.
- Mittenzwei, Werner. Das Zürcher Schauspielhaus 1933–1945 [The Zurich Theater 1933–1945]. Berlin: Henschelverlag, 1979.
- Müller, Eugen. Schweizerische Theatergeschichte [History of Swiss Theater]. Zürich: Oprecht, 1944.
- Rüedi, Peter, ed. Neue Theaterstücke aus der Schweiz [New Plays from Switzerland]. Frankfurt/M: Eichborn, 1991.
- Schläfer, Beate. Theater in Switzerland. Tr. by Eileen Walliser-Schwarzbart. St. Gallen: Stehle Druck, 1994.
- Szene Schweiz—Scene Suisse—Scena Svizzera—Scena Svizzera [The Swiss Scene], Nos. 1–18. Basel: Schweizerische Gesellschaft für Theaterkultur [For Swiss Theater Culture], 1973–1991.
- Theater.ch. www.theater.ch (Accessed October 5, 2006).

Richard R. Ruppel

SYMBOLISM

The reaction against the rationalism of the eighteenth century has mingled with a reaction against the materialism of the nineteenth century, and the symbolical movement, which has come to perfection in Germany in Wagner, in England in the Pre-Raphaelites, and in France in Villiers de L'Isle Adam and Mallarmé, and has stirred the imagination of Ibsen and D'Annunzio, is certainly the only movement that is saying new things.

—W. B. Yeats, "The Celtic Element in Literature," 1897

Symbolism in the broad sense of having a sign represent something other than what it appears to be—one thing standing for another—is as old as art itself. But at the end of the 19th century there sprang up in FRANCE among artists and writers a special form of symbolism characterized by its emphasis on the spiritual and the otherworldly. This movement began as a strong reaction against the NATURALISM of ÉMILE ZOLA. In 1886 just when naturalism had firmly established itself as the mode of advanced drama, the poet Jean Moréas published a manifesto in which he declared that the essential aim of symbolism "is to objectify the subjective"—not to subjectify the objective, which is what Zola did and what the impressionist painters did.

Interviewed by a French journalist in the early 1890s, when the symbolists were much talked about, HENRIK IBSEN drew a distinction between his own use of symbols in a play like THE MASTER BUILDER (1892) and Zola's practice. He found Zola's novel Germinal (1885) to be a symbol "of vertiginous depth, the like of which I know not. . . . But the symbols of Zola are the result of the general action; they are the conclusion of the drama. My symbols are the beginning, the premises. They are the raison d'être of things. They contain reality, while those of Zola are explained by reality" (Bigeon, 1893).

Paul Fort, aided by poets like Stéphane Mallarmé and Paul Verlaine, established a theater devoted to antinaturalist plays. In 1891, when he staged MAURICE MAETERLINCK's one-act The Intruder (L'Intruse), he announced that his Théâtre d'Art would henceforth be devoted to the symbolist drama. "From now on it will be supported by the masters of the new school, Mallarmé, Verlaine, Jean Moréas. . . . At the end of March we shall present the first Symbolist production for the benefit of Verlaine and the admirable symbolist painter Paul Gauguin" (Robichez, 1957).

Zola employed symbols generously in his naturalistic novels, but his symbols made no connection with the world of the spirit. The mine in Germinal could represent the exploitation of the worker in a capitalist society, and the locomotive in La Bête humaine (1890) could stand for the sexual mania of the engineer. But the connection was between two things that existed on the materialistic and scientific plane. The naturalists, placing their faith in science and materialism, had drained soul and spirit from the universe; the symbolists wanted to bring them back.

Actually they had been there all along, but had been submerged in the drama and theater by naturalism. In the long view naturalism could be seen as an upstart movement, new on the scene, whereas the ideas of the symbolists had a very long history. They could draw on the mystic teachings of Emanuel Swedenborg, the philosophy of Arthur Schopenhauer, the poems of Charles Baudelaire, the musical dramas of RICHARD WAGNER. What they had in common was the belief that the inner life of the human being was more significant than his outer, social life. The esoteric, antisocial position of the symbolists in its most extreme form was expressed by Villiers de l'Isle Adam in his drama Axel (1890): "As for living, our servants will do that for us."

From the technical point of view, the problem was how to capture this inner life by means that had to rely on physical instruments. The poet Mallarmé said in 1891 that the soul could not be grasped directly, and consequently it would have to be suggested: "To name an object means to suppress three quarters of the pleasure. . . . Our dream should be to suggest the object" (1945).

The method was that of correspondences. The physical world was a forest of symbols to the imaginative artist, symbols that could conjure up the world of the soul as vividly as a painting could bring before one's eyes the train station in Paris. As Vincent Van Gogh said, "To express hope by some star, the eagerness of a soul by a sunset radiance. Certainly there is no delusive realism in that; but isn't it something that actually exists?" (1945).

If the aim of symbolism was to put one in contact with the spiritual, then the art of preference would be music. The German philosopher Schopenhauer made it the highest of all the arts. Through music it was possible to enter the spiritual realm almost directly. Wagner's music dramas, especially Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, and Tristan and Isolde, became exemplars for the French symbolists because those works combined words and music, resulting in something more apprehensible than pure sound and, as with Van Gogh, bringing together the physical and the spiritual. Wagner's music in Tristan is the world will, the ceaseless meaningless energy of the universe out of which the whole drama of desire and death arises.

In the drama, the aims of symbolism were set forth most clearly by Maeterlinck in his essay "The Tragic in Daily Life" (in its first version, it was a review of Ibsen's The Master Builder). He argued for a drama with a minimum of action, since action prevented the soul from manifesting itself. For Maeterlinck, Hamlet is most himself not when fighting the duel but when soliloquizing. Man lives most deeply when he is quiet, still, letting the shadows fall upon him, exposed to the subtle eternal forces that impinge on his being as quietly as the moonlight strikes a blade of grass. Active, he cannot feel nor comprehend those eternal forces that emanate from the center of the universe.

A drama without action is pretty much a contradiction in terms. The result was static drama, a drama with a slender plot and little action. What one hoped to see in the theater was a state of soul, a term that Wagner used in describing his music dramas. The efforts of some dramatists to do away with what had always appeared to be the heart and soul of drama constitutes one of the most significant developments in the theater of the 20th century.

In this interior drama there was no violent conflict, no escape from a dangerous situation, no clearly presented issue or controversy to be discussed, no problem that might be resolved by a sudden decision or event—in a word, no drama in the conventional sense. Instead the symbolist play put on the stage a region with forces beyond those of reason or intelligence. The atmosphere of the work became primary and the plot secondary.

Maeterlinck's best play, Pelléas and Mélisande, staged in 1893, borrows its plot of illicit love more from Wagner's Tristan than from Dante Alighieri's tale of Paola and Francesca, substituting repetitious and incantatory dialogue for the master's music. Inevitably, someone had to put the music back in, which Claude Debussy accomplished in his operatic version of Maeterlinck's play.

In the theater, symbolism found less fertile ground than in the other arts. Paul Fort struggled to find a style of acting and stage design that would somehow represent the soul as convincingly as a realistic play represented everyday existence. The problem lay in the very physical presence of the actor; the immaterial spirit and the physical body were at odds. As Maeterlinck pointed out in 1890, a symbol consists in an irradiation outward from some center. But when the actor comes on stage, the rays converge on him or her and on the present moment. The symbol is shattered and the spirit dies. The attempts by Aurélien Lugné-Poe at his Théâtre de l'Oeuvre in Paris to create a symbolist stage by putting the actors behind a scrim, disembodying them, and having them declaim or chant their lines as if part of a liturgy were doomed to fail. For Pierre Quillard's The Girl with Cut-off Hands (La Fille aux Mains Coupées, March 1892) at Théâtre d'Art, a gauze scrim was set up just behind the footlights. For a production of the Bible's Song of Songs (Cantiques de Cantiques, in an adaptation by P.-N. Roinard, December 1891) at the same theater, an attempt was made to break through the material plane by synesthesia: the vowels i and o were stressed, the music was in the key of C, the set was in purple, while the smell of frankincense filled the auditorium. These efforts only served to call attention to the problem rather than to solve it.

Although the early symbolists wrote for a small coterie and worked on the fringe of the arts, they are now seen as having been on the cutting edge. Their ideas encouraged experimentation among both dramatists and stage designers. Through innovative artists like Gordon Craig and Adolphe Appia, the realistic stage was dematerialized and theater art forever revolutionized. Dramatists who found the realistic theater inhospitable to their view of the world and too crass for the expression of the spiritual side of existence found encouragement in the Symbolist experiments.

Living in Paris in the mid-1890s, AUGUST STRINDBERG breathed the heady atmosphere of the symbolist AVANT-GARDE and reinvented himself as a dramatist with a strikingly original play, To Damascus (Part 1, 1898). In it he solved the Maeterlinckian paradox of the physical actor on a symbolic set by making the lead character symbolic, along with all the other objects and props on stage, with the rays radiating from him. He existed as a symbol among other symbols. Everything was seen from his perspective. He moved through a series of sharply divided scenes (or stations, as in medieval religious plays) as he felt the effect of forces he could not explain. Furthermore, Strindberg constructed a story line that brought the hero back to his starting point. This gave the impression that the hero's pilgrimage had been as much imagined as experienced in reality.

The symbolist experiments made a twofold contribution to the development of drama and theater. They offered playwrights the possibility of creating a drama of inwardness, in which the essential human being, stripped of temporal qualities, could be portrayed. They suggested that a drama with little action could be theatrically effective. And they freed the imagination of stage designers, allowing them to imbue even realistic sets with a visual poetry. The techniques required by symbolist drama in order to gain contact with the soul could be applied to plays that were not symbolist in the Maeterlinckian way but more like Zola. The naturalist ANTON CHEKHOV, for instance, could be staged to emphasize the obvious symbolism (in the conventional sense) in THE CHERRY ORCHARD.

Even for skeptical playwrights who had doubts about the existence of a soul, the symbolists provided instructive examples of how a play could present a state of mind in which actions lacked adequate motivation. SAMUEL BECKETT'S WAITING FOR GODOT, thought of as revolutionary, fits in perfectly with the symbolist theories. Lacking action, rich in symbols, it is a static drama par excellence. HAROLD PINTER'S early plays, like EDWARD ALBEE'S, are symbolist too, in their technique, in their small action, their going beyond the realm of logic and reason, creating an apparently realistic scene that seems to float over a submerged realm beyond logic and reason.

[See also Dramatic Structure; Russia and the Soviet Union, Russian Symbolist Drama]

FURTHER READING

- Bigeon, Maurice. "Profilis scandinaves: Henrik Ibsen" [Scandinavian Profiles: Henrik Ibsen], Le Figaro (January 4, 1893).
 Deak, Frantisek. Symbolist Theater: The Formation of an Avant-Garde. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Univ. Press, 1993.
 Jasper, Gertrude R. Adventure in the Theatre. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers Univ. Press, 1947.
 Mallarmé, Stéphane. Oeuvres complètes. Ed. Henri Mondor and G. Jean-Aubry. Paris: Gallimard, 1945.
 McGuiness, Patrick. Maurice Maeterlinck and the Making of Modern Theatre. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 2000.
 Robichez, Jacques. Le Symbolisme au théâtre: Lugné-Poe et les débuts de l'oeuvre. Paris: L'Arche, 1957.
 Van Gogh, Vincent. Van Gogh: A Self-Portrait. Ed. by W. H. Auden. New York: Dutton, 1963.

SYNGE, JOHN MILLINGTON (1871–1909)

One has, on one side, Mallarmé and Huysmans producing this [rich, poetic] literature [of towns]; and on the other hand Ibsen and Zola dealing with the reality of life in joyless and pallid words. On the stage one must have reality, and one must have joy, and that is why the intellectual modern drama has failed, and people have grown sick of the false joy of the musical comedy, that has been given to them in place of the rich joy found only in what is superb and wild in reality.

—J. M. Synge, Preface to The Playboy of the Western World, 1911

Playwright John (Edmund) Millington Synge was born on April 16, 1871, in a suburb south of Dublin, IRELAND, to an Anglo-Irish family with a distinguished record of service in law, government, and the Protestant church; another branch of the family were considerable landowners in County Wicklow. His father, a barrister, died a year after J. M. Synge, his youngest son, was born; his mother was an evangelical Protestant. Of his brothers, one became a missionary in China, one an engineer who emigrated to Argentina, and the third a land agent, collecting rents from tenantry during a period of agitation against landlordism in Ireland. Synge's mother, older sister, and grandmother wondered what would become of the youngest son, who showed little inclination to follow a profession or to worship with the rest of his pious family.

A frequently ailing child, his schooling was irregular. He enjoyed hiking, fishing, and practicing amateur naturalism in the mountains of County Wicklow. His reading in the works of Charles Darwin at age fourteen had a profound impact on his view of life. At age sixteen, he began studying the violin. At Trinity College, Dublin (1889–1892), he studied the Irish language in the School of Divinity. He also attended the Royal Irish Academy of Music and in 1891 joined the Academy orchestra. In July 1893, he went to live in GERMANY, the better to advance his ambition to become a professional musician; from January 1894, he studied piano and violin in Wurzburg. In 1895, he settled in Paris, and studied Old Irish at the Sorbonne. A shift in his interests from music to literature is manifest in his first critical writings published in journals.

During the years spent in Europe (1893–1902), Synge returned to summer in Wicklow with his mother. On such a visit in 1894, he fell in love with a neighbor of the same faith as his mother, a Plymouth Brethren, Cherrie Matheson. In 1896 and 1897 she declined his proposals of marriage, on the grounds that she could not wed an unbeliever. Still, Synge clung to his unbelief with the sincere conviction of an evangelical.

In 1896, Synge met Maud Gonne and W. B. YEATS in Paris. They first encouraged him to join the Irish League in Paris, but after attending a few meetings, he resigned because he did not want to become "mixed up with a revolutionary and semi-military movement" for Irish independence from Britain. The second gave him significant advice. Envyng Synge his knowledge of Irish, the poet said he should go to the Aran Islands, live there as one of the people, and express a life that had never been given expression. Synge could not, Yeats warned, make a triumph writing cosmopolitan journalism in Paris. In 1897, Synge fell seriously ill once again, this time evidently from the Hodgkin's disease that within twelve years would end his life.

In May 1898 Synge visited Inishmore ("big island"; the other two Aran islands are Inishere, "little island," and Synge's favorite, Inishman, "middle island"). On his return to the mainland, he stayed with LADY GREGORY at her country house, Coole Park, just when Yeats, Gregory, and Edward Martyn were planning the Irish Literary Theatre. Although he had as yet written no plays, Synge was from the start aware of and interested in the Irish dramatic revival. Urged by Yeats and Gregory to collect folklore on the Aran Islands, Synge returned there in the summers from 1899 to 1902. While he did not collect a great deal of folklore, he did gather observations for a rather modernist essay in aesthetic anthropology, "The Aran Islands" (not published until 1907). During this period, he continued to spend winters in Paris and the intervening periods with his mother in Wicklow.

It was in Wicklow in June 1902, following the first productions by the Irish National Dramatic Society (CATHLEEN NI HOULIHAN and Deirdre) that Synge began to write plays in a Hiberno-English dialect—his earlier, unfinished play, When the Moon Has Set, was a drawing-room discussion play. For the rest of the summer, the plays came rapidly: IN THE SHADOW OF THE GLEN, RIDERS TO THE SEA, and The Tinker's Wedding. A casual remark by the author after the plays' performances suggested he had picked up this poetical use of local speech by listening through the floorboards to the talk of servants in the kitchen of his mother's Wicklow house. In fact, he had for years been doing literal translations from Old Irish that preserved its characteristic circumlocutions, and he had studied the literary uses of Hiberno-English by Douglas Hyde in The Love Songs of Connacht (1893) and Lady Gregory in Cuchulain of Muirthemne (1902).

The values Synge found in Irish country life, or that he deposited there, clearly owe something to his involvement in modern European letters. He saw Aran through the eyes of the exoticizing popular French novelist Pierre Loti, particularly Loti's writings about a Breton fishing community. An awareness of love in the embrace of death gives Loti's impressionist pictures of the passing of a form of life a unique quality of melancholy. Synge too inhabited the borders of cultures: on Aran, he was a witness from and messenger to the modern metropolis.

From his start as a playwright, Synge had a deliberate ambition to conceive of works that were not merely local or national entertainments, but literary works assuming a place in the history of European literature. The prefaces to his plays, though brief, affiliate his plays with the writings of Molière, Ben Jonson, Charles Baudelaire, and François Villon, and contrast them with the plays of HENRIK IBSEN, whose "joyless and pallid" language Synge disliked. Yet In the Shadow of the Glen is patently influenced by Ibsen's A DOLL'S HOUSE, and When the Moon Has Set, his unperformed country-house play, is clearly modeled on GHOSTS. Ibsen's AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE possibly affected Synge's oppositional conception of the relation of the artist to society.

As a Protestant, the brother of a land agent, a friend of Yeats, and a dropout of Maud Gonne's Irish League, Synge was under some suspicion by members of the Irish National Theatre Society and its audience, when Yeats, president of that society, imposed Synge's plays on them. Prior to the first production of In the Shadow of the Glen (on October 8, 1903), the play was more than once criticized in the Dublin press as "not Irish." The story of a Wicklow wife who carries on with a young farmer behind the back of her aged husband was, to the minds of the audience, unsavory. Wholly unacceptable was the ending in which this woman goes out the door scot-free with an itinerant. Synge felt he had written a love letter to the people and a hymn to freedom and the great world, but the play was taken as an offensive and sectarian insult to Irish women and family structure. Suspicion of Synge lingered throughout his lifetime.

His second play to be performed, Riders to the Sea (on February 25, 1904), was so solemn, noble, and woeful that it was spared criticism. After an audience has been moved to tears, it is unlikely to express outrage. But The Well of the Saints, his first production to be held at the new Abbey Theatre (on February 4, 1905), with characters in costumes designed by English artist Charles Ricketts, was again abused for being overly melancholy and uncatholic. Set in Wicklow, this three-act play tells of an old blind couple, Martin and Mary Doul, whose sight is restored by a traveling saint. People had always told them they were a lovely man and wife; now they learn this was a joke. With their sight restored, they cannot beg charity but have to work. In the last act, their blindness begins to return, and they prevent the saint from curing them once again: for them, imagination is better than reality. The language of the play is the most elaborately patterned and poetical of all Synge's plays, and its moodiness and philosophical theme are suggestive of the works of MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

Synge was sorely wounded by the reception of The Well of the Saints. With his next play, he promised to give his audience something to make them really hop. This was PLAYBOY OF THE WESTERN WORLD, premiered on January 26, 1907. The play is by a long distance Synge's masterpiece and one of the classics of Irish theater. Many complete drafts of the play exist, and it is plain that Synge toiled over each scene, each speech, and each phrase in each speech. The cast has splendid parts: the scratching and itching but bonny barmaid, Pegeen Mike; her romancing tramp Christy Mahon, who is born out of his own and the villagers' imaginations as a hero; Pegeen's father, Michael James Flaherty, a pub owner with an Homeric talent in oaths; Old Mahon, the undead father of Christy, who is funny in the head and full of meanness; Shawn Keogh, Pegeen's cousin and fiancé who is terrified of Father Reilly; and the Widow Quin, who killed her own husband with a rusty pick and now would like to pair off with Christy. The Abbey company at the time were perfect for the play—including great actors like Sara and Molly Allgood, W. G. and Frank Fay, Arthur Sinclair, and J. M. Kerrigan—and the play was a perfect vehicle to make the most of their talents. But the audience rioted throughout the first week of performances in protest at Synge's extravagant satire of human folly. He had truly made them hop.

Even at the time of the Playboy's production, Synge was a very sick man with tumors developing in his neck. His Hodgkin's disease was reaching its final stages. He was hoping to be able to go on because he had at last found love. He was engaged to the woman who played Pegeen Mike in The Playboy, Molly Allgood (stage name, Maire O'Neill). Yet death was clearly inevitable. His last two years were spent working on an unfinished dramatization of the Irish saga about Deirdre, a beautiful young woman betrothed to aging King Conchubar. She elopes instead to Scotland with a young man, Naisi, and his brothers. Lured back to Ireland after seven years by a promise of forgiveness from the king, the brothers are set upon and killed. Before the king can enjoy his prize, Deirdre kills herself with a knife. Throughout the play, the lovers try to justify the sufficiency of their present happiness in the knowledge that it will be short and end in sudden death. This was in fact the very situation of Synge and Molly Allgood. After Synge's death on March 24, 1909, in Dublin, she was the first to play the part of Deirdre. Both cast and audience found the event unbearably sad.

Synge's COMEDY and richness of language were an influence on all subsequent Irish playwrights, especially SEAN O'CASEY. His vivid sense of both joy and death, and his pleasure in the art of theater, had an impact on SAMUEL BECKETT. His seriousness about his art, even in the face of death, made a lasting impression on W. B. Yeats.

PLAYS: In the Shadow of the Glen (1903); Riders to the Sea (1904); The Well of the Saints (1905); The Tinkers' Wedding (1906); Playboy of the Western World (1907); Deirdre of the Sorrows (1909)

FURTHER READING

- Greene, David H., and Edward M. Stephens. J. M. Synge 1871–1909. Rev. ed. New York: New York Univ. Press, 1989.
 Grene, Nicholas, ed. Interpreting Synge. Dublin: Lilliput, 2000.
 McCormack, W. J. Fool of the Family: A Life of J. M. Synge. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 2000.
 Watson, G. J. Irish Identity and the Literary Revival: Synge, Yeats, Joyce and O'Casey. 2nd ed. Washington, D.C.: Catholic Univ. of America Press, 1994.

Adrian Frazier

TABORI, GEORGE (1914–)

George Tabori (born on May 24, 1914, in Budapest, HUNGARY, then a part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire), a Jewish British citizen, is one of the most prolific playwrights and directors in contemporary GERMANY and AUSTRIA.

After moderate success as the author of novels and film-scripts (such as Alfred Hitchcock's I Confess [1953]) in post-World War II Hollywood, and following a short theater career in New York City, he relocated to Europe in 1971. Tabori has written more than thirty original plays, as well as several adaptations, and he has frequently directed at renowned theaters in Austria and Germany. For Tabori, the roles of playwright and director have always been intertwined.

Tabori was an apprentice in Berlin when the Nazis rose to power, forcing him into exile. During World War II he worked as a journalist, a BBC broadcaster, and an intelligence officer for the British MI5, and, while stationed in the Middle East, he began writing prose. After becoming a British citizen in 1947, he continued his writing career in the UNITED STATES. Tabori's first plays date from the early 1950s, the time of his collaboration with Lee Strasberg's Actors Studio. Under the influence of Strasberg, Tabori developed his directing principles (improvisation in particular) and became a savvy playwright. His early plays introduce issues of identity, exile, and race relationships; they also identify Tabori's role models (e.g., Brecht on Brecht [1960]). The premiere of The Cannibals (1968) constituted a turning point in Tabori's career and life: he has lived and worked in German-speaking Europe ever since.

Telling the story of concentration-camp inmates conflicted as to whether to eat the remains of one of their own, The Cannibals failed in the United States, but its European premiere (West Berlin, 1969) initiated Tabori's success on the German-language stage. The Cannibals is the first of his so-called Holocaust plays; here Tabori uses the theater as a place of remembrance. The Cannibals presents the difficulties of maintaining human dignity in the face of extinction, and the drama questions seemingly stable victim-perpetrator constellations through the use of black humor, music, dance, and numerous allusions to the Theater of the Absurd. Although Tabori has written three other Holocaust plays, My Mother's Courage (Mutters Courage, 1979), Jubilee (Jubiläum, 1983), and Mein Kampf (1987), the themes and methods first introduced in The Cannibals have recurred throughout his career—for example, in Weisman and Copperface: A Jewish Western (Weisman und Rotgesicht: Ein jüdischer Western, 1990), a play that examines race relations in the United States, and in his highly experimental adaptations of works by such authors as BERTOLT BRECHT (THE RESISTIBLE RISE OF ARTURO UI, 1972), Franz Kafka

(The Hunger Artists, Die Hungerkünstler, 1977), William Shakespeare (Shylock-Improvisations, Ich wollte meine Tochter läge tot zu meinen Füßen und hätte die Juwelen in den Ohren, 1978), and Fyodor Dostoevsky (The Grand Inquisitor, Der Großinquisitor, 1992). In most of his plays Tabori returns to the vexing question of victims and perpetrators, arguing that these positions are interchangeable. The genesis of Tabori's works is unique in that he writes his plays in English as prose texts. Collaborator Ursula Grützmaker-Tabori translates them for publication, and Tabori finalizes the dramatic text after a play's premiere. He has frequently appeared as an actor in smaller parts in his plays and, since the 1990s, also in films. Throughout his career Tabori has created actors' workshops modeled on Strasberg's project, for example, Bremer Theater Lab and Vienna Circle. He currently lives in Berlin, Germany.

SELECT PLAYS: Brecht on Brecht (1960); The Cannibals (1968); Niggerlovers (1969); Pinkville (1970); The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui: A Gangster Spectacle (1972); The Hunger Artists (Die Hungerkünstler, 1977); Shylock-Improvisations (Ich wollte meine Tochter läge tot zu meinen Füßen und hätte die Juwelen in den Ohren, 1978); My Mother's Courage (Mutters Courage, 1979); Jubilee (Jubiläum, 1983); Mein Kampf: Farce (1987); Weisman and Copperface: A Jewish Western (Weisman und Rotgesicht: Ein jüdischer Western, 1990); Goldberg Variations (Goldberg-Variationen, 1991); The Grand Inquisitor (Der Grossinquisitor, 1992); Ballad of a Wiener Schnitzel (Die Ballade vom Wiener Schnitzel, 1996)

FURTHER READING

- Feinberg, Anat. Embodied Memory: The Theatre of George Tabori. Iowa City: Univ. of Iowa Press, 1999.
- Höyng, Peter, ed. Verkörperte Geschichtsentwürfe: George Taboris Theaterarbeit—Embodied Projections on History: George Tabori's Theater Work. Tübingen: Francke, 1998.
- Russell, Susan. "George Tabori." In Reference Guide to Holocaust Literature, ed. by Thomas Riggs. Detroit: St. James Press, 2002.

Birgit Tautz

TAKARAZUKA REVUE COMPANY

Takarazuka Revue Company is an all-female theater company begun as the Takarazuka Girls' Opera (Takarazuka Shōjo Kageki) in 1914 at Takarazuka, a spa town in Hyōgo Prefecture. It was the inspiration of railroad tycoon Kobayashi Ichizō. To expand suburban development by increasing the use of his new railway, he planned Takarazuka as an attractive leisure place for affordable family entertainment and education.

The first public pool in JAPAN was remodeled as the art deco Paradise Theatre (Paradaisu Gekijō). It was built within the Takarazuka Family Land, Japan's first amusement park. The initial idea of the Girls' Opera was based on the boys' chorus popular at an Osaka department store, and educated girls were recruited from middle-class families.

The Takarazuka Music School was founded in 1919 upon the principles of Kobayashi Ichizō's maxim "Purely, Righteously, Beautifully" (kiyoku, tadashiku, utsukushiku), giving two years of training in Western and Japanese performing arts. All Takarazuka performers are the school's graduates, who maintain a strict senior-junior hierarchy throughout their careers. Today, only girls from the ages of fifteen to eighteen are entitled to apply, and successful candidates must remain unmarried until after their last performance. Both men and women serve as the company's playwrights, directors, conductors, and orchestra.

Male impersonators (otokoyaku) are the stars; the female leads are called musumeyaku. The company, affiliated with the school, has five troupes of about eighty students each: Flower (1921), Moon (1921), Snow (1924), Star (1934), and Cosmos (1998). This enables the company to offer a wide repertoire of musicals and shows year-round, including original scenarios, autobiographical interpretations such as J.F.K. (1995) and Michelangelo (Mikerañero, 2000), adaptations from William Shakespeare's dramas, as well as other classics such as Johann Wolfgang von Goethe's Faust (Tenshi no Bishō, Akuma no Namida, 1989) and The Tale of Genji (Genji monogatari, 1919), and realizations of comic-book (manga) stories such as The Rose of Versailles (Berusaiyu no bara, 1974). The troupes perform simultaneously in the Takarazuka Grand Theater, the Tokyo Takarazuka Theater, and the Bow Hall and on tour in Japan or, occasionally, abroad. During World War II flamboyant Takarazuka performances were banned, and the government restricted the repertoire. The Tokyo Takarazuka Theatre was taken over by American occupation forces as the Ernie Pyle Theatre until 1955.

Although it began by staging Japanese fairy tales in modified kabuki style, Takarazuka has been in many respects responsible for introducing foreign culture to the Japanese masses. The first revue production, Mon Paris (Mon Pari, 1927), was written by Tatsuya Kishida, followed by the more spectacular Pariset (Parizēto, 1930) by Tetsuzō Shirai, who established the Takarazuka revue style. The company learned melody and choreography from abroad, importing trendy elements such as speedy rhythms and geometrical compositions. Popular French chansons, such as those by Mistinguette, and visual extravaganzas in the manner of Florenz Ziegfeld were adopted.

An exclusive Takarazuka satellite channel, Sky Stage, started in 2002.

PLAYS: The Tale of Genji (Genji monogatari, 1919; revised versions, 1952, 1981, 2000); Mon Paris (Mon Pari, 1927; revised version, 1947); Pariset (Parizēto, 1930); Romeo and Juliet (Romio to Juriēto, 1933; revised versions, 1950, 1979, 1990); Red Flower of Tahiti (Minami no Aishū, 1947; revised versions, 1964, 1988); The Story of Gubijin and Kōu

(Gubijin, 1951; revised versions, 1955, 1974); Brilliant Thousand Rhythm (Karei naru Senbyōshi, 1960; revised version, 1999); West Side Story (Uesuto Saido monogatari, 1968; revised version, 1999); Nova Bossa Nova (Noba bosa noba, 1971; revised versions, 1976, 1999); The Rose of Versailles (Berusaiyu no bara, 1974; revised versions, 1975, 1976, 1989, 1990, 1991, 2001); Gone with the Wind (Kaze to tomo ni sarinu, 1977; revised versions, 1984, 1988, 1994, 2002); Faust (Tenshi no Bishō, Akuma no Namida, 1989); Black Jack (Buraku Jaku, 1994); J.F.K. (1995); Elizabeth (Erizabēto, 1996; revised versions, 1998, 2003); Michelangelo (Mikerañero, 2000)

FURTHER READING

- Kawasaki, Kenko. Takarazuka: Shōhi-shakai no supekutakuru [Takarazuka: The spectacle of the consumer society]. Tokyo: Kōdansha, 1999.
- Kobayashi, Ichizō. Takarazuka mampitsu [Notes on Takarazuka]. Osaka: Hankyū Dentetsu, 1980.
- Parker, Helen, S. E. "The Men of Our Dreams: The Role of the Otokoyaku in the Takarazuka Revue." In Japanese Theatre and the International Stage, ed. by Stanca Scholz-Cionca and Samuel L. Leiter. Leiden: Brill, 2001. 242–254.
- Rimer, J. Thomas. Culture and Identity: Japanese Intellectuals During the Interwar Years. Princeton: Princeton Univ. Press, 1990.
- Robertson, Jennifer. Takarazuka: Sexual Politics and Popular Culture in Modern Japan. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1998.
- Ueda, Shinji. Takarazuka: Hyakunen no yume [Takarazuka: A hundred-year dream]. Tokyo: Bungei Shunju, 2002.

Makiko Yamanashi

TALE OF SHUZENJI

Tale of Shuzenji (Shuzenji monogatari) is a Japanese play by OKAMATO KIDŌ in one act and three scenes, taking approximately one and a quarter hours in performance. The author published it in a literary magazine early in 1911, and a kabuki company premiered it in May of the same year with Ichikawa Sadanji II in the lead part of Yashaō. Yashaō is a carver of wooden masks commissioned by patrons, thus fulfilling a role similar to that of a portrait sculptor today. An enormous popular success, the production cemented the relationship between Sadanji and the playwright, and this lasted until they both died at the end of the 1930s. The play has been regarded as a model for the genre of Japanese drama known as SHIN KABUKI—plays written by authors living in and aware of the modern age but aiming to use the acting skills of kabuki actors.

Tale of Shuzenji starts on a low key, as many kabuki plays do, with two sisters discussing their futures. They are the daughters of Yashaō, whose profession would have been kept in the family; one daughter sees being the wife of a conscientious craftsman positively, while the other, Katsura, has ambitions to escape such a dull life and serve at court. Their father, Yashaō, is late with a commission for the shogun, Yoriie, because his mask of Yoriie, however many times he carves it, has an aura of death about it.

Katsura, against her father's wishes, shows the mask to Yoriie, who is delighted with it and at the same time falls in love with her. An idyllic evening walk by a stream, during which the shogun utters words of great tenderness to his new lover, is interrupted by the appearance of assassins sent to kill him. Katsura dons the mask to decoy the killers and is mortally wounded. The play ends as Yashaō, confirmed by these events in his belief in the truthfulness of his art, sketches his daughter's dying face.

While Yashaō's seeming heartlessness at the end may have reflected contemporary concerns about the link between art and life, it was the shogun's poetic verbalization of his love for Katsura that caught the mood of the times. Okamoto had sensed the poetic potential of a play about the mask when he had seen it on a visit to the Shuzen Temple, and in this play he can be seen in a line from the Japanese romantic poets of the 1890s and their preoccupation with modern, mutually dignified love, expressed through poetry. The play, still very popular, has lost its feeling of fresh romanticism as attitudes toward relations between the sexes have changed, but in 1911 some of Yoriie's lines became catchphrases. Tale of Shuzenji, like several of Okamoto's plays, while new at the time of its premiere, has settled easily into regular kabuki programs, where authentic interaction between stage and auditorium still derives more from familiarity than from novelty.

[See also Japan]

FURTHER READING

- Leiter, Samuel L. New Kabuki Encyclopedia: A Revised Adaptation of "Kabuki Jiten." Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1997.
- Nihon Kindai Engekishi Kenkyūkai, ed. Nijisseiki no gikyoku I: Nihon kindai gikyoku no sekai [Twentieth century plays I: The world of modern Japanese plays]. Tokyo: Shakai Hyōronsha, 2002.
- Unno Mitsuko, ed. You Mean to Say You Still Don't Know Who We Are? Ashiya, Japan: Personally Oriented, 1976.

Brian Powell

THE TALE OF TEEKA

Like many of MICHEL MARC BOUCHARD's plays, The Tale of Teeka draws directly on scenes and events from his own childhood. In an interview with Richard Ouzounian, Bouchard relates, "I saw so many kids beaten; it was tragic. . . . People without education. It is a transmission: Violence goes from generation to generation. If someone is hurt, then they will have to hurt someone else." That idea, the concept of the generational consequences of violence, forms the themes of The Tale of Teeka.

First produced in June 1991 under its original French title, L'histoire de l'oiseau, The Tale of Teeka premiered at the annual Rencontres internationales théâtre et jeunes spectateurs in Lyon, FRANCE. It was a work almost five years in the making. In 1986 Daniel Meilleur encouraged Bouchard to write a play for young audiences; years later, what Bouchard describes as "the most minimalist of all my plays; fewer words and more emphasis on the power of evocation" resulted. Despite its audience of children, The Tale of Teeka deals with one of Bouchard's most controversial subjects—child abuse—and it does so directly, without flinching from the gravity of its subject. Set in 1955, in rural Quebec, CANADA, the play portrays hereditary violence. The play takes place with a storm on the horizon, a storm symbolic of the suffering of both the child and the adult Maurice, the pain and fear that neither can fully escape. It has only three characters, the adult Maurice, the child Maurice, and the puppet goose Teeka, manipulated by the adult Maurice. The adult Maurice acts as the play's narrator and speaks to the audience directly; to the child Maurice, the goose Teeka is not a puppet but a playmate, his only source of friendship. Maurice's parents never make an appearance in the play, but they are nonetheless present as a constant background of fear and imminent violence. Physically abused by his parents, at one point Maurice strips to reveal the bruises coloring his body. He has begun to see that pain as coinage in a frightening, bizarre system of barter and exchange; whenever he is hurt, he receives something—a cap, cake, a costume—in return. The story takes place during a short interval when Maurice's parents are away from the house; in their absence he invites his pet goose Teeka into his room. Yet when they return unexpectedly, Maurice reacts out of fear and replicates upon Teeka the same violence that he himself has experienced, breaking her neck and killing her. He comments, "I can't help it, Teeka. That's the way things are." For Maurice, a child, violence has become accepted and expected, a fury that still corrupts and torments the adult Maurice, who can only hope for a long-awaited peace and calm. The play has been very well received by critics and audiences alike, who have called it touching, haunting, and unforgettable.

FURTHER READING

- Bouchard, Michel Marc. The Tale of Teeka. Tr. by Linda Gaboriau. Burnaby, B.C.: Talonbooks, 1999.
- Graeber, Laurel. "A Story of a Boy and His Goose." New York Times, late edition, East Coast (January 30, 1998): E2:41.
- Ouzounian, Richard. "Playwright in Character." Toronto Star (Canada) (January 25, 2004).

Winter S. Elliott

TALES FROM THE VIENNA WOODS

Is the theater a site for art, an aesthetic realm, or is the stage supposed to present an increasing number of "problem pieces" which have to be endured with displeasure and often in agony?

—Letter to the editor (Rheinische Post) in response to a 1971 production of Tales from the Vienna Woods

ÖDÖN VON HORVÁTH is best known for rejuvenating the Volksstück tradition, and Tales from the Vienna Woods (Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald) is his best-known Volksstück. Completed in the summer of 1931, the "Volksstück in three parts" premiered at the Deutsches Theater in Berlin on November 2, 1931, shortly after Horváth had received the prestigious Kleist Prize. Well received by both critics and the general public, the play enjoyed a successful thirty-seven-performance run before closing on December 10, 1931. A number of theaters in GERMANY and AUSTRIA had announced plans to stage the drama shortly after its Berlin premiere, but those productions never materialized because of political circumstances. Indeed, the fascist threats to democracy that the drama depicts and decries were in large part responsible for the fact that Tales from the Vienna Woods was not performed again until after the end of World War II.

Taking its title from a Johann Strauss waltz, Tales from the Vienna Woods evokes expectations of carefree Viennese gemütlichkeit and lighthearted entertainment. Strauss's music does, in fact, punctuate the dramatic action (together with other waltzes and beloved Viennese folk songs), but rather than reaffirming the imperial elegance of the ballroom or the gay tone of the operetta, Tales of the Vienna Woods confronts its audience with a slow and brutal dance of death, performed by the petit bourgeois residents of a "quiet street in Vienna's Eighth District" shortly before the imposition of Engelbert Dollfuß's Austrofascist dictatorship.

Unable to understand the actual causes of their socioeconomic misery after the loss of World War I and the collapse of the Habsburg monarchy, the residents of the "quiet street" mobilize themselves to immobilize Marianne, the only character in the drama who seeks an alternative to the economic, physical, and emotional brutality of the petit bourgeois milieu. As part of her single-handed attempt to put an end to this violence, Marianne breaks her engagement to the neighborhood butcher (literal and figurative) Oskar in favor of a relationship with the financially parasitic Alfred, who has just ended a relationship with the neighborhood tobacconist, Valerie. In attempting to break out of the predetermined role of wife to the "boy next door," Marianne indicts tradition and threatens the authoritarian structure of the patriarchal family. Consequently, a series of grotesque dramatic events ensues, intended to render Marianne, in the words of her fiancé Oskar, "unfit for combat."

The neighborhood ultimately succeeds in collectively bringing about Marianne's forced surrender, and thus a return to the formal configurations with which the drama began. The content of the characters' relationships, though, has necessarily been transformed, since a reimposition of the status quo ante could only be achieved through an intensification of physical and psychological violence, the complete debasement of Marianne, and the death of her young son.

Tales of the Vienna Woods premiered in Austria in 1948, causing the first theater scandal of the Second Republic. For a newly reconstituted nation intent on perpetuating the myth of Austria as the "first victim" of Nazi Germany, there was little enthusiasm among the general population for a drama that represented Austrians as brutal, narrow-minded, and self-pitying victimizers.

FURTHER READING

- Brzovic, Kathy, and Craig Decker. "The Struggle for Stasis in Ödön von Horváth's Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald." German Studies Review 13, no. 3 (1990): 391–404.
- Genno, Charles N. "'Kitsch' Elements in Horváth's Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald." German Quarterly 45, no. 2 (1972): 311–323.
- Horváth, Ödön von. Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald: Mit einem Kommentar von Dieter Wöhrle. With commentary by Dieter Wöhrle. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp, 2001.
- Krischke, Traugott, ed. Materialien zu Ödön von Horváth's "Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald" [Materials on Ödön von Horváth's Tales from the Vienna Woods]. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp, 1972.

Craig Decker

TALKING HEADS

I didn't say anything.

—Graham, "A Chip in the Sugar"

Talking Heads is a series of six monologues written by ALAN BENNETT for the BBC in 1987. Despite their uniform bleakness, the plays, filmed for television, were an immediate critical and popular success. The broadcasts attracted large viewing figures and much acclaim for the writer and performers; the scripts and audio- and videotapes have sold well ever since. Bennett repeated the winning formula in 1998, when six more monologues were written and broadcast as Talking Heads 2.

The original one-character plays all last about half an hour, are filmed with a static camera, and feature the characters speaking directly to the audience, narrating stories that illuminate their present state of stasis. All the characters endure quiet desperation, unaware of the full extent of their desperate loneliness and isolation. Ephemeral moments of extremely funny irony are invariably crushed by tragic pathos. Bennett himself plays the role of the series' sole male "talking head," Graham, in "A Chip in the Sugar." This middle-aged character speaks about his relationship with his mother, a relationship that seems too intimate. Graham feels threatened when Frank Turnbull, a former beau of his mother, arrives. Self-aggrandizing and criminally inclined, Turnbull pontificates witlessly about issues such as immigration and mental health. Faced with the outsider's rudeness and bigotry, Graham is weak, failing to intervene. His catchphrase is "I didn't say anything."

Maggie Smith plays Susan in "Bed Among the Lentils." Susan, a vicar's wife, is a recovering alcoholic. The monologue surprises, because Susan's bitterness is directed at an unlikely party—she resents the fact that her troubles are exploited by her pious husband, who uses them to preach a sort of Christian morality tale. Susan, when drinking, was exploited sexually by a young Asian shopkeeper, but she has no bitterness about these seedy encounters—she "loved every minute." In "A Lady of Letters"

Patricia Routledge plays Irene Ruddock, a prison-bound woman whose sole “real friend” is her pen, with which she writes meddling letters of trivial complaint and of serious allegation. Julia Walters plays the youngest “talking head,” Lesley, a third-rate actress who is naively persuaded to perform in the nude for a cheap, tacky movie, all the while deluding herself that she embodies acting “professionalism.” The financially devastated widow in “Soldiering On,” Muriel, is played by Stephanie Cole.

The most remarkable monologue, and the one that features the most extraordinary performance, is “A Cream Cracker Under the Settee.” The elderly Doris, played by Thora Hird (1911–2003), cannot admit awareness of her physical deterioration. She has injured herself by attempting to clean her house, having ignored advice to rest. The physical impairment is matched by Doris’s emotional emptiness, caused by the death of her husband, Wilfred, and memories of her dead, prematurely born, only child. Immobilized by leg pain and mental anguish at the monologue’s end, Doris receives an offer of assistance, but rejects it. The doom that will envelop Doris will arrive long before it will conquer Bennett’s other, equally bereft “talking heads.”

[See also England]

FURTHER READING

Bennett, Alan. The Complete Talking Heads. London: BBC Worldwide, 1998.

Bull, John. Stage Right: Crisis and Recovery in British Contemporary Mainstream Theatre. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1994.

Kendle, Burton S. “Alan Bennett.” In Contemporary Dramatists, ed. by K. A. Berry. 5th ed. London: St. James Press, 1993. 44–47.

O’Mealy, Joseph H. Alan Bennett: A Critical Introduction. New York: Routledge, 2001.

Wolfe, Peter. Understanding Alan Bennett. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1999.

Kevin De Ornellas

TALLY, TED (1952–)

If you overhear an audience’s comments, inevitably you’ll hear something that breaks your heart.

—Ted Tally, 1981

Ted Tally’s theatrical writing is characterized by the ability to imagine absurd or surreal situations in which normative rules no longer apply. Born on April 9, 1952, in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Tally studied acting as an undergraduate at Yale and playwriting at the Yale School of Drama, from which he graduated in 1974.

With his drama Terra Nova, Tally joined the cadre of promising playwrights who emerged from Yale during the 1970s. The play was first produced as a student production in the spring of 1977 and received its professional premiere at the Yale Repertory Theatre. Tally’s tale of the existential questions surrounding the fate of Robert Falcon Scott’s trek to the South Pole was drawn from the explorer’s letters and journals. The race to the South Pole became, in Tally’s hands, a journey through the mind of Scott, who made it to the pole only to discover that he had lost the competition to Norwegian Roald Amundsen. The doomed adventurer perished a short distance from a base camp during his return journey. Within a few years the play had received upwards of 100 productions around the world, although plans for a Broadway showing never materialized. When it was finally produced in New York in 1984, Tally received an Obie Award for playwriting, and the following year he was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship.

Tally’s subsequent work delineated the foibles, concerns, and longings of contemporary society. In Hooters (1978) two young men shed their false bravado and come of age in the course of sexual and philosophical encounters with two women in their mid-twenties. In Coming Attractions (1983) Tally presaged the increasing linkage between celebrity and crime in the story of a small-time bank robber who, with the help of a theatrical agent, becomes a cult hero as the “Halloween Killer.” As the robber’s fame begins to wane, he plots to kill Miss America. The work garnered Tally an Outer Critics’ Circle Award for Best New American Play. Tally’s ability to combine trenchant sociological observation with honest sentiment was showcased in Little Footsteps (1986), in which a yuppie couple at the frantic juncture of parenthood struggle with their own self-absorption. After their marriage is torn apart by the impending arrival of their child, they divorce, only to reconcile when Ben, the husband, sneaks back into their apartment during a christening celebration to recite prayers over his son in a renewed awareness of his Jewish heritage.

Tally has also worked inventively in shorter theatrical forms. A compilation of his sketches from the 1970s, Silver Linings (several of which had appeared in the 1978 OFF-BROADWAY review Word of Mouth), appeared in print in 1983. Tally then displayed his flair for adaptation with Taxi from Hell, a reworking of Bud Abbott and Lou Costello’s “Who’s on First?” routine, which appeared off-Broadway in Urban Blight (1988). After The Gettysburg Sound Bite (1989), his imagining of Abraham Lincoln in the grip of three contemporary political handlers, Tally turned his focus to screenwriting, a form in which he found great success, winning an Academy Award for his adaptation of Silence of the Lambs. In 1991 Tally said about this shift, “It’s a chance to have a wider exposure, a wider audience and to be less subject to the whim of critics.”

[See also United States]

PLAYS: Night Mail and Other Sketches (1977); Terra Nova (1977); Hooters (1978); Word of Mouth (1978); Silver Linings (review sketches from the 1970s); Coming Attractions (with music by Jack Feldman and lyrics by Feldman and Bruce Sussman, 1983); Little Footsteps (1986); Taxi from Hell (1988); The Gettysburg Sound Bite (1989)

FURTHER READING

- Andreach, Robert J. "Tally's Terra Nova: From Historical Journals to Existential Journey." Twentieth Century Literature 35 (1989): 65–73.
- Klaver, Elizabeth. "Coming Attractions: Theater and the Performance of Television." Mosaic: A Journal for the Interdisciplinary Study of Literature 28, no. 4 (December 1995): 111–127.

Louis Scheeder

TAMARA

Tamara, written by Canadian playwright JOHN KRIZANC, is a fictionalized account of an encounter between Italian poet and soldier GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO and the Polish painter Tamara De Lempicka. First performed in Toronto in 1981, Tamara takes place between January 10 and 11, 1927, at D'Annunzio's country estate. The complex, almost operatic story lines follow each of the play's ten characters over the two-day period as they spy on and betray each other.

D'Annunzio has been placed under house arrest by Italian dictator Benito Mussolini. He has filled his home with a bizarre bevy of guests and servants in order to pass the time, including Aélis Mazoyer, head of household; Luisa Baccara, a pianist; Aldo Finzi, a Fascist policeman; Mario Pagnutti, the chauffeur; and Gian Francesco de Spiga, a composer. Each of the characters has very clear objectives in the play: Aélis, a lesbian, is trying to seduce Carlotta Barra, a dancer who is seeking a letter of recommendation from D'Annunzio. Aldo, a Jew, has been ordered to keep an eye on D'Annunzio's activities by Mussolini, but desperately wants to return to Rome and his former position in Il Duce's government. Mario is actually the son of the Duke of Milan and is in the house to convince D'Annunzio to escape Italy and fight on the side of the Communists.

Tamara is considered a form of ENVIRONMENTAL THEATER, and audience members attending a performance of the play are asked to choose a character to physically follow through the play. The theatrical space resembles a huge country mansion in order to provide the necessary space for the scenes. At intermission and at the end of the evening the spectators can meet and confer on what they have witnessed.

Though the play is performed mainly in a representational style, where the audience views the play as outside observers, there are presentational moments. The rules of the "game" are presented directly to the audience by Dante Fenzo, the valet and an ex-gondolier, and Finzi at the beginning of the evening's performance, as though the spectators are guests in the house. Participants must follow a number of strict rules, including never passing through closed doors and never being found without the passports that serve as programs and provide a copy of the guidelines they must follow. At the top of the second act Finzi discovers an audience member without a passport and takes her into the hallway to be interrogated.

Since audience members are chasing actors around a multi-leveled facility (the Park Avenue Armory in New York City, for example), anything can happen to make the event seem very "intimate." Productions of Tamara allow audience members the opportunity to see what is often only intimated in other plays—what is going on behind the scenes.

[See also Canada]

FURTHER READING

- De Lempicka-Foxhall, Kizette, Baroness, and Charles Phillips. Passion by Design: The Art and Times of Tamara De Lempicka. New York: Abbeville Press, 1987.
- Woodhouse, John. Gabriele D'Annunzio: Defiant Archangel. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 2001.

Jamie Skidmore

TANAKA CHIKAO (1905–1995)

Tanaka Chikao was a Japanese SHINGEKI playwright. Three concerns run through his work: his deep fascination with Roman Catholicism, his quest to express Catholic theology in Japanese dramatic dialogue, and the sense of absurdity born of the realization that this might ultimately be impossible.

Tanaka's fascination with Catholicism originated in his upbringing in Nagasaki, JAPAN's most Christian city, and developed with his study of French literature at Keio University in Tokyo, where he matriculated in 1923. Of the French dramatic literature he studied, Tanaka was particularly impressed with the plays of Charles Vildrac. Tanaka attended the inaugural performances of the Tsukiji Little Theater (Tsukiji Shōgekijō) in 1924, but he identified more strongly with the vision of the playwright Kishida Kunio, who advocated a less theatrical, more spiritual kind of theater. Kishida was inspired by the devoutly Catholic French director JACQUES COPEAU, with whom he had studied in Paris in 1921–1922. Although Kishida never espoused Christianity, his plays, which focus on the inner workings of the human spirit, suggested to Tanaka a way to pursue his religious and existential questions through the medium of drama. Tanaka joined Kishida's Modern Theater Institute (Shingeki Kenkyūsho) in 1927; he was a regular contributor to Playwriting (Gekisaku) magazine, which Kishida established in 1932; and he joined Kishida's Literary Theater (Bungakuza) when it was founded in 1937. Tanaka's wife, the playwright Tanaka Sumie, and their children were baptized in 1952. He himself formally converted to Catholicism in 1989.

Tanaka's first contribution to Playwriting was an article on theatrical dialogue; and Mother (Ofukuro, 1933), his first play, was a one-act etude intended to illustrate his thoughts. The problem of how to communicate ideas through dramatic dialogue remained an abiding concern throughout Tanaka's life, and he authored two theoretical studies on the subject: Logique du récit (Mono-ju jutsu, 1949) and the two-volume Introduction to the Theory of Dramatic Style (Gekiteki buntairon josetsu, 1978). He taught at the Actors Theater Training School (Haiyūza Yōseijo) and at the Tōhō Academy (Tōhō Gakuen). SATOH MAKOTO was among his many students.

Tanaka's career as a dramatist began in earnest after World War II. Catholic themes were apparent from the outset, but Tanaka struggled to find a way to express these in a Japanese setting. His well-received 1953 play Education (Kyōiku) is set in France with a cast of French characters.

It was in THE HEAD OF MARY (Maria no kubi, 1959), a play about Catholic survivors of the atomic bombing of his native Nagasaki, that Tanaka finally found a way to make his theology credible in a Japanese context. The play is widely regarded as his finest work. Even after his death in 1995, however, his widow continued to complain that the Christian dimension of the play had never been understood in Japan.

The sense of absurdity that characterizes many of Tanaka's works comes, in part at least, from his sense of the incommensurability of Christian ideas and Japanese language and culture. Tanaka studied kyōgen and used its techniques in plays such as Arai Hakuseki (1968) to convert his sense of futility to humor.

[See also Nō and Kyōgen]

SELECT PLAYS: Mother (Ofukuro, 1933); The Limit of the Clouds (Kumo no hatate, 1947); Education (Kyōiku, 1953); Tales of Hizen (Hizen fudoki, 1956); The Head of Mary (Maria no kubi, 1959); Chidori (1960); Arai Hakuseki (1968); The Prison Diary of Yaoya Oshichi (Yaoya Oshichi hitoya nikki, 1974)

FURTHER READING

Hayashi Hirochika. "Tanaka Chikao Maria no Kubi" [Tanaka Chikao's Head of Mary]. In Nijusseiki no gikyoku II: Gendai gikyoku no tenkai [Twentieth-century plays II: The development of contemporary (Japanese) playwriting], ed. by Nihon Kindai Engkishi Kenkyūkai. Tokyo: Shakai Hyōronsha, 2002.

Rimer, J. Thomas. "Four Plays by Tanaka Chikao." Monumenta Nipponica 31, no. 3 (1976).

Tanaka Chikao. The Head of Mary. Tr. by David G. Goodman. In After Apocalypse: Four Japanese Plays of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Cornell East Asia Papers 71. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell East Asia Program, 1994.

Wetmore, Kevin J. "The Cross and the Bomb: Two Catholic Dramas in Response to Nagasaki." Journal of Religion and Theatre 1, no. 1 (Fall 2002). http://www.fa.mtu.edu/~dlbruch/rtjournal/vol_1/no_1/wetmore.html.

David G. Goodman

TANVIR, HABIB (1923–)

Director, playwright, and poet Habib Tanvir (born on September 1, 1923, in Raipur [Chhattisgarh], INDIA) is perhaps the most popular and revered figure of contemporary Indian theater. He moved to Bombay in 1943 to explore a career in films. In Bombay he became associated with the left-wing cultural movement committed to the cause of a radical and egalitarian rearrangement of society. Tanvir became an active member of the organizations that spearheaded that movement—Indian People's Theatre Association and the Progressive Writers' Association.

Moving to Delhi in 1954, Tanvir began his career in theater. He worked with a repertory theater group called Hindustani Theatre and had his first major success with AGRA BAZAAR (1954). In 1956 he went to ENGLAND to study theater at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts and the Bristol Old Vic. He traveled extensively throughout Europe. In Berlin he saw several of BERTOLT BRECHT's productions, which had a lasting impact on him, further reinforcing his left-wing predilections and enhancing his understanding of the social and political potential of theater. Returning to Delhi in 1958, he produced The Clay Cart (Mitti ki Gadi) (Shudraka's Sanskrit classic in Hindi) for Hindustani Theatre. A year later he married the actress Monica Mishra, and together they founded a professional company called Naya Theatre, which is distinguished from other professional theater groups by its cast of more or less illiterate but remarkably skillful village actors.

Disregarding the dominant practice of imitating European models of theater, Tanvir started a long quest for a distinctly indigenous performance idiom. His theater incisively blends tradition and modernity, folk creativity and skills with a modern critical consciousness. It is this rich blend that makes his work important and memorable. His actors have their background in the traditional Chhattisgarhi dramatic form called nacha and bring with them its energy and skills. Nonetheless, Tanvir's plays are not nacha productions. A nacha performance, which usually lasts through the night, is an improvisatory and arbitrary string of a variety of short and discrete pieces of entertainment interspersed with song and dance sequences. Tanvir's plays, on the other hand, are thematically and structurally coherent and complex. The songs and dances he employs are integral to the fabric of the action and, in a style reminiscent of Brecht, function as an important element in the play's overall argument. Fully alert to the historical and cognitive limitations of folk forms, Tanvir allows his own modern consciousness and political understanding to interact with the traditional energies and skills of his performers. His project, from the beginning, has been to harness elements of the folk traditions as a vehicle and make them yield new, contemporary meanings in order to produce a theater that has a distinctly Indian flavor. In fact, his excellent adaptations of THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN (Shaajapur ki Shantibai, 1978) and A Midsummer Night's Dream (Kamdeo ka Apna, Basant Ritu ka Sapna, 1993) would not be possible without this rich and creative fusion of modern consciousness and traditional Indian performance styles and rhythms. In these plays he has worked close to the original text and has written songs that reproduce the rich imagery and humor of William Shakespeare's poetry and the complex ideas of Brecht. However, he took meticulous care to fit his words to traditional folk tunes of Chhattisgarh.

Tanvir included some Chhattisgarhi folk performers in the cast of The Clay Cart, but by the early 1970s his interest in these artists and in their traditional form nacha had led to a sustained involvement with them. Two significant productions came out of this involvement: a delightful farcical COMEDY called Gaon ka Naam Sasural, Mor Naam Damad (which literally translates as "The Village Named In-Laws' Place, My Name Son-in-Law"), which was improvised by dovetailing three distinct nacha skits; and his famous masterpiece, CHARANDAS THE THIEF (Charandas Chor). Ever since then, although he has occasionally worked with urban groups, his main work has been with the Naya Theatre and the folk artists with whom he has staged a rich variety of memorable productions, from traditional tales, Sanskrit classics, and contemporary Indian plays to adaptations of Molière, Shakespeare, Brecht, and Stefan Zweig.

Given the huge economic and social chasm that divides the urban and the rural parts of India, the attitude of the powerful urban elite to the traditional cultural forms of the disadvantaged villagers tends to be exploitative or, at best, patronizing. However, Tanvir's approach to folk culture is neither. He takes special care not to privilege his own educated consciousness over the creativity of his unschooled actors (in fact, he eschews elaborate production values in order to highlight the work of the performers). In his work the two usually meet and interpenetrate as equal partners in a collaborative endeavor. For example, Tanvir blends his poetry and all its complex thought content with the traditional folk and tribal music, allowing the former to retain its own imaginative and rhetorical power and complexity, but without in any way devaluing or destroying the latter. Every major production of his goes through a protracted and painstaking process of joint explorations, experimentations, and improvisations before it reaches the public.

SELECT PLAYS: Chess Pieces (Shatranj ke Mohre, adaptation of a short story by Munshi Premchand, 1951); Agra Bazar (1954); After Me (Mere Baad, 1968); The Village Named In-Laws' Place, My name Son-in-Law (Gaon ka Nao Sasural, Mor Nao Damaad, 1972); Charandas the Thief (Charandas Chor, 1974–1975); Kalarin the Courageous (Bahadur Kalarin, 1977–1978); Shantibai of Shajapur (Shajapur ki Shantibai, adaptation of Bertolt Brecht's The Good Woman of Setzuan, 1978); Sone Sagar (1979); Lala Shohratrai (adaptation of Molière's Le Bourgeois Gentlehomme, 1981); The Immortal Tale of Hirma (Hirma ki Amar Kahani, 1986); Kamdor ka Apna, Basant Ritu ka Sapna (adaptation of William Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream, 1993); The Road (Sadak, 1994); A Woman Called Hypatia (Ek Aurat Hypatia Bhi Thi, 1999); The Royal Blood (Rajrakt, adaptation of Rabindranath Tagore's works, 2006)

FURTHER READING

- Irvin, Polly, ed. Directing for the Stage. Brighton: RotoVision, 2003.
- Malick, Javed. "Habib Tanvir: The Making of a Legend." Theatre India 2 (November 2000): 93–102.
- Rea, Kenneth. "Theatre in India: The Old and the New." Pts. 3 and 4. Theatre Quarterly 8, no. 32 (1978): 47–66; 9, no. 34 (1979): 53–65.

- Tanvir, Habib. "An Interview with Reeta Sondhi." In Contemporary Indian Theatre. Delhi: Sangeet Natak Akademi, 1989.
- . "'It Must Flow'—A Life in Theatre." Seagull Theatre Quarterly 10 (June 1996): 3–38.
- . "My Milestones in Theatre: Habib Tanvir in Conversation." In Charandas Chor. Calcutta: Seagull Books, 1996.

Javed Malick

TARDIEU, JEAN (1903–1995)

A poet, art critic, and dramatist, Jean Tardieu targeted the arts, society, and language itself in his playful sketches. Many of them can be viewed as either poetry or drama, and he emphasized their ambiguity with titles such as A Voice Without Anyone (Une voix sans personne) or Poems to be Played (Poèmes à jouer).

Born on November 1, 1903, in Saint-Germain-de-Joux, FRANCE, Tardieu began writing poetry before he was ten years of age, and he wrote a one-act verse play in Molière's style at fifteen. At the age of seventeen, however, Tardieu suffered a mental breakdown he later described as severing him psychologically from the rest of the world. Although he went on to have a distinguished public career in literature and radio broadcasting, he avoided writing about the giant political issues that marked twentieth-century France. Instead, he mischievously investigated everyday behavior, as though describing bourgeois life on a planet where he did not live. Tardieu died in Créteil on January 27, 1995.

His most famous play is the one-act COMEDY One Word for Another (Un mot pour un autre, 1950). The play purports to show a linguistic epidemic that struck the "fortunate classes" in the great cities of France about 1900. Because of this plague, middle-class citizens arbitrarily substitute one word for another in their conversations without any awareness that they are speaking nonsense. The dramatic situations in the play are so conventional, however, that the audience understands every word. The maid begins by announcing, "The postern has just eliminated the fodder" instead of "The postman has just delivered the mail." The lady of the house responds, "You may drain" rather than "You may go." When confronted by the women he is betraying, the leading man shouts, "But this is perspiration!" instead of "But this is a conspiracy!" As the linguistic substitutions build, the lines come close in spirit to the cinematic babble of Groucho Marx.

In The Sonata and the Three Gentlemen; or, How to Talk Music (La sonate et les trois messieurs, ou, Comment parler musique, 1959), three gentlemen share banalities about a piece of classical music they have just heard. They repeat, interrupt, prolong, and double each other's phrases. As their conversation continues, changing tempo and volume, it re-creates the effects of the music they are describing. The sketch mocks the middlebrow trio, because these amateur critics are less original than they think, but it also ennobles them, because the result of their exchange is more beautiful than they know.

Tardieu wrote no single dramatic work of standard length. Although his insistence on the hollowness of everyday language has inspired comparisons with SAMUEL BECKETT and EUGÈNE IONESCO, his work, unlike theirs, is cheerful. Tardieu's cultivation allows him to poke fun at the middle classes, the audience most likely to appreciate his humor, and at those, like himself, who make their living as teachers. In this, his theater participates in the French aesthetic subgenre of mock pedagogy—one to which composers such as Claude Debussy (in Doctor Gradus ad Parnassum, 1908) and Maurice Ravel (in L'enfant et les sortilèges, 1925) and writers such as GUILLAUME APOLLINAIRE (in Le bestiaire, 1911) and Raymond Queneau (in Exercices de style, 1947) have all made contributions with the same playful virtuosity as Tardieu.

SELECT PLAYS: Who Goes There? (Qui est là?, 1949); One Word for Another (Un mot pour un autre, 1950); Subway Lovers (Les amants du métro, 1952); A Voice Without Anyone (Une voix sans personne, 1956); The Alphabet of Our Life (L'A.B.C. de notre vie, 1959); The Sonata and the Three Gentlemen; or, How to Talk Music (La sonate et les trois messieurs, ou, Comment parler musique, 1959); Three People Who Entered Paintings (Trois personnes entrées dans des tableaux, published 1969); An Evening in Provence; or, The Word and the Outcry (Une soirée en Provence, ou, Le Mot et le cri, 1976)

FURTHER READING

Debreuille, Jean-Yves, et al., eds. Oeuvres de Tardieu [Tardieu's works].

Paris: Gallimard, 2003. [In addition to Tardieu's works, contains letters, interviews, photographs, and criticism by prominent literary critics.]

Esslin, Martin. The Theatre of the Absurd. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Bks., 1969.

Noulet, Émilie. Jean Tardieu. Paris: Seghers, 1964.

Pronko, Leonard Cabell. Avant-Garde: The Experimental Theater in France. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1962.

Tardieu, Jean. Oeuvres [Works]. Ed. by Jean-Yves Debreuille. With Alix Turola—Tardieu and Delphine Hautois. Paris: Gallimard, 2003.

David Pelizzari

TAYLOR, DREW HAYDEN (1962–)

Drew Hayden Taylor (born in Curve Lake First Nations, Ontario, Canada, in 1962), an Ojibway writer, film director, and journalist, is, next to TOMSON HIGHWAY, one of the most successful Native playwrights in Canada today. After graduating from Seneca College with an honors diploma in radio and television broadcasting, he began his theater career in 1988 as playwright-in-residence for Native Earth Performing Arts in Toronto, for which he also served as artistic director from 1994 to 1997. Ever since his first play, Toronto at Dreamer's Rock (1989), which won him the the Chalmers Canadian Play Award in 1992, Taylor has been a leading voice not only in the Native North American arts scene, but in theater worldwide, with more than sixty-five professional productions on a global scale.

While many minorities use theater for a therapeutic reenactment of oppression and trauma, using pungent, violent imagery to create an awareness of political injustice, the hallmark of Drew Hayden Taylor's dramatic work is the use of humor. Often referred to as the "NEIL SIMON of Native Theatre," Taylor counterbalances colonial experience and stereotypes with witty dialogues "to show that we all weren't oppressed, depressed, or suppressed." At the same time, his COMEDIES never fail to go beneath the surface, probing into themes of Native IDENTITY, family, community, and intercultural dialogue. This combination is best illustrated by the "Blues Quartet," a series consisting of The Bootlegger Blues (1990; honored in 1992 with the Canadian Authors' Association Literary Award for Best Drama), THE BABY BLUES (1995), and The Buz/Gem Blues (2001), with another sequel to be published.

Besides comedies, Taylor's storytelling on stage includes a wide variety of themes and genres, ranging from kitchen-sink drama to experimentalism. In addition to his plays for young audiences (The Boy in the Tree House or Girl Who Loved Her Horses), he also uses the stage for sensitive political discussions, as in Education Is Our Right (1990) or his trilogy on forced adoption (Someday, 1991; Only Drunks and Children Tell the Truth, which won the Dora Mavor Moore Award in 1996; and 400 Kilometres, 1999).

With AlterNatives, as in all of his plays, negotiations of identity are interlinked with a consistent questioning of power mechanisms and injustice, regardless of hierarchies, political correctness, or ethnic background. Aiming at universal human understanding across cultural differences, Taylor frequently mocks essentialism and replaces rigid categories of authenticity with irony and playful self-definition: "I've often tried to be philosophical about the whole thing. I have both white and red blood in me: I guess that makes me pink." His skillful interweaving of specific political issues with universal values into dramatic celebrations of tolerance and respect gained him the James Buller Award for Best Playwright in 1997.

In addition to theater, Taylor's versatility extends into popular collections of essays (Funny, You Don't Look Like One: Observations of a Blue-Eyed Ojibway I–IV (1998, 1999, 2002, 2004), short stories (Fearless Warriors, 1998), film documentaries (Redskins, Tricksters and Puppy Stew, 2000), and well-known television productions such as The Beachcombers or North of Sixty. Drew Hayden Taylor currently lives in Toronto.

SELECT PLAYS: Toronto at Dreamer's Rock (1989); The Bootlegger Blues (1990); Education Is Our Right (1990); Pictures on the Wall (1990); Someday (1991); A Contemporary Gothic Indian Vampire Story (1992); The All Complete Aboriginal Show Extravaganza (1994); The Baby Blues (1995); Girl Who Loved Her Horses (1995); Only Drunks and Children Tell the Truth (1996); AlterNatives (1998); 400 Kilometres (1999); Toronto@ Dreamer's Rock.com (1999); The Boy in the Tree House (2000); The Buz/Gem Blues (2001); Sucker Falls: A Musical About the Forest and the Demons of the Soul (2002); Raven Stole the Sun (2004)

FURTHER READING

- Däwes, Birgit. "An Interview with Drew Hayden Taylor." Contemporary Literature 44, no. 1 (Spring 2003): 1–18.
- Geiogamah, Hanay, and Jaye T. Darby, eds. American Indian Theater in Performance: A Reader. Los Angeles: UCLA American Indian Studies Center, 2000.
- Glaap, Albert-Reiner. "Drew Hayden Taylor's Dramatic Career." In Siting the Other: Re-visions of Marginality in Australian and English-Canadian Drama, ed. by Marc Maufort and Franca Bellarsi. Brussels: P. Lang, 2001. 217–232.
- Nunn, Robert. "Drew Hayden Taylor's AlterNatives: Dishing the Dirt." In Crucible of Cultures: Anglophone Drama at the Dawn of the New Millennium, ed. by Marc Maufort and Franca Bellarsi. Dramaturgies 4. Brussels: P. Lang, 2002. 209–217.
- . ed. Drew Hayden Taylor: Essays on His Works. Toronto: Guernica, 2005.
- Taylor, Drew Hayden. "Storytelling to Stage: The Growth of Native Theatre in Canada." Drama Review 41, no. 3 (Fall 1997): 140–152.

Birgit Däwes

TAYLOR, THOMAS (1817–1880)

Born at Bishop-Wearmouth, a suburb of Sunderland, ENGLAND, on October 19, 1817, Thomas Taylor was a son of a successful brewer and a mother with a keen wit. After attending the Grange in Sunderland, Taylor entered Trinity College in 1837, where he received a bachelor of arts degree in 1840, with honors in the classics and mathematics, followed by a fellowship and eventually a master's degree. From 1845 to 1847 Taylor left Trinity to become a professor of English at London University College. He studied law at the Inner Temple and then served in various positions on the Board of Health. He retired from public service in 1871 and spent the remainder of his life in his already-flourishing literary career.

Taylor was always active in England's literary scene. He was involved in writing articles for various magazines and newspapers from the very beginning and served as the editor of Punch from 1874 to 1880. His criticism on art and drama earned him much popularity, but his dramas brought him greater fame and money. In the thirty-five years of Taylor's writing career, he produced over seventy plays. He also served as editor for the autobiographies of B. R. Haydon and C. R. Leslie and for Mortimer Collins's posthumous Pen Sketches. Some contemporary critics accused Taylor of lowering his literary standards to please popular demand of the day. The taste of his audience seemed to affect what and how Taylor wrote.

Many of Taylor's dramas were adaptations of plots from other sources, which fact earned him a small reputation for plagiarism and unoriginality. Taylor often turned to French stories for his dramas, as in THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN (1863). He also adapted novels such as Uncle Tom's Cabin (1852) and A Tale of Two Cities (1860) for stage performance. In addition to his continual borrowing of plots, Taylor often worked in collaboration with other writers and actors to write dramas. This allowed Taylor to fit the characters in his plays to certain actors, but also led to strained work relationships. He most enjoyed working on historical plays such as Joan of Arc (1871) or Anne Boleyn (1876). Taylor's play Our American Cousin was the performance Abraham Lincoln attended the night he was assassinated. Tom Taylor died on July 12, 1880, in Lavender Sweep, Wandsworth, England.

Since his day Taylor's works have dropped in popularity. Actor and drama critic Wayne Turney writes, "Fifty years after his death, Taylor's output was excoriated as representative of the worst defects of mid-Nineteenth Century British playwrighting," demonstrating the ever-changing expectations of a writer's audience. Today there is still little interest in Taylor and his prolific playwrighting career.

SELECT PLAYS: Diogenes and His Lantern (1849); Philosopher's Stone (1850); The Vicar of Wakefield (1850); Masks and Faces (1852); Uncle Tom's Cabin (1852); The King's Rival (1854); Two Loves and a Life (1854); Still Waters Run Deep (1855); The Contested Election (1859); The Overland Route (1860); A Tale of Two Cities (1860); Our American Cousin (1861); The Ticket-of-Leave Man (1863); New Men and Old Acres (1869); Joan of Arc (1871); Anne Boleyn (1876)

FURTHER READING

- Granville-Barker, Harley, ed. The Eighteen-Seventies. Great Neck, N.Y.: Core Collection Bks., 1978.
- Moses, Montrose, ed. Representative British Dramas: Victorian and Modern. Boston: Little, Brown, 1925.
- Turner, Paul. Victorian Poetry, Drama, and Miscellaneous Prose, 1832–1890. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1990.

Chad Lawrence McLane

TEATRO ABIERTO See OPEN THEATERTEATRO BUFO See BUFO THEATERTEATRO DE ARENA DE SÃO PAULO See ARENA THEATER OF SÃO PAULOTENDULKAR, VIJAY (1928–)

As a writer I feel fascinated by the violent exploiter-exploited relationship, and [I] obsessively delve deep in to it instead of taking a position against it. That takes me to a point where I feel that this relationship is eternal, a fact of life however cruel, and will never end.

—Vijay Tendulkar, 1992

Vijay Dhondopant Tendulkar is one of the founders of modern Marathi and Indian theater. He has also been an accomplished journalist, novelist, translator, and filmscript and short-story writer. He has twenty-eight plays, twenty-four one-act plays, eleven children's plays, seventeen filmscripts, one novel and many short stories, and several translated plays to his credit. He wrote his first short story at the age of six and his first play at the age of eleven. He was born on January 7, 1928, in a lower-middle-class family in Mumbai Maharashtra, INDIA; his formal education came to an end when he joined the Quit India movement and left school in answer to Mahatma Gandhi's call to boycott schools.

Tendulkar's plays signified a break from three dominant traditions of the then-contemporary Marathi theater: Sangeet Rangabhumi (a music-drama popular from 1890 to 1930 based on mythological and folk stories in which classical, semi-classical, and folk music is blended with acting), the politically motivated Indian People's Theatre Association (IPTA) theater, and the commercial popular drawing-room drama. His plays deal mainly with unequal power relations between people and the violence dished out to the powerless by the powerful. Tendulkar's early plays, The Householder (Grihastha, 1955), An Island Called Man (Manus Nawache Bet, 1958), I Won, I Lost (Mi Jinklo, Mi Harlo, 1963), and Crows' School (Kavlyanchi Shala, 1963), deal with the alienation of sensitive lower-middle-class individuals in an increasingly urbanized and industrialized society. At the same time he was experimenting with humorous satirical political plays such as Encounter in Umbugland (Dambadweepcha Mukabla, 1968).

However, his first major play, Silence! The Court Is in Session (Shantata! Court Chalu Ahe, 1968), sent shock waves in Marathi society. The play takes the form of a mock trial in which an unmarried schoolteacher is persecuted by her middle-class friends and colleagues because she has dared to assert her individualism and challenge the moral dictates of a patriarchal society by getting pregnant before marriage. The play attacks hypocritical patriarchal attitudes toward women that glorify motherhood only when it carries the stamp of male "legitimacy," and it exposes the double standards of a rigid community. Moreover, the play dramatizes the hierarchy of power in the institution of family, and the fierce psychological violence that people are capable of.

With his next play, SAKHARAM BINDER (1972), Tendulkar challenges the superiority of Brahmin males and the sexual and moral codes of the middle class. In fact, Tendulkar challenged conventional wisdom so much that the play was banned by the Censor Board (a remnant of the Dramatic Performances Act of 1876, which empowered the government to prohibit dramatic performances that were "scandalous, defamatory, seditious, obscene or otherwise prejudicial to the public interest"). Sakharam is a crude, violent, yet honest Brahmin who eschews traditional marriage in favor of contractual cohabitation with a single woman who agrees to be sexually, morally, and ethically subservient in exchange for food, clothing, and shelter: a replica of traditional marriage shorn of its romantic trappings. The play reveals the institution of marriage as a form of sexual, moral, and religious depravity.

With GHASHIRAM KOTWAL (1972), the most provocative and innovative theater text of its time, Tendulkar scaled new heights of creativity and controversy. Ghashiram presents a unique blend of history, politics, and myth. Tendulkar integrates a gruesome story of political intrigue with popular entertainment, music, and dance.

The Vultures (Gidhade, 1974, which was originally written before Silence!), is a departure from the NATURALISM of Silence! It shows the violent disintegration of an urban family as one defenseless woman and her equally defenseless illegitimate brother-in-law struggle against a pack of middle-class vultures in their unending quest for power and property. The Vultures exposes the violence, avarice, and sexual degradation of the middle class and evoked strong reactions not only among more conventional theatergoers, but from the Censor Board.

Tendulkar's later plays explored the same themes in different domains. Kamala (1981) was based on a real-life media story in which a journalist actually bought a village girl from a flesh market and presented her at a press conference. Written in a naturalistic mode, the play presents the story of journalist Jaising Jadhav, outwardly committed to humanistic values, but inwardly committed to market values of sales, advertising, self-promotion, and profiteering. He buys a tribal woman in a sale and presents her in a press conference to expose the vacuity of the government's claims to egalitarian policies and development of underprivileged people, especially women. Of course, his real intention is to get a promotion; he does not care what will happen to the woman. Kamala exposes the ruthless power politics of the media and journalism's exploitation, violence, and complete indifference to the suffering of others, but it also demonstrates how a woman is treated as an object of possession, sale, enjoyment, and domestic comfort.

A Friend's Story (Mitrachi Goshta, 1982) is the first play on an Indian stage to explore issues encountered by lesbian women. It presents the sensitive story of a lesbian girl and her relationship to the girl she loves and the boy who is her friend. The play has evoked intense reactions from people for whom the subject is taboo, and from feminists who believe that Tendulkar has projected a stereotypical image of lesbians.

Tendulkar's most recent significant play is Gift of a Daughter (Kanyadaan, 1983), in which he exposes the romantic myths of intercaste marriage in a caste-ridden society. In Gift of a Daughter an upper-caste Brahmin girl from a so-called progressive family marries a young Dalit man, only to discover that there is a world of difference between them. The marriage becomes a battleground of caste ideologies, and the girl suffers terrible violence, as if to atone for violence done to the Dalits. This play dramatizes the intellectual confusion of a casteist society.

Tendulkar's powerful characterization, his precise, economical, and intense dialogues, the extremely well-knit structure of his plays, and his formal experimentation are unique in the history of modern Indian theater. He is one of the most controversial figures of his time, and his dramatic genius has given a new direction not only to the Marathi stage but Indian theater as well.

SELECT PLAYS: The Householder (Grihastha, 1955); An Island Called Man (Manus Nawache Bet, 1958); Crows' School (Kavlyanchi Shala, 1963); I Won, I Lost (Mi Jinklo, Mi Harlo, 1963); Encounter in Umbugland (Dambadweepcha Mukabla, 1968); Silence! The Court is in Session (Shantata! Court Chalu Ahe, 1968); Ghashiram Kotwal (1972); Sakharam Binder (1972); The Vultures (Gidhade, 1974); Kamala (1981); A Friend's Story (Mitrachi Goshta, 1982); Gift of a Daughter (Kanyadaan, 1983)

FURTHER READING

Gokhale, Shanta. Playwright at the Centre: Marathi Drama from 1843 to the Present. Calcutta: Seagull, 2000.

Tendulkar, Vijay. Collected Plays in Translation. New Delhi: Oxford Univ. Press, 2003.

———. Ghashiram Kotwal. Tr. by Jayant Karve and Eleanor Zelliot. Calcutta: Seagull, 2002.

———. Vijay Tendulkar. New Delhi: Katha, 2001.

Maya Pandit

TERAYAMA SHŪJI (1935–1983)

A Japanese experimental playwright, poet, director, filmmaker, photographer, novelist, memoirist, and cultural critic, Terayama Shūji has been called by many scholars the most significant Japanese dramatist and poet of his generation.

His influences included the Comte de Lautréamont, Georges Bataille, ANTONIN ARTAUD, and IZUMI KYŌKA. Though he died at forty-seven, Terayama produced at least forty-six plays, nineteen films, ten radio dramas, four teleplays, and a yearlong pseudodocumentary radio series. He and his troupe the Peanut Gallery (Tenjō Sajiki, inspired by Marcel Carné's film Children of Paradise, where "paradise" refers to the cheapest balcony seats) garnered prestigious film and theater awards. Nevertheless, he was accused of creating pornography (Directions to Servants [Nuhikun, 1979]), advocating student rebellion (book, play, and film Throw Away Your Books, Go Out Into the Streets [Sho-o suteyō, machi e deyō, 1967]), and inciting children to murder adults (radio play Adult Hunting [Otona-gari, 1960] and film The Emperor Tomato Catsup [Tomato kechappu kōtei, 1970]).

Terayama's style is theatricalist and antirealistic. Early works, THE HUNCHBACK OF AOMORI (Aomori-ken no semushi otoko, 1967), Inugami: The Dog God (Inugami, 1969), and the film Cache-Cache Pastoral (Den'en ni shisu, 1974), are surreal, poetic, nostalgic, often cruel evocations of childhood in remote, northeastern Aomori. Semiautobiographical elements include rural superstitions, shamanism, mystical Buddhist rituals, blind female mediums, itinerant circus performers, abandoned children, his father's death in World War II, and, most important, his love-hate relationship with his possessive, seductive mother. Images of mother-son incest and matricide abound.

Although not overtly political, Terayama's works display ambivalence toward American dominance and JAPAN's loss of national identity after World War II. His first play, Blood Is Standing Asleep (Chi wa tatta mama nemutte iru, 1960), features a gang of teenage anarchists, JAZZ, suicide, and rape-turned-to-love. The Hunchback of Aomori transforms the tale of Oedipus into a metaphor for Japan's cultural rape by America. La Marie-Vison (Kegawa no Marī, 1967; revised 1970), a bizarre COMEDY about a male transvestite "mother" obsessed with Hollywood, blasphemes Christianity. We're All Riding on a Circus Elephant (Jidai wa sākusu no zō ni notte, 1969) lampoons American cultural icons, movies, and sports while warning against a headlong race toward worldwide catastrophe.

Heretics (Jashūmon, 1971) depicts toxic, incestuous families featuring helpless sons, suffocating mothers, hypocritical virgins, and seductive, castrating, even murderous prostitutes. Characters from Japanese folktales or popular culture fruitlessly seek meaning and identity. At the conclusion the actors break out of character, destroy the set, and exhort the audience to transform reality with imagination. In Heretics and other plays (The Crime of Dr. Galigari [Garigari hakase no hanzai, 1969]; The Origin of the Blood of a Certain Family [Aru kazoku no chi no kigen, 1973]; A Journal of the Plague Year [Ekibyō ryūkōki, 1975]); terrified audience members were plunged into total darkness, forcibly separated into tiny, curtained rooms, or carried off to become slaves on stage. In Europe Heretics caused hysteria, fistfights, and police intervention.

By the mid-1970s Terayama had rejected lyrical poetry and written scripts. He created citywide "town dramas" featuring chance encounters, improvisation, and spectacles such as burning airplanes (Man-Powered Plane Solomon [Jinriki hikōki Soromon, 1970]; Knock [Nokku], co-written with KISHIDA RIO, 1975). His book The Labyrinth and the Dead Sea: My Theatre (Meiro to Shikai: Waga engeki, 1976) justified his artistic tactics.

[See also Shingeki]

SELECT PLAYS: Blood Is Standing Asleep (Chi wa tatta mama nemutte iru, 1960); The Crime of Miss Patty Oyama (Ōyama Debuko no hanzai, 1967); The Hunchback of Aomori (Aomori-ken no semushi otoko, 1967); La Marie-Vison (Kegawa no Marī, also known as Mink Marie or Maria in Furs, 1967); Throw Away Your Books, Go Out Into the Streets (Sho-o suteyō, machi e deyō, 1967); The Crime of Dr. Galigari (Garigari hakase no hanzai, 1969); Inugami: The Dog God (Inugami, 1969); We're All Riding on a Circus Elephant (Jidai wa sākusu no zō ni notte, 1969); Man-Powered Plane Solomon (Jinriki hikōki Soromon, 1970); Heretics (Jashūmon, 1971); Run, Melos (Hashire Merosu, 1971); Opium War (Ahen sensō, 1972); Blind Man's Letter (Mōjin shokan, 1973); The Origin of the Blood of a Certain Family (Aru kazoku no chi no kigen, 1973); A Journal of the Plague Year (Ekibyō ryūkōki, 1975); Knock (Nokku, co-written with Kishida Rio, 1975); Shintokumaru: Poison Boy (Shintokumaru, co-written with Kishida Rio, 1978); Bluebeard's Castle (Aohigekō no shiro, 1979); Directions to Servants (Nuhikun, 1979); Lemmings (Remingu, 1979; variant version, 1982); One Hundred Years of Solitude (Hyakumen no kodoku, 1981)

FURTHER READING

- Rolf, Robert T., and John K. Gillespie, trs. and eds. Alternative Japanese Drama: Ten Plays. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1992.
- Senda, Akihiko. The Voyage of Contemporary Japanese Theatre. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1997.
- Sorgenfrei, Carol Fisher. Unspeakable Acts: The Avant-Garde Theatre of Terayama Shūji and Postwar Japan. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 2005.
- Terayama Shūji. Inugami: The Dog God. Tr. by Carol Fisher Sorgenfrei. Asian Theatre Journal 11, no. 2 (1994): 163–190.
- . La Marie-Vison [Kegawa no Mari]. Tr. by Carol Fisher Sorgenfrei. In Half a Century of Japanese Theatre, vol. 6, ed. by Japan Playwrights Association. Tokyo: Kinokuniya, 2004.
- . Terayama Shūji no gikyoku [Collected plays of Terayama Shūji]. 9 vols. Tokyo: Shichōsha, 1969–1987.

Carol Fisher Sorgenfrei

THE TERRIBLE BUT UNFINISHED STORY OF NORODOM SIHANOUK, KING OF CAMBODIA

When The Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom Sihanouk, King of Cambodia (L'histoire terrible mais inachevée de Norodom sihanouk, roi du Cambodge) opened in September 1985 after months of preparation, HÉLÈNE CIXOUS's two-part, eight-hour epic was the first wholly new play (not an adaptation) by a single author the Théâtre du Soleil had done since its arrival at the Cartoucherie fifteen years earlier. Cixous, who taught William Shakespeare at the University of Paris, had already helped ARISTANE MNOUCHKINE's troupe with its Asian-influenced Shakespeare cycle. Now she applied the same dramaturgical tools to a gory chapter of modern history. The hero of the play, following in the footsteps of Shakespeare's Richard II and Prince Hal, was Norodom Sihanouk, whose career as prince, king, and political leader in and out of exile traces CAMBODIA's fortunes and misfortunes from 1955 to 1979. Extensive research underlay every aspect of the production. The program contained six folio pages of notes and chronology in addition to the credits: twenty-four actors playing forty-four named characters, over seventy parts in all.

The first part is stately and diplomatic, though livened by the ghost of Sihanouk's father dressed as a temple deity. The second half chillingly recounts the horrors of the American bombing, the Khmer Rouge regime, and Cambodia's occupation by the Vietnamese. Each four-hour evening was broken by a Cambodian-style meal served in the Cartoucherie's lobby, redecorated with a giant map of Southeast Asia. The people of Cambodia seemed to be watching the action: 640 figurines surrounded the playing area, dressed as soldiers, monks, and peasants. Among the more than 100 musical instruments played by music director Jean-Jacques Lemetre and his assistant, Pierre Launay, was a special electroacoustic instrument called the "percophone" designed to imitate the whine of a jet engine or the percussive sound of helicopter blades. Georges Bigot, as Sihanouk, soliloquized like a Cambodian Hamlet. To drive the point home, Cixous included explicit references to Shakespeare in the text. When Sihanouk and his minister, Penn Nouth, are gazing at the stars, Penn Nouth asks, "Which star is William Shakespeare, my Lord?" Later, when the pair is under house arrest by the Khmer Rouge, they play Hamlet's game of "very like a whale" (in English), with Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan unwittingly taking Polonius's part. The two men use Hamlet's jibes to covertly affirm their intellectual independence in the face of Khmer Rouge lies about the suffering they see around them. Fervently idealistic and relentlessly self-controlling, the Khmer Rouge are smiling and affable, forever willing to break flesh on the wheel of ideology and swear that they are doing it out of love.

Cixous summarizes the five-year nightmare of their regime by showing two peasant women huddled over a candle rehearsing the Marxist slogans they will be required to recite at the next "political education meeting"—no guns, no barbed wire, just naked terror. The immense scale of the piece permitted interesting actor doubling. Andrés Pérez Araya's Zhou En Lai seemed to be an older and wiser version of the same actor's Khieu Samphan. Serge Poncelet brought contrasting styles of malevolence to the roles of Henry Kissinger and Pol Pot. Bigot's Sihanouk presented a complex mixture of vanity, insouciant humor, and outraged humanity. The play received productions in Germany in 1990 and North America in 2001.

[See also France]

FURTHER READING

- Barret, Gisele, et al. "Hélène Cixous: Théâtre du Soleil." Jeu (Montreal) 39 (1986): 131–153. [Interview.]
- Cixous, Hélène. The Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom Sihanouk, King of Cambodia. Tr. by Juliet Flower MacCannell, Judith Pike, and Lollie Groth. European Women Writers Series. Lincoln: Univ. of Nebraska Press, 1994.
- Hotte, Véronique. "Une Témérité tremblante." Théâtre/Public 68 (March–April 1986): 22–25. [Interview.]
- Shawcross, William. Sideshow: Kissinger, Nixon and the Destruction of Cambodia. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1979. [Source used by Cixous and Mnouchkine.]
- Williams, David. "The Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom Sihanouk, King of Cambodia." Drama Review 40, no. 3: 198–200. [Review.]

Robert Schneider

TERRY, MEGAN (1932–)

It's worth it to make a life in art. I want to tell everybody it's possible and it's worth it. I've lived long enough now to see what happens to people who don't follow their hearts.

—Megan Terry, 1987

Because many of her plays highlight women's experiences, Megan Terry has been referred to as the mother of feminist theater. In Approaching Simone (Obie Award, 1970) and Mollie Bailey's Traveling Family Circus (1983) she presents resilient women who refuse to be bound by the restrictions of their societies. Yet Terry does not see herself as the feminist movement's spokeswoman and instead defines herself as a humanist who uses the theater as "a terrific catalyst" for sparking discussions of critical issues that shape human existence.

Born Marguerite Duffy on July 22, 1932, in Seattle, Washington, Terry became enamored of the theater at an early age, became part of the Seattle Repertory, and was taught acting and stagecraft by Florence and Burton James. Terry credits the way she constructs her plays to her early interest in design and her discovery of the concepts of Edward Gordon Craig and Adolphe Appia. She attributes her view of theater as a political space to the Jameses' involvement in the Progressive Party.

By the time she moved to New York in 1956, she had become Megan Terry, the playwright. Her first New York production, Ex-Miss Copper Queen on a Set of Pills (1963), was presented by the Playwrights' Unit at the Cherry Lane Theatre. Director Joseph Chaikin and critic Michael Smith, who attended the premiere, were impressed by Terry's work and asked her if she would be interested in becoming part of a group conceived as an alternative to commercial theater. She agreed, and the Open Theatre was established.

Terry's association with Chaikin and the Open Theatre was instrumental in the development of her signature style—transformations—which evolved from an improvisation exercise and involves rapid changes of identity, place, and emotion. While this technique was important to the Open Theatre's goal of creating an alternative to psychological-realist conventions and circumventing typecasting, it was particularly useful to Terry. She departed from the structures of dramas of the 1950s, allowing spectators to supply their own meanings to what they were viewing. She also provided actors with opportunities to explore numerous characters, styles, and interactions, which included examining the idea of fixed IDENTITIES and gender roles.

By the mid-1960s Terry had created a substantial body of work that not only included her transformation plays—Eat at Joe's (1964), Calm Down Mother (1965), Keep Tightly Closed in a Cool Dry Place (1965), Comings and Goings (1966), Viet Rock (1966), and Babes in the Bighouse (1974)—but also more conventional realistic dramas such as the original version of Hothouse (1953–1958). However, it was not until the success of Viet Rock, presented by the Open Theatre at Café La Mama, that Terry gained prominence. Developed in a six-month workshop where the actors and playwright worked through the conflicts surrounding the highly contested Vietnam War, Viet Rock evolved into the first rock musical.

In 1973, after co-writing the Open Theatre's Nightwalk with SAM SHEPARD and Jean-Claude van Itallie, Terry moved to Nebraska to become playwright-in-residence at the Omaha Magic Theater (OMT). In addition to Babes in the Bighouse (1974), a critique of oppressed/oppressor relationships in a women's prison, her association with OMT produced American King's English for Queens (1978), an exploration of violence through language; and Goona Goona (1979), an examination of domestic violence, among numerous other plays for the stage and television. Her commitment to experimenting with new forms to explore crucial social issues has never diminished.

[See also Feminist Drama in the United States; United States]

SELECT PLAYS: Ex-Miss Copper Queen on a Set of Pills (1963); Eat at Joe's (1964); Calm Down Mother (1965); Keep Tightly Closed in a Cool Dry Place (1965); The Gloaming, Oh My Darling (1966); Viet Rock: A Folk War Movie (1966); The People vs. Ranchman (1967); Approaching Simone (1970); Babes in the Bighouse (1974); Hothouse (1974); Goona Goona (1979); Mollie Bailey's Traveling Family Circus, Featuring Scenes from the Life of Mother Jones (music by Jo Anne Metcalf, 1983); Do You See What I'm Saying? (1990); Breakfast Serial (1991); Sound Fields (1992)

FURTHER READING

- Betsko, Kathleen, and Rachel Koenig. Interviews with Contemporary Women Playwrights. New York: Beech Tree Bks., 1987.
- Breslauer, Jan, and Helene Keyssar. "Making Magic Public: Megan Terry's Traveling Family Circus." In Making a Spectacle: Feminist Essays on Contemporary Women's Theatre, ed. by Lynda Hart. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1989.
- Keyssar, Helene. Feminist Theatre: An Introduction to Plays of Contemporary British and American Women. New York: Grove, 1985.
- Marranca, Bonnie, and Gautam Dasgupta, eds. American Playwrights: A Critical Survey. New York: Drama Book Specialists, 1981.
- Savran, David, ed. In Their Own Words: Contemporary American Playwrights. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1988.
- Schlueter, June. "Megan Terry's Transformation Drama: Keep Tightly Closed in a Cool Dry Place and the Possibilities of Self." In Modern American Drama: The Female Canon, ed. by June Schlueter. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1990.

Meghan Duffy

TESICH, STEVE (1943–1996)

Born Stoyan Tesich on September 29, 1943, in Titovo Uszice, Yugoslavia, present-day SERBIA, playwright Steve Tesich immigrated to East Chicago, Indiana, with his family in 1957, at the age of fourteen, speaking no English. In 1965 he graduated from Indiana University, having majored in Russian literature, and he began to write for the theater during his graduate studies at Columbia University. In 1979 he turned to screenwriting, winning an Oscar for his first effort, Breaking Away. Between 1981 and 1986 he produced five more screenplays: Eyewitness, Four Friends, The World According to Garp, American Flyers, and Eleni. After Eleni Tesich returned to writing for the theater. He also wrote two novels, Summer Crossing (1982) and the posthumously published Karoo (1998), a COMEDY about the film industry.

Tesich, who became a U.S. citizen in 1961 at the age of eighteen, began his career writing loving comedies about the social concerns of his adopted nation. Division Street (1980) typifies the mood of Tesich's early work: in his own words, "allegro con sentimento." Set in an immigrant Chicago neighborhood, Division Street is populated by a motley crew from the margins of American society. The characters are in flight from former lives whose loss, paradoxically, they mourn: Chris, an ex-civil rights activist, dodges the painful consciousness of his lost idealism. His landlady, Mrs. Bruchinski, "a Black woman with a Polish accent," is in perpetual mourning both for the mysterious disappearance of her infant son many years earlier and for the mysterious passing of 1960s radicalism. Betty, a policewoman, had been a 1960s radical known as "Bomber Kellogg." Yovan, a Serbian émigré, prints menus "on mimeo machine" by day, but at night produces a one-man newspaper called Serbian Sun. "I write powerful stuff," he says: "I write, America, wake up. People need you. My friends. They give up. They go back to the old country. So I write: fooey on you, you chupped liver patriots. . . . Stuff like that I write. Leaflets too." Tesich's flair for satire notwithstanding, Division Street is a paean to hope, and all is resolved in a comedic happy end: brothers find sisters, lovers are united, Mrs. Bruchinski's lost baby boy proves to be policewoman Betty, a new movement is born, and the entire cast, "the lost tribe of the American Dream," comes together in a rousing chorus of "America the Beautiful."

With the passage of time, Tesich's plays took on a darker hue. World events of the early 1990s and U.S. involvement in them—the civil war in Yugoslavia, the 1991 American invasion of Iraq—precipitated a political and spiritual crisis for Tesich, and such later works as The Speed of Darkness (1989) and On the Open Road (1992) are darkly comic meditations on war, morality, and spirituality. His Beckettian On the Open Road is set in "a time of Civil War" in "a place of Civil War"; it begins with the looting of unspecified cultural artifacts and ends with the crucifixion of the thieves.

In the early 1990s Tesich wrote a series of articles that criticized the Gulf War and exposed what he believed to be a campaign of deliberate misrepresentation of the political realities of the Balkans and the "selective condemnation" of the Serbs. He was particularly concerned with the role of public relations firms in manipulating public opinion. His articles remained unpublished, circulated on the Internet by his sister, Nadja Tesich. Steve Tesich died in Sydney, Nova Scotia, on July 1, 1996, of a heart attack at the age of fifty-two.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

PLAYS: The Carpenters (1970); Lake of the Woods (1971); Baba Goya (1973); Gorky (1975); Passing Game (1977); Touching Bottom (The Road, A Life, Baptismal) (1978); Division Street (1980); The Speed of Darkness (1989); Square One (1990); On the Open Road (1992); Arts and Leisure (published posthumously, 1997)

FURTHER READING

- Coen, Stephanie. "Steve Tesich." American Theatre, 9, no. 4 (July 1992): 26.
- Horton, Andrew. "An Interview with Steve Tesich." New Orleans Review 11, nos. 3–4 (Fall–Winter 1984): 80–87.
- Ringnald, Don. "The Theatre of Doing It Wrong, Getting It Right." In Fighting and Writing the Vietnam War. Jackson: Univ. Press of Mississippi, 1994.

Kathryn Syssoyeva

THAILAND

Thailand is a Southeast Asian Buddhist country with a long and strong theater tradition. The origin of the Thai people is not clear, but their movement into Southeast Asia, where they took power from the Mon and Khmer by the 15th century, is documented. The major historical periods are named after the royal capitals Sukhothai (1238–1350), Ayudhya (1350–1767), and Ratnakosin (1782–present).

The earliest known drama in Thailand, manora, originated in the 14th century and has been practiced to the present. A performance includes a musical prelude, an opening incantation, solo dances, songs, skits, and finally a play. Today manora has become intermixed with lakon jatri (jatri, sorcerer), a form named for troupe heads who were felt to have great spiritual power. Both genres have been transformed: singers in Western costume croon romantic lyrics to Western band accompaniment, and skits and comic routines abound. Another interrelated form is lakon nok, literally "outside-the-palace play," which was an all-male dance-drama until the mid-19th century, when women began appearing in female roles. It remains popular, and performances may be held for cremations or at events such as the king's birthday. The Ramakien, the Thai version of the Hindu Ramayana, or legendary stories are presented in this form.

Other popular forms are the nang talung (small-puppet theater), which originally was based on Ramayana stories, but now tells a variety of tales, and likay, an improvised genre developed about 100 years ago that is a popular presentation of stories of princes and princesses in melodramatic style in which the dialogue is improvised. Song and dance skills are a prerequisite for performers. Spectacular costumes, especially of the male lead, and elaborate stage effects help reinforce the continuing popularity of this form. The dazzling artists, beautifully made up and clothed in sequins, silk, and glittering stones, light up the night on open-air stages. Singing and talent in melodramatic improvisation are crucial for successful performers. Another popular theater form is mawlum luang, found in northeast Thailand. It uses local dialect. Music traditionally is provided by a panpipe or kaen. Today modern amplification, Western instruments, and pop music are popular innovations in Lao areas.

Court performance included nang yai (large leather puppets), khon (all-male masked dance-drama), and lakon nai (all female dance-drama, or inside-the-palace performance). Today nang yai is maintained at temples such as Wat Khanon in Ratchaburi Province, and khon and lakon are performed regularly by the national theaters and by university groups. Many innovations in court performance occurred in the 19th and 20th centuries.

After the reign of Rama IV, King Mongkut (1851–1868), strict division of the sexes in theater forms ended. Males were allowed to dance with the ladies (traditionally spouses of the monarch), and female dancers were allowed to perform on public stages. A new type of puppetry began in the same period. Performances of classical plays were begun with three-dimensional puppets called hun, an innovation of the late 1800s. Today hun lakon lek is presented by the Joe Louis Puppet Theatre, a troupe that performs nightly in Bangkok's Suan Lum Night Market for tourist audiences. The group is made up of family members of Sakorn Yangkiosod, also known as Joe Louis (1923–), who carries on the tradition developed by the troupe of Krae Suppanawich.

Royalty were the major authors of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Lakon dukdamban was an innovation of the RAMA V (King Chulalongkorn) period (1868–1910) in which actors delivered their own lines rather than relying on a sung chorus or improvisation. The use of proscenium stages and scenic devices made lakon dukdamban a popular form. Rama V is also the author of important plays such as Ngo Pa (1906) that depicted commoners and ethnic minorities. His work broke new theatrical ground, bringing greater REALISM to the theater, and he is credited with the first spoken drama (lakon phud) where text prevails over music and dance. His work set the course for 20th-century writing, and his signature work, Ngo Pa, is presented annually on the anniversary of his death.

Another genre developed in the 19th century was lakon phantang ("thousand-ways theater," or mixed-genre experiments), which combines local legends from the sebha, a rhymed storytelling tradition, with classical dance presentation. Prince Naradhip developed lakon rong, an all-female opera from the 19th century. He adapted plots from English musicals to Thai dance-style performance.

Rama VI (King Vajiravudh), who reigned from 1911 to 1925, wrote texts for many lakon phud. Schooled in ENGLAND, he wrote spoken dramas based on Western models and built a Western-style theater in his residence. Selected plays by him are presented annually at the Vajiravudh Center. He also wrote many plays for various types of traditional theater.

Spoken drama (lakon phud) is taught and produced today in universities such as Chulalongkorn and Thammasat and by amateur groups. Playwrights usually support themselves by other professions, including television and advertising. Performances usually run for only a few weeks. SOMPOP CHANDRAPRABHA (1919–1987), author of many stage and television plays, was a soil engineer who rose to prominence after World War II with his historical dramas, costumed in period style. In the 1970 and 1980s the highest production values were found in the Montien-thong Theatre in the Montien Hotel in Bangkok. This group's performers generally earn their living doing television drama and in Thai-language films.

During the 1980s productions by this foremost spoken-drama troupe tended toward social satire. Lady Amarapa (Khunying Amarapa) by Satit Chaimano and Apidol Wangthawisap in 1986 showed a social-climbing rich woman trying to buy a noble title. Puchai Naya, an adaptation of Boys in the Band by Seri Wongmontha in 1986 and 1987, was the most successful production.

At the turn of the 21st century the Patravadi Theatre in Thonburi was active in producing Thai modern drama. Graduates of the theater programs at Thammasat and Chulalongkorn produce there and in other venues. The Thai Cultural Center currently presents various modern and traditional works in its large and small theaters. The National Theatre specializes in traditional theater performance. The Bangkok Theatre Festival, founded in 2002, is an annual celebration of performance in which young artists in theater, dance, and puppetry come together each November to celebrate the vibrant theater arts of Thailand today.

FURTHER READING

- Chandavij, Natthapatra, and Promporn Pramualratana. Thai Puppets and Khon Masks. Bangkok: River Bks., 1998.
- Foley, Kathy. "Thailand." In The Cambridge Guide to Asian Theatre, ed. by James Brandon. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1993.
- Rutnin, Mattani. Dance, Drama, and Theatre in Thailand: The Process of Development and Modernization. Chiang Mai: Silkworm Bks., 1996.
- . ed. The Siamese Theatre. Bangkok: Siam Society, 1975.
- Virulrak, Surapone. The Evolution of Thai Performing Arts in the Bangkok Period, 1782–1934 (in Thai). Bangkok: Chulalongkorn Univ. Press, 2000.
- . "Theatre in Thailand Today." Asian Theatre Journal 7, no. 1 (1990): 95–105.
- Wenk, Klaus. Thai Literature: An Introduction. Bangkok: White Lotus, 1995.
- Yupho, Danhit. The Khon and Lakon: Dance Dramas Presented by the Department of Fine Arts. Bangkok: Dept. of Fine Arts, 1963.

Surapone Virulrak

THEATER OF THE ABSURD See ABSURDISM

THEATER OF THE GROTESQUE

The Theater of the Grotesque was born on May 29, 1916, the date of the premiere of The Mask and the Face by LUIGI CHIARELLI (1880–1947), subtitled A Grotesque in Three Acts. The other writers in the style were Luigi Antonelli (1882–1942), Enrico Cavacchioli (1885–1954), and Rosso di San Secondo (1887–1956), although LUIGI PIRANDELLO (1867–1936), with plays such as RIGHT YOU ARE (If You Think So!), can take his place, at least temporarily, alongside them.

The season of grotesque theater was brief, if intense. It was the only school of playwrights ITALY has produced, and the fact that the moving spirits were writers was already a revolution in a national theater traditionally dominated by actors. There was little agreement, then or now, over what exactly the essence of the grotesque was. Unlike their more revolutionary contemporaries, the futurists, grotesque writers did not issue manifestos, but some traits and beliefs can be identified. Their most evident shared feature was the negative one of a contemptuous dismissal of all that goes under the name of “bourgeois theater,” but since that too is a nebulous concept, it scarcely aids clarity. None, again unlike the futurists, had any interest in experimenting with new forms, but all used the standard three-act format to ridicule or satirize conventional beliefs, and all showed some interest, common enough at the time, in the aesthetics of puppet theater. Perhaps their most important innovation was the merging of the previously rigorously separate categories of COMEDY and TRAGEDY, and in this they were undoubtedly precursors of a common trend in 20th-century theater. Finally, they were intrigued by the clash between the mask, the expectations imposed by society, and the face, that is, the spontaneous urge that was part of personality. This clash is central to Pirandello's theater.

Writers of grotesque theater were obsessed by the same themes as the despised bourgeois writers—adultery, conjugal infidelity, and the eternal triangle of husband, wife, and lover—but they reversed the conventional outcome. In Chiarelli's seminal play Paolo brags that of course as a husband he would kill his wife if she were unfaithful, but when the infidelity is proven, he cannot bring himself to do the deed and resorts to the desperate expedient of faking her death and having himself put on trial for murder. The mask of ferocious but respectable machismo conflicts with the face of meek devotion to a wife he still loves. Rosso di San Secondo attempted to forge poetic theater from grotesque material in Marionettes, What Passion!, while Antonelli introduced fantasy into the treatment of the adultery theme in The Man Who Met Himself. Luciano believes himself uxoriously happy until, after a disaster, his wife is found dead in the arms of her lover. He is transported to an enchanted island where humans can meet their younger selves, but finds that the youthful Luciano spurns the wise counsel of the older self. The refrain is that there is no escaping destiny.

The problem for the grotesque writers themselves was that they had set off in search of a brave new theatrical world, but while they had identified the wrong path, they had not the boldness, or talent, to cut a wholly new path of their own. By the mid-1920s grotesque theater had vanished from the scene.

[See also Futurism, Italian]

FURTHER READING

Angelini, Franca. Il teatro del Novecento da Pirandello a Fo. Bari: Laterza, 1990.

Ferrante, Luigi. Teatro italiano grottesco. Bologna: Cappelli, 1964.

Livio, Gigi, ed. Teatro grottesco del Novecento. Milan: Mursia, 1965.

Pullini, Giorgio. Teatro italiano del Novecento. Bologna: Cappelli, 1971.

Joseph Farrell

THEATER OF THE OPPRESSED See BOAL, AUGUSTO

THEATER OF URGENCY

At the turn of the 20th century Spanish theater needed urgent reinvigoration. While experimental theater was flourishing in Europe, the Spanish urban bourgeoisie favored popular entertainments such as light opera and cabaret. In the early 1930s Luis Araquistain (La batalla teatral [The theatrical battle], 1930) and Ramón J. Sender (Teatro de masas [Theatre of masses], 1931) urged a break with commercial theater and theorized current European innovations.

With the proclamation of the Second Republic, playwrights such as María Teresa León and Rafael Alberti, inspired by the “theater of urgency” that was being practiced by BERTOLT BRECHT and ERWIN PISCATOR in GERMANY's Weimar Republic, aimed for a theater that would educate the masses politically and would be a collaborative effort between authors, audiences, designers, and directors. To that effect, the Republican government subsidized theatrical projects such as the Teatro del Pueblo, a component of the Misiones Pedagógicas, and popular and university theater troupes such as La Barraca, directed by FEDERICO GARCÍA LORCA and Eduardo Ugarte, and El Búho, directed by Max Aub. They brought the theater to the masses by performing plays from the golden age (16th and 17th centuries). Other working-class amateur companies performed in casas del pueblo (town halls). Their repertory included SAINETES, juguets cómicos, and ZARZUELAS, as well as original plays and contemporary European plays created for or adapted to the social needs of the working class.

Immediately after the military rising, theaters were collectivized by the main unions, Confederación Nacional de Trabajo (CNT) and Unión General de Trabajadores (UGT). The theater of Misiones Pedagógicas and La Barraca “gave way to more radical, propagandistic theater aimed at stirring the sentiments of antifascism in the working classes. . . . The Alliance of Antifascist Intellectuals poured resources into creating ‘theaters of urgency’ and ‘guerrillas’ to inspire the soldiers at the front and the citizens at home with revolutionary doctrines” (Holguín, 2002). Rafael Alberti's manifesto “Theater of Urgency” urged writers to create short and effective plays whose simple staging could easily adapt to the war circumstances. Alberti and León headed the theatrical troupe called Nueva Escena. It performed in public squares and villages, and writers such as Alberti, Manuel Altolaguirre, José Bergamín, Rafael Dieste, and Juan Chabás provided much of the staged material. The Teatro de Arte y Propaganda, directed by María Teresa León, revived and adapted classical works that could best be adapted to the revolutionary spirit of the Republic, such as Fuenteovejuna by Lope de Vega and Numancia by Miguel de Cervantes. The troupe Guerrillas de Teatro performed its pieces on the war front and in factories in order to stir antifascist sentiments, as well as to entertain. In his essay "Theater of Circumstances" Max Aub called on writers to adapt their artistic creation to the special circumstances. Republican troupes also performed ad hoc plays that explicitly used drama to present clear messages to their audiences about how they should act in wartime (Holguín, 2002). Some of the most relevant plays of urgency written and performed during the war years include Pedro López García (1936) by Max Aub, Shepherd of Death: Drama in Four Acts (Pastor de la muerte: Drama en cuatro actos, 1937) by Miguel Hernández, and Numancia (1937) and Cantata of the Heroes and the Fraternity of the Peoples (Cantata de los héroes y la fraternidad de los pueblos, 1938) by Rafael Alberti.

[See also Spain]

FURTHER READING

- Alberti, Rafael. "Teatro de urgencia." In Literatura sobre la guerra civil: Poesía, narrativa, teatro, documentación: La expresión estética de una ideología antagonista. Suplementos de Anthropos 39 (June 1993): 109–110.
- Aub, Max. "Teatro de circunstancias." In Max Aub y la vanguardia teatral: Escritos sobre el teatro, 1928–1938, ed. by Manuel Aznar Soler. Valencia: Universidad de Valencia, 1993. 216.
- Bilbatúa, Miguel. "El teatro durante la segunda república y la guerra civil." In Literatura y Guerra Civil. Almería: Instituto de Estudios Almerienses, 1987.
- Holguín, Sandie. "Spanish Civil War: Culture on the Battlefield." In Creating Spaniards: Culture and National Identity in Republican Spain. Madison: Univ. of Wisconsin Press, 2002. 168–194.
- Preston, Paul. "Theater as Secularized Religion: Return to the Golden Age." In ¡Comrades! Portraits from the Spanish Civil War. London: Fontana Press, 1999. 79–117.

Isolina Ballesteros

THÉÂTRE DU GRAND-GUIGNOL

The Théâtre du Grand-Guignol (1897–1962), the notorious home of grisly and erotic theatrical displays, was tucked away in a former chapel at the end of an alley in the Montmartre district of Paris, FRANCE. Tourists flocked to the theater to witness the latest titillating feats of gore, accompanied primarily by middle-class women with queasy husbands in tow, as well as heads of state. The theater boosted its popularity by assuring audiences that a doctor would be on hand at every performance. Indeed, spectators fainted on an average of two per night, and countless others rushed out of the theater to vomit in the alley.

Despite its reputation for sensationalism, the Grand-Guignol traces its origins to several well-established artistic influences: NATURALISM, MELODRAMA, and the "well-made play." Oscar Méténier, a former police secretary, founded the Grand-Guignol after collaborating with ANDRÉ ANTOINE on plays he wrote for the Théâtre Libre, which he had co-founded in 1887. Méténier was drawn to the stories of the underclass, particularly those that showed the poor as victims of bourgeois morality. Méténier perfected the rosse (vicious) play, a short piece of fifteen minutes or less inspired by local crime stories in the newspaper (faits divers). Méténier's brand of naturalism was for many too hard to stomach, but it was honest in a way impossible for melodrama or the "well-made play": it presented a world of unpredictable endings.

Méténier's name for the theater derives from the popular marionette character whose name, Guignol, was also used to refer to marionette shows in general. Méténier saw his as a theater for adults, in which live actors would attack each other with a level of cruelty traditionally reserved for puppets such as Punch and Judy. He devised a structure for heightening suspense by alternating COMEDY and horror throughout an evening's program, a format he called la douche écossaise (the hot and cold shower). When Méténier passed the leadership of the Grand-Guignol on to Max Maurey in 1898, the character of the theater shifted from a forum for exploring social reality to a bona fide theater of horror.

Under Maurey, considered the true father of the Grand-Guignol, the theater departed from its roots with the Théâtre Libre. Maurey sought to purge his audience's Aristotelian feelings of pity and fear by thrilling them with displays of violence and illicit sexuality. Rape, murder, incest, and acts of madness and mutilation were regularly enacted and made convincing through the special effects of Paul Ratineau and the use of fresh animal parts, delivered daily by local butchers.

André de Lorde, known as the "Prince of Terror," began writing plays for the Grand-Guignol in 1901. His childhood fascination with death and admiration of Edgar Allan Poe prepared him for a twenty-five-year association with the theater, during which he wrote over 100 plays. The company's success was due largely to the convincing portrayals of the actors, the most celebrated of whom was Paula Maxa, who earned the title "the most assassinated woman in the world." Maxa developed a reputation for her bone-chilling scream, which caused sufficient strain in performance to cost her her voice.

In the following years, leadership of the Grand-Guignol passed through several hands, and the theater's future became less certain. Although the theater maintained its popularity even after World War I, mounting financial problems coincided with competition from cinema. Also significant in the company's decline was the fact that with universal recognition of the real-life horrors of World War II, critical and popular opinion rejected the Grand-Guignol as irrelevant and diversionary.

Although the theater's last performance was held in 1962, the influence of the Grand-Guignol extended into the German cabaret, into 20th-century dramatic theory, and far into contemporary film.

FURTHER READING

Antona-Traversi, Camillo. L'histoire du Grand Guignol. Paris: Librairie Théâtrale, 1933.

Gordon, Mel. The Grand Guignol: Theatre of Fear and Terror. Rev. ed. New York: Da Capo, 1997.

Hand, Richard J., and Michael Wilson. Grand-Guignol: The French Theatre of Horror. Exeter: Univ. of Exeter Press, 2002.

Kristin Johnsen-Neshati

THEATRE GUILD

During fifty of the 20th century's early and middle years, the Theatre Guild transformed and elevated the American theater experience. It lifted the professional production of plays from the previous stage diet of mostly box-office-driven MELODRAMA and FARCE to a landmark era in the dramatic arts and did much to shape a new American audience.

The Theatre Guild probably was inevitable in that the need for such an enterprise, along with the enthusiasms, skills, and personalities required to implement it, was at hand. In 1919, when the Guild staged its first play (Bonds of Interest, by Nobel Prize winner JACINTO BENAVENTE), others also were producing plays, notably Mare Klaw and Abraham Lincoln Erlanger and the Shubert brothers (Lee, Sam S. and Jacob J.), who were almost entirely commercial before the Guild decided to do something about artistic quality. Previous pioneers in artistic merit were the short-lived but admirable Provincetown Players and the Washington Square Players. The idea of taking plays to other American cities was not new, although doing it with original New York stars and companies became a Guild hallmark. The Guild's membership plan, selling seasons of plays to subscribers across the country, was innovative. So were the practices of bringing dramas of merit from Europe and providing a stage for America's emerging playwrights. Further, the Guild staged more plays and musicals than any other production company: 220 in fifty years. The Theatre Guild on the Air, sponsored by United States Steel Corporation (U.S. Steel), pioneered drama on the radio with a series of 316 plays. It ran from 1945 to 1953. Also for U.S. Steel, but this time on television, the Guild produced 245 plays in the ten years from 1953 to 1963.

Outweighing these achievements was the artistic impact of the Guild on the American theater as a whole. In 1944 drama critic John Gassner, Sterling Professor of Playwriting and Dramatic Literature at Yale, wrote about the Guild's "revolution against the prevailing commercialism and lack of taste in the American theater (Nadel, 1969)":

A correct estimate of the Guild's position after its first decade (1929) would have included the realization that the revolution was over. The Guild ceased to be revolutionary because its cause had triumphed. Largely as a result of the example set by the Theatre Guild, Broadway management became hospitable to plays of intellectual caliber and unconventional DRAMATURGY. It became possible to produce any kind of drama in New York. In time, the gap between a typical "Guild play" and a typical "Broadway play" became narrower, and in the case of literate and sophisticated COMEDY, often imperceptible. In the 1930s, in fact, it became customary among the young to regard the Theatre Guild as a bastion of conservatism. (qtd. in Nadel, 1969)

If there was a magical moment when the Theatre Guild began, it was on the evening of December 18, 1918, when Lawrence Langner joined Philip Moeller and Helen Westley over a bottle of wine in the basement of the Brevoort Hotel on lower Fifth Avenue in New York City. Langner, who had built miniature stage sets and produced make-believe plays as a child in his native Wales, was as dedicated to theater as he was to his livelihood career as a patent attorney in America. Westley was an actress and a graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. Moeller already was launched as a playwright and stage director. At a second meeting they were joined by Theresa Helburn, who became the Guild's play reader and later co-executive director along with Langner. Also present were stage designer Lee Simonson, a painter before he became involved in the living theater, and Maurice Wertheim, who, like Langner, followed a career outside the theater and was good at handling money. These became the six co-directors of the Guild and ran it for many years. Helburn, Simonson, and Wertheim previously had attended Professor GEORGE PIERCE BAKER'S '47 Workshop at Harvard, a breeding ground for some of the finest dramatic talent of the 20th century. The six also had been involved with or aware of the experimental Washington Square Players (1914–1918) and, around 1916, the Provincetown Players, best remembered for having introduced the dramas of the young EUGENE O'NEILL. Helburn and Langner guided the Guild for the greater part of its fifty years of play production; thereafter the organization was headed by Armina Marshall, Langner's widow, and his son, Philip Langner. In 1969 Philip took the Guild into movies with his production of Slaves and produced the last Guild play, the musical Darling of the Day, in 1969.

Names matter much in measuring the Guild's impact on American drama, not only play titles but names of playwrights, directors, actors, designers, costumers, and the others involved in selecting a script and bringing it to the stage. The Guild was not the first to produce the plays of O'Neill, but it did premiere eight of his works in succession as he wrote them: Marco Millions, STRANGE INTERLUDE, Dynamo, MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA, Ah, Wilderness!, DAYS WITHOUT END, THE ICEMAN COMETH, and A MOON FOR THE MISBEGOTTEN. The Guild helped popularize GEORGE BERNARD SHAW's plays with American audiences, staging nineteen productions of them between 1920 and 1958.

Among Guild playwrights were ELMER RICE, SIDNEY HOWARD, FRANZ WERFEL, PHILIP BARRY, MAXWELL ANDERSON, ROBERT E. SHERWOOD, S. N. BEHRMAN, THORNTON WILDER, WILLIAM SAROYAN, TERENCE RATTIGAN, TENNESSEE WILLIAMS, CHRISTOPHER FRY, SEAN O'CASEY, WILLIAM INGE, JEAN ANOUILH, PETER SHAFFER, and HAROLD PINTER. There also were works by William Shakespeare, AUGUST STRINDBERG, HENRIK IBSEN, LUIGI PIRANDELLO, Ivan Turgenev, Molière, ANTON CHEKHOV, and William Congreve. In 1943 the Guild raised the American musical to a new level with Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein's Oklahoma!, which was a box-office triumph as well. Another production that made musical history was George and Ira Gershwin and DU BOSE and DOROTHY HEYWARD's operatic PORGY AND BESS.

FURTHER READING

Krutch, Joseph Wood. The American Drama since 1918: An Informal History. New York: Random House, 1939.

Langner, Lawrence. The Magic Curtain: The Story of a Life in Two Fields, Theatre and Invention. New York: Dutton, 1951.

Nadel, Norman. A Pictorial History of the Theatre Guild. New York: Crown, 1969.

Norman Nadel

THEATRICALITY

The term theatricality appears to have entered the English language during the 19th-century when it was used, in a pejorative sense, by Thomas Carlyle to suggest the false or ephemeral: "By act and words he strives to do it; with sincerity, if possible, failing that, with theatricality" (1837) and later, in a specifically theatrical context, "I remember once taking her to Drury Lane Theatre. Of the theatricality itself that night, I can remember absolutely nothing" (1866). In ENGLAND, by the 1860s theatricality would have been defined in relation to an increasingly naturalistic norm represented by the work of someone like THOMAS WILLIAM ROBERTSON and in terms of the kind of spectacle on display at a large theater such as Drury Lane that staged popular MELODRAMA. As the theater began to turn away from a dominant NATURALISM at the turn of the 20th century, and with the accompanying rise of the role of the director, theatricality itself began to assume the status of a norm. A classic example is that of a 19th-century play, ALEKSANDR OSTROVSKY's THE FOREST, as directed by VSEVOLOD MEYERHOLD in 1924, when two conventionally realistic love scenes were conceived in a remarkably imaginative theatrical manner. The first, between young lovers, was set on a rotating swing typical of a Russian fairground (also called giant stride) where the nature of the couple's ecstasy was communicated by their ever-increasing upward trajectory; the second, between a traveling comedian and a rather plain housekeeper, was staged astride a blatantly phallic seesaw, with the postclimactic moment suggested by the contemplative cigarette-smoking comedian at the lower end and the raucously satiated housekeeper, legs akimbo, at the upper.

The origins of theatricality in our sense may be said to hark back to the Greeks. Although they would not have understood our use of the term, theatricality defined most aspects of Greek theater. Its amphitheater location may be said to have dictated its style, from the use of masks, declamatory verse speaking, raised buskins or cothurni, and a dancing and chanting chorus to the use of mechanical devices for displaying the dead and flying in the gods. The medieval stage was also characterized by an innate theatricality, whether this took the form of "simultaneous staging," or staging "in the round," or street performance on elaborately decorated processional pageant wagons. The Elizabethans inherited a good deal of their own theatricality from the medieval miracle and morality plays, nowhere more so than in a play such as Christopher Marlowe's Dr. Faustus with its devils and fireworks. The form of the open-air Elizabethan theater lent itself to heightened effects both of speech and performance. The fact that Philip Henslowe's properties list included "one city of Rome" alongside "a cauldron for the Jew" seems indicative of a power to prompt imaginative extension and seduce with startling effects. Quite different in their appeal to a changed constituency were the spectacular transformation scenes engineered in the Jacobean court masque through the deployment of vast financial resources and the importation of foreign machinery. These baroque spectacles were to dominate the European stage well into the 19th century, when they were adapted to stage melodramas that appealed to less sophisticated palates.

From the mid-19th century, a dominant middle class began to demand a form of theater that answered a need for its own manners and mores to be reflected in unproblematic theatrical terms. The naturalistic norms that this kind of theater inspired gave rise to a modern sense of "theatricality," defined as anything that challenged this kind of photographic verisimilitude. In the realms of ACTING, production, stage configuration, and illumination, the antinaturalist movement was spearheaded by the likes of Edward Gordon Craig, RICHARD WAGNER, Georg Fuchs, and Adolphe Appia. The replacement of candlelight and gaslight by electricity gave rise to all kinds of opportunities for an atmospherically enhanced theatricality, while 20th-century directors such as MAX REINHARDT, Meyerhold, and ERWIN PISCATOR substituted theatricality in place of a realism that they felt had little to do with the fundamentals of performance or production. Meyerhold and Craig were also inspired by non-European theatrical forms that represented an essential theatricality in terms of their alien traditions of acting and staging—in particular the theater of JAPAN—which also influenced the poet and dramatist W. B. YEATS. Meyerhold also looked for inspiration to popular forms such as the puppet show, pantomime, and harlequinade, as well as to nonstandard locations such as fairground and circus, while his biomechanical theories were predicated on physically demonstrative acting principles hostile to psychological REALISM.

Other European practitioners who found inspiration in the East were theorists such as ANTONIN ARTAUD, influenced by Balinese theater, whose notion of a Theatre of Cruelty was a far cry from the European norms of realistic representation espoused by the likes of KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY, whose early work at the MOSCOW ART THEATRE tended to emphasize the values and methods of an essentially naturalistic approach to the stage. Dramatists such as AUGUST STRINDBERG (in his late plays), ALFRED JARRY, and others who belonged to "MODERNIST" movements such as SYMBOLISM, SURREALISM, and EXPRESSIONISM tended to embrace theatricality through a desire to contest bourgeois expectations and create a heightened stage world in which the intensities of dream states and the overtly grotesque predominated. More recently the drama of so-called absurdist such as EUGÈNE IONESCO and SAMUEL BECKETT took theatricality to be a sine qua non in asking audiences to accept a language of light, sound, and image that rendered the inanimate stage world as articulate as the animate.

Antonin Artaud's seminal work The Theatre and Its Double found expression in productions by ARIANE MNOUCHKINE that aimed to assault the senses of an audience. Peter Brook mounted a Theatre of Cruelty season and staged Artaud-influenced productions during the 1950s and 1960s that sought to destroy the barriers between the proscenium and the audience in startling and unexpected ways. His 1970s production of A Midsummer Night's Dream and his later staging of the Hindu epic the Mahabharata were also characterized by intense forms of theatrical expressiveness and the use of unorthodox settings. Brook also sought inspiration in non-Western forms of theater, whereas, in Japan, Yukio Ninagawa produced a reverse effect by marrying styles of nō, kabuki, and Bunraku with Western performance traditions and a Western repertoire in mold-breaking productions of William Shakespeare and Greek TRAGEDY.

In RUSSIA, with the rediscovery of Meyerhold's legacy after his post-Stalinist rehabilitation, the tradition of theatricality (which his compatriots Yevgeni Vakhtangov, Aleksandr Tairov, and Nikolai Okhlopkov also espoused) was taken up by YURY LYUBIMOV from the mid-1960s onwards at the Moscow Taganka Theater and in former Soviet Georgia by Robert Sturua and the Rustaveli Theater. Their productions in English of works by Fyodor Dostoevsky, Shakespeare, and ANTON CHEKHOV served to demonstrate that critical outrage could still be excited by any divergence from perceived norms and expectations. Meanwhile, in Eastern Europe the champions of theatricality tended to hail from POLAND, represented in their most extreme form by Jerzy Grotowski and Tadeusz Kantor with productions such as Akropolis and Dead Class, which derived their visceral force and powerful imagery from the Nazi death camps and a historical world composed (or decomposed) of the living dead.

In Western Europe the example of BERTOLT BRECHT as dramatist, theorist, and theater director has been preeminent. While his theory of EPIC THEATER, by laying stress on the theatrical as opposed to the illusionist, did not foreground theatricality per se, Brecht's own production of THE CAUCASIAN CHALK CIRCLE combined heightened styles of masked performance with production elements that represented the quintessence of theatricality. The literary scholar and Brecht expert, Ronald Gray, recalled the stunning effect reminiscent of Oriental theater produced by the appearance of a Georgian mountain village painted on a silken backdrop suddenly cascading against the cyclorama before billowing to a standstill. The Brecht-influenced Italian director Giorgio Strehler displayed comparable panache in his productions of THE THREEPENNY OPERA and a vibrantly physical A Servant of Two Masters realized within the conventions of his native commedia dell'arte.

In North America and CANADA the work of ROBERT WILSON and Robert Lepage embraced forms of PERFORMANCE ART where text was more often than not made subservient to striking visual effects. Both redefined the imaginative possibilities of theater through the introduction of other media that extended the boundaries of stage illusion and also redefined the role of the actor as executant and stage instrument in a manner first imagined by Gordon Craig as the "übermarionette." Experimental theater companies such as Julian Beck and Judith Malina's LIVING THEATRE, as well as the Wooster Group, also chose to stretch the limits of pure theatricality in the wake of otherwise dissimilar predecessors such as the Bread and Puppet Theater and El Teatro Campesino, which were responsible for reviving the carnivalesque tradition of outdoor performance. This last found its British exemplar in the Welfare State International troupe, while the People Show and Théâtre de Complicité collectives succeeded in refining an AVANT-GARDE theatrical poetics to rival the best of their American and European counterparts.

There have also been individual performance strategies that promoted theatricality for its own sake within otherwise conventional contexts. The example of British actor Laurence Olivier seems exemplary. Whether riding the drop curtain and descending from the flies as Mr. Puff in Sheridan's The Critic or, as Coriolanus, falling to his "death" from a raised platform from which he hung suspended by his ankles, his style was in the bravura tradition of someone like Henry Irving. Gordon Craig, writing in 1930, recalled the startling force of Irving's first entry in The Bells, with its preparatory buildup, his sudden appearance, and, especially, his delivery of the line "It is I!" in the manner of Japanese nō as a plosive "t'sI!" that "thrilled, and was intended to thrill," eliciting "a hurricane of applause."

Perhaps the last word should be left to Peter Brook: "Make the invisible appear from the visible: if something abnormal is to come forth, what is normal must exist first. Then you heighten it. That's where theatricality comes in."

FURTHER READING

- Burns, Elizabeth. Theatricality: A Study of Convention in the Theatre and in Social Life. London: Longman, 1972.
- Davis, Tracy, and Thomas Postlewait, eds. Theatricality. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2003.
- Feral, Josette, ed. "Theatricality Issue: The Rise and Fall of Theatricality." Substance: A Review of Theory and Literary Criticism 31, nos. 2&3 (2002).
- Huxley, Michael, and Noel Witts, eds. The Twentieth-Century Performance Reader. 2nd ed. London: Routledge, 2002.
- Innes, Christopher. Avant Garde Theatre, 1892–1992. London: Routledge, 1993.
- Schneider, Rebecca, and Gabrielle Cody. Re:direction: A Theoretical and Practical Guide. London: Routledge, 2002.

Nick Worrall

THÉRÈSE RAQUIN

The novel Thérèse Raquin (1867) was ÉMILE ZOLA's first literary success. It became a runaway best-seller, despite charges of pornography from conservative critics who rejected its detailed and—for the period—frank examination of the sex drive and its lack of an authorial condemnation of the characters. Inspired by a newspaper account, Zola's tale concerns its eponymous heroine, a half-African orphan, and Laurent, her lover. Driven by lust, Laurent and Thérèse murder her boring and semi-invalid husband, Camille. They marry and settle into the dreary shop on the Passage du Pont Neuf where Thérèse and Camille had lived with his mother. The murder, however, has killed their passion, and they sink into mutual recrimination and hatred, while Madame Raquin sinks into paralysis. Eventually each plans to murder the other on the same night; when they discover their mutual designs, Thérèse and Laurent commit suicide together.

The critical attacks on the novel led Zola to write a preface for the second edition (1868), which serves as a manifesto for literary NATURALISM. In it Zola argues for a dispassionate, "scientific" approach to literature. He acknowledges a "total absence of soul" in the work, having chosen to "seek within them the animal . . . and then take scrupulous note of their sensations and their actions. I simply carried out on two living bodies the same analytical examination that surgeons perform on corpses."

Some critics defied Zola to attempt to bring this story to the stage. In 1873 he found an opportunity. Produced at the Théâtre de la Renaissance, his adaptation attempted to demonstrate the theories of naturalism on the stage, but was a box-office failure, receiving scathing critical attacks. Zola expressed ironic thanks, noting that the attacks gave the novel the praise it had been denied six years earlier.

Although it has received frequent revivals in the 20th century and contemporary adaptations by writers as diverse as Neal Bell and CHARLES LUDLAM, as a play Thérèse Raquin pales in comparison with the works HENRIK IBSEN, AUGUST STRINDBERG, GERHART HAUPTMANN, and even HENRY BECQUE were soon to produce. Zola eliminates the authorial substitute of the raisonneur from the play, but is unable to find dramatic equivalents for the novel's great strengths: its descriptive interlinking of the characters' psychology with the physical environment in which they find themselves and the power of time's passage on the consciences of the two murderers. Compressed to four acts, which respect the unities of time and place, his characters recite events and psychological states between discursive domino games and sensational events, including Madame Raquin's onstage stroke and miraculous recovery of her voice, which allows her, like a deus ex machina, to pronounce the moral judgment on the couple, a pronouncement that provokes their mutual suicide. To a contemporary audience, the result is closer to a hybrid of MELODRAMA and EXPRESSIONISM than to REALISM. In his later collaborations with William Brunsbach, Zola consciously catered to the tastes of Boulevard audiences, sometimes with international success, as with L'assommoir. Still, Thérèse Raquin remains his most important work, a genuinely experimental provocation to a new image of theatrical realism.

FURTHER READING

- Brown, Frederick. Zola: A Life. New York: Farrar Straus Giroux, 1995.
- Carter, Lawson A. Zola and the Theater. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1963.
- Zola, Émile. Thérèse Raquin (novel). Tr. by Andrew Rothwell. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1992.
- . Thérèse Raquin (play). Tr. by Pip Broughton. London: Oberon, 1989.

Walter Bilderback

THEY DON'T WEAR BLACK TIE

Written by GIANFRANCESCO GUARNIERI at the age of twenty-two, They Don't Wear Black Tie (Eles não usam black-tie) was not only an immediate—and enduring—success among the critics and the audience when staged by the ARENA THEATER OF SÃO PAULO in 1958, but also a turning point in the history of Brazilian theater. For the first time in Brazilian drama, the working class was the protagonist of a play. Not only that, but the plot revolved around the preparation of a labor strike.

Intertwining the personal and the political, They Don't Wear Black Tie confronts the social and economic problems of the urban working class in BRAZIL through the story of a single family living in a favela (shantytown) in Rio de Janeiro. Otávio, the father, is a factory metalworker involved with the organization of a strike. Aware of the political dimensions of the workers' struggle, he is a man of solid character and convictions, always ready to do what is best for the collective. Romana, the mother, helps the household economy by working as a laundress. With a pragmatic view of life, she makes free use of her sharp tongue, but is compassionate and loving in her own way. Working in a grocery store, Chiquinho, the younger son, is a lively character in the first flush of his awakening sexuality and is inseparable from his girlfriend, Terezinha. Tião (played by Guarnieri), the older son, raised outside the favela by relatives with better social status, also works in the factory and has a hard time adapting to the poor life in the favela. He dreams of a better life in the city, and his individualistic behavior ultimately pits him against his father, his co-workers, and the community of the favela.

The strike sets father and son on opposing sides. Otávio leads the workers in the picket lines and is arrested by the police. Tião, afraid of losing his job—and jeopardizing his plans to marry his pregnant girlfriend, Maria—betrays the workers by breaking the strike. The conflict between the two generations is also an ideological one, for Otávio sees in Tião the petit bourgeois ideology of the relatives who raised him. Choosing his own interests over the interests of the striking collective, Tião ends up alone. Thrown out of the house by his father, he soon discovers that Maria would rather raise the child on her own than leave the favela to follow him to the city.

Although the play deals with broad issues such as class struggle and social inequality, Guarnieri's characters are never stereotypical, but complex, well-developed personages. They Don't Wear Black Tie was a breakthrough both in its theme and in its aesthetic, changing forever the way that theater companies and audiences alike regarded Brazilian plays. In sharp contrast to the Teatro Brasileiro de Comédia (Brazilian Comedy Theater), the most important theater company at that time, whose repertoire and staging techniques were "imported" from Europe and the UNITED STATES, Guarnieri's play inaugurates the process of "brazilianizing" the theater, which became Arena's distinctive mark. He brought to the theater the political effervescence of the moment, marked by nationalistic debates and the emergence of a new social landscape born out of the large industrialization and economic development that took place during President Juscelino Kubitschek's term (1956–1961).

The play employs a style that Guarnieri defines as critical REALISM. Influenced by the Italian neorealist cinema, especially that of Roberto Rossellini and Vittorio de Sica, Guarnieri captures daily life in the slum in a series of "snapshots": fast-paced short scenes jump-cut together using counterpoints from one scene to the next. The realism is intensified by the use of the broken syntax of the popular parlance. Achieving a rare balance between the power of social denunciation and artistic excellence, They Don't Wear Black Tie established Guarnieri as one of the most important Brazilian playwrights.

After long runs in São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, and many awards, the play traveled throughout the country and was also performed in Argentina, Uruguay, Chile, and Germany with great success. Guarnieri died in 2006.

FURTHER READING

- George, David S. The Modern Brazilian Stage. Austin: Univ. of Texas Press, 1992.
- Guarnieri, Gianfrancesco. O melhor teatro de Gianfrancesco Guarnieri. 2nd ed. São Paulo: Global, 2001.
- Magaldi, Sábato. Um palco brasileiro: O Arena de São Paulo. São Paulo: Brasiliense, 1984.
- Peixoto, Fernando. "Entrevista com Gianfrancesco Guarnieri." In Teatro em movimento. 2nd ed. São Paulo: Hucitec, 1986.
- Prado, Décio de Almeida. Apresentação do teatro brasileiro moderno: Crítica teatral, 1947–55. São Paulo: Martins, 1956.
- Rubin, Don, and Carlos Solórzano, eds. The World Encyclopedia of Contemporary Theatre: The Americas. New York: Routledge, 1996.

Ana Bernstein

THEY KNEW WHAT THEY WANTED

First presented on February 24, 1924, in the Garrick Theatre in New York City, They Knew What They Wanted by SIDNEY HOWARD won the Pulitzer Prize for Drama in 1925. The leading actors—Pauline Lord as Amy, the San Francisco waitress turned mail-order bride; Richard Bennett as Tony, the old wine grower who tricks the young waitress into agreeing to marry him; and Glenn Anders as Joe, the handsome young handyman—apparently had much to do with the play's original success; for years after the play closed, critics praised specific line deliveries and blocking moves.

In They Knew What They Wanted Howard depicted genuine Americans exposing their frailties while providing insight into a unique American sense of morality. The play was remarkable not for the love triangle or the key crisis, but for the characters' simple resolve and emotional response to the unforeseen challenges of life.

Howard wrote the play while living in Venice, ITALY, in 1923, and he employed a simple plot that he credited to Dante Alighieri's legend of Paolo and Francesca. In the festive opening set in the Sonoma wine country of northern California, Tony is about to be married to Amy, his mail-order bride. As they await her arrival, preparations are finalized and exposition is presented. Immigrant Tony, worried about his age and appearance, has deceived his beloved by sending her a picture and description of his handyman, the "sloppy, beautiful, and young" Joe. Once she is committed, Tony is confident that she will stay. On her arrival, she balks at the deception and soon lands in Joe's welcoming arms. When Tony is unable to walk after an accident, each of the three decides to make the most of the situation. Although Amy has become pregnant with Joe's baby, Tony freely forgives her, stating, "What you done was mistake in da head, not in da heart. . . . Mistake in da head is no matter." In that single line Tony has managed to change Amy's perception of him. She no longer feels trapped and manipulated. Instead, she sees that he is innately decent and needs her love to survive. Deeply moved by his compassion, she agrees to stay with him. Although she may prefer to be with someone young and handsome like Joe, she needs the security and love Tony can offer. Tony wants a family he can call his own, so he willingly accepts responsibility for Amy's child. Their "slight" adjustments allow each person to save his or her dignity and maintain the life he or she wants. The play's title is very apt because each character ultimately realizes what he or she really wants.

Amy's infidelity and Tony's acceptance of it reversed the theatrical convention of male infidelity quickly forgiven by a female character. Alexander Woollcott called the play "a colorful piece cut from the fabric of American life." George Jean Nathan, although not enthusiastic, called it a "praiseworthy attempt." Arthur Hornblow found it morally objectionable; it was well written but failed to "raise the standards of good morals, good taste, and good manners." Frank Loesser adapted the play into a musical titled The Most Happy Fella (1956).

FURTHER READING

- Coleman, Willis. "He Knew What He Wanted." Theatre Magazine (September 1925): 10+.
- Corbin, John. "He Knew What He Wanted." Saturday Review of Literature (March 24, 1934): 569–570.
- Craven, Bernard H. "Sidney Howard: The Man and His Plays." Master's thesis, Univ. of California, Los Angeles, 1950.
- Gewirtz, Arthur. "Sidney Howard." In American Playwrights, 1880–1945: A Research and Production Sourcebook, ed. by William W. Demastes. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1995. 171–182.
- White, Sidney Howard. Sidney Howard. Boston: Twayne, 1977.

Andrew Longoria

THEYYATHEYYAM

KAVALAM NARAYAN PANIKKAR's Theyyatheyyam (first performed by the Sopanam company in 1991) is the quintessential example of a play belonging to the theater of roots movement in INDIA, which "liberated" modern Indian theater from Western REALISM (Awasthi, 1989). Theyyatheyyam means the theyyam of a theyyam. Theyyam is a colloquial expression meaning "god." It is also the name given to a ritual dance performed in northern Kerala to propitiate any one of a number of gods who protect human beings from natural hazards, or dead local heroes who have been deified. The theyyam, or deity, is propitiated through the dancer, who is thought to literally embody the spirit of the deity and is referred to as "the man who takes the form of god" (Ashley, 1979).

Theyyatheyyam, which is based on a true story, begins with a group of villagers gathering for a Paranki theyyam. The theyyam begins with the telling of Paranki's story. Highly simplified, the story is that a foreigner named Paranki, attracted to a local woman named Poonkanni, decides to use his magic powers to abduct her. When the villagers reach the point in their story where Paranki kidnaps Poonkanni, a Policeman interrupts with "Stop this retelling of an antiquated, unsophisticated, village tale! Who wants it?

Where is the murderer?" The narrator (who sings much of his role), thinking that the Policeman does not understand the concept of theater, attempts to explain that they are telling a story:

NARRATOR (SINGER): There is no murderer here. Just a robber. Paranki is a kidnapper.

POLICEMAN: Not him! Where is Ramunni? He is a cold-blooded murderer!

NARRATOR (SINGER): No, you are wrong. Ramunni [in the role of Paranki] kidnapped Poonkanni.

POLICEMAN: I'm not talking about a play, I'm serious. Ramunni killed the landlord Mekkantala. Why don't you tell that story?

So the villagers switch stories and begin to tell the (real and therefore arguably more relevant) story of Ramunni and Mekkantala. Mekkantala tries to seduce Ramunni's girlfriend Kannipoo while she is working in the fields. Ramunni rescues her, but later Mekkantala tries to rape her. Ramunni rescues her by killing Mekkantala, and Ramunni and Kannipoo escape together. However, Ramunni is a theyyam dancer who is ritually obligated to perform the role of Paranki theyyam, so he returns to the village and begins his performance. Just when Ramunni transforms into a theyyam, when he is possessed by the deity Paranki, the villagers kill Paranki. Thus both Ramunni and Paranki are killed: Paranki was killed and later deified, Ramunni as Paranki is killed and deified, and in effect the remurdered Paranki becomes the theyyam of his own theyyam, or theyyatheyyam.

Ramunni is an example of the type of theyyam who is an incarnation of people killed unfairly and later deified "by a guilt-ridden society." In Panikkar's view, this type of theyyam is a reminder of "unjust actions in an unequal society [and] the dance itself is an act of appeasement." Marxist theater director SAFDAR HASHMI objects to the use of traditional performance in modern theater because he claims that it brings with it "the traditional content with its superstition, backwardness, obscurantism, and its promotion of feudal values" (quoted in van Erven, 1992). Theyyatheyyam proves the opposite: here Panikkar uses theyyam (a traditional performance) to critique the whole notion of deification. That the villagers themselves have killed the person they deity adds an additional irony to the play.

Theyyatheyyam has been performed by Panikkar's company Sopanam to packed houses in a wide variety of venues ranging from villages in Kerala to proscenium stages in Delhi. It is still in the Sopanam repertoire.

FURTHER READING

- Ashley, Wayne. "Theyyam Kettu of Northern Kerala." TDR 23, no. 2 (1979): 99–112.
- Awasthi, Suresh. "'Theatre of Roots': Encounter with Tradition." TDR 33, no. 4 (1989): 48–69.
- van Erven, Eugene. The Playful Revolution: Theatre and Liberation in Asia. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1992.

Erin B. Mee

THIRD SISTER LIU

Third Sister Liu (Liu Sanjie) is a song drama (geju) composed in CHINA in the late 1950s by a team of artists, including Niu Xiu, Huang Yongcha, and Zeng Zhaowen. One day, when Liu Sanjie is going by boat with her elder brother to relations, retainers of the local rich man Mo Huairen accost them. Mo is widely hated as an overlord but wants to use his money and power to entice Liu Sanjie to be his concubine and sends a matchmaker with his proposal. Liu responds that she will agree if he can find people who can win a song competition against her. Mo invites three eminent scholars to compete against Liu Sanjie, but she defeats them. He responds by getting song banned. Despite her resistance, she ends up defeated and rides up to heaven on a fish.

There are records of a real historical figure called Liu Sanjie (Third Elder Sister Liu) or Liu Sanmei (Third Younger Sister Liu), who lived in what is now Guangxi in the early 8th century and was a wonderful folksinger. There are also many legends about her in Guangxi and Guangdong. In the late 1950s a team of researchers and artists looked for material about her and created a drama in a small-scale folk style of northern Guangxi called caidiao, which was performed by the Liuzhou Municipal Caidiao Troupe in 1959. In 1960 it was presented at a major festival of dramas on the theme of Liu Sanjie held in the Guangxi capital Nanning. The team then rearranged their piece into the style of song drama. It was also made into a film in 1960. It was banned during the Cultural Revolution, but was revived very soon after.

One special feature of Third Sister Liu is its association with ethnic minorities, especially the Zhuang, who are the most populous of China's minorities and whose main home is Guangxi. Liu Sanjie herself was a Zhuang and is so portrayed both in the caidiao and in the song drama. Huang Yongcha is a Zhuang artist. Although both caidiao and song drama are basically Han drama forms, Liu Sanjie has incorporated Zhuang tunes and other features.

Geju features song, including Chinese elements, but is not in traditional Chinese opera style. Third Sister Liu is fairly typical of song dramas, especially in the period before the Cultural Revolution, in the Chinese elements of its music, plot, and performance. It is also typical in emphasizing the ideological side in the plot and characterization. For instance, the drama gives play to Liu Sanjie's poor class background and her Zhuang ethnicity, as well as her courage in resisting feudal authority. At the same time, the writers have stressed Mo Huairen's selfishness, wickedness, and stupidity. The lesson is that the poor and oppressed, especially women and minorities, are the good people who contribute to society, while the rich overlords are the negative characters.

FURTHER READING

Liang Tingwang Nong Xueguan. Zhuangzu wenxue gaiyao [Essentials of Zhuang literature]. Nanning: Guangxi People's Press, 1991.

Mackerras, Colin. China's Minority Cultures: Identities and Integration Since 1912. Melbourne: Longman; New York: St. Martin's, 1995.

Third Sister Liu [Liu Sanjie]. Tr. by Yang Xianyi and Gladys Yang. Chinese Literature 2 (1961): 53–110. Also, Peking: Foreign Languages Press, 1962.

Yang Liangcai, Tao Lifan, and Deng Minwen. Zhongguo shaoshu minzu wenxue [The literatures of China's minority nationalities]. Beijing: People's Press, 1985.

Colin Mackerras

THIRTY DAYS IN SEPTEMBER

Thirty Days in September by MAHESH DATTANI (first performed at the Prithvi Theatre, Mumbai, on May 31, 2001, in a production directed by Lillette Dubey) is about the effects of incest and childhood sexual abuse on women and children. The play was commissioned by Recovering and Healing from Incest (RAHI), a Delhi-based support center for middle- and upper-middle-class survivors. When RAHI approached Dattani, it gave him three mandates:

The play would articulate the experiences of women survivors and talk about how their lives and relationships are affected as a result of their abuse. It would give the message that no matter what these effects are, recovery is possible when women begin to honor themselves and supportive spaces are provided for them to access [. . . and it would] fulfill the vital purpose of breaking the silence and exposing the myths that surround incest, its perpetrators and its victims and survivors in our society. (Dattani, 2002)

Dattani's play is based on the stories and testimony of incest survivors. These stories were shaped into a single piece that centers around Mala, a young woman caught in behavior she is desperately trying to understand and isolated by memories no one will acknowledge. The other characters are Mala's mother Shanta, whose advice is "If you forget it ever happened, you won't have anything to hide," and "I forget. I forget everything. Be like me"; Deepak, Mala's understanding and helpful fiancé; and Mala's uncle. As the play unfolds, we find out that Mala's uncle raped Shanta when they were children. Shanta survived by looking at a large picture of the god Krishna: when no one else would protect her, she "looked to Him. I didn't feel anything. I didn't feel pain, I didn't feel pleasure. . . . He helped me. By taking away all feeling." As a result, she did not want her husband to touch her, and he left when Mala was a child. Mala's uncle began to support them and to rape Mala, and the play makes it clear that Shanta ignored the rape of her daughter to ensure a roof over her head, and because she had learned to survive by being silent. The title of the play comes from the rhyme Mala chants while her uncle is raping her: thirty days have September, April, June, and November.

Now Mala cannot sustain a long-term relationship. At one point, while having coffee with Deepak, she claims that another man is looking at her breasts, only to admit minutes later that she is lying. When Deepak asks why she would lie, she says, "If he had looked at me, I would have felt—I would have felt—truly alive.” Deepak tells her to get some help. After some therapy Mala says, “I can smile . . . for the first time. . . . I hear sounds I never cared to hear before—birds, temple bells. . . . My senses are working again. I can touch this chair and feel the chair touch me.” Although she continues to be haunted by the memory of her uncle—an overlapping scene between Mala and her uncle and Mala and Deepak is an emotionally wrenching demonstration of the ways the past continues to be present—she makes enormous progress and regains control of her life.

Audiences attended the play in droves, and critics praised it: “Dattani transforms good themes into good theatre,” wrote one reviewer (Kumar, 2000).

FURTHER READING

- Dattani, Mahesh. Collected Plays. 2 vols. New York: Penguin, 2000–2005.
 ——. Thirty Days in September. New Delhi: RAHI, 2002.
 Kumar, T. Vijay. “Dattani Transforms Good Themes Into Good Theatre.” Deccan Chronicle (Hyderabad, March 5, 2000).

Erin B. Mee

THIYAM, RATAN (1948–)

Writer and director Ratan Thiyam, born in 1948 in Manipur, INDIA, is part of the theater of roots movement. However, while Thiyam's work is tied to a theatrical movement that spans the nation, it is deeply and specifically anchored in Manipuri culture.

Manipur was an independent kingdom until it was overrun by the Burmese in 1819. Seven years later Manipur liberated itself from the Burmese with the help of the British East India Company, which then gradually took on the role of colonizer. But when the Republic of India was established in 1947, and when it claimed all former British territories as its own, including Manipur, many Manipuris felt that they had been unconstitutionally subsumed under the new nation. Since the 1960s demands for self-determination have grown in number and in violence. Today the Indian army is a constant presence in Manipur's capital city, Imphal, and violence has become part of everyday life. Under these conditions it is hardly surprising that many of Thiyam's productions are about war and the power-hungry politicians who wage it.

Thiyam's 1986 adaptation of Antigone (Lengshonnei) focuses on the personal behavior of politicians. Kreon is the archetypal father figure, and Haemon the archetypal son. When Kreon looks at Haemon, he fails to see an adult but perceives instead the child he used to sing lullabies to; when Haemon looks at his father, he sees a man who has grown old physically without growing any wiser. Thiyam focuses on the human tragedy that creates the political one. “The presence of the army in our country and the presence of a revolutionary people is a result brought on by political leaders,” he reasons. “So my thinking goes directly to those political leaders and to how they are failing to handle the situation properly.”

Thiyam's The Final Beatitude (Uttar Priyadarshi, 1996), which has toured India, THAILAND, and the UNITED STATES, is a play about a man's attempt to control his own ego and his own violent urges. Thiyam says that it is also “a play about peace, about non-violence, about the growing attitude of waging war and about the effect of war: What happens to this world, and who are the sufferers?” The Final Beatitude is a plea to think seriously about how violence will affect the next generation. Thiyam's most famous play, ARMY FORMATION (Chakravayuha, 1984), is about a young warrior sacrificed on the battlefield by his own uncle.

When he started the Chorus Repertory Theatre, Thiyam's mission was to evolve “an indigenous theatre idiom, employing the arts and lore of Manipur” (Jacob, 1989). He asked his father to provide him with gurus of the martial art thang-ta, pung cholum (acrobatic dance with drums), ras lila (devotional dance), and wari leeba (oral storytelling). Thiyam's actors are so well trained that they do not speak their lines, they growl, sing, shriek, whisper, and whine; they do not walk across the stage, they jump, writhe, glide, and stomp. His productions are visually poetic and aurally muscular, making dazzling use of sound, music, rhythm, and color. Thiyam's work engages all the senses—it is total theater.

Thang-ta, meaning “the art of the sword and the spear,” forms the backbone of Thiyam's training program. Thang-ta exercises teach flexibility and balance, the ability to coordinate breath and movement, and relaxation. The basic exercises are a practice for the regulation of energy without tension, but they also teach inner awareness—the adjustment and readjustment of the body, using senses other than sight (the one we usually rely on when dealing with appearance). For Thiyam, thang-ta has the added benefit of teaching all these things without giving the actor a particular form. “There are other methods of training,” he says, but many of them also give the actor a movement vocabulary that is specific to the particular genre. “An actor becomes a great performer when he is ‘shapeless’ and can mould his body and mind to fit any role” (Thiyam, 1989).

Pung cholum literally means drum dance. It is an acrobatic dance in which the dancer accompanies himself on the drum. Because the dance begins as a soft whisper and builds to a thunderous climax, pung cholum teaches rhythm and dynamics. More than that, it teaches the actor to be a musician, as well as a dancer (and most of Thiyam's actors play instruments during performances), to coordinate the rhythm and the movement, and to use the body as an instrument.

The actors get their vocal agility and strength through their training in wari leeba, which literally means storytelling (wari, story; leeba, to tell). Thiyam describes it as a form that “paints pictures through words” (Souvenir Program, 1989). Wari leeba storytellers stay seated and use no gestures, so they have only their voices to communicate the denotative and connotative meaning of the words and the emotional import of the story. Thiyam has worked with a number of different wari leeba teachers (ojhas) because each has a different strength. Some storytellers are particularly skilled at describing warfare. Others excel at comedy or romance. Wari leeba develops an awareness of vocal equipment, tone, inflection, pitch, diction, nuance, vocal coloration, and vocal imagination. Thiyam insists that his actors not simply speak, but deliver the lines he has written.

Thiyam has directed more than fifty productions for his company, including Man Doesn't Die by Bread Alone (1978), Procession of Man (Mee Pareng, 1979), and Imphal Imphal (1982), which he also wrote. Thiyam received the Sangeet Natak Akademi Award for direction in 1987 and the Padma Shri in 1988. His productions have toured to JAPAN, Thailand, the United States, the former Soviet Union, AUSTRALIA, and NEW ZEALAND. His production of Chakravyuha won Edinburgh's Fringe First Award in 1987.

FURTHER READING

Jacob, Paul, ed. Contemporary Indian Theatre: Interviews with Playwrights and Directors. Delhi: Sangeet Natak Akademi, 1989.

Katyal, Anjum. "Of War and Peace: The Theatre of Ratan Thiyam." Arts International (Winter 1999): 39–43.

Mee, Erin. "Star of India." American Theatre Magazine (July/August 2000).

Souvenir Program for the Nehru Shatabdi Natya Samaroh. Delhi: Sangeet Natak Akademi, 1989.

Thiyam, Ratan. "The Audience Is Inside Me." Seagull Theatre Quarterly 14/15 (1997): 62–72.

—. Chakravyuha. Calcutta: Seagull Bks., 1998.

—. "Interview with Kavita Nagpal." In Contemporary Indian Theatre. Delhi: Sangeet Natak Akademi, 1989.

—. "Uttar-Priyadarshi: Theatre of Manipur." International Gallerie 2, no. 2 (1999): 41–49.

Erin B. Mee

THOMAS, AUGUSTUS (1857–1934)

Something in man's constitution . . . makes the theatre necessary.

—Augustus Thomas, 1918

Augustus Thomas was born on January 8, 1857, in St. Louis, Missouri. He served as a page in the Missouri House of Representatives and the U.S. Congress and worked for several railroads. After several years of amateur acting with the Marion Place Dramatic Club in St. Louis, he wrote his first full-length play, Alone (1875), for that group. In 1878 he joined his future father-in-law's law office, but left in 1881 for a position at St. Louis's Pope Theatre. He worked for several theater companies and newspapers before landing his first New York position in 1888. The Burglar (1889), his first New York production, was a big success and resulted in a position with A. M. Palmer revising and adapting foreign plays.

Although Thomas wrote FARCES and political, socioeconomic, psychological, and psychic plays, he is probably best known for his American regional plays. Alabama (1891) advocates reconciliation of American sectional differences by combining northern energy and money with southern resources. In Mizzoura (1893) breaks with theatrical tradition by presenting authentic unconventional characters, including both a sheriff and a thief competing for the attention of a woman, all in detailed and realistic settings and situations. Arizona (1899) depicts the desolation of the alkali southwestern desert as cowboys and cavalry prepare to leave for Cuba and the Spanish-American War. Oliver Goldsmith (1900) is a costume COMEDY about the title character's conception for She Stoops to Conquer. The Capitol (1895) is a political play that discusses the corrupting influence industry and religion can have on politics. New Blood (1894), a socioeconomic play, advocates the responsible use of money, a national concern of the 1890s. Reflecting contemporary public interest, The Witching Hour (1907) incorporates telepathy and hypnosis. Regardless of subject, Thomas's plays presented authentic American characters facing contemporary American issues.

In essays and the prefaces to his plays Thomas promulgated his dramatic theories, which were informed by his psychic studies, and explained his process of play construction. For him, the audience's subconscious mind was stimulated by the play's conflict and stirred emotionally to action. He believed that the dramatist must tap the collective subconscious through visualization and suggestion. He reasoned that when a person's subconscious mind has two thoughts, one from another person, such as a dramatist, and the other from the individual, the stronger idea will rise to the conscious mind. Thus dramatists are a social moral force. Thomas's belief in the importance of emotion over the conscious mind typically gave his plays a quiet aspect. Unlike his contemporaries, who used spectacle and typically followed an explosive climax with an immediate curtain, Thomas often dropped the curtain at quiet moments of intense inner emotions.

In 1914 Thomas was awarded the Gold Medal for his lifetime achievement in drama from the American Academy of Arts and Letters and subsequently received several honorary degrees. He was a major dramatist in changing the American theater from one that merely adapted foreign plays to one that presented a uniquely American drama. Consequently, he was one of the most important American playwrights before EUGENE O'NEILL. Thomas died on August 12, 1934, near Nyack, New York.

[See also United States, 1860–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: Alabama (1891); In Mizzoura (1893); New Blood (1894); The Capitol (1895); Arizona (1899); Oliver Goldsmith (1900); On the Quiet (1901); The Earl of Pawtucket (1903); The Other Girl (1903); Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots (1905); The Witching Hour (1907); The Harvest Moon (1909); As a Man Thinks (1911); The Copperhead (1918); The Cricket of Palmy Days (1919)

FURTHER READING

Davis, Ronald J. Augustus Thomas. Boston: Twayne, 1984.

Thomas, Augustus. The Print of My Remembrance. New York: Scribner, 1922.

Robert Lewis Smith

THOMAS, DYLAN (1914–1953)

Dylan Marlais Thomas was born in Swansea, Wales, in 1914, the son of Florence and D. J. Thomas, a grammar-school master at Swansea Grammar School, where Dylan was a pupil between 1925 and 1931. After leaving school, he spent fifteen months as a junior reporter at the South Wales Daily Post before becoming a full-time writer.

Thomas is more famous for his poetry, but constant money worries forced him to seek freelance work at the BBC. In the early 1940s he did documentary work for BBC Radio and, from 1945 onwards, some journalistic work. His creative work for radio includes the monologue Quite Early One Morning (recorded in 1944 and first broadcast in 1945), which, with hindsight, reads like a sketch for his most famous “play for voices,” Under Milk Wood (1954). Another early piece is the short radio play Return Journey (first broadcast in 1947), which was produced by P. H. Burton, Richard Burton’s mentor. In this piece the narrator, Thomas’s alter ego, travels back to Swansea to rediscover his youth and to look for any traces he might have left behind. It is a reminiscence that is at once comic and nostalgic and invokes a prewar Swansea before it was destroyed by Nazi bombers.

From 1950 Thomas was working on a radio play called The Town That Was Mad, which was later to become Llareggub and then Under Milk Wood. The form of the play, its meandering narrative voice that takes the listener from character to character, and its succession of character studies in lieu of plot development are anticipated in The Londoner (1945), a radio documentary about the Jacksons, a working-class family in London. Indebted to James Joyce’s Ulysses, Under Milk Wood describes twelve hours in the life of the West Walian village of Llareggub (a linguistic joke to be appreciated when the word is read backwards), delving into dirty, usually sexual, secrets in an amoral village and focusing on the eccentricities of characters such as Captain Cat, Hugh Pugh, the imaginary wife murderer, or the dangerously innocent Reverend Eli Jenkins. Its power, however, resides in Thomas’s use of language: he uses an almost hypnotic lyrical descriptive prose, guidebook pastiche, allusions, slapstick, and other forms. Thomas read the unfinished play for the first time in Cambridge, Massachusetts, on May 3, 1953, on a tour of campus readings. He finished the play just in time for the live recording on May 14 in New York in which he read “First Voice” and took three more parts. Revisions of the play continued throughout the summer, and the script was finally delivered to the BBC on October 15, 1953. It was first broadcast on January 25, 1954, with Richard Burton reading “First Voice.” The broadcast was posthumous; Dylan Thomas died on November 9, 1953, after a bout of heavy drinking. The exact circumstances of his death remain unclear. Under Milk Wood has since been transferred to the stage and is regularly revived.

RADIO PLAYS: Quite Early One Morning (1945); Return Journey (1947); Under Milk Wood (1954)

FURTHER READING

Davies, James A. A Reference Companion to Dylan Thomas. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1998.

Davies, Walford. Dylan Thomas. Milton Keynes: Open Univ. Press, 1986.

Ferris, Paul. Dylan Thomas: The Biography. New ed. London: Dent, 1999.

Lewis, Peter. “The Radio Road to Llareggub.” In British Radio Drama, ed. by John Drakakis. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1981. 72–110.

Thomas, Dylan. The Broadcasts. Ed. by Ralph Maud. London: Dent, 1991.

[A comprehensive collection of Dylan Thomas’s work for radio.]

Tremlett, George. Dylan Thomas: In the Mercy of His Means. London: Constable, 1991.

Alyce von Rothkirch

THOMAS, EDWARD (1961–)

Playwright and director Edward (Ed) Thomas was born in 1961 in Abercraf, Wales, and grew up in one of the Welsh-speaking communities in the Swansea Valley in southern Wales. He studied English at University College, Cardiff, and worked in London fringe theater before forming his own theater company, Y Cwmni (later Fiction Factory), in Wales in 1988. Thomas has always stressed the collaborative nature of the playwriting process, and his plays are closely identified with actors such as Richard Lynch and Russell Gomer. The first production of Y Cwmni, HOUSE OF AMERICA (1988), was an instant success because it articulated the spirit of profound cultural resignation in the face of Anglo-American economic and cultural domination in the 1980s in a vivid, angry, and exciting idiom. In later plays Thomas left the conventions of stage REALISM behind and turned to nonrealist, experimental forms as a strategy to create a “theatre of possibilities,” which imaginatively articulated a new Welsh self-confidence.

Echoing historian Gwyn A. Williams’s famous dictum in When Was Wales? that “Wales is an artefact which the Welsh produce,” Thomas’s plays are part of a conscious political effort to write a new national narrative, a “new mythology” for Wales. In Flowers of the Dead Red Sea (1991) the central characters, Mock and Joe, symbolize the cultural amnesia and defeatism Thomas had diagnosed in House of America. This play ends, however, with an invocation of the memory of a distinct Welsh culture and the power of art to “save culture.” In East from the Gantry (1992) the story of a tumultuous marriage becomes caustic social commentary. Song from a Forgotten City (1995) imagines Wales as a metropolis, "a place where something good might happen." Gas Station Angel (1998) employs magic-realist techniques to enable the characters to tell their own stories and to give them the opportunity to imagine their own future. In this play the traditional hero narrative is subverted in favor of a tapestry of voices in which imagination has the power to change the scenery and thus the world in which the characters are situated. Especially Gas Station Angel can be fruitfully disseminated in the context of postcolonial drama.

Thomas's work for the theater has been mainly in English, with the exception of the surreal Adar heb Adenydd (1989), which was subsequently reworked as The Myth of Michael Roderick (1990). However, he works as a writer and director for the Welsh-language television channel S4C. Later he wrote the script for Mwy na Phapur Newydd (1990) and directed the televised version of the acclaimed play Hunllef yng Nghymru Fydd by the Welsh-language playwright Gareth Miles (1990). His work for the cinema includes the screenplay for the film House of America (1997) and the unsuccessful Rancid Aluminium (1999). Thomas still writes for television and returned to the stage with Who Are You Looking At? (2004) and the multimedia performance Rain Dogs (2002), collaborations with the musician Mike Brookes and actor and director Mike Pearson.

SELECT PLAYS: House of America (1988); Adar heb Adenydd (1989); The Myth of Michael Roderick (1990); Flowers of the Dead Red Sea (1991); East from the Gantry (1992); New Wales Trilogy (1992); Envy (1993); Hiraeth/Strangers in Conversation (1993); Song from a Forgotten City (1995); Gas Station Angel (1998); Rain Dogs (with Mike Brookes and Mike Pearson, 2002); Stone City Blue (2004); Who Are You Looking At? (with Mike Brookes and Mike Pearson, 2004)

FURTHER READING

- Davies, Hazel Walford, ed. State of Play: Four Playwrights of Wales. Llandysul: Gomer, 1998.
- Rhys, Martin. "Keeping It in the Family: Change by J. O. Francis, The Keep by Gwyn Thomas and House of America by Ed Thomas." In Dangerous Diversity: The Changing Faces of Wales, ed. by Katie Gramich and Andrew Hiscock. Cardiff: Univ. of Wales Press, 1998. 150–177.
- Theatre in Wales [contains information on Welsh theater]. <http://www.theatre-wales.co.uk/>.
- Thomas, Edward. '95–'98 Selected Work: Song from a Forgotten City, House of America, Gas Station Angel. Cardigan: Parthian, 2002.
- . Three Plays: House of America, Flowers of the Dead Red Sea, East from the Gantry. Bridgend: Seren, 1994.
- . "Wanted: A New Welsh Mythology." New Welsh Review 27 (Winter 1994/1995): 54–61. [Interview with Hazel Walford Davies.]
- Williams, Daniel. "Harry Secombe in the Junkshop: Nation, Myth and Invention in Edward Thomas's House of America and David Mamet's American Buffalo." Welsh Writing in English: A Yearbook of Critical Essays 4 (1998): 133–158.

Alyce von Rothkirch

THOMAS, GWYN (1913–1981)

Writer, dramatist, broadcaster, and television personality Gwyn Thomas was born in 1913 in Cymmer, Rhondda Cynon Taf, Glamorgan, Wales, into an English-speaking Rhondda mining family as the youngest of twelve children. His father was often unemployed, and he grew up in the climate of severe poverty that characterized industrial southern Wales in the depression of the 1920s and 1930s, an experience that was to inform most of his writing. He won a scholarship to St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, to study modern languages, but constant financial difficulties and an alienation from what the committed socialist Thomas perceived as the upper-class, High Tory atmosphere of Oxford contributed to a deep sense of isolation. He experienced periods of unemployment and worked in adult education in ENGLAND and Wales. From 1942 he worked as a grammar-school teacher of French and Spanish in Cardigan and Barry before retiring from teaching to devote himself to writing full-time in 1962.

A prolific writer, Thomas wrote novels (for example, All Things Betray Thee, 1949), stage plays, plays and features for radio and television and published two collections of essays (A Welsh Eye, 1964, and A Hatful of Humans, 1965) and "an autobiography of sorts," A Few Selected Exits (1968). His radio play Gazooka: A Rhondda Reminiscence (1952) is in many ways characteristic of Thomas's work: written with eloquence, humor, and a great fondness for his characters, who reappear in other radio plays, it captures the idiom of the Rhondda valley as it depicts the exploits of the striking miners as they marched and countermarched about the valleys in rival bands, often dressed up in carnival dress, in the summer of the general strike in 1926. The positive reception of radio plays such as Gazooka fueled Thomas's interest in playwriting. His plays, like his other writing, usually deal with working-class life in southern Wales in the first half of the 20th century. Because he writes about the valleys' singular culture characterized by a failing mining industry, the last remnants of nonconformist dogma, and a strongly socialist Laborism, his material is often grim. Yet he treats it with a rare humor and an eye for the more absurd, farcical characteristics of the community he describes and identifies with. THE KEEP (1960) deals with the peculiarly claustrophobic atmosphere of a Rhondda family home in the 1950s. Jackie the Jumper (1963) is a historical play about the Merthyr Rising of 1831. In other plays, such as Loud Organs (1962) and Sap (1974), he moved away from stage REALISM to a form that incorporated nonrealist and music-hall elements.

Once described as the "greatest talker in the world," Gwyn Thomas became a television personality in the 1960s, contributing to various programs as an entertainer, but also as an eloquent spokesman for his native southern Wales. Thomas's health began to fail in the late 1960s because of a combination of diabetes and heavy drinking. He died in 1981 in Cardiff University Hospital shortly before his sixty-eighth birthday. He is remembered as one of the most original, witty, and eloquent "characters" of the Welsh literary scene.

PLAYS: Gazooka: A Rhondda Reminiscence (radio-play, 1952); The Keep (1960); Loud Organs (1962); Jackie the Jumper (1963); Return and End (based on the life of Aneurin Bevan, c. 1963, unpublished); The Loot (1965); Sap (1974, unpublished); The Breakers (1976, unpublished); Testimonials (1979, unpublished)

FURTHER READING

- Parnell, Michael. Introduction to Three Plays, by Gwyn Thomas. Bridgend: Seren, 1990. 7–21.
- . Laughter from the Dark: A Life of Gwyn Thomas. Bridgend: Seren, 1997.
- Thomas, Gwyn. A Few Selected Exits. Bridgend: Seren, 1985.
- . "Gazooka: A Rhondda Reminiscence." In Act One Wales: Thirteen One Act Plays, ed. by Phil Clark. Bridgend: Seren, 1997. 44–69.
- . Three Plays. Ed. by Michael Parnell. Bridgend: Seren, 1990.
- [The Keep, Jackie the Jumper, Loud Organs.]

Alyce von Rothkirch

THOMPSON, JUDITH (1954–)

Judith Thompson (born in Montreal, Quebec, CANADA, in 1954) is one of Canada's preeminent playwrights. Trained as an actor with the National Theatre School, Thompson is acutely attuned to the voices of her characters. She often speaks of her artistic process as a kind of channeling of the voices that come from the chaos and the collective unconscious that she sees around her. The characters that inhabit her work are often marginalized, dispossessed people. As Urjo Kareda says in the introduction to a collection of Thompson's work, The Other Side of the Dark (1989), "Judith Thompson hears the poetry of the inarticulate and the semi-literate."

This poetry often finds shape in a monologue, which can function as a kind of signature for the character, giving the audience access to the inner turmoil of the characters. For Thompson's characters often find themselves in extreme circumstances: in the throes of birth, death, rage, murder, and betrayal. They inevitably undergo struggles with their own demons, often resulting in fearful transformations. A devastating sense of loss and hollowness haunts them, and for this reason, perhaps, her work lends itself to psychoanalytic interpretations. As Robert Nunn suggests, the extreme behavior of her characters is often traced to a primary loss in the separation from the mother, compounded by the loss enacted by the acquisition of language and entrance into a symbolic order. Although Thompson's plays can be read in this vein, they also offer cogent social critique. Her characters, especially in the early plays, are often of a lower class and are struggling to maintain a sense of dignity in a world that constantly misjudges them.

Thompson's plays range in style from the REALISM of THE CRACKWALKER (1980) to the daisy-chain, imaginative play of LION IN THE STREETS (1990). Although her plays are without exception emotionally draining and highly dramatic, there is a clear comic vein and irony in her work as she punctures moments of crisis with moments of levity and the bizarre. Her work relies on a binary division of the world, which she then proceeds to overturn. This ambiguous space, both terrifying and liberating, is often represented by a character who has an epileptic seizure (Rose in I Am Yours [1987], Patsy in Perfect Pie [2000]). The "identity panic" that ensues, as Thompson calls it, recurs throughout her plays as her characters struggle to find stability in a fundamentally unstable world. Yet the endings of her plays often exhibit an abiding sense of regeneration.

Thompson has twice won the Governor General's Award for drama (for White Biting Dog [1984] and The Other Side of the Dark). She has also won the Floyd S. Chalmers Canadian Play Award for I Am Yours and Lion in the Streets. In 2005, she was named an Officer of the Order of Canada. Thompson frequently directs the premieres of her own plays, often at Tarragon Theatre in Toronto. She is a professor at the University of Guelph where she teaches playwriting and acting. Thompson has also written for radio, television, and film. She adapted Susan Swan's novel, The Wives of Bath, for the film Lost and Delirious and wrote the screenplay for Perfect Pie. She has also adapted and directed HENRIK IBSEN's HEDDA GABLER.

SELECT PLAYS: The Crackwalker (1980); White Biting Dog (1984); Pink (1986); I Am Yours (1987); Tornado (1989); Lion in the Streets (1990); White Sand (1991); The Yellow Canaries (1992); Sled (1997); Perfect Pie (2000); Habitat (2001); Capture Me (2004); Enoch Arden, by Alfred Lord Tennyson and His Catatonic Songstress (2005); The Palace of the End (2006)

FURTHER READING

- Adam, Julie. "The Implicated Audience: Judith Thompson's Anti-naturalism in The Crackwalker, White Biting Dog, I Am Yours and Lion in the Streets." In Women on the Canadian Stage: The Legacy of Hrotsvit, ed. by Rita Much. Winnipeg: Blizard, 1992.
- Canadian Theatre Review 89 (Winter 1996). [Judith Thompson casebook.]
- Harvie, Jennifer. "(Im)Possibility: Fantasy and Judith Thompson's Drama." In On-stage and Off-stage: English Canadian Drama in Discourse, ed. by Albert-Reiner Glaap with Rolf Althof. St. John's: Breakwater, 1996.
- Knowles, Ric, ed. Judith Thompson. Toronto: Playwrights Canada Press, 2005.
- . ed. The Masks of Judith Thompson. Toronto: Playwrights Canada Press, 2006.
- . The Theatre of Form and the Production of Meaning: Contemporary Canadian Dramaturgies. Toronto: ECW Press, 1999.
- Nunn, Robert. "Judith Thompson's Marginal Characters." In Siting the Other: Re-visions of Marginality in Australian and English-Canadian Drama, ed. by Marc Maufort and Franca Bellarsi. Brussels: P. Lang, 2001.
- . "Spatial Metaphor in the Plays of Judith Thompson." Theatre History in Canada 10, no. 1 (Spring 1989): 3–29.
- Thompson, Judith. The Other Side of the Dark: Four Plays. Toronto: Coach House Press, 1989.

Marlene Moser

THOMPSON, MERVYN (1936–1992)

A coal miner, a university lecturer, and a director, Mervyn Thompson co-founded Christchurch's Court Theatre and was its co-director from 1971 to 74 and director of Wellington's Downstage in 1975–1976. He introduced the specialist drama program at the University of Auckland, teaching there from 1977 to 1989. A controversial figure, he passionately advocated a NEW ZEALAND theater that is “an exciting and compelling witness to all ourselves instead of a pale reflection of some of them” (Selected Plays, 1984).

The expressionistic, semiautobiographical play First Return (1974) alternates between realistic scenes in London and distorted boyhood memories as the protagonist attempts to come to terms with himself and his IDENTITY as a New Zealander. The play includes songs, drawing on the world of music hall, vaudeville, and the fairground, whose influence became pronounced in all of Thompson's drama.

Subsequent plays extend Thompson's concern with identity and national issues. Sharing the political commitment of groups such as Theatre Action and Amamus, Thompson similarly sought to confront New Zealanders with those parts of their history that they too readily repress. A rumbustious “semi-documentary” play with music, O! Temperance! (1972) traces the history of the temperance movement in New Zealand. Signaling a recurring concern to bring together cast and audience, the play takes the form of a meeting in a community hall in 1919. At the end the characters urge the audience to sign pledges.

Thompson's emphasis on music developed into the “song-play,” in which the entire play is conveyed through song. Songs to Uncle Scrim (produced in 1976, published in 1984), with composer Stephen McCurdy, evokes the 1930s Depression, while Songs to the Judges (produced in 1980, published in 1984), with composer William Dart, perhaps Thompson's greatest accomplishment, was inspired by Maori land protests. With the theater as a mock courtroom, presided over by a cartoonish judge, Songs to the Judges catalogs the legal chicanery, from 1841 onwards, whereby Maori were dispossessed of their lands and heritage.

Having acted roles in his plays, including the judge in Songs to the Judges, in 1984 Thompson wrote and performed the solo work Coaltown Blues, which draws heavily on his childhood on the South Island's remote west coast. The Performer tells of his upbringing in a poor coal-mining community, his father's violence, and his mother's deteriorating sanity and eventual suicide. This narrative is set against national events, beginning hopefully with the election of the first Labor government in 1935 and ending with the 1951 Waterfront Dispute, which signaled the repression of the unions.

Thompson's other musical works include A Night at the Races (1977), co-written with Yvonne Blennerhassett Edwards and composed by Andrew Glover, and The New Zealand “Truth” Show (produced in 1982, published in 1992), devised with Auckland University students. The former celebrates the second in the triad of national pursuits, rugby, racing, and beer, and turns the theater into a race meeting. The second looks at the way the (in)famous weekly newspaper Truth mediated New Zealand history over a period of sixty years. Other plays are Lovebirds (1992), Jean and Richard (1992), and Passing Through (1991), another solo autobiographical piece, which recounts Thompson's experiences in the theater.

[See also Documentary Drama]

PLAYS: First Return (1974); O! Temperance! (1974); Songs to Uncle Scrim (with Stephen McCurdy, 1976); Songs to the Judges (with William Dart, 1980); A Night at the Races (with Yvonne Blennerhassett Edwards and Andrew Glover, 1981); The New Zealand “Truth” Show (1982); Coaltown Blues (1984); Children of the Poor (adapted from the novel by John A. Lee, 1989); Jean and Richard (1992); Lovebirds (1992); Passing Through (1992)

FURTHER READING

- Boire, Gary. “Resistance Moves: Mervyn Thompson's Songs to the Judges.” Australian and New Zealand Studies in Canada 6 (Fall 1991): 15–26.
- Corballis, Dick. “Interview with Mervyn Thompson.” Sites 29 (Spring 1994): 71–97.
- Dowling, David. “Mervyn Thompson.” Landfall 34 (December 1980): 307–313. [Interview with Thompson.]
- McNaughton, Howard. “Negotiating Marae Performance.” Theatre Research International 26, no. 1 (2001): 25–34.
- Thompson, Mervyn. Selected Plays. Dunedin: Pilgrims South Press, 1984.
- . “The Song Is Sung: Mervyn Thompson and Music Theatre.” Music in New Zealand 9 (Winter 1990): 38–43.

Stuart Young

THOMPSON, PAUL (1940–)

Evolving from Rochdale College—the 1970s Toronto attempt at a “free university”—was what would become one of the original alternative theaters in Canadian dramatic history, Theatre Passe Muraille. At the helm of this groundbreaking theater company, and having found his feet as technical director—alongside founding artistic director Martin Kinch—was Paul Thompson.

Born in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on May 4, 1940, Thompson grew up in southwestern Ontario, where he attended the University of Western Ontario from 1959 to 1963. After graduating with a B.A. with honors in English and French, Thompson moved to Paris (1964) and studied at the Sorbonne on a scholarship he had received from the French government. During his education at the Sorbonne Thompson immersed himself in European theater, attending up to twenty plays a month. While absorbing the French theatrical experience (which would later influence his studies on French AVANT-GARDE theater practitioner ANTONIN ARTAUD), Thompson forged an artistic relationship with director Roger Planchon. Thompson joined Planchon as stagiaire (an unpaid apprentice director) before returning to Ontario in 1965, where he spent the next year working towards his M.A. in French with a specialization in theater.

Upon receiving his master's degree, Thompson returned to Paris and joined Planchon's company in Lyons in 1965. Having absorbed the European (and particularly French) theatrical style, Thompson returned to CANADA in 1967. Eventually he would facilitate the creation of a Canadian style. Awaiting him in Canada were many young Canadian actors and writers who—having learned the ropes via the British, American, and European canon—were eager to crystallize a Canadian style with Canadian content. The aim was to generate work that spoke to a Canadian community and expressed the time, place, and interests of those who created, as well as those who witnessed, the theater.

In the spring of 1967 Thompson had the opportunity to work with a variety of young Canadian talent, having been hired as assistant director at the Stratford Festival. After his second season Thompson left the company to pursue his interest in creating plays based on the collective heritage he shared with the Canadian audience. What evolved out of this interest was collective creation, a Canadian theatrical form influenced by the work of European theatrical innovators. Collective creation (as it was called by those who practiced it) forged a method by which to develop a uniquely Canadian repertoire based on the Canadian experience.

Thompson's first effort through collective creation was 1970's Notes from Quebec, an adaptation of Jean-Claude Germaine's Duigidi Duigidi Ha Ha Ha! Following that were Doukhbors and Free Ride in 1971. In 1972 Thompson guided the creation of The Farm Show, which involved a cast of six relocating to the rural community of Clinton, Ontario, to create a performance that reflected the lives and hardships of its residents. Between 1970 and 1993 Thompson served at the helm of close to thirty collective creations that functioned to cultivate a Canadian dramatic language based in the experiences and sensibilities of those Canadians, both rural and cosmopolitan.

SELECT PLAYS: Notes from Quebec (adapted from Jean Claude Germaine's Duigidi Duigidi Ha Ha Ha!, 1970); Doukhbors (1971); Free Ride (1971); The Farm Show (1972)

FURTHER READING

Conolly, L. W., ed. Canadian Drama and the Critics. Toronto: Talonbooks, 1995.
 Healey, Michael. The Drawer Boy. Toronto: PUC Play Service, 1999.
 Rudakoff, Judith, ed. Dangerous Traditions: A Theatre Passe Muraille Anthology. Toronto: Blizzard, 1992.

Sarah Cervinka

THE THREEPENNY OPERA

Based on John Gay's The Beggar's Opera (1728) and first produced in Berlin in 1928, The Threepenny Opera (Die Dreigroschenoper) has a score by Kurt Weill (1900–1950) and a book and lyrics usually attributed to BERTOLT BRECHT—though a number of sources credit Brecht's associate Elisabeth Hauptmann (1897–1973) with having contributed more to the text than Brecht himself.

The opening-night triumph of The Threepenny Opera has become one of the legendary events of 20th-century theater. Beset by multiple difficulties, the production seemed destined for disaster. Instead, The Threepenny Opera became the sensation of the season, playing to sold-out houses and spawning a Berlin bar dedicated solely to the performance of its music. From GERMANY its success spilled over to the rest of Europe and eventually reached America. Of all the works in the Brecht canon, The Threepenny Opera has come closest to penetrating the popular consciousness. In fact, its signature song, "The Moritat of Mack the Knife" ("Die Moritat von Mackie Messer") rose to the number two spot on American popular music charts in 1959.

Set in a wholly imaginary Victorian London on the eve of "the coronation," the action centers on the conflict between Jonathan Peachum, who operates a stable of professional beggars, and Macheath, known as Mackie the Knife, the head of a gang of thieves and murderers. Peachum's daughter, Polly, whose pretty legs are one of her father's chief commercial assets, has fallen for Mackie and married him. An outraged Peachum determines to eliminate this threat to the family business by having Mackie arrested and hanged. Tiger Brown, the Chief of Police and Macheath's best friend, at first resists Peachum's efforts. But when Peachum threatens to disrupt the coronation if Mackie is not punished, Brown capitulates. Just before Mackie is to be hanged, however, a messenger from the Queen arrives with a pardon for Mackie, ending the drama on a sardonically happy note.

The staging of The Threepenny Opera, with its projected scene titles and its use of stylized lighting changes to mark the beginnings and endings of "operatic" moments, reflects the influence of Brecht's concurrent membership in the "dramaturgical collective" of ERWIN PISCATOR, a pioneer of the "EPIC" style. Such ALIENATION EFFECTS go hand in hand with Brecht's attempt to redefine opera in Marxist terms. The Threepenny Opera is a sustained travesty of bourgeois art and morals. Its sleazy characters and slangy music mock the nobility and uplift of conventional opera, while its amiably cynical portrayal of thieves, exploiters, and sexual predators suggests that they are no different from the middle-class businessmen who patronize the theater. According to Brecht, conventional opera exists to "impose" its reactionary social "views as it were incognito" through the illusion-making machinery of the stage (Willett, 1964). The spectator is thereby rendered passive and uncritical. In contrast, the projected titles and intrusive lighting effects of The Threepenny Opera, together with the criminality of its bourgeois characters, are meant to shock the spectator into a double critical awareness: of the artifice of the stage and of the contradictions of the social world.

FURTHER READING

Brecht, Bertolt. Brecht on Theatre. Ed. and tr. by John Willett. New York: Hill & Wang, 1964.

—. The Threepenny Opera. Tr. by Desmond Vesey and Eric Bentley. New York: Grove, 1964.

Speirs, Ronald. Brecht's Early Plays. Atlantic Highlands, N.J.: Humanities Press, 1982.

Martin Andrucki

THREE SISTERS

In Three Sisters (Tri sestry, 1900), the third of ANTON CHEKHOV's four dramatic masterpieces, the playwright continued the exploration of a radically new poetics he had begun in THE SEAGULL and UNCLE VANYA. Having abandoned the conventions of the so-called well-made play that preceded him, Chekhov turned to what critics have described as plays of indirect action. His decision to abandon heroic action as such sounded a death knell for heroes, who are replaced in Chekhov's work by ordinary characters. As the title itself suggests, Three Sisters has not one heroine, but many. One consequence of this shift is a greater emphasis on the ensemble of characters in the play.

Another consequence is that what is not said or done often proves just as important as what is said or done. An obvious example arises in the scene between Irina and Tuzenbakh that precedes the duel in which he is killed. The absence of a good-bye heightens the pathos of a parting that will be final. In other instances Chekhov employs language that is devoid of semantic meaning and that seems to say nothing at all, yet turns out to signify matters of great moment. When, for example, Masha and Vershinin fall in love, they acknowledge their interconnectedness through a vocalized melody. To Masha's "tram-tam-tam" Vershinin answers, "Tam-tam!" The meaning of this exchange is enhanced with each repetition, and at different times it signals first an affirmation of their love and later a secret code by which they identify and hail one another. Despite the enormous import of these utterances, their meaning remains largely hidden from the other characters. Chekhov also exploits trivial and seemingly meaningless phrases to similar effect. The famous phrase "Balzac was married in Berdichev," which seems to tumble randomly from Chebutykin's lips as he casually reads the newspaper, falls into this category. On the surface, it seems to have little relevance to the play; however, on closer inspection, it offers telling commentary on the argument about happiness that precedes it. The absence of meaning proves illusory.

Chekhov uses absence and displacement in larger ways to shape the play's themes. The problem of nostalgia begins with the absence of deceased parents. The three sisters recall how much grander, how much livelier, how much fuller life was when their parents, and especially their father, were alive. To them, the name-day party of act 1 seems a ghostly affair compared with parties their parents had thrown. In many ways their shared nostalgia for Moscow grows out of this familial longing. Their pining for other people and other times suggests a failure to define the present in its own terms, which in turn leads to the diminution of their lives that is a kind of violence that they do themselves and that makes them vulnerable to the manipulation of others. In fact, the play's metabasis, or reversal of fortune, arises from this vulnerability. The sisters and Andrei are susceptible to the machinations of Natasha and Protopopov for this reason and lose their home as a consequence. It is worth noting that the greatest absence of all, yet the most terrifying presence, is Protopopov's. His presence is signaled by a series of metonymies: the birthday cake he sends to Irina in act 1, the arrival of his carriage offstage in act 2.

Perhaps because Chekhov put so much emphasis on absences, the metonymic relation of the characters to the objects around them assumes an unusual significance in Three Sisters. Almost every character is associated with one or more objects, and those objects bear a clear relation to the characters' emotional dilemmas: Chebutykin's newspaper and notepad highlight his forgetfulness and aimless approach to knowledge, Andrei's violin becomes a means of escape from a life he cannot tolerate, Natasha's gauche green belt reflects her petit bourgeois values, and no amount of perfume can prevent the hands of Tuzenbakh's killer, Solyony, from smelling like a corpse. In other words, ordinary, everyday objects attain a significance that verges on the symbolic. This becomes particularly clear in the relation between the three sisters, particularly Masha, and the grand piano. Despite all that is negative in their lives, the three sisters retain a creative impulse that is closely allied to the determined optimism they express at the end of the play.

Although Chekhov considered giving Three Sisters to the renowned actress Vera Komissarzhevskaya, in the end he opted for a production at the MOSCOW ART THEATRE. The premiere took place on January 31, 1901, with a stellar cast: Chekhov's soon-to-be bride Olga Knipper played Masha, the future director VSEVOLOD MEYERHOLD performed the role of Tuzenbakh, and the Art Theatre's director KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY acted the part of Vershinin. Although Three Sisters was not the bombshell The Seagull had been, it enjoyed increasing success with each performance. The following season Chekhov himself participated in rehearsals and supervised the staging of the fire scene in act 3.

(See also Russia and the Soviet Union)

FURTHER READING

Brahms, Caryl. Reflections in a Lake: A Study of Chekhov's Four Greatest Plays. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1976.

Bristow, Eugene K. "Circles, Triads, and Parity in The Three Sisters." In Chekhov's Great Plays: A Critical Anthology, ed. by Jean-Pierre Barricelli. New York: New York Univ. Press, 1981. 76–95.

- Chekhov, Anton. Three Sisters. Tr. by Michael Frayn. London: Methuen, 2003.
- Gilman, Richard. Chekhov's Plays: An Opening Into Eternity. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1995.
- McVay, Gordon. Chekhov's "Three Sisters." London: Bristol Classical Press, 1995.

Timothy C. Westphalen

THREE TALL WOMEN

The happiest moment? Coming to the end of it, I think, when all the waves cause the greatest woes to subside.

—"A," Act 2

Three Tall Women, which premiered at the English Theater in Vienna, AUSTRIA, in 1991, marked EDWARD ALBEE's return to prominence in mainstream theater writing after a decade of relative inactivity and comparative obscurity. The play was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Drama (1994) and the Drama Critics' Circle, Lucille Lortel, and Outer Critics' Circle awards for best play.

In act 1 we meet three women who initially appear to be three separate characters who are linked in some way: "A" is a frail ninety-two-year-old woman in need of care, spending her remaining days in an elegantly furnished room; "B" is a fifty-two-year-old woman in the middle of her career; "C," the youngest, at twenty-six, is a legal representative who has come to sort out the old woman's estate. In act 2, however, it is clear that these three represent the same woman at different stages of her life.

The youngest woman cannot accept that she could ever become as bitter and opinionated as her older counterparts; the middle woman is in a state of confused optimism, unable to comprehend or accept that her son simply left home with no explanation. During the play we witness the painful scene of her emotional breakdown. The old woman, however, understands all too clearly how the lives of the younger women will turn out, for she is there already.

The text of the play is intricately crafted, and even before we become aware of the singularity of the character, the three women begin to comment upon each other's situation. The central themes of the play are conveyed in the narrative of the oldest character: she reflects upon her past life, missed opportunities, achievements, pleasures, and the pains. She recalls the best times of her life, her childhood and her marriage, and the worst, her husband's infidelity and her son's estrangement. The action of the play is static, but the energy is maintained in the sharp, often very funny dialogue. Here Albee returns to the device of the lengthy character monologue that he first explored effectively in THE ZOO STORY (1959).

The fourth character in the play is the mute figure of the son, whose silent comments and reactions to the unfolding story provide an unusual counterpoint to the main narrative. Perhaps Albee himself felt this same silent detachment and isolation in his own strained relationship with his mother. Three Tall Women is certainly dominated by several important autobiographical elements: the relationship between the play's protagonist and her gay son mirrors the author's own relationship with his adoptive mother, who was unable to accept his sexuality. Just as the son in the play leaves home to become his own person, so Albee did when he moved to Greenwich Village. He began to write this play one year after his mother died.

Albee's waning popularity in the early 1990s made it problematic to find an American producer willing to risk a production of this play. However, when the play finally opened in New York in January 1994, it was greeted by ecstatic critical response, including that of a critic from the New York Times, who wrote that the play is "so good it can only exist on the stage. A perfect illustration of why theatre is an indispensable art."

[See also United States]

FURTHER READING

- Gussow, Mel. Edward Albee: A Singular Journey. London: Oberon Bks., 1999.
- McCarthy, Gerry. Edward Albee. London: Macmillan, 1987.
- Roudané, Matthew C. Understanding Edward Albee. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1987.

Paul E. Fryer

THE THUNDERSTORM

The Thunderstorm (Groza, 1859) is a drama in five acts by ALEXANDR OSTROVSKY set in the imaginary town of Kalinov on the Volga River in RUSSIA. The heroine, Katerina, a sensitive young woman, is married to Tikhon, the obedient son of Kabanikha, a domestic tyrant. Katerina is pushed to desperation by her oppressive family environment, which Tikhon escapes by embarking on a business trip. In Tikhon's absence, his sister, Varvara—still unmarried and thus free to keep company with her friend Kudryash—steals a key so that Katerina and she can both go out to meet their lovers. Katerina has a brief affair with a young merchant, Boris, her first real love. But she is tormented by repentance and, during a storm on the Volga, feels impelled to confess her sin to her husband, as well as, incidentally, the townspeople who have taken shelter from the storm. Boris, who must obey his merchant uncle, Dikoy, is sent away as a punishment. Varvara and Kudryash go away together. Kabanikha and Tikhon make Katerina's life a misery, and she throws herself into the Volga.

The Thunderstorm renders vividly the gloom of the despotic family and the backwardness of a Russian provincial town. The mores of a river town, where Ostrovsky gathered material during his 1856 trip for the Maritime Ministry, are essential to the play. The town embodies elements of good and evil, with the gifted craftsman Kulygin and the irrepressible young lovers Varvara and Kudryash representing the one, and with the monstrous Kabanikha and Dikoy standing for the other. The natural setting and the small-town environment also play an important part in the action. Ostrovsky uses the sweep of the river to denote the freedom of nature, in contrast to the women's confinement in chambers. Many scenes occur on a high bank overlooking the Volga River. The love scene is romantically set in a ravine at night, and the last act also exploits darkness. Music and sound effects enhance the play's emotional impact. In act 4 the climax is reached in an especially powerful scene of thunder and lightning.

According to Marc Slonim, "The character of Katerina, with her dreams and religious yearnings, transcends the narrow limits of a social phenomenon; and her dramatic conflict with her environment, enhanced by mystical forebodings and the eerie atmosphere of storm, lightning and thunder, is symbolic of the inevitable clash between the 'pure soul' and crude reality" (Slonim, 1961). Katerina has an emotional nature, not a rational one; her religiousness is exalted, and she is as subject to impulse and indecision as a Dostoevskian character. Critic Nikolai Dobrolyubov hailed Katerina's suicide as a protest against tyranny and hence "a ray of light" in the dark world of oppression. Ostrovsky won the Uvarov Prize for The Thunderstorm, and since its first performance in 1859, the play has remained a major classic of the Russian stage, with directors and actors offering ever-new interpretations of Katerina. Czech composer Leoš Janáček based his 1921 opera Káťa Kabanová on The Thunderstorm.

FURTHER READING

- Hoover, Marjorie L. Alexander Ostrovsky. Boston: Twayne, 1981.
- Ostrovsky, Aleksandr. Groza [The thunderstorm]. Ed. by Norman Henley. Letchworth: Bradda Books, 1963.
- . The Storm. In Plays, tr. by Margaret Wettlin. Moscow: Progress, 1974.
- . The Storm. Tr. by Frank McGuinness. London: Faber, 1998.
- Peace, Richard. "A. N. Ostrovsky's The Thunderstorm: The Dramatization of Conceptual Ambivalence." Modern Language Review 84 (1990).
- Rahman, Kate Sealey. Ostrovsky: Reality and Illusion. Birmingham Slavonic Monographs No. 30. Birmingham: Univ. of Birmingham, 1999.
- Slonim, Marc. Russian Theater from the Empire to the Soviets. Cleveland: World Pub., 1961.

Liisa Byckling

TIAN HAN (1898–1968)

Chinese playwright and poet Tian Han was born Tian Shouchang in March 1898 in Changsha, Hunan Province. In 1916 he went to study in JAPAN, where he joined the Shaonian zhongguo xuehui (Society of Chinese Youth) founded by Li Dazhao and others. On his return to CHINA in 1921 he and several others founded the Chuang zao she (Creation Society), advocating ROMANTICISM for literature. Tian Han started playwriting in 1920 when he wrote his first play, A Night in a Café (Kafei dian zhi yiye). Afterwards he continued to write plays and founded the influential Nan guo she (South China Society), which became the forerunner in experimenting with and promoting modern drama in China. In 1930 Tian Han joined the Left-Wing Dramatists League, which marked the change of his political orientation. After 1949 Tian Han wrote fewer plays but assumed more administrative posts. The most important plays he wrote during this period include Guan Hanqing (1958), Princess Wencheng (Wencheng gongzhu, 1960), and Xie Yaohuan (1961). Tian was persecuted to death during the Cultural Revolution in December 1968.

As a man well versed in poetry and librettos, as well as drama, Tian Han spent about forty years in playwriting, which underwent, in his own words, three stages. His plays written before 1930 belonged to the first stage, which was marked by his embracing of the aesthetic proposition of art for art's sake. The poet seeking suicide for the sake of a dancer he salvaged in The Sound from an Old Pond (Gu tan de shengyin) and the manifestation of the protagonist shortly before her death in Tragedy on the Lake (Hu shang de beiju, 1928) are characteristic of Tian Han's ideas at this stage. Tian Han's self-criticism summarizing his theory and practice in drama, published in 1930, signaled his change to more realistic settings, which is best shown in An Evening Talk in Suzhou (Suzhou yehua), where Liu Shukang, an old painter, unexpectedly meets his lost daughter during the war. Liu's awakening self-reflection of his erstwhile indulgence in art is put in contrast with the realistic portraiture of the cruel reality of war. As Tian Han became more and more involved in the Left-Wing Dramatists League and advocated revolutionary ideology, his plays written at this time were considered to belong to the last stage of his playwriting, which was marked by the didactic overtone expressed in his plays, including his later historical plays such as Guan Hanqing (1958).

Tian Han's plays are generally not known for their well-made or intricate dramatic structure, but they excel in expository momentum and climactic mood, as well as artistic imagination. His use of lyric songs in his plays often adds to the success of the dramatic effect they produce.

[See also The White Snake]

SELECT PLAYS: A Night in a Café (Kafei dian zhi yiye, 1920); The Night the Tiger Was Captured (Huo hu zhi ye, 1924); Tragedy on the Lake (Hu shang de beiju, 1928); Death of a Famous Actor (Ming you zhi si, 1929); The Rainy Season (Mei yu, 1931); The Moonlight Sonata in 1932 (Yi jiu san er nian de yu guang qu, 1932); Seven Women in the Stormy Weather (Bao feng yu zhong de qi ge nüxing, 1932); Three Charming Ladies (Li ren xing, 1947); The White Snake (Bai she zhuan, 1952); Guan Hanqing (1958); Princess Wencheng (Wencheng gongzhu, 1960); Xie Yaohuan (1961)

FURTHER READING

- Chen, Xiaomei. Acting the Right Part: Political Theater and Popular Drama in Contemporary China. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 2002.
- Dong, Jian. Tian Han zhuan. Beijing: Beijing shiyue wenyi chubanshe, 1996.
- Kaplan, Randy Barbara. "The Pre-leftist One-Act Dramas of Tian Han (1898–1968)." Ph.D. diss., Ohio State Univ., 1986.
- Tian, Benxiang, Wu Ge, and Song Baozhen. Tian Han ping zhuan. Chongqing: Chongqing chubanshe, 1998.
- Zou, Ping. Tian Han: Zhongguo hua ju di dian ji ren. Shanghai: Shanghai Jiaoyu Chubanshe, 1999.

Hongchu Fu

TIANXIA DIYI LOU, HUAJU See THE FIRST HOUSE OF BEIJING DUCK

TIANXIAN PEI, HUANGMEI XI See MARRIED TO A CELESTIAL LADY

THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN

THOMAS TAYLOR's The Ticket-of-Leave Man takes place in London, ENGLAND, between 1863 and 1868. Robert Brierly, a naïve Lancashire lad, gets mixed up with scoundrels James Dalton, also known as "the Tiger," and Melter Moss, Dalton's accomplice. Brierly unknowingly passes a counterfeit bill Dalton gives him, and he is sent to prison by Detective Hawkshaw. Released early for good behavior, Brierly receives a "ticket-of-leave," equivalent to today's early parole, and tries to rebuild his life with his faithful friend and later wife, May Edwards. Hoping to hound Brierly into a life of crime with them, Dalton and Moss again make trouble for Brierly by informing all his employers of his prison sentence. Eventually Brierly happens upon Dalton and Moss and is enlisted to break into a former employer's office. Brierly uses this opportunity to get his revenge on the two crooks and assists Hawkshaw in the capture of Dalton and Moss, proving that "there may be some good left in a 'Ticket-of-Leave-Man,' after all."

The Ticket-of-Leave Man is an adaptation from the French La retour de Melun by Edouard-Louis-Alexandre Brisebarre and Eugène Nus and was first produced in 1863 at the Olympic Theatre in London, where it ran for a record 407 continuous performances, followed the next year by another long run of performances in New York, making The Ticket-of-Leave Man fairly popular in its day. Unfortunately, the play has lost its acclaim today because of changing popular taste. Despite this, Detective Hawkshaw has remained a memorable character and is a precursor to Sherlock Holmes as the master sleuth. Since his first appearance in The Ticket-of-Leave Man, Hawkshaw has been re-created in various plays, movies, a ballet, and a Broadway musical.

Like many Victorian literary works, The Ticket-of-Leave Man carries deep moral overtones. While it denounces gambling and alcohol as the gateway to further sin and self-destruction, the overall battle between good and evil is portrayed through the fight for Brierly's moral conscience. Evil in all forms is denounced and demonstrated as corrosive, but still the play infers that the best men cannot be worn down through evil's constant harassment. Another issue of morality in the play is the applicability of past reputations to changed individuals. Should a man's past constantly affect others' perspective on that man? Hawkshaw recognizes the good in Brierly and sees him as having paid his debt to society, suggesting that people must be given a chance to prove that they can outlive their reputations, and when they do, society must also move past its prejudices against that individual.

Although too didactic by today's standards, at the time of its first production The Ticket-of-Leave Man appealed to its Victorian viewers, as evidenced by its many past performances. Today The Ticket-of-Leave Man receives little attention from critics and general drama enthusiasts alike, much like nearly all of Taylor's works. This lack of interest in one of the most prolific and popularly influential writers of the Victorian era demonstrates the continually transitioning general tastes in literature and drama.

FURTHER READING

- Mackin, Dorothy. Melodrama Classics: Six Plays and How to Stage Them. New York: Sterling, 1982.
- Moses, Montrose. Representative British Dramas: Victorian and Modern. Boston: Little, Brown, 1925.
- Turner, Paul. Victorian Poetry, Drama, and Miscellaneous Prose, 1832–1890. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1990.

Chad Lawrence McClane

TILL DAMASKUS See TO DAMASCUS

THE TIME OF YOUR LIFE

For its producers, the THEATRE GUILD, WILLIAM SAROYAN's The Time of Your Life did not have a propitious beginning. When the play started tryouts in New Haven, Connecticut, it was, according to Lawrence Langner (1951), "in a state of incredible chaos." No one knew what the play was about—actors, audience, even the reviewers. By the time the play opened in New York on October 25, 1939, the director had defected, to be replaced by a triumvirate of Eddie Dowling (who played Joe), Langner, and Saroyan himself; new actors had been hired (Gene Kelly as Harvey and Celeste Holme as Mary); and Saroyan, more problem than asset, had been banished from the stage. When Saroyan had difficulty ending the play, PHILIP BARRY suggested Joe's slow exit. Because Saroyan saw the climax of the play as the patriotic eruption of the pinball machine, Langner found a model maker to create just the right contraption for the desired effect. Brooks Atkinson called Saroyan the "imp of modern drama"; others called him a pain in the neck. Still, his lack of artistic discipline, mixed with his fondness for undistinguished people, somehow worked in the theater, where he received both the Pulitzer Prize and the Drama Critics' Circle Award for The Time of Your Life.

In Nick's waterfront honky-tonk in San Francisco, Joe, a generous person who seems to sit at a table all day and drink champagne, passes the time of his life. Into this bar come a great variety of people—common people mainly, although a society couple come slumming. At the end of the bar sits an Arab, who speaks one line, frequently repeated: "No foundation. All the way down the line." Harry is a dancer and a monologist; Wesley plays the piano; Willie plays the pinball machine. Dudley R. Bostwick tries desperately to call Elsie Mandelspiegel on the telephone to ask her to marry him. Tom, who runs errands for Joe, falls in love with Kitty Duvall, a prostitute. Joe protects Kitty from the clutches of Blick from the vice squad and encourages Tom and Kitty to get married: "Go ahead," Joe tells Tom, "correct the errors of the world." Kit Carson tells fantastic stories of his past: "Ever try to herd cattle on a bicycle?" he asks Joe. A drunkard, a newsboy, and a good-time girl all play their parts in this "slice of life." Even a good cop gets to tell of his dreams, but the pivotal figure is Joe, who talks to everyone and has Tom give money to people for him and buy a gun for him. When Blick harasses Kitty, Joe tries to shoot him, but the gun does not fire. Then Nick announces that Blick is dead; Kit Carson explains: "I shot a man once. In San Francisco. In 1939, I think it was." Joe then gives him the revolver and walks slowly offstage. He waves; the marble game goes into its American routine again.

Throughout Saroyan's plays there is a strong feeling reminiscent of the RKO Keith vaudeville circuit. No vaudeville act was better than Mr. MacGregor playing the bugle in MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS; and scattered events from The Time of Your Life all suggest the vaudeville lineup: the storyteller, a dancer, a pianist, a pinball machine artist, a monologist in the phone booth and at the bar, a drunkard's appeal, the comic social scene. This was the theater Saroyan enjoyed. Aram Saroyan, the dramatist's son, described his father as "the irrepressible old song-and-dance man" (1983). A fitting epitaph.

FURTHER READING

- Dusenbury, Winifred L. The Theme of Loneliness in Modern American Drama. Gainesville: Univ. of Florida Press, 1960.
- Langner, Lawrence. The Magic Curtain. New York: Dutton, 1951.
- Nathan, George Jean. The Magic Mirror. New York: Knopf, 1960.
- Saroyan, Aram. William Saroyan. San Diego, Harcourt, 1983.
- Vernon, Granville. "The Time of Your Life." Commonweal 31 (November 19, 1939): 78.
- Whitmore, Jon. William Saroyan: A Research and Production Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1995.

Walter J. Meserve

TO, RAYMOND (1946–)

Raymond To (Kwok-wai) started his association with the performing arts at the early age of six when he participated in radio broadcasting. He has kept up that interest in the theater, films, and Cantonese opera since then. After graduation from the University of Hong Kong he took up teaching. During those years he promoted drama in school and started to write plays for performance. In 1992 he gave up teaching and held the post of playwright-in-residence of the Hong Kong Repertory Theatre for almost a decade.

To is a prolific playwright. He has written forty-six plays, many of which have been adapted into screenplays and television dramas. Many of his plays hark back with nostalgia to the experience, and celebrate the values, of earlier eras. His Where Love Abides (Renjian youqing, 1986) celebrates the warm interpersonal relationships of three generations in a family business over 100 years. I Have a Date with Spring (Wo he chuntian you ge yuehui, 1992), a musical that brings back nostalgic memories of the 1960s, was such a popular success that it ran for eighty performances and was made into a film. Other major works demonstrated To's affection for Cantonese opera. Entrance on the P-side (Hudumen, 1982) deals with the Cantonese opera milieu. The Legend of the Mad Phoenix (Nanhai shisan lang, 1993) is about the life of a legendary, eccentric, but brilliant Cantonese opera lyricist and composer. A Sentimental Journey (Jianxue fusheng, 1999) recounts the lives of two of the most popular Cantonese opera stars in the second half of the century. The subject matter, the values, and the warm affection in To's plays appealed to a wide audience, and the scripts attracted to the stage celebrities in films and television to act in those plays. The success of these major works created much excitement and changed stage performances from non-profit-making cultural events into popular and profitable Broadway-style shows. The box-office success of I Have a Date with Spring prompted To to found Springtime Production in October 1992. The company is still running as the only existing theater company in Hong Kong that operates on a commercial basis. Among To's works there are also plays that carry immediate political associations. I Am Hong Kong (Wo xi xianggang ren, 1985) was a prompt response to the 1984 signing of the Sino-British Joint Declaration. The play foregrounds a Hong Kong, rather than Chinese, identity for the Hong Kong people. It has received much critical acclaim. A Foxy Tale (Liao-zhai, 1989) is an adaptation of a traditional ghost tale. The intricate love-hate relationship between the man and the fox depicted in the play is interpreted by many critics as the playwright's comment on the Tiananmen student movement. Raymond To has received the Hong Kong Artists' Guild Playwright of the Year Award (1989) and many other drama awards.

Raymond To works mainly in the local Cantonese cultural context and idiom and is able to bring popular support back to the theater with some of his major works. But To's contribution to drama is not recognized only in Hong Kong. The films based on his screenplays earned him an array of local and regional awards. He won the Golden Horse Film Award (1997) for the film The Legend of the Mad Phoenix, which also won a Hong Kong Film Award (1998). He received the honor of the Bronze Bauhinia in 1999 for his contribution to the arts.

[See also China]

SELECT PLAYS: Entrance on the P-side (Hudumen, 1982); I Am Hong Kong (Wo xi xianggang ren, 1985); Where Love Abides (Renjian youqing, 1986); A Foxy Tale (Liaozhai, 1989); I Have a Date with Spring (Wo he chuntian you ge yuehui, 1992); The Legend of the Mad Phoenix (Nanhai shisan lang, 1993); A Sentimental Journey (Jian xue fusheng, 1999)

FURTHER READING

Fong, Gilbert, and Hardy Tsoi, eds. Xianggang huajia lunwen ji [Essays on Hong Kong Theater]. Hong Kong: High Noon Production Co., 1992.

Toy, Raymond. Where Love Abides. Tr. by Y. P. Cheng. In An Oxford Anthology of Contemporary Chinese Drama, ed. by Martha P. Y. Cheung and Jane C. C. Lai. Hong Kong: Oxford Univ. Press, 1997. 665–749.

Jane Lai and Jessica Yeung

TO DAMASCUS

To Damascus (Till Damaskus, 1898, 1904) is a trilogy by AUGUST STRINDBERG. The first and most important part, in five acts, was written and published in 1898 and had its premiere at the Royal Dramatic Theater in Stockholm in 1900. The second part, in four acts, was written and published in 1898 and first performed, as an independent play, at the Lorensberg Theater in Gothenburg in 1924. The third part, in nine scenes, was written in 1901, published in 1904, and first performed at the Concert House in Stockholm in 1926.

The subject matter of To Damascus is largely based on Strindberg's experiences in his second marriage, with Frida Uhl, with whom he had a daughter; his stay with her family in AUSTRIA; his so-called Inferno crisis in Paris in the mid-1890s; his visits to a doctor friend in southern SWEDEN; and his considering joining a monastery in BELGIUM. For the description of the protagonist, fairy-tale figures such as Merlin and Robert le Diable, who both convert from evil to good and withdraw from the world, were also of importance.

The first part describes how the Stranger meets the Lady, abducts her from her husband, and marries her. Economic need drives the couple to seek refuge with her family, where they find a mixed reception. The Stranger leaves the Lady after she has read his latest book, which she had promised him not to read. Having wounded himself in a fall, the Stranger is brought to a sanctuary, where he undergoes a moral crisis. Retracing his steps, part of the time accompanied by the Lady, he discovers that he has treated many people unjustly. Returning to his point of departure, he finds a money order that had been awaiting him all this time at the post office. The play ends with his conclusion "It was my own stupidity—or meanness. . . . I didn't want to be made a fool of by life—and so I was!" and with his hesitant following the Lady into the church: "Well, I can pass through, of course, but I won't stay."

In a letter to his children Strindberg proudly describes the drama—not yet planned as part of a trilogy—as belonging to "a new genre, fantastic and brilliant as Lucky Per but with a contemporary setting and a completely real background." He explains its highly unusual structure to a colleague: "The art lies in the composition, which symbolizes the repetition Kierkegaard speaks of. The action unrolls forward to the Asylum; there it hits the 'point' and then is kicked back, the pilgrimage, the relearning, the ruminations; and then it starts anew in the same place where the game ends and where it began."

On his way to Damascus, Saul heard a voice speaking to him, saying: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks" (Acts 26:14). This is what Strindberg refers to in the quoted passage. Just as Saul was converted into Paul, so the Stranger in the Asylum is converted from his earlier view that he is an innocent scapegoat to the view that he has continually trespassed against others. He now accepts that he must retrace his steps as a penitent pilgrim. That the road to Damascus is also a via dolorosa appears from the Mother's words: "My son, you have left Jerusalem and you are on your way to Damascus. Go there. The same way you came. And place a cross at each station, but stop at the seventh. You don't have fourteen, as He did."

With his To Damascus trilogy Strindberg launched dramas more subjective than any written before. Although the protagonist is not himself present in all the scenes, he is so indirectly, since many of the other characters are projections of his own self. Similarly, the scenery surrounding him represents not only an outer but even more an inner reality, the protagonist's mental state. The key word is half reality.

For all its novelty, To Damascus has much in common with the medieval morality play and its characters, named after the qualities they represent. Less didactic, Strindberg stresses the representativity of his characters by turning them into nameless types: the Lady, the Beggar, the Doctor, the Old Man, the Mother, and so on. More universal than any of these labels is the one given the protagonist: the Stranger, in Swedish den Okände, meaning literally the Unknown, that is, not knowing himself, a modern Everyman. His universality is ensured also through various historical and mythical analogies; in Evert Sprinchorn's words: "If the Stranger is Saul being persecuted by God, he is also Lucifer asserting his pride and Loki stirring up mischief. He is Jacob wrestling with God; he is Cain against whom every man's hand is raised; and he is Jesus who must suffer through the stations of the cross" (1982). The Stranger could also be compared with Dante Alighieri, who has to pass through Inferno and Purgatorio before he, guided by Beatrice, Strindberg's Lady, can reach Heaven.

To Damascus II shows the same struggle on the part of the Stranger as the first part. His closing speech to the Confessor—"Come, priest, before I change my mind!"—reveals that he has come only a bit farther on his road to Damascus. Truly dreamlike is the famous banquet-tavern scene in act 3 with its spectacular transformation of the set before the eyes of the audience.

In To Damascus III the Stranger finds himself in the vicinity of a monastery. He there encounters his double in the form of the Tempter, who does not disappear until the Stranger has found eternal rest in the white, nonsectarian monastery, where the key concepts are humanity and resignation.

The form of To Damascus, notably of its first part, is so innovative that a Swedish scholar has called it a mutation. Sprinchorn (1982) has predicted that it will soon be "a banality of criticism to say that twentieth-century drama begins with To Damascus. EXPRESSIONISM, SURREALISM and the theater of the absurd are all clearly adumbrated in this pioneering work."

[See also Religion and Drama]

FURTHER READING

- Blackwell, Marilyn Johns. "Syn och subjektivitet i Till Damaskus I." Strindbergiana 15 (2000): 65–85.
- Brandell, Gunnar. Strindberg in Inferno. Tr. by Barry Jacobs. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard Univ. Press, 1974.
- Karnick, Manfred. Rollenspiel und Welttheater. Munich: Fink, 1980.
- Sprinchorn, Evert. Strindberg as Dramatist. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1982.
- Stockenström, Göran. Ismael i öknen: Strindberg som mystiker. Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, Historia Litterarum, 5. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 1972.
- Törnqvist, Egil. Strindbergian Drama: Themes and Structure. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1982.

Egil Törnqvist

TOKYO NOTES

Tokyo Notes (Tōkyō Nōto, 1994), a Japanese play that encapsulates HIRATA ORIZA's dramatic method, won the Kunio Kishida Drama Prize, JAPAN's top playwriting award, in 1995. Hirata's most successful work, it has also toured in North America (2000), Europe (2002), and AUSTRALIA (2004). The subject matter and style of this hyperrealistic play were inspired by Ozu Yasujiro's 1953 film Tokyo Story; as in Ozu's films (which many critics claim captured the essence of the Japanese), Hirata's characters demonstrate an aversion to conflict and strong displays of emotion; little is shown but much is suggested. Similarly, Hirata dislikes conventional plots and situations that other playwrights might exploit for dramatic effect. His desultory, laconic dialogue recalls the work of KUBOTA MANTARŌ.

The play is set in the year 2004, in the lobby of a suburban Tokyo art gallery, where the five Akiyama siblings and their in-laws have gathered to discuss what to do about their aging parents. Yumi, the oldest sister, looks after her parents back home, while her brothers and sisters live in the city. As in Ozu's film, most of the children are too busy with their own lives and careers to be concerned with their old parents, but Hirata adds to this motif of family dissolution Yoshie's impending divorce from Yumi's little brother, Yūji.

The play's setting—the gallery where the Akiyamas meet is exhibiting works by Johannes Vermeer, evacuated from a war-torn Europe—questions the nature of Japan's relationship to the world. (In 1994, when Hirata wrote this play, the Bosnian war was threatening to spill beyond the borders of the former Yugoslavia, and Japan's role as a UN peacekeeper in CAMBODIA was a topic of hot debate.) Though several characters are involved with the war (as protestors, peacekeepers, or profiteers), the play critiques Japan's overall reluctance to take a moral position in international affairs.

Vermeer's paintings ask us how we view and represent reality, a dominant concern in Hirata's own theories on DRAMATURGY, direction, and ACTING, which are a reaction not only to the rational humanism of orthodox SHINGEKI ("new theater"), but also to the physicality and metatheatrical experimentation of ANGURA, the "underground" theater that TERAYAMA SHŪJI, KARA JŪRŌ, and SUZUKI TADASHI would define as the dominant tone for 1960s–1990s Japanese theater. Hirata advocates a return to REALISM and the well-made play, but rejects the use of drama as a medium to push an ideological message. Theater should provide "an objective sense of time as it is lived—quietly," he writes. Claiming that shingeki's attempt to assimilate European modes of dramatic discourse actually distorted theatrical expression in Japan, he aims to reform stage dialogue to create a "contemporary colloquial theatre" reflecting how Japanese actually speak. Tokyo Notes is a manifesto of this new, "quiet" realism. Like Vermeer, Hirata is a realist who is nonetheless aware of the limits and tricks of representation. Art-loving Yumi points to this paradox when, casting doubt on Antoine de Saint-Exupéry's dictum that "what is essential is invisible to the eye," she asks, "How can you see with the heart? Everybody's hearts are different."

FURTHER READING

- Hirata Oriza. Engeki nyūmon [Introduction to theater]. Tokyo: Kōdansha, 1998.
- . Tokyo Notes. Tr. by Rose-Marie Makino-Fayolle. Paris: Les Solitaires Intempestifs, 1998.
- . "Tokyo Notes: A Play by Hirata Oriza." Tr. by M. Cody Poulton. Asian Theatre Journal 19, no. 1 (Spring 2002): 1–120.
- . Tōkyō Nōto. Video recording with English subtitles by Cody Poulton. Tokyo: Kinokuniya Shoten, 1998.

M. Cody Poulton

TOLLER, ERNST (1893–1939)

Ernst Toller was born on December 1, 1893, in Samotschin, POLAND. His life was as turbulent as his dramas. Indeed, it has even provided the material for a play about him, Tankred Dorst's (1925–) Toller (1968). Toller began to write poetry and plays while still at school. When World War I started in 1914, he volunteered but was overcome psychologically by the horrors of trench warfare and was discharged in 1917 on medical grounds.

From then until his suicide in New York in 1939, Toller was relentless in struggling against militarism and social injustice. His first play, TRANSFIGURATION (Die Wandlung: Das Ringen eines Menschen, 1917), used the language and imagery of EXPRESSIONISM to shock audiences out of their steadfast patriotism. The play concludes with a call for "Revolution! Revolution!" When Transfiguration premiered to critical acclaim in 1919, Emperor William II (1859–1941) had already abdicated and the Weimar Republic had been proclaimed. The proclamation, however, did not put an end to political turmoil. For the Right the revolution had gone too far; for the Communists and Socialists it had not gone far enough because it brought no fundamental social changes.

Active in the Left, Toller played an important part in the fight to make Bavaria into a soviet republic to be governed by workers' councils. After the rebellion was quashed, he was sentenced to five years in prison for treason. While serving his sentence, Toller wrote most of his important plays: Masses and Man: A Fragment of the Social Revolution of the Twentieth Century (Masse-Mensch: Ein Stück aus der sozialen Revolution des 20. Jahrhunderts, 1920), The Machine-Wreckers: A Drama of the English Luddites (Die Maschinenstürmer: Ein Drama aus der Zeit der Ludditenbewegung in England, 1922), Hinkemann: A Tragedy in Three Acts (Hinkemann: Eine Tragödie in drei Akten, 1923), Wotan Unleashed: A Comedy (Der entfesselte Wotan: Komödie, 1924), and The Scorned Lover's Revenge: Gallant Puppet Play After a Story by Cardinal Bandello (Die Rache des verhöhten Liebhabers: Galantes Puppenspiel nach einer Geschichte des Kardinals Bandello, 1925). After his release in 1924, Toller campaigned vigorously on behalf of other political prisoners. Several more plays followed: Hoppla! Such Is Life! (Hoppla, wir leben! Ein Vorspiel und fünf Akte, 1927), Draw the Fires! A Historical Play (Feuer aus den Kesseln: Historisches Schauspiel, 1930), Mary Baker Eddy (Wunder in Amerika: Schauspiel, with Hermann Kesten [1900–1996], 1931), and The Blind Goddess (Die blinde Göttin: Schauspiel, 1931). The manuscript for an adaptation of Molière's Le Bourgeois gentilhomme (1670) together with WALTER HASENCLEVER (1890–1940) and Hermann Kesten as Bourgeois Remains Bourgeois (Bourgeois bleibt bourgeois, 1929) is lost.

For the Nazis, who seized power in 1933, Toller was doubly anathema, because he was both Jewish and a leftist. In exile Toller was a leading figure in the international fight against fascism in Europe and after 1936 in North America. The two plays from this period, No More Peace! A Thoughtful Comedy (Nie wieder Friede: Komödie, 1937) and Pastor Hall (Pastor Hall: Schauspiel, 1939), were first published in English.

Against this background, it is no surprise that Toller's themes were political ones. The injustice, exploitation, and everyday cruelty that made drastic change urgent were depicted in Transfiguration, The Machine-Wreckers, Hinkemann, and Hoppla! Such Is Life! Revolutions in process were analyzed in Masses and Man and Draw the Fires! The threats from the increasingly menacing Right were diagnosed in Wotan Unleashed and Pastor Hall.

Toller's enduring significance as a playwright comes from the way he explored possibilities for performance at a time when new media were emerging. Toller appropriated expressionist techniques such as masking to great effect, as in the scene of the dancing skeletons in Transfiguration. Dream sequences disrupt the illusion of REALISM, even in the polemical No More Peace! From his work with the spectacles of proletarian theater, Toller took the massed chorus heard in Masses and Man. For Hoppla! Such Is Life! Toller used film sequences and sound effects in one of the earliest multimedia events. Not until DARIO FO (1926–) would political theater again be so creative and exciting.

Toller's other contribution came from his insight that the isolation most people feel in their ordinary lives under capitalism is the stuff of modern TRAGEDY. Toller's most sophisticated analysis of how capitalism and technology reinforce each other and what happens to workers as a result comes in The Machine-Wreckers. Ostensibly set during the Luddite movement (1811–1816) when English textile workers tried to preserve their livelihoods by smashing power looms, the play reflects the impact of factory rationalization (Taylorism) in the 20th century. The rhythm of work is now determined by the machine, not by human beings. The rage of the workers is ineffective against the machines because their resistance is sporadic and unorganized. Instead of cooperating, the workers attack each other. Instead of learning the causes of their slide into pauperism, they are inspired by visionary language that cannot grasp the logic of advancing capitalism.

The alienation of ordinary life is captured poignantly at the opening of Hinkemann. The title character pities a songbird: "A mother! A mother put out the eyes of her goldfinch with a red-hot knitting needle because some newspaper wrote that blind birds sing better." The play follows the structure of Georg Büchner's (1813–1837) Woyzeck (written in 1836–1837, published in 1879). Eugen Hinkemann, emasculated in the war, loses his wife Grete to Paul Grosshahn (puns are possible: Hinkemann, "Limpman"; Grosshahn, "Bigcock"). Desperate to make money, Hinkemann takes a job at a freak show, where his trick will be to bite through the throats of rats and mice and drink their blood. The grotesque act distantly resembles the situation of Franz Kafka's (1883–1924) hunger artist, with the difference that here the inexorable economic forces pit two beings against each other. It is a cruel irony that Hinkemann must torture small creatures just as the goldfinch had been tortured for the sake of entertainment. Although he and his wife are reconciled at the end, she commits suicide because it all seems so hopeless. As the curtain falls, he is preparing to do likewise. Even those inured to the economy of pain will recognize themselves in Toller's plays.

SELECT PLAYS: Transfiguration (Die Wandlung: Das Ringen eines Menschen, 1917); Masses and Man: A Fragment of the Social Revolution of the Twentieth Century (Masse-Mensch: Ein Stück aus der sozialen Revolution des 20. Jahrhunderts, 1920); The Machine-Wreckers: A Drama of the English Luddites in a Prologue and Five Acts (Die Maschinenstürmer: Ein Drama aus der Zeit der Ludditenbewegung in England, 1922); Hinkemann: A Tragedy in Three Acts (Hinkemann: Eine Tragödie in drei Akten, 1923); Wotan Unleashed: A Comedy (Der entfesselte Wotan: Komödie, 1924); The Scorned Lover's Revenge: Gallant Puppet Play After a Story by Cardinal Bandello (Die Rache des verhöhten Liebhabers: Galantes Puppenspiel nach einer Geschichte des Kardinals Bandello, 1925); Hoppla! Such Is Life! (Hoppla, wir leben! Ein Vorspiel und fünf Akte, 1927); Draw the Fires! A Historical Play (Feuer aus den Kesseln: Historisches Schauspiel, 1930); The Blind Goddess (Die blinde Göttin: Schauspiel, 1931); Mary Baker Eddy (Wunder in Amerika: Schauspiel, with Hermann Kesten, 1931); No More Peace! A Thoughtful Comedy (Nie wieder Friede: Komödie, 1937); Pastor Hall (Pastor Hall: Schauspiel, 1939)

FURTHER READING

- Benson, Renate. German Expressionist Drama: Ernst Toller and Georg Kaiser. London: Macmillan, 1984.
- Cafferty, Helen L. "Pessimism, Perspectivism, and Tragedy: Hinkemann Reconsidered." German Quarterly 54, no. 1 (1981): 44–58.
- Davies, Cecil W. The Plays of Ernst Toller: A Revaluation. Amsterdam: Harwood Academic, 1996.
- Dove, Richard. He Was a German: A Biography of Ernst Toller. London: Libris, 1990.
- Ossar, Michael. Anarchism in the Dramas of Ernst Toller: The Realm of Necessity and the Realm of Freedom. Albany: State Univ. of New York Press, 1980.
- Pittock, Malcolm. Ernst Toller. Boston: Twayne, 1979.

Arnd Bohm

TOLSTOY, LYOV (1828–1910)

Lyov Tolstoy's reputation as a novelist has obscured the significance of his dramatic output, which amounted to fifteen or so works, including unfinished plays. Apart from THE POWER OF DARKNESS (Vlast' t'my, 1888) and The Fruits of Enlightenment (Plody prosveshcheniya, 1889), very few have been consistently revived. Nevertheless, in his theoretical writings Tolstoy placed considerable importance on drama, especially its moralizing and didactic potential. In his What Is Art? (1897) he inveighs against traditional aesthetic theories characteristic of educated European taste and advocates a simple and straightforward realistic art of the people that is moral, educational, and intelligible. In many respects he echoes the sentiments of radical Russian utilitarians such as Nikolai Chernyshevsky, as well as anticipating the theories of socialist realist drama. This made his views popular with Vladimir Ilich Lenin, while his hostility to the likes of Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, RICHARD WAGNER, and even William Shakespeare has left others feeling rather bemused by his apparent eccentricity.

All that survives of Tolstoy's first dramatic efforts are fragments of a COMEDY, A Family of the Nobility (Dvoryanskoye semrstvo, 1856), and a variant of the same play, A Practical Person (Prakticheskii chelovek, 1856), as well as scenes from two comedies on the same topic, An Uncle's Blessing (Dyadushkino blagosloveniy, 1856) and Free Love (Svobodnaya lyubov', 1856). He also wrote a farcical comedy for domestic performance about a group of radical students. The Nihilist (Nigilist, 1866). However, his first full-length work was An Infected Family (Zarazhyonnoye semeistvo, 1864), a comedy ridiculing newfangled ideas of "the emancipated woman" and the so-called nihilists who are also targeted in Ivan Turgenev's novel Fathers and Sons (1862). The First Distiller (Pervyy vinokur, 1886) marks a change in dramatic direction after Tolstoy abandoned the Russian Orthodox faith for one of his own, based on moral self-perfection, sexual abstinence, temperance, pacifism, nonresistance to evil, and the cultivation of an idealized code of peasant values. The play is a kind of temperance tract, the first distiller of alcohol being the devil. Based on his own short story "The Imp and the Crust," the play shows how an imp employed by the devil suborns a group of peasants into distilling their own vodka, thereby corrupting their hitherto innocent way of life.

His most famous play, The Power of Darkness, has a distinctly religious theme, and while it reveals the spiritual darkness of the lives of Russian peasants, deriving from their impoverished environment, it concludes with the possibility of enlightenment and salvation, unlike the usual naturalistic plays of the period, which tended to be pessimistically determinist. Like many of his plays, this was initially banned, and productions of his other plays tended to be either posthumous or deferred. The Fruits of Enlightenment is an ironic satire at the expense of a landed gentry whose beliefs in spiritualism are shown to be more primitive than the supposed superstitions of their inferiors and who are outwitted by a serving girl into honoring an agreement to part with land to their peasants. The Living Corpse (Zhivoy trup, 1900) targets RUSSIA's judicial system, especially the laws on divorce, as well as its crude intrusion into private lives. The living corpse in question is a drunken husband who feigns suicide in order to allow his wife to make a better marriage, only to find himself, his wife, and her new husband dragged before the courts. He chooses to commit suicide for real, both to subvert the course of injustice and to liberate his wife. The Light Shined in Darkness (I svet vo t'me svetit, 1900) is an autobiographical work derived from Tolstoy's own experience as someone who wished to turn over his estate to the peasants but was opposed by his own family. The play also refers to the plight of a dissident sect of "Spirit Wrestlers," the Dukhobors, who suffered persecution in Russia and whom Tolstoy assisted in emigrating to Canada. Another temperance play, The Cause of It All (Ot nyei vse kachestva, 1910), concerns a tramp with radical ideas who spends the night in a peasant hut and makes a moralizing, emancipatory appeal to a husband who returns in a drunken state and whose wife the tramp defends from abuse. The twist in the action occurs the following morning when the guest, who has also revealed a taste for the bottle, decamps with the couple's supply of tea and sugar, is apprehended by the peasant, but is offered forgiveness instead of a beating. In 1911 a sequence of twenty-one miniplays, The Wisdom of Children (Detskaya mudrost', 1911), on subjects ranging from religion to war, capital punishment, art, science, and education, appeared posthumously.

Dramatized versions of Tolstoy's novels Resurrection (1899) and Anna Karenina (1878) were staged in FRANCE in 1902 and 1907, respectively, and during the 20th century dramatizations were made of War and Peace (1865–1869), as well as an operatic version by Sergei Prokofiev (1944). A stage version of Kholstomer, also known as The Story of a Horse (1886), was produced very successfully in Leningrad during the 1970s and was subsequently performed abroad.

[See also Religion and Drama]

PLAYS: A Family of the Nobility (Dvoryanskoye semstvo, 1856); Free Love (Svobodnaya lyubov', 1856); A Practical Person (Prakticheskii chelovek, 1856); An Uncle's Blessing (Dyadushkino blagoslovenye, 1856); An Infected Family, also known as A Contaminated Family (Zarazyonnoye semestvo, 1864); The Nihilist (Nigilist, 1866); Adaptation of the Legend of King Aggei, also translated as Dramatic Scenes About the Pan Who Became a Beggar (Dramaticheskaya abrabotka legendy ob Aggeye, 1886); The First Distiller; or, How the Imp Earned a Crust (Pervyy vinokur, ili, Kak chertyonok kratushku zaslužil, 1886); Peter the Baker, also known as Peter the Publican (Pyotr khlebnik, 1886); The Power of Darkness; or, If the Claw Is Caught, the Whole Bird Is Lost (Vlast' t'my, ili, Kogotok uvyaz—vsey ptichke propast', 1888); The Fruits of Enlightenment (Plody prosveshcheniya, 1889); The Living Corpse (Zhivoy trup, 1900); The Light Shineth in Darkness (I svet vo t'me svetit, 1900); The Newcomer and the Peasant (Priezhii i krest'yanin, 1909); The Cause of It All (Ot nyei vse kachestva, 1910); The Wisdom of Children (Detskaya mudrost', 1911)

FURTHER READING

- Christian, R. F. Tolstoy: A Critical Introduction. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1969.
- Jones, Gareth W. "Tolstoy Staged in Paris, Berlin, and London." In The Cambridge Companion to Tolstoy, ed. by Donna Tussing Orwin. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2002.
- Simmons, Ernest J. Introduction to Tolstoy's Writings. Chicago: Univ. of Chicago Press, 1968.
- Tolstoy, Lyov. Plays. Tr. by Louise Maude and Aylmer Maude. 3d ed. London: Oxford Univ. Press, 1957. [Contains The First Distiller, The Power of Darkness, The Fruits of Enlightenment, The Living Corpse, The Cause of It All, and The Light Shineth in Darkness.]
- . Plays, 1856–1886. Tr. by Marvin Kantor with Tanya Tulchinsky. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern Univ. Press, 1994.
- . Stories and Dramas. Tr. by Lydia Turin, Mrs. H. M. Lucas, and C. J. Hogarth. London: Dent, 1926.
- . "The Wisdom of Children." In Father Sergius, and Other Stories, ed. by Hagberg Wright. New York: Dodd, 1912.

Nick Worrall

TOMODACHI See FRIENDS

TONIGHT WE IMPROVISE

Tonight We Improvise (Questa sera si recita a soggetto) is a play in three acts by LUIGI PIRANDELLO completed in March 1929 during his self-imposed exile in Berlin. Between the successful premiere in remote Königsberg, GERMANY, on January 25, 1930, and the criticized Berlin opening at the Lessingtheater on May 31, 1930, Pirandello enjoyed a favorable reception in Turin, ITALY, on April 14, 1930, with Guido Salvini's company's performance. If with SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR (Sei personaggi in cerca d'autore, 1921) Pirandello began destroying the barrier between stage and audience, in Tonight We Improvise the barrier disappears: the performance takes place simultaneously on the stage, in the foyer, and amid the audience. More than bringing life into theater, with his play Pirandello brings theater into life. In this last part of his trilogy of "theater within the theater," Pirandello manipulates the balance of influences between the author, director, actors, and the audience. In Six Characters in Search of an Author Pirandello claims the greater role for authors, in Each in His Own Way (Ciascuno a suo modo, 1924) he acknowledges the audience's responsibility, and in Tonight We Improvise he grants the director primacy.

Doctor Hinkfuss, the Director, stages the performance of a play based on Pirandello's short story "Leonora, addio!" (1910). Hinkfuss informs the audience that Pirandello's work is not the center of the show, but a mere roll of paper. Hinkfuss becomes the creator of the play and its interpreter in its irreproducible performance.

Amid Hinkfuss's interruptions the actors continue acting the story: the life of a young woman humiliated by her husband as retribution for the lighthearted life she led with her three sisters and mother before her marriage. Rico Verri, the husband, impulsively married her to show the seriousness of his actions, but afterward he could not stand the thought of his wife's past. Held captive for years in her house, she dies while singing an aria to her two young daughters. The same night, returning home from the opera, Verri, repentant, finds her. Hinkfuss jumps onto the stage and extols the ending, so different from the short story that he has become the show.

Pirandello's experiences as director of Teatro d'Arte (1925–1928), staging his own plays and those of others, brought him to reflect on authors' limited authority on texts, theirs until they finish writing them. Texts are fixed, whereas the director has the power to make plays alive each time they are performed. Ahead of his time, Pirandello realizes that in the new century, authors' authority in theater diminishes in favor of the directors' aspiration to be its center. Actors recognize Hinkfuss's centrality and protest only when he denigrates their professionalism in front of the audience.

Perhaps Pirandello, in stressing Hinkfuss's exaggerated delirium of omnipotence, implicitly meant to criticize the directors' leaning toward mechanical spectacularization of scenes and to favor an approach that makes the actors' role more conspicuous. But never as in this play has Pirandello acknowledged the independence of theatrical production from a text. It was published in the United States in 1932, translated by Samuel Putnam; it opened in the United States at Vassar College produced by the Vassar College Experimental Theatre on December 11, 1936, with contrasting reviews. Because of the complexity of its production (with a large number of actors and an elaborate set design) and the conflicting criticism it generated, Tonight We Improvise has been seldom staged. It was part of the repertoire of THE LIVING THEATRE.

FURTHER READING

- Bassnet McGuire, Susan. "Art and Life in Luigi Pirandello's Questa sera si recita a soggetto." Themes in Drama, no. 2 (1980): 81–102.
- Pirandello, Luigi. Pirandello's Love Letters to Marta Abba. Ed. and tr. by Benito Ortolani. Princeton: Princeton Univ. Press, 1994.
- . Tonight We Improvise and "Leonora, Addio!" Tr. by J. Douglas Campbell and Leonard G. Sbrocchi. Pirandello Society of Canada Series, vol. 1. Ottawa: Canadian Society for Italian Studies, 1987.

Stefano Giannini

TOP GIRLS

She's stupid, lazy and frightened, so what about her?

—Joyce (referring to Angie), Act 3

First staged at the Royal Court Theatre in London in 1982, Top Girls transferred to New York the same year, where it won an Obie Award. The play is distinguished not only as one of CARYL CHURCHILL's most important and critically acclaimed works, but also as an enduring influence on feminist theater and scholarship. Top Girls was written between 1980 and 1982, when the recent election of the first female prime minister in Great Britain, Margaret Thatcher, seemed to evidence the significant advances made by women in society. But Top Girls critiques both the conservative government of Thatcher and the kind of feminism that encourages women to "get ahead" within existing social, political, and economic systems, with no attempt to change them and no regard for those left behind. As Churchill has said, "There's no such thing as right-wing feminism," a principle that drives her play. Top Girls is, therefore, an ironic title; it targets the hierarchical and patriarchal structure of capitalism, which rewards individuals whose skills and values equip them to climb the ladder of success, often supported by or stepping on those beneath them. The play also questions traditional (male) standards of achievement, marking the accomplishments of the "top" women it represents as partial or dubious and depicting the plight of those at the "bottom" as desperate. The stylistic innovations that enhance the dramatic—and feminist—impact of Top Girls include its female ensemble, non-linear structure, transhistorical elements, double casting, and overlapping dialogue (a Churchill! signature). Though Top Girls is a work very much of its moment, it remains relevant decades later, posing social questions that transcend its original setting in a vital, theatrical style.

Top Girls' first act is an uproarious dinner party thrown by Marlene, managing director of the Top Girls Employment Agency, to celebrate her recent promotion. Marlene's guests, women from different historical periods and places, find some commonality, but are also divided by religious, class, and cultural differences. Act 2 consists of a series of short scenes at the agency, where women impose sexist double standards on one another, and in the backyard of Joyce, Marlene's working-class sister, who, it is gradually revealed, is raising Marlene's secret, illegitimate daughter, Angie. Marlene's "high-flying" career is, therefore, made possible partly by Joyce. Angie, who has dropped out of school, is depicted as "a bit thick, a bit funny." She suspects that her "Auntie" Marlene is really her mother, and surprises her at her office, hoping to stay. This is the last chronological event of the play, but not the final act. Subverting linear structure, Churchill sets act 3 one year earlier, in Joyce's kitchen. There Marlene and Joyce battle over their diametrically opposed personal and political positions. The personal is political in this play. Drawing a direct parallel between Marlene's attitudes and Margaret Thatcher's policies, Joyce (and Churchill) ask: What happens to people, like Angie, who have not "got what it takes" to survive in a heartless world? Marlene has already answered the question in the final lines of act 2 when she says, "She's not going to make it," dispassionately predicting a dismal future for her daughter. As a biting socialist and feminist critique of a capitalist, self-interested culture, Top Girls presents audiences with a dilemma, implicitly challenging them to search for solutions.

[See also England]

FURTHER READING

- Aston, Elaine. Caryl Churchill. London: Northcote House, 1997.
- , and Janelle Reinelt, eds. The Cambridge Companion to Modern British Playwrights. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2000.
- Cousin, Geraldine. Churchill the Playwright. London: Methuen, 1989.
- Fitzsimmons, Linda, comp. File on Churchill. London: Methuen, 1989.

Rosemary Malague

TOPOGRAPHY OF A NUDE

In more than one sense Topography of a Nude (Topografía de un desnudo, 1966) inaugurated a new phase in the prolific career of Jorge Díaz. The first play written from his new residence in Madrid, Topography introduced a number of AVANT-GARDE techniques hitherto unknown in Chilean theater while distinguishing Díaz from the European absurdist theater with which critics identified his earlier pieces. The play also prefigured an engagement with political reality in Latin America that powerfully crystallized in his later work, All This Long Night (Toda esta larga noche, 1976).

Set in a Brazilian favela and based on true events, Topography recounts the massacre of favela inhabitants by the police, charged with clearing the area to make room for a residential neighborhood. Here Díaz inverts the parable of the evangelist Luke to arrive at the exact opposite conclusion from the parable. San Lucas is the name of the police captain who assassinates Rufo, the site of the massacre is known as San Lázaro, and the prostitute's nickname is the Nun (La Monja). Here, unlike in the sacred book, the world of the poor is abandoned by the hand of God, and, as a result, all possibility of redemption is lost.

Sounding an alarm about the risks of progress at any cost, the play is a ferocious invective against the processes of modernization that various developing and Christian Democratic governments undertook in Latin America, beginning in the 1950s. In certain ways it also foretells the indiscriminate extermination that plagued the region as modernizing programs began to fail and the governments of these nations were replaced by military dictatorships.

Technically, the play is one of the most advanced in all Latin American theater. The action occurs around a circle of light into which the actors enter to become characters. When they are not acting, they remain in the semidarkness, forming an immobile chorus. A giant screen projects various texts and slides of the ragged poor, the military, corpses, and firearms. These images, along with a series of recorded sounds—such as gunshots and dog barks—complement the piece's atmosphere.

Díaz employs the devices of inversion and oxymoron to emphasize the sordidness and the moral decay of the favela. He upsets the spatial-temporal coordinates and transforms Rufo (initially a corpse) into the protagonist. The dead cry out, the living are silent. A man is killed like a dog, and a dog like a man—and indeed, the latter's death generates horror, while the former's is met with indifference. Even the characters' names allude to a strong ironic stance: the corrupt journalist is named Abel, and the instigator of the killing, Don Clemente. No one is noble or good in the world of San Lázaro, where apathy and violence reign supreme. Yet there remains a fundamental difference among the characters. The conduct of the poor, marked by denunciations and prostitution, comes from necessity and desperation, while that of the powerful—bureaucrats, politicians, the governor, the landowner—is the result of greed and corruption.

Perhaps the essential virtue of Topography consists in its desire to synthesize the principal currents of contemporary theater: from BERTOLT BRECHT it borrows the techniques of ALIENATION and the rejection of an Aristotelian unity; from the "HAPPENINGS" it derives the use of multimedia; from ANTONIN ARTAUD, the concept of cruelty's cathartic violence; and from PETER WEISS, its prevailing DOCUMENTARY nature. Undoubtedly, though, FRIEDRICH DÜRRENMATT serves as the play's fundamental inspiration, as much for the mixture of horror and the grotesque that he details in satires such as THE VISIT

OF THE OLD LADY and THE PHYSICISTS as for the parody of the police that is frequently found in the Swiss playwright's narrative pieces. Indeed, Topography's subtitle is Sketch of a Useless Investigation (Esquema para una indagación inútil). It was a substantial transformation for someone who, until that time, was considered the Latin American disciple of EUGÈNE IONESCO.

FURTHER READING

Guerrero del Río, Eduardo. Conversaciones: El teatro nuestro de cada Díaz.

Santiago, Chile: RIL, 1993. Reedited as Jorge Díaz: Un pez entre dos aguas. Santiago, Chile: RIL, 2003.

Woodyard, George. "Jorge Díaz and the Liturgy of Violence." In Dramatists in Revolt: The New Latin American Theater, ed. by Leon F.

Lyday and George W. Woodyard. Austin: Univ. of Texas Press, 1976. 59–76. [Includes a detailed analysis of Topography of a Nude.]

Norberto Cambiasso (Tr. by Gabriel Milner)

TOPOL, JOSEF (1935–)

Regarded as the most poetic of Czech playwrights writing in prose, Josef Topol (born on April 1, 1935, in Poříčí nad Sázavou, CZECHOSLOVAKIA) creates situations, characters, and dialogue that capture surface reality, but progressively probes more deeply into states of mind and feeling that reflect characters' personal crises, as well as universal desires and anxieties. Not infrequently his plays have also resonated with collective social and political stresses affecting Czech society since World War II.

At the age of twenty Topol gained immediate attention with his first play, Midnight Wind (Půlnoční vítr, 1955), produced by the major Czech director E. F. Burian in his Army Art Theatre. Drawing from Czech history and myth, the drama dealt with dynastic conflicts recalling those in William Shakespeare's chronicle plays. It was Topol's only play written in verse. In the late 1950s Topol began his significant relationship with director Otomar Krejča and DRAMATURG Karel Kraus in their playwriting workshop at the National Theatre. Their Day (Jejich den, 1959), the first product of this collaboration, reflected contemporary tensions between elders who represented the status quo of a repressive regime and idealistic youth who chafed under its restrictions. Episodically structured in many relatively short scenes and written in fresh, idiomatic prose, the play caught the spirit of a time that was seriously questioning an ideologically oppressive culture.

The equally contemporary End of Carnival (Konec masopustu, 1963), Topol's next work with Krejča, has been regarded as one of the most significant Czech plays of the century. Operating with relative objectivity on several levels with numerous characters, it presents the clash between forces of a new order and deeply rooted cultural traditions, specifically an individual landowner's resistance to the state-decreed collectivization of all agricultural activity, a deeply divisive program introduced by the new socialist government. Topol's play poetically and theatrically incorporates mythic elements in the form of ritual maskers celebrating the end of carnival, the death of the old and birth of the new. The action thereby acquires archetypal dimensions beyond the personal, familial, and social issues at stake.

A distinct shift of tone, theme, and scale marked Topol's next plays, all still emerging from the collaboration with Krejča. These are one-act chamber plays that center in a family or only two people rather than presenting a complex web of relationships. Two of them are closely related in theme and subject: Cat on the Rails (Kočka na kolejích, 1965) and Hour of Love (Hodina lásky, 1968). In Cat still-youthful Evi and Vena have been lovers for years but are now uncertain whether to continue their relationship. While waiting for a train at a rural stop as evening approaches, they reveal the insecurities underlying their feelings for each other in dialogue that is partly playful and often elusive. No central issue is confronted or problem posed, the external world is irrelevant, and no resolution is achieved at the play's end as they sit on the tracks with the sound of an approaching locomotive becoming progressively louder. In Hour the lovers, Ela and El, are older but similar to Evi and Vena; the setting is an interior, and a third character is added, Ela's ailing aunt. Ela and El behave as though they have one hour left before he must leave, perhaps forever. An interplay of sensibilities skirting painful recognitions is again the essence, but this time in a bleaker key and with a hint of death indirectly associated with the aunt. The other one-act play is Nightingale for Supper (Slavík k večeři, 1967), which Topol himself directed for Krejča's Theatre Beyond the Gate. A grotesque COMEDY of the absurd, it is reminiscent of works by HAROLD PINTER or AUGUST STRINDBERG's THE GHOST SONATA with its destruction of vulnerable humanity by brutalizing forces.

Topol's last three plays were written during the period of forced "normalization" after the Soviet invasion, when none of his plays could be performed. The plays focus on older characters whose lives have entered their final phase with few, if any, vital inner resources or external supports. Although they never say it, love-as-life-force seems extinguished in their lives as they face the future, and illusions are a weak substitute.

Farewell, Socrates (Zbohem, Sokrates, 1976, not performed until 1991) takes place in the atelier of a sculptor on his fiftieth birthday, which is being celebrated as a masquerade party with a spectrum of guests who approximate a ship of fools, reflecting Topol's view of Czech society at the time. At the heart of the action is the sculptor's devoted wife as she faces the reality of her husband's terminal indifference and ultimately takes her own life. The masquerade theme is heightened by numerous symbols, the dialogue is tangential and ambivalent, and the ending includes no resolution of the complex relations within the work. It is a provocative, inner-directed study that some have compared to the films of INGMAR BERGMAN.

Almost ten years later, during which time he ran afoul of the regime and was forced into manual labor, Topol wrote A Soul in Transit (Stěhování duší, 1986, not produced until 1990). A one-woman monologue of an isolated, feisty old woman living in a cluttered basement, it recalls SAMUEL BECKETT's KRAPP'S LAST TAPE or HAPPY DAYS in its free association of mostly painful memories. Her final line, "Life can be beautiful," is deeply ambivalent.

Topol's last play, The Voices of Birds (Hlasy ptáků, 1988, performed in 1989), is a wry, subdued TRAGICOMEDY that considers an aging actor's personal life, showing it to have been singularly lacking in meaningful human feelings. Overtly dramatic action is minimal, no important change occurs in any character, and the social context is irrelevant, but the inner lives of a number of people have been subtly revealed with spare objectivity. One might take the play as a depressing account of rather empty, barren souls or as a comedy of human inadequacies suggesting that what one gets from life is proportional to what one puts into it. Typically for Topol, the ending is open ended.

SELECT PLAYS: Midnight Wind (Půlnoční vítr, 1955); Their Day (Jejich den, 1959); End of Carnival (Konec masopustu, 1963); Cat on the Rails (Kočka na kolejích, 1965); Nightingale for Supper (Slavík k večeři, 1967); Hour of Love (Hodina lásky, 1968); Two Nights with a Girl (Dvě noci s dívkou, 1969); Farewell, Socrates (Zbohem, Sokrates, 1976)

FURTHER READING

Burian, Jarka M. Modern Czech Theatre: Reflector and Conscience of a Nation. Iowa City: Univ. of Iowa Press, 2000.

Czech Academy of Sciences. <http://www.cas.cz/index.html.en>.

Goetz-Stankiewicz, Marketa. The Silenced Theatre: Czech Playwrights Without a Stage. Toronto: Univ. of Toronto Press, 1979.

Trensky, Paul I. Czech Drama Since World War II. White Plains, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1978.

—. "The Playwrights of the Krejča Circle." In Czech Literature Since 1956: A Symposium, ed. by William E. Harkins and Paul I. Trensky. New York: Bohemica, 1980.

Jarka M. Burian

TOT, KTO POLUCHAET POSHCHECHINY See HE WHO GETS SLAPPED

THE TOTH FAMILY

In the mid-1960s the Hungarian government, installed by the Soviet tanks that crushed the 1956 revolution, began loosening constraints on artistic expression, and ISTVÁN ÖRKÉNY's TRAGICOMEDY The Toth Family (Tótkék, 1967) introduced Hungarian audiences to a new, grotesque view of the inhumanity and ambiguities of their recent history. It also influenced a generation of playwrights to examine the Hungarian condition in grotesque and absurd ways.

The play is set during World War II in a tranquil Hungarian village where the Toths live in contentment, disturbed only by concern over their son's military service at the front. Thus when the son's commanding officer, the Major, arrives for a few days in order to calm his shattered nerves, they eagerly extend their hospitality, hoping to induce him to assign the son to less life-threatening duty.

The Major's stay overturns the family's equilibrium. Step by step, in order to serve the Major's increasingly irrational requests, Mr. Toth forfeits his habits and loses his identity. His wife and daughter justify the Major's absurd whims as if they were perfectly natural. The complicit village folk further rob Toth of his sense of reality. Making cardboard boxes, with which the women used to supplement the family income, becomes one of the Major's obsessions. What began for him as a soothing routine becomes a mania that overwhelms the Toth family with sleepless nights and the stage with boxes. The women as mediators justify the exhausted and confused Toth's increasingly puzzling behavior to the Major. Thus, by degrees, the irrational and abnormal become the accepted norm. Reason, of which Toth preserves a spark, is forced to retreat. Indeed, Toth spends ever more time in the outhouse, his one refuge from this insane world.

But, characteristically of Örkény, coercion in this play is a complex issue. The Major himself is an ambivalent character in this regard. He is not an aggressive, cruel soldier, but a victim of fear. He lives in irrational dread of partisan attacks, even in this peaceful village. Nor are the Toths his unequivocal victims, since they volunteer for their role.

In an ironic twist, we learn from the postman at the end of the first act that he has taken it upon himself to keep bad news from the family by not delivering the announcement of the son's death at the front. From this point on, unbeknownst to the family, its self-sacrifice is pointless. When the tension is stretched to the limit, Toth kills the Major.

For much of the 20th century in Örkény's part of the world, those in power manipulated the people's natural self-interest, as well as the dissemination of information that would have allowed the people to act in their best interest. Örkény's parable, based on the Toths' concern for their son and their ignorance of his fate, encapsulates this condition. The killing of the Major not only restores Toth's authentic self, but demonstrates Örkény's characteristic balancing of the hopelessness of an absurd world with belief in man's capacity for taking action, or at least for starting over.

[See also Hungary]

FURTHER READING

Bécsy, Tamás. Kalandok a drámdél: Magyar drámdék, 1945–1989

[Adventures with drama: Hungarian dramas, 1945–1989].

Budapest: Balassi Kiadó, 1996.

P. Müller, Péter. A groteszk dramaturgiája [The dramaturgy of the grotesque]. Budapest: Magvető Könyvkiadó, 1990.

Radnóti, Zsuzsa. Lázadó dramaturgiák [Dramaturgies in revolt].

Budapest: Palatinus, 2003.

Eugene Brogyányi

A TOUCH OF THE POET

Faith, Patch Riley don't know it but he's playing a requiem for the dead.

—Sara, Act 4

A Touch of the Poet by EUGENE O'NEILL was first produced at the Dramatiska Teatern in Stockholm, SWEDEN, on March 29, 1957. Harold Clurman directed the American premiere on October 2, 1958, with Helen Hayes as Nora. José Quintero directed the 1977 revival with Jason Robards.

Set in 1828, the story revolves around Cornelius Melody, a "polished gentleman" who overplays the role that he believes too well. He preens in the mirror and tells himself, "Thank God, I still bear the unmistakable stamp of an officer and a gentleman. And so I will remain to the end, in spite of all fate can do to crush my spirit." He relishes the transformative magic of the actor, wearing the "brilliant scarlet full-dress uniform of a major in one of Wellington's dragoon regiments."

In Melody, O'Neill uses the figure of the actor as a metaphor for mankind. He challenges everyone—even himself—to solve the riddle of who he really is. His father kept a shebeen, and Melody himself was an upstart who rose in the British army but resigned his commission after fighting a duel and killing a Spanish nobleman whom he had cuckolded. Now he keeps a tavern in Massachusetts where even the mortgage does not spare his wife and daughter the ignominy of waiting tables and begging for credit.

Melody compels others to play roles; he asks Sara, his daughter, to play both wench and gentleman's child, Nora, his wife, to play both cook and lady, and his Irish cronies to play both subservient peasants and fellow soldiers. He must re-create others in order to re-create himself, for the strength of his identity depends on the reinforcement their belief offers. Yet Sara resists him, and his pub cronies play his game only when acquiescence will win them free drinks and a haven.

Sara loves Simon Harford, the son of an aristocratic family whose father sends a lawyer to negotiate an end to their relationship. Melody, deeply insulted, tries to challenge old Harford to a duel but ends brawling with the servants and thrown in jail. In despair over his crumbling self-image, Melody shoots his beloved mare.

Melody's progress through the play involves an implacable loss of self as he moves restlessly from role to role, trying in vain to maintain one identity and find fulfillment. We see him in the final scene as a beaten man, his costume in tatters and his resolve shattered; like the men in THE ICEMAN COMETH, he has faced the hollowness of his dream. Even Sara finally denies him, eradicating his past, as well as their relationship, by saying, "I heard someone. But it wasn't anyone I ever knew or want to know." In The Nation (October 25, 1958), Gore Vidal called it "a beautiful play."

With precision and—for him—economy, he sets the scene for his moral action which is the crushing of a man's false pride, his absorption into the main, his final realization that he has lived a bogus life, presuming a position both worldly and moral to which he has no right but the one—and this is significant—of wanting.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Bower, Martha Gilman. "Upstairs/Downstairs: Dueling Triangles in A Touch of the Poet." Eugene O'Neill Review 20 (Spring–Fall 1996): 97–101.

Manheim, Michael. "O'Neill's Transcendence of Melodrama in A Touch of the Poet and A Moon for the Misbegotten." Comparative Drama 16 (Fall 1982): 238–250.

Meade, Robert. "Incest Fantasy and the Hero in A Touch of the Poet." Eugene O'Neill Review 18 (Spring–Fall 1994): 79–94.

Miliora, Maria T. "Narcissistic Fantasies in A Touch of the Poet: A Self-Psychological Study." Eugene O'Neill Review 18 (Spring–Fall 1994): 95–107.

Porter, Laurin. "Bakhtin's Chronotope: Time and Space in A Touch of the Poet and More Stately Mansions." Modern Drama 34 (September 1991): 369–382.

—. The Banished Prince: Time, Memory, and Ritual in the Late Plays of Eugene O'Neill. Ann Arbor: UMI Res. Press, 1988.

Jeffrey D. Mason

TRAGEDY

The most familiar breakdown into dramatic genres—COMEDY, FARCE, tragedy, MELODRAMA, and TRAGICOMEDY—possibly goes back in part to the critical methods of Aristotle in his pioneering document on poetics. Some commentators believe that this pioneering document was compiled not from Aristotle's own lecture notes but from notes taken by the students in his classes. Today an Aristotelian analysis has several obvious shortcomings: one, it refers to theater written by Greek dramatists who had died before the father of criticism was born; two, in the nearly 2,400 years since his death in 384 B.C.E., later critics have reinterpreted his teachings, and these revisions are at variance with the originals and with each other; three, analysis by genre has, in the hands of these generations, crisscrossed (or clashed) with a plethora of dramatic writing styles and historical movements, such as neoclassicism, ROMANTICISM, lyrical verse, and EXPRESSIONISM, most of them over the past 300 years, while styles and movements have themselves come and gone almost as rapidly as fashionable political theories. Yet these transient shortcomings have brought benefits with them: they have spared scholars the unpleasant rigidity of rules and held out in their place the pleasures of witnessing other people's disagreements.

In everyday parlance and in slightly more rarefied theater talk, the word tragedy has several misleading implications. It does not denote a calamity or a sad accident—haphazard usage that belongs in proclamations of grief and regret for which we have to thank presidents, governors, mayors, police superintendents, and news announcers when they deplore a shoot-out, fire, explosion, flood, train crash, or earthquake, for which no perpetrator can be blamed and arrested. In more casual theater talk a tragedy is taken to mean a drama with a sorrowful or otherwise unsatisfying end. It often has reference also to a play that has strained pretensions or is viewed by the author or one of his friends as existing on a level of superiority that plays belonging to other genres could never match.

The exaggerated respect accorded the idea of tragedy may come from awestruck views of the oldest body of drama we have on record, the entire reworkings and fragments of Greek myths by Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, written and staged mostly in the 6th to 5th centuries B.C.E. They had a number of features rarely met with since. A chorus represented a Greek community and was located in the circular space known as the orchestra. Between one and three individual actors played multiple roles on a raised platform; they differentiated their parts by changing masks over their upper faces and adopting artificial voices. The three centers of most feverish and brutal Greek action consisted of Argos, the home of the Atridae, the ancestors and descendants of King Agamemnon; Thebes, where Labus, disregarding a warning of Apollo, begot a son, Oedipus, who set off a string of murders and other misdeeds by killing his father and marrying his mother; and Troy, an island on the far side of the Aegean Sea to which a mighty Greek army under its commander, Agamemnon, sailed in hopes of releasing the beautiful Helen, his sister-in-law.

Most Greek tragedies have come down to us in translations, adaptations, and fragments. Often a playwright or poet commissioned by a subsidized theater troupe to provide a new version of a Greek classic will, after some struggling to find an apt vocabulary and style, end up revising and retitling the original as his or her own. French authors in the 1920s–1940s found amazing affinities between Greek circumstances and theirs. The circumstances had to do largely with immersion in declared and undeclared wars, in which the playwrights pointed out resemblances between their days, the intermission between the 20th century's two world wars, and ancient times. JEAN COCTEAU wrote Antigone (1922), loosely drawn from the tragedy by Sophocles; Orpheus (1926), in which Orpheus seeks his wife Eurydice in the underworld; and THE INFERNAL MACHINE (1932), based on King Oedipus, also by Sophocles. JEAN GIRAUDOUX contributed THE TROJAN WAR WILL NOT TAKE PLACE (1935), known in CHRISTOPHER FRY's translation (1955) as Tiger at the Gates, drawn from several Greek plays, as well as the Iliad. JEAN-PAUL SARTRE's THE FLIES (1942) replaces the Eumenides from Aeschylus' Oresteia, a chorus of vengeful females, with the torturous buzzing of a cloud of flies who haunt Orestes after he slays his mother, Clytemnestra. JEAN ANOUILH modernized two tragic masterpieces, ANTIGONE (1944), after Sophocles again, and—a Shakespearean, not a Greek, entry—Romeo and Jeannette (1946).

When HENRIK IBSEN delved into the possibilities of conversational talk in his “middle” plays in the later 1870s, he clarified dramatic language. Critics noisily attacked him—GEORGE BERNARD SHAW was the great exception—for dispensing with rhetorical overstatement; but numerous playwrights, by contrast, admired and tried to mimic or even mirror his achievement. They seldom succeeded, because Ibsen evidently meant not merely to purify his dialogue but also to complicate it and, by introducing subtle symbolic hints, to enrich his characterizations and tragic structures. He fed the leading roles and some secondary roles lines that unconsciously betrayed them. They gave away their concealed feelings and especially their misgivings. Two Ibsen heroines, Helene Alving in GHOSTS and Hedda in HEDDA GABLER, look like their own worst enemies and, simultaneously, pitiful at that. Ibsen’s plotting drives one of them into self-torture when Mrs. Alving blames herself for the imminent death of her son, while Hedda kills herself with a pistol that belonged to her father. Death, financial ruin, or some other downfall overtakes Ibsen’s tragic victims. He unlocks a tormented past pointing forward to an intolerable future, and a helpless offense against oneself, even a crime, perhaps unmeant, against mankind or a group—or a sin against the gods and oneself.

AUGUST STRINDBERG’s two most famous tragedies, THE FATHER and MISS JULIE, leaped all over Europe in the 1880s and 1890s and deposited thousandfold visual images and echoes. Early in his career Strindberg felt that he had the right to inspire principal parts, both male and female, by using characteristics drawn from his understanding of his own thoughts and feelings, such as “the Captain” in The Father and Julie in Miss Julie. In middle age he conceived his trilogy To DAMASCUS as a modern journey, reminiscent of St. Paul’s, across strange landscapes. These resembled the settings through which the unnamed protagonist (the Stranger) passed in his search for the person he would turn out to be, a figure not quite recognizable to himself.

Strindberg’s dazzling array of theater does not lend itself to easy classification by genre. A DREAM PLAY and THE GHOST SONATA must have moved and shaken the pioneers of SURREALISM and expressionism twenty or more years after those plays were written. With CREDITORS (1890), CRIMES AND CRIMES (1899), and THE DANCE OF DEATH (1901) one feels that, after writing bouts of ferocious quarreling in these domestic tragedies, the playwright advised his vehement inventions to sit back for a quiet break. Yet these plays do retain self-destructive elements, the essence of tragedies.

In America the plays most emphatically influenced by Ibsen and Strindberg, in addition to their ultimate sources, Greek tragedies, came from EUGENE O’NEILL, who transferred his Americanizing of DESIRE UNDER THE ELMS (1924, from the Hippolytus of Euripides and Jean Racine’s Phaedra) and MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA (1931, a trilogy from the Oresteia by Aeschylus) to New England, and specifically Connecticut. O’Neill’s STRANGE INTERLUDE (1931) is a nine-act play whose principal, named Nina, seems like a comment on the play’s length and may be a regeneration of a Greek goddess, possibly Aphrodite or another portrait of Phaedra, either Racine’s or Lucius Annaeus Seneca’s, or even Helen of Troy, who was actually Helen of Sparta and fled to Troy with Paris to escape from her husband. Nina attracts men, not nearly as many as Helen was reputed to have won, but in O’Neill’s drama she settles for an unexciting but wealthy businessman and goes from being a vital, bubbling personality to becoming an unfulfilled Yankee matron, a fate that is in certain respects fulfilled, but semitragic at most. O’Neill is said to have written only one play that is comic, Ah, Wilderness! But that assertion is disputable. The rest of his dramatic output overflows with tragic material.

An approximate contemporary of O’Neill (1888–1953) and equally a Nobel Prize winner, WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS (1865–1939) also wrote many plays with tragic consequences. They were much shorter than most of O’Neill’s and in verse, whereas O’Neill, a formidably patient craftsman, said more than once that he could not command more than “a touch of the poet.” Yeats wrote poetry of the finest caliber. Some of his works were designed to be performed by dancers at the Abbey Theatre, of which he was a founder and contributing author. His most exquisitely tragic drama occurs in the encounter in On Baile’s Strand (1904) between Cuchulain, a warrior-hero out of Irish myth, and a mysterious young man who challenges him and loses. The young man is the son of a woman whom Cuchulain loved dearly when they were both young; but Cuchulain had never met his opponent before and does not learn until too late that he killed his only son. Other dramatists who have worked the tragic vein include GERHARD HAUPTMANN, whose The Family of Atreus (1941) follows the fortunes and misfortunes of that house, and LYOV TOLSTOY, the novelist who, in THE POWER OF DARKNESS (1888), depicted the superstitious brutality of Russia’s peasants.

Two esteemed American names after O’Neill’s were those of ARTHUR MILLER and TENNESSEE WILLIAMS. Miller said that his plays are mythical; they are definitely less notable for their comic spirit than for their tragic heft. From ALL MY SONS (1947) and DEATH OF A SALESMAN (1949) through THE CRUCIBLE (1953) and A VIEW FROM THE BRIDGE (1955), Miller’s work meets the definition of tragedy offered earlier and realizes scenes that hew to a level of superbly rich poetry, such as the spell Abigail casts on the other girls in the Salem church, whom she seems to have turned into wailing birds. Williams’s plays, which he subjected to arduous revisions, avoided harshly tragic censuring of his protagonists by others, yet without shying away from the cruelty people unintentionally impose on those closest to them. In his most compelling artistic device he revived adroitly melodramatic solo speeches, such as Lord Byron’s account of Percy Bysshe Shelley's death by burning in CAMINO REAL (1953), except for Shelley's heart, which remained miraculously unscorched. The mechanics of forging passionate monologues and soliloquies have picked up many passengers in the last three or four decades; but Williams's two early works, THE GLASS MENAGERIE (1945) and A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE (1947) not only proved popular in the UNITED STATES and Britain but also received enthusiastic welcomes in other parts of the world, as did The Rose Tattoo (1951), CAT ON A HOT TIN ROOF (1955), and THE NIGHT OF THE IGUANA (1961).

The ancient "blocking" of tragic acting, with a division of chorus and chorus leader (choregos) from the individual players (protagonist, antagonist, and deuteragonist), has disappeared, even in GREECE. The actor's disposition in the acting area, and often nowadays in the auditorium, is constantly revised. Some directors have returned to constructivist sets like the ones from the Soviet Union in the 1920s that encourage performers to fly through three dimensions like trapeze artists. Some stage designers have begun to favor water and pools onstage, as in a 2003 revival of Euripides's Medea that looked like a compromise between a splashing contest and a flooded basement.

FURTHER READING

- Bentley, Eric. "Tragedy." In The Life of the Drama. New York: Atheneum, 1964.
- Elsom, John. Post-war British Theatre Criticism. London: Routledge, 1981.
- Guicharnaud, Jacques, with June Guicharnaud. Modern French Theatre from Giraudoux to Genet. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1967.
- Orr, John. Tragic Drama and Modern Society. Totowa, N.J.: Barnes & Noble, 1981.
- Williams, Raymond. Modern Tragedy. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford Univ. Press, 1966.

Albert Bermel

TRAGICOMEDY

Is tragicomedy a comfortable and amusing piece of theater except that, toward its close, it heads bleakly in the direction of TRAGEDY, as in The Misanthrope? Or does it have a plot line that grows sorrowful for perhaps its first half but turns on itself and raises laughter and a reconciliation between embattled roles, as happens in most commercial plays? Or does it alternate between the opposed tendencies, so that the audience remains unsure until the end how to parse it, as with, say, TONY KUSHNER's two-part ANGELS IN AMERICA? This third type runs along the lines that Victor Hugo envisaged for the theater's future in his preface to Cromwell; he wanted to see more plays written as mixtures, as alternations, as examples of what he designated ROMANTICISM. In historical fact, all three types have made contributions to the genre we choose to call tragicomedy for want of a more precise name. (French theater often calls a tragicomedy a drame; the same word may also apply to a MELODRAMA.)

But the three types depend in large part on the nature of a play's ending. ANTON CHEKHOV, the most accomplished tragicomic dramatist of the modern theater, accused his director, KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY, of not giving enough emphasis to the COMEDY in his best-known plays. Yet from IVANOV (1889) to THE SEAGULL (1895–1898), UNCLE VANYA (1899), THREE SISTERS (1901), and THE CHERRY ORCHARD (1904), we do not find an unmistakable tone for the actors to sustain. Chekhov's life ended in 1904 when he was only forty-four years of age. If he had lived longer, he might have come down more definitively on one side or the other, as many authors do and as he had already done himself in the continuum of his work from early FARCE to later tragicomedy. In the stagings of Chekhov the genre still remains at the mercy of directors and actors. Stanislavsky may have left his efforts on the plays' behalf comically undernourished, but they invite a treatment that begins with plentiful comic effects that lean gradually more and more toward the serious (not the solemn) by demanding a sympathy from the audience that swells through nostalgia and at last into the sharing of sympathetic despair. In Ivanov, as in The Seagull, the leading man shoots himself; in Three Sisters Baron Tuzenbach, the man in love with Irina, the youngest sister, fights a duel, in which he is killed by his unbalanced army comrade, Solyony. In the two last plays old men speak the closing lines in a tone of hopelessness: in Three Sisters, Chebutykin; in The Cherry Orchard, Firs, who lies down on the floor to die.

Whether Chekhov faulted Stanislavsky—but playwrights are not always the most trustworthy judges of their work—few directors today play down Chekhovian laughs; they seek to maintain not so much a balance overall as a series of shifting moods that favor surprises, U-turns in the plotting. Something comparable happens in plays written by MAKSIM GORKY, for whom Chekhov became a model and who, for a few years after 1917, became one of the most revered artists of the Soviet revolution.

In FRANK WEDEKIND'S SPRING AWAKENING one of a trio of young adults, Wendla, finds herself pregnant and submits to a treatment by what used to be called a backroom abortionist, who kills the fetus and Wendla. A second youngster, a shy and girlish boy named Moritz, shoots himself with a pistol that takes off his head; he becomes in death a hideous likeness of a "headless queen" about which he has been having prophetic nightmares. Or fulfilling wishes?

The third teenager, Melchior, who was the father of Wendla's unborn child and a close friend of Moritz, remains alive but feels responsible for the fate of the two others. This tragicomedy embraces the quasi-tragic doubts of fifteen-year-olds advised by ignorant parents and fuddy-duddy schoolteachers. Spring Awakening is, all in all, a sad tale of two wasted lives out of three. But Wedekind has charged its gloom with moments of sheer clownishness in scenes between Wendla and her mother, the teachers' meeting to determine how to punish the "erring" schoolchildren, and, at the end, a hilarious meeting in a graveyard between a disillusioned Melchior and the headless ghost of Moritz.

Two Swiss playwrights, MAX FRISCH and FRIEDRICH DÜRRENMATT, writing in German, came to Europe's front line in drama soon after World War II had concluded. Their country's neutrality during the war years had removed them from a defensive backward look at neutrality as a diplomatic posture. They each wrote with a committed social point of view. Dürrenmatt's THE VISIT OF THE OLD LADY (1956) presents a woman who had been spurned in marriage by a man who had gone on to become the mayor of a small town, which turned her out. She returns there years after, intent on a revenge that demands nothing less than his death by way of public humiliation, for which she can effortlessly pay, having become the widow of a millionaire. Perhaps the small town was meant to be Swiss and to mock the belief among its inhabitants that they could overlook sins in their collective past. But to a flood of cash there is no reply. Or, as a British comedian once proclaimed, "Money isn't everything. But what it isn't, it can buy." Frisch's plays have also delivered jabs to cozily settled opinions, such as the ones pierced by The Firebugs (1953). Some men walk into a bourgeois house and, after giving warning, set the home on fire. And they do so, as a number of European nations did symbolically when faced with German threats of invasion, by collaborating with the aggressor.

The most prolific tragicomic author from the 1920s through the 1960s was BERTOLT BRECHT, although his output also contains farces, comedies, and tragedies. Among the tragicomedies are A Man's a Man (1926), The Seven Deadly Sins (1933), THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN (1943), Herr Puntilla and His Servant Matti (1948), and THE RESISTIBLE RISE OF ARTURO UI (1958), the last being a treatment of Adolf Hitler and his acolytes enacted as a bunch of Chicago hoodlums. The most ambitious tragicomedy produced by an American dramatist is most likely Tony Kushner's two-part Angels in America (1993), in which three of the maze of dazzling plots interconnect in the death of a protagonist by AIDS; the public career of Roy Cohn, one of the most disgustingly funny American villains of the 1980s; and appearances by an angel who, helmeted like Pallas Athena, the goddess of wisdom and protector of Athens, smashes through the ceiling and through the chandelier.

FURTHER READING

- Bentley, Eric. "Tragicomedy." In The Life of the Drama. New York: Atheneum, 1964.
- Bermel, Albert. Comic Agony. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern Univ. Press, 1993.
- Guthke, Karl S. Modern Tragicomedy. New York: Random House, 1966.
- Kern, Edith. The Absolute Comic. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1980.

Albert Bermel

TRAINSPOTTING

Smack's an honest drug, . . . It doesnae alter your consciousness.
It jist gies ye a hit and a sense ay well-being. Eftir that, ye see the misery ay the world as it is; ye cannae anaesthetize yirsell against it.
—Mark, Act 1

The play version of Irvine Welsh's novel Trainspotting was perhaps one of the most surprising theatrical successes in ENGLAND in the 1990s. The novel, about a group of heroin users in 1980s Edinburgh, was an international best-seller and a cult favorite of ravers, a subset of British youth culture who took ecstasy in order to dance and sweat the night away. While the book became known as the novel for people who did not read, Harry Gibson's adaptation (1994) became known as the play for those who did not attend the theater. Through its numerous productions across Britain, including two runs on London's West End, the play drew ravers and other members of club culture to the staid stalls of the British theater. Like JOHN OSBORNE'S LOOK BACK IN ANGER, Trainspotting redefined the makeup of the British theatrical audience.

The stage play, which premiered before the Danny Boyle movie version, draws on the more memorable components of the novel. Gibson, though, writing for a cast of only four actors (three men, one woman), creatively refashioned the story by telescoping the novel's multiple story lines onto four main characters, Mark, Tommy, Franco, and Alison, all members of the previously unacknowledged subculture of the Scottish underclass.

The episodic play follows the exploits of the main narrator, the heroin addict Mark Renton, who is stuck in a continuing cycle of drug taking and then recovery, and his friends: Tommy, who becomes addicted to heroin after the breakup with his girlfriend; Alison, whose baby dies while she is shooting up; and Franco, who is the violent, unpredictable, and confrontational friend. One of the play's strengths relies on the characters' Scottish dialects, as well as their storytelling abilities, to convey viscerally and physically their bankrupt condition. In one monologue Mark relays his waking up in a bed covered in his own vomit, urine, and feces and his unsuccessful attempt to spirit the bed linen away from his girlfriend's home, and later Alison describes her revenge on a pack of obnoxious male customers by contaminating their meals with her menstrual blood, urine, and feces. One of the play's most powerful moments, though, does not rely on Welsh's language, as Gibson presents an addicted and demoralized Tommy shooting up in his penis.

The conclusion differs radically from those of the novel and movie, which end positively as Mark double-crosses his friends, stealing drug money for a new life in Amsterdam. In contrast, the play ends in an abandoned train station as Mark and Franco meet up with a bum, who turns out to be Franco's father. In ending this way, Gibson suggests that the fate of these characters is inescapable as Mark and Franco stare their future in the face.

The phenomenon of Trainspotting and Gibson's artfully constructed adaptation ensured the theatrical success of the play in Britain, which led to productions around the world. In turn, other Welsh novels were adapted for the stage, and Welsh himself experimented with the dramatic genre by writing a play called Headstate.

FURTHER READING

- Collin, Matthew. Altered State: The Story of Ecstasy Culture and Acid House. London: Serpent's Tail, 1997.
- Dromgoole, Dominic. The Full Room: An A–Z of Contemporary Playwriting. London: Methuen, 2000.
- Paget, Derek. "Speaking Out: The Transformations of Trainspotting." In Adaptations: From Text to Screen, Screen to Text, ed. by Deborah Cartmell and Imelda Whelehan. London: Routledge, 1999. 128–140.
- Sierz, Aleks. In-Yer-Face Theatre: British Drama Today. London: Faber, 2001.

William C. Boles

TRANSFIGURATION

The translation of the title of ERNST TOLLER's (1893–1939) Die Wandlung: Das Ringen eines Menschen (1917) as Transfiguration has become established, but J. R. Ritchie's alternative, Transformation, would be more precise. Transfiguration directs attention too narrowly to the figure of Friedrich; Transformation underscores that a whole society, not just an individual, is shown undergoing change in the play. The process Toller depicts is the collapse of the social order in Europe under the impact of World War I and the death of millions of men in trench warfare. With them died the optimism and faith in God that had been felt by most people in the 19th century. Written in 1917, Transfiguration was remarkably prescient in its forecasting. The drama's last line consists of the cry for "Revolution! Revolution!" and the end of war brought just that to GERMANY. As it turned out, the play was not performed until September 30, 1919.

The problem of how to depict the complexity of social, economic, intellectual, and political forces undergoing change challenged conventional dramatic forms. Toller resorted to the structure of the "station drama," a series of scenes one after the other. The explicit heading "station" in the text takes on an added meaning, suggesting that Friedrich's progress resembles the movement of Christ through the stations of the cross. This analogy is strengthened by specific imagery, such as Friedrich lying on the prison floor "as though he had been crucified." Having rejected established religion, Friedrich becomes a secular messiah who espouses a new faith based in humanity.

As Friedrich and the audience proceed through the six stations, subdivided further into thirteen images, there is only a thin line holding everything together. Friedrich, dissatisfied with his middle-class life, jumps at the opportunity to fight in the colonies, where he is wounded. Back home, he tries to become a sculptor, but smashes the patriotic statue he is working on when he is confronted by a fellow veteran from the colonial wars who has been ravaged by syphilis. Friedrich's doubles then proceed through a variety of settings—a factory, a prison, and a public assembly—thereby revealing the material and spiritual exhaustion at every level of society. Not even erotic love has survived the degradation of the world. At the end Friedrich realizes that the old order has been destroyed and that he must assume leadership toward a new society. The measure of justice will have to come from human beings, since no one believes in God any longer.

Framing the stations is the allegorical prologue, which, according to the stage directions, could also be the epilogue. Two versions of death, death in war and death in peace, compare notes on how they are doing. The macabre scene is an overture for the play, which is haunted by death and dying. Toller's descriptions of the wounded soldiers are shocking, but at the same time undermine the conclusion of the play. The expressions of utopian desire at the end cannot erase the terrible images from our minds, and we are left with the sense that the future will not heal the past.

[See also Expressionism]

FURTHER READING

- Benson, Renate. German Expressionist Drama: Ernst Toller and Georg Kaiser. London: Macmillan, 1984.
- Kamla, Thomas. "Christianity and the Fatherland: The Problem of Community in Ernst Toller's Die Wandlung." Germanic Notes 15, nos. 3–4 (1984): 42–46.
- Pittock, Malcolm. Ernst Toller. Boston: Twayne, 1979.

Arnd Bohm

TRANSLATIONS

We must learn those new names. . . . We must learn where we live.

We must learn to make them our own. We must make them our new home.

—Hugh, Act 3

Translations is one of BRIAN FRIEL's most popular plays; it was also his most controversial. It premiered in Derry, Northern IRELAND, in November 1980 and was the first play produced by FIELD DAY THEATRE COMPANY, which Friel had co-founded with the actor Stephen Rea. It excited and delighted its first audiences, but Friel was accused by some commentators of historical inaccuracy and, more seriously, of having written a potentially inflammatory play at the height of the Northern Ireland Troubles.

The action is set in 1833 in a rural Irish "hedge school"—an unofficial school for Irish-speaking Catholics. As in many of Friel's plays, Translations is set at the end of summer—representing the fact that the community portrayed on stage is at the end of an era, about to move from prosperity to harsher times. In this case the transformation would be caused by the great Irish famine of the 1840s, which resulted in millions of deaths, mass emigration, and the near extinction of the Irish language.

The “translations” referred to in the title are carried out by a British mapping expedition, which is translating Irish place names into English—hence Baile Beag (in Irish, “little town”), where the play is set, is “translated” into English as “Ballybeg.” The play is therefore an examination of the role of mapping—and education—in the extension of colonial power. Colonialism is also considered through a touching but doomed romance between the English sergeant Yolland and Maire, a young Irishwoman.

But there is another, highly theatrical, form of translation at work. Although the audience understands that many of the characters are speaking Irish to each other, all of the dialogue is presented in English. This is a daring theatrical device that often yields humorous results.

It is also a reflection of an important political reality. As a result of the historical situation that Friel is representing onstage, the majority of Irish people no longer understand the Irish language. Hence Friel must present his dialogue in English. By doing so, he shows that his English-speaking audience and his Irish-speaking characters share one important characteristic: both are Irish. This supports the play’s argument that, painful as it might be, a civilization can and must develop—even to the point of abandoning one language and taking up another. This is a practical illustration of the argument advanced by many of the play’s characters: a civilization that fails to move forward will fossilize, and “to remember everything is a form of madness.”

The politics of Friel’s play have frequently been misunderstood and occasionally misrepresented, much to his frustration. To the accusation of historical inaccuracy he has countered that his responsibility is to present artistic rather than historical truths. Translations is now one of Friel’s most popular works and is frequently performed in Ireland and throughout the world, especially in regions where issues such as IDENTITY, territory, and language are contested.

FURTHER READING

- Greene, Nicholas. The Politics of Irish Drama. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1999.
- Pine, Richard. Brian Friel and Ireland’s Drama. London: Routledge, 1990.
- Steiner, George. After Babel. 3d ed. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1998.

Patrick Lonergan

TRAVESTIES

I learned three things in Zurich during the war. . . . Firstly, you’re either a revolutionary or you’re not, and if you’re not you might as well be an artist as anything else. Secondly, if you can’t be an artist, you might as well be a revolutionary. . . . I forget the third thing.
—Old Carr, Act 2

In an interview shortly before the premiere of Travesties (1974), TOM STOPPARD announced that he was trying to contrive “the perfect marriage between the play of ideas and FARCE or perhaps even high COMEDY.” Travesties was first staged at the Aldwych Theatre in London in 1974 and was taken to New York one year later. Critical reactions were divided between enthusiastic praise for the play’s highly allusive verbal fireworks and Kenneth Tynan’s dismissal of the “triple-decker bus that isn’t going anywhere.” Literary criticism has alternately classified Travesties as a play or high comedy of ideas, a memory play, or a history play. Each of these labels seems appropriate, because the comedy actually thematizes and travesties (aesthetic) ideas, the function of memory or the role of history.

Travesties sets out from the coincidence that three revolutionaries resided at Zürich during World War I: Tristan Tzara, whose DADAISM aimed to overthrow traditional notions of art; James Joyce, whose Ulysses would epitomize the modernist revolution in literature; and Vladimir Ilich Lenin, planning his return to Russia. The protagonist of the play, Henry Carr, was actually a minor functionary at the Zürich consulate who had starred as Algernon in an amateur production of THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST, directed by James Joyce, who—after an unsuccessful lawsuit with the amateur actor—had immortalized Carr in an unflattering footnote in Ulysses. Stoppard decided to use this marginal figure as the focal point of his play.

Old Carr is remembering himself in the role of the Zürich consul meeting Tzara, Joyce, and Lenin at Zürich. His memory being hopelessly unreliable, however, it turns out that he had neither been consul nor met any of the celebrities. Framed by his recollections of the performance of The Importance of Being Earnest, which provides a rudimentary plot for Stoppard’s play, Carr confounds the historical characters with the fictional ones, casting Tzara as Jack Worthing, himself as Algernon, Joyce as Lady Bracknell, Lenin and his wife as Dr. Chasuble and Miss Prism, and his sister Gwendolen and the librarian Cecily as their namesakes in Wilde’s play. Occasionally Carr’s memory fails him altogether; in such “time slips” the play rewinds to an earlier passage in the dialogue, from which it resumes in a different direction.

Stoppard’s comedy is a veritable echo chamber of styles, patching together Wildean dialogues, Ulysses, limericks, vaudeville songs, Shakespearean sonnets, and historical documents. Since Lenin’s lines are quoted throughout from his own writings, some critics believe that his ontological status differs from that of the other characters. However, blurring the boundaries of history and fiction, the play also suggests that history does not consist in facts to be remembered, but is something created through memory—and that the Lenin plot makes no difference. The thematic core of the first act discusses the function of art, whereas the second act focuses on the role of the artist, especially his or her social responsibility toward society. As often in Stoppard’s theater, it is hard, if not impossible, to claim which position is favored in the play—Travesties raises questions without giving answers.

[See also England]

FURTHER READING

- Delaney, Paul. Tom Stoppard: The Moral Vision of the Major Plays. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1990.
- Haberer, Adolphe, ed. De Joyce à Stoppard: Écritures de la modernité. Lyon: Presses Universitaires de Lyon, 1991.
- Sammells, Neil. Tom Stoppard: The Artist as Critic. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1988.
- Stoppard, Tom. "Ambushes for the Audience: Towards a High Comedy of Ideas; Interview with Roger Hudson, Catherine Itzin and Simon Trussler." Theatre Quarterly 14, no. 4 (1974): 3–17.
- . Travesties. London: Faber, 1975.
- Whitaker, Thomas R. Tom Stoppard. Macmillan Modern Dramatists. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1983.

Anja Müller

TREADWELL, SOPHIE (1885–1970)

Sophie Treadwell was born on October 3, 1885, in Stockton, California. She attended the University of California at Berkeley, where she participated in drama activities and wrote fiction and poetry before graduating in 1906. She earned fame as a journalist, most notably for a 1920 interview with Pancho Villa, the revolutionary Mexican bandit.

In 1915 Treadwell moved to New York, where her first two Broadway productions had short runs: Gringo, a MELODRAMA of Americans in Mexico, and O'Nightingale, an exuberant COMEDY depicting the adventures of a young aspiring actress. After spending three years researching and writing a play about Edgar Allan Poe, she sent a copy of Poe to John Barrymore, who told her in February 1921 that he loved the play and wanted to play the title role. He did not offer her a contract, and in August 1924 he informed her that he was going to produce a different Poe play written by his wife, Michael Strange. Suspicious, Treadwell met with Barrymore, and after hearing the other play read, she filed suit to stop production of Strange's play and to get her own script returned. A media frenzy over the suit cast Treadwell in an unfavorable light as the "unknown opportunist," but her public stand sparked considerable discussion in newspapers on the topic of plagiarism. Treadwell refused to drop the suit; Barrymore returned her script and eventually stopped plans for production of his wife's version. Treadwell's play was eventually produced in 1936 as Plumes in the Dust with Henry Hull in the title role, but it did not fare well with Depression-era audiences.

Treadwell attended the sensational 1927 trial of Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray, who conspired to kill Snyder's husband and were executed in 1928. Treadwell used the trial as the basis for MACHINAL, an expressionistic drama that became her greatest critical and commercial success, combining her concern for women's inequality with her journalistic ability to tell a topical story. In nine scenes Young Woman is compelled to submit to forces around her—her mother's wishes, her husband's ardor, the birth of an unwanted child, society's condemnation for her taking a lover, and the prison guard who shaves the crown of her head before she is electrocuted. Treadwell had four more Broadway productions, her last being Hope for a Harvest, concerning the loss of the American work ethic, a theme that did not go over with 1941 audiences.

Treadwell's most innovative work is For Saxophone, a "musical play" that uses constantly changing musical sound, lighting, and staging shifts, as well as unusual visual and verbal effects. In 1999 the piece was adapted for radio and aired on the BBC as Intimations for Saxophone. Woman with Lilies was produced at the University of Arizona under the title Now He Doesn't Want to Play. Her work has largely gone unappreciated, but recent revivals of Machinal have revitalized interest in her as a pioneering woman playwright willing to tackle new styles, subjects, and forms in over thirty plays. Treadwell died on February 20, 1970, in Tucson, Arizona.

[See also Expressionism; Feminist Drama in the United States; United States]

PLAYS: Le Grand Prix (1905); Constance Darrow (1908); The Right Man (1908); The Settlement (1911); The Answer (1918); Claws (1918); Madame Bluff (1918); Trance (1918); Rights (1921); Gringo (1922); Love Lady (previously Old Rose, 1924); Many Mansions (1925); O'Nightingale (1925; previously Loney Lee, 1923); You Can't Have Everything (1925); Machinal (1928); Ladies Leave (1929); The Island (1930); Million Dollar Gate (with William McGeehan, 1930); Andrew Wells' Lady (1931); The Last Are First (1933); Lone Valley (1933); For Saxophone (1934); Plumes in the Dust (1936); Three (1936); Hope for a Harvest (1941); Highway (1942); The Last Border (1947); A String of Pearls (1950); Judgment in the Morning (1952); The Siren (1953); Garry (1954); Woman with Lilies (produced as Now He Doesn't Want to Play, 1967)

FURTHER READING

- Dickey, Jerry. Sophie Treadwell: A Research and Production Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1997.
- Engle, Sherry. "Desperately Seeking a Poe: Sophie Treadwell's Plumes in the Dust." American Drama (Spring 1997): 25–42.
- Heck-Rabi, Louise. "Sophie Treadwell: Agent for Change." In Women in American Theatre, ed. by Helen Krich Chinoy and Linda Walsh Jenkins. New York: Crown, 1981. 157–162.
- Wynn, Nancy. "Sophie Treadwell: The Career of a Twentieth Century American Feminist Playwright." Ph.D. diss., City Univ. of New York, 1982.

Sherry D. Engle

TREMBLAY, MICHEL (1942–)

The most widely performed and translated Quebecois playwright, Michel Tremblay is acclaimed for sowing a metaphor of nationalist hope from intensely personal strife. Born on June 25, 1942, and raised in Montreal, CANADA's, impoverished Plateau Mont-Royal neighborhood, Tremblay rejected classical studies and their middle-class sensibilities. Calling his work "theatre of truth" and "photography," Tremblay came to prominence in 1968 with SISTERS-IN-LAW (Les belles-sœurs, 1968), a play that revolutionized dramatic language: the "sisters" speak in lower-class joul. Although the play was dismissed as "filthy" and "un-French," it signaled the emergence of a new Quebecois drama, thanks in part to the writer's solidarity with his own people: "One is never more universal than when one is local."

Tremblay's characters belong to one neighborhood, sometimes to one family, and, above all, to one species: they have been described as pathetic clowns, their days marked by despair and paralysis. Daily chores become ritualistic, and hope, as elusive as money, is replaced by "fun." They revel in bingo, television, drinking, magazines, even mayonnaise. Above all, the characters dream, and they recount their dreams with a lyricism that counters the crude, staccato sociolect in which they speak of mundane existence. Between these two discursive poles is a zone of noncommunication where monologues go unheeded and unheard. The perpetual stalemate of their lives leads characters to revel in animosity as masochists (taking pleasure in the martyrdom of their meager conditions) and sadists (characters repeatedly injure each other emotionally and physically). Women treat sex as bestial; they remain silent, ignorant, and afraid. Men lack virility; they are mad, disabled, or wicked. Tremblay ascribes this sexual and familial discordance to a Catholic deification of feminine dependence and obedience. His characters tend to replace family with conventionally censored relationships, including homosexuality and incest. Yet his same-sex couples hardly fare better: men refer to themselves in the feminine, and this self-identification is not trendy or casual. Tremblay's recurrent depictions of the transgendered create a political statement of social impotence, of a people who have renounced their identities in favor of disguise. For the playwright, the Quebecois have been "transvestites for 300 years."

Tremblay's plays are based on antithetical structures that represent the allure of escape and the wish to belong, the fear of madness and the joy of accepting it, the empowerment of selfishness and the desire to aid. The playwright recalls EUGÈNE IONESCO and SAMUEL BECKETT—a part of French literature, yet also a foreigner. His works blend Ionesco's quotidian awareness with Beckett's perverse psychology. Tremblay's characters, however, inhabit smaller, altered worlds within an external world of coherence and logic. In this sense his plays recall 19th-century dramatic NATURALISM, in which unseen forces predetermine characters' lives before they have the opportunity to live them. His unflinching portrayals of the resigned poor, in income as well as in spirit, are interpreted locally as a call for self-determination and a commitment to authentic Quebecois culture. Without them, implies Tremblay, we can only be paralyzed in our relationships and our communities. He was awarded the Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres de France in 1984 and the Chevalier de l'Ordre National de Québec in 1992.

SELECT PLAYS: The Train (Le train, 1964); Sisters-in-Law (Les belles-sœurs, 1968); The Duchess of Langeais (La Duchesse de Langeais, 1969); The Peacocks (Les paons, 1969); Johnny Mangana and His Astonishing Dogs (Trois petits tours, 1971); Tomorrow Morning, Montreal Awaits (Demain matin, Montréal m'attend, 1972); Forever Yours, Marie-Lou (A toi, pour toujours, ta Marie-Lou, 1972); Like Death Warmed Over (En pièces détachées, 1973); Hosanna (1974); Bonjour, la, Bonjour (1975); Surprise, Surprise! (1975); The Heroes of My Childhood (Les héros de mon enfance, 1976); Damned Manon, Holy Sandra (Damnée Manon, Sacrée Sandra, 1978); Saint Carmen of the Main (Sainte-Carmen de la Main, 1978); The Impromptu of Outremont (L'impromptu d'Outremont, 1980); Albertine in Five Times (Albertine, en cinq temps, 1985); The Real World? (Le vrai monde: 1988); The House Among the Stars (La maison suspendue, 1990); A Full Moon in Summer (Messe solennelle pour une pleine lune d'été, 1995); Marcel Pursued by the Hounds (Marcel poursuivi par les chiens, 1997); For the Pleasure of Seeing Her Again (Encore une fois si vous le permettez, 1998); Impromptu on Nuns' Island (L'état des lieux, 2002)

FURTHER READING

- Collet, Paulett. "Michel Tremblay: Le leitmotive de son théâtre" [The leitmotif of his theater]. In Le théâtre canadien-français, ed. by Paul Wyczynski, Bernard Julien, and Hélène Beauchamp-Raule. Montreal: Fides, 1976. 597–615.
- Piccione, Marie-Lyne. Michel Tremblay, l'enfant multiple [The complex child]. Talence, France: Presses Universitaires de Bordeaux, 1999.
- Weiss, Jonathan M. French-Canadian Theater. Boston: Twayne, 1986.

Matt Di Cintio

TRETYAKOV, SERGEI (1892–1937)

Sergei Tretyakov was a Soviet playwright who was "in many ways, the representative figure of the revolutionary theatre . . . an artistic polymath whose contribution to the development of broadcast radio, journalism, documentary film and poetry are only beginning to be appreciated" (Leach, 1994). He was closely associated with VLADIMIR MAYAKOVSKY as joint leader of the leftist AVANT-GARDE during the 1920s; his contribution to agit-prop (AGITATION-PROPAGANDA) drama also involved working closely with Sergei Eisenstein and VSELOD MEYERHOLD.

His first work for the theater involved an agit-prop adaptation of a 19th-century play by ALEKSANDR OSTROVSKY, Enough Stupidity in Every Wise Man, as an episodic "montage of attractions" staged by Eisenstein at the Proletkult (Proletarian Culture) Theater in Moscow in 1923. According to Eisenstein, an "attraction" (with its connotations of circus and fairground) consisted of "aggressive moments" designed to produce "emotional shocks" in the audience of an ideological nature. For this purpose, Tretyakov transferred the action of the play to contemporary Paris and turned the 19th-century characters into politically contentious types such as Benito Mussolini and capitalist speculators, describing the play as a "text montage." His next work, Gasmasks (Protivogazy, 1923), a "MELODRAMA," is set in a German gasworks, the owner of which has neglected both the plant and his workers' safety so that a gas leak has to be repaired without protective masks—a heroic act of self-sacrifice by the workers that involves the death of the director's own revolutionary son. Tretyakov's last play for the Proletkult, described as an "agit-guignol" (a reference to the French Grand Guignol), was Are You Listening, Moscow?! (Slyshish, Moskva?!), 1924). Also set in GERMANY and inspired by an actual workers' revolt in Hamburg, it concerns a count who has planned a festival in his own honor, only to find that his efforts have been subverted when, at the end of the play, a statue unveiled to the greater glory of his family is discovered to have been replaced by one of Vladimir Lenin.

Tretyakov's first work for Meyerhold involved the adaptation of a pacifist drama with a World War I setting as World Rampant (Zemlya dybom, 1923). The play was constructed as a series of propagandist episodes, using the device of choric speech, or "speech montage," and deploying revolutionary slogans projected onto screens, converting the psychological aspects of the original play into political posters in such a way that "the theatre show" was replaced by "the theatre blow" (Tretyakov). His second play for Meyerhold, Roar China! (Rychi, Kitay!), 1926), was based on an actual incident on the Yangtze river involving a British gunboat that threatened the destruction of a local town if those responsible for the drowning of an American business agent were not produced for summary execution. The play conforms to leftist demands for a "literature of fact" and sharply juxtaposes scenes involving the human Chinese against those depicting grotesque imperialists on HMS Cockchafer. Tretyakov's last and most controversial work, I Want a Baby (Khochu rebyonka), 1926), was rehearsed by Meyerhold but banned. Its theme of the selective breeding and rearing of children was designed to provoke discussion but proved too ambiguous for the censorship's taste and was described as "a hostile slander on the Soviet family." Tretyakov met BERTOLT BRECHT in 1930 and translated a handful of his plays before being arrested as an enemy of the people and committing suicide.

[See also Russia and the Soviet Union]

SELECT PLAYS: Gasmasks (Protivogazy, 1923); Immaculate Conception (Immaconcep, 1923); The Wise Man (Mudrets, adapted from Ostrovsky's Na vsyakoگو mudretsa dovol'no prostoty, Enough Stupidity in Every Wise Man, also known as The Scoundrel, 1923); World Rampant, also known as Earth Rampant, Earth in Turmoil, The World Turned Upside-Down, and The World on Its Hind Legs (Zemlya dybom, 1923); Are You Listening, Moscow?! (Slyshish, Moskva?!), also known as Do You Hear, Moscow?! (Slyshish, Moskva?!), 1924); I Want a Baby, also known as I Want a Child (Khochu rebyonka, 1926); Roar, China! (Rychi, Kitay!), 1926)

FURTHER READING

- Kleberg, Lars. "Eisenstein's Potyomkin and Tretyakov's Rychi, Kitay." Scando-Slavica 23 (1977).
 ———. Theatre as Action: Soviet Avant-Garde Aesthetics. Tr. by Charles Rogle. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1993.
 Leach, Robert. Revolutionary Theatre. London: Routledge, 1994.
 Tretyakov, Sergei. Roar China, an Episode in Nine Scenes. Tr. by F. Polianovska and Barbara Nixon. London: Martin Lawrence Ltd, 1931.

Nick Worrall

TRIANA, JOSÉ (1933–)

José Triana, Cuban playwright and poet, was a key figure in the short-lived theatrical renaissance that occurred in CUBA after the revolution of 1959. Born in Camagüey and raised in Bayamo, Triana left Cuba in 1955 to study in Madrid, SPAIN, where he remained until the end of Fulgencio Batista's dictatorship. In Madrid Triana wrote his first important play, The Major General Will Speak on Theogony (El mayor general hablará de teogonía, 1957), in which he first presented the themes and techniques that would define his drama: use of ritual and the presence of oppression. With the triumph of the revolution, Triana returned to Cuba and established himself in Havana with the successful debut in 1960 of Medea in the Mirror (Medea en el espejo, 1959), a modern urban version of Euripides' TRAGEDY. María, a mulatta scorned by her white lover Julián, takes revenge by killing their children. As Triana witnessed the revolutionary government's campaign to solidify its power, his next plays, El parque de la fraternidad (1962) and La muerte del Ñeque (1964), dealt with themes of oppression and violence as inevitable results of power struggles.

Triana's international fame is due largely to the success of his play Night of the Assassins (La noche de los asesinos, 1964). Because of this play, literary critics and theater groups began to recognize the artistry of Spanish-speaking theater, which had historically remained second-tier to the theater produced in Europe. Although the play won the coveted Casa de las Américas prize in 1965, the antirevolutionary interpretation of Night of the Assassins by Cuban critics provoked Triana's eventual social and intellectual ostracism from Cuban literary and political circles. Although he continued as editor at the Instituto del Libro, he was unable to publish any other literary work in Cuba because of his assumed political stance. In 1980 he left Cuba and settled in Paris with his wife, where he remains a prolific writer. Plays such as Ceremonial de guerra (1990), Revolico en el Campo de Marte (1995), Common Language (Palabras comunes, 1986), Cruzando el puente (1992), and La fiesta (1995) address the current Cuban and Cuban exile situation as the author continues to critically assess his country's past and present.

Triana cites the authors of Spain's generation of 1898 as an important influence in his work with their elements of tragedy, search for IDENTITY, and desire to better society. The use of violence and ritual, as well as Afro-Cuban cultural elements, characterizes the majority of his dramas. Triana recounts Cuba's "unofficial" history as his plays focus on marginalized people of diverse races and classes, demonstrating how society tragically affects their lives. In his plays an oppressive entity, either real or imagined, often presides over a suffocating stage space where victim and victimizer continually trade places through ritual. At their most decisive moments his antiheroic protagonists inevitably fail to move beyond the vicious cycle of interdependence because the power structure of society maintains their enslavement. Influenced by the Theater of the Absurd, cruelty, and ceremony, the seemingly illogical, incoherent, and violent situations depicted critically reflect the problematic elements that Triana believes to be at the root of the Cuban psyche, such as racism, sexism, corruption, and blind religious faith.

[See also Absurdism]

SELECT PLAYS: The Major General Will Speak on Theogony (El mayor general hablará de teogonía, 1957); Medea in the Mirror (Medea en el espejo, 1959); El parque de la fraternidad (1962); La muerte del Neque (1964); Night of the Assassins (La noche de los asesinos, 1964); Common Language (Palabras comunes, 1986); Ceremonial de guerra (1990); Cruzando el puente (1992); La fiesta (1995); Revolico en el Campo de Marte (1995); Ahí están los Tarahumaras (1997); El último día del verano (unpublished)

FURTHER READING

Campa, Román de la. José Triana: Ritualización de la sociedad cubana. Madrid: Catédra, 1979.

Dauster, Frank N. "The Game of Chance: The Theater of José Triana." In Dramatists in Revolt: The New Latin American Theater, ed. by Leon F. Lyday and George W. Woodyard. Austin: Univ. of Texas Press, 1976. 167–189.

Nigro, Kirsten, ed. Palabras más que comunes: Ensayos sobre el teatro de José Triana. Boulder, Colo.: Society of Spanish and Spanish-American Studies, 1994.

Taylor, Diana. "Framing the Revolution: Triana's La noche de los asesinos and Ceremonial de guerra." Latin American Theatre Review 24 (Fall 1990): 81–92.

——, ed. En busca de una imagen: Ensayos críticos sobre Griselda Gambaro y José Triana. Ottawa, Canada: Girol Bks., 1989.

Vasserot, Christilla. "Siempre fui y seré un exiliado." Encuentro con la Cultura Cubana 4–5 (1997): 33–45.

I. Carolina Caballero

TRIBADERNAS NATT See THE NIGHT OF THE TRIBADES

TRIFLES

A model of the one-act form, SUSAN GLASPELL's Trifles (1916) exemplified modernist American DRAMATURGY for decades, holding the stage while serving as a touchstone text in playwright-ing manuals and appearing repeatedly in anthologies of short plays. Its equally noteworthy short-story counterpart, "A Jury of Her Peers" (1917), reemerged in the 1970s as a seminal text for Anglo-American feminist criticism. The two works reveal Glaspell's acute sensitivity to the social enforcement of gender roles, to sexual inequities in the U.S. legal system, and to the importance of foregrounding women's voices and women's experience in cultural production.

Glaspell later traced the genesis of the pieces to her early journalistic career, when she covered the Hossack murder trial of 1900 for the Des Moines Daily News. Glaspell filed twenty-six articles on the prosecution and conviction of Margaret Hossack for the murder of her husband, John. She did not return to the case for fifteen years, however, until the demand for new scripts for the theater company she co-founded, the Provincetown Players, prompted her to explore its theatrical potential.

Glaspell uses the structure and technical devices of the murder-mystery form to develop her narrative. John Wright has been killed in bed, and his wife Minnie has been arrested for the murder, before the play begins. Two sets of characters, grouped by sex, see the crime from different perspectives and use distinct strategies in their efforts to find evidence and reconstruct events. The men, who represent law and the social order, comb the offstage crime scene and the surrounding property for clues, to no avail. The wives of the sheriff and the neighbor who found Wright's body remain in the kitchen. This locale is of no interest to the men, who dismiss it and women's labor therein as unimportant. The women become amateur detectives, discussing Minnie's and their own lives empathically and thereby discovering, in the "trifles" of Minnie's daily routine, a possible motive for the crime. They forge meaningful ties with each other, and, through their identification with Minnie, they determine that their bonds as women outweigh their allegiance to the patriarchal judicial order. In the play's closing moments the women decide to hide the evidence they have found, operating as the "jury of her peers" that the exclusively male legal system precludes.

In Trifles Glaspell developed the device of "absent center" characters that would become a hallmark of her dramaturgy, recurring most notably in Bernice (1919) and her Pulitzer Prize-winning ALISON'S HOUSE (1930). These figures, who never appear onstage, ground her dramas and serve as foils through whom we come to know those we do see. The absent characters exemplify Glaspell's understanding of the constructedness of identity, in that we can only know them through their representation by others. Glaspell's conscious revision of cultural paradigms—her insistence on the significance of women's lives and her rejection of patriarchal conventions—established her as a maverick and a leading writer for the first wave of feminism in the UNITED STATES.

[See also Feminist Drama in the United States]

FURTHER READING

- Gainor, J. Ellen. Susan Glaspell in Context: American Theater, Culture, and Politics, 1915–48. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 2001.
- Glaspell, Susan. Plays. Ed. by C. W. E. Bigsby. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1987.
- Ozieblo, Barbara. Susan Glaspell: A Critical Biography. Chapel Hill: Univ. of North Carolina Press, 2000.
- Papke, Mary. Susan Glaspell: A Research and Production Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1993.

J. Ellen Gainor

TRI SESTRY See THREE SISTERS

THE TROJAN WAR WILL NOT TAKE PLACE

A play in two acts, The Trojan War Will Not Take Place (La Guerre de Troie n'aura lieu, 1935) by JEAN GIRAUDOUX is generally considered his greatest dramatic achievement. Hector, a prince of Troy, returns from battle intent on closing the city's Gates of War, an act that will symbolize Troy's commitment to peace. But his brother Paris has caused a diplomatic incident by abducting Helen, the wife of the Greek king Menelaus, and there is talk of war; even the prophetess Cassandra is having bloody visions. Initially Hector smiles at Paris's dalliance, but his amusement fades as he discovers that the Trojans are more interested in keeping Helen than they are in keeping the peace. Beauty worth dying for, the pride of a nation, inspiration for a poet's couplet—Helen has come to represent all these things and more. In act 2 Ajax and Ulysses arrive to retrieve Helen; while the former is itching for a fight, the latter is charmed by Hector's wife, Andromache, and decides to return Helen to Greece without incident. But as the Greeks depart, a drunken Ajax insults Andromache, pushing Hector to the breaking point. When the Trojan poet Demokos bursts in to rail at him for betraying his country, Hector strikes Demokos, who, with his dying words, cries out that Ajax is his killer. The Trojans rush the Greek ship and kill Ajax in a frenzy as Hector, Andromache, and Cassandra look on in horror. As the curtain falls, the Gates of War slowly open.

At once a COMEDY of manners and a drama of ideas, a retelling of The Iliad and a critique of all war stories, The Trojan War Will Not Take Place was perhaps the ideal theatrical subject for Giraudoux's signature irony. Some critics have complained that his Boulevard style and apparent lack of moral commitment in other works rendered his drama pallid, if not precious. But in The Trojan War it is the principled Hector's very encounters with those seemingly indifferent or resigned to the impending conflict that fuel the play's mounting tension. As articulated by Ulysses in act 2, Giraudoux's play anatomizes how a "world's mood and atmosphere" can give "a kind of permission for war." What appear to be the subjects of comedy—Helen's narcissism, Ajax's boorishness, Priam's pompous nationalism—are revealed as deadly weapons, all the more so for their seeming inconsequence. Hector, perhaps Giraudoux's most appealing male protagonist, likely gives voice to the playwright's deeper feelings about combat; Giraudoux was wounded twice in World War I and was the first writer to be awarded the wartime Legion of Honor.

The Trojan War Will Not Take Place premiered in Paris on November 21, 1935, produced by Louis Jouvet. Critics understood the piece to be a trenchant commentary on Europe's strained political situation: GERMANY had just left the League of Nations and was about to occupy the Rhineland. A line spoken by Cassandra in the first act upon seeing Hector returning from battle would prove eerily prescient indeed: "This was the last war, the next one is waiting." CHRISTOPHER FRY's English adaptation of the play is titled Tiger at the Gates.

[See also France]

FURTHER READING

- Body, Jacques. Jean Giraudoux: The Legend and the Secret. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1991.
- Giraudoux, Jean. Tiger at the Gates. Tr. by Christopher Fry. London: French, 1955.
- Mankin, Paul. Precious Irony: The Theatre of Jean Giraudoux. The Hague: Mouton, 1971.

Charlotte Stoudt

TROMMELN IN DER NACHT See DRUMS IN THE NIGHT

TRUE WEST

There's no such thing as the West anymore! It's a dead issue!
—Austin, Scene 6

Although SAM SHEPARD's True West (1980) focuses on several familiar Shepard themes—the corruption of art by commerce, the spiritual death of the American family, and the vanished promise of the western frontier—it most closely examines the dynamics of the divided self. "I wanted to write a play about double nature, one that wouldn't be symbolic or metaphorical or any of that stuff," Shepard explained; "I've worked harder on this play than anything I've ever written. The play's down to the bone."

True West explores the relationship between two very different brothers. Austin, a preppy aspiring screenwriter, has left his wife and children "up north" to write in the quiet of his mother's suburban Southern California home while she vacations in Alaska. The older Lee, a renegade drifter and burglar who has spent the last three months in the desert, now crashes in on Mom's as well. Austin is trying to sell his "simple love story" to Saul Kimmer, a crass Hollywood producer, but Lee one-ups him and pitches Saul "a Western that'd knock yer lights out. . . . Contemporary Western. Based on a true story." Austin and Lee vie for Saul's approval, and, over a strong-armed golf game, Lee gets Saul to drop Austin's project and produce Lee's story. Austin at first refuses to write Lee's script, which he describes as "a bullshit story. . . . Two lamebrains chasing each other across Texas," but caves in when he realizes that it is the only way he will get his car keys back from Lee.

The heart of this two-act play is the scenes where the brothers trade roles: Lee attempts to dictate his script while Austin types, but in their brawling their roles deteriorate to the point that Austin quips, "We all sound alike when we're sloshed." Soon they have busted up Mom's kitchen, Lee mauls the typewriter with a golf club, and Austin has cat-burgled the neighborhood for all its toasters. But as the two brothers share stories about their "old man" losing his teeth and living broke and drunk in the Mexican desert, it becomes clear that they are both searching for something authentic. Each yearns for what the other has: Lee for Austin's legitimacy and stability, Austin for Lee's adventure and freedom. In the last scene of the play Mom comes home early, disappointed with Alaska, and, unable to deal with her rowdy sons and her vandalized home, she checks into a motel. At the play's end Austin and Lee are left in a dead-heat confrontation, circling each other, waiting for the next move.

True West was first produced in San Francisco by the Magic Theatre in 1980. Robert Woodruff directed, with Shepard in attendance at rehearsals; the play had a successful run. Woodruff then directed a new cast in a second production for the New York Shakespeare Festival's Public Theater, but was replaced after a dispute with the Public Theater's producer, Joseph Papp. Shepard disavowed the production. In 1982 the play enjoyed a long-running and critically acclaimed New York revival in a production by Chicago's Steppenwolf Theatre Company, which emphasized the black COMEDY of the play and featured John Malkovich as Lee and Gary Sinise as Austin. A television version of this production was also filmed for the Public Broadcasting Service's American Playhouse.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Bottoms, Stephen J. The Theatre of Sam Shepard. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1998.

Marranca, Bonnie, ed. American Dreams: The Imagination of Sam Shepard. New York: Performing Arts Journal Publications, 1981.

Shepard, Sam. True West. In Seven Plays. New York: Bantam, 1981.

Mary Fleischer

THE TRUTH

In The Truth CLYDE FITCH played out his idea of a woman character who cannot help lying, writing what he described as "psychologically and technically" his "best play yet." After initial strong showings in Cleveland, Chicago, and Buffalo in the fall of 1906, The Truth opened in New York at the Criterion Theatre on January 7, 1907.

Becky Warder, a charming, vivacious, and lovable young woman, has been happily married to her adoring husband, Tom, for six years, but she has been meeting regularly Fred Lindon, the husband of her friend, Eva, from whom he is separated. Although she admits to Lindon that she enjoys his attention, Becky sees the meetings as harmless in her attempts to help the couple reconcile.

Eva, however, has hired detectives to follow her philandering husband, and, learning of the daily meetings between Becky and Fred, she becomes jealous and shows the reports to Tom. Warder refuses to believe the reports, but mentions them to Becky, who denies Eva's accusations and, at her husband's request, promises never to see Lindon again.

Early on, the likeable Becky is shown lying compulsively even over trivial matters, becoming increasingly enmeshed in her own falsehoods. Her husband returns home earlier than expected to find Lindon calling on his wife at her request; he also learns that she has sent her father money despite his adamant refusal to do so. When confronted by her husband about her broken promises, Becky denies and covers up, making things even worse. Although he has overlooked her mild prevarications in the past, Warder now finds her deception intolerable and leaves.

Becky goes to her father's shabby Baltimore apartment, where he has a friendship with Mrs. Crespigny, the coarse landlady to whom the old man owes back rent and holds off with vague hints of marriage. Roland's perpetual lying demonstrates the atmosphere in which Becky has been brought up. "I always hated the plain truth," he tells his daughter. "I liked to trim it up a little." To which Becky replies with a pathetic laugh, "Like me!" Roland, wanting his daughter to reconcile with her husband so they will resume their financial support, sends Warder a message that Becky is seriously ill. But when a worried Warder arrives, Becky refuses to go along, for now she "loathes" lies. She tells her husband the truth, and they happily reconcile.

New York reviews were initially unfavorable. In spite of a strong cast that included Clara Bloodgood, the chief complaint against the play was that there was too much conversation and "a paucity of action" until the last act. Even though positive reviews came later, the production did not recover from initial negative commentary.

The Truth, however, had enormous success abroad, beginning as a smash hit in London, with actress Marie Tempest, and running for 170 performances. Appreciative audiences throughout France, Germany, and Italy were drawn to the psychological aspects of the play; in Budapest The Truth became the first American play produced in Hungary.

[See also Realism; United States]

FURTHER READING

Bordman, Gerald. The Oxford Companion to American Theatre. 2d ed. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1992.

Moses, Montrose J., and Virginia Gerson. Clyde Fitch and His Letters. Boston: Little, Brown, 1924.

- "Mr. Fitch's Play Ably Presented." New York Times (April 13, 1914): 11:3.
 "Music and the Drama." Chicago Chronicle (October 24, 1906).
 "The Truth." Chicago Tribune (October 23, 1906).
 "The Truth." New York Times (January 8, 1907).
 "The Truth." New York Times (January 13, 1907).

Sherry D. Engle

THE TRUTH ABOUT BLAYDS

Although perennially ignored by academics, The Truth About Blayds is the most serious play by A. A. MILNE. It was commercially and critically lauded—even Dorothy Parker, famous for her mockery of Milne's children's books, called Blayds "a fine and merciless and honest play." It was premiered on December 20, 1921, and 120 performances were staged at the Globe Theatre, London; major and minor American productions flourished—a young Katharine Hepburn played the male role of Oliver Blayds-Conway in one amateur show.

The play dramatizes the differing perspectives of the Blayds-Conway family: Oliver Blayds is a much-lauded, ninety-year-old literary giant; his eldest daughter, Marion, and her husband, William Conway, live fawningly in Blayds's shadow, as does his younger daughter, the devoted Isobel; the grandchildren, Oliver and Septima, resent the family's slavish devotion to the old man. The Samuel French "acting edition" of 1923 depicts the scenery that Milne stipulated: an imposing portrait of Blayds is placed in the center, while lush sofas, gentlemen's desks, ornate chandeliers, and a high ceiling stress the oddly austere opulence in which the Blayds-Conways exist. In the first act a number of "young writers" come to pay tribute at this altar to Oliver Blayds. Blayds is revealed to be a tired wreck of a man; the pompous choreographing of the visitors by Marion and William is embarrassing; Septima speaks of wishing to flee Blayds and the house, while her brother satirizes his own exploitation of his relative's name and scorns the prying relic hunting of Blayds's followers.

Unmourned by the audience, Blayds has died before act 2 begins. Isobel, Blayds's deathbed confidante, narrates the shocking "truth about Blayds": he did not write his literary works at all. A young friend of his, Jenkins, wrote all the works. When he died young, Blayds took possession of the manuscripts and promoted them as his own. The news is greeted with infuriated bitterness by the Blayds-Conways. In A. A. Milne's own words, the family is broken by the realization that they have worshiped someone who "is discovered to be a false god." In the third and final act Oliver makes a tongue-in-cheek, throwaway comment: Blayds must have been doting, hallucinating, when he "invented" the plagiarism story. Marion and William seize on this notion and determine to continue Blayds's deception even after his death. Isobel refuses to perpetuate the myth, but is won over by the promise of marriage to Blayds's chief admirer, A. L. Royce. This should, then, be a play that ends happily, as Isobel and Royce are frustrated lovers a generation previously. But Isobel herself states that Royce is probably in love with the teenage Isobel, not the one worn out by two decades of nursing the demanding old Blayds—and she will wind up nursing the now-middle-aged Royce. For the audience, the perpetuation of the lies about Blayds's genius grates, and the deference shown to esteemed characters such as Blayds by the family and by the "young writers" is seen to be simultaneously self-deluding and self-serving.

[See also England]

FURTHER READING

- Haring-Smith, Tori. A. A. Milne: A Critical Bibliography. New York: Garland, 1982.
 Mendelsohn, Michael J. "A. A. Milne." In The Dictionary of Literary Biography, vol. 10, pt. 2, Modern British Dramatists, 1900–1945, ed. by Stanley Weintraub. Detroit: Gale, 1982. 42–45.
 Milne, A. A. It's Too Late Now: The Autobiography of a Writer. London: Methuen, 1939.
 ——. Three Plays: The Dover Road, The Truth About Blayds, The Great Broxopp. New York: Putnam, 1922; London: Chatto, 1923.
 ——. The Truth About Blayds. London: French, 1923.
 Swann, Thomas Burnett. A. A. Milne. New York: Twayne, 1971.

Kevin De Ornellas

TSEGAYE GABRE-MEDHIN (1936–2006)

Ours, Africa's in general, or in this case, Ethiopia's in particular, is just another part of today's inquisitive generation that must be encouraged to come to terms with its historic past; even that historic past often torn and denied against him. And this, to a lesser or greater extent, may be achieved by a process of re-interpreting to himself, the human events of his past which, in a way is still responsible for his present conflicting awareness, if not for the shaping of his total future event. It is in this sense alone that a historical play becomes an instrument of history and change.

Another of AFRICA's prolific writers whose works are less known outside his country, largely owing to their publication mostly in Amharic, is Tsegaye Gabre-Medhin. Born in 1936 to parents of Amharic and Oromo parentage, Tsegaye wrote well over thirty-three plays, of which only Oda-Oak Oracle, written in 1965, and Collision of Altars, written in 1977, have been widely read in the English-speaking world; he also published several short stories, and newspaper columns and directed plays, some of which he translated into Amharic. Tsegaye is widely recognized in his country as poet laureate, winner of the Haile Selassie I prize in Amharic literature, and Ethiopia's most decorated playwright. A large number of Tsegaye's works were either censored or banned by various regimes in Ethiopia's turbulent political history, resulting in a short stay in jail for one of his plays that critiqued the military dictatorship of Mengistu Haile Mariam.

Tsegaye began writing as a teenager. Though trained as a lawyer, he focused on writing and eventually won scholarships to study in the UNITED STATES, FRANCE, and ENGLAND. He was appointed the vice director of arts at the Haile Selassie Theatre on his return to Ethiopia in 1959. He and director Seyoum Sibhat began a systematic process of "Ethiopianizing" the theater's program, as opposed to a mostly European program. Tsegaye helped to translate plays by William Shakespeare and Molière into Amharic, directed some of them, and used his position to produce and showcase his works and those of other Ethiopians writing in the country's major languages.

A key characteristic of Tsegaye's plays is the centering of characters from lower classes and castes as protagonists of his plays. He wrote plays with titles such as Blood Harvest (Yedem Azmera), Crown of Thorns (Yeshoh Akilil), Cheap Cigarettes (Kosho Cigara), The Ugly Girl (Askeyami Ligagared), Mumps (Djoro Dgif), and A Man of the People (Ye Kermasow). This in itself was a radical departure from the norm in a society heavily invested in its aristocratic history and whose major literature sustained the culture of the monarchy. Such dissident representations eventually earned the displeasure and banning of his works by the monarch and subsequently by the various reformist regimes that overthrew the monarchy. His most popular play written in this vein is Tewodros (1987), which drew on the legacy of a former emperor of the same name to question the ideas of the monarchy and the clerical establishment that justified and sustained their divine right of rulership. Prior to such innovations, theater themes never focused on the plight of the commoners who constituted the majority of the population. Tsegaye's direction attracted different types of audiences to the theater and paved the way for a new populism that came to be adopted by younger playwrights and directors.

Beyond using poor people as subjects of his drama, Tsegaye's works constantly called for critical reforms to Ethiopia's religious and political history in order to stimulate a more democratic society. Tsegaye's earlier Oda-Oak Oracle (1965) and later Collision of Altars (1977) fully illustrate his desire to speak to the power of the dominant culture of Ethiopia while inviting the lower classes to consciousness of their subjectivity and citizenship. Tsegaye's leadership role in developing Ethiopian theater extended to pioneering the study of theater arts at the University of Addis Ababa, where he taught for a while. Tsegaye came to symbolize the voice of reason in a country with a turbulent political and cultural history. Tsegaye died on February 25, 2006, at age sixty-nine.

SELECT PLAYS: Oda-Oak Oracle (1965); Collision of Altars (1977); Tewodros (1987)

FURTHER READING

- Mckinley, Jesse. "Tsegaye Gabre-Medhin Dies; Ethiopian Poet Laureate, 69." New York Times (March 9, 2006): C18.
 Plastow, J. African Theatre and Politics: The Evolution of Theatre in Ethiopia, Tanzania and Zimbabwe. Amsterdam: Rodopi, 1996.
 Tsegaye Gabre-Medhin. Collision of Altars. London: Rex Collins, 1977.

Awam Amka

TSUBOUCHI SHÖYŌ (1859–1935)

Tsubouchi Shōyō, a Japanese critic, theater reformer, playwright, and translator, is considered, with OSANAI KAORU, a founder of SHINGEKI. Tsubouchi entered Tokyo University in 1876, then taught at Waseda University from 1883. He framed his mission to modernize—not Westernize—Japanese literature and theater with two influential works, The Essence of the Novel (Shōsetsu Shinzui) in 1885, the first example of modern Japanese literary criticism, and the long essay "Wagakuni no Shigeki" (Japan's historical drama) in 1893–1894. Rejecting the prevailing neo-Confucian didacticism and set character types that dominated fiction and theater in his era, he urged instead REALISM, objectivity, and characters of psychological depth. He wanted to transform the then-current notion of theater as low-class, risqué, fanciful entertainment into one that was serious, elevated, and worthy of respect beyond JAPAN, just as William Shakespeare, HENRIK IBSEN, and ANTON CHEKHOV were respected outside their own countries. He envisioned combining the realism and character development in those playwrights with traditional Japanese elements, such as the stylized declamation and movement of kabuki.

Tsubouchi sought to realize his theories by founding, with the European-educated Shimamura Hōgetsu, the Literary Arts Society (Bungei Kyōkai) in 1906. He refused to work with kabuki actors, recruiting instead inexperienced young people whom he could train from scratch. He also attempted to write plays in the style he advocated. A Paulownia Leaf (Kiri hitoha) written in 1894–1895, laced with subtle structural borrowings from Hamlet, demonstrated that a kabuki text could be enjoyed for its literary and intellectual value. Not surprisingly, the play was attacked by traditionalists as going too far and by modernists as not going far enough. It went unstaged for nearly a decade but in time came to be regarded as a SHIN KABUKI classic. Perhaps his most successful play is EN THE ASCETIC (En no gyōja) written in 1916, which has distinct overtones of Shakespeare's The Tempest.

Unfortunately, Tsubouchi's practice as reformer and playwright lagged behind his vision for three reasons. First, without direct experience of theater outside Japan, he was, though gifted at declaiming lines, unable to shirk kabuki rhythms and tones, and his dutiful students emulated his every nuance; their productions were essentially kabuki recycled. Second, the only examples of new Japanese plays he showed his students were his own, but those, like his declamation, were more the work of a passionate intellectual than a professional actor or playwright and can wither under critical scrutiny. Third, the very success of his Shakespeare and Ibsen productions—Hamlet (1907 and 1910), Julius Caesar (1913), and A DOLL'S HOUSE (1911)—meant that Western theater, not Japanese, initially became the ideal modern theater in the minds of Japanese.

Still, Tsubouchi's unflagging commitment to reform shook the firmament of traditional Japanese theater and made accessible the idea of a modern theater. Perhaps his most enduring legacy is his complete translation of Shakespeare (he coined the Japanese word for COMEDY, kigeki), begun in 1884, completed in 1928. His enormous impact was acknowledged that year when the Tsubouchi Memorial Theatre Museum of Waseda University (modeled after the 16th-century Fortune Theatre in London) was built in his honor.

SELECT PLAYS: A Paulownia Leaf (Kiri hitoha, 1894–1895); The Sinking Moon Over the Lonely Castle Where the Cuckoo Cries (Hototogisu kojō no rakugetsu, 1897); The New Urashima (Shinkyoku Urashima, 1904); En the Ascetic (En no gyōja, 1916)

FURTHER READING

Ibaraki, Tadashi. Nihon shingeki shōshi [A short history of shingeki].

Tokyo: Miraisha, 1980.

Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era;

Poetry, Drama, Criticism. New York: H. Holt, 1984.

Ortolani, Benito. The Japanese Theatre: From Shamanistic Ritual to Contemporary Pluralism. Leiden: Brill, 1990.

Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Change and Continuity. London: Japan Library, 2002.

Rimer, J. Thomas. Toward a Modern Japanese Theatre: Kishida Kunio.

Princeton: Princeton Univ. Press, 1974.

Tsubouchi, Shōyō. Ourashima: Légende dramatique en trois actes.

Tr. by Takamatsu Yoshie. Paris: Roger, 1922.

John K. Gillespie

TSUKA KŌHEI (1948–)

Tsuka Kōhei is a Japanese playwright and director whom some believe to be the sole major playwright to emerge in JAPAN in the 1970s. Tsuka won the Kishida Kunio Prize for THE ATAMI MURDER CASE (Atami satsujin jiken, 1973) in 1974. Shortly after that he founded Tsuka Kōhei, Inc., and within two years a “Tsuka boom” began among young people who lined up at mid-sized commercial halls in Tokyo to see plays such as A Stripper's Tale (Sutorippaa monogatari, 1980) and The Fall Guy (Kamata kōshin-kyoku, 1981). Tsuka gave up writing drama after 1987, but his plays remain popular.

At the beginning of the 1970s younger theater practitioners faced two challenges: one was the high standard set by the little theater (SHŌGEKIJŌ) movement of the 1960s, and the other was the dissipation of political and artistic energy that resulted from the inability of the left wing to stop the renewal of the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty. After the treaty's renewal the left-wing coalition of resistance fell apart, and without a clear political objective little theater companies lost their dramatic focus.

Directors of the little theater movement such as KARA JŪRŌ and SUZUKI TADASHI tended to emphasize physicality, but the major influence on Tsuka was playwright BETSUYAKU MINORU, who was influenced in turn by SAMUEL BECKETT. Without a distrust of text, Tsuka's contribution in the 1970s was to revive the status of words as a performative vehicle and the individual as a theme for drama. This fit the mood of youth seeking answers about themselves and disillusioned by politics.

Tsuka writes in Japanese and uses a Japanese pen name, but he is a second-generation resident Korean and does not hold Japanese citizenship. Although the political and social issues surrounding the marginalization of resident Koreans are addressed in later fiction and essays, they are not directly dealt with in his plays. However, the discrimination he experienced feeds his interest in the performative nature of human existence. Critic Senda Akihiko calls Tsuka's characters “actors” who choose their own role in life. Their excessive passion leads to bitterly humorous situations. This bitter laughter seems to have reflected the empty spiritual and political existence of youth in the 1970s. The Atami Murder Case reflects that emptiness. The play centers on three police officers who are more concerned about performance of their images and reputations than justice.

For My Father, Who Failed to Die in the War (Sensō de shinenakatta otōsan no tame ni, 1971) is a satirical treatment of how common people identified with the Japanese leadership's prosecution of World War II. In this play a man invents a military past in order to overcome the inadequacies he feels among his peers.

Revolution 101: Legend of the Hero (Shokyū kakumei kōza hiryūden, 1972), revised in 1974 as Legend of a Flying Dragon: And Then a Crow (Hiryūden: sore kara karasu) turns a scathing eye on hypocrisy within the left-wing political movements of the 1960s. Three characters from different sides look back at the political struggle. They give meaning to their empty memories by continuing to play at the game of class struggle.

In A Stripper's Tale Akemi, a stripper past her prime, slides into prostitution so her younger sister can study dance in New York. Akemi and her pimp, Shige, are in love, but he uses Akemi to further his political ambitions. Akemi's reward before her death is her sister's Broadway success.

Tsuka himself continues to pursue success in his various roles as stage director, novelist, screenwriter, theater educator, and resident foreigner in Japan.

SELECT PLAYS: Excuse Me Mr. Postman (Yūbinya-san chotto, 1970); For My Father Who Failed to Die in the War (Sensō de shinenakatta otōsan no tame ni, 1971); Revolution 101: Legend of the Hero (Shokyū kakumei kōza hiryūden, 1972); The Atami Murder Case (Atami satsujin jiken, 1973); A Stripper's Tale (Sutorippaa monogatari, 1980); The Fall Guy (Kamata kōshin-kyoku, 1981); Hotel Rose (Bara Hoteru, 1982); Tsuka's Chūshingura (Tsuka-ban Chūshingura, 1982); Disappearance of Youth (Seishun kakeochi, 1983); Kyōko (Kyōko, 1987)

FURTHER READING

Japan Playwrights Association, ed. Half a Century of Japanese Theater.

Vol. 5, 1970s. Tokyo: Kinokuniya, 2003.

Kazama Ken. Shōgekijō no fūkei [The little theater landscape]. Tokyo: Chūō Kōronsha, 1992.

Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Change and Continuity. London: Japan Library, 2002.

Senda, Akihiko. The Voyage of Contemporary Japanese Theatre. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1997.

John D. Swain

TUAN YUAN ZHI HOU, PUXIAN XI See AFTER THE REUNION

TUGHLAQ

Tughlaq (1964) was one of the most popular plays of the 1960s in INDIA. Although it presents the fictional story of Sultan Muhammad bin Tughlaq, who reigned from 1327 to 1332, GIRISH KARNAD wrote the play in 1964 because Tughlaq's history seemed very contemporary. Karnad has said that although Tughlaq was the most idealistic and intelligent ruler ever to come to power in India, his reign ended in chaos and bloodshed—a situation that mirrored India during Jawaharlal Nehru's last days. "In a sense," wrote Karnad, "the play reflected the slow disillusionment my generation felt with the new politics of independent India: the gradual erosion of the ethical norms that guided the movement for independence" (Karnad, 1994).

An idealistic young ruler takes the throne. He establishes laws that treat Hindus and Muslims equally. He introduces fair taxation policies. He introduces currency. Because his policies are so far ahead of their time, his subjects begin to refer to him as Muhammad the Mad, and they rebel. So Muhammad spends his time crushing rebellion after rebellion, and he begins to murder anyone who gets in the way of his goals—small sacrifices for the greater good of the kingdom. As time goes on and his policies fail, Tughlaq grows more and more vicious. A subplot of the play follows the character Aziz, who begins life as a common thief until he figures out how to make the most of Tughlaq's edicts. "Only a few months in Delhi," he says in scene 7, "and I have discovered a whole new world—politics. . . . It's a beautiful world—wealth, success, position, power." At the end of the play Aziz comes face-to-face with Tughlaq: "Since Your Majesty came to the throne, I have been your most devoted servant," he says. "I have studied your every order, followed every instruction, considered every measure of Your Majesty's with the greatest attention. I insist I am Your Majesty's true disciple." In Aziz, Tughlaq sees the corruption of every single one of his idealistic dreams.

The most famous production of Tughlaq was directed by Ebrahim Alkazi under the auspices of the National School of Drama in 1965, where it was staged as an environmental production at the Red Fort in Old Delhi. Tughlaq has also been produced in Bengali and Marathi, and Alyque Padamsee directed an English-language production in 1970. Tughlaq continues to be staged in schools and colleges all over India.

[See also Environmental Theater]

FURTHER READING

Dhanavel, P. The Indian Imagination of Girish Karnad: Essays on "Hayavadana". New Delhi: Prestige Bks., 2000.

Dodiya, Jaydipsinh, ed. The Plays of Girish Karnad: Critical Perspectives. New Delhi: Prestige Bks., 1999.

Karnad, Girish. Collected Plays, Volume I (Tughlaq, Hayavadana, Bali: The Sacrifice, Naga-Mandala). New Delhi: Oxford Univ. Press, 2005.
———. Three Plays. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1994.

Mukherjee, Tutun, ed. Girish Karnad's Plays: Performance and Critical Perspectives. Delhi: Pencraft International, 2006.

Pandey, Sudhakar, and Freya Barua, eds. New Directions in Indian Drama. New Delhi: Prestige Bks., 1994.

Erin B. Mee

TURKEY

While traditional Turkish drama revolves around several Oriental styles commonly known as halk tiyatrosu (people's drama), including kukla oyunu (puppet playing), gölge oyunu (shadow play), meddah (storyteller), and orta oyunu (a type of comic theater-in-the-round akin to commedia dell'arte), the roots of modern Turkish drama lie in the Westernization program of the Ottoman Empire in the 19th century. Modern Turkish drama has evolved in three successive waves, each corresponding to a defining sociopolitical epoch in Turkish history: Tanzimat (reform, 1839–1908), Meşrutiyet (constitutional monarchy, 1908–1923), and Cumhuriyet (republic, 1923–present).

When the Tanzimat Edict was issued in 1839, European drama had already penetrated the palace circles in Istanbul through the staging of Western plays at various foreign embassies. After Tanzimat these plays found an ever-growing audience among the nobility. The opening of the so-called Fransız Tiyatrosu (French Theater) in Istanbul in the early 19th century provided an opportunity for several European drama groups to visit the empire. Prominent plays were translated into the Turkish (Ottoman) language in this period. Written text was gradually accepted as the basis of theatrical activity. Tanzimat gave birth to the early examples of Turkish drama literature.

The first pioneers of Turkish drama were the Ottoman Armenians, who, thanks to their socioreligious links with Europe, were better suited to follow European developments in the arts and literature. The establishment of Gedikpaşa Theater in 1860 proved a turning point. Güllü Agop, an Armenian Ottoman, took over the theater in 1861 and eventually created a standing drama group called Osmanlı Tiyatrosu (Ottoman Theater) in 1868. Two years later Prime Minister Ali Paşa granted him the exclusive rights to stage Turkish plays in Istanbul. In return, Agop undertook to create Turkish theaters in different parts of the city.

Several students were sent abroad during Tanzimat to familiarize themselves with the entirely "new" European world. The discovery of the Western drama literature by these students manifested itself in their exploration of Western forms and patterns and especially in their translations of such playwrights as Molière, Jean Racine, William Shakespeare, and Victor Hugo. The translations/adaptations by Ahmet Vefik Paşa, Teodor Kasap, and Ali Bey of Molière's plays are especially worth noting. In fact, the Tanzimat drama continued to flourish under overall French influence, with vaudevilles, operettas, and modest comedies being the favorites of the masses. The Poet's Marriage (Şair Eulenmesi), a single-act comedy written by İbrahim Şinasi in 1860, is usually considered the first original Western-style Turkish play.

COMEDY was by no means the only attractive drama form for young Ottoman intellectuals. Such notable literary minds as Namık Kemal, Ahmet Mithat, Şemsettin Sami, Recaizade Mahmut Ekrem, Abdülhak Hamit, Muallim Naci, Ebuzziya Tevfik, Ali Süavi, Nabizade Nazım, and Ziya Paşa experimented with a wide array of themes and styles, including TRAGEDY and MELODRAMA. They considered theater a powerful tool for expressing their views on sociopolitical problems. Perhaps the most distinguished romantic text of the era is Namık Kemal's Homeland or Boatswain's Pipe (Vatan Yahut Silistre) of 1873. Kemal saw the state as the protector of both individual and collective liberties. His play called each citizen (an underdeveloped notion in the Ottoman Empire) to contribute to the collective protection of the state, so that individual freedoms could be protected as a natural consequence.

Istanbul theater companies, by touring other regions, slowly introduced modern drama to wider masses in Anatolia. The hopes, wishes, and disappointments of ordinary people began to find their expressions in drama texts. Yet theater was virtually out of reach for a crucial societal segment, namely, the women. As early as 1859, admission of women into theater buildings was prohibited. Twenty years later, when Agop built special protected boxes into his theater to attract female audiences, his radical attempt was frowned upon. Nonetheless, some plays were staged exclusively for women, and others did manage to attract women into those special boxes.

Tanzimat witnessed the first intellectual debates on the meaning and functions of drama. While some thinkers, such as Şinasi and Teodor Kasap, argued for the creation of an original Ottoman drama literature based on careful reconciliation of traditional cultural forms with novel Western ideas, others, such as Namık Kemal, maintained that modern drama simply would have to transcend the populist and comedy-oriented halk tiyatrosu. Meanwhile, a new phenomenon emerged, largely due to the efforts of practitioners onstage. Traditional players incorporated into their own conventional technique such concepts of Western drama as stage, decor, and theme. The result was a highly successful drama style called tuluat. Pişekar Küçük İsmail, Ağâh Efendi, Kavuklu Hamdi, and Büyük İsmail Efendi were among its creators.

Although tuluat put its mark on the late 19th and early 20th centuries, it gradually lost its popularity. Aside from the fact that the tuluat players were neither sufficiently organized nor capable of devising an original and systematic literary program, three political factors led to the demise of this genre. First, the oppressive reign of Abdülhamit II (1878–1908) was not at all conducive to a flourishing arts environment. Drama, in particular, found itself in dire straits. Second, the empire's continuous wars between the late 1870s and early 1920s considerably weakened popular involvement. Third, the Republic of Turkey, that is, the successor of the Ottoman Empire, made a conscious choice as early as 1923 to pursue a program of modernization in every aspect of life. As a natural outgrowth of this commitment, a modern Western approach to drama prevailed in Turkey. Ironically, though, the two most prominent masters of tuluat made their true reputation in the Republican era: Naşit and İsmail Dümbüllü.

The proclamation of 2. Meşrutiyet (the Second Constitutional Monarchy) in 1908 marked the end of Abdülhamit's censorship over intellectual works. Despite the sociopolitical chaos in the empire, notable poets and authors, including Cenap Şehabettin, Halit Ziya, Ali Ekrem, Mehmet Rauf, Hüseyin Rahmi, and Halit Fahri, produced several plays in the early 1900s. The period was especially rich in terms of romantic and historical plays. The establishment in 1914 of Darülbeydi, the first Turkish equivalent of a modern faculty of arts, is perhaps the most significant achievement of Meşrutiyet. Afife Jale, a student at Darülbeydi, performed Hüseyin Suat's Patches (Yamalar) in 1919 to become the first Muslim Turkish actress. However, this move proved a premature revolution at the time. Muslim women were banned from the stage in 1921. Fortunately, Turkey soon entered a new epoch, radically changing the entire status of and approach to women.

After the proclamation of the republic in 1923, Muhsin Ertuğrul, a thoroughly knowledgeable practitioner of European theater, was appointed head of Darülbeydi (1927). In search of financial and institutional stability, Darülbeydi was placed under the oversight of Istanbul Municipality in 1931 and given the status of "City Theater" in 1934. Several city theaters soon opened in different parts of Istanbul. Unlike earlier periods, the Republican era adopted Western drama literature as the unrivaled norm vis-à-vis traditional forms. The components of Western drama (in terms of ACTING, staging, DRAMATURGY, direction, and decor) were firmly integrated into the conception of "modern Turkish drama." The establishment of the so-called halkevleri (people's houses) in 1932 proved to be of enormous significance for the spread of a drama culture throughout Anatolia. Halkevleri were multifunctional local grassroots organizations and put considerable effort into building new theaters, educating young actors, promoting playwriting, and attracting audiences. The founding of the State Conservatory in 1936 under the direction of Carl Ebert—a first-rate artistic exile from Adolf Hitler's GERMANY—was another significant move on the part of the new republic. These developments found their utmost support directly from the leader of the new Turkish regime, Kemal Atatürk. Both state and private theaters steadily grew in number. Female Turkish citizens (Muslim and non-Muslim alike) were now actively encouraged to contribute to the arts and literature. In this process Afife Jale not only reappeared onstage, but was joined by several other Muslim actresses, including Şaziye Moral, Nejla Sertel, Neyyire Neyir, and Bedi Muvahhit.

Although most examples of the early republican drama were under the influence of fresh memories, including the occupation by the Allied powers of Istanbul, a diversification in themes was slowly taking place, drawing attention to the moral degeneration in some societal segments, clashes between emerging ideological groups, and the dramatic effects of the transformation of the family as a social unit. Vedat Nedim Tör criticized social injustice and moral decay in such plays as The Unemployed (İşsizler, 1924), Without Roots (Köksüzler, 1937), and Between Three People (Üç Kişi Arasında, 1927), The Downpour (Sağanak, 1929), a play by Yakup Kadri Karaosmanoğlu, courageously explored the drama of people of differing convictions. Nazım Hikmet, a world-renowned socialist poet, used drama as an alternative means of communication in his plays titled The Skull (Kafatası, 1932), The House of the Morning (Bir Ölü Evi, 1932), and The Forgotten Man (Unutulan Adam, 1935). The interaction between psychological and social problems was examined by Cevdet Kudret in The River Flowing in Reverse (Tersine Akan Nehir, 1929), Wolves (Kurtlar, 1933), and The Living Dead (Yaşayan Ölüler, published posthumously 1994). Necip Fazıl Kısakürek focused on age-old moral dilemmas in Seed (Tohum, 1935), To Create a Man (Bir Adam Yaratmak, 1938), and Money (Para, 1942). Musahipzade Celal, on the other hand, successfully drew on traditional Ottoman drama and produced highly popular critiques in such plays as A Turban Has Fallen (Bir Kavuk Devrildi, 1930), The Judge of Mount Athos (Aynoroz Kadısı, 1927), and Monday–Thursday (Pazar–Perşembe, 1931).

Especially in the 1940s, in the wake of Turkey's uneasy neutrality during World War II, several writers revisited historical events. National heroism during the Turkish War of Independence, failures of the late Ottoman institutions, and sacrifices made by Turkish intellectuals were among the favorite subjects of Ahmet Kudsi Tecer, Aka Gündüz, Faruk Nafiz Çamlıbel, Behçet Kemal Çağlar, Yaşar Nabi Nayır, Halit Fahri Ozansoy, and Peyami Safa. At the same time, the 1940s introduced into Turkish drama the themes of "village reality" and societal dilemmas, as exemplified by Abidin Dino's Bald (Kel, 1944), Cevat Fehmi Başkut's The Little City (Küçük Şehir, 1945–1946), Ahmet Muhip Dranas's The Shadows (Gölgeler, 1946), and Ahmet Kudsi Tecer's Corner (Köşebaşı, 1947). This overall productivity, however, was accompanied by a didactic tone, eschewing in-depth character analyses and lacking in stylistic authority.

The passing of the Law on the State Theater and Opera in 1949 restructured the world of Turkish drama. Theater buildings were opened one after another in Ankara, Adana, İzmir, Bursa, and other cities. The introduction of special children's sections and plays was an innovative part of this reorganization. Turkey's first successful experiment with democracy in the 1950s created a hopeful atmosphere for the future of the arts. However, the country's internal sociopolitical contradictions, accompanied by external Cold War constraints, soon cast some doubts on these hopes. Halkevleri, for instance, were abolished as early as 1951 for entirely partisan reasons. New phenomena such as economic transformation, rapid urbanization, and changing rural life attracted particular attention in this period. For example, the changing sociopolitical dynamics were subjected to scrutiny in Selahattin Batu's Beautiful Helena (Güzel Helena, 1954), Yaşar Kemal's Tinplate (Teneke, 1955), and Refik Erduran's The Bicycle of Cengizhan (Cengizhan'ın Bisikleti, 1959). Turkish playwrights managed to develop, albeit slowly, their own drama styles and languages in the 1950s.

It is a well-known but ironic fact that the military coup d'état in 1960 produced an unexpectedly liberal constitution for Turkey. The political freedoms of the 1960s, along with emerging social phenomena such as the Turkish guest workers in Germany and elsewhere, led to the diversification of the drama culture. A new realist approach with particular emphasis on the problems of rural life was either foreshadowed or explicitly developed in such plays as Necati Cumalı's The Dry Summer (Susuz Yaz, 1962), Yaşar Kemal's Iron Earth, Copper Sky (Yer Demir Gök Bakır, 1963), Recep Bilginer's Rebels (İsyancılar, 1964), Hidayet Sayın's A Woman Called Rosy (Pembe Kadın, 1965), Sermet Çağan's Foot Leg Factory (Ayak Bacak Fabrikası, 1965), Cahit Atay's Sultan Bride (Sultan Gelin, 1965), and Güngör Dilmen's The Sacrifice (Kurban, 1967). The fast-growing slum areas were scrutinized in Speckled Rooster (Çil Horoz, 1964) by Oktay Rifat, Snowbirds (İspinozlar, 1964) by Orhan Kemal, and Gültepe Plays (Gültepe Oyunları, 1968) by Cahit Atay. Orhan Kemal pointed to the problems of the working class in his Murtaza the Watchman (Bekçi Murtaza, 1965). Başar Sabuncu shared a similar concern in Goodwill (Şerefye, 1969).

Although thematically diverse, several other plays also had something to say about the changing social complexion of Turkey in the 1960s. These include Fazilet Pharmacy (Fazilet Eczanesi, 1960) by Haldun Taner, The Guild (Orak, 1962) by Turgut Özakman, The Linden Tree (İhlamur Ağacı, 1962) by Vüs'at O. Bener, The Circles (Çemberler, 1964) by Çetin Altan, The Crack on the Roof (Çatıdaki Çatlak, 1964) by Adalet Ağaoğlu, The Corrupt Order (Bozuk Düzen, 1965) by Güner Sümer, The Feast at the Café (Kahvede Şenlik Var, 1966) by Sabahattin Kudret Aksal, The Sticks of the Mikado (Mikadonun Çöpleri, 1967) by Melih Cevdet Anday, and Oppressive Air (Yağmur Sıkıntısı, 1969) by Oktay Rifat. At the same time, a new genre—Western-style musical plays—was discovered and used quite successfully as an effectual means of social criticism.

Leading examples include Boulevard (Bulvar, 1964) by Turgut Özakman, Shrewish Zarife (Zilli Zarife, 1966) by Haldun Taner, In Direklerarası (Direkler Arasında, 1965) by Refik Erduran, and Hürmüz with Seven Husbands (Yedi Kocalı Hürmüz, 1969) by Sadık Şendil. By the late 1960s new playwrights started to make a name for themselves, such as Tuncer Cücenoglu, Ülker Köksal, Dinçer Sümer, Nezihe Araz, Bilgesu Erenus, Erhan Bener, Yılmaz Onay, Ferdi Merter, Ergun Sav, and Nezihe Meriç.

Another feature of the decade was the creation of visionary private theater companies, several of which were still functional as of the early 2000s. Companies such as Kent Oyuncuları, Ankara Sanat Tiyatrosu, and Dostlar Tiyatrosu developed alternative repertoires, gradually raising the level of popular consciousness about the art of drama. The latter two institutions, in particular, played a pioneering role in introducing BERTOLT BRECHT to Turkish audiences. Several Turkish authors started to adopt and successfully implement Brecht's EPIC drama methods. Haldun Taner's The Legend of Keşanlı Ali (Keşanlı Ali Destanı, 1964) and Vasif Öngören's How Will Asiye Be Rescued (Asiye Nasıl Kurtulur, 1970) are arguably the most prominent examples. A number of other plays also experimented with Brecht's methods, although they did not clearly fall into the orbit of epic drama, including Turgut Özakman's The Blue Fountain 1914 (Sarıpınar 1914, 1968), Haldun Taner's The Cunning Wife of the Stupid Husband (Sersem Kocanın Kurnaz Karısı, 1971), and Oktay Arayıcı's Nickname Goncagül (Rumuz Goncagül, 1977). Interestingly, other Western genres such as the absurd and abstract theaters would not attract comparable attention in the Turkish context.

In 1971 a military semicoup brought the liberal intellectual environment of the 1960s to an end. At the same time, political clashes among different ideological factions—nationalist, socialist, religious, liberal—created an especially sensitive social and cultural milieu. Throughout the 1970s “state” and “city” theaters, that is, the official and semiofficial representatives of Turkish drama, sought to maintain a neutral political stance in their activities. Consequently, their repertoires were chosen from among the Western classics and well-established Turkish plays of earlier periods. Evaluations of new social dynamics were carefully avoided. Instead, universal moral problems were given prominence. Plays and performances by private theater companies, on the other hand, were sometimes hindered or curtailed not only by direct and indirect governmental censorship, but also by intergroup political tensions. The entire experience in the 1970s demonstrated, implicitly but strongly, the linkages between the “theoretical” (playwriting, literary criticism) and the “practical” (performance, project management), on the one hand, and between the “political” (ideology, participation) and the “cultural” (act of writing, aesthetics), on the other. The realist approach continued to evolve under constant influence of leading Western trends, in such plays as Memet of the Blackness (Karaların Memetleri, 1971) by Cahit Atay, German Notebook (Almanya Deferi, 1971) by Vasif Öngören, The Dead Want to Speak (Ölüler Konuşmak İsterler, 1972), Beware of the Dog (Dikkat Köpek Var, 1972) and Tomorrow at Another Meadow (Yarın Başka Koruda, 1972) by Melih Cevdet Anday, and Çıcu (1979) and You Aren't Black (Sen Gara Değilsin, 1979) by Aziz Nesin.

In the 1960s and 1970s several playwrights utilized mythology, legend, and history to produce highly successful plays that drew strong parallels with contemporary social life: Hürrem Sultan (Hürrem Sultan, 1960) and Gelgamesh (Gılgamış, 1968) by Orhan Asena, Murat IV (IV. Murat, 1970) by Turan Oflazoğlu, Pir Sultan Abdal (Pir Sultan Abdal, 1970) by Erol Toy, and the Midas trilogy—including The Ears of Midas (Midas'ın Kulakları, 1965), The Gold of Midas (Midas'ın Altınları, 1970), and The Knot of Midas (Midas'ın Kordüğümü, 1975)—by Güngör Dilmen.

Turkey's third military coup d'état took place in 1980. Unlike the previous three decades, the 1980s brought along a noticeable depoliticization in Turkey in all spheres of activity, including drama. This, however, did not slow the production of new plays in the subsequent two decades. Turgut Özakman's The History of Ottoman Empire with Illustrations (Resimli Osmanlı Tarihi, 1983), Mehmet Baydur's Lemon (Limon, 1987), Woman Station (Kadın İstasyonu, 1993), and Girl of the Republic (Cumhuriyet Kızı, 1990), and Murathan Mungan's Mesopotamia trilogy—consisting of Mahmud and Yezida (Mahmud ile Yezida, 1980), Condolence (Taziye, 1982), and Deer Curses (Geyikler Lanetler, 1992)—can be cited among the leading examples of the period. Numerous other practitioners, including active stage performers, experimented with the drama literature: Behiç Ak, Mehmet Akan, Çetin Altan, Ülkü Ayvaz, Coşkun Büktel, Erman Canatan, Civan Canova, Savaş Dinçel, Müjdat Gezen, Erhan Gökçüçü, Oben Güney, Coşkun Irmak, Haluk İşıık, Kenan Işıık, İsmet Küntay, Güner Sümer, Kubilay Tuncer, Burak Mikail Uçar, Vasfi Uçkan, Özen Yula. Some actor-dramatists, such as Ferhan Şensoy, created unique writing and performance styles, bridging authentic themes and universal perspectives, and managed to gain wide popularity as well as intellectual respect.

Turkish drama since the early 1990s has been under the influence of changing internal and external sociopolitical dynamics. Turkey's efforts at European Union membership, the questions of IDENTITY and economic underdevelopment, the end of the bipolar world, and the post-9/11 world order are among the important factors that bear upon the social milieu within which theatrical activity takes shape. The (re)discovery of Turkish drama artists living abroad (famous playwrights, performers, and producers, such as Mehmet Ulusoy and Ayşe Emel Mestçi), along with the speedy proliferation of theater journals and networks, is perhaps the most crucial characteristic of this latest phase. “All its weaknesses and shortcomings aside,” as Talat Halman observes, “the record of Turkish dramatic art is, by any objective criterion, impressive.”

[In almost all cases the English translations of play titles have been directly borrowed from the Turkish Ministry of Culture and Tourism website, although it is important to recognize that these are not official translations and are open to interpretation.]

[See also Absurdism]

FURTHER READING

- And, Metin. Cumhuriyet Dönemi Türk Tiyatrosu, 1923–1983. Ankara: Türkiye İş Bankası Yayınları, 1983.
- . Türk Tiyatro Tarihi. Istanbul: İletişim Yayınları, 1992.
- Cücenoglu, Tuncer. "Cumhuriyetimizin 80inci Yılında Oyun Yazarlığımız." Cumhuriyet (November 11–12, 2003).
- Erkoç, Gülayşe. "1960–1970 Dönemi Tiyatro Hareketleri." Tiyatro Araştırmaları Dergisi, no. 13 (June 2002).
- Halman, Talat S., ed. "The Evolution of Turkish Drama." In Modern Turkish Drama: An Anthology of Plays in Translation, ed. by Talat S. Halman. Minneapolis: Bibliotheca Islamica, 1983.
- Martinovich, Nicholas N. The Turkish Theatre. New York: B. Blom, 1968.
- Önertoy, Olcay. "Cumhuriyet Dönemi Türk Edebiyatında Tiyatro." In Çağdaş Türk Edebiyatı, ed. by Canan İleri. Eskişehir: Anadolu Üniversitesi, 1998.
- Pekman, Yavuz. "Tanzimat Dönemi Oyun Yazarlığında Batılılaşma Olgusu" [The notion of Westernization in the Tanzimat period playwrighting]. Tiyatro Araştırmaları Dergisi, no. 14 (December 2002).
- Republic of Turkey, Ministry of Culture and Tourism. Encyclopedia of Turkish Authors. <http://www.kultur.gov.tr/EN/BelgeGoster.aspx?7A16AE30572D313D4AF1EF75F7A7968AD2159C2926A9E50>.
- Robson, Bruce. The Drum Beats Nightly. Tokyo: Centre for East Asian Cultural Studies, 1976.

Simin Aksu Erol

TURRINI, PETER (1944–)

Theater for me is first and foremost sensuality, cruelty: I want to distance myself from the principles of a boring dramaturgy permeated by psychology and artistry so that I can approach the depths of human nature.

—Peter Turrini, 1972

Peter Turrini—playwright, poet, essayist, opera LIBRETTIST, actor, and the author of novellas, radio and television plays, and filmscripts—is one of contemporary AUSTRIA's most politically engaged writers. Born on September 26, 1944, in St. Margarethen, the son of an Italian cabinetmaker who immigrated to Austria in the 1930s, Turrini has often remarked upon his father's repeated and ultimately unsuccessful attempts to integrate himself into Austrian village life. The son, in turn, has transformed his own experience of social alienation into the basis for an extensive and critically acclaimed body of work committed to realizing the democratic potential of Austria's social, cultural, and political institutions. In a post–World War II Austrian republic characterized by the consensus politics of the Social Partnership (an extragovernmental institution that brings together industrial, agrarian, and labor leaders to regulate socio-economic policy) and its desire to avoid conflict at all costs, Turrini has insisted upon an ongoing public confrontation with the nation's present and past. He has expanded his commitment to the theater as a lively forum for exploring pressing sociopolitical questions by giving frequent readings at schools and factories and by engaging in various forms of street theater. In response to the controversy surrounding the 1986 election of Kurt Waldheim (former UN secretary general and member of the German Wehrmacht) to the Austrian presidency, for example, Turrini and Alfred Hrdlicka (1928–), a famous Austrian sculptor, constructed a twelve-foot-tall wooden horse that they brought to Waldheim's public appearances to protest the president's refusal to answer truthfully questions about having joined a Nazi equestrian group shortly after the 1938 Anschluss of Austria by Nazi GERMANY. In the last decade of the 20th century Turrini devoted much of his political energy to campaigning against Jörg Haider, the charismatic radical-right leader of Austria's Freiheitliche Partei (Freedom Party), who made tremendous gains in popularity and power in the wake of the Waldheim affair. Haider, in turn, responded by repeatedly denouncing Turrini publicly as a "Nestbeschmutzer" (one who dirties his own nest).

Turrini's first play, Shooting Rats (Rozznjogd), was written entirely in dialect (Turrini "translated" the play into standard German [Rattenjagd] four years later) and premiered at Vienna's Volkstheater in 1971. Until the very last moments of the play, the cast consists of two people, "he" and "she," who travel to a garbage dump where they attempt to strip away both their clothes and the artifice of an increasingly affluent consumer society. Instead of finding each other, however, they find only death, because they are shot by two men who take the couple for rats. The men then take aim and begin shooting into the audience as the curtain falls.

The violence with which Shooting Rats ends escalates in Swine (Sauschlachten, 1971), which premiered in Munich in 1972. Set on a farm in the province of Carinthia, Swine examines fateful continuities between pre- and post–World War II Austrian society. The slaughter to which the title refers is that of the farmer's outcast son Valentin. Turrini subtitled Swine a "VOLKSSTÜCK" (popular drama), a designation that both harks back to a lively Austrian theatrical tradition and contributes to its postwar revival. But rather than uncritically resurrecting what was at times a socially affirmative form of popular entertainment, Turrini evokes conventions of the Volksstück (for example, the peasant milieu, the use of dialect, and the reinstitution of benevolent authority) only to subvert them. Turrini's DRAMATURGY shares more with ANTONIN ARTAUD's Theatre of Cruelty and BERTOLT BRECHT's EPIC THEATER than it does with most authors of the late 18th- and early 19th-century Volksstück. Accordingly, Turrini's work was central to the creation of a bürgerliches Schock-theater (a bourgeois theater of shock) in Austria in the 1960s and 1970s, a theater intended to shake Austrian audiences out of their postwar complacency by confronting them with issues such as the myth of Austrian innocence in World War II and the underside of their newfound economic affluence. Turrini remains intent on forcefully dramatizing the fates of those he considers the "losers," those groups and individuals disenfranchised and marginalized by Austria's postwar reconstruction.

The losers of the government's decision to privatize the Austrian steel industry take center stage in Turrini's The Slackers (Die Minderleister), which premiered at Vienna's Akademietheater in 1988 as part of the city's annual arts festival. The drama examines the plight of the unemployed in a society that defines itself primarily through work and production. Like many of Turrini's plays, The Slackers dramatizes the disastrous effects that occur when sociopolitical problems are individualized and privatized, when the victims of a market economy victimize those seemingly weaker than themselves. At various points in the play Turrini undercuts his largely realistic dramaturgy with surreal scenes, as when the television Quizmaster and his two assistants appear in Anna and Hans's living room and invite Hans to play "6 out of 45," a game that asks just how far unemployed workers are willing to go to win one of the few available jobs.

During the 1990s Turrini became the most frequently performed playwright on the German-language stage. His works of that decade include Alpine Glow (Alpenglühen, 1992), in which an "approximately seventy-year-old" blind man living in virtual isolation high in the Austrian Alps, who earns money by imitating the sounds of Alpine wildlife as groups of German tourists pass by his window at appointed times (Turrini has frequently referred to Austria as a touristic banana republic and likened the economic relationship between Austria and Germany to that of a whore and her john), receives a visit from Jasmine, "approximately fifty years old." In the course of the drama the two characters relate their lives in stories that are frequently contradictory. Jasmine may or may not be a prostitute, a secretary at the agency for the blind, and a (former) actress who has only wanted to play the part of William Shakespeare's Juliet. He, in turn, may or may not have lost his sight witnessing an atomic bomb test, had a promising career as a theater director, and been a committed National Socialist. "I was never a true Nazi," he remarks in scene 12, "I just imitated fascism." In what is perhaps Turrini's most metatheatrical play, the author reflects upon the role and power of theatrical fantasy in a nation whose recent history has been largely mythologized—or, to use Turrini's term, "theatricalized." Turrini currently lives in Vienna and Retz, Austria.

SELECT PLAYS: Shooting Rats (Rozznjogd, 1967); Rattenjagd (a standard German version of Rozznjogd, 1971); Swine (Sauschlachten, 1971); A Crazy Day (Der tollste Tag, an adaptation of Beaumarchais, 1972); Infanticide (Kindsmord, 1972); The Innkeeper (Die Wirtin, an adaptation of Goldoni, 1973); Joseph and Mary (Joseph und Maria, 1980); A Social Engagement (Die Bürger, 1981); Campielo (an adaptation of Goldoni, 1982); The Slackers (Die Minderleister, 1988); Death and the Devil (Tod und Teufel, 1990); Alpine Glow (Alpenglühen, 1992); The Siege of Vienna (Die Schlacht um Wien, 1995); Love in Madagascar (Die Liebe in Madagaskar, 1998); I Love This Country (Ich liebe dieses Land, 2001); Da Ponte in Sante Fe (2002); The Giant from Steinfeld (Der Riese vom Steinfeld, libretto, 2002)

FURTHER READING

Brzovic, Kathy, and Craig Decker. "'Mir san a liebe Familie in an lieben Land . . .'" (We're a Dear Family in a Dear Country): Fascism and the Family in Peter Turrini's Sauschlachten. Modern Austrian Literature 26, nos. 3/4 (1993): 183–197.

Landa, Jutta. "'Minderleister': Problems of Audience Address in Peter Turrini's Plays." Modern Austrian Literature 24, nos. 3/4 (1991): 161–172.

——, ed. "I Am Too Many People": Peter Turrini, Playwright, Poet, Essayist. Riverside, Calif.: Ariadne Press, 1998.

Schuch, Wolfgang, and Klaus Siblewski, eds. Peter Turrini: Texte, Daten, Bilder [Peter Turrini: Texts, information, images]. Frankfurt/am Main: Luchterhand Literaturverlag, 1991.

Craig Decker

TUTTA CASA, LETTO E CHIESA See FEMALE PARTS

TWILIGHT CRANE

Twilight Crane (Yüzuru, 1949), a folktale play (minwageki) by KINOSHITA JUNJI (1914–), has become a universally esteemed lyrical masterpiece of the modern Japanese theater. Kinoshita's source was likely the ethnographer Yanagita Kunio's A Compendium of Japanese Legends (Zenkoku mukashibanashi kiroku), which he read during the war. Twilight Crane, incorporating aspects of Japanese mythology and folktales, was a distinct departure from the staid fourth-wall REALISM of mainstream SHINGEKI.

As the action unfolds, we learn that Yohyō, a rustic, has found a dying crane and nurtured it back to full vigor. The crane has become a beautiful woman, Tsū, who has visited the sincere, though plodding, rustic and become his wife. In gratitude for his tenderness, she has woven a wonderful fabric from her own feathers. While deeply appreciative, Yohyō has sensed the fabric's value and sold it. Now, goaded further by neighbors with visions of greater riches from sales in the city, he urges a reluctant Tsū to make more cloth. By so doing, Yohyō becomes the embodiment of greed and lost innocence. Yet his ever-loving wife weaves two last pieces, using all the feathers she can spare, then, ineffably saddened, becomes once again a crane and flies away. Yohyō finally realizes his wife's ultimate sacrifice and what he has forever lost.

The emotional impact of the play is intensified through the underlying Japanese folk wisdom on cranes as symbols of long life: by folding a thousand origami cranes, one can cure disease. Twilight Crane, articulating an overwhelming sense of loss, of nostalgia for a state of primordial innocence, for a kind of mythic homeland, renders powerful comment on the diseased condition of the Japanese people in the modern world. The play limns their feeling of being unmoored in a sea of mind-twisting change—urbanization, commodification—that the country has undergone and the consequent impact on the Japanese sense of morality and the question of identity.

In openly inviting the spectators to weigh a critical moral equation, the play calls to mind BERTOLT BRECHT'S LEARNING PLAYS (Lehrstücke). The famous actress Yamamoto Yasue, who was in the first production in 1950 and (before she died in 1993) performed the role of Tsū over 1,000 times, invariably highlighted the effort to balance the equation, to bring human sincerity and genuineness to a world of greed gone awry.

So popular was the original production that it has been cited as a catalyst in the widespread resurgence of interest in folktales and folk arts and crafts in early 1950s JAPAN. Indeed, Twilight Crane is so highly regarded that it has become integral to the mass acculturation process. It is among the most frequently performed plays in the postwar period and has been adapted for kabuki, nō, and opera. Kabuki female impersonators, or onnagata, such as the immensely popular Bandō Tamasaburō V, often play the role of Tsū. Cartoon (manga) versions exist both in print and for television. Performances are often arranged for children. It is widely read in junior high school, and the original folktale, The Crane Returns a Debt of Gratitude (Tsuru no ongaeshi) in elementary school.

FURTHER READING

- Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era; Poetry, Drama, Criticism. New York: H. Holt, 1984.
- Kinoshita Junji. Der Abendkranich [Twilight crane]. Tr. by Jürgen Berndt. In Japanische Dramen. Berlin: Verlag Volk und Welt, 1968.
- . Kinoshita Junji sakuhinshū [Collected works]. 7 vols. Tokyo: Miraisha, 1962–1971.
- . Twilight Crane. Tr. by A. C. Scott. In Playbook: 5 Plays for a New Theatre. New York: New Directions, 1956.
- Nihon Kindai Engekishi Kenkyūkai, ed. Nijusseiki no gikyoku II: Gendai gikyoku no tenkai [Twentieth-century plays II: The development of contemporary (Japanese) playwriting]. Tokyo: Shakai Hyōronsha, 2002.
- Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Change and Continuity. London: Japan Library, 2002.

John K. Gillespie

THE TWISTING OF ANOTHER ROPE See THE SQUARE FELLOW

UBU TRILOGY

In the character of Père Ubu, ALFRED JARRY made his lasting contribution to drama. Cowardly yet bloodthirsty, slothful yet ambitious, Ubu twists all logic to fit his personal narcissism. Created as a satire of the French bourgeoisie, Ubu and his wife Mère Ubu grew through the 20th century to become symbols for the mindlessly destructive potential of humanity. In his trilogy of plays featuring the couple—Ubu the King (Ubu roi) Ubu the Cuckold (Ubu cocu) and Ubu Enchained (Ubu enchaîné)—the target of Jarry's assault expands from the conventions of Boulevard theater to the foundations of Western philosophical thought.

In Ubu the King Père Ubu, "ex-King of Aragon" and Captain of Dragoons to King Wenceslas of Poland, is provoked by his wife into killing Wenceslas and seizing the throne. As king, Ubu imposes severe taxes, destroying all in his path in order to loot them. He begins with the aristocrats, but is soon massacring the peasants for their pocket money. The Czar of Russia invades Poland to restore Wenceslas's surviving son to the throne. While Ubu goes off to fight—or avoid—the Czar's army, Mère Ubu attempts to rob the Treasury, but is foiled by the arrival of Wenceslas's son and his supporters. She is reunited and reconciled with Ubu in a cave besieged by the Russians. After an escape they sail off to Paris, with Ubu announcing that he will declare himself "Minister of Phynance."

Ubu the Cuckold (uncompleted by Jarry and not published until 1944) takes the couple to France. Ubu carries his conscience around in a suitcase, bringing it out for consultation. When he is displeased with its advice, Ubu stuffs his conscience down the latrine, located upstage center.

In the third play of the trilogy (Ubu Enchained, published in 1900 but not produced until 1937), Ubu is depressed in the land of liberté, égalité, and fraternité. The only way to be an individual in a free land, he decides, is to become a slave. Working their way down to convicts and then galley slaves, Père and Mère Ubu convince the Free Men that slavery is preferable to the burden of free thought; they revolt and occupy the prisons and galleys, forcing Ubu and the convicts to run society.

Jarry began writing the Ubu plays as a schoolboy. Ubu the King began as a parody of an unpopular physics professor. After moving to Paris, Jarry persuaded the director Aurélien Lugné-Poë to produce a revised version of the play at his Théâtre de l'Oeuvre for two performances. The premiere, on December 10, 1896, provoked the greatest scandal on the French stage between the opening of Victor Hugo's Hernani in 1830 and the first performance of Igor Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring in 1913. After the first word (merdre, variously translated as "pschitt" and "shitttr"), the audience erupted in an uproar that stopped the play for fifteen minutes; disruptions continued throughout the performance.

Inspired by the rural performances he had witnessed in his youth, Jarry wrote with puppet performance in mind and supervised the production at the Théâtre de l'Oeuvre to reflect elements of this style, including grotesque costumes and masks, an artificial manner of speaking (which he later adopted for his public transformation into Ubu), and the use of a single painted backdrop featuring a fireplace in the middle of a landscape juxtaposing the Arctic with the tropics.

While it remains common to discount the plays (and their inversion of morality, reason, and even causality) as essentially adolescent parody, Jarry's impressive list of defenders (among them GUILLAUME APOLLINAIRE, JEAN COCTEAU, and ANTONIN ARTAUD) have claimed a positive, rather than negative, meaning in his aesthetic nihilism, often citing Père Ubu's epigraph to Ubu Enchained as the most direct evidence for this argument: "We shall not have succeeded in demolishing everything unless we demolish the ruins as well. But the only way I see of doing that is to use them to put up a lot of fine, well-designed buildings."

In Jarry's time the character of Ubu was quickly transformed into "art" and lost his ability to shock (a revival of Ubu the King performed by marionettes passed without controversy in 1898). However, Ubu's subversive influence has endured. Critics have seen traces of Ubu in the linguistic mayhem of COMEDY ranging from the Marx brothers, Mad magazine, and Monty Python's Flying Circus to the film Airplane. Ubu himself has reappeared as a satiric weapon: in the UNITED STATES and Europe during the Vietnam War, in Eastern Europe after the collapse of the iron curtain, and, in a recent South African adaptation, as a representative of the apartheid government.

FURTHER READING

Innes, Christopher. Avant Garde Theatre, 1892–1992. London: Routledge, 1993.

Jannarone, Kimberly. "Puppetry and Pataphysics: Populism and the Ubu Cycle." New Theatre Quarterly 17, no. 3 (2001): 239–253.

Jarry, Alfred. The Ubu Plays. Tr. by Cyril Connelly and Simon Watson Taylor. New York: Grove, 1969.

—. The Ubu Plays. Tr. and by Kenneth MacLeish. London: Nick Hern, 1997.

Shattuck, Roger. The Banquet Years: The Origins of the Avant-Garde in France, 1885 to World War I. Salem, N.H.: Ayer, 1984.

Walter Bilderback

UNCLE VANYA

The second of ANTON CHEKHOV's dramatic masterpieces, Uncle Vanya (Diadia Vania, 1895–1896), elaborates further the new poetics of drama the playwright had initiated in THE SEAGULL. By the time he wrote Uncle Vanya, Chekhov had abandoned the theatrical conventions of the so-called well-made play, opting instead for what has been called indirect action. He eschewed overt dramatic conflict and favored the dramatic tension of ordinary human interactions.

On the surface, Uncle Vanya appears to be merely a revision of Chekhov's earlier play The Wood Demon (Leshii, 1889), especially since the second and third acts of the two plays are strikingly similar; however, Chekhov insisted that Uncle Vanya was a new play and all but disowned The Wood Demon. In fact, he categorically refused an offer to stage the earlier play in 1900.

The differences between the two plays are telling. For example, Egor Voinitsky, the character who corresponds to Uncle Vanya, commits suicide at the juncture in The Wood Demon that parallels Uncle Vanya's homicidal pursuit of Professor Serebriakov in the later play. Egor's suicide is quite similar to the suicide of Ivanov in the eponymous play in that it is vehemently dramatic, but it is quite different from Treplev's suicide in THE SEAGULL, which seems an almost inevitable act of resignation that is unlikely to change the other characters. Likewise, Uncle Vanya's attempts to shoot Serebriakov, though wild and wildly irresponsible, prove fruitless, affecting those around him only superficially.

Chekhov remained dissatisfied with The Wood Demon because of deficiencies in its dramatic structure; from this point of view, Uncle Vanya represents a remarkable advance over the earlier play. To take but a single example, the last act of The Wood Demon centers around the happy ending of the romance between Mikhail Khrushchev, who corresponds to the Astrov character in Uncle Vanya, and Sonia, whose name remains the same in both plays, but whose character undergoes a metamorphosis. Their romance and the ending are both conventional and contrived. For good measure, Chekhov unites yet another couple before the curtain falls. The failure of the ending of The Wood Demon to grow out of its dramatic predicament stands in stark contrast to the ending of Uncle Vanya. The quiet optimism with which Sonia, Astrov, and Uncle Vanya handle the emotional devastation left in the wake of the Serebriakovs' departure grows organically out of long-held values that precipitated the play's dramatic action in the first place.

Uncle Vanya brings the eponymous Ivan Voinitsky to the foreground. In Vanya, Chekhov created an apotheosis of the so-called superfluous man, an ineffectual nobleman whose consciousness of his own inadequacy threatens to destroy him and those around him. Like Chekhov's earlier superfluous men, such as Ivanov, Vanya is a frustrated idealist who must come to terms with his own disillusionment; however, whereas Ivanov directs his frustration inward and ends up killing himself, Vanya directs his anger at other people, principally at Serebriakov. In fact, the drama of Uncle Vanya grows out of the confrontation between the egotistical Serebriakovs, who live off other people both financially and emotionally, and those characters, such as Astrov and Sonia, who live and work for the benefit of others. Vanya belongs imperfectly to the latter group, and his recognition of his own shortcomings contributes to the play's pathos. Not unlike Treplev in The Seagull, Vanya is emotionally needy, and his need has an Oedipal dimension: He clearly longs for his mother's approval and affection, but neither is forthcoming. The failure of the characters to engage one another is a key theme in the play. From this point of view, Vanya's deceased sister plays an enormous role. Although rarely remarked on, she has left behind an emotional vacuum in her brother's life that has not been filled.

Chekhov gave Uncle Vanya the subtitle Scenes from Country Life in Four Acts, and the opposition of rural and city life informs the play in important ways. For example, although the environmental theme is much more strident in The Wood Demon, it nonetheless retains significance in Uncle Vanya. However, it is perhaps the theme of displacement, the opposition of the provinces to the city, that helps demarcate boundaries between characters. This theme, important in Nikolai Gogol's COMEDIES, is taken up in all seriousness by Chekhov. The Serebriakovs are associated with the city as an intellectual center, and the professor has been in the habit of farming out work to his relatives in the provinces. The underlying inequity of this exploitation informs the confrontation between Vanya and Serebriakov over the sale of the estate in act 3.

The premiere of Uncle Vanya at the MOSCOW ART THEATRE on October 26, 1899, was a success, if not on the order of that of the Art Theatre's production of The Seagull. The cast included Chekhov's future wife Olga Knipper as Elena Serebriakova and KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY himself as Astrov.

[See also Russia and the Soviet Union]

FURTHER READING

- Bentley, Eric. "Craftsmanship in Uncle Vanya." In Anton Chekhov's Plays, ed. by Eugene Bristow. New York: Norton, 1977. 349–368.
- Bordinat, Philip. "Dramatic Structure in Chekhov's Uncle Vanya." In Chekhov's Great Plays: A Critical Anthology, ed. by Jean-Pierre Barricelli. New York: New York Univ. Press, 1981. 47–60.
- Chekhov, Anton. The Wood Demon and Uncle Vanya. In The Oxford Chekhov, vol. 3. ed. by Ronald Hingley. London: Oxford Univ. Press, 1974.
- Gilman, Richard. Chekhov's Plays: An Opening Into Eternity. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1995.
- Magarshack, David. Chekhov the Dramatist. New York: Hill & Wang, 1960.
- Rayfield, Donald. Chekhov's "Uncle Vania" and "The Wood Demon." London: Bristol Classical Press, 1995.

Timothy C. Westphalen

UNCOMMON WOMEN AND OTHERS

Sometimes I know who I am when I feel attractive. Other times it makes me feel very shallow, like I'm not Rosie the Riveter. I suppose this isn't a very impressive sentiment, but I would really like to meet my prince. Even a few princes. And I wouldn't give up being a person. I'd still remember all the Art History dates. I just don't know why suddenly I'm supposed to know what I want to do.

—Muffet, Act 1

Begun as a one-act at the Yale School of Drama, Uncommon Women and Others (1977) announced the arrival of an important young female dramatist, WENDY WASSERSTEIN. With its sharp humor and frank depiction of female friendship and sexuality, the play gave voice on stage for the first time to the concerns of a new generation of American middle-class women, those raised after the social revolutions of the 1960s.

Framed by the reunion of five former college friends, the plot consists of a series of flashbacks to their student days at a prestigious “college for women” in New England, clearly modeled on Wasserstein’s own alma mater, Mount Holyoke. An ensemble piece, the play shifts between the dilemmas and anxieties of its major characters rather than fashioning a single narrative. Kate, the most driven and respected of the group, struggles for her own identity despite the expectations raised by her physical beauty; Muffet is more conventional in embracing her looks and femininity but harbors no professional ambitions; the wide-eyed and affable Samantha gets engaged and forgoes career plans altogether; and Rita, a rebellious Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) descendant, is the campus iconoclast, full of conspiracy theories and raunchy boasting. Less aggressively unconventional is Holly—the character autobiographically closest to Wasserstein—a disheveled dreamer, full of passion for many things, but unsettled about a definite career, even at the reunion. Together the girls mock the staid traditions of their school, debate their need for men or careers, and cling to each other’s friendship to stave off the oncoming anxiety of graduation and adulthood.

In these reminiscences we meet three other classmates—including the would-be archeologist Leilah—as well as their housemother, Mrs. Plumm, who provides tea and fond memories of her own student days at the college during less liberated times. The only male presence in the play is a pompous offstage voice (presumably a commencement speaker or college president) extolling such virtues as training women to be fine secretaries or society hostesses, not full-fledged professionals on a par with their male Ivy League counterparts.

While the play’s dialogue rarely gets explicitly political, Wasserstein’s choice to focus on the interrelationships within an all-female world, exclusive of men, was received as a feminist gesture in itself. Yet the warm likeability of its characters and their amusing antics made it more successful and popular with large audiences than other more strident women’s dramas of the time.

Uncommon Women was first produced by New York’s Phoenix Theatre on November 21, 1977. Not only did it win Wasserstein wide acclaim and an Obie Award, but many in the young cast soon became household names as well, including Jill Eikenberry as Kate, Swoosie Kurtz as Rita, and Glenn Close as Leilah. The Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) filmed the production for television and broadcast it in May 1978 (Meryl Streep replaced Close in the television version). The play continues to enjoy a long life in regional theaters, drama schools, and colleges across the country.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

- Barnett, Claudia, ed. Wendy Wasserstein: A Casebook. New York: Garland, 1999.
- Bryer, Jackson R., ed. The Playwright’s Art: Conversations with Contemporary American Dramatists. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers Univ. Press, 1995.
- Kolin, Philip C., and Colby H. Kullman, eds. Speaking on Stage: Interviews with Contemporary American Playwrights. Tuscaloosa: Univ. of Alabama Press, 1996.
- Schlueter, June, ed. Modern American Drama: The Female Canon. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1990.
- Wasserstein, Wendy. The Heidi Chronicles, and Other Plays. San Diego: Harcourt, 1990.

Garrett B. Eisler

THE UNDERPANTS

In CARL STERNHEIM’s The Underpants (Die Hose, 1910) Luise Maske, the wife of Theobald Maske, loses her underpants as a crowd of people is watching Wilhelm II make an appearance on the streets of Berlin. Two strangers who witness the event, the writer Scarron and the barber Mandelbaum, begin to lust for Luise and show up at the Maskes’ apartment to rent the two rooms the couple has advertised. With his pragmatic and materialist approach to life, Theobald fends off both the FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE follower Scarron and the Jewish RICHARD WAGNER enthusiast Mandelbaum and uses their rent money to set about having children with Luise.

The play, a “bourgeois COMEDY,” satirically inverts the tradition of the German bourgeois TRAGEDY (bürgerliches Trauerspiel), a dramatic form that arose in the 18th century as a means of bourgeois self-affirmation. In the 18th century it was noblemen from the nearby courts who put the virtues of bourgeois daughters at risk; in the early 20th century it is the bourgeois wife herself who is the seductress, hoping to escape the boredom of her marriage. In the 18th century the bourgeoisie asserted itself vis-à-vis the court on the basis of its virtue; at the Maskes’ apartment the prospect of making extra money overcomes any moral trepidation. While the bourgeois family had previously reacted by distancing itself as much as possible from the corrupt court, in The Underpants the suitors move right in with the family. Empathy among the members of the bourgeois family has been replaced by scheming and material motives; bourgeois virtues have been reduced to the ability and desire to make oneself blend in as much as possible: "My inconspicuousness is the cloak of invisibility under which I can pursue my inclinations, my innermost nature," Theobald Maske proclaims.

In The Underpants, as well as in The Snob (Der Snob, 1914), 1913 (1915), and The Fossil (Das Fossil, 1922)—the plays that constitute Scenes from the Heroic Life of the Middle Classes (the Maske tetralogy Aus dem bürgerlichen Heldenleben)—Sternheim satirizes not only what has become of bourgeois virtues and their attending humanist ideals in a faceless mass society, but also their literary and cultural expressions from Gotthold Lessing to Wagner and Nietzsche, as well as by Sternheim's naturalist contemporaries. While the naturalists had attempted to show in the details of everyday life the misery and social polarization capitalism had created, Sternheim concentrates on the same aspects to show the banality and shallowness of bourgeois life. His plays resemble the work of writers such as Heinrich Mann (1871–1950) and Arnold Zweig (1887–1968) who characterize the Wilhelmine era as one concerned more with outward appearances (hence the name Maske [mask]) and the ideological mystification of the driving forces behind this period of rapid economic expansion and imperialist adventures: unfettered egotism and an exploitative lust for wealth, in the face of which traditional bourgeois values have only become a burden. In The Underpants even the Nietzschean Übermensch represented by the writer Scarron fails to conquer the fortress of bourgeois smugness as Theobald, during a night of heavy drinking, outlasts him and reclaims his place at the side of his wife.

[See also Germany; Naturalism]

FURTHER READING

- Dedner, Burghard. Carl Sternheim. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
 Myers, David. "Carl Sternheim: Satirist or Creator of Modern Heroes?" Monatshefte 65, no. 1 (1973): 39–47.
 Rumold, Rainer. "Carl Sternheims Komödie 'Die Hose': Sprachkritik, Sprachsatire und der Verfremdungseffekt vor Brecht" [Carl Sternheim's comedy Die Hose: Language critique, language satire, and alienation effects before Brecht]. Michigan German Studies 4, no. 1 (1978): 1–16.

Friedemann J. Weidauer

UNDER THE GASLIGHT

Under the Gaslight was AUGUSTIN DALY's first successful play, and he directed its first production himself in 1867 at the New York Theatre. The production inaugurated "the victim on the tracks" scene in American and transatlantic MELODRAMA and thereby raised the stakes for scenographic innovation in the exploding genre of "sensation drama." Under the Gaslight brought onto the stage the very locomotive that symbolized industrialization, progress, and danger to mid-19th-century Americans. In his 1980 essay "Machines of the Visible" Jean Louis Comolli describes a "frenzy of the visible" that characterized antebellum spectacle culture; indeed, Under the Gaslight fueled that frenzy in theatergoing audiences.

The plot of Under the Gaslight, subtitled Life and Love in These Times, brings together members of high society and the urban slum, civilians and a Civil War veteran, immigrants and a magistrate in a topsy-turvy episodic intrigue of origins that resolves itself through revelations of cradle swapping at the play's end. The setting is New York City and its environs, the site of cosmopolitan fantasies and fears for midcentury Americans. Laura Courtland, virtuous fiancée of well-bred but doltish Ray Trafford, is discovered to be of lowly origins in the opening scene of the play. Banished from high society, Laura begins her journey into her rightful stratum of society. Through Laura's eyes the audience meets the clowns, innocents, and villains who dwell in the city's slums. The Dickensian predator, Byke, declares himself to be Laura's real father. Snorkey, a one-armed Union army veteran who always fights on the right side, pursues Byke on Laura's behalf. The infamous train-track spectacle occurs in the upstate town of the Courtland country home, where Byke, intent on blackmailing the family, discovers Snorkey at a train station and ties him to the tracks. Laura, hiding in the stationmaster's cabin, hacks her way out with an ax and unties Snorkey just as the train comes onstage. In a speedy resolution of the plot, Laura returns to Manhattan, her heartless sister Pearl is exposed as unvirtuous in behavior and birth, and Byke and his accomplice are taken into custody for baby swapping and extortion.

Joseph Daly, Augustin's brother and collaborator, describes the infamous disaster that befell the much-anticipated train-track effect on opening night. "The intensely wrought feelings of the spectators found vent in almost hysterical laughter when the 'railroad train' parted in the middle and disclosed the flying legs of the human motor who was propelling the first half of the express (1917)." The effect was fixed and improved upon thereafter. Indeed, Under the Gaslight was the inspiration for DION BOUCICAULT's play After Dark the next year in London, with its version of a train-track scene. Daly successfully sued Boucicault for stealing the effect; although Daly won the first judgment, countersuits continued for almost twenty years.

Under the Gaslight had many subsequent productions. American novelist Theodore Dreiser used the play as an organizing principle for his 1900 novel Sister Carrie, and the Biograph Company released a film version of the play in 1913.

[See also United States, 1860–1920]

FURTHER READING

- Daly, Augustin. Plays. Ed. by Don B. Wilmet and Rosemary Cullen. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1984.

- Daly, Joseph F. The Life of Augustin Daly. New York: Macmillan, 1917.
- Daly, Nicholas. "Blood on the Tracks: Sensation Drama, the Railway, and the Dark Face of Modernity." Victorian Studies 42 (1998/1999): 47–76.
- Gerould, Daniel C., ed. American Melodrama. New York: Performing Arts Journal Publications, 1983.
- McConachie, Bruce A. Melodramatic Formations: American Theatre and Society, 1820–1870. Iowa City: Univ. of Iowa Press, 1992.
- Vardac, A. Nicholas. Stage to Screen: Theatrical Method from Garrick to Griffith. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard Univ. Press, 1949.

Beth Cleary

UNDER THE WHALEBACK

RICHARD BEAN's black COMEDY Under the Whaleback won the 2002 George Devine Award and was first performed at the Royal Court Theatre Upstairs on April 10, 2003, directed by Richard Wilson. The play's United Kingdom regional premiere, in the playwright's native Hull, took place at the Hull Truck Theatre on February 26, 2004, and was directed by Gareth Tudor Price.

Under the Whaleback is set in the crew's living quarters of three trawlers (the "whaleback" is the curved deck under the ship's bow) and spans four decades, offering a glimpse into the lives of fishermen off the northeast coast of ENGLAND. The play explores the social and psychological context of the gradually decaying fishing industry around Hull and contemplates the present, in which the century-long tradition is on the verge of extinction. In the early 21st century, Bean argues, Hull's fishing heritage connotes unemployment and associated violent crime for those left to their own devices and hence disoriented and unable to embark on a new career. Bean is clearly angered by this state of affairs and by the transformation of former seagoing trawlers into sanitized museum pieces.

Structured in three acts, the play centers on a protagonist (Darrel) and his journey of self-discovery, survival, and reinvention. Darrel appears in these acts at different stages of his life: as a seventeen-year-old deckie learner in 1965, as an experienced deckhand in 1972, and as a retired fisherman working as the curator of a museum-ship in 2002. Throughout, the focus is on Darrel's interaction with his fellow crew members; bonding between the crew, however, is irreversibly connected to their constant struggle for survival. Most characters perish at sea, including Cassidy of scene 1 and the crew in scene 2, Darrel remaining the only one of his generation to tell their stories and to cope with the guilt of survival. Traditionally a profession inherited down the family line, fishing regularly juxtaposes fathers and sons, and Bean dramatizes the ways in which the sons deal with the legacies of their fathers.

Bean deliberately blurs the boundaries between biological and spiritual fathers and repeatedly puts the sons in situations to contemplate an alternative lineage. For instance, Darrel learns that he is Cassidy's son in scene 1 but only acknowledges it publicly in scene 2, while in scene 3 it is Darrel himself who breaks the news to a youth (Pat) that he is not the son of one fisherman dead at sea (Roc) but of another (Norman). To a similar end, Bean also doubles sons and fathers, casting the same actor for both roles in two such pairs, Cassidy and Darrel, Norman and Pat. As Cassidy, a legendary character referenced throughout the play, contends: "You gorra be born to this you know. It's the worst fucking job in the world and only those what is born to it, what has gorrit in the blood, can do it." Cassidy's remarks, as well as most of the play, are written in a rich and hearty Hull accent, intending to preserve for posterity not only the legacy of a now-extinct profession but also a regional flavor marginalized from mainstream discourse.

FURTHER READING

- Bean, Richard. Under the Whaleback. London: Oberon Bks., 2003.
- "Under the Whaleback." Theatre Record 23, no. 8 (May 13, 2003): 476–480. [Reviews of the 2003 Royal Court production.]

Jozefina Komporaly

UNIDENTIFIED HUMAN REMAINS AND THE TRUE NATURE OF LOVE

Unidentified Human Remains and the True Nature of Love by BRAD FRASER takes place in the Canadian city of Edmonton in 1989. The play follows the story of seven lonely people and their search for love and meaning in the jaded, cynical world of the late 1980s. As the characters try to accept their sexuality and find worthwhile relationships, their lives are affected by a serial killer who stalks the city. When the identity of the killer is revealed, the characters realize that he is no more lost or confused than they are. Unidentified Human Remains documents the "motion sickness of urban life" as it jumps from scene to scene, uncovering the characters' uncertainty with themselves and each other.

The main character, David, a former child star and now a waiter, seeks intimacy in brief sexual encounters with strangers. The twenty-nine-year old David begins a relationship with a seventeen-year-old boy, Kane, as a substitute for the man he can never have, his "straight" friend Bernie. Candy, David's roommate and former lover, also appears confused and desperate in her need for love. As Candy vacillates between her gym lesbian love affair with Jerry and her relationship with the bartender Robert, David and Bernie struggle with a more desperate form of love. The characters' troubles are all observed from the sidelines by David's clairvoyant friend and S&M prostitute, Benita.

The characters' hollow lives are mirrored by that of the serial killer in their midst; the killer's graphic violence echoes throughout the play. The scenes jump from one to the next and present an MTV-generation culture deeply cynical and distrustful of love or emotion due to excessive behavior. Deception, confusion, and lies permeate the dialogue while Benita tells urban legends to the audience, encapsulating the paranoia of a city caught in the shadow of a serial killer.

A jazzy, uncompromising story filled with violence, nudity, and strong language, the play is witness to the paranoia and confusion of a generation coming to terms with the AIDS crisis. The characters articulate their feeling of unease throughout the play; as David states, "I've never known anyone born after 1960 who wasn't incomplete somehow." Fraser desired to create characters that were caught in the emotional turmoil that Fraser found from his own experience and that of those around him. By making the characters speak the language of people he knew, and articulate the confusion that he felt, Fraser hoped to draw a different type of audience to the stage.

Playwright and screenwriter Brad Fraser has won awards for his work since his early years in Edmonton, CANADA. Fraser's plays are known for their explicit language and sexual activity, as well as their controversial view of homosexuality. Fraser has received the prestigious Chalmers Award (Unidentified Human Remains, 1990, and Poor Super Man, 1994) and was nominated for the Governor General's Award (Poor Super Man, 1996). Unidentified Human Remains was adapted into a film in 1994 by Denis Arcand. Fraser is also a co-producer and writer of the Showtime series Queer as Folk and hosts his own talk show, Jawbreaker.

FURTHER READING

Blumberg, Marcia. "Queer(y)ing the Canadian Stage: Brad Fraser's Poor Super Man." Theatre Research in Canada 17, no. 2 (Fall 1996): 175–187.

Dvorak, Maria. "Le Polar de la Génération X." Canadian Studies/Etudes Canadiennes (1998): 115–123.

Glaap, Albert-Reiner. Anguished Human Relations and the Search for Love: Plays by Canadian Writers Brad Fraser, Judith Thompson, and Dianne Warren. Trier: Germany Publications, 1998.

Holly Maples

UNITED STATES

1860–1929

From the Civil War to the Great Depression, changes in American society were seismic; they varied as the landscape of the nation was altered by factors ranging from dramatic population increases and movement from rural to urban centers to improved and more extensive transportation and to attitudinal shifts, albeit often subtle, toward social, moral, political, and economic matters. The war ended a romantic notion of American innocence. American dramatists responded haltingly to this and only slowly developed a meaningful engagement with an emerging new American society.

By 1860 the U.S. population had swelled to 31.4 million, with New York City's population of more than 800,000 people exceeding Philadelphia's—previously the theater heart of the country—which stood at 500,000. By 1900 the total U.S. population had risen to 76 million, and that of New York City, increasingly important for the theater, had climbed to 3.5 million. After the turbulence of a devastating war on U.S. soil, and despite some economic crises (the panics of 1873 and 1893), prosperity steadily increased largely unabated until the stock-market crash of 1929. Services provided by industry, transportation, and finance spread throughout much of the country, creating new opportunities, new tensions, and an increased optimism about the future. For the theater, and as fodder for playwrights, each factor was important, but none was more vital than the dramatic growth in railroads (by the mid-1880s four times the approximately 32,500 miles of track in 1860), increasing theatrical circuits, and the ease of movement to the West. This was especially increased with the completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1869.

By the late 1800s the United States began to flex its imperialistic, international power, which culminated in the brief Spanish-American War of 1898. By 1900 cities were industrial centers, thanks in large measure to sizable immigrations—almost 9 million between 1900 and 1910—and rural migrants swelling the unskilled and specialized labor force. The United States led the world in productivity. Part of this trend involved the theater. The Theatrical Syndicate (1896–1916), followed by a similar monopoly by the Shuberts (Lee, Sam S., and Jacob J.), who entered the picture in 1913 and sustained their control nationally until 1930 (and on Broadway until 1950), brought order to the chaos of booking and touring ("the Road") while at the same time controlling much of the material written for the stage.

The movement to provide women their voting rights was picking up steam and by 1912, a key year for significant changes in American theater as well. Conversely, racial issues would not begin to be solved in this period, but even the portrayal of blacks onstage gradually moved away from the earlier 19th-century grotesque image of the blackface minstrel to something a bit more realistic and sympathetic, especially after the Great Migration. In reality, the late 19th century and the first decade of the 20th century were a transitional era between the Victorian age and an emerging modern period. In the second decade of the new century the theater began to rebel against the commercialism and largely old-fashioned approaches to the drama current in American culture. Although profit-making attitudes, especially with an ever-growing Broadway theater district, have never died in the United States, for a decade or so a new dynamism and credo for new drama that could be categorized as an art form provoked experimentation that would help propel Americans into a more modernistic age. World War I, a major touchstone of the period, though not a cataclysmic event that affected directly all Americans, nonetheless added an ingredient to the mix and helped underscore the breakdown of American values.

Yet despite a seventy-year period of enormous evolution and change in American society, critics of the drama continue to suggest that as a serious form, drama in the United States is a product solely of the 20th century. A major historian of the early 20th century bemoaned in 1919 that by this period native drama had virtually ceased to exist, replaced by foreign imports, and HENRY JAMES criticized the drama as not having the same relationship to American society that the novel did; that is, it lacked an organic engagement with the values and experiences of the nation. There is some truth to both opinions, for American theater and even legitimate drama written for the stage have been largely profit driven, frequently satisfied if they served as a distraction or an amusement for the audience, often consciously anti-intellectual and drawing on often simplistic and formulaic structures of the past, such as light COMEDY or domestic MELODRAMA. James argued that the American audience did not want thoughtful, aesthetic, or subtle drama and was "very ignorant."

It is worth noting, however, that the situation was similar in this country to that in major Western European nations. Actors, popular entertainments (early musicals, minstrelsy, vaudeville, and the like), and spectacle largely dominated in the 19th century, and notable change in the drama did not begin to emerge until after HENRIK IBSEN, AUGUST STRINDBERG, and ANTON CHEKHOV exerted influence during the last two decades of the century. Popular forms continued to dominate on Broadway until the Depression.

It is important to recognize that the seeds for the emergence of a EUGENE O'NEILL and a MODERNIST DRAMA were nevertheless planted in the 19th century, and playwrights attempted to reflect the changing culture and its concerns. Consequently, in the United States, as elsewhere, the period from the turn of the century to 1929 was one of the most turbulent and dynamic in history, no less so in the struggling drama than in other venues of culture.

By the Civil War, the American theater had a strong mainstream tradition, yet reflecting discernible impulses from European traditions. After the war, and after a brief curtailment of theatrical growth in the East, there was a spurt of prosperity for the theater that lasted for over half a century. In the 1860s, with taste changing, the trend in dramatic writing was toward a more contemporary melodrama that offered the spectator excitement, emotional intensity, stereotypical characters, predictable morality, and sensationalized staging, led by the early melodramatic plays of former journalist AUGUSTIN DALY—UNDER THE GASLIGHT (1867), A Flash of Lightning (1868), and The Red Scarf (1868).

In 1871 Daly moved his melodramatic tendencies to the West with Horizon, a play inspired by the contemporary Indian wars and the fiction of BRET HARTE. Though not the first frontier melodrama, it was a more realistic picture with its combination of sensation and local color and inspired a new genre of frontier dramas, including Frank Murdoch's DAVY CROCKETT (1872), Harte's Two Men of Sandy Bar (1876), JOAQUIN MILLER's The Danites (1887), BARTLEY CAMPBELL's My Partner (1879), AUGUSTUS THOMAS's Arizona (1899), and DAVID BELASCO's THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST (1905). WILLIAM VAUGHN MOODY, called the finest lyric poet of his generation, wrote in 1906 a frontier drama that would help alter the direction not only of this type of play but of American drama in general. His THE GREAT DIVIDE, one of the finest American plays of its time, blended somewhat realistic motivation with a poetic treatment of the myth of the East versus the West.

By the late 19th century and into the turn of the 20th century, even though melodrama as a form would persist well into the 20th century, there were general tendencies toward more realistic treatments of subject, but dramatic REALISM at the turn of the century remained relatively superficial, with the reality depicted grounded in location, action, and seemingly true-to-life characters or themes that nonetheless explored issues of greater seriousness than in the past. Both social comedy and drama moved ever so slowly away from FARCE and melodrama, yet because of the lack of effective copyright controls (there was no international agreement until 1891), most American playwrights were still forced to compete with translations or Americanized adaptations of European popular plays in order to survive. Even Daly and his contemporary, the Anglo-Irish writer DION BOUCICAULT, more successful original writers than most, were often reduced to such tactics for financial gain.

Yet by the 1870s there were indications that playwrights were beginning to turn away from subjects from the past and foreign imports (even if Americanized). In addition to frontier plays, themes and concerns of the day were ever more prominent, ranging from stock speculation and Wall Street machinations to marital difficulties and especially divorce. There was even a retrospective group of plays from the 1870s that, while ignoring causes and often issues, nonetheless dealt with the Civil War, more often than not from a romantic point of view.

Of the writers who dealt with social and cultural topics, none was more prominent than BRONSON HOWARD, termed the first professional American playwright and the author of several "businessman" plays, including The Banker's Daughter (1878); Young Mrs. Winthrop (1882); The Henrietta (1887), a melodramatic depiction of Wall Street, high finance, the consequences of an obsession with business, and romantic treachery; and Aristocracy (1892). Others followed suit: Belasco's and Henry C. DeMille's Men and Women (1890); CLYDE FITCH's The Climbers (1901); and LANGDON MITCHELL's THE NEW YORK IDEA (1906), the latter also the most effective sophisticated satire of the period on divorce.

Howard also authored a popular Civil War melodrama, SHENANDOAH (1888), one of several. Others of note are Boucicault's The Octoroon (1859) and Belle Lamar (1874); Daly's Norwood (1867); WILLIAM GILLETTE's Held by the Enemy (1886) and SECRET SERVICE (1896); and Fitch's Barbara Frietchie (1899). Fitch, though he died in his mid-forties, became a prolific writer with sixty plays to his credit, most dealing perceptively and humorously with topical American subjects. THE TRUTH (1907) and The City (1909), the latter demonstrating the deleterious effects the big city can have on weak individuals, are among his most effective, rich in "Fitchian" detail and effective dialogue.

Other writers late in the century brought new twists to old forms or, in a few rare instances, responded to the new realistic movement represented most notably by the work of Henrik Ibsen and encouraged by critics WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS and Hamlin Garland (1860–1940). Yet Ibsen as a true model was still not possible, given the clear preferences of the American public for a drama that still contained melodramatic touches and romantic, happy, or at least upbeat endings.

EDWARD HARRIGAN, using farce and original songs, turned to ethnic urban types for his knockabout comedies, most prominently including Irish and African Americans but also German and Italian immigrants. Most popular were a series of "Mulligan guard" (1873–1880) plays built around a group of Irish immigrants who came to the Lower East Side of New York City's Manhattan after the famine of 1848, but also successful were such later plays as Squatter Sovereignty (1882), Cordelia's Aspirations (1883), and Dan's Tribulations (1884). Howells praised Harrigan's depiction of "the actual life of this city," yet Harrigan's work never fully developed into realism. In like manner, CHARLES HALE HOYT, like many 19th-century American playwrights trained in journalism, placed recognizable American types in farcical situations, such as his satire on Texas and congressmen, A Texas Steer (1890), and his mammoth hit, A Trip to Chinatown (1891), with its men-about-town. Like Harrigan, Hoyt wrote plays that offered transparent excuses for characters to sing and dance, for success and financial gain were foremost to him.

Other playwrights more consciously provided a transitional drama, beginning in the 1880s and moving into the early years of the 20th century. A few either sought a greater verisimilitude in their plays or chose to focus on the status of the individual in America. Most significant among these early, daring writers were the previously mentioned William Vaughn Moody, William Gillette, and Bronson Howard, STEELE MACKAYE (equally known as an actor, director, and visionary), Augustus Thomas, EDWARD SHELDON, JAMES A. HERNE, and, to a lesser extent, the prominent creator of an illusion of reality through his scenography and his meticulous direction, Belasco.

Mackaye's greatest success, HAZEL KIRKE (1880), essentially a domestic melodrama with realistic touches, combines a more natural portrayal of the titular character than its predecessors, the lack of a traditional villain, and a more realistic environment. Only one other Mackaye play held the stage, Paul Kauvar; or, Anarchy (1887), concerned with public politics and set during the French Revolution. Mackaye's contributions can also be seen in his staging and lighting innovations and his concern for a more believable acting style that brought greater emotional depth to stage characters. Augustus Thomas's notion of reality was centered on local color in plays such as Alabama (1891),

In Mizzoura (1893), Arizona (1899), The Witching Hour (1907), and The Copperhead (1918). Thomas also explored contemporary issues such as capital and labor (New Blood, 1894), politics (The Capitol, 1895), and mental healing (As a Man Thinks, 1911), among others. Edward Sheldon, trained in one of the earliest playwrighting courses, GEORGE PIERCE BAKER's English 47 at Harvard, produced an early example of social realism in plays such as SALVATION NELL (1908); The Nigger (1909), considered one of the first serious plays after the abolition of slavery to represent a somewhat sympathetic portrait of African Americans' ongoing struggle; and The Boss (1911), concerned with labor-management confrontations.

Only James A. Herne of this group was able to produce a uniquely American type of realism during the last decade of the 19th century, stating his creed in an important 1897 essay, "Art for Truth's Sake in the Drama," in which he relates drama to other contemporary forms of literature and urges an emphasis on "humanity" and "large truth" in the drama. Although even Herne, after writing the landmark drama MARGARET FLEMING (1891), was forced to alter his emphasis to a degree for financial security, he nonetheless provided an example for the future in plays, in addition to Margaret Fleming, such as Drifting Apart (1888), SHORE ACRES (1892), and The Reverend Griffith Davenport (1899).

Belasco, a director-manager-playwright, was obsessed with the creation and execution of "real" stage effects. His plays invariably were written to emphasize startlingly real illusions, yet the texts themselves are marked by melodramatic action and sentimentally drawn and idealized characters, and none holds up well today. Nevertheless, from 1890 to 1915 his management was extraordinarily successful, frequently showcasing his own plays (he claimed to have written seventy), including Madam Butterfly (1900), DuBarry (1901), The Darling of the Gods (1902), the previously mentioned The Girl of the Golden West (1905), The Rose of the Rancho (1906), and The Governor's Lady (1912). One play produced by Belasco but not his own, and featuring the actual interior of a boardinghouse room, was Eugene Walter's (1874–1941) The Easiest Way (1909), considered by some too naturalistic and frank, with an unhappy ending, yet in fact, like most of Belasco's productions, thinly disguised melodrama.

Belasco's long career is closely intertwined with the trend toward monopoly that characterized much post–Civil War business, and that, in the American theater, had an immense impact on theatrical developments in myriad ways up to the Great Depression. In 1896, six theater owners, booking agents, or in one instance (Charles Frohman) a theater owner and producer combined forces with the objective, a natural and logical one for the times, of bringing order and a concentration of authority to a theater that was in desperate need of assistance. The end result was a monopoly of most first-class theater booking for twenty years, followed by similar control in the hands of the Shubert brothers. Belasco was a major producer dependent on the Syndicate until 1902, after which he broke away from it and actually prospered as a result, staging forty-two original productions and revivals up to 1915.

But most playwrights lacked Belasco's position and power, and the Syndicate has been accused of failing to encourage high-quality plays, a charge that has been exaggerated. Nevertheless, like most managements in the history of American theater, the Syndicate (and the Shuberts as well) was composed of businessmen who were in the theater for profit. Despite the production of plays by Herne, Fitch, and Belasco, in addition to classics and recent European plays by such writers as GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, J. M. BARRIE, and even Ibsen, the Syndicate was undeniably commercial in intent and consequently failed to stimulate experimentation and innovation in DRAMATURGY. This state of affairs, among many factors, led to a playwriting and production revolt that parallels the ongoing commercial dominance of Broadway during the teens and up to the end of the period under review.

Other than the position of actor, women's contributions to the American theater during the post-Civil War period and well into the 20th century were marginal, for the theater, like most pursuits outside the home, remained a male-dominated world. Even actresses were frequently considered by society little better than prostitutes. Nevertheless, one of the revolutions against the establishment was in the realm of women playwrights. Since early in the history of American theater there had been isolated examples of female writers in the theater, but only in the late 19th century did a group of women playwrights begin to emerge as part of the redefinition of women's position in society. Before 1915 a number of women playwrights began to have success on the American stage. These writers, though undeniably authors in the popular vein writing for the commercial theater, nevertheless prepared the way for the next, more innovative generation. They included Martha Morton (1865?–1925), the first to break through the Broadway gender barrier in 1891; Lottie Blair Parker (1898?–1937); Lillian Mortimer (c. 1880–1946), also an actor and manager; Rida Johnson Young (1875–1926); and Josephine Preston Peabody (1874–1922), author of the W. V. Moody–inspired poetic and fantasy drama The Piper in 1910, among others.

The most successful female writer in the commercial field was RACHEL CROTHERS, who began writing plays in 1906, continued until 1939, and also directed many of her works. Crothers's woman-centered plays that invariably deal with gender issues are a cut above most of the work of her contemporaries and contain true literary value, albeit aimed at a Broadway audience. As Gary Richardson notes in American Drama from the Colonial Period Through World War I (1993), it was not too surprising that women such as Crothers would begin to enter the male preserve of the theater and focus on gender concerns. He explains the motivations as follows: "The growth of women's educational opportunities after the Civil War, women's major roles in a host of reform projects, the entrance of women into the professional ranks and business, reformation of divorce laws, the persistent agitation for the franchise before 1920—all of these resulted in the redefining of American women and acute concern for their social, economic, and even moral status."

Crothers's plays often focus on the tension that early 20th-century women (the "New Woman") encountered when they pitted new rights and freedoms against old traditional values. Beginning with Three of Us in 1906, she wrote some thirty Broadway-produced plays, most notably A Man's World (1910), He and She (1911), Ourselves (1913), and Let Us Be Gay (1929). A Man's World was one of her most provocative efforts, dealing with the double standard facing women, in this case a successful feminist writer who rejects marriage with a man who insists that men can have a morality different from that of women. A year later Augustus Thomas, with little success, attempted to defend the double standard in a parody titled As a Man Thinks.

One of the most experimental plays of the 1920s was produced, former journalist SOPHIE TREADWELL's MACHINAL, a play that in nine expressionistic scenes depicts a woman victimized and dehumanized by the society around her. Furthermore, two of the most popular and commercially successful plays of the 1920s, a decade of record-setting numbers of Broadway productions and declining numbers of theaters outside New York City, were authored or co-authored by women. The Bat (1920), an old-fashioned mystery drama, was written by Mary Roberts Rinehart (1876–1958), based on her novel The Circular Staircase, and Avery Hopwood (1882–1928), one of the most popular playwrights of the day. At the time it was the second longest-running play in Broadway history (867 performances). Two years later Anne Nichols's ABIE'S IRISH ROSE was an enormous success, running for 2,327 performances (closing in 1927), a fourteen-year record. Although the play is a predictable and sentimental telling of the collision of ethnic groups in the United States (the marriage of a Jewish boy and an Irish girl), it made a fortune for Nichols, who was never able to recapture this success.

But the female writer most able to ride the wave of meaningful revolt and to create innovative and unique dramas that placed her at the top of her profession was SUSAN GLASPELL. Her place in the development of American dramaturgy is best understood in the context of a revolt that began in the teens and had as its aim an art theater that could compete with and undercut the commercial dominance of American drama. Ultimately, this extraordinarily significant movement contributed to the emergence of the most important playwright before the Great Depression, Eugene O'Neill, whose life and plays are explored in some detail elsewhere in this encyclopedia.

The first decade of the 20th century, as noted, witnessed a number of efforts to revolt against commercialism, the Syndicate, and old-fashioned and stale dramaturgical formulas and staging techniques and to incorporate practices that had begun abroad and were beginning to infiltrate this country, especially efforts that were clearly artistic in intent. Inspiration for change was aroused in the 1910s by a visit by the Irish Players of the Abbey Theatre in Dublin (1911); the German director MAX REINHARDT's production of the experimental Sumurun (1912), an example of what was being termed the "New Stagercraft" (in part a revolt against pictorial realism); innovative British director HARLEY GRANVILLE-BARKER's residency with the New Stage Society of New York in 1915; and the Paris company of director JACQUES COPEAU, the Vieux-Columbier, in New York (1917), among others. A few commercial producers dared to offer more challenging fare (plays by Shaw, for example), but it was an amateur and purposefully nonprofit revolt that ultimately brought change, or at least produced plays that marked a contrast and a new direction from the usual Broadway offerings.

Despite a few isolated efforts at alternative theaters at the turn of the century—notably the Hull-House Players in Chicago in 1897, persuaded that good plays performed by amateurs could have a salutary effect on the community—it was not until a decade later that the so-called Little Theater movement gained momentum with the catalyst of a symposium published in Arena magazine (1904), "A National Art Theatre for America"; a call for "constructive leisure" in PERCY MACKAYE's The Civic Theatre (1912); the founding in 1909 of the Drama League (still in existence), dedicated to the importance of theater as a social force through good plays; the establishment of the first university effort to train playwrights by George Pierce Baker in 1905; and the spur over the next decade of innovations and experiments in a few European theaters and foreign visitations. Dozens of small, adventurous amateur theaters cropped up throughout the nation in the 1910s and 1920s.

An additional factor in the changing tone and content of American plays dates from World War I in 1914. Although the United States did not enter the conflict until 1917, the after-effects of the war had major consequences on the drama. Initially, very much like plays about the Civil War, as Ronald Wainwright illustrates in The Emergence of the Modern American Theatre, 1914–1929 (1997), the majority of war treatments onstage from 1919 to 1924 were "comic, farcical, or heroically melodramatic." American plays only began to explore "tragic, violent, and psychologically scathing material" in any concerted way with the more truthful portrayal of the horrors of war in WHAT PRICE GLORY? by MAXWELL ANDERSON and Laurence Stallings (1894–1968), considered the finest play inspired by World War I and an honest effort to reflect the senselessness of the Great War. From the outset of the war, however, until the Depression, there were at least 112 plays and revues, according to Wainwright, about World War I, and many of these, even before What Price Glory?, addressed the effect of the war at home and some of the wounds caused by its aftermath.

As many historians have noted, then, the period of the post-war, pre-Depression theater is unique in American history, for in the 1927–1928 Broadway season 264 different productions were staged, a record number never eclipsed, and, as significantly, the various revolts alluded to earlier led to some of the most exciting experimentation of the 20th century. Many of the most significant innovative developments are associated with two producing groups that emerged as part of the Little Theater movement, both prewar organizations founded in 1915: the Washington Square Players, whose purpose was to improve the level of drama seen in New York (though not necessarily to encourage native writers), which in 1919, after disbanding in 1918, was restructured as the THEATRE GUILD, arguably the most significant producing organization in New York City into the 1940s; and the Provincetown Players, founded on Cape Cod in Massachusetts by a group of eager amateurs led by the Iowan visionary George Cram Cook (1873–1924) with the avowed objective of encouraging new native playwrights. In 1916 a young Eugene O'Neill joined the latter group and that summer contributed his early work Bound East for Cardiff; in the fall the operation moved to New York's Greenwich Village, where it survived until the stock-market crash.

Two playwrights emerged as leading writers of the Providence Players, O'Neill and Cook's wife Susan Glaspell. O'Neill, who insisted on ignoring most stage conventions, was encouraged by Cook and others in his experimentation with form and style, ranging from realism and EXPRESSIONISM to costume drama, Strindbergian views of marriage, biblical fables, and even one comedy in 1932, Ah, Wilderness! Of the plays produced by the Players, the most noteworthy was THE EMPEROR JONES in 1920. For some critics, the most remarkable aspect of his early plays is their diversity, yet by 1922 he had written four of his most important and mature works: BEYOND THE HORIZON (1920), the previously mentioned The Emperor Jones, ANNA CHRISTIE (1921), and THE HAIRY APE (1922). O'Neill also associated with the Theatre Guild beginning in 1928, when his Marco Millions was staged, followed the same year by STRANGE INTERLUDE and the trilogy MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA in 1931 (though the writing of his sprawling and Americanized version of The Oresteia began in 1929).

Glaspell's output was more modest than O'Neill's—she contributed eleven plays to the Players—yet she is considered second only to O'Neill in the establishment of an American drama that combined contemporary American ideas with European expressionistic techniques. As noted elsewhere in this encyclopedia, Glaspell never shied away from the new and the immediate, from her still-affecting examination of a woman's inner conflicts in TRIFLES (1916) to the controversial play The Verge (1921), her most symbolic and expressionistic drama.

Glaspell and O'Neill were not alone in their experimentation. A few of the poet DJUNA BARNES's AVANT-GARDE plays were also produced by the Provincetown Players, but with little success. ELMER RICE, who first gained attention with a popular drama titled On Trial in 1914, was most successful with the expressionistic THE ADDING MACHINE (1923) and its portrayal of a character's subjective perception of reality. Other plays of note in the experimental vein include GEORGE S. KAUFMAN and MARC CONNELLY's BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK (1924); JOHN HOWARD LAWSON'S PROCESSIONAL (1925), a "Jazz symphony of American life"; and the previously mentioned Machinal by Treadwell. The Adding Machine, Beggar on Horseback, and Processional were Theatre Guild productions.

Although the commercial Broadway theater in the 1920s largely catered to popular tastes, some notable playwrights emerged, and a few serious, traditional dramas made their impact. Among the writers of note were Kaufman, who began his long, successful career as a comic writer (predominantly in collaboration with others), with frequent barbs at contemporary society. His great success, however, came in the 1930s with collaborators MOSS HART and EDNA FERBER. GEORGE KELLY, also a comic writer, satirized the Little Theater movement in The Torchbearer (1922), followed by his most critically acclaimed play, The Show-Off in 1924. S. N. BEHRMAN (1893–1973) and PHILIP BARRY wrote their earliest fashionable comedies before the Depression, though, like Kaufman, their greatest successes came later, and Charles MacArthur (1895–1966) and fellow journalist Ben Hecht (1894–1964) concocted the most successful farce (with melodramatic overtones) of the day, THE FRONT PAGE (1928).

Finally, the late 1920s witnessed some early serious dramas by Maxwell Anderson (who with Harold Nickerson in 1928 wrote Gods of Lightning, based on the Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti murder trial) and by ROBERT E. SHERWOOD (The Road to Rome in 1927). Few popular writers had the impact of SIDNEY HOWARD, a pivotal writer in moving American drama from a largely provincial and popular entertainment to a more respected literary reputation in provocative yet often comic plays that tackled subjects such as sex, prohibition, mother love, and psychiatry (based on Freudian ideas of family and sexual relationships). His best play, THEY KNEW WHAT THEY WANTED (1924), which preaches moral and sexual compromise, edged out What Price Glory? and DESIRE UNDER THE ELMS for the 1925 Pulitzer Prize in drama.

By the end of the 1920s the theater was undergoing decline and diminution as the country's major form of entertainment from which it could never recuperate, for in addition to the Great Depression, with its economic and political upheaval, mass forms of amusement had largely eclipsed live performance. From radio's first broadcast in 1920 until the end of the decade, an all-pervading new entertainment industry had evolved. And with the addition of sound to motion pictures in 1927, plays and musicals could be filmed in their entirety and shown to the American public for a modest cost. Significant new drama would be written in the near future, however, and certainly the concept of serious playwriting had been altered irreversibly, but the theater as an institution would remain largely marginal.

FURTHER READING

Bigsby, C. W. E. A Critical Introduction to Twentieth-Century American Drama. Vol. 1, 1900–1940. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1982.

Londré, Felicia Hardison, and Daniel J. Watermeier. The History of North American Theater. New York: Continuum, 1998.

Mason, Jeffrey D. Melodrama and the Myth of America. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1993.

Miller, Jordan Y., and Winifred L. Frazer. American Drama Between the Wars: A Critical History. Boston: Twayne, 1991.

Richardson, Gary A. American Drama from the Colonial Period Through World War I: A Critical History. New York: Twayne, 1993.

Wainscott, Ronald H. The Emergence of the Modern American Theater, 1914–1929. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1997.

Wilmeth, Don B., and Christopher Bigsby, eds. The Cambridge History of American Theatre. Vol. 1, Beginnings to 1870; vol. 2, 1870–1945. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1998, 1999.

Wilmeth, Don B., with Tice L. Miller, eds. Cambridge Guide to American Theatre. Updated ed. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1996.

Don B. Wilmeth

1929–1940

Analyses of American drama of the 1930s define the DRAMATURGY in terms of three or four distinct categories: POLITICAL THEATER, most notably that of CLIFFORD ODETS; poetic plays, almost exclusively represented by MAXWELL ANDERSON; the ubiquitous COMEDIES, exemplified by GEORGE S. KAUFMAN with MOSS HART and S. N. BEHRMAN; and, sometimes, musical theater. These labels obfuscate the interconnections and the tensions among the dramas and playwrights across the decade.

The decade can also be viewed in three socioeconomic and dramaturgical segments: the deep Depression years of 1930–1934; the apex of the decade, in terms of both politics (with the coalescence of the New Deal and the Popular Front) and dramatic literature (exemplified by WAITING FOR LEFTY) that occurred mid-decade in 1935; and the later years as World War II approached.

Corresponding with chronological and ideological stratifications are the dramatists' responses to cultural moments and to each other. So, while a combined sense of time and cultural condition is required to examine the plays, these "given circumstances" must remain porous, and the process must remain discursive, allowing the plays to resonate and reverberate off each other. The underlying story of the drama of the 1930s lies not in the surface turmoil or in a plodding progression from season to season, but in the fascinating intertextuality of the plays and their expression of the multifaceted and often conflicted "American spirit"—broken by the earlier stock-market crash, defiant in its confrontation with fascism, and self-reflexive in its examination of its own foibles and myths.

The notion of "American" must be reconsidered as we contemplate racial and ethnic boundaries of the time. Social and dramatic constructs must be wrestled within an attempt to critique "American values" in order to discern whether plays of the decade promulgate a mythologized America. The dramatic literature of the 1930s presents a complexity that defies categorizing simply by genre and interrogates both dramatic and social structure.

Marked by the crash and the depths of economic depression, consideration of communism as a panacea for the nation's hardships, the Popular Front, and the distinct rumblings of a second world war, the 1930s were an era of discontent, a time of confusion. No wonder, then, that the plays and playwrights of the period expressed both a social and a dramaturgical ambivalence.

In the cases of ROBERT SHERWOOD and ELMER RICE, the playwright's corpus clearly illustrates his changing sociopolitical attitudes and alliances. Sherwood moved from the symbolic REALISM of THE PETRIFIED FOREST to a pacifist political satire in IDIOT'S DELIGHT (1936) to the patriotic reflection of Franklin Delano Roosevelt in ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS (1938). In the 1930s Rice, best remembered for the expressionism of THE ADDING MACHINE, switched genres to the realism of We, the People (1933), then to the nonrealistic manipulation of time and insertion of the folk hero in American Landscape (1939). Subtler dramaturgical variances are evidenced in other playwrights across the decade.

Although criticism of the dramatic literature of the 1930s typically uses a binary approach, considering the "political" versus the "nonpolitical," a close reading reveals two curious patterns: (1) that no play is exclusively political or nonpolitical, and (2) that, despite the plays' subject matter, age-old dramatic structures are continually co-opted or subverted by authors across the decade.

PANACHE: COMEDIES AND THE MUSICAL

Political discourse is apparent even in the seemingly light comedies, such as Kaufman and Hart's YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU (1936), in which the character of Grandpa recalls the American "values" of ingenuity and wit, and The Man Who Came to Dinner (1938), in which the seemingly misanthropic Sheridan Whiteside has a soft spot in his heart for the sentimentality of the yuletide season. Political discourse is evident in the satirical musicals Of Thee I Sing (Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind, and Ira Gershwin, 1931), Let 'Em Eat Cake (1933), and I'D RATHER BE RIGHT! (Kaufman and Hart, 1937), which deftly lampoons the American government, but safely and at a time of adulation for Franklin Roosevelt. In a serious vein, DINNER AT EIGHT (Kaufman and EDNA FERBER, 1932) moves from the drawing room to despondency, and STAGE DOOR (Kaufman with Ferber, 1936) contrasts the malaise of the upper class with the dilemma of the poverty-stricken, unemployed Depression-era actor, including in the rank-and-file cast a character based on playwright Clifford Odets. S. N. Behrman covers his political discussions with a drawing-room veneer, rejecting pure propaganda as too obvious a vehicle, toying with traditional dramatic structure, and focusing on a subtle form of liberalism. His treatment results in dramas peopled by confused characters, at odds with their own ideologies.

The plays of the comic writers retain at their cores the structural traditions and character archetypes of comedy through the ages—the Aristophanic "happy idea," replete with agon, rising complications, and resolution in celebration; the Plautian characters of the juvenile and ingenue, paterfamilias, crotchety old man, and so on. The plays call into question the nature and purpose of comedy as well. The comic process operates via two strategies: "othering" or identifying. We laugh, on the one hand, because we can observe characters' behaviors from a distance and safely react, and/or we laugh because we can warmly respond, "Just like me." In American comedy of the 1930s both strategies may be present in the same play, reflecting the ambivalence of the time.

Kaufman provides us with kooky characters whose foibles we view from afar and with lovers in the commedia tradition. He throws into the mix all the characteristic elements of comedy that guarantee laughter—the slapstick, physical antics of FARCE, the verbal repartee of comedy of manners, the foolproof "rule of three," confusion and/or mistaken identities, and a fast pace matched by few. Kaufman's use of these machinations allows him to tinker with his themes, anarchy in You Can't Take It with You, critiquing American traditions such as "Mom's apple pie" in Of Thee I Sing, or questioning the wisdom of the Supreme Court and the efficacy of the FEDERAL THEATRE PROJECT in I'd Rather Be Right. For Kaufman, and for comedy of the 1930s in America, the medium may not, in fact, have been the message. Kaufman's comedies are marked with the ambivalent mood of the 1930s; they leave us wondering if his chiding of society was meant to incite change, to point out the fallacies of American myths, or to (re)instill in his audiences those romantic notions of Americana that keep us going when the going gets tough.

Although Kaufman remains the quintessential writer of American comedy of the 1930s (and beyond), Behrman used the same mechanisms of comedy to somewhat different ends. His pieces often end, not with the celebration so prized by theorist Francis Cornford, but in a surprise separation or dissolution. In this manner Behrman subverts the comic structure to reinscribe the ambiguity of the times. American comedy, in the 1930s, then, was serious (and often politicized) business.

POLITICS AND THE HOLY GRAIL

Seemingly purely political dramas of the 1930s use the set speeches of Marxist dogma, protagonists who are martyred, and requisite "call-to-action" endings; but, surprisingly, they reify distinctly American "values" of home and family. Clifford Odets's Waiting for Lefty endures, not because of its topicality or its political platform, but because of the manner in which the effect of the Depression is humanized, the way the play expresses the ramifications of economic deprivation on a specific family, on individuals who people the piece's vignettes. The same can be said of Odets's other more realistic works: AWAKE AND SING! (1935), Paradise Lost (1935), and GOLDEN BOY (1937). Odets finds his faith in the future of American youth, and he expresses promise in a fresh brand of (Jewish) American poetic dialogue. Unlike the more polemic playwrights of the era, Odets peopled his plays with characters whose underlying traits ring true—three-dimensional characters who, at the same time, proffer a poetic vision of a better world to come. Biblical allusion, extended metaphor, imagery, symbolism, and leitmotiv, the likes of which were not to be seen again until TENNESSEE WILLIAMS and ARTHUR MILLER, characterize the work of Odets. Structurally, like many playwrights of the era, Odets uses the underlying framework of MELODRAMA and the coincidences of the well-made play. Unlike some of his compatriots (such as Elmer Rice in We, the People), Odets hides the underpinnings of his plays beneath the surface of the action. Ultimately, Odets's canon is more accurately characterized as “social” rather than “political,” for he explores socioeconomic issues in a more universal way than the purely political pieces of the time. Odets's plays remain vital some three-quarters of a century after their writing. Despite his membership in the Communist Party and his inclusion of rather “Red” characters and dialogue (such as the grandfather's reading material in Awake and Sing!), Odets crafted plays that transcend the topical, plays that foreshadowed Miller's social dramas.

The polemic playwrights of the 1930s whose works have not become canonized failed for the very reasons that Odets succeeded. Their dialogue is too strident or too topical to survive the test of time; the structural elements of their scripts are too obvious; and/or they fail to humanize the struggles of Depression-era Americans. The most egregious example is playwright JOHN HOWARD LAWSON, whose confused dramatic forms reflect his personal political dilemma. As he embraced communism and moved toward “Hollywood Ten” fame, Lawson lost the ability to create multifaceted characters and to sustain a believable plotline. Lawson never mastered the seamless meshing of medium and message. In both Success Story and Gentlewoman his characters became mouthpieces for his murky theorizing, and his dialogue cataloged the buzzwords of Marxist doctrine of the day. To a lesser degree SIDNEY KINGSLEY's melodramatic MEN IN WHITE (1934) falls prey to the same pitfalls. Plays by other playwrights in this vein, but more vituperative, are John Wexley's Steel (1931, revived 1937), Paul Peters and George Sklar's Stevadore (1934), Albert Bein's Let Freedom Ring (1935), and Albert Maltz's Black Pit (1935).

The socioeconomic conditions of the 1930s were ripe for docudramas. Although their relevance to a contemporary audience waned over time, these plays provide literary grist for the cultural materialist or New Historicist's mill. Included in this category are pieces on the Scottsboro case—Wexley's They Shall Not Die (1934) and Denis Donoghue's melodrama Legal Murder (1934). LANGSTON HUGHES's version of the story employs the workers' theater techniques of AGITATION-PROPAGANDA drama, and the German-speaking Prolet-Bühne staged a mass recitation version. Numerous plays emerged to depict the confrontation of workers with “management.” Michael Denning's study The Cultural Front outlines the relationship between the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) and the arts in the 1930s. Colette Hyman's Staging Strikes references numerous performances of “strike plays” about textile workers, dockworkers, coal miners, and workers in the automobile industry by the aforementioned playwrights and others. These plays, however, failed to capture the attention of future producers and playgoers. The holy grail of political playwrighting of the 1930s, then, was the poetic depiction of “real-life” drama with a salient message.

An examination of American drama of the 1930s is incomplete without the works of LILLIAN HELLMAN. Like many of the literati of her day, the playwright became politicized as the Depression worsened and as war neared. Her most stridently polemical piece is Days to Come (1936), and it is her least successful play. In it Hellman mimics Waiting for Lefty, but she fails to pull in the reins on subplots and forces a dramatic structure that is out of keeping with her more engaging interpretations of the well-made play exhibited by THE CHILDREN'S HOUR (1934) and THE LITTLE FOXES (1939). Nonetheless, Hellman's plays of the 1930s respond to the socioeconomic milieu of the time. In The Little Foxes we see the ill effects of family members at odds with one another as they seek monetary gain and its attendant power. The basic tenets of capitalism are implicitly criticized in this piece set against the 1930s dilemma of the textile industry, as they are later in Watch on the Rhine (1941). The Children's Hour attained its notoriety for different reasons—still a staple among community and university theaters, the play was a courageous exploration of an alternative lifestyle, cast in a well-made-play format with some of the trappings of melodrama. Although Hellman's political activity per se seems to have transpired more offstage than on, her social dramas of the 1930s reflected the cultural moment.

Maxwell Anderson's work is an anomaly in the 1930s and constitutes the only commercially successful foray of American drama into the realm of poetic form. He stands alone as the successful writer of verse dramas in America. Anderson is woefully misunderstood and displaced in terms of the dramaturgy of the decade. His work is most often considered precious in the midst of a highly political time. In fact, Anderson's unwavering belief in the efficacy of verse drama was deliberately set within the socioeconomic constructs of his time, and the playwright is hardly without political presence.

ELIZABETH THE QUEEN (1930) and Mary of Scotland (1933) have been subsequently produced for their pageantry, and their pertinence to the social and political moments from which they sprang has been by and large forgotten. In truth, Anderson habitually critiqued the economic and political forces of his day by means of historicizing and poeticizing, allowing his audience the luxury of playing one cultural “text” against another. He used the myths of British history (and revolutionary America in Valley Forge, 1934) to promote images of strength and power. Sadly, Anderson so labored under the weight of his vast knowledge of history and literature that his efforts to draw contemporary parallels often became obscured. In Drama and Commitment Gerald Rabkin asserts that by the end of the 1930s Anderson deployed “history as prophecy” over “myth as history” (Rabkin, 1964). WINTERSET (1935), in its poetic interpretation of the Nicola Sacco-Bartolomeo Vanzetti case, is a unique blend of political docudrama and verse. It is, then, ironic that Anderson was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1933 for Both Your Houses, his political prose piece, because his reputation stands more squarely on his poetic dramas.

THE AMERICAN MYTH

One American myth that (re)surfaces in drama of the 1930s is that of the rugged individual, the “straight shooter,” the independent thinker. Another is the concept of “American family values” that appears implicitly in plays across the decade. Nowhere, however, is America more clearly romanticized and mythologized than in three enduring plays from the decade’s end—THORNTON WILDER’S OUR TOWN (1939), Jack Kirkland’s Tobacco Road (which ran at various New York theaters and toured from 1933 to 1941), and WILLIAM SAROYAN’S THE TIME OF YOUR LIFE (1939). Each of these plays was reevaluated at the end of the 20th century with regard to the inherent racism and bigotry of the 1930s it depicts.

Our Town is deceptively simple in construct and theme. Noted for its minimalist stage conventions and its romanticized depiction of life in a small New England town, the piece problematizes American “values” of its day, presenting the human instinct to rush through everyday tasks without thinking, and pointing up the segregation and ethnic biases inherent in small-town life. At the end of the decade, when war loomed across the Atlantic, with an almost Buddhist philosophy, Wilder admonished his audience to “realize life while they live it.” It may be argued that the play is the embodiment of pacifism.

Kirkland’s Tobacco Road was touted as “DOCUMENTARY” in its time, a naturalistic depiction of the poverty inherent in the South during the Depression. As in the case of Our Town, there is more to the play than meets the eye. The piece immortalizes the stereotypical “Georgia cracker” and thus in a perverse manner romanticizes the notion of Southern poverty. Through the use of grotesque comedy the play simultaneously promotes racial profiling and economic marginalizing. Tobacco Road, throughout the 1930s, allowed its mainstream audience (by no means representative of characters the play depicts) an opportunity to assuage its guilt by paying homage to the deprivation of others.

Saroyan’s The Time of Your Life appropriately concludes the decade and an assessment of its dramatic literature, for the play depicted the dreams and aspirations of its characters, thus idealizing America as well. In a Chekovian style that combines tragic and comic elements and examines the relationship between life and work, Saroyan upholds and questions American values. The play’s action revolves around Joe, the inhabitant of a honky-tonk bar in San Francisco, who is independently wealthy but amassed his fortune at the expense of others. A crucial set speech on the American work ethic is presented by an itinerant pinball player who hopes to strike it rich; a prostitute acts out her fantasy of achieving the “American dream” of marriage to a doctor; and a Kit Carson figure arrives, inserting the mythology of the Wild West into Saroyan’s already somewhat bizarre fictive world. Despite its seemingly incongruous characterizations, The Time of Your Life achieves a power and a poetry that epitomize America of the 1930s. Saroyan calls into question national beliefs in capitalism and the results of hard work in the wake of economic depression; yet he undercuts tragedy and sentimentality with humor in the face of fascism and the potential of a world war. (Interestingly, Saroyan refused to claim his Pulitzer Prize for the play, believing that the prize system constituted a reflection of the capitalism he opposed.)

American drama of the 1930s, then, presents a depth and a variety with which it is seldom fully credited. Playwrights grappled with the difficult issues of politics, poverty, and the potential of war that prevailed across the decade, and they did so with remarkable variety and nuance in terms of dramatic form.

FURTHER READING

- Bigsby, C. W. E. A Critical Introduction to Twentieth-Century American Drama. Vol. 1, 1900–1940. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1982.
- Denning, Michael. The Cultural Front. New York: Verso, 1998.
- Fearnow, Mark. The American Stage and the Great Depression. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1997.
- Hyman, Colette. Staging Strikes: Workers’ Theatre and the American Labor Movement. Philadelphia: Temple Univ. Press, 1997.
- Mason, Jeffrey D. Wisecracks: The Farces of George S. Kaufman. Ann Arbor: UMI Res. Press, 1988.
- Miller, Jordan Y., and Winifred L. Frazer. American Drama Between the Wars: A Critical History. Boston: Twayne, 1991.
- Rabkin, Gerald. Drama and Commitment: Politics in the American Theatre of the Thirties. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1964.
- Smiley, Sam. The Drama of Attack: Didactic Plays of the American Depression. Columbia: Univ. of Missouri Press, 1972.

Anne Fletcher

1940–PRESENT

Drama in the United States has always occupied a position quite different from that of its sister forms in Europe, primarily because an understanding of drama as a central cultural resource has always been in conflict with the American sense of theater as primarily a commercial enterprise: a business proposition whose most important objective is to fill the seats of an auditorium. A contrasting sense of American drama as art was first fully articulated by the Little Theater movement in the 1920s, and from that point on, the conflict between drama-as-business and drama-as-art characterized American theater of the 20th century. In the decades from 1940 to the turn of the century the reciprocal influences of these two visions of American drama linked mainstream Broadway theater to OFF-BROADWAY, regional theater, off-off-Broadway, and, in an even more complex relationship, film and television.

For most of the 20th century Broadway was the nexus of American drama, the place where drama, live performance, and commerce achieved their most spectacular combinations. By 1940 Broadway had not only survived the Depression, but had witnessed the rise and fall of the most extensive art-theater venture in American history, the FEDERAL THEATRE PROJECT (FTP). The FTP demonstrated the possibilities of a countrywide, noncommercial, socially conscious, government-subsidized national theater. The shock of this suspiciously European-style venture and its apparently leftist politics led to its demise at the hands of the U.S. Congress, but its example of the power and accessibility of decentralized, noncommercial, experimental, and popular drama had established itself within the conscience and memory of American theater makers.

Mainstream American theater in 1940—by definition, Broadway theater—maintained its original connections to musical theater, spectacle, and COMEDY, but the legacy of EUGENE O'NEILL, ELMER RICE, and other playwrights whose works had migrated uptown from Greenwich Village was that enticing possibility of the serious American drama with commercial potential. Mirroring the developments of European drama from the first half of the century, serious American dramas were gingerly and tentatively stepping away from the reassuring dynamics of well-made play and MELODRAMA, although examples of those forms continued to be popular on American stages for the rest of the century.

By 1940 the dream of a legitimate American drama had been in part realized, and it included not only dramas of American character by O'Neill, but also expressly political plays by Rice and CLIFFORD ODETS. Moreover, an emerging tradition of American drama had been nurtured by collectives such as the THEATRE GUILD, Orson Welles's Mercury Theatre, Eva Le Gallienne's Civic Repertory Theatre, and the GROUP THEATRE. These earlier outgrowths of the Little Theater movement believed not only in supporting new American dramas, but also in new ways of ACTING in and designing for them.

One might argue that American drama in 1940 was in fact beginning a period of decline, because in sheer volume of work, the apex had already been reached in 1928, when over 260 new productions opened on Broadway. Because of increasing costs and competition from other media, Broadway saw its volume of productions gradually diminish over the next six decades to the point that in the 2003–2004 season only thirty-eight productions opened there, only eighteen of which were comedies or dramas. On the other hand, 1940 could also be considered the dawning of classic 20th-century American drama, because in the midst of an earthshaking war and attendant changes in the way the modern world would think and communicate, U.S. playwrights were about to articulate their ideas in characters and voices that would catch the moment in all its complexity.

American drama during World War II included a familiar mixture of comic and serious plays set among classic revivals, musicals, and revues. As one might expect, there was an emphasis on spirit-lifting entertainment, from Broadway revivals of Twelfth Night (1941), THREE SISTERS (1942), or The Rivals (1942) to mirth-inducing vaudeville-style revues such as Keep 'Em Laughing (1941). Although serious American drama of the Depression era had often included a social and political critique of American society, such perspectives were less welcome during the war years. ROBERT SHERWOOD's last play, The Rugged Path (1945), was a critique of war profiteers and deceitful journalists that failed at the box office; however, in the patriotic Watch on the Rhine (1941) LILLIAN HELLMAN turned her sense of American character and her ear for American voices to the conflict between democracy and fascism, here played out among rich Americans and European émigrés in Washington, D.C.

Other wartime dramas, such as PAUL OSBORN's A Bell for Adano (1944), made realistic drama about the American experience overseas, in this case the efforts of a noble American colonel to bring democracy to occupied Sicily. SIDNEY KINGSLEY's The Patriots (1943) was a costume drama about the American Revolution in which Thomas Jefferson pertinently declared, "I believe, indeed, I know this government is the world's best hope." Meanwhile, on the comic side, S. N. BEHRMAN's Jacobowsky and the Colonel (1944) managed to find character humor in the invasion of France, and JOHN VAN DRUTEN created a vastly popular romantic comedy about a soldier on leave in THE VOICE OF THE TURTLE (1941).

The era of the early 1940s was still influenced by an earlier genre of "Negro plays" written by white authors. Brooks Atkinson articulated some characteristics of the form in his New York Times review (October 26, 1940) of Lynn Root's "Negro fantasy" Cabin in the Sky (1940), writing optimistically (and without irony) that "Negroes can act with abandon and with infectious enjoyment when the occasion is right." The same wartime era also saw vaudeville icon Eddie Cantor in blackface makeup as a happy-go-lucky African American in Banjo Eyes (1941), a vestigial remnant of minstrel-show aesthetics. A more complex sense of African American drama was marked by a 1943 production of Othello starring Paul Robeson and by an all-black Carmen Jones that same year—Oscar Hammerstein II's revision of Georges Bizet's opera, modernized and shifted to a contemporary wartime setting in the Deep South.

The reassuring pleasure that Cabin in the Sky promised its Broadway audiences was a strong contrast to the discomfort delivered by a surprisingly strong array of dramas by African American writers who persisted in critiquing American society even while the war was on. Theodore Ward's 1940 Big White Fog was a slice of Harlem REALISM that Brooks Atkinson dismissed as a “communist” play; and the PAUL GREEN–Richard Wright collaboration Native Son (1941) presented veteran African American actor Canada Lee as fatally doomed Chicago chauffeur Bigger Thomas. Both dramas used realistic, violent, and ultimately tragic drama to bluntly criticize racism. However, despite their focus on social inequities, the fact of their appearance onstage (Native Son on Broadway, Big White Fog in Harlem) also represents the self-conscious sense of democratic possibility and openness that characterized American drama in the war years as a whole.

The slender persistence of experimental techniques in wartime drama was represented in these years by THORNTON WILDER, whose THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH (1942) was an epic history of mankind, seen as an archetypal middle-class New Jersey family. Wilder, in effect, echoed Kingsley’s “world’s best hope” sentiment of The Patriots by means of gentle, comic, and fantastic non-realism, quite different from the confrontational radicalism that would characterize the AVANT-GARDE in the years to come.

Meanwhile, the sense of drama as an artistic entity with political resonance, which the Group Theatre had pioneered in the 1930s, lived on in the Dramatic Workshop, an institution created in 1939 at the New School for Social Research by expatriate director ERWIN PISCATOR. Piscator brought together such luminaries of the Group Theatre as Stella Adler and Lee Strasberg, but also historians John Gassner and Barrett Clark, critic Oliver Saylor, and designer Mordecai Gorelik. Piscator’s students included Marlon Brando, TENNESSEE WILLIAMS, Judith Malina, Abram Hill, Miriam Colón (founder of the Puerto Rican Traveling Theatre), Vinnette Carroll, and Tony Randall, all of whom would have lasting effects on American drama as culturally essential art. Among other things, the Dramatic Workshop propelled Williams to produce his early play Battle of Angels with the Theatre Guild in 1940, but it also inspired playwright Abram Hill (who had been a script reader with the Federal Theatre Project) to found the American Negro Theatre (ANT) in 1940. For ANT, Hill adapted Philip Yordan’s story of Polish immigrants, Anna Lucasta, as an African American social drama that opened in Harlem in 1944, but moved to Broadway for a successful run the same year.

The ever-more-popular medium of film represented a challenge and conundrum for American drama in the 1940s because movies expertly presented drama in all its popular forms: melodrama, well-made play, musical. In effect, the techniques of drama as text-based, dialogue-centered storytelling were realized far more successfully and economically in the film medium than they could be in live performance. In the 1940s Hollywood continued to lure writers and actors away from live theater to the more lucrative practice of writing and performing dramas for film. But perhaps more important, film and radio drama now clearly reached more Americans than live theater, which would never again function as a central forum of American performance. If the major issues, stories, characters, and sentiments of American life were now articulated to most of the country’s citizens through electronic media, what role could live drama play? The end of the war in 1945 brought this question—an identity crisis of American drama—to the fore.

Although the role of theater in postwar American culture may have been far less consequential than that of electronic media—which now featured the colossus of television—the Cold War years of American drama in fact mark its golden age, a moment when the promise of American drama as both artistic and commercial success (suggested decades earlier by O’Neill and Odets) was fully achieved by Tennessee Williams, ARTHUR MILLER, and WILLIAM INGE. And this success was not achieved simply by updating the format of well-made drama to reflect postwar American life, but by incorporating new approaches to playwriting and play production. In 1955 Brooks Atkinson pointed out that the successful mainstream dramas of the postwar era “would have been regarded as ‘experimental’ a quarter of a century ago.” Most of them, he added, “have broken with the old formula of the ‘well-made play’ in the interest of freer, more poetic, more subjective forms” (New Voices).

This was certainly true of Williams’s 1945 Broadway hit THE GLASS MENAGERIE, which combined a modern American sensibility and precisely wrought “American” characters and voices with a HENRIK IBSEN–like sense of realistic melodrama, laced with all sorts of “EPIC” techniques that Williams had learned through Piscator. It is interesting to note that critic Lewis Nichols, writing in the New York Times (April 2, 1945), saw The Glass Menagerie as a particularly well-done actors’ play, but bridled specifically at the kinds of dramaturgical innovations that made the play something quite different from straight prewar drama: “Mr. Williams’ play is not all of the same caliber. A strict perfectionist could easily find a good many flaws. There are some unconnected odds and ends which have little to do with the story: Snatches of talk about the war, bits of psychology, occasional moments of rather flowery writing.” In other words, for Nichols, the very things that made Williams’s playwriting innovative—the narrator Tom’s direct address to the audience, the way he contextualizes the story of his sister and mother as an aspect of Depression-era life in America, his articulation of the story as a nonrealistic “memory play”—all these “epic” elements marked Williams’s drama as flawed, imperfect. Yet Williams’s combination of exquisitely limned American characters, together with his penchant for nonrealistic storytelling techniques and his critique of American hostility to empathy and emotion, was a harbinger of American drama to come.

Williams, Miller, and Inge were the postwar triumvirate of American family drama, creating profoundly contemporary American characters whose faults and frustrations resonated with a society that was emerging from postwar euphoria into the years of Cold War anxiety and doubt. Their commercial success marked another successful wedding of experimental DRAMATURGY with mainstream popularity—in other words, dramatic techniques that had once been the domain of downtown theater were now accepted on Broadway. Miller, particularly in DEATH OF A SALESMAN, his 1949 Broadway hit and Pulitzer Prize winner, stretched the limits of stage realism by presenting Willy Loman's memories not simply as retrospective monologues, but as fully present, acted-out dreams. Inge's family dramas were more solidly centered on stage realism than Williams's or Miller's, but were marked by an overriding melancholia and a plot structure that eschewed the kind of "strict perfection" evoked by Lewis Nichols for composite stories that evoked character and emotion much more than a relentless march toward climax and resolution. In other words, Inge's plays avoided the kinds of well-made dramatic structure that were, for example, a hallmark of Hollywood movies. However, the epitome of postwar American family drama as classic realism was actually achieved by LORRAINE HANSBERRY, whose A RAISIN IN THE SUN (1959) presented the story of striving, middle-class Americans as the essence of African American life. Although Hansberry eschewed the nonrealistic experiments that characterized Miller's and Williams's work, her play was in a way much more radical because it presented its African Americans as complex human beings confronting the same kinds of challenges white Americans faced, although with the added encumbrance of racism. ALICE CHILDRESS also wrote realistic dramas about the African American experience beginning in the 1940s, but such plays as Florence (1949) were less sentimental than A Raisin in the Sun, and consequently less salable on Broadway.

Carson McCullers took an oblique approach to American family drama with The Member of the Wedding (1950), which, perhaps even more than Inge's work, focused on the articulation of character and emotion rather than traditional dramatic structure. The New York Times complained that the play "has no beginning, middle or end and never acquires dramatic momentum" (Brooks Atkinson, January 6, 1950), but what it did do was present black and white characters of the American South as complex outsiders. JANE BOWLES's equally innovative play IN THE SUMMER HOUSE (1954) depicted the conflicted and repressed feelings of three mother-daughter pairs. Its unusual primary focus on women, as well as its avoidance of a well-made plot, led to its middling success. Although Bowles and McCullers were out of step with mainstream Broadway drama, in retrospect their concerns can be seen as prescient.

"Strict perfectionist" playwrighting of the postwar years was represented by scores of plays whose authors are, for the most part, much less known than Williams, Miller, and Inge. A particular success in straight-ahead postwar drama was GARSON KANIN, who returned from his service in the war to write and direct Born Yesterday (1946), a comedy about Washington politics and class and a Broadway showgirl turned, Pygmalion-like, into a socially conscious Washington sophisticate. Thomas Heggen and Joshua Logan's Mister Roberts (1948) was a straightforward drama looking back on the war with strong, mixed sentiments. Articulating what would become an increasingly popular postwar theme, it told a seriocomic story of a crew of sailors—normal, everyday Americans—attempting to survive the injustices of an irrational captain. Herman Wouk's The Caine Mutiny Court Martial (1954) reprised the captain-crew conflict of Mister Roberts as melodrama. Robert Anderson's Tea and Sympathy (1953) also offered a traditionally structured drama about resistance to unreasonable authority, this time in a mildly scandalous but romantic story about a prep-school boy accused of homosexuality. Anderson's drama, like Arthur Miller's Puritan-era political drama THE CRUCIBLE of the same year, was a reflection of McCarthy-era anxieties. On the other hand, in 1959 William Gibson could write The Miracle Worker, a wildly popular historical drama about Helen Keller and the possibilities of learning.

Traditionally structured dramas had their more humorous counterpart in romantic comedies by such playwrights as JOHN PATRICK (Teahouse of the August Moon, 1953) and N. Richard Nash (The Rainmaker, 1954), whose works also reflected postwar situations. Patrick's tale of the foibles of American soldiers in occupied JAPAN and Nash's western about a confidence man and a would-be spinster represented a genre of postwar drama dedicated above all to audience entertainment. It is a telling marker of postwar American drama that such traditional plays that were commercially successful on Broadway were even bigger hits as Hollywood movies. Moreover, by 1948 over 1 million American homes had television sets, and that medium was on the way to supplanting not only live theater but also film as the major source of drama for American audiences. In the coming decade some of America's great dramatists (such as Rod Serling and Paddy Chayefsky) would write not for the live stage but for the cathode-ray tube, while others, including HORTON FOOTE and JEROME LAWRENCE, divided their efforts equally between Broadway and Hollywood.

Mainstream theater's appetite for lyrical whimsy, which Thornton Wilder had satisfied before the war with The Skin of Our Teeth, was now fed by such plays as ARCHIBALD MACLEISH's singular Broadway success, J.B. (1958), a modernized retelling of the tribulations of Job, here transformed into a successful businessman who never renounces God. MacLeish's play followed the more serious vein of T. S. ELIOT's The Cocktail Party (1950), which attempted to reintroduce verse drama as a modern form in a quasi-mystical story of contemporary English socialites who, mixed up by the competitive claims of religion and psychiatry, mull their spiritual destinies. These quirky Broadway successes were neither musicals nor straight dramas and, like the works of McCullers and Bowles, represented a certain experimentation with dramatic forms, but on the other hand, they were not entirely representative of the mainstream of alternative American drama. That development was, instead, taking form in a new arena for American theater: off-Broadway.

The rise of off-Broadway theater as the new center of serious American drama coincided with a general decline in the volume and artistic content of Broadway theater. Increased production costs and admission prices, as well as competition from television, led to sharp decreases in the number of Broadway productions. According to Brooks Atkinson (1970), postwar Broadway theater was "beginning to lose the confidence and drive it had before World War II," and even its most successful playwrights—Williams, Miller, and Inge—began to have trouble getting their works produced on Broadway. Some critics saw a falling off in the quality of the playwrights' work, but also the economics of Broadway had led it to become less adventurous about producing new drama, especially plays that experimented with new techniques and subjects. In any event, beginning in the 1950s, serious American drama, especially in its nonrealistic or avant-garde forms, began to appear more frequently off-Broadway than on Broadway. An example of the challenges facing innovative mainstream drama was the Experimental Theatre, founded in the late 1940s. It produced a brief Broadway run of BERTOLT BRECHT's THE LIFE OF GALILEO in 1947, with Charles Laughton in the title role, but this premiere production by one of the greatest playwrights of the century failed to attract an audience, and the Experimental Theatre itself ceased operations the following year.

The emergence of off-Broadway provided a viable (if less lucrative and popular) alternative for new American drama. Off-Broadway theater can be said to have truly begun in 1951 when a group of actors and directors founded the Circle in the Square theater in New York City's Greenwich Village. Circle in the Square helped define the nature of off-Broadway drama by producing a combination of adventurous new works and neglected classics. Its 1952 production of Williams's SUMMER AND SMOKE announced off-Broadway as a site of serious new drama, and its revival of O'Neill's THE ICEMAN COMETH (1956) initiated a rediscovery of that playwright as an American treasure.

The changing nature of 1950s drama was most apparent in Theater of the Absurd, a genre of mostly European playwrighting influenced by JEAN-PAUL SARTRE's existentialist PHILOSOPHY and the sobering failures of modern society marked by the recently finished world war. ABSURDISM's signature drama, SAMUEL BECKETT's WAITING FOR GODOT, was in fact a 1956 Broadway success, although it seemed to have puzzled and challenged audiences more than it satisfied and amused. Atkinson's New York Times review (April 20, 1956) said that it told "melancholy truths about the hopeless destiny of the human race": hardly the function of typical Broadway fare. Indicating the shift of serious drama away from Broadway, Beckett's ENDGAME played off-Broadway at the Cherry Lane Theatre in 1958. Two years later Beckett's KRAPP'S LAST TAPE appeared (at the venerable Provincetown Playhouse in Greenwich Village), part of a double bill with THE ZOO STORY, a play by the United States' own emerging absurdist dramatist, EDWARD ALBEE, who set a tone of American existentialist shock and futility that would characterize much 1960s theater to come, including such off-Broadway plays as JACK RICHARDSON's Gallows Humor (1961).

The noncommercial, art-theater approach that characterized off-Broadway drama of the 1950s, and then off-off-Broadway theater of the 1960s, was articulated as a postwar phenomenon by the LIVING THEATRE, which Judith Malina began with Julian Beck in 1947 shortly after she graduated from Erwin Piscator's Dramatic Workshop in New York. Its initial performances, often in living rooms and lofts instead of theaters, were of plays by the mainstream European avant-garde: Brecht, GERTRUDE STEIN, FEDERICO GARCÍA LORCA, ALFRED JARRY, JEAN COCTEAU, and LUIGI PIRANDELLO. But it also performed plays by American poets (Kenneth Rexroth, Paul Goodman, Jackson MacLow) and then groundbreaking dramas by JACK GELBER (The Connection, 1959) and Kenneth Brown (The Brig, 1963).

The postwar shift of serious drama to off-Broadway happened in tandem with a concurrent development across the United States: regional theater. The advent of film had initiated a decline in the system of nationwide tours beyond Broadway, and consequently a dearth of live theater across the country. The regional theater movement, as Joseph Zeigler put it in Regional Theatre: The Revolutionary Stage (1973), was an effort to create a community-based, noncommercial drama as an alternative to "the commercial values" of Broadway: "a new world dedicated to the establishment of new theatrical values—permanence, the ensemble company of actors, classics on the stage, and art as a goal." Beginning in 1947 with Margo Jones's Theatre '47 in Dallas, the regional theater movement expanded across the United States throughout the 1950s and 1960s, including the Alley Theatre in Houston (1947), the Arena Stage in Washington (1950), the Actor's Workshop in San Francisco (1952), the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis (1963), the Long Wharf Theatre in New Haven (1965), and the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles (1967). Although they began as alternatives to Broadway, the regional theaters actually continued the art-theater/commercial-theater symbiosis that had begun in the 1920s by developing plays that could end up on Broadway itself. In Theatre '47's first season, for example, Margo Jones directed Inge's The Dark at the Top of the Stairs and Williams's Summer and Smoke. In 1955 Jones produced Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee's Inherit the Wind (a realistic historical drama about the John Scopes "monkey trial") in Dallas before the play moved on to Broadway and then film. In the mid-1960s at the Arena Stage director Zelda Fichandler developed Howard Sackler's The Great White Hope, a drama about the African American boxer Jack Johnson, into a Pulitzer Prize-winning Broadway success of 1968.

By the 1960s the Broadway-based system of proscenium theaters, realistic plays, and life-affirming musicals had become almost ancillary to the creation of new American drama. A successful Broadway dramatist such as NEIL SIMON (who also wrote for film and television) was almost a remnant of the earlier postwar era, whose ethos was evoked by his Manhattan-based comedies such as Come Blow Your Horn (1961), Barefoot in the Park (1963), or THE ODD COUPLE (1965). Production costs and ticket prices were steadily rising, television and film provided more popular entertainment, and American playwrights seemed uninterested in or unable to write mainstream dramas that could draw large, consistent audiences. Broadway's successes seemed to be limited to European imports, revivals, and the occasional sprightly musical, although innovative and often unsettling work did reach its way up from off-Broadway, off-off-Broadway, and regional theaters.

A model of the new American dramatist was Edward Albee. Despite his connections to Theater of the Absurd, Albee was unapologetically his own playwright, and a clearly American one at that. Nurtured in an off-Broadway world that welcomed the quirky and unusual, his often misanthropic plays refused to follow a formula for commercial success, and if one of his plays—such as WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF? (1962)—did become a hit on Broadway, it was as much for its scandal as for its deft portrayal of American character and story. Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? appeared to follow the contours of the American family drama and could be performed on the same living-room set as The Glass Menagerie, Death of a Salesman, or A Raisin in the Sun. But Albee's dramaturgy was in no way the quasi-hopeful message of those postwar plays. Instead, Albee peopled his American living room with stunning combinations of fathomless cruelty, utter dysfunction, and—as a saving grace—humor. Audiences found his plays shocking, discomfiting, and yet authentic.

Playwrights such as Albee were not necessarily focused on Broadway as an ultimate goal, although from time to time the prize of commercial success was awarded them. Instead, innovative dramatists of the 1960s worked within the established network of regional theaters and off- and off-off-Broadway houses, as well as with a burgeoning number of experimental theater companies. Some of these dramatists also devoted much of their energies to film and television work, which could support their less remunerative live-theater projects. Tennessee Williams's works were welcomed by this alternative matrix, as well as plays by new writers such as ARTHUR KOPIIT, whose Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad revealed its unsettling truths about family on Broadway in 1962; and ISRAEL HOROWITZ, whose The Indian Wants the Bronx gained notice in 1968. Playwright PAUL ZINDEL might be considered typical: his mentor was Albee, and his realistic, semiautobiographical, caustic family drama The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds premiered in Houston's Alley Theatre in 1964, moved to off-Broadway in 1970 and to Broadway in 1971, and then was released as a film in 1972.

In 1967 Joseph Papp's New York Shakespeare Festival found a permanent home in the old Astor Library in the East Village, now renamed the Public Theater, and its first production there was Hair, an upbeat, musical-theater version of the performance methods pioneered by the Living Theatre. The next year Hair moved to Broadway, announcing the arrival of hippie aesthetics, antiwar politics, rock music, and other elements determined to shock and offend mainstream audiences. Papp also produced DAVID RABE's critical dramas about the Vietnam war, such as The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel (1971) and Streamers (1976), but these plays made their weight felt without ever leaving the Public Theater.

Other playwrights expanded or redefined the American family drama in plays whose essence lay in a critique of traditional social norms. JOHN GUARE's House of Blue Leaves (produced off-Broadway in 1971) made a kitchen-sink Queens apartment the site of a profoundly critical satire of American sensibilities and values. MARK MEDOFF's When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder? was an off-Broadway success in 1973; and A. R. GURNEY's Scenes from American Life (1971) was the first of a series of dramatic insights into upper-class American families. WENDY WASSERSTEIN (Any Woman Can't, 1973) and MARSHA NORMAN (Getting Out, 1977) articulated similar concerns from a particularly feminist perspective. TERRENCE McNALLY (The Ritz, 1975) and ALBERT INNAURATO (Gemini, 1977) crafted seriocomic dramas of American life that broached such subjects as homosexuality. Also in the 1970s ROMULUS LINNEY began to explore American history and morality with such plays as Appalachia Sounding (first produced in North Carolina in 1975); and the off-Broadway company Playwrights Horizons produced TED TALLY's Hooters (1978). At the same time, American playwright BERNARD POMERANCE found the London stage more receptive to his often historical dramas, but his Elephant Man, a critique of 19th-century society from the perspective of a hideously deformed man, achieved success both off-Broadway and on Broadway (both in 1979) before making its apparently inevitable transfer to film in 1980.

The heart of off-off-Broadway theater involved what Village Voice critic Michael Smith called "amateur theater done largely by professionals" and "theater with no resources but the most sophisticated audience in America" (introduction to Eight Plays from Off-Off Broadway, 1966). Centered around such producing entities as Ellen Stewart's La MaMa Experimental Theatre Company, the Judson Poets' Theater, the Caffé Cino, and Theatre Genesis, as well as individual theater companies such as the Living Theatre, the Open Theatre, the Performance Group, and Bread and Puppet Theater, off-off-Broadway theater fostered a much more radical critique of traditional theater than even its off-Broadway predecessor had.

Playwrights in the off-off-Broadway environment often worked in a different manner than traditional dramatists. The off-off Broadway playwrights often wrote in collaboration with actors and directors and might be performers in or directors of the plays they wrote. The Open Theatre, for example, supported playwrights Jean-Claude van Itallie (America Hurrah!, 1965), MARIA IRENE FORNES (The Successful Life of Three, 1965), MEGAN TERRY (Viet Rock, 1966), SUSAN YANKOWITZ (Terminal, 1969), and SAM SHEPARD (Nightwalk, 1975). Shepard's works also found support at such downtown theaters as La MaMa and the Judson Poets' Theater and then, depending upon their relative success, moved up the ladder to Broadway or across the country into the regional and local theaters. Dramatists such as LANFORD WILSON, whose portrait of a drag queen, The Madness of Lady Bright, opened at Caffé Cino in 1964, often experimented with far more radical dramaturgy off-off-Broadway than with later works, such as Talley's Folly, which was produced on Broadway in 1978. However, a ribald and shocking play such as ROCHELLE OWENS's Futz, about a farmer's romance with his pig, could start at a Guthrie Theater workshop in 1961, reach La MaMa in 1967, and then move uptown to a respectable off-Broadway theater the following year, more or less intact.

While much of off-off-Broadway was "radical" in its embrace of avant-garde techniques, many theater groups that formed in the 1960s also embraced a politically radical point of view, a part of the American activism that had begun during the civil rights movement and had blossomed into the anti-Vietnam War movement. Judith Malina had learned from Erwin Piscator in the mid-1940s that "the art theatre was always political," and the Living Theatre had itself taken up activist positions almost from its inception in 1947, a stance that only became stronger in the Vietnam War years. On the West Coast the San Francisco Mime Troupe began in 1959 as an attempt to rearticulate the acting style of commedia dell'arte, but its outdoor dramas also became more political during the 1960s, as did those of the Bread and Puppet Theater, founded in New York in 1963, and El Teatro Campesino, the Chicano theater that LUIS VALDEZ formed in 1965 after a short stint with the Mime Troupe. These were simply the best known of scores of POLITICAL THEATER groups across the United States that created dramas that, in addition to their attempts to create good political theater as an alternative to mainstream performance culture, also sought alternative venues (indoors, outdoors, on the streets), economics (pass-the-hat performances and communal living), and techniques (masks, physical theater, puppets).

In African American drama, the 1960s were marked by the Black Theater movement, inspired by the militancy of "Black Power" politics emerging from the civil rights struggle. While A Raisin in the Sun had been an attempt to explain African American middle-class ambitions to white audiences, playwrights such as AMIRI BARAKA and ED BULLINS saw Lorraine Hansberry's efforts to nurture empathy as a form of cultural appeasement that they rejected. Baraka's DUTCHMAN (1964) was a violent condemnation of white racism, featuring a villainous blonde seductress preying on a mild-mannered black man with middle-class aspirations; and Bullins's Goin' a Buffalo (1968) echoed the low-life realism of The Connection by dramatizing the lives of hustlers, prostitutes, and drug dealers in Los Angeles—a different type of American family drama.

ADRIENNE KENNEDY also emerged as an African American playwright in that same early 1960s moment, but she was inspired more by Beckett's abstract minimalism than by the possibilities of aggressive political drama. Her lyrical, surrealistically airy meditations on the meaning of racial and American IDENTITY, such as Funnyhouse of a Negro (1964), inspired audiences at Papp's Public Theater, but exasperated her male contemporaries in the Black Theater movement, who disparaged her apparent lack of interest in activist political theater. In the following decade a dramatist such as NTOZAKE SHANGE could bridge this gap by creating highly successful poetic dance-dramas such as for colored girls who have considered suicide/when the rainbow is enuf (1975), which articulated a feminist view of black women while maintaining a colorful and ultimately affirmative spectacle combining monologue, music, and dance.

The alternative venues and anticommercial pose of off-off-Broadway theater from the 1960s, as well as that period's activist social politics, encouraged the emergence of another aspect of American drama, the open and outright depiction of homosexuality as an essential component of American culture. Of course, homosexuality has always been a central element of theater making, but before the 1960s such homosexual playwrights as Williams, Inge, Bowles, or Albee were silent or circumspect about their sexual orientation and avoided the outright depiction of homosexual characters and society. The gay liberation movement of the late 1960s inspired MART CROWLEY to introduce a gay perspective to realistic American family drama with The Boys in the Band (1968), which brings together a group of homosexual men for a birthday party. Crowley's play (which achieved notable off-Broadway success) involves the same realistic, psychological probing that characterizes dramas by Miller, Inge, Williams, and Hansberry, but it culminates in a revelation that, for the most part, gay men in the United States lead extraordinarily unhappy lives. Crowley's soul-searching pessimism about gay American life was spectacularly contradicted by the emergence off-off-Broadway of "queer theater" (as Stefan Brecht coined the term): a rollicking, carnivalesque satire of everyday morality from the viewpoint of writers and performers who refused to define themselves by the clinically scientific and inherently pejorative appellation "homosexual," but instead used the blunt, gleefully outcast terms "gay" and "queer." Pulling the traditional aesthetics of homosexual performance up from their subculture status, queer theater celebrated drag queens and an outsider's critique of American culture. Dramatist, director, and actor CHARLES LUDLAM was the most successful figure to emerge from this coterie of theater makers, and his Ridiculous Theatrical Company achieved off-Broadway success in its own theater in Greenwich Village with such plays as Camille (1973), featuring Ludlam himself in the title role, his chest hairs peeking out through the décolletage of his ball gown. Off-off-Broadway, HARVEY FIERSTEIN created his Torch Song Trilogy as a comic and sentimental autobiographical saga dealing with the tribulations of gay life in New York. Fierstein himself starred in the Broadway production of Trilogy, which won a Tony Award for best play in 1983.

Perhaps the most radical addition to the aesthetics of post-war American drama was the development of avant-garde performance techniques connected to the dance and visual art worlds. A center for these innovations in the late 1940s was Black Mountain College in North Carolina, where émigré European artists met with open-minded Americans such as John Cage and Merce Cunningham to create multifaceted performances that could not be defined simply as "plays." Cage and Cunningham then migrated to New York, where, especially by means of Cage's classes at the New School, a whole new coterie of theater makers developed what would later be seen as a post-modern performance aesthetic. "Drama" is an inadequate term for what transpired in the rooms of such performance spaces as Greenwich Village's Judson Church, because the pieces were not always predicated on a dialogic text. Even the broader term "theater" seemed inadequate, for many of the developments in this area were music or dance pieces or ritual actions in which the performers simply produced action in front of an audience without embodying a fictitious character.

Within this vibrant downtown environment painter and sculptor Allan Kaprow created his tightly scripted, landmark production 18 Happenings in 6 Parts (1959) in a New York gallery, and other visual artists such as Carolee Schneemann followed suit with such HAPPENINGS as Meat Joy (1964), which brusquely confronted its audiences with female sexuality. The development of a new performance form that by definition lacked the kinds of rules and traditions pertinent to "the Drama" had an obvious appeal to all sorts of artists inspired by avant-garde traditions, and such a group included many who then made particular innovations in American drama, for example, Sam Shepard, Jack Smith (an inventor of queer theater), Peter Schumann (who founded Bread and Puppet Theater), and ROBERT WILSON (who transformed the spectacle aesthetics of the happening back into highbrow proscenium-arch theaters).

Although New York City remained the U.S. center for live theater throughout the second half of the 20th century, the innovations of off-off-Broadway theater from the 1960s onward were mirrored and reinforced by a resurgence of like-minded theaters throughout the country. One could term this a revival of regional theater, although such theaters as the Magic Theatre in San Francisco (begun in 1967) or Chicago's Steppenwolf Theatre Company (founded in 1974) were smaller, more poorly funded organizations than the regional theaters founded in the 1940s and 1950s. But the Magic Theatre nurtured such dramatists as the peripatetic Sam Shepard, who was playwright-in-residence there from 1975 to 1983; while Steppenwolf, part of a vibrant, young Chicago theater scene comprising many different companies and nourishing such playwrights as DAVID MAMET, produced powerful productions of new plays by Shepard, Lanford Wilson, and South African dramatist ATHOL FUGARD.

By the 1980s the actual center for text-based, dialogue-centered drama about realistic characters in realistic situations had long ago shifted from New York to Los Angeles, where dramatists wrote for film and television in various different genres: situation comedies, crime and detective melodramas, action films, docudramas, and biographies, as well as "serious" film and television dramas. This work had even evolved its own body of dramatic theory, epitomized by the work of Robert McKee, whose dramatic formulas (articulated in his popular book Story) amount to a rearticulation of Aristotle's Poetics for commercial film and television.

In the last two decades of the 20th century it was also clear that American drama as a live art form would never reassume the importance for U.S. culture that it had achieved in its 1920s heyday; instead, live drama had settled into a relatively comfortable, stable, and even occasionally profitable existence as a specialized, often rarefied and exclusive art form, supported by regional theaters around the United States and by energetic and committed theater companies and artists who did not necessarily expect to make a living directly from commercial success. In other words, the innovations in dramatic form and play production that had developed in the 1960s and 1970s were now institutionalized and functioned as the paradigms for most American theater. The 1990s renovation of New York City's Times Square into a kind of corporate-sponsored urban theme park helped solidify the ongoing shift of Broadway theater almost exclusively to blockbuster musicals and tried-and-true spectacles, and the appearance of comedies or "serious" dramas there was a cherished anomaly.

Although older dramatists such as Neil Simon and Edward Albee managed to maintain their status as Broadway playwrights during the 1980s and 1990s, the century's most important American playwright, Arthur Miller, could often get his newer works produced only outside the United States, especially in London. Meanwhile, successful younger American dramatists of these years, such as Sam Shepard and David Mamet, depended on the off-Broadway and regional theater network to develop works that did become popular on Broadway. Shepard combined a sure sense of America's violent Wild West past with an absurdist sense of futility to create striking family dramas in which dysfunction was the norm. Mamet's masterful ear for the rhythms of American speech and his own strict sense of well-made playmaking allowed him to create equally searing portraits of American hustlers (of all classes and kinds) and their motives. Highly politicized and openly gay writer TONY KUSHNER also drew upon the off-Broadway and regional theater system to develop Brecht-influenced popular dramas of historical social critique in a particularly American idiom, such as the two-part AIDS epic ANGELS IN AMERICA. All three of these authors were awarded Pulitzer Prizes for their theater work, but their dramas also reached larger audiences when they were shown on film and television. And while these playwrights came to Los Angeles after their work for live theater had already developed, the opposite trajectory was also possible: STEVE TÉSICH, for example, gained attention on Broadway with such plays as Division Street (1980) only after his success as a Hollywood screenwriter. Other playwrights, such as LEE BLESSING, found Broadway success (A Walk in the Woods, 1988) to be an anomaly compared with finding consistent access to off-Broadway and regional theaters.

Other Broadway successes in the 1980s included playwrights whose clear articulation of a woman's point of view drew upon the development of FEMINIST DRAMA in the 1970s. Plays by Marsha Norman (NIGHT MOTHER, 1982), Wasserstein (THE HEIDI CHRONICLES, 1989), BETH HENLEY (Crimes of the Heart, 1981), and TINA HOWE (Coastal Disturbances, 1987), all nurtured off-Broadway and in regional theaters, also had successful Broadway runs. In a similar fashion, openly gay playwrights such as Kushner, Wilson (Talley's Folly, 1980), and CRAIG LUCAS (Prelude to a Kiss, 1992) articulated a specifically gay perspective in their stage works for Broadway, while the venerable Albee became increasingly comfortable in allowing himself to be considered a gay playwright. The emergence of gay-identified playwrights on American stages took on a deeper significance with the arrival of the AIDS epidemic in the early 1980s (which, among thousands of other theater artists, took dramatist Charles Ludlam). Dramatist LARRY KRAMER, a founder of the AIDS activist groups Gay Men's Health Crisis and ACT UP, wrote The Normal Heart (produced off-Broadway at the Public Theater in 1985) as a realistic melodrama about a gay man's struggle to focus attention on the disease in the early years of the epidemic. Kramer's drama initiated a whole genre of "AIDS plays" that reached a popular culmination in the early 1990s when Kushner's Angels in America appeared on Broadway.

In the 1980s off-Broadway theater further solidified its position as the center for live American drama, and off-off-Broadway theater, despite increasingly harsh financial constraints, continued to nourish new plays and playwrights, many of whom were not even interested in making it to Broadway. Further off-center, hundreds of actors, writers, dancers, musicians, and puppeteers used the terms "performance" or "PERFORMANCE ART" to describe the works they developed in such venues as P.S. 122, the Kitchen, and other "performance spaces." In Chicago, San Francisco, Boston, and other American cities the parallel equivalents to these networks also thrived.

The various elements of this increasingly complex landscape of American drama flourished in a symbiotic fashion. Some playwrights, actors, directors, and producers might focus their energies exclusively on one particular area of performance (film, television, Broadway, off-Broadway, off-off-Broadway, or "avant-garde" performance), but others routinely alternated among the various theater worlds. For example, SPALDING GRAY began his professional career in the early 1970s acting in regional theater and then became involved in New York's experimental theater scene, working first with Richard Schechner's Performance Group and next pioneering the development of avant-garde solo performance. Gray's work often took him to Los Angeles, where he worked as a film and television actor and also in popular movie versions of his monologues. This work did not prevent him from also performing on Broadway in such classics as Our Town, but the core of Gray's work continued to be his monologues, which he developed at such alternative venues as P.S. 122 in New York City's East Village.

By the 1980s a new coterie of venues began to emerge: Playwrights Horizons became an anchor of the nonprofit "Theatre Row" section of West 42nd Street in 1971; the Humana Festival was started in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1976; and New York Theatre Workshop began in 1979. These organizations joined now-venerable institutions such as Papp's Public Theater and the various regional theaters to encourage, develop, and produce new plays that above all else eschewed the varieties of American realism that had characterized pre-World War II drama (and that now dominated film and television writing), and instead embraced myriad versions of nonrealistic playwrighting.

A good example of 1980s playwrighting is WALLACE SHAWN, the author of seriocomic dramas such as Aunt Dan and Lemon (1985), whose unnerving depiction of the roots of fascism is mixed into a comedy of manners. Shawn's works were often first produced in London and then mounted in off-Broadway venues such as La MaMa, the Manhattan Theatre Club, or the Public Theater; Aunt Dan and Lemon even reached Broadway in 2003. ELIZABETH EGLOFF's plays appeared at the Humana Festival (The Swan, 1989) and New York Theatre Workshop (The Devils, 1994). Other playwrights who emerged in the 1980s, including ERIC OVERMYER, LEN JENKIN, JON ROBIN BAITZ, JOHN PATRICK SHANLEY, CHARLES MEE, and MAC WELLMAN, found success on off- and off-off-Broadway stages, but hardly ever on Broadway. In 1991 the Signature Theatre was created to devote an entire season to one playwright's works. It focused on plays by Lee Blessing, Horton Foote, Adrienne Kennedy, John Guare, Maria Irene Fornes, Lanford Wilson, and PAULA VOGEL (as well as the better-known Sam Shepard, Arthur Miller, and Edward Albee), thus helping establish a canon of late-century dramatists whose work was visible in the noncommercial theater scene. GEORGE C. WOLFE became director of the New York Public Theater in 1993 and continued its function as a home for substantial new plays by Tony Kushner, DAVID HENRY HWANG, SUZAN-LORI PARKS, Nilo Cruz, and others. As had been the case since the days of Hair and A Chorus Line, the Public Theater was sometimes able to shift its productions to Broadway (including the tap musical Bring in 'Da Noise, Bring in 'Da Funk, directed by Wolfe). The Broadway successes in part helped support the Public Theater's ongoing work, whose central focus remained the development of new American drama-as-art.

The structural stability of off- and off-off-Broadway theater in the 1980s and 1990s was paralleled by the changing nature of particular genres of American drama that had emerged in the 1960s and 1970s: African American, Asian American, Hispanic American, gay, and feminist theater. The 1980s developments of these genres were more complex, less polemical, less overtly political, and more likely to resist taking on the mantle of a particular cause. In other words, the necessity of writing as a hyphenated American dramatist with one particular group in mind was somewhat diminished as “minority” interests were articulated more generally as aspects of mainstream American concerns.

For example, AUGUST WILSON, beginning with his play Jitney (1982), inaugurated a series of realistic dramas about black life in Pittsburgh that folded the politics of the earlier Black Theater movement back into the techniques of realistic American family drama. Although his multidecade play cycle brings to mind Miller’s explorations of midcentury American morality, in fact, Wilson’s work has its closest connections to Henrik Ibsen’s series of social dramas depicting turn-of-the-century Europe, or to ANTON CHEKHOV’s intense evocation of Russian character and society at the same moment. Wilson’s Chekhovian depictions of 20th-century African American life made regular and successful appearances on Broadway throughout the 1980s. Later the radically avant-garde language of Suzan-Lori Parks’s plays was also difficult to pinpoint as African American political theater, and her impressionistic visions of black life, such as Top Dog/Underdog (produced at the Public Theater and then on Broadway in 2002), had more in common with Adrienne Kennedy’s work than with Amiri Baraka’s. Similarly, numerous playwrights with Hispanic roots—Nilo Cruz, JOSÉ RIVERA, MIGDALIA CRUZ, and EDUARDO MACHADO—wrote dramas that articulated a Latino perspective, not with the confrontational politics of such 1960s playwrights as Luis Valdez, but instead in more subtle and nuanced styles, more in line with the similar approach of Valdez’s contemporary Maria Irene Fornes.

The types of theater and performance that in the 1960s had been termed “avant-garde” or “experimental” had, by the 1980s, acquired a certain structural stability that like gay, feminist, and African American theater, was less overtly political and more explicitly concerned with particular theatrical styles developed from 1970s precedents. Thus playwright RICHARD FOREMAN (a surrealist heir of Gertrude Stein) maintained his Ontological-Hysteric Theater at St. Mark’s Church in the Bowery, in New York’s East Village, producing new works annually to general critical acclaim, and the Wooster Group (an outgrowth of Richard Schechner’s late 1960s and early 1970s Performance Group) performed its signature brand of postmodern drama in its own theater in SoHo. PING CHONG, an Asian American performance artist originally associated with director Meredith Monk, directed his own works combining visual art, puppet theater, music, and dance. Similarly, director Robert Wilson, perhaps the most spectacular American theater artist to emerge in the 1970s, continued to direct (and, to some extent, write) his own works, although more often than not for European and Asian theaters instead of American venues. Younger writer-directors, such as Iranian American Reza Abdoh, created theater pieces that deftly incorporated all sorts of stylistic elements of 1970s experiments, although, in Abdoh’s case, these were combined with his own sense of global culture and American popular culture to produce searing critiques of American complacency in the age of AIDS and post-Cold War political violence.

Meanwhile, since Spalding Gray had initiated the genre of avant-garde monologue during his work with the Wooster Group, other artists, such as HOLLY HUGHES, Karen Finley, Paul Zaloom, Eric Bogosian, EVE ENSLER, ANNA DEEVERE SMITH, and Danny Hoch developed their own versions of the form as a new technique of late-century American playwriting.

A source of anxiety for early 20th-century critics of American drama was that the United States, because it was younger and foundationally different from Europe, needed to mature before it could claim that a truly American drama—and a truly artistic drama—existed. What makes American theater different from European dramatic traditions (and, for that matter, most Asian theater traditions) is that by definition the United States has to acknowledge its multiple ethnicity, its multiple cultural influences. And in fact, since the 19th century it has done so, although early on such differences emerged more often as racist stereotypes. The course of 20th-century American drama, and especially American drama from 1940 to the present, shows the gradual and often quite contested development of theater reflecting the United States’ cultural heterogeneity. Ironically, the richness of American theater in these decades—which was noted and admired throughout the world—developed at the same time that live drama itself was overshadowed by mass-media performance, itself an intercultural, global phenomenon. In other words, the flowering of the various aspects of American drama by the end of the century coincided with some fundamental questions about whether live theater was itself relevant to a global culture that seemed to be defined by film, television, and the Internet. And yet, because of its existence as live art, drama persists as one of the few places where ideas, issues, and emotions can be articulated and experienced with unique freedom and spontaneity. From 1940 to the present the strength of American drama as live theater may have diminished economically, but it flowers as art.

FURTHER READING

Atkinson, Brooks. Broadway. New York: Macmillan, 1970.

—. Foreword to New Voices in the American Theatre. New York: Modern Library, 1955.

Brecht, Stefan. Queer Theatre. Frankfurt: Suhrkamp, 1978.

Cordell, Richard A., and Lowell Matson, eds. The Off-Broadway Theatre. New York: Random House, 1959.

Hatch, James V., and Ted Shine, eds. Black Theatre U.S.A.: The Recent Period, 1935–Today. New York: Free Press, 1996.

Orzel, Nick, and Michael Smith, eds. Eight Plays from Off-Off Broadway. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill, 1966.

Sainer, Arthur. The New Radical Theatre Notebook. New York: Applause, 1997.

Ziegler, Joseph. Regional Theatre: The Revolutionary Stage. Minneapolis: Univ. of Minnesota Press, 1973.

John Bell

USIGLI, RODOLFO (1905–1979)

A multitalented author, Rodolfo Usigli is considered the playwright of the Mexican Revolution. He also wrote as a drama critic, historian, essayist, and poet. Usigli was born on November 17, 1905, in Mexico City. As a Rockefeller Foundation scholar at Yale, he studied alongside Xavier Villaurrutia and wrote several plays. He returned to Mexico City to teach at the university and direct the theater of the Ministry of Culture. During the 1930s Usigli was prolific. His political play The President and the Ideal (El presidente y el ideal) was performed in 1935, and State of Secrecy (Estado de secreto) and The Last Door (La última puerta) were performed in 1936. Summer Night (Noche de estío) was performed in 1950. This popular COMEDY used political satire and comic circumstances to expose political corruption.

Psychological drama also identified with the changing Mexican society. The Boy and the Fog (El niño y la niebla) was performed and published in 1951. A son is caught in a parental love triangle after his mother confesses about her lover. Her son then attempts to kill his father. Although the parents resolve their marriage, the son commits suicide. The public was intrigued by the complex characterization, despite the potential for MELODRAMA. Janus Is a Girl (Jano es una muchacha) was performed and published in 1952. Usigli's characterization of an innocent girl forced by circumstances into the underworld of a brothel scandalized the public. The drama criticized the double standard in the commercialization of sex and the stigma associated with women in the sex trade.

Usigli's most important plays were performed long after their writing. The Imposter (El gesticulador) was written in 1938 but not performed until 1947. It is now recognized as his masterpiece and the beginning of the modern era of Mexican theater. The drama overtly condemned corruption that was disintegrating Mexican society from within. It accurately portrayed his colleagues in governmental positions. Political rivals forced his resignation because of his overt criticism. Usigli's dramatic structure and hybrid style gave the play universal appeal. He disapproved of most English translations and international performances during his lifetime. Alejandro Usigli, his son, approved an English translation by Ramón Layera, The Imposter, produced in 1996 at Miami University of Ohio to critical acclaim.

Crown of Shadow (Corona de sombra), part of the CORONA TRILOGY, reinforced Usigli's international renown. His first historical drama of a trilogy explored the complex intermingling of cultures in Mexican society. He defined the plays as antihistorical because he focused on myths of MEXICO's origins and its evolving sense of nationhood rather than historical fact. In the first iconic image that defines Mexico, Emperor Maximilian is executed at the end of French occupation, and the lucid flashbacks of Empress Carlota reinterpret history in retrospect. The political intrigue between warring Mexican idealists, French and Austrian opportunists, and the Vatican has enduring dramatic impact. It was published in 1943 and performed in 1947 concurrently with El gesticulador. Crown of Fire (Corona de fuego) was performed in 1961 and published in 1966. The Spaniard Hernán Cortés and the Aztec Cuauhtémoc clash in the conquest of culture that initiates the saga. Crown of Light (Corona de luz) was published in 1965 and performed in 1969. The Virgin de Guadalupe appeared to the shepherd Juan Diego in this iconic drama.

Usigli intended to create a series of performance projects that would fulfill the project of performing "El gran teatro del Nuevo Mundo," or "the Great Theatre of the New World." Usigli did not complete his project, but his trilogy is the closest series to a more modest achievement of his goal. He died on June 18, 1979. The most important centers for Mexican theater scholarship and research are the Centro de Investigación Teatral Rodolfo Usigli (Rodolfo Usigli Center for Theater Research) in Mexico City and the Rodolfo Usigli Archive in the King Library of Miami University in Oxford, Ohio.

PLAYS: The Impostor (El gesticulador, 1937); Crown of Shadow (Corona de sombra, 1943); Summer Night (Noche de estío, 1950); The Boy and the Fog (El niño y la niebla, 1951); Janus Is a Girl (Jano es una muchacha, 1952); One of these Days (Un día de éstos, 1953); Crown of Fire (Corona de fuego, 1960); Crown of Light (Corona de luz, 1964); The Great Circus of the World (El gran circo del mundo, 1969); The Flores Case (El caso Flores, 1972); Good Morning, Mr. President (Buenos días señor presidente, 1972)

FURTHER READING

- Donahue, Francis. "Toward a Mexican National Theater." Revista/Review Interamericana 19 (Fall–Winter 1989): 29–40.
- Kronick, John W. "Usigli's El gesticulador and the Fiction of Truth." Latin American Theatre Review 11, no. 1 (1977): 5–16.
- Layera, Ramón. Usigli en el teatro: Testimonio de sus contemporáneos, sucesores, y discípulos. Mexico City: UNAM, 1996.
- Perri, Dennis. "The Artistic Unity of Corona de sombra." Latin American Theatre Review 15, no. 1 (1981): 13–19.

Carole Anne Champagne

VALDEZ, LUIS (1940–)

I know that our work reaches into the streets. We attract young people, people who are confronted with rather stark realities. They have to hope for something, man. If they don't have the arts telling them about the essence and meaning of life, offering some kind of exploration of the positive and negative aspects of life, then there is no hope. I was a very angry young man not too many years ago, and I was able to channel that anger into the arts.

—Luis Valdez, 1985

Luis Valdez is a California-based playwright and director whose work is inevitably connected with El Teatro Campesino, the theater group he founded, and with which he initiated contemporary Chicano drama. Born on June 26, 1940, in Delano, California, into a family of Mexican American campesinos (farmworkers), Valdez grew up in the midst of Chicano culture and its continuing traditions of Catholic ritual performance and the aesthetics of popular traveling theater companies that performed in tents (CARPAS).

Valdez studied drama at San Jose State College, where his first full-length play, The Shrunk Head of Pancho Villa, was produced in 1964. Upon graduation in 1965 Valdez briefly joined the San Francisco Mime Troupe, but had already connected with Chicano activist César Chavez and decided to join the emerging farmworkers' movement. "I was a child of the '60s," he later said, "and so in that sense I wanted to change the world. I decided to go back to Delano and try to change this valley that treated Mexicans the way the south treated African Americans. We were fighting for our civil rights, for our humanity, and it seemed to me that using the arts, using humor, using masks, using theatre, was the way to do it."

Valdez started to make short skits, or actos, about campesinos and their struggles. Together with other Chicano performers Valdez created El Teatro Campesino, which began performing throughout central California at union rallies and on the backs of flatbed trucks. Plays such as The Two Faces of the Owner (Las dos caras del patroncito, 1965) or Strikers (Huelguistas, 1970) incorporated masks, commedia-style techniques, and the Chicano traditions of carpa theater, especially its wily trickster servants, or pelados.

In 1967 El Teatro Campesino won a Village Voice Obie Award for "demonstrating the politics of survival." Valdez and his company were considered the voice of the United Farm Workers, although its actos now also dealt with the Vietnam War and Chicano culture in general. El Teatro Campesino separated itself from the United Farm Workers in 1967, and Valdez began to see his role in broader terms, as a playwright of an emerging teatro chicano. Such dramas as I Didn't Get Anything Out of School (No saco nada de la escuela, 1969), while preserving the larger-than-life theatrics of the actos, were broad-based satires about the entire scope of 1960s social and cultural issues—black militancy, "la Raza," white liberals, Ronald Reagan, education, and the ongoing Vietnam War—seen from a Chicano perspective.

In 1971 the company moved to the rural town of San Juan Bautista, and Valdez's plays reflected "greater spirituality." The Dance of the Giants (El baile de los gigantes, 1973) was a ritual performance based on Mayan beliefs and performed in MEXICO among ancient Mayan pyramids. Valdez termed such plays mitos because of their conscious connection to Chicano mythology and beliefs. Elements of the mito aesthetic played a role in The Great Tent of the Underdogs (La gran carpa de los Rasquachis, 1973) and The End of the World (El fin del mundo, 1975), which maintained the simplicity of carpa-style theatrics while incorporating Day of the Dead characters in striking mixtures of COMEDY and dread that analyzed the mid-1970s state of the world. El Teatro Campesino became world-famous through its tours of Europe, and in 1977 The Great Tent of the Underdogs was produced on California public television as The Ballad (El corrido).

Valdez's playwriting took yet another turn when Zoot Suit, his drama about the "Pachuco riots" in Los Angeles during World War II, opened in 1978 at the Mark Taper Forum and then moved to New York City, where it became the first Broadway play by a Chicano playwright, but failed to please critics or find an audience. Valdez began to focus more of his attention on screenwriting and had success with a film version of Zoot Suit (1981); La Bamba (1987), a biography of Chicano rock star Richie Valens; and numerous television specials about Chicano history and culture.

El Teatro Campesino continued its exploration of traditional Latino theater with annual performances of a miracle play, The Virgin of Tepeyac (La Virgen del Tepeyac) and a traditional shepherds' play, The Pastoral (La pastorela) in San Juan Bautista. Valdez wrote an "antimelodrama," Bandit! (Bandido! 1981), and a multimedia satire on the Reagan years, I Don't Have to Show You No Stinking Badges! (1986), but forsook live theater for film, television, and teaching from 1986 to 2000, when he returned to the stage with The Mummified Deer. This was followed by Earthquake Sun (2004), a mystical drama about a 21st-century musician who travels back and forth in time in search of his Chicano roots. Both plays were produced by the San Diego Repertory Theatre and marked Valdez's acceptance as an established American playwright.

[See also Political Theater in the United States;
United States, 1940–Present]

PLAYS: Theft (1961); The Shrunk Head of Pancho Villa (1964); The Two Faces of the Owner (Las dos caras del patroncito, 1965); Three Grapes (1965); The Fifth Season (La quinta temporada, 1966); Dark Root of a

Scream (1967); The Sellouis (Los vendidos, 1967); The Conquest of Mexico (La conquista de Mexico, 1968); Bernabe (1969); The Skull of Tiburcio Vázquez (La Calavera de Tiburcio Vázquez, 1969); The Militants (1969); I Didn't Get Anything Out of School (No saco nada de la escuela, 1969); Strikers (Huelguistas, 1970); Buck Private (Soldado Razo, 1970); Vietnam Peasant (Vietnam Campesino, 1970); The Virgin of Tepeyac (La el Virgen del Tepeyac, 1971); The Great Tent of the Underdogs (La gran carpa de los Rasquachis, 1971); Los olivos pits (1972); The Dance of the Giants (El baile de los gigantes, 1973); Serpentino Thought (Pensamiento serpentino, 1973); The End of the World (El fin del mundo, 1975); Zoot Suit (1978); World (Mundo, a touring version of The End of the World, 1980); Bandit! (Bandido!, 1981); Ballads (Corridos, 1982); I Don't Have to Show You No Stinking Badges! (1986); The Mummified Deer (2000); Earthquake Sun (2004)

FURTHER READING

- Broyles-González, Yolanda. El Teatro Campesino: Theater in the Chicano Movement. Austin: Univ. of Texas Press, 1994.
- Cardenas de-Dwyer, Carlota. "The Development of Chicano Drama and Luis Valdez's Actos." In Modern Chicano Writers: A Collection of Critical Essays, ed. by Joseph Sommers and Tomás Ybarra-Frausto. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1979.
- Elam, Harry J. Taking It to the Streets: The Social Protest Theater of Luis Valdez and Amiri Baraka. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1997.
- Kanellos, Nicolas. "Luis Miguel Valdez." In Dictionary of Literary Biography, vol. 122, Chicano Writers, Second Series, ed. by Francisco Lomelí and Carl R. Shirley. Detroit: Gale Res., 1992.
- Shank, Theodore. American Alternative Theatre. London: Macmillan, 1982.

John Bell

VALLE-INCLÁN, RAMÓN MARÍA DEL (1866–1936)

Ramón María del Valle-Inclán was an enormously popular dramatist, novelist, poet, and journalist most famous for his iconoclastic plays that ridiculed early 20th-century Spanish society. He was born on October 28, 1866, in Villanueva de Arosa in Galicia, SPAIN. In 1886 Ramón del Valle-Peña, which was his actual name, began law school at the University of Santiago de Compostela, but he abandoned his studies in 1890. The restless Valle-Peña spent much of his time reading the works of AVANT-GARDE authors such as Jules Barbey d'Aureville and GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO, who would make a major impact on Valle's work. In 1892 the author changed his name to Valle-Inclán, visited MEXICO and CUBA, and found work as a journalist.

He returned to Galicia in 1893 and complemented his journalistic endeavors with creative writing. Valle-Inclán moved to Madrid in 1896, and on the eve of the premiere of his first play, Ashes (Cenizas, 1899), a scuffle with his colleague Manuel Bueno resulted in a gangrenous wound on Valle's wrist that ultimately required the amputation of his left arm. Valle-Inclán was something of a spectacle himself as he adopted a bohemian appearance replete with a lavish purple cape and a conspicuously long beard.

During the first decade of the 20th century Valle-Inclán's subject matter was quite varied: a series of semiautobiographical novellas (Sonatas, 1902–1905) described the adventures of a Galician Don Juan, his Flower of Sainthood (Flor de santidad, 1904) dealt with peasants and religious pilgrims in Galicia, and The Carlist War (La Guerra Carlista, 1908–1909) dealt with the vicious civil war in Spain during the 1830s. Beginning with The Dragon's Head (La cabeza del dragón, 1910), Valle-Inclán gravitated toward FARCES and a literary genre called esperpento (grotesques), characterized by acid-tongued satire and the use of physically distorted characters to ridicule Spanish institutions. Valle-Inclán insisted that the 19th-century Spanish painter Francisco Goya was the founder of esperpento, and that he was aiming to put on stage what Goya illustrated.

The finest example of esperpento came with Valle-Inclán's signature play, BOHEMIAN LIGHTS (Luces de Bohemia, 1920), a fifteen-scene drama that details the funeral and last moments of the life of Max Estrella. Estrella—a character based on Alejandro Sawa, a contemporary of Valle—is a poet blinded by syphilis who struggles to gain literary recognition, only to be lied to, exploited, despised, and ultimately robbed as he lies drunk and dying on a Madrid street. Bohemian Lights illustrates life's absurdity, as well as that of men whose existence is an everyday struggle between practicality and idealism. With the declaration of the Second Spanish Republic in 1931 Valle-Inclán was named director of the Museum of Aranjuez, which was the traditional palace of the royal family driven into exile. Two years later he was named director of the Spanish Academy of Fine Arts in Rome, a post he was forced to abandon when a fatal blood disease led him back to his native Galicia, where he died on January 5, 1936, in the town of Santiago de Compostela.

PLAYS: Ashes (Cenizas, 1899); Dream Tragedy (Tragedia de ensueño, 1903); Dream Play (Comedia de ensueño, 1905); El Marqués de Bardomín (1906); The Heraldic Eagle (Águila de blasón, 1907); Ballad of the Wolves (Romance de lobos, 1908); The Dragon's Head (La cabeza del dragón, 1909); April Tale (Cuento de Abril, 1910); Epic Voices (Voces de gesta, 1911); La Duquesa Rosalinda (1912); The Bewitched (El embrujado, 1913); Divine Words (Divinas palabras, 1920); Farce and Licentiousness of the Noble Queen (Farsa y licencia de la reina castiza, 1920); Bohemian Lights (Luces de Bohemia, 1920); The Cuckolding of Don Friolera (Los cuernos de don Friolera, 1921); Silver Face (Cara de plata, 1922); The Dead Man's Best Suit (Las galas del difunto, 1924); Ligazón (1926); The Captain's Daughter (La hija del capitán, 1927); Paper Rose (La rosa de papel, 1927); Sacrilege (Sacrilegio, 1927)

FURTHER READING

- Lima, Robert. Valle-Inclán: The Theatre of His Life. Columbia: Univ. of Missouri Press, 1988.
- Valle-Inclán, Ramón María de. Lights of Bohemia (Luces de bohemia). Tr. by John Lyon. Warminster: Aris & Phillips, 1993.

Zahareas, Anthony N., ed. Ramón del Valle-Inclán: An Appraisal of His Life and Works. New York: Las Americas, 1968.

Enrique A. Sanabria

LE VALSE DES TORÉADORS See THE WALTZ OF THE TOREADORS

VAN DRUTEN, JOHN (1901–1957)

John Van Druten was born in London, ENGLAND, on June 1, 1901, to English parents of Dutch extraction. His lifelong ability to create strong roles for women can be discerned in his first playwrighting effort at age seven, when he created a slim script about Mary, Queen of Scots. Despite Van Druten's talent, however, his father discouraged his interest in a career he saw as financially insecure, and Van Druten instead studied law, qualifying as a solicitor of the Supreme Court Judicature in 1923. He became a lecturer of legal history at the University College of Wales in Aberystwyth, but continued to pursue writing for the theater as his true vocation. His play Young Woodley, produced in 1925 in London, gave him hope of ending his teaching career, but his story of a sensitive adolescent was banned for what was considered its daring depiction of the dark side of the British public school system. Fortunately, the play was successfully produced in the UNITED STATES in 1926, and, responding to the stateside recognition, Van Druten established residence in America in the same year, becoming a citizen in 1944. Van Druten soon moved to California to write screenplays for Hollywood movies, but the New York theater remained a major part of his life. In 1943 he enjoyed his greatest success there with THE VOICE OF THE TURTLE, a play considered daring for its time because of its celebratory depiction of a short-lived love affair between a young soldier and a free-spirited actress.

Van Druten's identity as both a gay man and a talented writer led to his becoming part of a circle of gay writers living in California gathered around British expatriate writer CHRISTOPHER ISHERWOOD. He adapted Isherwood's Berlin Stories into the play I Am a Camera (1951), which later became the basis for the musical Cabaret in 1966. I Am a Camera, featuring the quirky Sally Bowles, once again demonstrated Van Druten's gift for creating strong, near-magical female characters, a propensity that reached its apotheosis in Bell, Book, and Candle (1950), which centered on a powerful witch living secretly in the modern world.

Although noted for his polished and sophisticated romantic COMEDIES, Van Druten had a reflective spiritual side to his identity. He developed a strong interest in Christian Science and later joined the Vedanta Society. Although his plays were grounded in a realistic and even comfortably domestic context, his spiritual inclinations always enriched his work with a SUBTEXT of wonder and romance. In 1956 he developed heart problems and died on December 19, 1957, in Indio, California.

[See also Gay and Lesbian Drama]

SELECT PLAYS: Young Woodley (1925); Leave Her to Heaven (1940); Old Acquaintance (1940); The Voice of the Turtle (1943); I Remember Mama (1944); The Mermaids Singing (1946); The Druid Circle (1947); Make Way for Lucia (1949); Bell, Book, and Candle (1950); I Am a Camera (1951)

FURTHER READING

Isherwood, Christopher. Lost Years: A Memoir, 1945–1951. Ed. by Katherine Bucknell. New York: HarperCollins, 2000.

Mann, William J. Behind the Screen: How Gays and Lesbians Shaped Hollywood, 1910–1969. New York: Viking, 2001.

Van Druten, John. Playwright at Work. New York: Harper, 1953.

Margaret Boe Birns

VÅR ÆRE OG VÅR MAKT See OUR POWER AND OUR GLORY

VAUTHIER, JEAN (1910–1992)

Jean Vauthier (born in Grâce-Berleur, BELGIUM) arrived on the French theater scene to great praise for his early plays, essentially tumultuous monologues, in which he sought, he said, to re-create the linguistic and intellectual energy of the English Elizabethan stage. Later in his career Vauthier sustained his reputation through the translation of foreign classics.

The first play to bring him major attention was Captain Bada in 1952. An emblematic portrait of the artist's creative struggle, it is also a stock battle of the sexes, carried out by Bada and Alice, whose frantic three-act coexistence in a sealed apartment corresponds to courtship, marriage, and old age together. We learn that Bada has "almost" written 18,000 pages, though we are never told of what. In a virtual monologue he vaunts himself to Alice as the quintessential artist; she is his perpetual servant, co-actor, and audience. "I am creation, creation itself made man!" he shouts. The pair's interactions swing from tenderness to abuse, and the playwright intends their relationship to be a sublime roller-coaster for the audience.

Vauthier returns to the same theme in The Fighting Personage; or, Very Loud (Le personnage combattant, ou, Fortissimo), produced in 1956. At the start of its forty-two "sequences" a bourgeois traveler takes a room in a seedy hotel, seeking inspiration to rewrite a novel begun in that very room years ago. He struggles with self-doubt in his long quasi-monologue, interrupted from time to time by hotel noises and a gruff bellboy. The situation is more naturalistic than that of Bada, but still Vauthier signals his dramaturgical insecurity by resorting, in his published text, to six levels of STAGE DIRECTIONS. These include paragraphs introducing each dialogued sequence, prose summaries for the sequences without dialogue, notes in two font sizes placed within the dialogue, marginal notes in vertical columns, and footnotes. There is little hierarchy of information among these six levels, and such directions do not guide production as much as they insist on meanings that cannot be inferred from the dialogue itself.

Vauthier was perhaps right to be insecure. Only two years later, in 1958, SAMUEL BECKETT would handle the issue of an artist's waning creativity and regrets in KRAPP'S LAST TAPE, a play that is much more powerful because it is much more laconic.

Vauthier's translations have lived longer than his original works. In 1952, the same year as Captain Bada, Vauthier's version of Niccolò Machiavelli's Mandragola was produced by Gérard Philipe, the actor whose charisma had first inspired Vauthier to write for the stage. Though the production was considered a failure, Vauthier continued to translate. His versions of William Shakespeare, Christopher Marlowe, and Lucius Annaeus Seneca were highly regarded and gave him a new way of bringing Elizabethan energy to the French stage. BERNARD-MARIE KOLTÈS said that seeing Maria Casarès perform in Vauthier's translation of Seneca's Medea shocked him into becoming a playwright. Though Vauthier's own verbose DRAMATURGY would lose out in midcentury to Beckett's concision, the legacy of Vauthier's monologues would reappear in Bernard-Marie Koltès through works such as The Night Just Before the Forest (La nuit juste avant la forêt).

PLAYS: The Impromptu of Arras (L'impromptu d'Arras, 1951); Captain Bada (Capitaine Bada, 1952); The Fighting Personage; or, Very Loud (Le personnage combattant, ou, Fortissimo, 1956); The Marvels (Les prodiges, 1959); The Dreamer (Le rêveur, 1961); The Depths (Les abysses, screenplay, 1963); More of Bada (Badadesques, 1965); translation of Seneca's Medea (1967); Blood (Le sang, 1970); translation of Marlowe's The Massacre at Paris (1972); translation of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (1973); Your Name in Clouds of Fire, Elizabeth (Ton nom dans le feu des nuées, Elisabeth, 1977); translation of Shakespeare's Othello (1979); translation of Shakespeare's King Lear (1984)

FURTHER READING

- Beigbeder, Marc. Le théâtre en France depuis la libération. Paris: Bordas, 1959.
- Guicharnaud, Jacques, with June Guicharnaud. Modern French Theatre from Giraudoux to Genet. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1967.
- Pronko, Leonard Cabell. Avant-Garde: The Experimental Theater in France. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1962.

David Pelizzari

VENEZUELA

Historic MELODRAMAS based on the epic events of the independence wars (1810–1830), family FARGES, the ideals of personal freedom, and the burlesque were the themes that shaped Venezuelan drama between 1860 and 1900. The autocratic but progressivist government of Antonio Guzmán Blanco (1870–1888) transformed Caracas from a colonial into a modern city. He considered theater as an indispensable activity in modern society and in 1876 built the first opera house. During his period 120 new plays were staged, including Briceño Picón's Aguirre, the Tyrannous (El tirano Aguirre, 1872), Heraclio Martín de la Guardia's

Building on Sand (Fabricar sobre arena, 1873), Nicanor Bolet Peraza's Let Them Eat Cake (A falta de pan buenas son tortas, 1873), Manuel Dagnino's Home Angel (El ángel del hogar, 1874), José Antonio Arévalo Beluche's The Boor and the Coquette (El palurdo y la coqueta, 1875), Aníbal Dominici's A Woman's Honor (La honra de la mujer, 1880), and Vicente Fortoul's Twenty Thousand Pesos for a Fan (Veinte mil pesos por un abanico, 1880). In the 19th century women were represented by Carmen Brigué's Alone (Sola, 1894), Virginia Gil de Hermoso's Freedom (Libertad, 1895), and Margarita Agustini's Comic Toy (Juguete cómico, 1895).

The 20th century brought economic and social changes due to the country's transformation from an agrarian into an oil society. In this process drama disregarded romantic and melodramatic models and favored more contemporary approaches to life: social realism in Rómulo Gallegos's The Motor (El motor, 1910) and The Year's Miracle (El milagro del año, 1915), grotesque epic in Julio Planchart's Cain's Republic (La república de Caín, 1915), and SURREALISM in Arturo Uslar Pietri's E. Utreja (1927) and The Key (La llave, 1928). However, the dictatorships of Cipriano Castro (1899–1908) and Juan Vicente Gómez (1908–1936) censored plays with political or sexual content. Until 1916 the simple family life and the sanctification of poverty were the dominant topics in Manuel A. Díez's Perfect Shot (Tiro seguro, 1910) and Three Social Tableaus (Poverty, Well-Being, and Wealth) (Tres cromos sociales [Pobreza, Bienestar, Riqueza], 1916), Simón Barceló's Cinderella (La cenicienta, 1907) and Christmas Tale (Cuento de navidad, 1909), and Salustio González Rincones's Dawn (El alba, 1909). Costumbrismo (a genre dealing with local custom) and NATURALISM merged in Rafael Benavides Ponce's The Arrival of Spring (El retorno de la primavera, 1912), Julio Rosales's Untraceable Path (La senda inhallable, 1912), and Angel Fuenmayor's Customary Love (El amor de siempre, 1914). Farcical COMEDIES proved to be the most popular genre in Rafael Ginand's The Break (El rompimiento, 1919) and I Am Also a Candidate (Yo también soy candidato, 1939), Leoncio Martínez's An Unexpected Mulatto Child (El salto atrás, 1925), and Leopoldo Ayala Michelena's Corroded Souls (Almas descarnadas, 1921), The Box Office (La taquilla, 1922), and Bagasse (Bagazo, 1934).

The clash between the urban and the rural that dominated Venezuelan drama until 1958 was first introduced in Andrés Eloy Blanco's The Christ of the Violets (El Cristo de las violetas, 1925). Other significant plays with a similar subject were Víctor Manuel Rivas's The Foundation (El puntal, 1933), Pablo Domínguez's Tremor (Tremedal, 1933), Guillermo Maneses's Nieves Marmol's Husband (El marido de Nieves Mármol, 1940), and Eduardo Calcaño's The Negative Pole (El polo negativo, 1942).

César Rengifo is considered the pioneer of Venezuelan modern drama because of the diversity of his themes and his use of innovative linguistic and dramatic models. In plays such as Curayú (1947), Joaquina Sánchez (1948), and Manuelote (1950) he combined the vernacular speech of the masses with philosophical reflections on the meaning of life. In works such as Yuma (1940), The Canaries (Los canarios, 1949), and Armors of Smoke (Armaduras de humor, 1951) Rengifo wittily portrayed the conflicts of the nascent urban middle class.

The arrival of Spanish director Alberto de Paz y Mateos (1945), Mexican actor Jesús Gómez Obregón (1947), and Argentine actress Juana Sujo (1949) introduced modern theater pedagogy in Venezuela. Gómez Obregón brought the KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY method and the modern American theater. Sujo, with Carlos Márquez, founded the Venezuelan Theater Society, and Paz y Mateos taught the basics of experimental theater. Their teaching influenced Ramón Díaz Sánchez's The House (La casa, 1955), Ida Gramcko's Belén Silveira (1952), and María Lionza (1957), Elizabeth Schön's Interval (Intervalo, 1957), and Román Chabaud's The Adolescents (Los adolescentes, 1952), Horizontal Walls (Muros horizontales, 1953), and Cain Adolescent (Caín adolescente, 1955).

The overthrow of Marcos Pérez Jiménez (1952–1958) inaugurated an era of democratic changes reflected in César Rengifo's Rope of Fog (Soga de niebla, 1958) and Román Chabaud's Requiem for an Eclipse (Réquiem para un eclipse, 1958). Democracy witnessed the emergence of a new society and of original playwrights who portrayed contemporary realities without political and moral restraints. Román Chabaud wrote about the underworld and the marginal urban community in Sacred and Obscene (Sagrado y obsceno, 1961), Coffee and Orchids (Café y orquídeas, 1962), The Burning of Judas (La quema de Judas, 1964), The Terrible Angels (Los ángeles terribles, 1967), and The Smoking Fish (El pez que fuma, 1968). Isaac Chocrón depicted the young urban middle class in Monica and the Florentine (Mónica y el florentino, 1959), Ferocious Animals (Animales feroces, 1963), Asia and the Far East (Asia y el lejano oriente, 1966), and Okey (1968). José Ignacio Cabrujas delved into the ideological imperfections of the political system in Juan Francisco de León (1959), The Rebels (Los insurgentes, 1960), The Strange Voyage of Simon the Wicked (El extraño viaje de Simón el malo, 1962), and Fiésole (1967). Chabaud, Chocrón, and Cabrujas founded El Nuevo Grupo (1967–1988), which staged the works of more than thirty new Venezuelan playwrights and brought to audiences the best of modern world drama. Women playwrights were represented by Elizabeth Schön's Melisa and the Self (Melisa y el yo, 1961) and The Village (La aldea, 1966) and Elisa Lerner's The Intelligent Belle (La bella de inteligencia, 1960) and Manhattan's Vast Silence (El vasto silencio de Manhattan, 1964).

The 1970s brought stagings of spectacles with an elaborate mise-en-scène by Argentinean director Carlos Giménez. In 1971 he founded Rajatabla with his version of Luis Britto García's Your Venezuela (Venezuela tuya, 1971), followed by his interpretation of Rómulo Gallegos's novel Reddish Lances (Las lanzas coloradas, 1974) and Mariela Romero's The Game (El juego, 1976). Rodolfo Santana portrayed the violent contradictions between tradition and modernity during the oil boom under Carlos Andrés Pérez's government (1974–1979) in End of the Round (Fin de round, 1974), The Firm Forgives a Moment of Madness (La empresa perdona un momento de locura, 1975), Tales of the Slums (Historias de cerro arriba, 1975), Thanks for the Favors (Gracias por los favores recibidos, 1977), and The Model Jail

Chronicles (Crónicas de la cárcel modelo, 1978), whereas Edilio Peña wrote an introspective and existential theater in Resistance (Resistencia, 1973), The Circle (El círculo, 1975), and The Birds Go Away with Death (Los pájaros se van con la muerte, 1978).

The 1980s saw the rise of collective and experimental theater in Marco Antonio Eteddgui's Screams (Gritos, 1980), Javier Vidal's Salomé (1981), José Simón Escalona's Jav y Jos (1986), and Xiomara Moreno's White Pearl with Senorita's Ring (Perlita blanca con sortija de señorita, 1986). Also, there was a surge of powerful feminist works in Carlota Martínez's My God Have Her in Heaven (Que Dios la tenga en su gloria, 1983), Thais Erminy's Whisky & Cocaína (1984), and Blanca Strepponi and Teotiste Gallegos's Final Stroke (Última recta final, 1989).

In the 1990s urgent topics took center stage: AIDS in Johnny Gavlovski's Man (Hombre, 1990) and Habitant at the End of Time (Habitante del fin de los tiempos, 1996), Elio Palencia's Single Room for a Lonely Man (Habitación independiente para hombre solo, 1990), Isaac Chocrón's Written and Sealed (Escrito y sellado, 1993), David Osorio Lovera's The Decade's Last Brunch (El último brunch de la década, 1993), Maritza Palencia's AIDS and Genesis (El sida y el génesis, 1993), Aminta de Lara's End of the Century (Fin de siglo, 1996), and Marcos Purroy's Fingers/Dedos de goma (1997); urban sexual and political violence in Román Chabaud's Mother-of-Pearl Vesicle (Vesícula de nácar, 1992), Gustavo Ott's I Never Said I Was a Good Girl (Nunca dije que era una niña buena, 1992) and Pornographic Heart (Corazón pornográfico, 1994), Néstor Caballero's Maladranzas (1995), and Rodolfo Santana's Encounter in a Dangerous Park (Encuentro en el parque peligroso, 1996); women's intimate experiences in Fausto Verdial's Don't Call Me Mad! (¡Que no me llamen local!, 1995), Basilio Alvarez's Puttanesca Sunday (Domingo a la puttanesca, 1996), and Mónica Montañés's The Applause Goes Inside (El aplauso va por dentro, 1996); and democracy's corruption in José Gabriel Núñez's Mrs. Matos's Unbelievable Funeral (El insólito funeral de la señora Matos, 1993) and Mariela Romero's The Return of King Lear (El regreso del rey Lear, 1996).

Recent playwrights have favored introspective works dealing with loneliness, loss, friendship, parenthood, and the dehumanization of society in Toti Vollmer's Open Secret (Secreto a voces, 2000), José Tomás Angola's Folks in Bed (Los seres sobre las camas, 2001), Orlando Urdaneta's Men Getting a Divorce? (¿Divorciarme yo?, 2002), and Gerardo Blanco's A Citizen Called Teacher (Un ciudadano llamado maestro, 2003). However, the course that Venezuelan theater will take in the new millennium is yet to be seen.

FURTHER READING

Azaparren Giménez, Leonardo. Documentos para la historia del teatro en Venezuela: Siglos XVI, XVII, XVIII [Documents for Venezuela's theater history: 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries]. Caracas: Monte Avila, 1996.

—. El teatro en Venezuela: Ensayos históricos [Venezuelan theater: Historical essays]. Caracas: Alfadil, 1997.

- Moreno Uribe, Edgard Antonio. Teatro 93: Apuntes para su historia en Venezuela [Theater 93: Notes for its history in Venezuela]. Caracas: Vadell Hermanos, 1994.
- . Teatro 98: Apuntes para su historia en Venezuela. Caracas: Kairos, 1998.
- Varderi, Alejandro, Juan Calzadilla, and Elsa Flores, eds. Ettdedgui: Arte-información para la comunidad. [Ettdedgui: Art Information for the Community]. Caracas: Oxígeno, 1985.

Alejandro Varderi

VERDECCHIA, GUILLERMO (1962–)

This is the border zone and your papers are not in order.

—Fronteras Americanas, 1993

Playwright, director, translator, and actor Guillermo Verdecchia was born in Buenos Aires, ARGENTINA, in 1962. His family immigrated to CANADA and settled in southern Ontario. After a brief period studying at Ryerson University, Verdecchia began a successful career in theater. His plays, films, and radio pieces have been seen and heard across Canada, often to critical acclaim.

Verdecchia has taught playwriting and acting at the University of Guelph and Brock University (2001–2003) and was writer-in-residence at Memorial University of Newfoundland in 1999. In August 1999 he was appointed artistic director of Toronto's Cahoots Theatre Project, whose mission is the creation, development, promotion, and production of new Canadian theatrical works reflecting the country's ethnic and cultural diversity.

Verdecchia's work has won numerous accolades. These include Outstanding Theatre for Young Audience awards—a Dora Mavor Moore for i.d. (1989) and a Jessie for directing Dennis Foon's War (1995); Chalmers Canadian Play Awards for i.d. (1990), The Noam Chomsky Lectures (1992), Fronteras Americanas: American Borders (1993), and A Line in the Sand (1997); a place on the Governor General's Award shortlist for Chomsky, with an Award for Drama going to Fronteras; and numerous jury prizes at international film festivals.

A major element of Verdecchia's early works, particularly Fronteras Americanas, is an autobiographical element—the presence of the author within the work. In Fronteras several characters—including “Verdecchia” himself—all played by a single actor, describe revisiting their Argentinean homeland. The confrontation between cultures creates the central tension of the piece. Later works deal with an array of real and fictional characters projected onto the stage, forcing the audience to navigate its way through a series of challenges to the basic assumptions of Western culture.

For Verdecchia, the playwright is part detective, part oracle, part herald. The writer serves the community as one who reveals its hidden truths, the stories buried under “official versions” of events. His plays challenge the audience, confronting it with the cultural hypocrisies and contradictions of contemporary society. The theater, in his mind, should reflect Canada's cultural and ethnic diversity to accurately reflect the world.

To call his theater inherently political is not entirely accurate. Rather, his work deals with issues of culture, IDENTITY, home, and the conception of self as a global citizen. His work is highly critical of our media-saturated society. He writes on political issues, but rather than try to make the audience merely sympathize, he also tries to show how Western society is implicated in these issues.

For Verdecchia, political and personal identity are uncertain, and what he calls “totalizing myths”—stories we tell ourselves about ourselves and then apply to all people, everywhere—are bunk. Instead, he embraces the idea of identity as indeterminacy and process. His plays deal with shifting borders and transitions, the representation of minorities within the larger society, and the constant search for home.

SELECT PLAYS: i.d. (1989); Final Decisions (War) (1990); The Noam Chomsky Lectures (1991); Fronteras Americanas: American Borders (1993); Twenty Steps to the Promised Land (originally Lo que cala son los filos by Mauricio Jiménez) (1994); True Lies (1995); A Line in the Sand (1997); Truth; or, The Terrible but Incomplete Journals of John D. (1997); Insomnia (1999)

FURTHER READING

- Benson, Eugene, and L. W. Conolly. English-Canadian Theatre. Perspectives on Canadian Culture. Toronto: Oxford Univ. Press, 1987.
- Berry, J. W., and J. A. Laponce, eds. Ethnicity and Culture in Canada: The Research Landscape. Toronto: Univ. of Toronto Press, 1994.
- Bowering, George, ed. And Other Stories. Vancouver: Talonbooks, 2001.
- Burnet, Jean, and Howard Palmer. Coming Canadians: An Introduction to a History of Canada's Peoples. Toronto: McClelland & Stewart, 1988.
- Francis, Daniel. National Dreams: Myth, Memory, and Canadian History. Vancouver: Arsenal Pulp Press, 1997.
- Verdecchia, Guillermo. Citizen Sudrez. Toronto: Talonbooks, 1998.
- Vogt, Gordon. Critical Stages: Canadian Theatre in Crisis. Ottawa: Oberon Press, 1998.

Daniel Goldberg

VERGA, GIOVANNI (1840–1922)

Giovanni Verga, born in Catania, ITALY, in 1840, is the foremost representative of Italian verismo and a major Italian literary figure of the 19th century. Although he is known and valued primarily for his novels, especially Malavoglia (1881) and Mastro-don Gesualdo (1889), and for his short stories, he wrote several plays, most of them adaptations of his short stories. Rustic Chivalry (Cavalleria rusticana) and The She-Wolf (La lupa) are the best known. Rustic Chivalry, set in Sicily and dealing with love, jealousy, infidelity, betrayal, and honor, premiered in Turin in 1884 with Eleonora Duse in the role of Santuzza and was an instant success, although it was destined for greater fame as an opera composed by Pietro Mascagni. The She-Wolf, a two-act play also set in Sicily, premiered in Turin in 1896. Like Rustic Chivalry, it is a drama in the veristic vein that rationalizes, as Luigi Ferrante notes in Verga: La vita, il pensiero, i testi esemplari (Verga The Life, the Thought, the Exemplary Texts), ancient myths of blood and love. Both plays lack the dramatic intensity of the short stories. In play form Rustic Chivalry focuses on Santuzza's pain and her revenge for having been wronged by Turiddu, while in the short story the violation of the sanctity of the family hearth by Turiddu's affair with the married Lola is a transgression that cannot go unpunished. In The She-Wolf Pina is no longer the central figure, and her passion for her son-in-law, central throughout the story, becomes a bland love affair secondary to ritual renderings, more imaginary than real, of folkloristic Sicilian peasant life made up of dances on the threshing floor and religious processions. In both plays Verga adjusts his plot to an urbane northern Italian audience uninterested in the customs and impulsiveness of the primitive Sicilian types that Verga the novelist holds dear.

Before these dramas, probably during the period 1873–1875, Verga wrote Fading Roses (Rose caduche), a three-act play reflective of the late romantic literary vein that attracted Verga before he turned his attention to verismo. This play deals with the mundane infatuations, gallantries, and duels associated with the self-indulgent high society of the time, for whom love is nothing more than a game, while intelligence and art are looked at cynically. In 1885 Verga adapted his short story "Il canarino del N. 15" into a two-act drama, In the Porter's Lodge (In portineria), which premiered in Milan and in which Verga relies on his observations of that city's suffering poor. What's Yours Is Mine (Dal tuo al mio), staged for the first time in Milan in 1903 and later published as a novel, concludes Verga's theatrical production. In this three-act play, perhaps his most innovative, Verga's focus is on progress and on the inevitable changes it brings as it favors some in society at the expense of others. The fall of Barone Navarra's family and the terrible condition of those who work in his sulfur mine are counterbalanced by the success of the modern-day entrepreneur, Mr. Rametta, a shrewd businessman who secures his wealth by exploiting without scruples. In this he finds an ally in Luciano, who, in his desire to climb the social ladder, marries the baron's daughter and takes up arms against the mine workers, for whom he had been their spokesperson in the past, who have staged a strike for better wages and improved living conditions.

Two other pieces, sketches rather than actual plays and with no documented performances, are The Wolf Hunt (Caccia al lupo) and The Fox Hunt (Caccia alla volpe).

SELECT PLAYS: Fading Roses (Rose caduche, 1873?); Rustic Chivalry (Cavalleria Rusticana, 1884); In the Porter's Lodge (In portineria, 1885); The She-Wolf (La Lupa, 1886); The Fox Hunt (Caccia alla volpe, 1901); The Wolf Hunt (La caccia al lupo, 1902); From Yours to Mine (Dal tuo al mio, 1903)

FURTHER READING

- Alexander, Alfred. Giovanni Verga. A Great Writer and His World. London: Grant & Cutler, 1972.
- Amatangelo, Susan. Figuring Women: A Thematic Study of Giovanni Verga's Female Character. Madison, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 2004.
- Bergin, Thomas Goddard. Giovanni Verga. New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1931.
- Ferrante, Luigi. Verga: La vita, il pensiero, i testi esemplari [Verga: The Life, the Thought, the Exemplary Texts]. Milan: Accademia, 1972.
- Lucente, Gregory. "The Ideology of Form in Verga's La Lupa: Realism, Myth and the Passion of Control." In The Narrative of Realism and Myth. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Univ. Press, 1979. 54–94.
- Sansone, Matteo. "Verga, Puccini and La Lupa." Italian Studies 44 (1989): 65–76.

Nicholas Patruno

VESTIDO DE NOIVA See WEDDING GOWN

VIANNA FILHO ("VIANINHA"), ODUVALDO (1936–1974)

Oduvaldo Vianna Filho was the son of a well-known author of COMEDIES of the 1920s and 1930s. Vianinha, as he was called, was the leading voice of the politically engaged generation of dramatists of the 1960s and early 1970s in BRAZIL.

His main concern was investigating the country's social problems from the point of view of the Brazilian working class. This could not be done within the framework of conventional drama, and as a consequence he turned to the development of EPIC techniques, which allowed him to transcend the realm of individual conflicts and to focus on collective matters. The works of BERTOLT BRECHT and ERWIN PISCATOR were particularly influential in this respect.

Having grown up in a politically militant family, Vianinha was always extremely concerned with the discussion of the social role of culture. Theater, for him, was not only an instrument of artistic pleasure, but also a tool for the transformation of reality.

During his career he participated in theater groups directly involved in the renovation of the Brazilian drama of the day, such as the ARENA THEATER OF SÃO PAULO (Teatro de Arena de São Paulo, 1955–1960), the Centro Popular de Cultura da União Nacional dos Estudantes, organized after the production of his play The Surplus Value Is Going to Finish, Mr. Edgar (A mais-valia vai acabar, seu Edgar, 1960–1964), and the Opinião (1965–1967).

He started his career as a dramatist at the Arena Theater, where he also worked as an actor. His first play, Chapetuba Football Club (Chapetuba Futebol Clube, 1959), a realistic investigation of the political interests involved in a soccer championship, was welcomed by both the critics and the audience.

In 1960 he decided to leave the Arena, where the work was inevitably aimed at middle-class audiences. His intention of reaching proletarian spectators motivated him to join the organization of the street-theater department of Centro Popular de Cultura, where he participated in the collective creation of many political sketches dealing with the most crucial themes taken from the political debate. He also dedicated a series of three full-length plays, written between 1961 and 1963, to these themes: Brazil Brazilian Version (Brasil versão brasileira, 1962), Four Pieces of Land (Quatro quadras de terra, 1963) and The Azeredos and the Benevides (Os Azeredo mais os Benevides, 1963).

With the military dictatorship, implanted in 1964, and with a federal act promulgated in 1968 exacerbating censorship to an unprecedented level, Vianinha was forced to return to professional theater. All of the plays he wrote from this period on deal with the problems of middle-class intellectuals crucially divided between individualism and political consciousness.

Vianinha's most mature and well-developed plays include Besieged Young Man (Moço em Estado de sítio, 1965), If You Run Away, the Beast Catches You, If You Stay, the Beast Eats You Up (Se correr o bicho pega, se ficar o bicho come, 1965), The Law Is Hard, for Your Hair, Use Only Gumex (Dura lex sed lex no cabelo só Gumex, 1967), Dictator Highirte (Papa Highirte, 1968), Our Life in the Family (Nossa vida em família, 1972) and BREAK THE HEART (Rasga coração, 1974), considered his masterpiece.

He was also a talented author of television scripts, having written several television plays and the extremely successful television series A grande família. He died of lung cancer in 1974 at the age of thirty-seven. Many years were to pass until many of his plays, banned by the censorship, could finally be staged.

SELECT PLAYS: Chapetuba Football Club (Chapetuba Futebol Clube, 1959); The Surplus Value Is Going to Finish, Mr. Edgar (A mais-valia vai acabar, Seu Edgar, 1960); The Act of the 99% (O Auto dos 99%, 1962); Brazil Brazilian Version (Brasil versão brasileira, 1962); The Azeredos and the Benevides (Os Azeredo mais os Benevides, 1963); "Opinion" (Show) (Show Opinião, 1964); Besieged Young Man (Moço em estado de sítio, 1965); If You Run Away, the Beast Catches You, If You Stay, the Beast Eats You Up (Se correr o bicho pega, se ficar o bicho come, 1965); Hand in Glove (Mão na luva, 1966); The Law Is Hard, for Your Hair, Use Only Gumex (Dura lex sed, lex, no cabelo só Gumex [revue], 1967); Dictator Highirte (Papa Highirte, 1968); Christal's Long Night (A longa noite de Cristal, 1969); Inner Struggle (Corpo a corpo [monologue], 1970); Frenzied Allegro (Allegro desbum, 1972); Mom, Dad Is Turning Purple (Mamãe, Papai está ficando roxo, 1973); Break the Heart (Rasga coração, 1974)

FURTHER READING

Betti, Maria Silvia. Oduvaldo Vianna Filho. São Paulo: EDUSP, 1997.
Damasceno, Leslie. Cultural Space and Theatrical Conventions in the Works of Oduvaldo Vianna Filho. Detroit: Wayne State Univ. Press, 1996.
Guimarães, Carmelinda. Um ato de resistência: O teatro de Oduvaldo Vianna Filho [An Act of Resistance: The Theater of Oduvaldo Vianna Filho]. São Paulo: MG Editores, 1984.

Moraes, Dênis de. Vianinha, cúmplice da paixão: Uma biografia de Oduvaldo Vianna Filho [Vianinha, An Accomplice of Passion: A Biography of Oduvaldo Vianna Filho]. Rev. ed. Rio de Janeiro: Record, 2000.

Patriota, Rosângela. Vianinha: Um dramaturgo no coração de seu tempo [Vianinha: A Playwright in the Heart of His Own Age]. São Paulo: Hucitec, 1999.

Vianna, Deocélia. Companheiros de viagem [Travel Companions]. São Paulo: Brasiliense, 1984.

Maria Sílvia Betti

VIETNAM

The major stylized Vietnamese theaters are tuong or hat boi, a court form related to Chinese-style opera; cai luong (reformed song-and-dance theater) of the south; cheo, a folk opera of the northern region; and mua roi nuoc (water puppetry). These traditional genres continued to evolve in the 20th century.

Tuong was still a vital force in the early 20th century. The Trung Queens by Phan Boi Chau and Tong Phuoc Pho, which showed legendary women warriors defending Vietnam against Chinese imperialism, was among the most popular anticolonial scripts in the 1920s. Though tuong continues to be performed in northern and central Vietnam, it is considered old-fashioned by contemporary Vietnamese audiences. However, tuong companies are beginning to update productions to make them more appealing. Recent tuong productions in Hanoi have included an adaptation of William Shakespeare's Othello and a six-scene tuong variety show with English supertitles.

Cai luong was an attempt to modify hat boi for modern life. It began around 1916 with Bui Kiem's Failure at the Exams by the music group of Tong Huu Dinh. Infused with singing and MELODRAMA, it was popular in the south until the 1970s. Today the older generation attends annual festivals, but companies struggle to capture the younger audience. Repertoire has ranged from the 19th-century classical Tale of Kieu, which tells of a long-suffering courtesan, to cloak-and-dagger-type episodes of the 1930 and 1940s and contemporary tales. The Suburbanite (1980) by Minh Khoa shows a man who denies the Vietcong to save his daughter. He exonerates himself by leading the Vietcong to the American post. The story dealt with an issue for southern audiences—collaboration with Americans during the war.

Cheo's agrarian roots endeared it to northern audiences throughout the 19th and 20th centuries. Its proletarian potential gained the support of the Marxist government from the 1950s on. Traditional stories include Thi Kinh, the Goddess of Mercy (Quan Am Thi Kinh), the melodrama of a cast-out wife who disguises herself as a monk and raises a child she is accused of fathering. Modern scripts, such as Return to the Barracks (Duron va tran dia) by Tao Mat and Hoai Giao, are set in the 1970s war: a soldier is tested for loyalty by a militia woman.

Water puppetry (mua roi nuoc), a village art of the Red River area until the 1980s, has been reworked at the well-appointed Thang Long Theatre in Hanoi. Episodes evoke nostalgia for the agrarian life of the past and point to national pride at defeating foreign aggressors.

Kich noi is the spoken drama of Vietnam. Developed in the early 20th century as part of the New Poetry movement, it remains most popular in the north. Its textual emphasis contrasts with the traditional theater's use of music, song, and stylized movement. Flowering in the 1920s, it sought to emulate European models. Kich noi can be seen as undergoing three periods: the first is emulation of French models (1907–1920), in which both form and content are European; the second period is characterized by a self-reflexive but politically impotent critique of middle-class colonial life (1920–1945); the third period is linked to Vietnamese independence (1953–) after World War II and is characterized by a politically charged theater that ranges in content from revolutionary to propagandistic.

Vietnamese artists began by exploring Western models. Molière's Miser was staged in 1907, and other European translations followed. In 1920 To Gian, an author for Indochina Magazine, wrote Who Was That Killer? (Ai giet nguoi), and Pham Ngoc Khoi quickly followed with Being Choosy Turns Out Bad (Gia ken ken hom), which portrays a girl who abandons a good-hearted medical student to pursue a Westernized lover. Forced into prostitution, she is treated for venereal disease by the young doctor. Westernization bodes ill for those who embrace it.

A Cup of Poison (Chen thuoc doc, 1921) by Vu Dinh Long (1896–1960), presented at the Hanoi Grand Theatre, was the first fully developed play. A man is given to gambling; his wife and mother dabble in sorcery; and his unmarried sister is pregnant. He resolves to escape this degenerate life by drinking poison, but a sibling's financial assistance saves him. In this and other plays, such as Tribunal of Conscience (Toa an luong, 1923) and New Women (Dan ba moi, 1944), Vu Dinh Long probes the middle-class life of the colonial period and espouses a return to Confucian ethics. Another author who took up this theme was Vi Huyen Dac (1899–1976), who wrote twenty plays. In Money (Kim tien, 1938) an impoverished writer whose success in business brings no happiness contemplates the corrosive effect of wealth on family. One of the most successful plays of the colonial period was Nam Xuong's The Annamite Frenchman (Ong tay An-nam, 1931), which satirized francophile Vietnamese in a mode reminiscent of Molière's Bourgeois Gentleman.

Nguyen Huy Tuong (1912–1960) continued contemplation of Vietnamese life. But where characters of the colonial period seem trapped and passive, now we start to see politically active heroes altering their situation. Vu Nhu To (1943), a historical play, shows an architect who is forced to choose between self and service to the nation. Bac Son Village (1945) shows an evil French collaborator being slain by villagers after he kills his wife and her father. This writing anticipates independence.

From the 1950s through the 1970s, revolutionary themes and exemplary interpretations of history abounded. Training schools were established. Through Soviet and Eastern-bloc exchanges performers gained a strong base in KONSTANTIN STANISLAVSKY technique and Brechtian aesthetics. In 1952 director Thu Lu (1907–) and Nguyen Xuan Khoa founded the Central Spoken Drama Troupe, which remains a major company. SOCIALIST REALISM became the major artistic mode. Tahm Tam's Blood-Stained Banner was a paean to “those who have died for the red and gold.” State-supported troupes communicated the message of the revolutionary government to the masses.

With the withdrawal of the U.S. military and the fall of Saigon in 1975, the painful rebuilding began. Southern intellectuals underwent “reeducation,” but by the 1980s the doi moi (renovation) policy was opening the door to the Western bloc. Plays such as Seaside Summer (Mua he o bien, 1985) by Xuan Trinh expanded theatrical content. This play explored the contradictions between the old and the emerging generation. One of the most prolific writers of the postwar period was Luu Quang Vu, who created over thirty plays between 1981 and 1991. Truong Ba's Spirit in a Butcher's Body (Hon Truong Ba da hang thit, 1985) shows a gentle gardener who dies because of the carelessness of the gods and is reborn in a coarse butcher's body. The play deals with inefficiencies of the bureaucracy and the clash between traditional and modern values.

Though experimental work has emerged, theme and content remain circumspect. Whereas the modern drama in much of Southeast Asia is an openly political theater, attacking government and addressing the ravages of modern life, the theater of Vietnam follows a Marxist model. Theater is a didactic tool for inspiring people to ideologically and socially correct behavior.

FURTHER READING

Dinh Quang et al. Vietnamese Theater. Hanoi: Gioi, 1999.

Foley, Kathy. “The Metonymy of Art: Vietnamese Water Puppets.” TDR (Winter 2001).

Foley, Kathy, and Krishen Jit. “Vietnam.” In The Cambridge Guide to Asian Theatre, ed. by James Brandon. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1993. 245–251.

Mackerras, Colin. “Theatre in Vietnam.” Asian Theatre Journal 4, no. 1 (1987).

Nguyen Huy Hong and Tran Trung Chinh. Vietnamese Traditional Water Puppetry. Hanoi: Gioi, 1996.

Viet Chung et al. “Vietnamese Modern Theatre.” Vietnamese Studies 17, 87 (1987): 7–16.

Kathy Foley

A VIEW FROM THE BRIDGE

The one-act version of ARTHUR MILLER's A View from the Bridge opened on a double bill with A Memory of Two Mondays at the Coronet Theatre on September 29, 1955, where it played for 149 performances. A year later Miller reworked it as a play in two acts for Peter Brook's production in London. There was, as often with Miller's plays in the early 1950s, a swirl of extratheatrical conjecture about the climate in which it was produced. Miller had broken with his old friend Elia Kazan, the director of his first Broadway successes, because Kazan had testified as a friendly witness before the House Un-American Activities Committee, naming names that were already known to the committee. ERIC BENTLEY, reviewing the first production and the published play in the New Republic, assumed that View was an answer to Kazan's film On the Waterfront (1954), the latter proving that informing is good, the former that it is bad. Such a reading reduces the play to pettishness, but the gossip was so prevalent that Miller wrote a letter to the New York Post, protesting a remark in Murray Kempton's column and insisting that his play "is not about a political informer. When I write a play about a political informer he will be called a political informer." Still, it is a play about an informer, and plays—even Arthur Miller's plays—have been known to deal in analogies. More important, it is a play about a man in deep distress and fatal confusion. That was obvious in 1965 when an OFF-BROADWAY production, focusing on Eddie Carbone, ran for almost two years.

Carbone is unusual among early Miller protagonists, for he is a man who accepts the rules and prejudices of his society, an Italian neighborhood in Brooklyn, and dies because he violates them. Early in the play, warning his niece Catherine to be close-mouthed about the illegal immigrants who are coming to live with them, he indicates his approval of the violent punishment a neighboring family visited on a boy who "snitched to the Immigration." By the end of the play, "passion that had moved into his body, like a stranger," as the ponderously pretentious narrator Alfieri says, leads him to become an informer. It is obvious from the beginning that Eddie's protective behavior toward his niece is unvoiced and unvoiceable sexual passion, and when she falls in love with Rodolpho, one of the illegals, he decides to remove the young man. His decision is so hedged with rationalization that he is never conscious of his motivation. Incapable of putting a label on his incestuous love for Catherine and his homosexual attraction to Rodolpho, he becomes an informer. Unable to accept that lesser label, he cries out "gimme my name" and rushes into a knife fight with Rodolpho's brother, asking for a lie that will let him live or, failing that, for death.

In 1999 Miller and Arnold Weinstein wrote the libretto for William Bolcom's opera version of View, a very effective work that indicated that what some critics in 1955 saw as melodramatic was, in fact, operatic.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Miller, Arthur. The Theater Essays of Arthur Miller. Ed. by Robert A.

Martin. New York: Viking, 1978.

———. Timebends: A Life. New York: Grove, 1987.

Weales, Gerald. "Arthur Miller and the 1950s." Michigan Quarterly Review 37 (Fall 1998): 635–651.

Gerald Weales

VILDANDEN See THE WILD DUCK

VINAVER, MICHEL (1927–)

Considered by many to be FRANCE's greatest living playwright, Michel Vinaver (pseudonym for Michel Grinberg) was born in Paris in 1927 to parents of Russian Jewish origin. During World War II they fled to the UNITED STATES, where in 1947 Vinaver received his bachelor's degree in English from Wesleyan University. Upon his subsequent return to France, Vinaver began a dual career as an author and businessman, writing plays while pursuing a career with the Gillette Corporation. Vinaver eventually became chief executive officer of Gillette Belgium, Gillette France, and Gillette's affiliate DuPont until 1979, when he quit business to focus exclusively on writing and teaching.

Vinaver's hallmark is his teasing, compelling, and exquisitely structured dramatic poetry. With his contemporaries, French playwrights ARMAND GATTI and ARTHUR ADAMOV, Vinaver shares an obsession with the dramatic potential of quotidian or "banal" dialogue and situations. Vinaver's mature style features seemingly desultory snippets of quotidian speech devoid of punctuation. Together these snippets form a continuous, rhythmic whole. The lack of punctuation unsettles the initial impression of NATURALISM, leaving the impression that a given character's words have no end point, no referent, that they signify nothing other than that character's own perceptions.

Vinaver demonstrates an extraordinarily full vision of postindustrial daily life, portraying Western society's alternating shock at and acceptance of its own reality. This dynamic is particularly French, and in it Vinaver perfectly captures the ongoing crisis of French national IDENTITY. His characters manifest both complacency and fortitude in their desperate attempts to navigate the tenuous separation between the marketplace and the home, the cultural mainstream and the fringe, the institutional narrative and the private experience. The result is an abstracted, musical form of tragicomic REALISM.

In Overboard (Par-dessus bord, produced 1969) the fate of French industry is symbolized by the debate of French toilet-paper executives as to whether the act of defecation is work or pleasure. In High Places (L'Ordinaire, produced 1981), American executives crash-land in the Andes and obsessively continue boardroom meetings while being forced to eat each other for survival. Such split purposes become less funny in Vinaver's more recent plays, Portrait of a Woman (Portrait d'Une Femme, produced 1984) and The Television Program (L'Emission de télévision, produced 1991). The institutional rapaciousness of the judicial, entertainment, and journalistic establishments separates individuals from their private experience of TRAGEDY, transforming it into facile fables for public consumption. This action becomes even sadder as the individuals themselves begin to subscribe to the public versions of their own lives.

Though some commentators have argued otherwise, Vinaver maintains that he is not a "political" playwright and that his work has no "message." He acknowledges being influenced by BERTOLT BRECHT's focus on contemporary society, but stronger influences may be found in the impressionism of ANTON CHEKHOV, which Vinaver has developed to a pointillist extreme; in the discontinuities of T. S. ELIOT's poetry; or in the recombinant Goldberg Variations of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Although such influential directors as Roger Planchon, Jacques Lasalle, and Alain Françon have staged Vinaver's plays, they have seen relatively few major productions because of their formal challenges. Vinaver remains extraordinarily active, continuing to publish new plays.

[See also Tragicomedy]

SELECT PLAYS (WITH DATES OF PUBLICATION): The Koreans (Les Coréens, 1956); The Ushers (Les Huisseries, 1958); Iphigenia Hotel (Iphigénie Hotel, 1960); The Interview (La demande d'emploi, 1972); Overboard (Par-dessus bord, 1969); Dissident, It Goes Without Saying, (Dissident, il va sans dire, 1976); Nina, That's Something Else (Nina, c'est autre chose, 1978); Works and Days (Les travaux et les jours, 1979); Falling Over Backwards (A la renverse, 1980); High Places (L'Ordinaire, 1981); The Neighbors (Les Voisins, 1986); Portrait of a Woman (Portrait d'Une Femme, 1984); The Last Shock (Le Dernier sursaut, 1990); The Television Program (L'Emission de télévision, 1991); King (1999); September 11, 2001 (11 Septembre 2001, performed 2002); The objecter (dramatic version of his novel L'Objecteur, 2003)

FURTHER READING

- Bradby, David. The Theater of Michel Vinaver. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 1993.
- Carmody, Jim. "'A Certain Music': Françon Revisits Vinaver's Les Voisins." TheatreForum 22 (Winter/Spring 2003): 75–84.
- Elstob, Kevin. The Plays of Michel Vinaver: Political Theatre in France. New York: P. Lang, 1992.
- Lester, Gideon. "Industrial Art: The Theater of Michel Vinaver." Theater 28.1 (1997) 69–73.
- Ubersfeld, Anne. Vinaver dramaturge. Paris: Librairie Théâtrale, 1989.

Scott Horstein

THE VIRGIN'S MASK

The Virgin's Mask (Shōjo kamen) is a Japanese drama by KARA JŪRŌ that won the prestigious Kishida Kunio Drama Prize. It is arguably his best play and incorporates most of the social, political, and theatrical elements that Kara concerned himself with in the 1960s, when JAPAN's theater was a leading force in the arts and society. Socially, Kara felt that Japanese traditions and culture were hollowed out through slavish imitation of the West. This was not a new concern, but was perhaps felt acutely because of Japan's loss in World War II. At the same time, Kara and other leftists feared that politically Japan would return to militarism, a fear embodied in the government's push to renew the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty. Theatrically, Kara was trying to engage the audience through song and dance, elements inspired by kabuki, and by privileging the body of the actor.

The play centers around the efforts of a faded star from the all-female TAKARAZUKA REVUE COMPANY, Kasugano Yachiyo, to recover her popularity as Heathcliff in Wuthering Heights, which she toured to Manchuria at the height of the Japanese Empire. Kasugano now runs an underground coffee shop called the Body. To preserve her youth, Kasugano bathes daily in tears shed years ago by her virginal fans. Kasugano has been underground since the war and is ignorant of society's rapid modernization, or the subway construction headed straight for the Body. Inside, a ventriloquist and his dummy wage a debate about who has the right to speak for whom. As the ventriloquist dies of throat cancer, replicas take over for him and the dummy. Periodically an office worker, thirsting for what he cannot get from the scorched earth and barren modernization aboveground, rushes in begging for water. When the headwaiter of the Body kills the office worker, blood pours from the spigot that once gave water.

Into the Body come the aspiring actress Kai (Seashell) and her grandmother. Kai wonders if she has what it takes to be a "Zuka" (Takarazuka) girl, but perseveres on reassurances from her grandmother. After Kasugano casts Kai to play Catherine to her Heathcliff, the grandmother goes off to sell her dried cuttlefish.

The biggest stars of the Takarazuka Revue are the actors of male roles such as Kasugano. As with all-male kabuki, the cross-gender role-playing in Takarazuka has a characteristic eroticism. In The Virgin's Mask cross-gender eroticism was doubled in a later production when Kara played the role of Kasugano, a woman who plays men. That redoubling is one of the ways questions of the body are raised. The Body is buried and is conflated with the body of Catherine that Kasugano/Heathcliff wants to dig up and devour to make their flesh one. There are echoes of the Body as the "national body" (kokutai), a rallying cry during the war. Kara made the "privileged body" the center of his performance work, and questions of what "body" means infuse the play. The biggest question is whether or not the youthful Kai will become a replica of the "virginal" Kasugano, and what will happen to the "body" of Japanese culture and society.

FURTHER READING

- Goodman, David. Japanese Drama and Culture in the 1960's: The Return of the Gods. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1988.
- Ortolani, Benito. The Japanese Theatre: From Shamanistic Ritual to Contemporary Pluralism. Rev. ed. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Univ. Press, 1995.

Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Change and Continuity. London: Japan Library, 2002.

Rolf, Robert T., and John K. Gillespie, eds. Alternative Japanese Drama: Ten Plays. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1992.

John D. Swain

VISHNEVYI SAD See THE CHERRY ORCHARD

THE VISIT OF THE OLD LADY

The world made me a whore. Now I'll make it into a brothel.

—Claire Zachanassian, Act 3

In FRIEDRICH DÜRRENMATT's The Visit of the Old Lady (Der Besuch der alten Dame, 1956) Kläri Wäscher, banished and branded a prostitute by the self-righteous burghers forty years earlier, has returned to her Swiss village Gullen as Claire Zachanassian, the richest woman in the world. The townspeople live in poverty, and Claire offers them a billion francs if they will kill Alfred Ill, the man who had caused her misery by impregnating her and bribing witnesses at his paternity trial. The town's initial solidarity with Ill dissolves gradually but perceptibly as the people, acting in the belief that Claire is only testing them, spend extravagantly and amass large debts. However, Claire is already in control of the town, having secretly bought and closed down all the industry. Trapped and hopelessly in debt, the people must kill their beloved neighbor. Two plot lines intersect: the damnation of a collective (Gullen) and the salvation of an individual (Ill). The townspeople spend most of the play in denial as greed wrestles with their humanistic ideals. Cognizant of the people's intentions before they are, Ill attempts to escape, but is anchored by his guilty conscience. Gradually he defeats his fears and dies a sacrificial death to atone for the misery he has caused. Ill becomes the scapegoat for the town, which bears a collective guilt in the injustice done to Claire. The townspeople, speaking in the style of a classical Greek chorus, close the play with a self-congratulatory encomium to virtue and possessions.

The sacrificial death and numerous biblical allusions have led scholars to suggest that The Visit of the Old Lady is a passion play. It is, in fact, a secular anti-passion play in which the sacrifice brings about the material prosperity but spiritual death of a community. It also has characteristics of a modern morality play in the tradition of Everyman, because all of Ill's friends and even his family abandon him in his greatest need. Dürrenmatt places the concept of justice under the closest scrutiny. Though her motivation is revenge, Claire insists upon calling it justice. Her manipulation of language allows the residents of Gullen to rationalize the deed and commit it with a collective clear conscience. This is the lower form of justice Dürrenmatt defines as resulting from guilt: justice that can be demanded and is therefore corruptible. The higher form, insight into guilt, can only be accomplished by the guilty. In judging himself guilty and offering atonement, Ill joins the ranks of Dürrenmatt's courageous individuals who restore the moral order within themselves while proving unable to effect the same change in society.

Premiering in Zürich on January 29, 1956, with Therese Giese in the role of Claire, The Visit of the Old Lady was Dürrenmatt's first international success. In 1958 Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne starred in Maurice Valency's Broadway adaptation, which won the New York Drama Critics' Award the following year. Twentieth Century Fox filmed the story in 1964, starring Ingrid Bergman and Anthony Quinn, and in 1971 Gottfried von Einem premiered his operatic version in Vienna. The Visit of the Old Lady remains Dürrenmatt's best-known and most quoted play.

[See also Germany]

FURTHER READING

Crockett, Roger A. Understanding Friedrich Dürrenmatt. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1998.

Dufresne, Nicole. "Violent Homecoming: Liminality, Ritual and Renewal in The Visit." In Play Dürrenmatt, ed. by Moshe Lazar and Ron Gottesman. Malibu: Undena, 1983. 39–53.

Jenny, Urs. Dürrenmatt: A Study of His Plays. Tr. by Keith Hamnett and Hugh Rorrison. London: Eyre Methuen, 1978.

Peppard, Murray. Friedrich Dürrenmatt. New York: Twayne, 1969.

Tiusanen, Timo. Dürrenmatt: A Study in Plays, Prose, Theory. Princeton: Princeton Univ. Press, 1977.

Whitton, Kenneth. The Theatre of Friedrich Dürrenmatt: A Study in the Possibility of Freedom. London: O. Wolff, 1980.

Roger A. Crockett

VITRAC, ROGER (1899–1952)

Roger Vitrac was perhaps the most accomplished playwright to employ surrealist principles in his writing. His dramatic oeuvre spans twenty-five years and sixteen plays, including works that embody SURREALISM and DADAISM and prefigure ABSURDISM. He was born on November 17, 1899, in Pinsac, FRANCE. He shared the general artistic spirit of the early 20th-century AVANT-GARDE: irreverence, a sharp wit, and an urgent need to disrupt the status quo. Vitrac enthusiastically greeted the arrival of the Dada movement in Paris in 1921. Having served in World War I, he grasped the importance of laying bare the ingrained patterns of language and thought that led to individual passivity. His early works, tentatively grouped together under the label "incendiary theater," relish dadaist principles of surprise, biting satire, humor, and a subversion of popular forms and attempt to change the nature of the relationship between the spectator and the stage.

Vitrac followed surrealism when it succeeded Dada, obeying his desire to explore the realm of dreams, automatic writing, and love. Born the year before Sigmund Freud's The Interpretation of Dreams was published, Vitrac grew up immersed in the possibilities that explorations of the unconscious unlocked. His plays merge interior and exterior reality within spaces that inextricably interweave spoken and scenic languages. Vitrac dubbed his first produced play, The Mysteries of Love (Les Mystères de l'Amour, 1923), "a surrealist drama," and its style—obeying dream logic and using intensely poetic images and dialogue—closely resembles that of automatic writing, in which the pen flows with the author's unedited thoughts. The tragicomic Victor; or, The Children Take Power (Victor ou les Enfants au pouvoir, 1928), exploits the banality of bourgeois existence by creating a COLLAGE of denunciatory clichés voiced by an ultra-precocious child. Its fantastically exaggerated drawing-room characters and subversion of everyday language anticipate the plays of EUGÈNE IONESCO and other absurdist.

Vitrac founded the Théâtre ALFRED JARRY in 1926 with Robert Aron and ANTONIN ARTAUD (for which Artaud directed the premieres of The Mysteries of Love and Victor), a theater intent upon channeling the disruptive force of Jarry's Ubu roi the King. A 1926 manifesto established their goal to create a theater that would "satisfy the most extreme demands of the imagination and the spirit." They met with little public support, and their efforts to sustain the theater concluded in 1930 with an essay (accompanied by a photo collage of them being dismembered) titled "The Alfred Jarry Theater and Public Hostility." Much of this "hostility" came from the now-estranged surrealists, who interrupted the theater's performances on several occasions on the grounds that theater was a commercial venture antithetical to a true spirit of revolution. This break, intensified by the surrealists' ideological shift to communism, embodies the uneasy relationship between artistic experiment and revolutionary politics that was being tested across Europe at the time. Vitrac believed in revolution but remained situated in the realm of the creative arts. His plays were not well known until JEAN ANOUILH directed a revival of Victor in 1962 to great critical success. A playwright whose works embody the almost impossible theatrical ideals of the surrealists, as well as pave the way for absurdist drama, Vitrac is an important dramatic innovator of early modernism. He died on June 22, 1952, in Paris.

PLAYS: The Painter (Le peintre, 1921); Free Admission (Entrée libre, 1922); Mademoiselle Piège (1922); Monuments (1922); Poison (1922); The Mysteries of Love (Les mystères de l'amour, 1923); Victor; or, The Children Take Power (Victor, ou, Les enfants au pouvoir, 1928); The Ephemeral (L'éphémère, 1929); The Coup of Trafalgar (Le coup de Trafalgar, 1930); The Ladies of the Open Sea (Les demoiselles du large, 1933); The Werewolf (Le loup-garou, 1934); The Hawker (Le camelot, 1936); The Brawl (La bagarre, 1938); Médor (1939); The Sword of My Father (Le sabre de mon père, 1945–1950); The Condemned (Le condamné, 1951)

FURTHER READING

Béhar, Henri. Vitrac: Théâtre ouvert sur le rêve [Theater open on the dream]. Lausanne: L'Age d'Homme, 1993.
Knapp, Bettina. French Theatre, 1918–1939. London: Macmillan, 1985.
Matthews, J. H. Theatre in Dada and Surrealism. Syracuse, N.Y.: Syracuse Univ. Press, 1974.

Kimberly Jannarone

VLAST' T'MY See THE POWER OF DARKNESS

VOADEN, HERMAN (1903–1991)

Modern Canadian drama emerged from the debate—waged both in playwriting and polemic—between Herman Voaden and MERRILL DENISON (1893–1975). Denison introduced realist modernism to DRAMATURGY in CANADA with his volume of plays aptly titled The Unheroic North (1923). Voaden's response was both thematic and aesthetic: to create a wholly Canadian image of a "heroic north" by means of antirealist writing and stagecraft. In doing so, he became one of the first champions of "the Idea of North," which has been a central theme of Canadian art throughout the late 20th century, including such artists as Glenn Gould and Margaret Atwood and critics such as Northrop Frye. Voaden's influence on Canadian dramaturgy continued after World War II in his work as an advocate of government funding for the arts in Canada, including time spent as head of the Canadian Arts Council (1945–1948) and the Canadian Conference of the Arts (1966–1968).

Voaden was born in London, Ontario, on January 19, 1903. His primary influence was EXPRESSIONISM, most particularly the works of EUGENE O'NEILL in the 1920s, the subject of Voaden's master's thesis. The staging ideas of Edward Gordon Craig and Adalphe Appia were an additional influence, as were German plays such as ERNST TOLLER's Masses and Man. He studied playwriting at Yale with GEORGE PIERCE BAKER (who had also taught O'Neill) and modern dance in GERMANY with Kurt Jooss, the pioneer of Tanzteater, most famous for his antiwar ballet The Green Room.

Perhaps the strongest influence on the shape of his writing, however, was the Group of Seven, Canadian landscape painters who took the wild north shore of Lake Superior as their subject. Voaden attempted to make the landscape of western Ontario an active character in his plays. Toward this purpose, he created a style he called "symphonic expressionism," synthesizing the spoken word, music, lighting, dance, and choric speech (Voaden's work can be compared with that of U.S. playwright PAUL GREEN, who was creating what he called "symphonic drama," set outdoors and also combining all aspects of art, at the same time). The first major work in this style was Symphony, a work without words for orchestra and corps de ballet, co-written on a cross-country train journey with Loren Warriner, a young painter and protégé of the Group of Seven.

Although Symphony was never performed, Voaden succeeded in producing many of his plays between the late 1920s and 1942. These were produced first in Sarnia and later at Toronto's Central High School of Commerce, where Voaden was chair of the English Department until his retirement in 1964. These plays, including Earth Song, Hill-Land, Murder Pattern, and Ascend as the Sun, were generally well received by critics at the time. Their texts include very thorough STAGE DIRECTIONS on the quality of lighting used, choreography, and music: for example, Earth Song specifies precisely what sections (and recording) of Brahms's First Symphony are to be used at that time.

After Ascend as the Sun, however, playwriting and production became a secondary concern for Voaden. The demands of World War II intervened, and after the war Voaden's focus shifted to the campaign for government support for the arts. This shift, combined with the common feeling that Canadian work held second-class status to work from New York or London, and Voaden's self-confessed failure to publicize his own work to a larger (especially U.S.) critical audience, had the result that his plays disappeared from public consciousness until the 1970s, when he was rediscovered as a model for Canadian writers: for instance, Murder Pattern (1936), now considered his most important work, was not published until 1975.

Voaden's role as a leader in the development of Canadian drama also comes from his development of "the Sarnia Idea." A national drama could not wait for the development of a national professional theater, Voaden felt. Drawing on the inspiration of innovators such as ANDRÉ ANTOINE in Paris and J. T. Grein in London, he created a system for amateur production of plays using professional standards. He also created a "performance-based" system for teaching drama in secondary schools that was adopted nationwide in Canada. After Voaden's death in June 1991 in Toronto, his estate established the Herman Voaden National Playwriting Competition.

Voaden's critical reputation is based on his theatrical strength rather than the literary quality of his work. Like most symbolist and expressionist verse, Voaden's often feels overblown to a modern ear; and the multidisciplinary structure of the works requires great visual and aural imagination on the part of the reader. Their performative force, however, is apparent in the production photos, and the 1987 revival of Murder Pattern was heralded as "an important event in [Canadian] literary history (Grace, 1987)." Murder Pattern has received numerous revivals in Canada in the years since. Although Voaden felt that he had left no influence behind, his work is commonly considered an important early expression of the Idea of North, and in theater he has been seen as a precursor to writers such as JAMES REANEY, whose trilogy The Donnellys is often compared with Murder Pattern. His influence is also felt in the multimedia, imagistic theater that has arisen in Canada, especially Quebec, since the 1980s, such as the work of Robert Lepage. Gilles Maheu of Carbone-14 cites Voaden as a direct inspiration for his company's work.

PLAYS: The White Kingdom (1928); Northern Storm (1929); Northern Song (1930); Symphony (1930); Fragment (1931); Western Wolf (1931); Wilderness (1931; revised as Rocks, 1932); Earth Song (1932); Hill-Land (1933); Murder Pattern (1936); Maria Chandelaine (1937); Ascend as the Sun (1942); The Miracle of the Valley of Dry Bones (ballet scenario, 1942); Masque of the Red Death (1943); The Prodigal Son (libretto, 1944); Decision (1945); Election Report (1945); Esther (libretto, written in 1948, premiered in 1952); Dead and Gone, Lady (1954); Emily Carr (1958, premiered in 1962); The Poor Journey to Their City (1971)

FURTHER READING

Grace, Sherrill. "Herman Voaden's Murder Pattern: 1936 and 1987."

Canadian Drama 13., no. 1 (1987): 117–119.

Wagner, Anton, ed. A Vision of Canada: Herman Voaden's Dramatic Works, 1928–1945. Toronto: Simon & Pierre, 1993.

Walter Bilderback

VOGEL, PAULA (1951–)

I want to seduce the audience. If they can go along for the ride they wouldn't ordinarily take . . . then they might see highly charged political issues in a new and unexpected way.

—Paula Vogel, quoted in Steven Drukman's "A Playwright on the Edge," New York Times (March 16, 1997)

A playwright celebrated for her unconventional approach to controversial issues, Paula Vogel began writing in the 1970s. However, it was only with the success of her twenty-second play, THE BALTIMORE WALTZ (1992), that Vogel became recognized as a major figure in American theater.

Vogel was born on December 16, 1951, in Washington, D.C., into a working-class family. Her childhood was marred by her parents' divorce and the subsequent absence of a father whom she came to know only in adulthood, at the time when her older brother Carl was dying of AIDS. Vogel is a feminist and lesbian, and her personal experiences have led her to tackle subjects in her plays ranging from AIDS, prostitution, pedophilia, and pornography to homosexual parenting. Although these are contentious issues in themselves, her typical treatment of such subjects through bodily (and often bawdy) humor, plain speaking, and the chiaroscuro of morality has courted further controversy. In part, Vogel attributes the slow development of her career to her gender and nonconformist sensibilities. Her plays consistently present a female subject's viewpoint, revolve around strong women characters, and examine issues of female subjugation. Nevertheless, Vogel rejects the idea that her identity defines her as a playwright, instead asserting that her position has helped her empathize with widespread issues of marginalization. She considers playwriting a political act, but sees theater less as a platform for espousing her own ideological beliefs than as a powerful tool for communal exploration and understanding, for her own benefit as much as her audience's.

In approaching taboo political subjects, Vogel is interested in the questions surrounding an issue and believes that complex problems do not have simple answers. To ensure that her audience is engaged in an open dialogue with its culture, she typically structures her plays as journeys, taking spectators along for the ride and forcing them to examine the shades of gray in a situation and discard any absolutes. In her Pulitzer Prize-winning How I Learned to Drive (1997), a tale of a young woman whose adolescence in Maryland during the 1960s and 1970s is blighted by sexual molestation, Vogel avoids simply indicting the pedophilic uncle by presenting a character too complex to simply be designated a villain. Uncle Peck, who (according to Vogel) "should be played by an actor one might cast in the role of Atticus in To Kill a Mockingbird," is at once sinister and sympathetic. There is no question of the trauma his abuse inflicts on his niece L'il Bit. However, Vogel also emphasizes Peck's struggle to understand his sexuality, his compassion for L'il Bit, and his genuine efforts to warn her against himself, knowing that she is his only lifeline in a battle against despair.

Vogel's other plays are equally ambiguous. The Mineola Twins (1996) follows the lives of identical twins who differ only in their politics and chest size through three Republican administrations. At the end neither the antiestablishment nor the conservative character has the final word. In Hot 'n' Throbbing (1993), the story of a divorcee with a restraining order against her abusive ex-husband who writes soft-core erotica to support her children, the heroine is not only a victim of male objectification, but also complicit in it.

To challenge the audience to resist a single conditioned perspective, Vogel takes it on a voyage into the world of the strange and fantastical. In her plays the expected approach to an issue is often inverted, and the boundary between reality and fantasy is blurred. Painful subjects such as death and disease may be approached through satire and comedy, and alternative possibilities to the accepted attitude are presented when characters splinter or double and weave in and out of each other's stories. In addition, Vogel's narratives are filled with bizarre images and metatheatrical and literary allusions. The Baltimore Waltz (1992 Obie for Best Play) uses all these elements. Inspired by the death of Vogel's homosexual brother Carl, the play provides a fantastical and humorous alternative to what happened in real life. In the play's version of events, respectable kindergarten teacher Anna imagines that she is dying of acquired toilet disease (ATD)—Vogel's ironic answer to AIDS—and goes to Europe with her brother Carl and his stuffed rabbit in search of a potential cure from the Third Man.

Anna is not the only one of Vogel's characters who deals with life through the medium of fiction. Vogel fills her plays with fantasists who deliberately challenge the story assigned to them. In Desdemona: A Play About a Handkerchief (1978) William Shakespeare's heroine finds herself trapped in someone else's story and relieves herself of the burden of purity it has forced upon her by inventing her own fiction. In And Baby Makes Seven (1984) the trio in the gay household create imaginary children to help them through the fears of becoming actual parents. No matter how bizarre the fantasies in Vogel's plays, however, they can always be explained in the familiar and perennial realm of human need.

Paula Vogel is the Adele Kellenberg Seaver Professor of Creative Writing at Brown University, where she directs the master of fine arts playwriting program. In addition to her stage work, she has worked on film versions of How I Learned to Drive and The Oldest Profession, her 1981 play about five septuagenarian prostitutes. The Long Christmas Ride Home premiered at Trinity Repertory Theater in Providence in May 2003 and moved to the OFF-BROADWAY Vineyard Theatre in October 2004. The play, which integrates Bunraku puppetry with American theatrical COMEDY particularly indebted to THORNTON WILDER, continues Vogel's exploration of dysfunctional families using figurative and literal journeys as a segue to discovery.

[See also Feminist Drama in the United States; United States, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: Swan Song of Sir Henry (1974); Meg (1977); Desdemona: A Play About a Handkerchief (1978); Apple-Brown Betty (1979); The Last Pat Epstein Show Before the Reruns (1979); Bertha in Blue (1981); And Baby Makes Seven (1984); The Oldest Profession (1988); The Baltimore Waltz (1992); Hot 'n' Throbbing (1993); The Mineola Twins (1996); How I Learned to Drive (1997); The Long Christmas Ride Home (2003)

FURTHER READING

Bigsby, Christopher. Contemporary American Playwrights. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1999.

Vogel, Paula. The Baltimore Waltz, and Other Plays. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1996.

———. The Mammary Plays. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1998. [How I Learned to Drive and The Mineola Twins.]

Olivia Turnbull

THE VOICE OF THE TURTLE

The rain is over, the winter is past, and the voice of the turtle[dove] is heard in our land.

—Sgt. Bill Page, Act 2

Drawing its title from a Bible verse paraphrased by its lone male character, The Voice of the Turtle by English-born, naturalized American playwright JOHN VAN DRUTEN made its Broadway premiere on December 8, 1943, at the Morosco Théâtre. Directed by the playwright and starring Margaret Sullavan, Audrey Christie, and Elliott Nugent, The Voice of the Turtle moved to the Martin Beck (later the Hirschfeld) in 1947 and subsequently to the Hudson, closing there on January 3, 1948, after 1,557 performances. A romantic COMEDY with three characters, The Voice of the Turtle was the first major Broadway success with a small cast and was also Van Druten's most successful play in a career that included I Remember Mama, I Am a Camera (the basis for the musical Cabaret), and Bell, Book, and Candle.

The plot concerns Sally Middleton, a naïve young actress from Joplin, Missouri, and Sgt. Bill Page, a soldier on leave, who fall in love over a three-day April weekend in World War II-era New York City. Sally's salty actress friend Olive Lashbrooke has stood up Bill, an out-of-town fling, so that she can pursue a higher-ranking catch. What begins as an unfortunate situation turns into a decidedly lucky one when Sally and Bill, after spending the weekend together primarily in Sally's sublet apartment, resolve ultimately to allow their blossoming relationship to flower into a serious, marriage-bound one.

The uncertainties and instabilities of the professional theater and a country immersed in a global war saturate and inform The Voice of the Turtle. Actresses Sally and Olive's jobs are short lived and sporadic, and their residences are impermanent; Bill, too, bounces from base to base, a player, however, in a greater and more real drama. The future is unclear, frightening, and somewhat bleak.

The playwright, however, infuses this dark landscape with the hope that all uncertainties will be abolished: by Sunday, beautiful spring weather has supplanted Friday's rainstorm; Sally, without a job on Friday, has found employment in a production opposite her favorite matinee idol; Sally and Bill emerge from the shadows of love affairs that had left them shell-shocked and embittered; and, most important, the prospect of a lifetime together incites them to seize love and commitment. These shifts bode, too, that the long war will soon end. Only Olive remains unchanged, jaded, and averse to marriage, which remains for her only an excuse to break a date and a poison that envenoms the gaiety of a successive string of sexual liaisons.

The Voice of the Turtle is provocative and ahead of its time in its handling of premarital sex, yet still contains the underlying messages that monogamy in the state of matrimony is desirable, and that men are expected and permitted to be more sexually promiscuous than women.

The play was made into a film in 1947, starring Ronald Reagan, Eleanor Parker, and Eve Arden.

[See also England; United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Van Druten, John. Playwright at Work. New York: Harper, 1953.

———. The Widening Circle. New York: Scribner, 1957.

W. Douglas Powers

VOJNOVIĆ, IVO (1857–1929)

History is writing a play for us to perform,—the one and only, great and horrible!—And yet we should keep quiet and listen! Today, to write means, however, to give up our non possumus. When I write about Dubrovnik, it is like speaking about an unburied corpse.

—Ivo Vojnović, 1917

A poet and writer of short prose works, Ivo Vojnović is the author of fourteen plays, the most important of which have made him the major representative of modern Croatian drama at the turn of the 20th century and the herald of its later developments. Born on October 9, 1857, in Dubrovnik, CROATIA, and raised in Split, Vojnović completed his studies in Zagreb and worked for several years as a civil service clerk in various Croatian towns until 1907. In 1911, after serving as literary adviser to the Croatian National Theatre in Zagreb, he became a professional writer, traveled around ITALY, and stayed in Prague, Budapest, and Belgrade. In 1914 he returned to Dubrovnik, where he was imprisoned for his Yugoslav nationalism, an ideology that informs his two verse plays generally held in low esteem, The Death of the Mother of Jugovići (Smrt majke Jugovića, 1907) and The Resurrection of Lazarus (Lazarovo vaskrsenje, 1913). After World War I he spent several years in Nice. By 1922 he was back in Dubrovnik and, almost blind, spent his last years in Belgrade, where he died on August 30, 1929.

Although some of his plays smack of decadent cosmopolitanism (Psyche, 1890; A Lady with a Sunflower [Gospođa sa suncokretom], 1912), and vague symbolism (Imperatrix, 1918), the central and most significant part of his oeuvre was devoted to the history and cultural IDENTITY of his native town, Dubrovnik, the former capital of the Dalmatian aristocratic republic, Ragusa, the autonomy of which was undone by Napoleon Bonaparte. With D'Annunzian emphasis Vojnović deplored but also penetratingly analyzed the reasons for the decline and fall of the republic. The recurring obsession with the myth of Dubrovnik earned him the label of a nostalgic political reactionary, prone to indulge in declamatory passages and necrophiliac imagery, but it is precisely in his imaginative historical chronicles that Vojnović succeeded in creating the most innovative dramaturgical work of the period. Having begun with a light comic well-made play (Psyche), he impressed the Zagreb intellectuals with his veristic slice of rural life Equinox (Ekvinocijo, 1895), which was followed by his naturalist-symbolist masterpiece, the psychologically dense Ibsenian historical fresco The Ragusan Trilogy: Allons enfants, Twilight, On the Terrace (Dubrovačka trilogija: Allons enfants, Suton, Na taraci, 1903). The metadramatic and multimedia experiments of his later Pirandellian phase, Maskerades in the Attic (Maškarate ispod kuplja, 1922) and A Prologue to an Unwritten Play (Prolog nenapisane drame, 1929), follow the same thematic line with a strikingly intentional dissolution of traditional plot and extensive commentaries on the process of artistic creation of an author faced with a director's impositions and a new medium, film. To these must be added a group of one-act lyric plays, grouped by scholars under the heading The Little Trilogy (Mala trilogija, 1926) not only because of the abiding interest in the history of Dubrovnik, but also in honor of a tendency of the playwright to present individual works as parts of larger wholes (thus Equinox, The Death of the Mother of Jugovići, Imperatrix, and The Resurrection of Lazarus form The Maternal Tetralogy).

A poet of the moribund and a skilled narrator in his profuse STAGE DIRECTIONS, permeated by learned references to other fields such as the plastic arts and music, Vojnović was also a successful public reader of his plays. His plays have at various times been translated into Czech, Slovak, Polish, Italian, German, French, Russian, and Chinese, and some of them, such as Equinox, have also been set to music. His best work for the stage continues to be produced in Croatia to this day.

PLAYS: Psyche (1890); Equinox (Ekinocijo, 1895); The Ragusan Trilogy: Allons enfants, Twilight, On the Terrace (Dubrovačka trilogija: Allons enfants, Suton, Na taraci, 1903); The Death of the Mother of Jugović (Smrt majke Jugović, 1907); A Lady with a Sunflower (Gospođa sa suncokretom, 1912); The Resurrection of Lazarus (Lazarovo vaskrsenje, 1913); Imperatrix (1918); Masquerades in the Attic (Maškarate ispod kuplja, 1922); The Little Trilogy: The Miracle of Saint Blasius. In the Last Moment, when Saint Mary went Walking Across Placa (Mala trilogija: Čudo Sv. Vlaha, U zadnjem času, Kad se Blažena Gospa prošetala preko Place, 1926); A Prologue to an Unwritten Play (Prolog nenapisane drame, 1929)

FURTHER READING

Čale, Frano, ed. Ođjelu Iva Vojnovića [Ivo Vojnović: His Life and Operas]. Radovi Međunarodnog simpozija [The Wade of Iva Vojnović's Operas: Proceeding of the International Symposium]. Zagreb: JAZU, 1981.

Jovanović, Raško B. Ivo Vojnović: Život i delo. Belgrade: Institut za književnost i umetnost, 1974.

Suvin, Darko. "Dramatika Iva Vojnovića" [Playwright of Iva Vojnovića]. Dubrovnik, special issue 5–6 (1977).

Lada Cale Feldman

VOLKSSTÜCK

The term Volksstück is literally and mistakenly translated into English as "folk play." A more accurate translation would be "popular drama," an appellation that captures both the historical circumstances attending the genre's origins and the aesthetic impetus underlying its development. The form and content of the Volksstück have necessarily evolved as a consequence of the changing socioeconomic conditions that Volksstück dramatists seek to address. The stock characters and frequently coarse physical COMEDY of the early 19th century seem far removed from the depictions of physical and emotional brutality that came to characterize the genre in the late 20th century. In Ferdinand Raimund's The King of the Alps (Der Alpenkönig und der Menschenfeind, premiered 1828), for instance, the misanthropic protagonist Rappelkopf is ultimately cured through the benevolent intervention of Astragalus, the supernatural Alpine king, and Rappelkopf's cure results in multiple reconciliations and the reestablishment of social harmony. PETER TURRINI's Swine (Sauschlachten, 1971), in contrast, culminates in the offstage slaughter of the farmer's son Valentin, an act sanctioned by the town dignitaries, physically committed by Valentin's extended family, and reconciling the characters with the traditions of AUSTRIA's Nazi past.

Despite thematic and formal variations, the Volksstück has always manifested an impulse to challenge and democratize both social institutions and aesthetic experience, constituting a form of theater intended to be thematically accessible and economically affordable to a broad and diverse audience. It is therefore not surprising that the three major phases in the development of the Volksstück occurred during periods in which questions of social, political, economic, and cultural democracy appeared particularly acute, that is, the mid-19th century, the 1920s and 1930s, and the 1960s and 1970s.

As the Biedermeier retreat into the private sphere gave way to the 1848 revolution, the works of Ferdinand Raimund (1790–1836) and Johann Nestroy (1801–1862) came to define the Viennese Volksstück. While Raimund's dramas always conclude with the reimposition of the status quo, the typically lower-class protagonists of Nestroy's FARCES and satires indict and subvert the bourgeois order.

Subsequent generations of 20th-century playwrights have consciously sought to rejuvenate the tradition of a popular and socially critical Volksstück. In the 1920s, as both Germans and Austrians struggled to establish democracies in the aftermath of World War I, BERTOLT BRECHT, MARIELOUISE FLEIBER, ÖDÖN VON HORVÁTH, and CARL ZUCKMAYER attempted to create a Volksstück adequate to the interwar period. Amid the social upheavals of the 1960s and 1970s a new generation of Volksstück dramatists—including RAINER WERNER FASSBINDER, FRANZ XAVER KROETZ, Felix Mitterer, Martin Sperr, and Peter Turrini—emerged to question the ethical price of post-World War II affluence and confront the legacy of silence surrounding the Nazi past. Lacking the institutional support of a flourishing Volks theater, these 20th-century playwrights have frequently turned to film and television as additional means to reach the broad audience they seek and thus reclaim for the Volksstück the popularity it enjoyed in 19th-century Vienna.

FURTHER READING

Aust, Hugo, Peter Haida, and Jürgen Hein. Volksstück. Munich: C. H. Beck, 1989.

Cocalis, Susan L. "The Politics of Brutality: Toward a Definition of the Critical Volksstück." Modern Drama 24, no. 3 (1981): 292–313.

Decker, Craig. "The Hermeneutics of Democracy: Nestroy, Horváth, Turrini and the Development of the 'Volksstück.'" Seminar 27, no. 3 (1991): 219–232.

Jones, Calvin N. Negation and Utopia: The German Volksstück from Raimund to Kroetz. New York: Peter Lang, 1993.

Craig Decker

VON MORGENS BIS MITTERNACHTS See FROM MORNING TO MIDNIGHT

VOR DEM RUHESTAND See EVE OF RETIREMENT

VOR SONNENAUFGANG See BEFORE DAYBREAK

LE VOYAGE DU COURONNEMENT See THE CORONATION VOYAGE

THE VOYSEY INHERITANCE

HARLEY GRANVILLE-BARKER's five-act realistic drama The Voysey Inheritance was first produced at the Court Theatre in London on November 7, 1905. The inheritance of the play's title is a Voysey family business secret. Mr. Voysey manages a successful financial firm, started by his father, that oversees the investments of several clients. In his old age Mr. Voysey has selected one of his six children, Edward, to become the next head of the firm, but passing on the business means divulging a history of transgression.

Years ago Edward's grandfather illegally spent most of the money deposited with the firm, and Mr. Voysey inherited the burden of quietly repairing this damage. Through bold investments he managed for years to pay the expected interest income to his clients, even though their capital had mostly vanished.

At first Edward refuses to stay with the business as a knowing co-conspirator, but he is persuaded by the nobility of working to replace all the stolen capital. He later discovers, however, that this has not exactly been his father's plan, and he confronts his father with the realization that the family's lifestyle has been built on stolen funds. "It's odd it never struck me until yesterday that my own pocket-money as a boy must have been drawn from some client's account."

Mr. Voysey dies, and Edward gives full disclosure of the business to his mother and siblings and suggests publicizing the embezzlement and giving the money left in Mr. Voysey's will to the firm's clients. He discovers that his family is far less eager than he to give restitution. Even Mr. Voysey's greatest victim, Mr. Booth, is more interested in financial gain than in morality. He conspires with the vicar, Rev. Colpus, and offers their conditional silence about the crimes as long as they financially benefit from the continued cover-up.

Eventually Edward learns that Mr. Voysey had managed, years earlier, to completely repair the effects of his father's misdeeds, but within a short time had started his own new embezzlements. The play ends with Edward vowing to stay at the firm and fix the worst of the client losses until the inevitable day that they are discovered. The audience is left to wonder if, like Mr. Voysey, Edward will clean the slate only to begin a new legacy of deception to pass on to the next generation.

Like his friend GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, Granville-Barker was interested in the British middle class and financial hypocrisy. The Voysey Inheritance is particularly reminiscent of Shaw's "new woman" play MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION (1894), which likewise dramatizes respectable and gentle lives built on ill-gotten money. In both plays we see adult children who feel righteous indignation not so much at the discovery of their parents' crimes of necessity as at their persistence in behaving immorally after the necessity had evaporated. The social commentary is the same: that the English middle class is perfectly willing to accept immorality if it can benefit from it and retain its unstained reputations.

[See also England, 1860–1940]

FURTHER READING

- Rijnbout, Frans A. "The 'New Woman' in Plays by Harley Granville Barker and His Contemporaries." Ph.D. diss., New York Univ., 1997.
- Salenius, Elmer W. Harley Granville Barker. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
- Stowell, S. "A Quaint and Comical Dismay—The Dramatic Strategies of Granville Barker's The Voysey Inheritance." Essays in Theatre/Études Théâtrales 5, no. 2 (May 1987): 127–138.

DeAnna M. Toten Beard

VYROZUMENI See THE MEMORANDUM

WADA CHIREBANDI See OLD STONE MANSION

WAGNER, RICHARD (1813–1883)

Richard Wagner (born on May 22, 1813, in Leipzig, GERMANY; died on February 13, 1883, in Venice, ITALY) is known primarily as one of the major composers of the 19th century. But he also exercised a great influence on the spoken drama, both through his operas and through his critical essays.

Unlike nearly all composers writing for the stage, Wagner wrote his own librettos. Not only were they crafted to complement the music beautifully; they were strikingly original examples of the dramatist's art. Although he was a great admirer and interpreter of Ludwig van Beethoven, Wagner wanted to go beyond what Beethoven had accomplished, which meant exceeding somehow the composer's monumental Ninth Symphony. There, in the last movement, Beethoven resorts to the human voice as a chorus sings Friedrich Schiller's "Ode to Joy." For Wagner, this transition from purely instrumental sound to a combination of voice and orchestra justified his belief (as a dramatist) that the most profound emotions must be given a cause, a motivation. This meant creating the dramatic situation that gave rise to the feelings. The outer world of causation and inner world of feeling were to be united. He scorned the term opera and thought of his works as music dramas (though that term did not satisfy him either), since he considered the text as vital as the music.

"In the highest conceivable work of art," he wrote, "the noblest inspiration of both composer and dramatist should exist as the very essence of the world thus revealed to us in the mirror of the world itself" ("Über die Bestimmung der Oper" [The Destiny of Opera], 1871). He said that he was attracted only to subject matter of which the "poetic and musical significance struck him simultaneously." In his best work there is a fusion of word and music unmatched in conventional opera. To accomplish this, he perfected the use of leitmotifs (a term coined not by Wagner but by Hans von Wolzogen). These are themes or fragments of themes that when woven together not only constitute the music of the drama but also underlie the story. What in straight drama is known as SUBTEXT wells up to the surface through Wagner's music.

For example, at the end of Das Rheingold, the first part of the cycle Der Ring des Nibelungen, a musical theme accompanying Alberich's renunciation of love is followed by a theme identified with the ring, establishing clearly the opposition of two forces, love and power, which will run through the whole Ring cycle.

Inspired mainly by Greek TRAGEDY, especially the Oresteia of Aeschylus, Wagner believed that the greatest drama was based on myth and legend. Being close to the people, the old stories, often retold, were, he believed, the repositories of the most profound truths. It was the task of the modern artist to recapture the essence of the ancient heroes. Stripped of irrelevant details, these elemental human beings revealed the underlying psychological and cultural forces at work.

In Tannhäuser, composed 1843–1845, he contrasted sacred with profane love. In Lohengrin (1850), he dealt with the betrayal of love (1850) and trust. In the Ring cycle, he pictured the whole history of human society as a struggle between love and power. The Ring of the Nibelung drew on material from the medieval poem Nibelungenlied and on the Scandinavian Edda. Begun as a single drama about the guiltless hero Siegfried, it was intended as a parable about 19th-century Germany, reflecting Wagner's radical, leftist views. Siegfried was to be the herald of a new society. But over the years, as Wagner became more disillusioned about politics, the single drama grew from 1848 to 1874 into a four-part cycle picturing in word and music the history of European civilization from its primal beginnings to the 19th century.

Wagner begins his story when human beings become divorced from nature. Alberich loves the Rhinemaidens, but when he is ridiculed by them for his ugliness, he forges the ring from the gold that they possess. The ring stands for power, the kind of power varying with its possessor. Wotan, chief of the gods who represent organized society, is willing to exchange love for political power. From then on there is a curse on the ring, and the history of the world is one of deceit and betrayal, ending eventually in the downfall, the twilight of the gods (Götterdämmerung, the last of the four operas in the cycle). The music critic Edward Downes hardly exaggerates when he wrote, "As The Divine Comedy of Dante sums up what Henry Adams called 'the thirteenth, greatest of centuries,' the peak of the Middle Ages, so Wagner's Ring epitomizes his age. Both works are rich in philosophical and political allegories. Both treat of first and last things, of basic human values, and the meaning of life itself."

In Tristan and Isolde (1865) Wagner depicted love as the passion that affords the only joy in a universe without purpose and meaning. Although the pessimistic PHILOSOPHY of Arthur Schopenhauer probably finds its fullest artistic expression in this work, Wagner differed from the philosopher on the question of love and sex.

Wagner's position is ambiguous. For Schopenhauer, love was a delusion arising from the conjunction of genitals. The love that Tristan and Isolde have for each other, however, is not presented as part of an ultimately pointless urge to procreate but as an irresistible drive to unite their souls. For Wagner, the union of the sexes meant a loss of egotism—hence, an overcoming of the will to propagate the species. Sex becomes an end in itself, and the music depicts rather explicitly foreplay and orgasm. (Oras GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, writing in the Victorian age, delicately put it, "an astonishingly intense and faithful translation into music of the emotions which accompany the union of a pair of lovers" [1898].) In the last scene the lovers, united in death, lose their individualities and surrender to the cosmos, the infinite universal energy. "Into the whirlwind of the universe, blowing round, sinking down, unconscious, highest bliss"—these are the final words of the drama. Music, like sex, unites the conscious and the unconscious, the individual and the world will.

Tristan is not only one of the most remarkable of all musical compositions, but it is a revolutionary dramatic work as well. Wagner deliberately dispensed with motivation and the complicated intrigues that are the basic material of almost all dramas. In his own words, he "immersed himself in the depths of events of the soul pure and simple, and out of this innermost center of the world fearlessly fashioned its outward form." He explained that "the copious detail that a historical poet has to employ in order to make the outer connections of his plot evident, to the detriment of a clear exposition of its inner motives, I now trusted myself to apply to these alone. Life and death, the whole significance and existence of the external world here turn on nothing but the inner movements of the soul!" ("Zukunftsmusik" [Music of the Future]). Here was a new approach to drama that was to be a major influence on the symbolists at the end of the 19th century, a theory of a drama in which external action was reduced to a minimum, a virtual denial of drama in the conventional sense, a kind of drama in which Hamlet's soliloquies (set to music) would constitute the whole play.

In Parsifal (1882), which Wagner called a sacred festival drama, the musical motifs link religious and psychological life. The last of Wagner's works, it complements the Ring. In place of the ring as the central symbol (power), there is the holy grail (compassion). In its advocacy of asceticism, its borrowings from Eastern RELIGION, and its celebration of compassion for all living things, Parsifal is thoroughly Schopenhauerian. In these supreme works Wagner appears to have quite consciously and deliberately provided a world philosophy in three parts: political history in the Ring, sex and the unconscious in Tristan, and religion in Parsifal.

While the regular serious drama developed in the 19th century along scientific and materialistic lines, emphasizing factors such as environment and heredity, Wagner provided the alternative—the drama of the soul and of intuition, told through the use of parable and myth. Though his influence was mainly in the field of music, he provided the model for symbolist drama. As a theoretician, he was a major influence on FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE, whose dichotomy of the Apollonian and the Dionysian, a staple of modern thought, derives mainly from Wagner's ideas and from Nietzsche's infatuation with Tristan.

His willful intrusion into politics and religion made him one of the most controversial artists of the modern era. He was an outspoken anti-Semite, and his essay "Judaism in Music" (1850) is extreme even for its time in its vehemence, going far beyond the conventional prejudices of mid-19th-century Europe. Wagner's racism, along with his glorification of Teutonic myth and legend, made him Adolf Hitler's favorite composer.

In his major works stretching from Lohengrin to Parsifal, he not only composed music of unsurpassed power and originality; he also gave expression to most of the major ideas of his time. What he omitted or neglected can be found in the dramas of HENRIK IBSEN. Together they sum up and encompass nearly all that was significant in European culture in the 19th century. For his impact not only on music and drama but on politics and philosophy as well, Wagner has been arguably the single most influential creative genius since the titans of the Renaissance.

[See also Dramatic Structure; Symbolism]

FURTHER READING

- Deathridge, John, and Carl Dahlhaus. The New Grove Wagner. London: Macmillan, 1984.
- Köhler, Joachim. Richard Wagner, the Last of the Titans. Tr. by Stewart Spencer. New Haven, Conn.: Yale Univ. Press, 2004.
- Magee, Bryan. Wagner and Philosophy. London: Penguin, 2000.
- Millington, Barry, ed. The Wagner Compendium: A Guide to Wagner's Life and Music. New York: Schirmer, 1992.
- Shaw, George Bernard. The Perfect Wagnerite. London: Grant Richards, 1898.
- Tanner, Michael. Wagner. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Univ. Press, 1996.
- Wapnewski, Peter. "The Operas as Literary Works." In The Wagner Handbook, ed. by Ulrich Müller and Peter Wapnewski. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard Univ. Press, 1992.

Evert Sprinchorn

WAITING FOR GODOT

Pozzo: [Suddenly furious.] Have you not done tormenting me with your accursed time! It's abominable! When! When! One day, is that not enough for you, one day like any other day, one day he went dumb, one day I went blind, one day we'll go deaf, one day we were born, one day we shall die, the same day, the same second, is that not enough for you? [Calmer.] They give birth astride of a grave, the light gleams an instant, then it's night once more. [He jerks the rope.] On!

—Act 2

SAMUEL BECKETT began writing Waiting for Godot (En attendant Godot) on October 9, 1948, and completed the manuscript on January 29, 1949. The evidence of the manuscript suggests that the play flowed smoothly in composition, with difficulties encountered mainly with the endings of each act. It is not yet known how many typescript versions it took for Beckett to achieve a "final" text. A year later the French actor and manager Roger Blin was actively seeking to stage the play but did not manage to achieve this until January 1953 at the Théâtre de Babylone in Paris. In the meantime, selected scenes from the play had been performed on French radio in 1952, and the text of the play was published in October 1952. Beckett participated in the rehearsals for the first production by Blin, making cuts, adjustments, and changes to his text as required by the process of transfer from page to stage.

Within weeks of the Paris opening the play had been translated into German, with a little help from Beckett himself, and it was published and playing in numerous productions in GERMANY before Beckett finalized his translation of the play into English for first publication in New York in September 1954. The first English-language productions were given in London and Dublin in 1955, and the first American one opened in early 1956, a production Beckett called "the Miami fiasco."

From the outset it was recognized that Beckett's two-act play (it is called "a TRAGICOMEDY in two acts" on the title pages of English-language editions) was unconventional and subversive. It is virtually without plot—two men, Estragon (Gogo) and Vladimir (Didi), wait by a designated tree at the side of a country road for another man, Godot, who does not arrive but sends a messenger to say that "he will surely come tomorrow." The boredom of waiting is relieved in both acts by the arrival of Pozzo and Lucky, who tarry awhile before moving on. Both acts end with the same line, differently assigned, "Yes, let's go," followed by the stage direction, "They do not move. Curtain." This play (in which "nothing happens, twice," in Vivian Mercier's memorable phrase) ends in immobility rather than resolution; there is no dramatic outcome.

Not only did Beckett dispense with plot and story line; he also revolutionized the notion of character. We glean very little about the characters' past from the play: Estragon and Vladimir were "presentable" years ago; they worked at grape harvesting in the Macon country. At one time Estragon was a poet but is now reduced to begging and sleeping in ditches, as is Vladimir. They hope for some improvement in their situation from a charitable Godot, who may allow them to sleep in his warm hayloft. They recognize the pointlessness of trying to keep an appointment with a man who does not show up, but they are fearful he may punish them if they default. Pozzo and Lucky are even more enigmatic: they appear to be master and slave—Pozzo says in the first act that he is going to the fair to sell Lucky for whom he hopes to get a good price, but they return in the second act, much degraded—though Pozzo concedes that Lucky has taught him to appreciate "[b]eauty, grace, truth of the first water." Lucky, who has a rope around his neck, carries a bag, a picnic basket, a folding stool, and Pozzo's greatcoat and is "driven" by Pozzo, who carries only a whip and the end of the rope.

In place of the standard elements of plot and character, traditionally conceived, Beckett provides a rigorously structured set of repetitions and repetitions with variation in language that can move from the lyrical to the crude. The pattern of the first act is repeated in a shorter, compressed, and diminished way in the second. Thus, there is talk of suicide in both acts, but Didi and Gogo decide against it, twice. In the first act their decision is based on their suspicion that the tree would not bear their weight; in the second, they defer because they lack a serviceable piece of rope. The return of Pozzo and Lucky in the second act proves to be much less "entertaining" because this time Pozzo is blind and Lucky is dumb. The carrot Didi gives to Gogo in the first act dwindles to a black radish in the second.

The play provides startling images of destitution, neglect, despair, ill treatment, violence, and abuse—of human misery, in short. From these images Beckett contrives to wring some hilarious COMEDY. In the first act when Lucky has kicked Estragon in the shin as the latter performs a rare act of kindness, Vladimir reports to Pozzo that his friend is bleeding. Pozzo's response, "It's a good sign," is a signature Beckett effect—only the living bleed.

It is the abject Lucky who is given the most explicit passage in the play, in a speech he delivers for the entertainment of the others at the command of Pozzo. The "tirade" (Beckett's word) is assembled from the remains of various registers of language—literary, scientific, religious, philosophical. The point is that despite the best efforts of generations dedicated to human development, the fate of man is "to shrink and dwindle," "waste and pine"—to be born is to begin to die. The others resist this unpalatable truth, seeking to silence Lucky who struggles and shouts his text. It is a key moment because it reveals that all the actions of the play, the pastimes, comic turns and routines, the little "canters" the characters indulge in, have a common purpose, which is to prevent this truth from entering consciousness. But as the play goes on and the characters' store of ingenuity and invention diminishes, prevention becomes more difficult. Vladimir says, "How time flies when one has fun!" But the fun keeps breaking down into painful silence.

Waiting for Godot is the essential play of the latter half of the 20th century, and with it Beckett redefined the possibilities of theater. Its impact on playwrights in many languages is palpable and widely acknowledged.

[See also France]

FURTHER READING

Fahsenfeld, Martha, and Dougald McMillan. Beckett in the Theatre.

London: John Calder, 1988.

Knowlson, James, and Dougald McMillan, eds. The Theatrical Notebooks of Samuel Beckett. Vol. 1, Waiting for Godot. New York: Grove, 1994.

Reid, Alec. All I Can Manage, More Than I Could: An Approach to the Plays of Samuel Beckett. Dublin: Dolmen Press, 1968.

States, Bert O. The Shape of Paradox: An Essay on Waiting for Godot. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1978.

Gerry Dukes

WAITING FOR LEFTY

Not until the first work of CLIFFORD ODETS gained a professional Broadway production and a widespread audience did the Great Depression-era drama of social protest achieve any meaningful success. Produced by the GROUP THEATRE in January 1935, by March it had moved to Broadway, where it was paired with Odets's less noteworthy Till the Day I Die on a regular daily basis.

Waiting for Lefty is unabashedly left-wing "agit-prop" (AGITATION-PROPAGANDA) drama holding to the Communist Party line. Its significance was Odets's success in presenting this message not to the "masses" but to the sophisticated Broadway audiences who, surprisingly, enthusiastically received it.

Much of the impact of Lefty lies in the overt THEATRICALITY that abandons nearly all conventional staging, while maintaining an intense sense of REALISM in setting and dialogue. The illusion of a union hiring hall is created by a semicircle of plain wooden chairs placed on a bare stage and facing the audience, which the actors address from time to time, with responses from "plants" in the auditorium. Traditional aesthetic distance is breached as viewers are drawn into the action. The climactic call of "Strike! Strike!" is fully intended to prompt the audience, psychologically at least, to rush into the street and man the barricades.

Most prominent among those seated onstage is the "porcine, well-fed," and confident union boss, Harry Fatt, who is trying to head off a strike of cab drivers. The personification of the bloated capitalist, he regards anyone opposed to him as "yellow" or a "damned Red." But of more immediate concern to the committee than Fatt's arguments are the whereabouts of the chairman, Lefty.

While the committee waits with increasing unease, within the circle is enacted a series of spotlighted vignettes spelling out the debilitating conditions of the workplace, which are forcing consideration of a walkout. A few examples: the young cabbie who tells his girlfriend that they cannot get married on five or six dollars a week; the intern who cannot hold a job because he is Jewish; discovery of a spy among the ranks of the laborers. The most direct political statement occurs when an actor seeking work is told by the office receptionist to read and follow the Communist Manifesto or, better yet, go to RUSSIA where you will be lifted out of the gutter and everybody calls you comrade.

The climax comes with the arrival through the audience of a breathless messenger with the news that Lefty has been found behind the car barns with a bullet through his head. The meeting erupts in the call to strike, and the entire audience is caught up in the emotional wave that sweeps through the theater.

Waiting for Lefty is radical theater at its best. Once presented, however, its mission is accomplished, and theoretically, it has no further life. But, of course, it is theater, and its message will continue night after night. While the impact of Odets's creation may be socially irrelevant in a different time and a different situation, the fact remains that it is tremendously effective. Its admixture of overt theatricality, consciously contrived, and the skilled illusion of reality makes it unsurpassed in the history of American social drama.

[See also Political Theater in the United States; United States, 1929–1940]

FURTHER READING

- Clurman, Harold. The Fervent Years: The Story of the Group Theatre and the Thirties. 1945. New York: Hill & Wang, 1957.
- Himelstein, Morgan Y. Drama Was a Weapon: The Left Wing Theatre in New York, 1929–1941. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers Univ. Press, 1963.
- Weales, Gerald. Clifford Odets, Playwright. New York: Pegasus, 1971.

Jordan Miller

WALCOTT, DEREK (1930–)

Playwright and poet Derek Walcott, born in Castries, Saint Lucia, on January 23, 1930, has achieved acclaim as both a West Indian and an international writer, earning the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1992. African and European literature and culture influence his work; therefore, his writing often engages issues of origin and the search for order in the world.

On a British government scholarship, Walcott received a bachelor of arts degree in 1953 from the University College of the West Indies in Mona, Jamaica. He taught in West Indian schools for four years, then studied theater in New York on a Rockefeller Foundation Fellowship in 1958. In 1959 he founded the Little Carib Theatre Workshop in Trinidad, which he ran until 1976. This company produced his plays, as well as work by writers as diverse as WOLE SOYINKA, EUGÈNE IONESCO, SAMUEL BECKETT, and EDWARD ALBEE. Walcott's own plays found inspiration in William Shakespeare, Japanese nō and kabuki, the films of Akira Kurosawa, and most notably BERTOLT BRECHT's theater of the people, while also drawing on West Indian popular culture and myths, such as Trinidad's Carnival or Caribbean music and folktales. As a dramatist, Walcott wrote and produced plays in which everyone in the West Indies—not just the privileged colonial class—could participate, thus becoming instrumental in the development of a Caribbean theatrical tradition.

Walcott began writing plays and verse dramas in the 1940s, though he considers Henri Christophe (1950) his first play. In it, a former slave becomes a Haitian king, only to be overthrown by his people. Shakespeare's work figures as a preeminent influence here, as does a Jacobean poetic writing style. Later plays show Walcott using local, Caribbean language and motifs, such as in Ti-Jean and His Brothers (1958), a play based on a Caribbean folktale about three brothers who try to trick the devil.

Dream on Monkey Mountain (1967) continues Walcott's exploration of Caribbean cultural IDENTITY. This play incorporates elements of both European and African cultures, and through characters such as the protagonist, Makak, an imprisoned Afro-Caribbean Messiah, and Lestrade, a racially mixed defender of colonial order, Walcott suggests that all cultures, not just the cultures of the oppressed, have been creolized. This theme appears again in The Joker of Seville (1974), an adaptation of a 17th-century Don Juan play commissioned by Britain's Royal Shakespeare. The play—a musical collaboration with Galt MacDermot—draws on calypso music and American rhythm and blues while setting the European Don Juan legend in the Caribbean.

Walcott continued to work on musicals with MacDermot and ultimately collaborated with Paul Simon on the Broadway musical The Capeman (1998), which received poor reviews and had only a short run of sixty-nine shows. Later plays, such as The Haytian Earth (1984), demonstrate Walcott's ability as a playwright to engage Caribbean history and emphasize the importance of local history, language, and culture. Though he left the Little Carib Theater Company in 1976 and eventually became a professor at Boston University in 1981, Walcott retains a position as one of the most important Caribbean writers as well as an important world writer.

SELECT PLAYS: Henri Christophe: A Chronicle in Seven Scenes (1950); The Sea at Dauphin: A Play in One Act (1954); Ione: A Play with Music (1957); Ti-Jean and His Brothers (1958); Dream on Monkey Mountain (1967); In a Fine Castle (1970); The Joker of Seville (1974); O Babylon! (1976); The Isle Is Full of Noises (1982); The Haytian Earth (1984); Odyssey: A Stage Version (1993); The Capeman: A Musical (1998)

FURTHER READING

Baugh, Edward. Derek Walcott: Memory as Vision. London: Longman, 1979.

Colson, Theodore. "Derek Walcott's Plays: Outrage and Compassion." World Literature Written in English 12 (April 1973): 80–96.

Hamner, Robert D. "Derek Walcott." In The Dictionary of Literary Biography. Vol. 1, no. 117, Twentieth Century Caribbean and Black African Writers First Series, ed. by Bernth Lindors and Reinhard Sander. Detroit: Gale Res., 1992. 290–312.

King, Bruce. Derek Walcott and West Indian Drama: "Not Only a Playwright But a Company—the Trinidad Theatre Workshop, 1959–1993." Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1995.

———. Derek Walcott: A Caribbean Life. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 2000.

Thieme, John. Derek Walcott. New York: Manchester Univ. Press, 1999.

Gary Leising

WALKER, GEORGE F. (1947–)

George F. Walker, British CANADA's most acclaimed playwright of the late 20th century, was born in 1947 in Toronto's east end, where many of his later plays are set. He was working as a taxi driver in Toronto in 1970 when he saw an advertisement for new scripts and sent some plays to the fledgling Factory Theatre Lab. Ken Gass, founder and artistic director of Toronto's Factory Theatre Lab, quickly recognized a startlingly original talent in the unpretentious Walker. Walker's first six plays were all produced at the Factory Theatre Lab. Gass and Walker established a working relationship that continues to this day. Walker eventually became artistic director of the Factory Theatre Lab himself in 1978; and even after developing close relationships with other major theaters, such as becoming writer in residence at the New York Shakespeare Festival in 1981, he has returned to his roots at the Factory. He has written twenty-nine plays for the theater as well as several radio and television scripts. Among his numerous awards and recognitions, he has received the Governor General's Award for English-language drama twice.

Critic and historian of Canadian theater Craig Stewart Walker (2001) has argued that George F. Walker's first produced plays, Prince of Naples (1971) and Ambush at Tether's End (1971), are inspired by or even reworkings of absurdist plays by SAMUEL BECKETT and EUGÈNE IONESCO. Gass has also pointed out Walker's debt to "the French absurdist" but stresses that the mature Walker defies categorization.

Walker's work can be divided roughly into three categories: the early cartoon phase, the middle film noir phase, and the later REALISM phase. Although this division is not strictly chronological, it does reflect a development over time away from fantasy-based satire, passing through ironic reference to Hollywood genres, to a hybrid form combining the absurd with realism/NATURALISM.

Bagdad Saloon (1973), subtitled "a cartoon," Beyond Mozambique (1974), and Ramona and the White Slaves (1976) were all set in outrageous locales, such as an Arabian nights desert with cowboys, the Jungle, and Hong Kong, respectively. These works were entirely divorced from the urban, Canadian environment of the author and the company that produced them. During this "cartoon" phase, Walker seems to have been struggling against the claustrophobic nature of Canadian theater in the 1970s. This period was one of tremendous growth in Canadian theater and spawned an undeniable maturity of content and level of expertise in production values, but the bureaucratic demands from granting agencies and the Ministry of Culture, directly satirized in Walker's The Art of War (1982), also led to a dull, self-obsessed naturalism in many works. Walker's plays appeared on the scene as an antidote to this formula through sheer audacity of nonconformist locales, characters, and situations.

Despite the refreshingly non-Canadian quality of the cartoon plays, they attracted mainly a coterie, counterculture audience and got a lukewarm reception from the critics. Walker wanted to overcome the subculture ghetto of Canadian culture and reach a broader audience. In 1977 he wrote Gossip and ZASTROZZI, both produced at Toronto Free Theatre. These were the first of his plays to be premiered at a theater other than Factory Theatre Lab. Both plays were extremely successful, catapulting Walker to the mainstream of North American theater. Gossip introduced Walker's ironic version of Sam Spade in the character Tyrone Power, who would be the unlikely hero of two more, equally well received and popular plays: Filthy Rich (1979) and The Art of War (1982).

Gossip was set in an urban environment, less fantasy based than his earlier work, and represented the initiation of the film noir phase. Zastrozzi was based on a description of Percy Bysshe Shelley's romance of the same name. Walker claims not to have actually read Shelley when he wrote the play. Zastrozzi combined satisfying stage situations with a complex moral dilemma cum MELODRAMA. The title character seems to be the embodiment of evil, yet he is irresistible to most of the characters and the audience. The "good" characters cannot possibly defeat him because their idealism is unrealistic.

Chris Johnson (1980) has interpreted Zastrozzi as a thesis play promoting small-c conservative values. It is perhaps this kind of misreading that led Walker in his later work to move in a new naturalistic direction. In his East End Plays he explores territory much more familiar to his audience. The plays are set in kitchens, living rooms, and office spaces that contemporary people may live and work in. The influence of the absurd persists in the action and relationships of characters, but the use of fantasy and ironic quotations from film and nondramatic literature that run through his earlier work is almost entirely left behind. This experiment in simpler, more controlled storytelling is even more clearly the case in the Suburban Motel series, a collection of six plays set in the same motel room.

The play that stands apart from the tripartite formula of Walker's career is Nothing Sacred (1988), a free adaptation of Ivan Turgenev's novel Fathers and Sons. According to director Bill Glassco, Walker stressed that Nothing Sacred was a "Canadian comedy, not a Russian TRAGEDY," but its title is taken from an American movie from 1937 starring Carole Lombard and Fredric March. Perhaps the classic Hollywood title was an effort by Walker to form a bridge between this Russian social COMEDY of manners and Walker's previous, self-consciously low-culture lexicon. Whatever Walker's goals were in writing Nothing Sacred, it has proven to be one of his most successful plays internationally, surpassing even Zastrozzi in productions at important regional theaters and garnering him both the Dora Mavor Moore and Floyd S. Chalmers Awards.

With Heaven, produced at Canadian Stage Theatre in 2000, Walker appears to be exploring yet another path. He explores the banality of hatred and violence, specifically racism, but uses a fantasy mode akin to his earlier work. Characters transform unexpectedly, and reality and fantasy are as vaguely defined as they were in Bagdad Saloon.

In his introduction to Shared Anxiety, a representative collection of Walker plays, Stephen Haff (1994) writes: "Wherever they are—an unspecified jungle, a crumbling prison in turn-of-the-century Italy, a graveyard in the Paris of 1945, a cliff in Nova Scotia, an alley, a kitchen, a park—Walker's characters are in our world because they give us their mighty effort to survive in words full, direct and present, with bodies active, devoted and here." Haff's analysis reminds us that throughout Walker's experimenting with style, genre, content and form, his strength lies in his characters and their connection to the lives of the audience, however superficially otherworldly the situation onstage may be.

PLAYS: Ambush at Tether's End (1971); Prince of Naples (1971); Sacktown Rag (1972); Bagdad Saloon (1973); Beyond Mozambique (1974);

Demerit (1974); Ramona and the White Slaves (1976); Gossip (1977); Zastrozzi (1977); Filthy Rich (1979); Rumours of Our Death (1980); Theatre of the Film Noir (1981); The Art of War (1982); Science and Madness (1983); Criminals in Love (1984); Better Living (1986); Beautiful City (1987); Nothing Sacred (1988); Love and Anger (1989); Escape from Happiness (1991); Tough! (1993); Adult Entertainment (1997); Criminal Genius (1997); Problem Child (1997); Risk Everything (1997); The End of Civilization (1998); Featuring Loretta (1998); Heaven (2000)

FURTHER READING

- De Raey, Daniel. "Chords: Lost and Vocal: An Introduction."
In Suburban Motel. Vancouver: Talonbooks, 1999.
- Gass, Ken. "Introduction." In Three Plays. Toronto: Coach House Press, 1978.
- Gussow, Mel. "Turgenev, with License." New York Times (January 13, 1989): C5.
- Haff, Steven. "Introduction." In Shared Anxiety, by George F. Walker. Toronto: Coach House Press, 1994. xi–xvii.
- Johnson, Chris. "George F. Walker: B-Movies Beyond the Absurd." Canadian Literature 85 (Summer 1980): 82–103.
- Walker, Craig Stewart. "George F. Walker: Postmodern City Comedy." In The Buried Astrolabe: Canadian Dramatic Imagination and Western Tradition. Montreal: McGill Univ. Press, 2001.

Donald Cameron McManus

WALLACE, NAOMI (1960–)

Naomi Wallace was born in 1960 in Prospect, Kentucky, and grew up on a farm within a largely working-class community. She credits growing up in the South and being privy to the stories of her neighbors and of her Dutch mother's World War II childhood with providing her the perspectives that inspire and inform her plays. Wallace's work has ranged widely in setting and subject matter, from class politics and quarantine in the 1665 London Plague to the sexual and racial politics of the Gulf War. All of her plays share a concern with questions of power, violence, and social justice, often filtered through the perspectives of those denied access to power and of those who struggle to change or escape their living and working conditions. Her plays have been more enthusiastically received in Britain than in the UNITED STATES. However, it was in Atlanta, Georgia, in 2001 that her work inspired a festival dedicated entirely to her writing and sponsored by twelve theater companies.

Wallace's Brechtian influences (such as audience ALIENATION and exposure of sociopolitical roles and structures) and her explorations of the eroticism of violence tie her to British playwrights like CARYL CHURCHILL, David Edgar, HAROLD PINTER, and SARAH KANE. However, Wallace herself has argued for the place of such political dialogue in the American theatrical tradition and locates its earlier expression in the work of CLIFFORD ODETS and ARTHUR MILLER and its current expression through such playwrights as TONY KUSHNER, Robert O'Hara, Kia Corthron, and SUZAN-LORI PARKS.

While it has been her playwriting that has earned her international acclaim, she turned to playwriting from poetry at the age of thirty-two. In the years that followed, she has been a prolific playwright and an engaged theater artist, receiving commissions from the Public Theater in New York and the Royal Shakespeare Company in ENGLAND and organizing two staged readings of new works by many playwrights, one in response to the capital conviction of Mumia Abu-Jamal and the other to protest the embargo of Iraq. She also launched an artistic exchange between American playwrights and Palestinian theater that took place throughout the West Bank in 2002 and is ongoing (the American playwrights' accounts of their trip were published in American Theatre magazine in the July–August and September–October 2002 issues).

Wallace's play Things of Dry Hours (2004) is based on the book Hammer and Hoe by Robin Kelley, about race relations and the Alabama Communist Party in the 1930s. She was awarded a MacArthur Fellowship in 1999 and has written a book of poetry (To Dance a Stony Field, 1995) and a film screenplay (Lawn Dogs, 2001).

PLAYS: The War Boys (1993); In the Fields of Acedama (1993);

The Girl Who Fell Through a Hole in Her Jumper (1993); In the Heart of America (1994); One Flea Spare (1995); Slaughter City (1996); Birdy (1997); The Trestle at Pope Lick Creek (1998); The Inland Sea (2002); Two Into War (2003); Things of Dry Hours (2004); A State of Innocence (2005)

FURTHER READING

Baley, Shannon. "Death and Desire, Apocalypse and Utopia:

Feminist Gestus and the Utopian Performative in the Plays of Naomi Wallace." Modern Drama 47, no. 2 (Summer 2004): 237–249.

Barnett, Claudia. "Dialectic and the Drama of Naomi Wallace."

In Southern Women Playwrights: New Essays in Literary History and Criticism, ed. by Robert L. McDonald and Linda Rohrer. Tuscaloosa: Univ. of Alabama Press, 2002.

Bell, Hilary. "The Landscape Remembers You: A Reflection by Hilary

Bell from an Interview with Naomi Wallace." In Trans-Global Readings: Crossing Theatrical Boundaries, ed. by Caridad Svich. Manchester: Manchester Univ. Press, 2003.

Bilderback, Walter. "The Naomi Wallace Festival and 9/11."

Consciousness, Literature and the Arts 4, no. 3 (December 2003).

Julian, Connie. "Naomi Wallace: Looking for Fire." Revolutionary Worker, no. 1232 (March 14, 2004).

Victoria Sams

THE WALTZ OF THE TOREADORS

General Saint-Pé has never abandoned his invalid wife Amélie, despite her shrewishness and feigned paralysis. For seventeen years, though, he has loved a woman with whom he once danced the Toreador waltz at a regimental ball. Now he loves Ghislaine so much he refuses to make her his mistress, preferring to wait for true marriage. As it so happens, Ghislaine has come into possession of a letter in which Amélie expresses love to her doctor; Saint-Pé has grounds for divorce from Amélie, leading to a bitter confrontation between the furious spouses in which the romantic waltz becomes a danse macabre. Saint-Pé's philandering, however, catches up with him: he cannot duel with his secretary Gaston for Ghislaine's hand because Gaston is his illegitimate son. The General can only soothe his desperate loneliness in the caresses of the new maid.

The Waltz of the Toreadors (La valse des toréadors, 1952) is considered JEAN ANOUILH's "blackest" COMEDY, the most successful expression of an intermediate style whose internal conflicts represent the playwright's preoccupation with incommunicability. As the Doctor says, "You must never understand your enemy—or your wife. . . . We must never understand anyone, in fact; we'll die from it." The Waltz of the Toreadors flopped in its initial staging at the Comédie des Champs-Élysées in 1952; its shifts in tone and genre, from vaudeville to TRAGEDY, from high comedy to MELODRAMA, from one scene to the next, led critics to accuse the play of incoherency and chaos. Indeed, the play was collected in Pièces grinçantes (Grating Plays, 1956), plays Anouilh termed "grating" because of their internal clashes of comedy and tragedy. Both play and playwright have been dismissed as outmoded and trivial; tonal discord, however, was Anouilh's domain of reflection. The progression from Amélie and Saint-Pé's brutality to the farcical denouement is one example of the playwright's delight in formal manipulation: centuries-old comic devices remain credible because they are preceded by unflinching combat. The protagonist recalls Molière's curmudgeons saddled with sickly wives and besieged by secondary characters rooted in commedia archetypes; Saint-Pé embodies Anouilh's most recurrent themes of nostalgic innocence, the tension between idealism and compromise, and the complexities of family relationships.

Believing in the value and power of stage artifice and convention, Anouilh saw drama as endlessly theatrical. While other writers depicted humanity doomed in the wake of war, he tempered his nihilism by positing comedy as crucial: "I'm through with tragedy. . . . Of course everything is sad. So what? Everyone knows it. The soul must be purged. By laughter" (Harvey, 1964). The General fears loneliness, he finds himself trapped in it, and it is heart-wrenching. By the end, however, we point and laugh. As Anouilh wrote in his own defense, "We live in a farcical universe, and we don't dare see it" (Harvey, 1964). If the play's burlesque ending undercuts our sympathy for the General, its comic tone is finally optimistic: ignobility exists—the General is destined to philander—but it is a requisite for grace, by way of guilt and even inspiration. Despite its cool reception in FRANCE, The Waltz of the Toreadors was a hit in both London and New York later in the decade; its 1962 film version starred Peter Sellers.

FURTHER READING

- Della Fazio, Alba. Jean Anouilh. New York: Twayne, 1969.
- Fowle, Wallace. Dionysus in Paris: A Guide to Contemporary French Theatre. London: Gollancz, 1961.
- Harvey, John. Anouilh: A Study in Theatrics. New Haven, Conn.: Yale Univ. Press, 1964.
- McIntyre, H. G. The Theatre of Jean Anouilh. Totowa, N.J.: Barnes & Noble, 1981.
- Pronko, Leonard Cabell. The World of Jean Anouilh. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1961.

Matt Di Cintio

WANDOR, MICHELENE (1940–)

The British feminist playwright and critic Micheline Dinah Wandor was born into a Russian Jewish family in London on April 20, 1940. She was educated at Chingford Secondary Modern School, Essex (1954–1956), and Chingford County High School, Essex (1959–1962). Wandor spent four years in ISRAEL during her youth (1949–1954). She earned a B.A. (honours) at Newnham College, Cambridge (1962), an M.A. in sociology at the University of Essex, Colchester (1975), an LTCL and a DipTCL at the Trinity College of Music, London (1994), and an M.Mus at the University of London and Trinity College of Music (1997).

Wandor was poetry editor for Time Out magazine (1971–1982) and from 1972 to 1977 regularly contributed to Spare Rib magazine. She was playwright-in-residence at the University of Kent, Canterbury (1982–1983) and “Woman Writer in Residence” at Mainz University, GERMANY (2002). Her adaptation of William Luce’s The Belle of Amherst for Thames TV won an International Emmy Award (1987).

During the 1970s and 1980s, Wandor worked with feminist collectives and fringe theater groups, such as Gay Sweatshop (1977, 1985), MONSTROUS REGIMENT (1977), the Women’s Project Company (1978), and Mrs. Worthington’s Daughters (1979). With The Wandering Jew (1987), a dramatization of a novel by Eugène Sue, Wandor was the first British woman playwright to have a mainstage production at the Royal National Theatre.

Wandor has consistently taken on topical, controversial issues such as the Miss World contest (The Day After Yesterday, 1972), prostitution (Whores D’Oeuvres, 1978), artificial insemination by donor (AID Thy Neighbour, 1978), and surrogacy (Wanted, 1988).

She also explores Jewish themes in her work, as in Scissors (1978), a Jewish family COMEDY set in ENGLAND in the 1970s, and Wanted (1988), which stars the biblical matriarch Sarah. Feminist issues and Jewish themes are also characteristic of her short fiction and poetry.

Wandor experiments with a variety of aesthetic forms, ranging from social REALISM and AGITATION-PROPAGANDA to comedy, COLLAGE, and the surreal. Wandor has proved to be a most versatile artist and has also distinguished herself as a poet, short-story writer, broadcaster, theater historian, and musician.

During the 1980s, Wandor edited the four-volume collection of women’s plays in the Plays by Women series, and among the writers she worked with and introduced to a wider public were CARYL CHURCHILL, Pam Gems, LIZ LOCHHEAD, and Louise Page. Her studies Understudies: Theatre and Sexual Politics (1981, rev. as Carry On, Understudies, 1986) and Look Back in Gender (1987; 2001 rev. and updated as Post-War British Drama: Looking Back in Gender) are among the standard works of British feminism.

SELECT PLAYS: You Two Can Be Ticklish (1970); The Day After Yesterday (1972); Mal de Mère (1972); Spilt Milk (1972); Friends and Strangers (1974); To Die Among Friends (1974); Sink Songs (1975); Care and Control (1977); Floorshow (1977, with Caryl Churchill and Bryony Lavery); The Old Wives’ Tale (1977); Penthesilea (1977, adaptation of Heinrich von Kleist’s play); AID Thy Neighbour (1978); Correspondence (broadcast 1978, produced 1979); Scissors (1978); Whores D’Oeuvres (1978); Aurora Leigh (1979, adaptation of the poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning); Future Perfect (1980, with Steve Gooch and Paul Thompson); Rutherford and Son (1980, adaptation of a play by Githa Sowerby); The Blind Goddess (1981, adaptation of a play by Ernst Toller); Whose Greenham (1986); The Wandering Jew (adapted from Eugène Sue’s novel Le Juif Errant [The Wandering Jew, 1844–1845], 1987); Wanted (1988)

FURTHER READING

- Goodman, Lizbeth. “Wandor, Micheline (Dinah).” In Contemporary Women Dramatists, ed. by Kate A. Berney. London: St. James Press, 1994. 255–259.
- Goodman, Lizbeth, and Jane de Gay. “Interview with Micheline Wandor.” In Feminist Stages: Interviews with Women in Contemporary British Theatre. London: Harwood Acad. Pubs., 1996. 90–93.
- Keyssar, Helene. “Communities of Women in Drama: Pam Gems, Micheline Wandor, Ntozake Shange.” In Feminist Theatre: An Introduction to Plays of Contemporary British and American Women. Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1984. 126–147.

Ulrike Behlau

WANG RENJIE (1942–)

Born a native of Quanzhou, Fujian Province, in 1942, Wang Renjie has mainly written liyuanxi, the regional music drama of his hometown and one of the oldest living theaters in CHINA, preserving the tradition of the early nanxi of the Song-Yuan period. His plays, which have been produced successfully on the liyuanxi stage since the late 1980s, are The Lament of a Chaste Woman (Jiefu yin, 1987), Tutor Dong and Widow Li (Dong sheng yu Li shi, 1993), Love Under Evening Maple Trees (Fenglin wan, 1985), Chen Zhongzi and His Wife (Chen Zhongzi, 1990), and Woman Thief and Her Male Escort (Zaoli yu nuzi, 1998). The first three plays are about widows of both traditional and contemporary societies. Wang was, therefore, nicknamed the “Three-Widow Playwright.” The Lament of a Chaste Woman and Tutor Dong and Widow Li earned him two Cao Yu Awards for Dramatic Literature.

In The Lament of a Chaste Woman, Yan Shi, who has been widowed for ten years, shows her feeling for Shen Rong, her little son's tutor-in-residence, on the eve of his departure for the imperial examination. Though he cares for Yan Shi, Shen Rong rejects her, fearing that she will violate the chastity required of a widow. As the tutor rejects her, two of the widow's fingers are injured by the shutting door. Shamed by his rejection and her inability to control her feelings, she cuts her two fingers and vows to remain chaste for the rest of her life. Ten years later, her son, as a top winner in the imperial examination, asks the emperor to vest his mother with the imperial title of the chaste woman for her twenty years of utter devotion to her late husband and her son. But the incident of her two fingers' injury as the result of her onetime desire to be unchaste is revealed to the public by the tutor, although he is an unwilling teller. Despite imperial commendation, Yan Shi is so shamed by public gossip that she commits suicide.

The play is based on an anecdote recorded in a Ming dynasty book. Two prevailing themes in this play, as in some of Wang's other plays, are men's culturally imposed repression of themselves and women's yearning for freedom, which made the latter victims of the social norm.

Wang's Tutor Dong and Widow Li is a COMEDY that can be read as a DECONSTRUCTION of the TRAGEDY in The Lament of a Chaste Woman and a confirmation and realization of what the widow Yan has desired. In the second play, Widow Li wins over Tutor Dong, who had been hired by Li's late husband to watch over her chastity. Whether in a tragedy or in a comedy, Wang's sympathy for women's emancipation is carried out through vivid characterization, beautiful lyrics, and witty dialogues, which are somewhat characteristic of the liyuanxi genre.

As Wang became a well-known playwright, theatrical troupes of other xiqu forms commissioned him to write plays for their productions. He has adapted the complete version of Tang Xianzu's Peony Pavilion (Mudan ting) and Bai Juyi's ballad poetry Pipa Song (Pipa xing, 2001) into kunqu of the same titles for Shanghai Kunqu Opera Troupe. He has also written Jasmine Flower (Suxin hua, 1981) for folk opera (geju) as well as for Zhejiang yueju.

Wang is considered one of the most important xiqu playwrights since the late 1970s. A four-day symposium was held in December 2000 for the study of his plays. About 100 scholars and critics came from Beijing, Shanghai, Sichuan Province, Taiwan, and Hong Kong as well as from various places within Fujian Province to discuss his works. Thirty-six articles were presented, and some of them were later published in theater journals. The event marked a new trend in recognizing the contributions made by playwrights in the xiqu genres.

SELECT PLAYS: Love Under Evening Maple Trees (Fenglin wan, 1985); The Lament of a Chaste Woman (Jiefu yin, 1987); Chen Zhongzi and His Wife (Chen Zhongzi, 1990); Tutor Dong and Widow Li (Dong sheng yu Li shi, 1992); Woman Thief and Her Male Escort (Zaoli yu nuzai, 1998)

FURTHER READING

- An Kui. "Wei chuantong er hou chaoyue—du Wang Renjie juzuo" [Respect and surpass the tradition: Reading Wang Renjie's plays]. Juben (Play Scripts) 3 (2001): 51–53.
- Fu Jin. "Yuwang de qizhi: Wang Renjie juzuo de shehuixue jiedu" [The banner for desire: Sociological implications in Wang Renjie's plays]. Zhongguo xiqu (Chinese Theatre) 2 (2001): 42–44.
- Wang Renjie. Sanwei zhai jugao [A collection of plays of the Sanwei study]. Beijing: Zhongguo xiqu chubanshe, 2000.
- Zeitlin, Judith T. "My Year of Peonies." Asian Theatre Journal 19, no. 1 (Spring 2002): 124–133.

Wenwei Du

WAR BABIES

The most complex play by MARGARET HOLLINGSWORTH, one of CANADA'S foremost dramatists of the 1980s, War Babies was also, according to critic Dorothy Parker (1988), "a consummation of all [Margaret] Hollingsworth's earlier technical, stylistic, and thematic explorations." Hollingsworth's work foregrounds female characters, often immigrant women, struggling with feelings of isolation and a precarious sense of IDENTITY. The protagonist Esme in War Babies, a writer traumatized by her pregnancy at age forty-two, feels estranged from her war correspondent husband and herself until she writes a surreal play that enacts her fears and fantasies. First produced in Vancouver in 1984, nominated for the 1986 Governor General's Award for Drama, and remounted in 1987 in Toronto, War Babies metatheatrically explores important issues of gender and creativity in fascinating ways.

Esme and her husband Colin have a fragile relationship during the late stages of her pregnancy. They only connect when playing what they call "war games," and she is anxious that he will leave her to go on assignment when she needs him most, ambivalent as he is about fatherhood and wedded to his job. She also fears a repeat of her first traumatic bout with motherhood fifteen years earlier that led to her giving up her son, Craig. Complicating matters, Craig was adopted by Esme's best friend, Barb, Colin's ex-girlfriend, who subsequently married Jack, Esme's first husband and Craig's father. Finally, Esme has discovered a secret that Colin has kept from her—that while covering a war in Sudan, he killed a young boy. Traditional gender roles predominate: the man is defined by work and violence; the woman is constrained by motherhood.

But Hollingsworth the playwright gives Esme the playwright the means to rewrite the script. Esme writes a sensationalistic play within the play (PWP) in which roles are ironically reversed. In it she overcomes her paralysis, buys a gun, and dresses in Colin's clothes to rob banks. Colin, in the PWP, who has renewed his affair with Barb, becomes increasingly housebound and is eventually arrested for the robberies. In a series of prison scenes he is brutalized by a young guard—Esme's grown son, Craig. Watching these scenes materialize as she writes them, the "real"

Esme gains strength, confidence, and self-awareness, finding a healthy middle ground between the extremes of her life and her theatrical revenge fantasies. War Babies ends in REALISM (the "real" Barb, Jack, and Craig are nothing like their PWP versions) and reconciliation. A girl-child is born, though ominously named Cassandra, and Esme makes peace with both Colin and Craig—although, as Colin says, "maybe it's only a cease-fire."

Praised for its intelligence, complexity, and theatrical sophistication, War Babies has also been criticized as overly ambitious, confusing, and soap operatic. But it remains one of the few plays of its era that deals seriously with a woman's subjective experience of childbirth as well as the dilemma of the female writer faced with the responsibilities of family. Its powerful, imaginative presentation of psychological, emotional, and political issues makes War Babies an important play.

FURTHER READING

Hollingsworth, Margaret. Willful Acts. Rev. ed. Vancouver: Talonbooks, 1998.

Parker, Dorothy. "Alienation and Identity: The Plays of Margaret Hollingsworth." Canadian Literature, no. 118 (Autumn 1988): 97–113.

Rudakoff, Judith, and Rita Much. Fair Play: 12 Women Speak (Conversations with Canadian Playwrights). Toronto: Simon & Pierre, 1990.

Zimmerman, Cynthia. Playwriting Women: Female Voices in English Canada. Toronto: Simon & Pierre, 1994.

Jerry Wasserman

WARIAT I ZAKONNICA See THE MADMAN AND THE NUN

WASSERSTEIN, WENDY (1950–2006)

Feminism has affected me more in my writing than in a specifically political way. Sitting down to write a play that has three parts for women over forty, I think, is political. . . . My work is often thought of as lightweight commercial comedy, and I have always thought, no, you don't understand: this is in fact a political act. The Sisters Rosensweig had the largest advance in Broadway history, therefore nobody is going to turn down a play on Broadway because a woman wrote it or because it's about women.

—Wendy Wasserstein, in an interview with Laurie Winer, 1997
Wendy Wasserstein was not only one of the UNITED STATES's most commercially successful contemporary playwrights but also an especially important figure in the history of American female dramatists. While her couching of serious social commentary in witty banter and comfortable well-made plays has labeled her as a writer only of romantic COMEDIES, her work has consistently challenged gender stereotypes and given powerful voice to the concerns, professional and personal, of the post-1960s "liberated" woman.

Wasserstein was born on October 18, 1950, into an upper-middle-class Jewish family in Brooklyn, New York. She started writing seriously as an undergraduate at the all-female Mount Holyoke College; and after graduating in 1971, she entered a master's program in creative writing at City College of New York. Her first play, Any Woman Can't, was presented OFF-BROADWAY at Playwrights Horizons in 1973. Meanwhile Wasserstein went back to school, this time to the Yale School of Drama, where she developed her breakthrough play, UNCOMMON WOMEN AND OTHERS, about the friendship among five students at Mount Holyoke College confronting the oncoming dilemmas of marriage, career, and sexual liberation. Its premiere off-Broadway by the Phoenix Theatre in 1977 won an Obie Award for Best Play and went on to national fame when PBS (Public Broadcast Service) aired the production on television in 1978.

Her next play, Isn't It Romantic (final version, 1983), also portrayed the dynamics of female fellowship—this time between two twenty-something women—but also more explicitly examined the young professional woman's quest to "have it all." After various one-acts in the ensuing years (including an entry in the 1987 Chekhovian anthology Orchards), THE HEIDI CHRONICLES (1988) offered what many still consider Wasserstein's fullest expression of her themes, tracing the history of the women's movement from the 1960s to the 1980s, through the eyes of a brilliant yet conflicted female art historian. Transferring from a sold-out opening at Playwrights Horizons, the play became her Broadway debut and earned her both the Tony Award and the Pulitzer Prize for Best Play in 1989.

Wasserstein followed this critical triumph with the family comedy-drama The Sisters Rosensweig (1992), about a London reunion of three middle-aged Jewish American sisters, each fighting her own domestic battle against the backdrop of a changing post-Cold War world. She continued addressing political and social conditions more directly in the Washington drama An American Daughter (1997), inspired by the difficulties faced by women nominated for public office, and in Old Money (2000), which—in a bold stylistic experiment for Wasserstein—flashed back and forth between wealthy present-day New Yorkers and their ancestors a century earlier living in the same townhouse. Her final play, Third (2005), examined politics, ethics, and class in the relationship between a feminist professor and a male student she accuses of plagiarism.

While appreciating the erudite New York Jewish humor of Wasserstein's characters, critics have been less impressed by her more ambitious dramatic impulses, especially in her later work. Her champions, though, extol her as a pioneering woman writer whose success in a still male-dominated theater world opened a door for female dramatists to come. Wasserstein died January 30, 2006, from lymphoma.

Other nontheatrical writings include two collections of essays, Bachelor Girls (1990) and Shiksa Goddess (2001); a children's book, Pamela's First Musical (1996); a libretto for the three-part opera Central Park (1999); the screenplay for the romantic comedy The Object of My Affection (1998); and the posthumously published novel Elements of Style (2006).

[See also Feminist Drama in the United States]

SELECT PLAYS: Any Woman Can't (1973); Uncommon Women and Others (1977); Isn't It Romantic (1981–1983); The Heidi Chronicles (1988); The Sisters Rosensweig (1992); An American Daughter (1997); Old Money (2000); Third (2005)

FURTHER READING

Barnett, Claudia, ed. Wendy Wasserstein: A Casebook. New York: Garland, 1999.

Bigsby, C. W. E. Contemporary American Playwrights. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1999.

Bryer, Jackson R., ed. The Playwright's Art: Conversations with Contemporary American Dramatists. Jefferson, N.C.: MacFarland, 1991.

Kolin, Philip C., and Colby H. Kullman, eds. Speaking on Stage: Interviews with Contemporary American Playwrights. Tuscaloosa: Univ. of Alabama Press, 1996.

Plimpton, George, ed. Playwrights at Work: The Paris Review. New York: Modern Library, 2000.

Savran, David. The Playwright's Voice: American Dramatists on Memory, Writing and the Politics of Culture. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1999.

Wasserstein, Wendy. Bachelor Girls. New York: Knopf, 1990.

—. Shiksa Goddess: Or, How I Spent my Forties: Essays by Wendy Wasserstein. New York: Knopf, 2001.

Garrett Eisler

WASTE

It is unusual for a play to occupy an important place in theater history because of performances that never happened. That is the case, however, with HARLEY GRANVILLE-BARKER's Waste (1906). A review of the 1936 production of Waste in the Observer of December 6, 1936, summarizes the play's conflict-fraught history and provides a view of the play's role in debates about the state of British theater in the early 20th century:

Written in 1906, refused the Censor's license, privately performed, much read and discussed, licensed as respectable in 1920, re-written in 1926, and at last publicly produced in 1936—the history of Waste—significant title!—gives melancholy confirmation to [GEORGE BERNARD] SHAW's opinion that the English theater is apt to be a generation behind the time.

Indeed, Waste provides a case study of the frustration that playwrights felt about the censorship exercised by the Examiner of Plays, which they perceived as one of the problems of Victorian theater that was continuing in the 20th century.

Waste tells the story of an abortion that jeopardizes a politician's career. Independent Member of Parliament Henry Trebell is on the brink of realizing his vision of disestablishing the church and using the recouped funds to create a utopian educational system. His career and life's work, however, ultimately are lost not because of the death of the married Amy Campbell after her abortion but for other political reasons. It is his consciousness of wasted life—his own, because he will not be able to do his work, and that of his unborn child—that leaves him feeling “barren” and “empty . . . of all virtue” and leads to his suicide. It remains a matter of speculation whether the play was denied a license because of its frank treatment of sexuality or because of its political content.

Responding to the censor in an article in Sketch on October 23, 1907, Granville-Barker did not debate “whether he has done wisely or unwisely with regard to my play” but instead argued against the very principle of a censor. Granville-Barker suggested that theater managers, rather than plays, should be licensed and that any audience member could complain to a licensing committee “if [the manager] produced a play which was obscene, indecent, or objectionable.” He advocated in favor of elected officials to govern the arts, rather than “one irresponsible individual who shelters himself behind the fact that he is a Court official, and, as a Court official, does not care a scrap for public opinion.”

Reviews of the play's private performance by the Stage Society at the Imperial Theatre on November 24, 1907, credited Waste with being a play of ideas but also faulted the play for being overly elaborate in its treatment of politics. The play enjoys occasional revivals. Reviews of Sir Peter Hall's 1997 production of the play at London's Old Vic were split about whether it remained relevant in light of contemporary politics. Throughout its history, Waste has been best received by those who embrace its involvement in politics: both the role that it played in debates about the position of political officials in cultural life and its work in developing a theater of ideas.

[See also England, 1860–1940]

FURTHER READING

Billington, Michael. “Liars and Cheats.” Review of the Old Vic's 1997 Waste. Guardian, the Week (March 15, 1997): 7.

Kennedy, Dennis. Granville Barker and the Dream of Theatre. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1985.

Newey, Glen. “Balked Scraps from the Farmyard.” Review of the Old Vic's 1997 Waste. TLS (April 4, 1997).

Salenius, Elmer W. Harley Granville Barker. Boston: Twayne, 1982.

Renata Kabetts Miller

WATANABE ERIKO (1955–)

Watanabe Eriko is a Japanese playwright, director, and actor, widely known for her acting in film and television but who established her reputation as a playwright by winning the Kishida Kunio Drama Prize in 1982 for Kitarō the Ghost Buster (Gegege no Ge). Watanabe began as a director and in 1978 co-founded with Kisaragi Koharu the 200 (Nijū-maru) company, changing the name to 300 (Sanjū-maru) in 1980. The Japanese pronunciations of the company's names do not mean 200 or 300 but rather two and three concentric circles. Watanabe thinks of circles as transcending the earth's contour, and she tries to create plays that transcend earthly forms.

In addition to Kitarō, 300 produced many of Watanabe's works such as Shadows of the Night—A Gentle Ghost Story (Yoru no Kage—Yasashii Kaidan, 1981), The Forest of Wind (Kaze no Furu Mori, 1989), and TEMPO—Goodbye, Night! (TEMPO—Yoru yo Sayonara, 1995). In 1987 Watanabe won the Kinokuniya Theatre Prize for 300's production of A Girl with Eyelids (Mabuta no Me, 1987). Watanabe's works premiered with other companies such as EN and Shinjuku Ryōzanpaku also have been well received. 300 disbanded in 1997. Watanabe became a freelance playwright, forming a production company in 2000.

Many of Watanabe's works are memory plays that shift seamlessly between the past and present. Her plays also reflect the influence of KARA JÜRÖ, using a mixture of reality and illusion, characters searching for meaning in their ordinary lives, songs, and other elements of spectacle. Although her plays are replete with the fantastic, Watanabe claims that the action of her plays is realistic because dreams and fantasy are contained within real life.

Kitarō the Ghost Buster combines a short story with characters from a popular comic. An introverted schoolboy, Makio, feels responsible for the deaths of his friend and his stillborn twin sister. He is bullied at school (the experience of Watanabe and her brother) and fantasizes about a friend to save him. Kitarō, hero of the comic Gegege no Kitarō, arrives, and they overcome the bullies, including Makio's teacher, who is actually Kitarō's comic-book nemesis Ratman. In Watanabe's theatrical fantasy world actors play dual characters. The old woman lying in bed (Watanabe originated the role) appears to be Makio's mother, but the schoolgirl, who is his worst tormentor, is her double.

A Gentle Ghost Story also centers on forces of dreams and fantasies but has heightened spectacle of character transformations and time slippages. The play shifts in time and space between contemporary JAPAN, 19th-century Europe, and a land of frozen tundra. Characters fly in and out on horses, climb up "beanstalks," and confront evil giants and the King of Hell. This all takes place in worlds that mirror each other and in which black is white and good is bad. As with many of Watanabe's plays, an older sister helps her younger brother overcome trials.

In TEMPO the character Shinji has to come to terms with the death of his brothers. In the fantasy/dreamscape of the play, chairs and refrigerators come to life à la Disney. In the end, Shinji acknowledges the world of dreams but knows life does not have a Disneyland happy ending.

PLAYS: Shadows of the Night—A Gentle Ghost Story (Yoru no Kage—Yasashii Kaidan, 1981); Kitarō the Ghost Buster (Gegege no Ge, 1982); Secret of the Yellow Room (Kiirōi Heya no Himitsu, 1983); A Summer Crossing the River (Kawa o Wataru Natsu, 1986); A Girl with Eyelids (Mabuta no Me, 1987); Old Refrain (Ōrudo Rijūrēn, 1987); The Night Swarming Star Calvary (Yoru ni Muragaru Hoshi no Kibatai, 1988); The Forest of Wind (Kaze no Furu Mori, 1989); The Legend of the Dancing Sand (Odoru Suna no Densetsu, 1989); Crayon Island (Kureyon no Shima, 1991); The Red Shoes (Akai Kutsu, 1994); TEMPO—Goodbye, Night! (TEMPO—Yoru yo Sayonara, 1995); Night Express (Shinya Tokkyū, 1996); Star Village (Hoshi no Mura, 2001)

FURTHER READING

- Japan Playwrights Association, ed. Half a Century of Japanese Theater: III. 1980s, Part 1. Tokyo: Kinokuniya, 2001.
Kazama Ken. Shōgekijō no Fūkei [The little theater landscape]. Tokyo: Chūō Kōronsha, 1992.
Uchino Tadashi. Merodorama no Gyakushū: "Shiengeki" no 80 Nendai [The revenge of melodrama: "Private theater" of the 80s]. Tokyo: Keisō Press, 1996.

John D. Swain

WATA PALWATA See ROUTES AND ESCAPE ROUTES

THE WATER STATION

The Water Station (Mizu no Eki, 1981), a Japanese play by Ōta SHŌGO, the first of his Station trilogy, which includes The Earth Station (1985) and The Wind Station (1986). In the 1990s he added three more Station plays: The Sand Station (1993), The Water Station 2 (1995), and The Water Station 3 (1998). Ōta and his Theater of Transformation (Tenkei Gekijō, 1968–1988) won the Kinokuniya Theatre Award in the Group Division for The Water Station in 1984. It toured major cities in Europe and North America in the 1980s.

Ōta was inspired to experiment with silence and slow movement when he first produced The Tale of Komachi Told by the Wind on a nō stage in 1977. He refined his aesthetic in the Station plays. The Water Station is striking for the absence of dialogue; the slowed down, though natural, motion of the performers; and the use of basic elements such as water and space. Against a desolate landscape stands a faucet with a broken spigot, water trickling constantly. A pile of junk rises conspicuously in the barren scene. Travelers come by, interact, avail themselves of the water, and then move on. Nothing is said, and no new lasting relationships are formed. In this starkest of situations, the utter aloneness of each individual is revealed. In this way, Ōta creates an existential theater that prioritizes the species level over the individual level of existence and highlights the birth-to-death life cycle of the human race rather than human endeavors in society.

The Water Station illustrates in its purest form Ōta's theatrical code of divestiture. Distrust of language as the main tool of artistic expression led Ōta to look for a different kind of language, a body-centered code that applied the "power of passivity," the ability to create aesthetic distance by refraining from reaching out excessively to the audience—to do less, to explain less. The three aspects of his code are silence, slow movement, and empty space.

For Ōta, silence rather than speech is the normal human condition. He claims that we spend ninety percent of our life without talking. Silence as a divestiture of words creates distance from language-centered social activity. Slow movement contributes to an emphasis on the species level by luring both the actor's and viewer's attention away from culturally determined uses of the body. Ōta, furthermore, reduces social aspects by paring down the set to an elemental landscape.

One source of his bleak landscapes lies in his childhood experience during the 1945 repatriation of the Japanese in CHINA. On the long trek from Beijing to Tianjin, many Japanese discarded their belongings, which became mountains of junk by the wayside. Ōta remembers playing in the junkpile and then looking up to find himself alone, with the horizon stretching out before him.

[See also Japan]

FURTHER READING

- Boyd, Mari. "Unaccommodated Man in Ōta Shōgo's Plays: A Study of Silence and Slow Movement in Mizu no Eki and Chi no Eki." Sophia International Review 9 (1987): 22–28.
- Ōta Shōgo. The Water Station. Tr. by Mari Boyd. Asian Theater Journal 7, no. 2 (Fall 1990): 150–183.
- Senda Akihiko. Nihon no Gendai Engeki [The modern theater of Japan]. Tokyo: Iwanami Shoten, 1995.

Mari Boyd

THE WAVE

UTPAL DUTT never had qualms about declaring himself a propagandist playwright. He firmly believed that theater needed to be an active agent in manufacturing consent in favor of a Marxist revolution in INDIA. To this effect, he wrote numerous plays based on meticulous research on Indian history (although impartial interpretation almost never marked his project), challenging the Gandhian history of India. Most of them were highly successful. Of these, The Wave (Kallol), written and produced in 1965, about a mutiny in the Indian Navy during the last days of the British Raj in 1946, is considered a masterpiece. One of many British ships that fought during World War II, the H.M.I.S. Khyber was the only one that did not return before its sailors suffered five months of torture at the hands of the Germans.

At the beginning of the play, Gunner Sardul Singh, leader of the Khyber crew, returns home to the slums of the Bombay waterfront. In the meantime, assuming the Khyber's absence meant the demise of its crew members, Sardul's fiancée Lakshmi became engaged to Subhash, who had saved her life when it was endangered by British soldiers. A heartbroken Sardul leaves Bombay to make the ship his home.

On February 18, 1946, Sardul and his crew turn against the British navy. Ignoring the Indian National Congress' call for nonviolent struggle, the Khyber crew takes up arms to rescue Castle Barracks, the headquarters of the Royal Indian Navy in Bombay, from an attack launched by the British Indian Army.

On land, the people of the waterfront slum defend themselves against the retaliation of the British forces. The British take Sardul's mother hostage, as a way of forcing the Khyber crew to negotiate with them. The British get the Khyber crew arrested, and Sardul, in his attempt to fight back, dies.

The play ran for 850 shows, creating a sensation in Kolkata and producing violent reactions both for and against. Dutt was jailed without trial, and the theater was attacked several times. For a while, newspapers, under governmental pressure, refused to carry advertisements of the play, but word-of-mouth and handbills were more than enough to draw the audience. A public meeting was held on the Kolkata Maidan (a sprawling Commons that is still a venue to big political rallies) to mark The Wave's sooth performance, which was attended by a million people. The Wave was a milestone production, not only for its adrenaline-laced political message and melodramatic plotline but also for its incredible stagecraft and lights. The Bengali professional theater had made many advances in staging illusions and had shown epic battle scenes and running trains onstage. But The Wave was the first to show the starboard of a gigantic warship. The Wave is also a landmark production in the history of Indian theater for the political uproar it caused in the late 1960s, just as Bengal was seeing the rise of a nascent Maoist revolution that Dutt initially endorsed. He revived the production in the 1980s with the People's Little Theatre.

FURTHER READING

- Banerjee, Himani. The Mirror of Class: Essays on Bengali Theatre. Kolkata: Papyrus, 1998.
- Bharucha, Rustom. "The Revolutionary Theater of Utpal Dutt." In Rehearsals of a Revolution: The Political Theater of Bengal. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 1983.
- Bhatia, Nandi. "Colonial History and Postcolonial Interventions: Staging the 1857 Mutiny as 'The Great Rebellion.'" In Acts of Authority/Acts of Resistance: Theater and Politics in Colonial and Postcolonial India. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Mich. Press, 2004.
- Datta, Utpal. Towards a Revolutionary Theatre. Calcutta: M.C. Sarkar & Sons Private Ltd., 1995.
- Interview with Utpal Dutt. In Contemporary Indian Theatre: Interviews with Playwrights and Directors, ed. by Paul Jacob. New Delhi: Sangeet Natak Akademi, 1989.
- Mukherjee, Sushil. The Story of the Calcutta Theatres. Calcutta: K. P. Bagchi & Co., 1982.

Sudipto Chatterjee

WE

During the Cultural Revolution in CHINA (1966–1976), twenty million "educated youth" from the cities were sent down to the countryside to be reeducated by the peasants and to be tempered in the crucible of revolution. Their trials and tribulations, hopes and despairs, are the subject of this play with the unusual title We (WM, huaju), by Wang Peigong and Wang Gui. Besides being an abbreviation of the pinyin spelling of the Chinese Wo Men (meaning “we”), these two letters also resemble a pictograph of two persons, one standing upright, the other on his head. This play is therefore about the collective experiences of the “sent-down” youth and their struggles to find their place in society and meaning in their lives.

SYMBOLISM in the play’s title is matched by its structure with the four acts of “Winter,” “Spring,” “Summer,” and “Autumn” each representing a phase in the lives of the characters. In the first act, the howling wind, the bitter cold, and the backbreaking labor create a powerful impression of life in the “collective household.” The earthquake that concludes this act marks the end of the Cultural Revolution and the beginning of the seven characters’ search for new identities. In order to get ahead in a rapidly changing society, they sacrifice friendship, love, and personal integrity, but when they meet again eight years later, they still have not found a purpose for their lives. Their disillusionment is symbolized by one of them, the only character that has kept his ideals, literally going blind. “The Song of the Young Pioneers,” which they sing in act 1 and again at the end of the play, becomes a poignant reminder of their lost youth and lost hopes.

We has broken new ground both as dramatic literature and as performing art. Its language is refreshingly playful and irreverent, poking fun at political movements and communist leaders. Under the direction of Wang Gui, this play successfully combines realistic characterization with symbolic representation. On an almost bare stage, the actors’ movements and gestures indicate time, place, and action. Symbolism is also used to convey the meaning of the play. In the earthquake scene, for example, all seven characters huddle together and look out through the frame of a window with fear and anticipation in their eyes. This tableau is a portrait of the Chinese nation awakening from the ten-year-long nightmare of the Cultural Revolution.

The production of We in 1985 generated a great deal of controversy. Dramatists hailed it as a new chapter of modern Chinese spoken drama, but official reactions were definitely negative. The staging of this play coincided with the convening of the Communist Party Congress, which called for strengthening ideological education while promoting economic reform. Under such circumstances, the play was criticized for its lack of heroic characters, its gloomy outlook, and its negative social effect. After a few “internal showings” and short engagements, We was banned permanently. The Drama Troupe of the Chinese Air Force also dismissed Wang Peigong and Wang Gui. In 1990 in the aftermath of the Tiananmen incident, a summary of the controversies surrounding this play was republished with an additional warning that literature and art must toe the Party line.

Wang Peigong was born in Taikang, Henan Province, in 1943. After leaving the air force, Wang joined the Chinese Youth Art Theater. He is now a freelance writer, writing mostly for film and television.

FURTHER READING

- Kang Hongxing. “Wang Gui daoyan yishu de meixue zhuiqiu” [The aesthetic pursuits of Wang Gui’s art of directing]. Xiju (Drama) 3 (1987): 100–108.
- Li Kehuan. “Bu’an de linghun reng zai qiusuo: WM (Wo men) duhou” [A restless soul is still searching: Thoughts after reading We]. Juben (Play Scripts) 9 (1985): 26–27.
- Wang Peigong and Wang Gui. WM [We]. Juben (Play Scripts) 9 (1985): 6–23. English translation in Yu, Shiao-ling S., tr. and ed., Chinese Drama After the Cultural Revolution, 1979–1989. Lewiston: Edwin Mellen Press, 1996. 291–348.
- Yi Ming. “WM (Wo men) fengbo shimo” [The whole story of the controversies about We]. Juben (Play Scripts) 11 (1990): 18–26.

Shiao-ling Yu

THE WEAVERS

Men are tortured slowly here.
In this chamber of torture
Sighs are heard everywhere
And bear witness to the despair.
—“The Weavers Song,” Act 3

The Weavers (Die Weber) is GERHART HAUPTMANN’s most influential play. Written in 1892 and first performed privately by Berlin’s Freie Bühne in 1893, The Weavers created as much controversy as Hauptmann’s first drama, BEFORE DAYBREAK (Vor Sonnenaufgang). With The Weavers it was not the moral but rather the political content that generated the storm. Many Social Democrats, led by the Marxist critic Franz Mehring, saw the play as the first truly revolutionary drama. The ruling elite perceived it similarly and responded by banning the play. Lengthy court procedures followed, and when the drama was first performed publicly in 1894 at Berlin’s Deutsches Theater, Emperor Friedrich Wilhelm II canceled his subscription to the theater.

The Weavers is based on a historical event: the 1844 weaver uprising in Silesia that was brutally crushed by the military. The play has five acts but is far from a classical drama. There are no main characters, no climax, and no resolution. The play’s loosely connected acts foreshadow the structure of both expressionist drama and the EPIC THEATER of BERTOLT BRECHT. The play begins in the home of the manufacturer Dreißiger. The weavers, emaciated and dressed in rags, are delivering their handwoven materials for which they receive alms. The second act portrays the miserable living conditions of an individual family. An outsider named Max Jäger enters the scene and recites the revolutionary “Weavers’ Song.” In act 3 the weavers rise up and sing the “Weavers’ Song,” which the authorities have forbidden. In the fourth act, the weavers are back in Dreißiger’s house, this time looting and destroying everything in sight, forcing Dreißiger and his family to flee. The final act focuses on an old weaver named Hilse. He is a devout Christian who believes in God’s divine plan and opposes violence. As the revolutionary weavers confront the approaching military, old Hilse, watching the conflict from his window, is fatally shot.

The Weavers is regarded as GERMANY's, and perhaps Europe's, best example of a naturalist play. The drama's materialist PHILOSOPHY and its sociopolitical content underscore such an interpretation. There is no individual hero or heroine; the leading role belongs to the proletariat. The extensive use of dialect (the first version of The Weavers was written entirely in dialect) and the detailed STAGE DIRECTIONS also exemplify a naturalist representation of reality. However, the success of The Weavers results from the fact that the play transcends the limitations of NATURALISM. The most strikingly antinaturalist element in the play is the ending. The appearance of the deeply religious Hilse functions as a counterpoint to the naturalist elements by introducing both the supernatural and the spiritual.

Commentaries of The Weavers have focused mainly on the play's ending and the extent to which the drama can be considered socialist. Theodor Fontane pointed out that Hilse's anti-revolutionary stance contradicts a socialist interpretation of the play. Others have interpreted Hilse's death as a confirmation of socialist doctrine. With Hilse dies RELIGION, the opium of the people. Hauptmann himself considered the play social, not socialist, and many critics have pointed out that Hauptmann is driven primarily by compassion for the suffering weavers.

FURTHER READING

Findlay, Bill. "Silesian into Scots: Gerhart Hauptmann's The Weavers."

Modern Drama 41, no. 1 (1998): 90–104.

Mehring, Franz. "On Hauptmann's 'The Weavers' (1893)." New Theatre Quarterly 11, no. 42 (1995): 184–189.

Williams, Kirk. "Anti-theatricality and the Limits of Naturalism."

Modern Drama 44, no. 3 (2001): 284–299.

Kerstin T. Gaddy

DIE WEBER See THE WEAVERS

THE WEDDING

The premiere of STANISŁAW WYSPIAŃSKI's The Wedding (Wesele) in Cracow on March 16, 1901, is one of the great events in the history of Polish theater and a landmark in the development of Polish drama. A prophetic work constantly restaged and reinterpreted, The Wedding has profound resonance for Polish audiences, drawing upon collective cultural memories and complex literary and theatrical traditions. It is a play about national destiny and IDENTITY, raising disturbing questions about guilt and responsibility, class conflict and solidarity, past and future.

The action of The Wedding takes place in a small village near Cracow. The political context is the longing for independence of a country that has long been occupied and sunk slowly into apathy. The motive force is the fashionable idealization of the peasant class by intellectuals who feel that only with the support of the peasants will it be possible to free the nation.

The actual event giving rise to the work was the marriage of Wyspiański's poet friend to a peasant girl in a union designed to unite the two classes and impart a sense of national purpose. The drama covers the wedding celebration in a farmhouse where the guests—local peasants and city intelligentsia—spend the night talking and drinking. Couples dance in and out like marionettes to hypnotic music played offstage. In a blend of native tradition and European modernism, Wyspiański utilizes the stylized movements of the szopka, the folk nativity play with its rod puppets.

In jest the Poet-Bridegroom invites the Mulch (a protective covering for the rosebush in the garden) to join the festivities. When midnight strikes, the straw man appears and presides as master of eerie ceremonies, pulling strings that make others dance to his tune and announcing the arrival of apparitions, dreams, and nightmares. As night grows deeper, these ghosts from the past (including the Cossack seer, Wernyhora, who has predicted the liberation of POLAND from RUSSIA) mingle with the living, until the human characters become engulfed in a phantasmagoric atmosphere halfway between waking and sleeping.

The excited guests imagine they see omens in the sky. Wernyhora declares the time has come to send a boy to fetch the mythic golden horn that will give the call to heroic action. The entire group, including peasants armed with scythes, looks down the road, waiting for the cock to crow and the message to arrive. The sound of hooves announces the boy's return, but he has lost the horn and forgotten the message.

In the blue light of dawn, the stupefied revelers, weary of waiting for a nonexistent message, begin a slow somnambulistic dance to creaking music played by the Mulch on a fiddle improvised out of two broken sticks. The whole puppet show, as though in a deep sleep, goes through its trancelike motions. Wyspiański's Mulch dance—denouement to The Wedding—is a powerful theatrical image of stagnation, despair, and death-in-life that is taken up again and again by Polish playwrights, novelists, and filmmakers throughout the rest of the 20th century.

FURTHER READING

Witoszek, Nina. "Polish Nuptial Dramas." In The Theatre of Recollection:

A Cultural Study of the Modern Dramatic Tradition in Ireland and Poland.

Stockholm: Stockholm Studies in English, Univ. of Stockholm, 1988. 113–139.

Wyspiański, Stanisław. The Wedding. Tr. and intro. by Gerard T.

Kapolka. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Ardis, 1990.

———. The Wedding. Tr. by Noel Clark and intro. by Jerzy Peterkiewicz.

London: Oberon Bks., 1998.

Daniel Gerould

WEDDING DAY AT THE CRO-MAGNONS'

Why is the war so beautiful? Why can't I take my eyes off it? These fireworks! It's so enthralling mama, I'm kneeling, wide awake, at the open window, enraptured by the horror! Oh, it's so hard to keep my eyes closed! It's all so beautiful.

—Nelly

While Nelly may find the war beautiful, the audience will find it hard to ignore the vulgar, perverse, violent, grotesque, dehumanizing, and destabilizing effects of war. Indeed, after enduring the violence and profanity of this Lebanese family, the audience most likely will believe that war is hell.

The setting of WAJDI MOUAWAD's Wedding Day at the Cro-Magnons (Journée de nocés chez les Cro-Magnons, 1992) is not explicitly stated, but it is fair to assume the play's action is set in Beirut, Lebanon, during the Civil War of 1975–1990. The basic plot of the play is straightforward: against the backdrop of war, a Lebanese family is preparing for the wedding of its eldest daughter, Nelly, a narcoleptic who falls asleep whenever the atrocities of war intrude into her family's affairs. All the family members take part in the wedding preparations: Neyif, the father, brings home a live sheep and slaughters it with sewing scissors. Nazha, the mother, makes mashed potatoes that are too rotten to be fried. Neel, the youngest son, assists both his parents as he complains by spouting out violent expletives. As the play continues, it becomes apparent that there is no fiancé—the family simply is making it up, preparing for a wedding feast while knowing there is not going to be a wedding.

This absurdity is central to the play, as characters say and do ridiculous things that cannot be rationally explained. For example, Nelly tells Souhayla, the neighborhood friend, that she is ugly for no reason. These nonsensical actions of the characters in the play reveal a deep pathos of the human condition. The deep despair all the characters endure reveals how war can and does divide close family members. This closeness is revealed when Neel remembers a kindness his father had shown him in his youth. Sadly, Nayif responds by telling his son, "Oh shut up."

This despair that defines humankind is not so subtly implied throughout the play and also illuminates the title of the play. As Cro-Magnons are defined as an early form of modern human, the title of the play suggests that nothing has changed from the beginning of time to the present day—humanity still fights wars that reduce individuals to mere objects of wrath. And yet in spite of this, the play concludes with a magical occurrence. After the audience witnesses and endures the depths of despair and hopelessness of this family, a gentleman caller actually arrives for Nelly. Without explanation, this fiancé arrives to take Nelly away from the perversity that surrounds her.

There are several notable similarities between this play and TENNESSEE WILLIAMS's play THE GLASS MENAGERIE. Both have a daughter out of touch with reality and a family attempting to get her married. Unlike Laura, however, Nelly does find a mate—although Mouawad gives no real explanation about how that occurs.

FURTHER READING

- Kourilsky, Françoise, ed. Playwrights of Exile: An International Anthology. New York: Ubu Repertory Theater Pubs., 1997.
Mouawad, Wajdi. Wedding Day at the Cro-Magnons. Toronto: Playwrights Canada Press, 2001.

Thaddeus Wakefield

WEDDING GOWN

Wedding Gown (Vestido de noiva), by Brazilian playwright NELSON RODRIGUES, premiered on December 28, 1943, at Teatro Municipal, Rio de Janeiro, BRAZIL. The play marked the renovation of Brazilian drama and theater through an ingenious staging by Zbigniew Ziembinski, a Polish émigré director, whose mastery of European AVANT-GARDE expressionistic techniques enabled him to create a spectacle of remarkable impact. The author establishes a multilayered narrative unfolding in three dimensions clearly established in the script and onstage: reality, memory, and hallucination. The heroine, Alaíde, is dying in a hospital after being hit by a car. Most of the action takes place inside her traumatized mind. On the plane of memory, she reenacts an explosive triangular affair. Having married Pedro, her sister Lúcia's boyfriend, she sees husband and sister-in-law become lovers and plot against her life. She thus escapes into a world of morbid romantic fantasy through the diary of Madame Clessi, a famous cocotte of the turn of the century murdered by a seventeen-year-old lover. In her hallucination Alaíde encounters Clessi and her entourage, who help her reconstitute her life story. All such reminiscence and figments of imagination are framed by brief scenes on the plane of actuality: mostly newspapermen reporting the accident and hospital surgeons witnessing her agony with indifference. In the third act she eventually dies without having recovered consciousness. Reality takes over: her sister prepares to marry the widower. However, these final events are watched and commented on by the specters of the deceased and her protector, the courtesan Clessi. And as Lúcia, in her wedding gown, asks for the bridal bouquet, it is Alaíde, also dressed as a bride, who hands it over to her in a final striking image closing the play.

Playing with the disparate associations of the protagonist's delirious mind, Rodrigues, throughout the play, manages to reconstruct the events of her life and clarify the circumstances that drove her to the fatal accident. At the same time, the counterpoint of the hallucination plane, projecting Alaíde's fantasies of sex and death related to the story of Madame Clessi, illuminates the dark side of her psyche. The playwright displays a remarkable expertise in terms of dramatic construction. While maintaining the impression of psychic disorder, underneath the enmeshed web of facts, remembrances, and dreams, the fundamental elements of the drama are organized in a complex yet cohesive pattern.

The alternation of planes is very fluid. The narrative thread flows rapidly through the dimensions of time, space, and inner and outer reality, a technique totally unknown to Brazilian audiences and one of the main reasons for the play's overwhelming success.

In Wedding Gown we are struck by the moral baseness of the main characters showing beneath the strict principles of bourgeois righteousness. They are entirely devoid of spiritual nobility. Their motivations are selfish and perverse; their ends are petty and mean. Rodrigues's worldview, as shown in Wedding Gown, is utterly pessimistic. The low materialism of the world he puts onstage seems to infer a bitter complaint about the predatory quality of family and social relationships and the lack of transcendence in human life.

FURTHER READING

Clark, Fred M. Impermanent Structures: Semiotic Readings of Nelson

Rodrigues' Vestido de Noiva, Album de Família, and Anjo Negro. Chapel Hill: Univ. of North Carolina Press, 1991.

Souto, Carla. Nelson "Trágico" Rodrigues [Nelson "Tragic" Rodrigues]. Rio de Janeiro: Editora de Ilha, 2001.

Werneck, Maria Helena, and Victor Hugo Adler Pereira. "Dramaturgies and Theatricalities: Aspects of the Twentieth-Century Brazilian Literary Scene." In Literary Cultures of Latin America: A Comparative History, ed. by Mario J. Valdés and Djelal Kadir, 3 vols. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 2004. Ch. 57.

Luiz Arthur Ferreira Freire Nunes

WEDEKIND, FRANK (1864–1918)

Frank Wedekind's literary creations are difficult to classify. His most productive years were around 1900, at the height of literary NATURALISM. However, Wedekind despised the naturalist imperative to reproduce social conditions with photographic accuracy, and he engaged in experiments with open dramatic forms, stylized and fragmented language, humor, the bizarre and the grotesque, and other potentially alienating techniques. His innovations were initially rejected or misunderstood but over time came to influence the expressionists as well as the Theater of the Absurd. BERTOLT BRECHT, ÖDÖN VON HORVÁTH, Heinrich Mann (1871–1950), Thomas Mann (1875–1955), FRIEDRICH DÜRRENMATT, and MAX FRISCH are among the many authors whose work contains noticeable traces of Wedekind's themes and formal techniques. Wedekind himself derived inspiration from Sturm und Drang authors and from Georg Büchner (1813–1837). While significantly concerned with how socioeconomic structures condition individuals, Wedekind focused his attention on the moral decay and hypocrisy of bourgeois society. A more "human" morality, Wedekind believed, one free of prejudice, would better acknowledge and serve man's natural instincts. Wedekind's cast of characters consists largely of outcasts: fallen women, misunderstood artists, and members of the underworld.

Benjamin Franklin Wedekind was born in 1864 in Hanover, after his parents returned to GERMANY from the UNITED STATES. Frank's father, a liberal sympathizer, had immigrated to the United States after the failure of the 1848 revolution. He met his wife, an actress and singer from southern Germany who was more than twenty years his junior, in San Francisco, where Frank was conceived. Back in Germany, the elder Wedekind found Bismarck's regime unacceptable, and in 1872 the family moved to Lenzburg near Aarau in SWITZERLAND. Frank grew up in affluence and attended school there.

Wedekind's literary production began early. He wrote a number of poems and a children's book while still in school and formed literary and philosophical reading circles with his school friends. His first published poem appeared in 1884, the year of his final secondary school examinations. That summer Wedekind began studying German and French literature at Lausanne, but at his father's insistence he subsequently enrolled at the University of Munich to study law.

While neglecting his legal studies, Wedekind continued to write poems, crafted his first novellas, and begin work on a play. After a conflict with his father in 1886, he moved to Zurich, where he worked in the advertising and press office of the food producer Maggi. He soon abandoned that job, however, and began writing for the Neue Zürcher Zeitung. In Zurich Wedekind joined the literary circle of Karl Henckell (1864–1929) and Carl Hauptmann (1858–1921). He later met GERHART HAUPTMANN, but this association soon became riddled with personal and literary conflicts. Wedekind was especially irritated when Hauptmann included Wedekind's private circumstances in his 1890 play The Coming of Peace (Das Friedensfest).

Wedekind's career in journalism was short-lived. Following a father-son reconciliation, Frank agreed to resume his legal studies in Zurich in summer 1888. When his father abruptly died later that year, however, he stopped attending university. An inheritance from his father allowed Wedekind to travel to Berlin, Munich, London, and Paris. In 1889 he settled in Munich, where he developed contacts with the naturalists and other intellectual circles and worked on his plays. While drawn to the theater, Wedekind was also fascinated by other forms of the performing arts, especially the circus and the cabaret. He even participated in these venues, and they are richly represented in his dramatic works.

Wedekind's best-known dramas arose during this period: SPRING AWAKENING (Frühlings Erwachen: Eine Kindertragödie, 1891) and Pandora's Box (Die Büchse der Pandora. Eine Monstertragödie, 1893–1894). Spring Awakening dramatizes generational conflicts between a group of teenagers, their small-town bourgeois parents, and their conservative social institutions. Aware of the hypocritical nature of adult society, the adolescents develop their own philosophies of life. They follow their sexual instincts defiantly, but with liberation comes TRAGEDY: fatal abortion, reform school, and suicide. At the end of this "Childhood Tragedy," the youthful protagonist Melchior faces a choice: he can either follow his friend Moritz to the grave or the mysterious Masked Man to life. Melchior ultimately chooses the latter. MAX REINHARDT staged Spring Awakening for the first time in 1906 in Berlin. The performance caused considerable scandal, yet the play became a great success.

Pandora's Box engendered a number of legal challenges; the authorities deemed the drama offensive and immoral. Wedekind was forced into self-censorship, reworking the play's structure and content and supplementing it with explanatory notes. The play was divided into two parts, which were published separately. Earth-Spirit (Erdegeist, 1895), the first installment, consists of the first three acts of the original five-act "Monster Tragedy," with an additional act inserted between acts 2 and 3. The publication of the second part, titled Pandora's Box (1904), unleashed court proceedings in which the author and publisher were both convicted and acquitted. Eventually, the remaining copies of the play were seized and performances banned. In 1905, KARL KRAUS organized a closed premiere of Pandora's Box at the Trianon Theater in Vienna. Mathilde (Tilly) Newes, Wedekind's future wife, starred as Lulu; the playwright himself appeared as Jack the Ripper.

The tragedy tracks the fate of Lulu, a woman who believes in love. Lulu's circumstances change rapidly throughout both parts—from marriage to marriage, from wealth to indigence, from high social standing to anonymity, and from a career as a dancer to turning tricks in London streets. The corrupt society ridicules Lulu's passion but is apt to appropriate her body and freedom. She has had to play different roles for the different men on whom she has depended all her life; only the ever-present portrait of Lulu as Pierrot connects the protagonist's wildly divergent fortunes. The Pierrot, nailed to a wall in a London garret, is witness to Lulu's demise—at the hand of Jack the Ripper. One of the first lesbian characters onstage, Countess Geschwitz, utters the final lines in a work intended to shock bourgeois audiences. The Lulu plays inspired an opera by Alban Berg (1885–1935) and two film versions, in 1923 and 1929, respectively.

In 1896, Wedekind began writing for the satirical weekly Simplicissimus, published by Albert Langen (1869–1909). As a result of Wedekind's poems targeting Kaiser Friedrich Wilhelm II's visits to the Holy Land, the magazine offices were raided and a warrant issued for Wedekind's arrest on the grounds of lèse majesté. Wedekind left Germany for Zurich and then Paris but later returned and gave himself up to the police. He served a six-month prison sentence at the Königstein fortress near Dresden. Wedekind suspected Langen of having plotted the episode as a publicity stunt to boost circulation and subsequently portrayed the publisher unflatteringly in the plays Hidalla (1903–1904) and Oaha (1908).

While still in exile in Paris in 1900, Wedekind completed The Marquis of Keith (Der Marquis von Keith). The play was published in the magazine Die Insel (The Island) under the title Scenes from Munich, Drawn from Life (Münchener Szenen. Nach dem Leben aufgezeichnet). The title character is a confidence man who must manipulate members of various social circles to promote his enterprises.

Most of the time, his wealth and his reputation are based on an illusion, which Keith is able to sell to his advantage. What sets him apart from "reputable" society is the fact that Keith is conscious of his status and admits that his values are completely lacking in lofty ideals. As he engages in fund-raising for his life's project, the Fairyland Palace Theater, he himself is swindled out of a share in the enterprise by the respectable businessmen of Munich and is barely able to escape with his life in the end. Nevertheless, he seems to have fared better than his childhood friend Scholz, who arrives early in the play to learn from Keith how to be a sensualist. Scholz undergoes several shifts in his ideals, achieves none of them, and ultimately enters a mental asylum voluntarily. The tightrope walker Keith, in contrast, never had any ideals and will forever be confined to his balancing act.

In 1901, Wedekind appeared with the cabaret group Elf Scharfrichter (Eleven Executioners) in Munich. He sang and accompanied his own songs but soon grew disillusioned with this form of entertainment and with an audience unable to appreciate his true worth. A young Bertolt Brecht, however, was so inspired by Wedekind's persona that he based his first play, BAAL (1918), in part on it.

Wedekind's death came rather prematurely: he passed away on March 9, 1918, in Munich, after four unsuccessful appendix surgeries. His funeral attracted a strange mix of Munich bohemians and intellectuals.

Recognition, fame, and presence on the German stage came gradually to Wedekind. To the very end, he was subject to censorship. He also had to pursue a career as an actor in order to subsist and developed an ACTING style that was eerie yet memorable. Toward the end of his life, Wedekind had become a celebrated German playwright. At the outbreak of World War I he even embraced the German national cause but soon became a staunch pacifist. With the advent of the Weimar Republic the censoring of Wedekind's texts eased, leading to increased interest in his works. Once the National Socialists ascended to power, however, Wedekind's dramas disappeared from the German stage. The 1980s brought renewed interest in Wedekind's texts and significant growth in Wedekind scholarship.

SELECT PLAYS: Spring's Awakening: A Children's Tragedy (Frühlings Erwachen. Eine Kindertragödie, 1893); Fritz Schwitterling—the Love Potion (Fritz Schwitterling—der Liebestrank, 1891–1892); Earth-Spirit: A Tragedy in Four Acts (Erdegeist, 1893–1894); Pandora's Box: A Tragedy in Three Acts with a Prologue (Die Büchse der Pandora, 1893–1894); The Court Singer (Der Kammersänger, 1897); The Marquis of Keith (Der Marquis von Keith, 1900); Such Is Life (König Nicolo oder So ist das Leben, 1901); Hidalla, or, Karl Hetmann, the Dwarf-Giant (Hidalla oder Karl Hetmann, der Zwerggriese, 1903–1904); Death and Devil: A Death Dance in Three Scenes (Tod und Teufel, 1905); Music (Musik, 1906); Oaha, the Satire of the Satire (Oaha, die Satire der Satire, 1908); Castle Wetterstein: A Play in Three Acts (Schloss Wetterstein, 1910); Franziska (1911); Simson (1913); Bismarck (1915); Heracles (Herakles, 1916–1917)

FURTHER READING

- Best, Alan. Frank Wedekind. London: Wolff, 1975.
- Boa, Elizabeth. The Sexual Circus: Wedekind's Theatre of Subversion. Oxford: Blackwell, 1987.
- Gittleman, Sol. Frank Wedekind. New York: Twayne, 1969.
- Lewis, Ward B. The Ironic Dissident: Frank Wedekind in the View of His Critics. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1997.
- Vinçon, Hartmut. Frank Wedekind. Stuttgart: Metzler, 1987.

Martins Masulis

WEI MINGLUN (1941–)

Contemporary Chinese playwright of Sichuan opera Wei Minglun was born in Zigong City, Sichuan Province, CHINA, in August 1941. With only four years of elementary schooling, Wei had to quit school to take on a full-time job in the Sichuan Opera Troupe of Zigong City at the age of nine. First as an actor in the troupe, Wei lost his voice at the age of thirteen when he overworked himself in a highly popular play at that time. Refusing to leave theater, Wei continued to work as a director and afterward as a playwright. Wei started his playwriting at the age of fourteen, but two years later, in 1957, he was criticized during the anti-Rightist political campaign launched by Mao Zedong. After the Cultural Revolution in 1976, Wei reemerged as a mature dramatist. The Story of Yi Danda (Yi Danda) and The Fourth Daughter (Si guniang) were the first two plays that both won him an award in 1981. Following the success, he quickly produced several influential plays such as Scholar from Ba Mountain (Bashan xiucai, 1983), Pan Jinlian (1985), and Sunset at Qi Mountain (Xi zhao Qishan, 1987). His most recent plays include The Chinese Princess Turandot (Zhongguo gongzhu Du Landuo, 1993) and Good Woman, Bad Woman (Hao nuren, huai nuren, 2002).

Wei's plays are characterized by his boldness at exploring new dramatic forms and techniques in expressing the contemporary audience aesthetic orientation. Claiming to change his tactics with each play, Wei is especially good at writing plays about women, to whose life he "has devoted all his attention and feelings" (Yu, 2006). The majority of his plays are about women, whether good or bad, but his most well known play was Pan Jinlian, which he described as "absurdist theater in the Sichuan opera style (huangdan chuanju)" (Wei, 1996). Deriving the story from the Ming dynasty novels Water Margin and Golden Lotus (Jin Ping Mei), it recreates the tragic life of Pan Jinlian, one of the most well known femme fatales in Chinese culture, from the modern feminist perspective. While condemning Pan's murder of her husband in collaboration with Ximen Qing, the play emphasizes the social and cultural impact on her motivation. In an attempt to reverse the traditional verdict on Pan, the play even invites characters, modern or historical, from different countries to comment on the fate of Pan Jinlian. In performance, the bold theme and the novel form of the play took the audience by surprise and were enthusiastically received across the nation and even abroad.

Wei's plays are often regarded as recreations of some stories or anecdotes already widely known to many. His most recent plays The Chinese Princess Turandot and Good Woman, Bad Woman are based on Giacomo Puccini's opera Turandot and BERTOLT BRECHT's play THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN, respectively. Because of Wei's playwriting tenet of "independent analysis, new discovery and unique way of expression (Yu, 2006)," his plays always tend to create those familiar characters anew from a new perspective with thought-provoking themes.

SELECT PLAYS: The Story of Yi Danda (Yi Danda, 1980); The Fourth Daughter (Si guniang, 1981); Scholar from Ba Mountain (Bashan xiucai, 1983); Pan Jinlian (1985); Sunset at Qi Mountain (Xi zhao Qishan, 1987); The Chinese Princess Turandot (Zhongguo gongzhu Du Landuo, 1993); Changing Faces (Bian lian, 1997); Good Woman, Bad Woman (Hao nuren, huai nuren, 2002)

FURTHER READING

- Chen, Xiaomei. Acting the Right Part: Political Theater and Popular Drama in Contemporary China. Honolulu: Univ. of Hawaii Press, 2002.
- Wei Minglun. Wei Minglun wenji [Collected Writings of Wei Minglun]. Chengdu: Sichuan wenyi chubanshe, 1996.
- Yan, Haiping, ed. Theater & Society: An Anthology of Contemporary Chinese Drama. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1988 [contains a translation of Wei's play Pan Jinlian].
- Yu Hua. "Wei Minglun bixia de hao nuren yu huai nuren" [Virtuous Women and Evil Women Written by Wei Minglun], Zhongguo funu bao at <http://www.people.com.cn/GB/wenju/66/134/20010425/451720.html>
- Yu, Shiao-ling. Chinese Drama After the Cultural Revolution, 1979–1989: An Anthology. Lewiston, N.Y.: Mellen Press, 1996 [contains a different English version of Wei's play Pan Jinlian].

Hongchu Fu

WEISS, PETER (1916–1982)

Because we know: a revolution of the social order must be accompanied by revolutionary art. It is, therefore, a contradiction if in some socialist countries art, because of its intrinsic power, is being kept down and condemned to colorlessness, while in the bourgeois countries, on account of its lack of commitment, it evolves to the point of anarchism.

—Peter Weiss, 1965

Both sides of this dilemma played a role in Peter Weiss's development as an author: artistic experimentation at the cost of social isolation, on the one hand, and on the other, the attempt to combine artistic experimentation with political activism that often met with criticism from those Weiss saw as his allies, that is to say, those in charge of cultural affairs in the so-called existing socialist countries like the German Democratic Republic. As an author committed both to socialist ideas and artistic innovation, Weiss did not please either side. The AVANT-GARDE of modern art saw his political activism as interfering with the aesthetic side of his works, while his political allies saw the explosiveness of Weiss's artistic innovations as a threat to SOCIALIST REALISM, the prevailing paradigm of art in socialist countries. Socialist cultural functionaries considered Weiss's work dangerously close to "formalism" and "decadence," the epithets used for (Western) art perceived as form for the sake of form without proper attention to content.

Weiss thus remained without a place he could call home, in a political as well as a geographic sense, for most of his life. While the dogmatists of the existing socialist countries resented his adherence to the concept of a "permanent revolution" of all aspects of life—and the cultural sphere in particular—the undogmatic Left of the West had problems with his sympathies for the existing socialist societies. While the GERMANY of his youth did not allow him to become a part of its culture and caused many displacements for the Weiss family as it attempted to find a safe place in the center of Europe, for most of Weiss's adult life he lived as if in double exile. He became a Swedish citizen but kept writing in German.

His work was widely discussed, especially after the staging of THE INVESTIGATION (Die Ermittlung, 1964), as that of a politically engaged author in a country whose system he despised, West Germany, while, at the same time, he was unable to find the recognition he had hoped for in that part of Germany he perceived as his political home, East Germany. Moreover, his peers in West Germany often treated him with a lack of respect, considering his political convictions naive, as typical of someone who, living in the relative political isolation of the fairly stable welfare system of a social democratically governed SWEDEN, was unable to understand the complications politically active West German authors experienced during the Cold War.

This became particularly evident in Weiss's debate with the West German author Hans Magnus Enzensberger (1929–) in the 1960s in which Weiss upheld the notion of class struggle as the decisive factor shaping historical events, while Enzensberger postulated that the working class of the industrialized world had long been paralyzed by the promises of a consumer society and that the decisive struggles would henceforth be waged between the industrialized countries and the rest of the world suffering under the poverty imposed by the industrialized nations.

Weiss was born on November 8, 1916, in Nowawes, Germany, a town near Berlin, as a citizen of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. When the map of Europe was redrawn after World War I, Weiss became a Czech citizen. His businessman father was a Jew who converted to Christianity, the faith of his wife, while the family was living in Berlin from 1929 to 1935. Prior to those years in Berlin, the family resided in Bremen, and one can speculate about how, in Weiss's early childhood, he might have tried to reconcile his bourgeois family background with the revolutionary workers' councils he could see on the streets of Bremen at the time. While in Berlin, Weiss began studying art but also attended commercial school, reflecting the tensions between the young man's artistic inclinations and the pressures from his family to play a part in the father's business. After a brief period in ENGLAND, the family settled in Varnsdorf, CZECHOSLOVAKIA, whence they fled the approaching Nazi occupation forces in October 1938. Following a short stay in SWITZERLAND, Weiss arrived in early 1939 in Sweden, the country that would become his permanent residence until his death on May 10, 1982, in Stockholm.

Weiss's biography can be seen as representative of the experiences of many others of his generation, experiences that offered the individual neither the comforts of geographic stability, of a home in the world, nor the support of a stable bourgeois family that was supposed to make up for external uncertainties. The family as such was under attack, from unexpected external catastrophes like Weiss's sister's death at the age of twelve in a car accident, as well as from tensions within, and both causes of uncertainty were intensified and magnified by the rise of political extremism in many European countries. Weiss explores the asymmetrical power and sexual relations within the threatened bourgeois family in his two psychoanalytically oriented prose texts Abschied von den Eltern (Leavetaking, 1960) and Fluchtpunkt (Vanishing Point, 1961). Transposing his personal experiences into literary forms that address matters beyond the purely personal, liberating the soul from the deformations it suffers in bourgeois society, and overcoming social ALIENATION by taking part in international political movements become the constants in Weiss's literary texts. In his last prose work, Die Ästhetik des Widerstands (The Aesthetics of Resistance, 1975–1981), the ties between the antifascist fighters across Europe in fact supplant the family for the protagonist who finds among his fellow freedom fighters the home the bourgeois family cannot provide, even as Europe is being torn apart by totalitarianism. This, however, also explains the string of disappointments Weiss experienced with those he considered his brothers-in-arms, as those he thought of as his allies received his literary productions with less than open arms. One must, however, suspect a certain naïveté or perhaps even exaggerated idealism on the part of an author who can portray Leon Trotsky (1879–1940) sympathetically in Trotsky in Exile (Trotski im Exil, 1969) and still believe he will be welcomed by the successors of Trotsky's worst enemies in the German Democratic Republic and USSR.

In the West, however, Weiss's dramatic work continued to be successfully staged after he had become well known with the plays MARAT/SADE (Die Verfolgung und Ermordung Jean Paul Marats dargestellt durch die Schauspielgruppe des Hospizes zu Charenton unter Anleitung des Herrn de Sade, 1963) and The Investigation (1964), probably his two most important dramas. These two plays bring into clearer focus the surrealist antibourgeois and anticapitalist impetus of Weiss's earlier plays The Assurance (Die Versicherung, 1952) and Night with Guests (Nacht mit Gästen, 1963), supplanting nightmarish visions with systematic investigations into the oppression of the body and the people who call for a revolution of both the body and society.

The rest of Weiss's dramatic works parallels in a way the history of the Western European Left in the wake of the beginnings of the student movement: analyses of colonial and postcolonial power structures in Song of the Lusitanian Bogey (Gesang vom lusitanischen Popanz, 1967) and Discourse on the Progress of the Prolonged War of Liberation in Viet Nam and the Events Leading Up to It as Illustration of the Necessity for Armed Resistance against Oppression and on the Attempts of the United States of America to Destroy the Foundations of Revolution (Diskurs über die Vorgeschichte und den Verlauf des lang andauernden Befreiungskrieges in Viet Nam als Beispiel für die Notwendigkeit des bewaffneten Kampfes der Unterdrückten gegen ihre Unterdrücker sowie über die Versuche der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika die Grundlagen der Revolution zu vernichten, 1968) that also reflect the Western student movement's exaggerated hopes that all oppressed peoples will join ranks and defeat the imperialists in a worldwide series of revolutions. Similarly, the play How Mr. Mockinpott Was Cured of His Sufferings (Wie dem Herrn Mockinpott das Leiden ausgetrieben wird, 1968) resembles the endless debates of the plethora of political groups at the time that were trying to find out what makes the supposed subject of the revolution, the wage laborer, tick and what might be preventing him from understanding his own oppression and taking up the political struggle that will end it. And just as toward the end of the student movement we find a somewhat melancholic inwardness that seeks to recover what might have been lost or suppressed among one's own ranks in the political struggle with the "enemy," leaving no room for dreamers and utopian thinking, Weiss devotes two plays to "losers" in those battles, individuals who might have been the true visionaries yet were too far ahead of their own times to survive the Realpolitik of everyday life: Trotsky in Exile and Hölderlin (1971).

Weiss's most important contributions to modern dramatic forms are his experiments with DOCUMENTARY plays. His texts clearly demonstrate that using documents does not bring us closer to an objective truth. Rather, his plays show how even seemingly neutral materials take on a partisan perspective through the act of being unearthed, recorded, selected, edited, and put in a certain order by an author. Thus, in the tradition of Weiss, documentary dramas show the constructedness of what is mistaken for historical truth, and they offer their version of the truth as an antidote to that truth circulated by the mass media and those in power.

SELECT PLAYS: The Tower (Der Turm, 1949); The Assurance (Die Versicherung. Ein Drama, 1952); Night with Guests (Nacht mit Gästen. Eine Moritat, 1963); The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by the Inmates of the Asylum Charenton Under the Direction of the Marquis de Sade (Die Verfolgung und Ermordung Jean Paul Marats dargestellt durch die Schauspielgruppe des Hospizes zu Charenton unter Anleitung des Herrn de Sade. Drama in zwei Akten, 1963); The Investigation

(Die Ermittlung. Oratorium in 11 Gesängen, 1964); Song of the Lusitanian Bogey (Gesang vom lusitanischen Popanz. Stück mit Musik in 2 Akten, 1967); Discourse on the Progress of the Prolonged War of Liberation in Viet Nam and the Events Leading Up to It as Illustration of the Necessity for Armed Resistance Against Oppression and on the Attempts of the United States of America to Destroy the Foundations of Revolution (Diskurs über die Vorgeschichte und den Verlauf des lang andauernden Befreiungskrieges in Viet Nam als Beispiel für die Notwendigkeit des bewaffneten Kampfes der Unterdrückten gegen ihre Unterdrücker sowie über die Versuche der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika die Grundlagen der Revolution zu vernichten, 1968); How Mr. Mockinpott Was Cured of His Sufferings (Wie dem Herrn Mockinpott das Leiden ausgetrieben wird. Spiel in 11 Bildern, 1968); Trotsky in Exile (Trotzki im Exil. Stück in zwei Akten, 1969); Hölderlin (Hölderlin. Stück in zwei Akten, 1971); The Trial (Der Prozess. Stück in zwei Akten, 1974)

FURTHER READING

- Bathrick, David. "The Theater of the White Revolution Is Over": The Third World in the Works of Peter Weiss and Heiner Müller." In Blacks and German Culture, ed. by Reinhold Grimm and Jost Hermand. Madison: Univ. of Wisconsin Press, 1986. 135–149.
- Cohen, Robert. Understanding Peter Weiss. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1993.
- Haiduk, Manfred. Der Dramatiker Peter Weiss [The dramatist Peter Weiss]. Berlin: Henschelverlag, 1977.

Friedemann J. Weidauer

WELLMAN, MAC (1945–)

What if we conceive of [disorder] not negatively, but positively, as the fundamental, unseen architect of all that is orderly, possesses a shape, boasts a fixed, structural configuration: the world of objects and their appearance? What if chaos should be the true determiner and shaper of representation itself? Whisper that . . . at the next meeting of the Board of Directors. . . . See how long it will take for those in charge to show you the door.

—Mac Wellman, "A Chrestomathy of 22 Answers to 22

Wholly Unaskable and Unrelated Questions Concerning Political and Poetic Theater," 1993

Chance brought Mac Wellman to the theater. Wellman was born on March 7, 1945, in Cleveland, Ohio. While pursuing a bachelor's degree in international relations at American University, he took a year abroad and while hitchhiking in Holland in 1965 caught a ride with the artistic director of an AVANT-GARDE theater. At her suggestion he began writing plays for Dutch radio, remaining in Europe for the next several years. The experimental theater he saw there contrasted sharply with what he later called the "conservatism" and "claustrophobia" of theater in the UNITED STATES, and it awakened Wellman's interest in the stage, which would be further affected by his discovery of the downtown New York theater scene of the mid-1970s. Relocating to New York, he saw the earliest works of Mabou Mines, RICHARD FOREMAN, and TADASHI SUZUKI; the last production of the Open Theatre; and the Performance Group's Tooth of Crime. These 1970s productions introduced him to what he would later describe as a "theatre of excess" markedly different from the "penury and littleness and paucity and deprivation—spiritually, emotionally, ethically and theatrically" that he perceived in the mainstream (Savran, 1999). He began to write for the theater.

Nearly thirty years later Wellman has earned a reputation as an antinaturalist playwright of rich language and intellectual complexity; a harsh critic of mainstream American theater (its actor training, DRAMATURGY, and conditions of production); a passionate and articulate champion of poetic theater; and an active supporter of young, avant-garde playwrights. A prodigious writer, he has additionally published two novels, four volumes of poetry, and numerous essays and edited three collections of new American drama (Theatre of Wonders, Slant 6, and Seven Different Plays). He has been the recipient of multiple awards and honors and has been a three-time Village Voice Obie Award winner, including a 2003 Obie for lifetime achievement.

Wellman's work is often described as growing out of an American poetic and antirealist dramatic tradition, which began with GERTRUDE STEIN and continued in the 1960s with Richard Foreman, ADRIENNE KENNEDY, SAM SHEPARD, and MARIA IRENE FARNES. His plays also exhibit traces of the European and Russian avant-garde of the last century: a preference for montage and mosaic structures over psychorealist linearity, a fascination with the paradigms offered by contemporary science, a predilection for a THEATRICALITY "that is the repudiation of a split between presentation and representation, between performance and illusion, between making a show, and 'drama'" (Wellman, 1993). And they are political, if Wellman's antididactic brand of politics may be so termed; for Wellman, all political opinion, left or right, is suspect: white noise from a cacophony of idéés reçues. Above all, Wellman's aesthetic project picks up where the absurdist playwrights left off: breaking apart and reconfiguring language, interrogating it, playing with it, creating it.

Wellman spent the 1980s forging what would become significant, long-term collaborations with such downtown companies as Ridge Theater (recent work with Ridge includes Jennie Richee [2000], which won eleven Obie Awards when it was performed at the Kitchen in New York City in 2001), BACA Downtown (where Wellman served as literary adviser from 1987 to 1991 and co-founded its New Works Project), and the site-specific production company En Garde Arts. By the end of the decade, he had begun to attract serious critical attention. The year 1989 saw his first regional production, Albanian Softshoe, at the San Diego Rep, as well as his first commercial success, the En Garde Arts production of Crowbar at the abandoned Victory Theatre on 42nd Street. The year 1990 brought his first Obie Award for Bad Penny (1989), Terminal Hip (1990), and Crowbar.

Wellman's work ranges across a broad spectrum of intellectually rich themes. Plays of the last two decades include Harm's Way (1985), a darkly comic anti-Western that touches on interrelated issues of vendetta, the violence of American language, national mythos, history, and foreign policy. Sincerity Forever (1990) and 7 Blowjobs (1991) are both overtly political satires on the theme of moral hypocrisy. The Difficulty of Crossing a Field (1998) is an opera that tells, through seven different accounts at a legal inquest, of the abrupt disappearance "in the open and visible" of a slave owner while crossing a field, playing on the audience's building expectation of explanatory truths that are, however, never revealed. Cat's-Paw (1998) is "a meditation on the Don Juan story" in which Don Juan never appears and an all-female cast never discusses men. The heroine of Wellman's Antigone (2001) tells her tale into the ear of a puppet Sophocles at the beginning of time. Swoop (1994) is a Dracula play about the sexual oppression of Victorian women, and Hypatia (2000) is a drama about the 5th-century female mathematician Hypatia of Alexandria, who was beaten to death and mutilated by Christian monks.

SELECT PLAYS: Fama Combinatoria (1975); The Memory Theatre of Giordano Bruno (1976); Starluster (1979); Dog in the Manger (1982); The Self-Begotten (1982); Phantomation (1983); The Professional Frenchman (1984); Energumen (1985); Harm's Way (1985); Cleveland (1986); The Nain Rouge (1986); 1951 (with Anne Bogart and Michael Roth, 1986); Dracula (1987); Cellophane (1988); Peach Bottom Nuclear Reactor Full of Sleepers (1988); Albanian Softshoe (1988–1989); Without Colors (1989); Crowbar (1990); Sincerity Forever (1990); A Murder of Crows (1991); 7 Blowjobs (1991); Coathanger (1992); The Land of Fog and Whistles (1993); Strange Feet (1993); Three Americanisms (1993); Absence of Mallets (with David Van Tiegham, 1994); The Hyacinth Macaw (1994); The Sandalwood Box (1994); Tigertigtiger (1994); Why the Y (in Ybor) (1994); The Distance to the Moon (1995); FNU LNU (1996); London (In 10 Cities) (1996); No Smoking Piece (1996); Second-Hand Smoke (1996); The Lesser Magoo (1997); My Old Habit of Returning to Places (1997); Cat's-Paw (1998); The Damned Thing (1998); The Difficulty of Crossing a Field (1998); I Don't Know Who He Was and I Don't Know What He Said (1998); Mac Wellman's Girl Gone (1998); The Porcupine Man (1998); The Sandalwood Box (1998); Hypatia (2000); Jennie Richee (2000); 2 September (2000); Whiteness (2000); Antigone (2001); Anything's Dream (2002); The Fez (2002); Mister Original Bugg (2002); Bitter Bierce (2003)

FURTHER READING

- Overmeyer, Eric. "Mac Wellman's Horizontal Avalanches." Theater 21, no. 3 (Summer–Fall 1990): 54–56.
- Perloff, Carey. "Seven Avenues Toward the Heart of a Mystery." Theater 27, nos. 2–3 (1997): 60–63.
- Savran, David. "The World According to Wellman." American Theater 16, no. 2 (February 1999): 16–21.
- Wellman, Mac. "A Chrestomathy of 22 Answers to 22 Wholly Unaskable and Unrelated Questions." Theater 24, no. 1 (March–April 1993): 43–51.

WESELE See THE WEDDING

WESKER, ARNOLD (1932–)

Arnold Wesker was born on May 24, 1932, in the East End of London, ENGLAND, to Jewish immigrant parents. His career has spanned nearly five decades, and his works are frequently autobiographical and politically informed. Although his early plays receive the most attention, he has been prolifically active throughout. His first play, The Kitchen (1957), established a central theme in his work: the study of social and socialist concerns through character and experience-centered drama. Along with recollections of his family, this theme unifies his next three plays, collectively known as The Wesker Trilogy: Chicken Soup with Barley (1958), Roots (1959), and I'm Talking About Jerusalem (1960). Wesker followed this success with the popular Chips with Everything (1962).

During most of the 1960s he focused his energy on the ideological art project Centre 42. An organization dedicated to bringing art to the working classes, the center ultimately ended in dissolution and Wesker's frustration. Despite plays such as The Old Ones (1970) and The Journalists (1972), and continued success in Europe and elsewhere, Wesker's reception in Britain cooled significantly from the 1970s through the 1990s. Perhaps, in part, this might be blamed on his reluctance to embrace the niceties of the English theatrical scene: troubled relations with critics and a refusal to attend the Evening Standard Drama Awards were capped by turning down a Commander of the Order of the British Empire (CBE) nomination.

Nonetheless, Wesker will be remembered as a significant 20th-century British playwright. Perhaps nowhere is his contribution more vivid than in The Wesker Trilogy. Based on his own family, the sequence follows the Kahn family from the mid-1930s to 1959 as they struggle against loss and political tensions within the family and Britain. Chicken Soup sees the physical decline of the patriarch Harry play out alongside the ebbing of socialist principles in his circle. The play concludes with Harry's second stroke and the unsettling prospect of his son Ronny lapsing into the indifference and sloth of his father. In Roots the drama focuses on Beatie, Ronny's "simple" girlfriend whom he is trying to shape into a working-class intellectual. He abandons his efforts, ending the relationship by post while Beatie is visiting her family in Norfolk. Until the letter arrives in the final scene, Beatie's speech is largely made up of quotations from Ronny. However, once released, Beatie feels for the first time the personal and intellectual freedom Ronny had so tried to cultivate.

But this potentially uplifting tone is complicated in Jerusalem. Here Ada, the Kahn's daughter, has moved to the countryside where she and husband Dave are living the ideals of communism. Their efforts to escape the system and live as rural artisans ultimately fail, however, and despite their attempts to make real what others in The Trilogy have only talked about, they are drawn back to the city. Tellingly, the final scene opens with a radio announcement of General Election defeat for the Labour Party. Once again, Wesker provides us with a stage where individual TRAGEDIES and failures speak eloquently to the wider movements of the political world.

SELECT PLAYS: The Four Seasons (1965); Their Very Own and Golden City (1966); The Friends (1970); Shylock (previously called The Merchant, 1976); Lady Othello (1987); Beorhtel's Hill (1988); Blood Libel (1991); Denial (1997); Longitude (2002)

FURTHER READING

Dornan, Reade. Arnold Wesker Revisited. New York: Twayne, 1995.
Leeming, Glenda. Wesker: The Playwright. London: Methuen, 1983.
Wilcher, Robert. Understanding Arnold Wesker. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1991.

Paul Glead

WEST, MAE (1892–1980)

I believe in censorship. After all, I made a fortune from it.

—Mae West, Interview with C. Robert Jennings, 1971

Born on August 17, 1892, in Brooklyn, New York, Mae West was the daughter of "Battling Jack" West, an ex-prizefighter and livery stable owner, and Matilda West, a former model. Taking to the stage at the age of eight, she performed child roles until she outgrew them. At seventeen, she teamed up with Frank Wallace, with whom she performed a touring song and dance act; in 1911 they were secretly married, but both the act and the marriage soon ended.

West began performing in vaudeville sketches, rewriting roles to get favorable attention from the audience and the press, which, more often than not, worked. Influenced by her father's "muscle" training, JAZZ, black performers, and vaudevillians, she developed a signature style of dancing, singing, and sexual innuendo. In her first two plays, The Ruby Ring (1921) and The Hussy (1922), West wrote roles for herself as a gorgeous heroine irresistible to men and smart enough to find a rich husband by the end of the play. For her third play, she rewrote a third-rate sex play, Following the Fleet, by Jack Byrne. Renamed Sex, the play opened at Daly's Theatre on April 26, 1926.

Sex begins in the notorious red-light district of Montreal, in the "apartment" of Margy LaMont, a prostitute, and her pimp, Rocky Waldron. When Rocky brings in a society woman and drugs her, Margy helps her regain consciousness, only to be accused of stealing the woman's jewelry. Margy goes to Trinidad to continue her trade and perform at a popular cafe. Gregg, an English sailor who likes Margy, introduces her to Jimmy Stanton; the infatuated Jimmy proposes, and she accepts. But when Margy meets Jimmy's parents in Connecticut, she discovers that his mother is Clara, the society woman in Montreal. Despite the clash between the two women, Margy helps Clara fend off Rocky, who shows up to blackmail her. Gregg stops by on his way to AUSTRALIA and urges Margy to go with him. Margy, realizing she cannot hide from her past, tells Jimmy who she really is and departs with Gregg.

Mae West's role as Marge LaMont disrupted traditional DRAMATURY and morals of the time, for here was a "bad woman" going off to start a new life. The show played for almost a year to packed houses before it was closed down for indecency, but West, who made a bundle of money from the play, scoffed at the $500 fine and ten-day jail term. Although Sex was prosecuted, it was really her next play, The Drag (1927), about homosexuality, that was under attack.

Embraced by the moviegoing public when she hit the big screen in 1933, West perfected the art of one-liners. In the 1970s she was reviled by feminists as a "reverse sexist" but was voted Woman of the Century by University of California at Los Angeles students in 1971 "in honor of her pioneering influence on sexual mores." West died on November 22, 1980, in Los Angeles.

[See also United States]

PLAYS: The Ruby Ring (1921); The Hussy (1922, with Adeline Leitzbach); The Chick (1924); Sex (1926); The Drag (1927); The Wicked Age (1927); Diamond Lil (1928, revised 1949); The Pleasure Man (1928); Frisco Kate (1930); The Constant Sinner (from novel Babe Gordon, 1931); Catherine Was Great (1944); Sextette (1952, revised 1961)

FURTHER READING

Hamilton, Marybeth. When I'm Bad, I'm Better: Mae West, Sex and American Entertainment. New York: HarperCollins, 1995.

Jefferson, Margo. "She Sidled Up to a Man's World and Made It Hers." New York Times (February 7, 2000): E2.

McCorkle, Susannah. "The Immortality of Mae West." American Heritage (September 2001): 48–58.

Schlissel, Lillian. Three Plays by Mae West. New York: Routledge, 1997.

Steyn, Mark. "Mae Days." New Criterion (March 2000): 42–47.

West, Mae. Goodness Had Nothing to Do with It. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1959.

Sherry D. Engle

WHALE RIDING WEATHER

Whale Riding Weather was the first BRYDEN MACDONALD-written play to be published. It is a considerable achievement for a young, unpublished playwright to have a play performed, so MacDonald's achievement of having so many significant productions of his play is notable. The eight-scene play, which dramatizes the slow but inevitable departure of a young twenty-something, Auto, from his lover and savior, the faded, middle-aged Lyle, was first directed by Annie Kidder at Toronto's Factory Theatre in October 1991. Another production—directed by MacDonald himself—flourished at Halifax's Neptune Theatre in February 1993; Roy Surette directed the Touchstone Theatre, Vancouver, production in the winter of 1993–1994. Whale Riding Weather has been produced in Britain, too: in May 1997, a production took place at London's Drill Hall, a venue renowned for staging contemporary gay theater. An April 2003 revival by the Great Canadian Theatre Company attracted good crowds and favorable comment: hoped-for revenue targets were surpassed.

MacDonald based the character of Lyle on an old, tearful homosexual whom he saw sitting friendless in a Montreal bar. The play, which is set in Lyle's dingy bachelor's apartment, excels for many reasons. These reasons include, but are not limited to, the funniness of much of the dialogue; the absurdity of Lyle's situation, which owes as much to SAMUEL BECKETT, EUGÈNE IONESCO, and HAROLD PINTER as it does to post-1980 developments in gay drama; the singularity of MacDonald's verse-based dialogue; and the unexpected rousing of Auto from the ennui that envelops Lyle. Lyle does nothing except talk to the disinterested Auto, indulge in paranoid fantasy, and imagine, falsely, that his lost son will visit. Lyle often considers activity, such as cooking—Auto notes ruefully that Lyle "has been threatening to roast that duck for five years." Lyle is defined by unhygienic, drink-sodden lethargy: a common stage direction for him is "More sherry."

Lyle, however, can be eloquent. He remembers entertaining crowds in bygone years, telling Auto how to entertain at parties in one line of iambic tetrameter: "Just smile and watch and disagree." Such simple but unusual and effective verse is typical. When Auto has to question patiently the unfocussed Lyle, his steady slowness is conveyed by MacDonald's pace-controlling punctuation: "Which. Special. Drawer." Initially, Auto is as inactive as Lyle, drinking beer and chain smoking: "I don't do anything," he asserts. But soon he brings home a young man called Jude, who motivates Auto to forsake the squalid inertness of Lyle. Auto is, at first, reluctant to commit to Jude romantically—and Lyle strives to impede the couple's privacy. Gradually, Jude's emotional and sexual courtship of Auto gains force, and Lyle realizes that Auto will leave. After an agonizing farewell, Lyle is left alone. The walls and ceiling crack, and water pours in. The sound of whales overpowers Lyle and the audience. One of the many satisfactions of reading or attending a performance of Whale Riding Weather is speculating about the possible meanings of the whale sounds. MacDonald does not tell us what the whale represents—the implications are agreeably left for us to guess at.

[See also Canada; Gay and Lesbian Drama]

FURTHER READING

Crawford, Glen. "Playing the Outcast: Gay Playwright Keeps Coming Back to Ottawa." http://www.capitalxtra.on.ca/queercapital/cx106/cx106_storytellers.htm.

"Great Canadian Theatre Company Proudly Announces a Record-Breaking Season." <http://gctc.ca/news/archives/2002-2003.html>.

MacDonald, Bryden. Whale Riding Weather. Vancouver: Talonbooks, 1994.

"[Very Brief] Interview with Bryden MacDonald." http://www.talonbooks.com/Books/Whale_Riding_Weather.html.

Kevin De Ornellas

WHAT PRICE GLORY?

The premiere of What Price Glory? on September 3, 1924, produced by Arthur Hopkins and jointly authored by MAXWELL ANDERSON and Laurence Stallings, not only marked the reopening of the Plymouth Theatre in New York City but also could be said to have inaugurated the theater season that year, as Alexander Woollcott (1967) was to observe. In the latter's eyes, no war play written in the English language since World War I began had been "so true, so alive, so salty and so richly satisfying."

What Price Glory? is set in FRANCE during World War I. It concerns the immediate fortunes of a U.S. Marine company stationed in a small town that is partly held by the Germans. It begins ironically with three corporals discussing home and marriage, prospects that in most cases would not materialize. In contrast to that conventional premise of despair, Anderson and Stallings develop their main plot of raw yet indifferent heroism at a naturalistic level—the protracted conflict between Captain Flagg and Sergeant Quirt over scarlet women in battlefronts around the world. They grapple once more over Charmaine, whom the stage direction quaintly calls "a drab." Her father Pete Cognac, a tavern owner, almost succeeds in forcing Quirt—to the wry amusement of Flagg and with his official consent—to become the woman's unwilling bridegroom for allegedly having deflowered the lass.

In the somber second act the horrors of war are starkly revealed through its immediate and bloody consequences on soldiers like Captain Aldrich. And the entire illusion of glory in battle is cynically questioned in Captain Moore's hysterical speech, "What price glory now?" The price paid is no less than the abject annihilation of the lives of men and the dignity of women. The play draws to a conclusion with the desperate agreement by Flagg and Quirt to resolve the conflict over Charmaine through a game of cards. News that the battalion has been ordered to the front interrupts the Flagg-Quirt COMEDY. Flagg hesitates for a moment but never doubts that he will obey the order. Nor will Quirt be left behind; he exits with the famous curtain line, "Hey, Flagg, wait for baby!" Both head toward the possibility of death and a glory that no one really cares about.

The play's unique quality lay in its rigorous undermining of the tradition of romanticizing war and glorifying its protagonists and their ventures. What Stephen Crane had done in The Red Badge of Courage (Miller, 1991), GEORGE BERNARD SHAW in ARMS AND THE MAN, and E. E. CUMMINGS in The Enormous Room, Anderson and Stallings did for the American stage. The play's pacifist message struck a primary chord in the American psyche, which had undergone a total disillusionment with a war that had ended only six years earlier with an unforgettable history of decimated youth.

Though the play's lack of psychological depth has been criticized, its rigorous and original rendering through an unprecedented stage language made it unquestionably the dramatic success of the 1924–1925 season on Broadway.

FURTHER READING

- Halline, Allan G. "Maxwell Anderson's Dramatic Theory." American Literature 1, no. 16 (May 1944): 66–81.
- Miller, Jordan Y., and Winifred L. Frazer. American Drama Between the Wars. Boston: Twayne, 1991.
- Shivers, Alfred S. Maxwell Anderson. Boston: Twayne, 1976.
- Woollcott, Alexander. Review of What Price Glory? In The American Drama as Seen by the Critics: 1752–1934, ed. by Montrose J. Moses and John Mason Brown. New York: Cooper Square Pubs., 1967. 245–247.

Rupendra Guha-Majumdar

WHEN WE DEAD AWAKEN

When We Dead Awaken (Når vi døde vågner, 1899) is the very last play that HENRIK IBSEN wrote, and it is also his most personal play. Ibsen had in fact planned to write an autobiography, and When We Dead Awaken can be—and often is—regarded as an autobiographical work about the relationship between art and life. The main character of the play, the sculptor Arnold Rubek, is—as was Ibsen himself—a famous artist just recently returned to his native country after a considerably long time abroad. The middle-aged Rubek and his younger wife Maja are staying at a health resort near the sea. Their marriage is not happy; Maja blames Rubek for idle promises of a new and happy life together with him, and Rubek complains that he is bored with Maja and unable to create art while living with her. During the play they both find themselves a new partner and a new life: Rubek, wanting to create art again, reunites with Irene, a strangely stiff and "dead" woman that he has known earlier in his life, when she sat for him while he was working on his masterpiece The Day of Resurrection. Maja joins Ulfheim, a lively and cynical bear hunter, in order to live a life completely without art and artists. In the final scenes the two pairs climb up the mountain, and refusing to descend when the weather is getting really bad, Rubek and Irene are killed in an avalanche.

When We Dead Awaken is a highly symbolic drama in which life, death, and resurrection are central metaphors for the changing of values, IDENTITY, and life. A crucial point concerning the SYMBOLISM of the play is that Rubek has created a masterpiece, a sculpture—The Day of Resurrection—that has almost the same title as the drama he himself is part of: When We Dead Awaken. The work-in-progress version of the drama, was also titled The Day of Resurrection. What complicates this picture of similarity is that the sculpture, which is in fact a group of statues, contains a former version of itself, a single statue that is, confusingly, also referred to as The Day of Resurrection and the fact that the boundaries between the various images of resurrection are transgressed in the play: the characters resemble the statues of the sculpture and take up positions onstage that resemble the positions of the statues of the sculpture. In this way, the sculpture is brought to life by the drama it is itself a part of, even as the drama is frozen in the sculpture it thematizes. In the last act the resurrection of the drama is played out as an ascent into the mountains. When the main characters are seen physically to move upward into the mountain landscape, this both symbolizes resurrection and reflects the resurrection of the figures in the sculpture.

Partly because of its obvious and dense symbolism and lack of REALISM, When We Dead Awaken was more or less neglected until the 1960s. Some of the early critics even rejected it as an inferior work. Especially since the 1960s it has been considered one of Ibsen's masterpieces and in accordance with its subtitle—A Dramatic Epilogue—interpreted as an epilogue to Ibsen's own life and to his oeuvre. A central question in the literature about When We Dead Awaken is whether this drama represents a deeply disillusioned or pessimistic view of life or whether it also gives glimpses of optimism. There is a tendency in recent readings to see the “dead life” depicted in the drama as an unalterable state.

[See also Norway]

FURTHER READING

- Joyce, James. “Ibsen's New Drama.” Originally published in Fortnightly Review, no. 67 (April 1, 1900). Reprinted in Lisbeth Wærp, ed., Livet på likstrå. Henrik Ibsens Når vi døde vågner. En antologi [Dead life. Henrik Ibsen's When We Dead Awaken. An anthology]. Oslo: Cappelen Forlag, 1999.
- McFarlane, James. “Drama and Individual Integrity: 1893–1899.” In Meaning & Evidence. Studies, Essays & Prefaces 1953–1987. Norwich: Norvik Press, 1987.
- Meyer, Michael. “The Top of a Cold Mountain: 1899.” In Ibsen: A Biography. 1967. New York: Viking Penguin, 1985.

Lisbeth Pettersen Wærp

A WHISTLE IN THE DARK

A Whistle in the Dark was Irish dramatist TOM MURPHY's first professionally produced play. It premiered at Stratford East in 1961 and transferred to the West End, London, where it was hugely successful. The story of a brutal Irish family living in the English city of Coventry, its startling presentation of psychological and physical violence made it a groundbreaking play—but it was also formally traditional, written as a dramatic TRAGEDY in which a central character struggles heroically against a preordained fate.

The action takes place in the home of Michael Carney and his English wife Betty. Michael is an Irish immigrant to Britain, who has left his country to escape a family life that he found vicious and limiting. Unfortunately, that life proves inescapable: two of Michael's brothers have joined him in Coventry, and as the play opens, his father and youngest brother Des have also arrived.

The Carneys impose themselves brutally on their environment, arranging to fight another Irish family living nearby. Michael attempts to prevent Des from participating in this fight but is unsuccessful: violence is so essential a part of their family's life that Des finds it irresistible. Tragically, it is also an unavoidable aspect of Michael's own character: subjected to terrible pressure from his brothers, he attacks his wife, and as the play reaches an unbearably tense conclusion, he lapses further into violence, with fatal results.

The theme of exile dominates Irish theater: plays such as BRIAN FRIEL'S PHILADELPHIA, HERE I COME! (1964) dramatize Irish characters' need to be free from the restrictions of rural Irish life. In A Whistle in the Dark, Murphy offers a caustic view of this tradition, showing that exile from IRELAND did not allow Michael to escape from himself.

The play also challenges traditional representations of violence on the Irish stage, where it is usually presented as a farcical upshot of drunkenness or as the product of an ideological belief. The Carneys fit neither tradition: they are thugs, motivated by tribal pride rather than any form of morality. While it is undoubtedly the case that such men did exist, this representation proved controversial. The play was originally submitted to the Abbey Theatre in Dublin, Ireland, which rejected it on the grounds that the Carneys could not exist. In contrast, some English critics took the play too literally, seeing the Carneys as representing an inherently Irish predisposition to violence. The play therefore provoked unusually strong responses when it was premiered in ENGLAND, being met with bewilderment, hostility, and even occasional racism.

Its representation of violence in the domestic sphere shocked English audiences, as did its treatment of a rural family's collusion with urban life. These representations created a space for English writers to explore the same themes: elements of the work of David Rudkin, ARNOLD WESKER, EDWARD BOND, and many others can in some ways be traced back to Murphy. Indeed, HAROLD PINTER'S THE HOMECOMING (1964) very closely resembles Murphy's play. Although Murphy has since failed to reproduce the success of A Whistle in the Dark in London, the play's influence on English drama cannot be overestimated.

FURTHER READING

- Greene, Nicholas. The Politics of Irish Drama: Plays in Context from Bouicault to Friel. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1999.
- , ed. Talking About Tom Murphy. Dublin: Carysfort Press, 2002.
- O'Toole, Fintan. The Politics of Magic. Dublin: New Island, 1995.

Patrick Lonergan

THE WHITE GUARD See DAYS OF THE TURBINS

WHITE-HAIRED GIRL

White-Haired Girl (Baimao nǚ, geju) is the first full-scale geju, or song drama, a genre that has come to be very popular with the Chinese Communist Party (CCP). It is a type of opera that features song but is not in a traditional style of Chinese drama. It may be in a Western style, but Chinese-written song dramas virtually always include Chinese elements. Another major feature of White-Haired Girl is that it is highly political, following the prescriptions laid down by Mao Zedong (1893–1976) in his “Talks at the Yan’an Forum on Literature and the Arts” of May 1942 (FORCED UP MOUNT LIANG).

The words of White-Haired Girl are by He Jingzhi and Ding Yi, while Ma Ke and others composed the music. He Jingzhi claims to have taken the views of ordinary members of rehearsal audiences into account in reaching the final version. The premiere took place in April 1945 in conjunction with the CCP’s Seventh National Congress in Yan’an, northern Shaanxi Province, which was the capital city of the CCP-controlled areas at the time. CCP chairman Mao Zedong saw and praised the play.

The story is based on a real incident in 1940, though the drama itself is set in the second half of the 1930s. The main protagonist is Xier, the seventeen-year-old daughter of a peasant tenant of wicked Landlord Huang, who lives in a village in Hebei Province, north CHINA. She works as a servant to the landlord’s wife. The landlord rapes Xier while Mrs. Huang treats her cruelly, so she flees into the mountains. There she suffers privations so serious that her hair turns white, the local people calling her the White-Haired Goddess. The CCP’s army, which is fighting against the Japanese, comes through the region, and a former village neighbor who has joined the army saves her. Finally, the army avenges her by arresting and charging Landlord Huang for his crimes.

The final chorus of act 5, scene 2 spells out the crux of the opera:

The old life forced men to turn into ghosts,
But the new life changes ghosts back into men,
It’s saved our unhappy sister [Xier] here!

The music of White-Haired Girl, an opera that requires a full evening to perform, was based on the melodies of an ancient folk northern Shaanxi song-and-dance form called yangge (literally “seedling songs”). The accompanying orchestra includes both Western and Chinese instruments. The costuming and actions are in realistic style, totally unlike traditional Chinese theater. Characterization is quite stark: Xier and other peasants are portrayed in a positive light, but the landlord and his wife are cast as evil and deserving of their fate. The CCP and its army members are shown as heroes and saviors.

During the Cultural Revolution of 1966 to 1976, this song drama was banned, but the story was made into a ballet that became one of the model revolutionary dramas fashionable at the time. The song drama was repreremiered in Beijing in February 1977.

FURTHER READING

- Ebon, Martin, ed. Five Chinese Communist Plays. New York: John Day Co., 1975 [includes translation and commentary].
- Ho Ching-Chih and Ting Yi. The White-Haired Girl: An Opera in Five Acts. Tr. by Yang Hsien-Yi and Gladys Yang. Peking: Foreign Languages Press, 1954.

- Lopez, Manuel D. Chinese Drama: An Annotated Bibliography of Commentary, Criticism and Plays in English Translation. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow, 1991.

Colin Mackerras

THE WHITE SNAKE

TIAN HAN (1898–1968) was one of the pioneers of modern spoken drama in CHINA. He called himself “a budding Chinese Ibsen” when he was a student in JAPAN in 1920. He was the first to coin the term huaju (spoken drama) in 1927, rechristening new plays in order to emphasize the medium’s use of dialogue and its nonmusical nature (Hung, 1994). Tian made many endeavors to promote spoken drama in China—such as launching the South China Fortnightly (Nanguo banyuekan) in 1924 and establishing the South China Film and Drama Society (Nanguo dianying jushe; later renamed Nanguo She or the South China Society) in 1926. Although a pivotal figure in the modern spoken drama movement in China, Tian also breathed new life into traditional theater. He found classical plays ideal for promoting interaction with rural audiences with their enduring popularity, long tradition, and rich variety (Hung, 1994).

The White Snake (Baishe zhuan, jingju) was a Tang dynasty story recorded in Taiping Guangji. It was staged in theatrical performances in the Ming and Qing dynasties. The earliest Beijing Opera performance of the story was in the late Qing dynasty and was only a single act focusing on acrobatic fights. Tian created his Beijing Opera version of The White Snake in 1952. This script was an adapted continuation from his 1947 draft The Story of Golden Urn (Jin Boji), which was based on both Beijing Opera and Kunqu Opera accounts of the story. Wang Yaoqin, the so-called Godfather of Beijing Opera, arranged its melodic patterns.

It concerns a beautiful woman (in fact, a transformed white snake) who marries a young scholar. A Buddhist monk tries to break up the marriage and succeeds in imprisoning the woman in a pagoda. In the end the pagoda collapses, and she escapes. Tian’s script is renowned for its elegantly poetic language and romantic spirit. Moreover, he attaches heroic sentiments and lofty ideals to the female protagonist and conjures up the elevated image of a strong-willed and emotionally rich woman. In some previous versions and renditions of this ancient story, the White Snake was portrayed as a female demon preying on men or as a more humanized complex figure, such as the version in the most famous literary version, a short story included in Feng Menglong’s anthology Stories to Startle the World (1620), while the monk was a positive character and succeeded in foiling the plot of the snake. But in Tian’s version, the White Snake is a powerful and good woman striving for freedom in love (McDougall and Louie, 1997). The monk is a symbol of feudal superstition (Mackerras, 1990) and moral and religious conservatism (McDougall and Louie, 1997).

First performed in 1952, the premiere of the drama in Beijing starring Liu Xiurong was a sensational success. Later, Beijing Opera stars such as Du Jinfang, Zhao Yanxia, Guan Sushuang, Yang Chunxia, and Li Bingshu also performed in the drama, which is believed to be the testing stone of ACTING skills for the female dan role. The performance of the legendary Beijing Opera female impersonator MEI LANFANG in the act of the Fallen Bridge (Duan Qiao) is considered a masterpiece. In 1980, Shanghai Film Studio created a film version of the Beijing Opera The White Snake and turned it into a common household name in China.

FURTHER READING

- Chang, Donald, and William Packard, trans. The White Snake. In The Red Pear Garden: Three Great Dramas of Revolutionary China, ed. by John D. Mitchell. Boston: David Godine, 1973. 49–120.
- Hung, Chang-tai. War and Popular Culture: Resistance in Modern China, 1937–1945. Berkeley: Univ. of California Press, 1994.
- Mackerras, Colin. Chinese Drama: A Historical Survey. Beijing: New World Press, 1990.
- McDougall, Bonnie S., and Kam Louie. The Literature of China in the Twentieth Century. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1997.

Hongwei Lu

WHITE HORSES See ROSMERSHOLM

WHITING, JOHN (1917–1963)

John Whiting, born in 1917, was the son of an army captain. Unsurprisingly perhaps, many of his plays focus on the power of violence. Cherishing ambitions to be an actor, he attended the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London, ENGLAND, then pursued an acting career. Between 1939 and 1944 he served in the Royal Artillery and was commissioned in 1942.

He began writing seriously after the war: stories and plays for radio (Paul Southan, 1946), an unpublished novel (Not a Foot of Land), and then, with increasing skill and ability, a selection of plays. No More a-Roving was written in 1946, followed by Conditions of Agreement (1947). His major work, Saint's Day, was written in 1949, immediately followed by A Penny for a Song. Both were performed in 1951. A Penny for a Song appeared at the Haymarket and was generally ignored. Saint's Day, however, won the play competition for the Festival of Britain. This spotlight did not guarantee its critical success: in fact, it received a vindictive critical drubbing. This was due less to the play's quality than to its style: Whiting's work represented a serious break from "drawing room theater," very different from TERENCE RATTIGAN and NOËL COWARD. Among others, the play was championed by Kenneth Tynan, who sought to celebrate it as the harbinger of a new and more serious form of drama.

In 1954, when Marching Song was performed, Whiting was still regarded by intellectuals as Britain's new young hope. By the end of 1956, however, he was eclipsed by the new generation of playwrights at the Royal Court. This was followed by a period of theater writing and theorizing. He was held in high estimation by his contemporaries and invited to deliver the 1957 lecture at the Old Vic on "The Art of the Dramatist." Following his first mainstream success The Devils, performed in 1961 at the Aldwych, he became a reviewer for the London Magazine. He died on June 16, 1963, in London, of cancer.

Whiting is unusual as a playwright repeatedly accused of obscurantism by literary critics and reviewers yet celebrated by professionals of the theater. Typically, it was due to a commission by Peter Hall that his most celebrated work, The Devils, was produced. As a writer, he was heavily influenced by T. S. ELIOT and reacted against the lightheartedness of CHRISTOPHER FRY. His staccato style and tension-crackling dialogue foreshadow that of HAROLD PINTER. Tightly complex, his plays are rich in philosophical depth and detail. They often turn on a character's inner transformation. Perhaps surprisingly for a trained actor, Whiting could be scornful of the actor's and director's craft. In "The Writers' Theatre," published 1956, he wrote:

A sad parting of the ways has occurred between the playwright and his interpreters. To the writer, drama is a basic form: the theatre is a toy, an ingenious piece of machinery. It exists for the interpretation of plays. To many actors and directors, it has become a thing in itself, tiresomely dependent on some form of content.

Given the strength of his plays, and his excessive unpopularity among critics, it is hard to help concluding that Whiting was a writer ahead of his time.

SELECT PLAYS: No More a-Roving (1946); Conditions of Agreement (1947); Saint's Day (1949, performed 1951); A Penny for a Song (1951); Marching Song (1954); The Gates of Summer (1956); The Devils (1961)

FURTHER READING

- Salmon, Eric. The Dark Journey: John Whiting as Dramatist. London: Barrie & Jenkins, 1979.
- Trussler, Simon. The Plays of John Whiting: An Assessment. London: Victor Gollancz, 1972.
- Whiting, John. Whiting on Theatre. London: Alan Ross, 1966.
- . The Collected Plays of John Whiting. Ed. by Ronald Hayman. 2 vols. London: Heinemann, 1969.

Kerry Kidd

WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF?

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?—EDWARD ALBEE's most popular play—saw a return to theatrical REALISM from a playwright whose early output had established him in the forefront of the traditions of ABSURDISM and EXPRESSIONISM. It premiered on Broadway at the Billy Rose Theater in 1962.

The play is divided into three acts, subtitled "Fun and Games," "Walpurgisnacht," and "Exorcism," and graphically explores the marital strife and ritualized conflict that exists in the relationship between George, a New England history professor at fictional New Carthage College, and Martha, who is also the daughter of the college's president. George is an archetypal example of the mediocre academic whose career never took off and who, in spite of marrying the boss's daughter, has failed to come even close to the expectations of his wife or father-in-law. It is perhaps this failure that forms the basis of the utter contempt in which Martha now holds him.

By the beginning of the play, their increasingly loveless marriage has degenerated into an ever-more-frequent round of vituperative arguments. There is, however, one principal secret fiction in their lives, and it is this that will provoke the final outcome of the evening.

George returns home late from an inaugural college party to discover that Martha has unexpectedly invited the new, young, and handsome member of the science faculty, Nick, and his young, pregnant wife, Honey, back to their home for a nightcap. George is angry about this, and as the evening wears on, what at first seems to be familiar verbal sniping between the couple develops a more serious and damaging edge. Nick and Honey, initially confused and somewhat embarrassed by the increasing viciousness of the exchange, are gradually drawn into the conflict themselves. The seeming perfection of the young couple's marriage is a stark contrast, almost a mirror image, to their hosts'. The levels of complexity increase as it becomes more and more difficult for Nick and Honey—and also the audience—to distinguish between truth and invention. At one point George seems to imply that he may have been consciously responsible for the death of his parents: is this simply part of the fiction?

Although George attempts to steer the conversation in a different direction, Martha insists on revealing that they have a secret: they have a son, and he will shortly celebrate his twenty-first birthday. The verbal battle between the two protagonists increases in intensity: Martha openly and overtly flirts with Nick, while taunting her husband over the shortcomings of his career. Nick, however, seems unable to consummate this adultery, and George mounts a particularly vicious counterattack. He pretends that he has received a telegram with news that their son has been killed in an automobile crash.

In what is perhaps the most extraordinary and disturbing scene in the play, George encourages Martha to list all of the main events in their son's life, while he interjects with lines from the Requiem Mass. When the news of the son's death is finally revealed, Martha collapses in what appears to be genuine despair. The nature of her response, however, prompts Nick into the realization that the child is also a fiction, an invention created by this childless couple to give some semblance of a familial bond to their barren relationship. This lie appears to be the central thing that can hold them together.

At the end of the play, the young visitors leave, having acquired a painful awareness of the less-palatable side of married life. George and Martha, emotionally drained by the evening's excesses, are forced to face a new reality: now that the illusion at the center of their relationship has been publicly exorcised, they are faced with the possibility of being able to reshape their marriage.

One of the primary themes of this painfully emotional play is absence: the absence of love in a marriage built upon lies, the absence of the child, whose centrality to the marriage has necessitated his fictional replacement. Perhaps in this Albee, who was adopted as a young child, was exploring the pain of the absence and abandonment of his own birth parents.

In a 1976 New York Times review (April 11), critic Walter Kerr suggested that Albee used the imaginary child as an allegory for the American dream, "given spurious birth . . . hotly debated thereafter, now dead." Perhaps George and Martha are intended as contemporary images of their namesakes (General George Washington and his wife), but Albee has never confirmed this hypothesis. Critic Stephen J. Bottoms (2000) raises the issue that the play "not only demands to be performed, but is a play which is, fundamentally, all about performance and performativity." Certainly the central performance "staged" by George and Martha provides the catharsis not only for the characters onstage but also for the audience.

FURTHER READING

- Bottoms, Stephen J. Albee: Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 2000.
 Gussow, Mel. Edward Albee: A Singular Journey. London: Oberon Bks., 1999.
 McCarthy, Gerald. Edward Albee. London: Macmillan Modern Dramatists, 1987.
 Roudane, Mathew. Understanding Edward Albee. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1987.

Paul E. Fryer

WHY MARRY?

Marriage is woman's only true career.

—Lucy, Act 1

Published in 1914 under the title And So They Were Married, Jesse Lynch Williams's three-act COMEDY about the institution of marriage received amateur productions under that title until its Broadway premiere as Why Marry? on December 25, 1917, running for 120 performances and earning numerous accolades. While primarily remembered as the first drama to win the newly established Pulitzer Prize, Why Marry? was also praised for its bold confrontation of social norms as well as its fine THEATRICALITY, with New York Times critic John Corbin calling it "the most penetrating satire on social institutions yet written by an American" (Dec. 30, 1917). Gerald Bordman said that with Why Marry? "[m]any felt that Christmas night brought in the best present of all." In 1922, Williams wrote a companion piece (though not a sequel) about divorce titled Why Not.

Why Marry?—set on a September weekend gathering in "a country house not far away"—revolves around the relationship between Ernest, a brilliant young scientist, and his assistant

Helen, who are in love. However, Helen's brother John, the wealthy businessman owner of the estate, disdains her affiliation with a mere lower-rung scientist, preferring that she marry Rex, descendant of a family with name and privilege. Helen does not want to marry Ernest, fearing that the burden of a wife would impose on his career, saying that "we'll give up marriage but not each other." Moreover, Helen is determined to accompany Ernest to Paris to work, spurning claims that "marriage is woman's only true career." She notes that her sister Jean has become engaged to Rex, each of whom is in love with someone else and predicting a loveless marriage. In the end, however, Helen's Uncle Everett, a judge, tricks Helen and Ernest into acknowledging their love and pronounces them man and wife.

Corbin was the most contradictory critic of the play. Initially, he praised the rebirth of satire as a means of evaluating and critiquing social institutions, noting how Williams attacks the scales upon which "various services to the state are rewarded" (Bordman and Hischak, 2004). He also mentioned Williams's debt to GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, calling Why Marry? "as keenly satirical as Shaw at his best and . . . as amusing" and noting that in some respects "the play surpasses even Shaw" (New York Times, December 26, 1917). Yet in one review, Corbin praises Why Marry? as both an "admirable comedy" and "a good stage story," while in another he says that "as an embodiment of a normal situation in dramatic action [of] the play is quite futile" (New York Times, February 3, 1918). He also takes Williams to task for having the couple marry in the end, albeit unknowingly, claiming that after rejecting society's norms "they are quitters and immoralists" and accusing Williams of resorting "to the cover of orange blossoms" (New York Times, February 3, 1918).

Regardless, Williams—also a journalist, fiction writer, and novelist—boldly takes on what was at the time a shocking topic, exploring gender and institutional changes in the new century. Helen is referred to as a "New Woman," challenging marriage as the only option for females, exploring possibilities beyond the household, and rejecting the limitations imposed by men.

FURTHER READING

- Adler, Thomas P. Mirror on the Stage: The Pulitzer Plays as an Approach to American Drama. West Lafayette, Ind.: Purdue Univ. Press, 1987.
- Bonin, Jane F. Major Themes in Prize-Winning American Drama. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow, 1975.
- Bordman, Gerald, and Thomas S. Hischack. The Oxford Companion to American Theatre. 3rd ed. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 2004.
- Stephens, Judith L. "Why Marry? The 'New Woman' of 1918." Theatre Journal 34 (May 1982): 183–196.

Karen Blansfield

THE WIDOWING OF MRS. HOLROYD

It is rotten when you're tied to a life you don't like.

—Blackmore, Act 1

Based on an event that happened to D. H. LAWRENCE's family, The Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd takes place entirely in the dark kitchen of a small cottage, far away from the drawing-room settings of plays by many of his contemporaries, and depicts the crumbling marriage of Charles and Lizzie Holroyd. An orphan raised by a drunken uncle, Mrs. Holroyd married mainly to escape her rootless existence in which, as she says, "I felt I'd nowhere to go, I belonged to nowhere, and nobody cared about me." She went with "the first man that turned up," a strapping miner whom she now claims is "just his body and nothing else—nothing that keeps him, no anchor, no roots, nothing satisfying." The two are each miserable and, when the play opens, engaged in a game of cruelty, as she encourages a young electrician named Blackmore, who is smitten with her, and he stays out late after work and comes home drunk, feeling like "a dog in the house, an' not a man."

Frustration and recrimination infect the household, including their two children Jack and Minnie as well as Charles's mother. The final straw comes when Charles brings home what Lizzie calls two "trollops from Nottingham," and she begins to plot elopement to SPAIN with Blackmore, who recognizes that "it is rotten when you're tied to a life you don't like," especially when Lizzie realizes that Charles wants "a slave, not a wife." An unexpected accident at the mine the following evening (modeled after what happened to Lawrence's uncle) creates a macabre homecoming scene in which Charles's dead body is carried into the kitchen much as it was the previous night in an inebriated stupor. Charles's wife and mother begin to undress and clean the body; and in contrast to the liberation and happiness she envisioned after Charles's death earlier in the play, she experiences intense guilt and expresses her culpability in the TRAGEDY. Throughout the play, Lawrence's focus is as much the day-to-day trudging of industrial folk as it is the stifling marital dynamics of the household.

More conventional in plot than his other "colliery" plays, The Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd was the first of Lawrence's plays to appear in print—drafted between 1910 and 1913 and published in 1914—and premiered in Los Angeles in 1916, not appearing onstage in ENGLAND until the 1920s. Focusing on the play's "every-day situation" rendered in "every-day" speech, the reviewers both lauded and criticized its form and content, in particular, its notorious and powerful final scene of body washing. Edwin Bjorkman (2002) marveled at the complexity of the characters, what he called the "psychological penetration" of Lawrence's written work. Although GEORGE BERNARD SHAW expressed admiration for the quality of his stage dialogue, Lawrence was not interested in writing what he called the "bony, bloodless drama" of the "rule and measure mathematical folk" produced by Royal Court playwrights (Eyre and Wright, 2000), choosing instead a style more akin to the DRAMATURGY of Irish writers like J. M. SYNGE and SEAN O'CASEY. While thematically similar to much of the New Drama, Holroyd provides a sharp contrast to representations of wealthier classes in Edwardian drama as well as its often more facile characterizations of working-class individuals. Juxtaposing symbolic elements with graphic naturalistic detail, including dialect, darkness, and even rats racing across the kitchen floor, the play presents, in addition, a complexity of structure that refuses melodramatic sentimentality and provides the audience with what John Worthen (1992) describes as “a REALISM [that ensures] no single one of the characters gains or maintains our sympathy throughout.”

FURTHER READING

- Bjorkman, Edwin. “Introduction” to The Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd. Philadelphia: Univ. of Pennsylvania, 2002. xiii–xvi.
- Eyre, Richard, and Nicholas Wright. Changing Stages. New York: Alfred Knopf, 2001.
- Sklar, Sylvia. The Plays of D. H. Lawrence: A Biographical and Critical Study. New York: Barnes & Noble, 1975.
- Worthen, John. D. H. Lawrence, The Early Years, 1885–1912. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1992.

Christopher Wixson

WIEBE, RUDY (1934–)

Rudy Wiebe was born in 1934 in Fairholme, Saskatchewan, CANADA, the descendant of Mennonite German immigrants. Wiebe's ancestors lived in RUSSIA for many years and left what was then the Soviet Union when subjected to religious persecution. Wiebe did not speak English until he was six and spoke a combination of Low German (Plattdeutsch) and High German at home throughout his adolescence. Wiebe's family moved to Coaldale, Alberta, in 1947, where he attended the Mennonite High School. This experience provided the basis for his play Far as the Eye Can See (published 1977). Wiebe graduated from the University of Alberta in Edmonton in 1956. He studied with the writing teacher F. M. Salter. After traveling through Europe, Wiebe received his master's degree from Alberta in 1960. In 1958 he married Tena Isaak. He later studied and taught in the UNITED STATES and visited Mennonite settlements in Paraguay. He taught at Alberta from 1967 to 1992.

Wiebe's cultural background informs his writing, and he uses Mennonite themes and settings in much of his writing. But he is not seen as primarily an ethnic or religious writer, as he has written numerous fictional documentaries including The Temptations of Big Bear (1973), The Scorched-Wood People (1977), and A Discovery of Strangers (1994). In these fictional documentaries Wiebe rewrites the past from a Native point of view. Wiebe has also collaborated with Yvonne Johnson on Stolen Life: The Journey of a Cree Woman (1998). Stolen Life provokes troubling questions about the nature of this collaboration—assembled from hours of taped interviews and thousands of pages of Johnson's own writing—where the Native woman, sentenced to life in prison for her part in a brutal murder, appears not strictly as her own narrative voice but as the construction of the white author.

Wiebe is interested in groups that resist consensus. His style is not heartwarming and earnest but refractory and spiritual in a challenging way. Far as the Eye Can See refers to the prairies of Western Canada, but it also alludes to the potential for religious freedom in Canada for a Mennonite group so often oppressed. The play does not idealize Canada; rather, it examines corruption and pettiness in an Alberta small town and contains cameo appearances by such figures as Blackfoot chief Crowfoot; Social Credit leader William Aberhart; and Princess Louise, Queen Victoria's daughter and the wife of a Canadian governor general, the Marquess of Lorne. The play examines the Mennonites in a settled community in Canada, where they interact with others yet also adamantly preserve their own traditions. These are not just inherited maxims but actively exercised moral values. The play is not didactic. But part of its mission is to educate a general audience about the nature of the Mennonite community and its way of life. The last line, explicitly addressed to the audience, emblemizes this: “We have listened to you, and we have understood you. Thank you.” The play was criticized for being too farcical, yet FARCE is arguably a key weapon in undermining any overly polemical tendencies.

PLAY: Far as the Eye Can See (published 1977)

FURTHER READING

- Keith, W. J., ed. A Voice in the Land: Essays by and About Rudy Wiebe. Edmonton: NeWest Press, 1981.
- Merrett, Robert James. “Communities.” Canadian Literature, no. 85 (Summer 1980): 126–128.
- van Toorn, Penny. Rudy Wiebe and the Historicity of the Word. Edmonton: Univ. of Alberta, 1995.

Nicholas Birns

WIJAYA, PUTU (1944–)

Putu Wijaya, born in 1944, an acclaimed Indonesian playwright, director, actor, and short-story writer, is an innovator of post-1968 theater in INDONESIA. He mixes Western and traditional Indonesian performance aesthetics and spirituality. Balinese-born, he moved to Yogyakarta to pursue a law degree. Disillusioned by the corruption of the Indonesian legal system, he turned to theater, performing with both RENDRA and ARIFIN C. NOER. In 1972 he formed his own company, Teater Mandiri, as the group's playwright and director. “Mandiri” is Javanese for “independent”—a guiding concept for the group whose motto is “to build from what is at hand.”

By irreverently mixing fantasy and reality, Wijaya invokes “mental terror” in the hearts of his audiences. He attacks the monotonous rhythms of daily life and apathy toward the status quo. To create this sense of terror, he uses dozens of actors; deafening music and sound effects; jarring images; colorful costumes, sets, and props; loud delivery; burning incense; and nonrealistic situations. Wijaya refers to his plays as tontonan from the root "to watch." Indeed, his productions are feasts for the eye. Like the traditional Balinese performance from which he draws inspiration, productions are total theater combining drama, dialogue, music, dance, color, and smell. As playwright, he has introduced several important trends including the use of colloquial Indonesian. He plays with accepted conventions of modern and traditional performance aesthetics to subvert audience expectations.

In his first major play Ouch (Aduh, 1974), which won the prestigious Jakarta Arts Council annual playwriting contest, Wijaya initiated "stupid theater" (teater bodoh) by portraying a group of marginalized people facing disturbing moral, ethical, and social dilemmas in a simple reportage style, allowing the audience to draw their own conclusions. Often, his characters do not have individual names but are identified as "someone" or "committee member." The open structure of his plays is deliberately simple, allowing varying interpretations by performers. The structure is also practical since his theater company is composed mostly of transient nonactors who must adapt material to themselves. The open structure also served as a guerrilla tactic to circumvent strict censorship barring criticism of the government and social conditions during President Haji Mohammad Suharto's New Order regime (1966–1998).

In 1975, Wijaya issued a manifesto on "wounded theatre" (teater luka) as an explanation for his production of Lo! (Lho, 1975). This violent, nonnarrative PERFORMANCE ART piece ended with naked actors spouting political jargon while pretending to defecate in a fountain in front of the theater. His desire to unsettle audiences through jarring images that rip open seemingly tidy social systems has also been the main focus of his work since YELL (YEL, 1991), which toured the UNITED STATES during the Festival of Indonesia.

Wijaya has also performed throughout Asia and Europe, including Tokyo in 2000 and Hamburg in 2002. In Hamburg he staged THE COFFIN IS TOO BIG FOR THE HOLE, his first production by a playwright other than himself. The work was based on a play by Singaporean KUO PAO KUN.

PLAYS: Ouch (Aduh, 1974); Whachumacallit (Anu, 1974); Lo! (Lho, 1975); Nil (Nol, 1976); Whatever (Entah, 1976); Hum-Pim-Pah (1978); Accelerate (Blong, 1979); Bang (Dor, 1979); Crazy (Edan, 1980); Watch It (Awas, 1980); Free (Los, 1981); Geez! (Gerr, 1981); Essence (Zat, 1982); Roar (Aum, 1982); Shit (Tai, 1983); The Front (Front, 1985); Shame (Aib, 1988); Gosh (Wah, 1989); YELL (YEL, 1991); Bore (Bor, 1994); Aware (Ngeh, 1998); Chaos (Keos, 1998); War (2002)

FURTHER READING

- Gillitt, Cobina. "Challenging Conventions and Crossing Boundaries: A New Tradition of Indonesian Theatre from 1968–1978." Ph.D. diss., New York Univ., 2001.
- Gillitt Asmara, Cobina. "Tradisi Baru: A New Tradition of Indonesian Theatre." Asian Theatre Journal 12, no. 1 (1995): 164–174.

- Morgan, Anne-Marie. "Three Approaches to Modern Theatre in Jakarta in the 1990s: Rendra, Putu Wijaya and Ratna Sarumpaet." Australasian Drama Studies 27 (1995): 70–85.
- Rafferty, Ellen, ed. Putu Wijaya in Performance: A Script and Study of Indonesian Theatre. Madison: Univ. of Wisconsin Center for Southeast Asian Studies, 1989.

Cobina Gillitt

WILDCAT STAGE PRODUCTIONS

Dave MacLennan and Dave Anderson founded Wildcat Stage Productions in 1978 as an offshoot of the 7:84 (SCOTLAND) theater company. The development of this second company was spawned by a number of personal, political, and artistic differences emerging among members of the parent company during the late 1970s. As the driving force of popular political theater in Scotland during the 1970s and 1980s, 7:84, under the direction of JOHN MCGRATH, dedicated itself to the celebration of socialist ideals, targeting working-class audiences during tours throughout the Highland regions and cities of Scotland. Although 7:84 was well known for its populist style of theater involving aspects of Scottish music hall traditions, with song, humor, and the Indigenous ceilidh form of dance, as well as Brechtian agit-prop (AGITATION-PROPAGANDA), direct address, and DOCUMENTARY techniques, many of the band members of the original company felt that music should become a more important aspect of the group's work.

With Scottish Arts Council (SAC) funding to support them, the band broke away to create Wildcat, a company wholeheartedly devoted to a unique genre of political musical theater, distinct from the work of 7:84 (Scotland). Additionally, unlike conventional character and narrative-driven West End musicals, Wildcat more closely resembles the 1970s fringe company Cartoon Archetypal Slogan Theatre (CAST) in its use of rock opera-themed music to articulate and illuminate left-wing political and social issues. Notable performances include Painted Bird (1978), Dummies (1979), 1982/Any Minute Now (1982), Same Difference (1984), The Celtic Story (1988), Dead Liberty (1990), and revivals of 7:84 productions such as Border Warfare (1990), John Brown's Body (1991), and A Satire of the Four Estates (1996). Throughout its existence, Wildcat productions have presented new Scottish writing, concentrating on working-class experiences, popular culture, and left-wing political and social issues.

Unfortunately, an uneven record of successes, variable audience figures, and a certain amount of critically noted predictability led to financial difficulties and a conflict with the SAC. Ultimately, the company whose political fervor had engaged the emotions and imaginations of audiences during the eras of the Harold Wilson, Margaret Thatcher, and John Major political administrations became overshadowed by changes in post-Devolution Scottish theater and culture in the 1990s. Finally, during a major overhaul of subsidy practices and reallocation of funds, including the creation of fixed four-year grants to support touring companies in 1997, the SAC did not include Wildcat in the list of clients that were to receive new or continued financial support. Instead, the company's £200,000 annual subsidy was retracted. The four-year funding grants were allocated, instead, to those the SAC considered to be more forward looking, innovative, and cosmopolitan companies, reflecting a shift in dramatic tastes within Scotland and a response to the changing face of Scottish artistic and political culture at the end of the 20th century. After an exhausting and unsuccessful battle with the SAC to restore funding, Wildcat's artistic director Dave MacLennan resigned his post in favor of a return to previous writing interests. Dave Anderson took over responsibilities of artistic leadership, as the company continued rehearsals and productions on a project-by-project basis.

FURTHER READING

- DiCenzo, Maria. The Politics of Alternative Theatre in Britain, 1968–1990: The Case of 7:84 (Scotland). Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1996.
- MacLennan, Elizabeth. The Moon Belongs to Everyone: Making Theatre with 7:84. London: Methuen, 1990.
- Maguire, Tom. "Still Cool for Cats? The Life and Times of Wildcat Stage Productions." International Journal of Scottish Theatre 1, no. 1 (June 2000). http://arts.qmuc.ac.uk/ijost/Volume1_no1/T_Maguire.htm.
- Stevenson, Randall, and Gavin Wallace, eds. Scottish Theatre Since the Seventies. Edinburgh: Edinburgh Univ. Press, 1996.

Kristin A. Crouch

THE WILD DUCK

Take the lie out of any particular situation, and at once you take away happiness as well.

—Relling, Act 5

The Wild Duck (Vildanden), a play in five acts, was first performed at the Bergen Theater in January 1885. The play takes up themes one recognizes from HENRIK IBSEN's philosophical dramas of the 1860s, BRAND and PEER GYNT, dealing with contrary forms of self-realization. In The Wild Duck the opposition between "being oneself" and "being true to one's self enough" has been moved from the higher sphere of abstraction to a bourgeois sphere, in which Gregers Werle and Hjalmar Ekdal take over the agent positions of Brand and Peer Gynt. Due to an offense in the past, old Ekdal has served time in prison, while his business partner Haakon Werle avoided punishment. The Ekdals experienced a social decline, and as compensation for this, the rich merchant Werle has supported his former partner by employing him as copying clerk. At the same time, he has arranged for the marriage of Hjalmar, the son of old Ekdal, to his own former lover Gina, who has born an illegitimate child.

At the beginning of the play, Gina's daughter Hedvig is fourteen years old. The family is living together with old Ekdal in an apartment consisting of a living section, a photo atelier, and an attic. Domestic peace is threatened by Gregers's intrusion into the Ekdal family, presenting to his onetime school friend Hjalmar what he calls the "claim of the ideal." Eagerness to make up for the wrong his father has done to the Ekdals, father and son, he wants Hjalmar to be a truth witness, who is to cut through all lies and establish an existence based on ideal values. In his fundamentalist orientation, Gregers is related to Brand. Proceeding to make Hjalmar face the truth, he is not taking into account that Hjalmar is incapable of a life without illusions. With the assistance of Gregers's father, Hjalmar has established himself as a photographer specializing in portrait photography including the art of retouching. He is a master at recreating reality so that it appears in the way he would rather see it. His ambition is to become an inventor. This is simply empty rhetoric, however, and an excuse to spend time in the attic working on contraptions to improve the existence of the domesticated animals kept there.

The Wild Duck is a play about how one spends one's time nourishing the illusions that make life tolerable. Ibsen claimed that The Wild Duck occupies a special place in his dramatic production. The symbolic SUBTEXT beneath the realistic communication level seems to be more explicit than in his earlier plays. Hedvig finds the words to describe this deviating practice when she comments on Gregers Werle's way of expressing himself: "It was as if he meant something else than what he said." The attic itself—with the duck that has been wounded by a gunshot and captured—is the central symbol of the play. The duck is primarily symbolic of Hedvig, but together with the artificial surroundings in which it lives, it does have a symbolic reference to several of the characters in the play in that it articulates the difference between appearance and reality. Photography, lighting, visual communication, and the faculty of seeing constitute another continuous structural field with a number of symbolic references. Ibsen indirectly shows by means of inherited visual impairment that Hedvig is not Hjalmar's but Haakon Werle's daughter.

When Gregers informs Hjalmar of his suspicions about this paternity, Hjalmar is upset and rejects Hedvig in a way that makes her desperate to regain his love. Gregers suggests to her that shooting the duck would be a sacrifice that would convince Hjalmar of her unlimited affection for him. In the attic with a pistol, intending to shoot the bird, Hedvig overhears Hjalmar's rhetorical question to Gregers concerning whether she might be willing to prove her love for him by sacrificing the good life offered her by the Werle family. She misunderstands Hjalmar's self-pitying phrases, confusing his expression "good life" with "life," and in a self-sacrificing spontaneous reaction shoots herself.

Hedvig is the victim both of Hjalmar's pathetic rhetoric and Gregers's fanatical search for the truth. With Dr. Relling, Ibsen launched a character whose task it is to comment on characters and events from the position of a cynic. In direct opposition to Gregers and his self-imposed mission of uncompromising truth, Dr. Relling claims that the average human being, in order to be happy, is in need of a major illusion. Accordingly, as a doctor he is treating his fellow human beings by promoting "the life lie" of each individual, giving it therapeutic status as a remedy against all forms of moral and ideological fanaticism.

FURTHER READING

Johnston, Brian. "The Metaphoric Structure of The Wild Duck."

Contemporary Approaches to Ibsen 1 (1966): 72–95.

Moi, Toril. "‘It was as if he meant something different from what he said—all the time’: Language, Metaphysics and the Everyday in The Wild Duck." Everyday Life, special issue of New Literary History 33, no. 4 (2002): 655–686.

Reinert, Otto. "Sight Imagery in The Wild Duck." The Journal of English and German Philology 55 (1956): 457–462.

Steene, Birgitta. "Can This Bird Fly? The Wild Duck on the Screen." Edda (1999): 31–39.

Van Laan, Thomas F. "The Novelty of The Wild Duck: The Author's Absence." Journal of Dramatic Theory and Criticism 1, no. 1 (1986): 17–33.

Knut Brynhildsvoll

WILDE, OSCAR (1854–1900)

The supreme vice is shallowness. Whatever is realised is right.

—De Profundis, 1905

A handbag?

—Lady Bracknell, Act 1, The Importance of Being Earnest

Oscar Wilde, born Fingal O'Flahertie Wills in Dublin, IRELAND, on October 10, 1854, was a celebrity wit, aesthete, poet, novelist, philosophical essayist, dramatist, and prison convict. He was the second son of Dr. William Wilde, a surgeon later knighted for his service as medical commissioner to the Irish census of 1841 and 1851, and Jane Francesca Wilde, a poet and folklorist, who wrote nationalist ballads under the pen name "Speranza." Dr. Wilde was a man of Victorian energy, writing books not just on medical subjects but on travels in the Mediterranean, the last years of Jonathan Swift, the archaeology of Ireland, and the history and geography of his beloved Lough Corrib in County Galway; he fathered three children outside of wedlock and was nearly ruined by an infamous libel suit involving a young female patient who accused him of taking liberties with her chloroformed body.

1874–1891

Wilde's larger-than-life parents held a salon for Dublin wits at 1 Merrion Square, near Trinity College, where Oscar enrolled after completing his schooling at Portora in County Fermanagh (which SAMUEL BECKETT later attended). Wilde, a brilliant student, caught the attention of John Pentland Mahaffy, author of The Art of Conversation. Professor Mahaffy wrote works of popular scholarship on the social life of the ancient Greeks, in which he did not wholly avoid the subject of the common practice of male homosexuality among the ancients. In 1874 Wilde chose to leave Trinity before graduation in order to complete his education at Oxford University.

Although affecting a bored superiority to the tasks set by tutors, Wilde was a naturally avid scholar, as his Oxford notebooks prove. His memoranda and responses to passages in German PHILOSOPHY are points of reckoning for the course of his future life. The great sages then on the faculty or in the university's orbit all had an influence on him. Walter Pater's devotion to Greek aestheticism and male friendship (as evident in Studies in the History of the Renaissance, 1873) was particularly attractive, but John Ruskin's commitment to the social practice of aestheticism—the ideal of making life beautiful for all—had a lasting impact as well. On one hand, he felt the charm of Cardinal Newman's devotion to the spiritual discipline of dogmatic Catholicism; on the other hand, he admired the individualist engagement with public matters displayed by the Protestant Matthew Arnold. Some of these influences—especially Pater's emphasis on fineness and intensity of feeling as the highest things in life—are apparent in Wilde's Poems (1881).

Carrying off the honors of a double first in "Greats" and the Newdigate Prize for poetry at Oxford, Wilde arrived in London in 1879. He became famous by accompanying celebrity actresses, giving interviews to journalists, wearing clothes even less utilitarian than those of women of fashion, and making no utterance that was not both quotable and memorable. Newspaper caricatures, gossip columns, and satirical operas made fun of this very large and outrageous Irishman, just down from Oxford, but Wilde gave to notoriety the same welcome he gave to fame: it was all publicity for himself.

In 1882 Wilde left for New York for a lecture tour across the UNITED STATES and CANADA, supposedly telling a customs officer, "I have nothing to declare but my genius." W. S. GILBERT and Arthur Sullivan's opera Patience, in which Wilde was caricatured, was on tour, and Wilde himself aimed to elaborate a profitable off-stage fantasy of himself. He was businesslike both in offering himself as an effeminate laughingstock and in gaining the respect of listeners to his rather academic lectures on art and beauty.

On his return from North America, Wilde married Constance Lloyd. They had two sons, Cyril (born 1885) and Vivian (born 1886). With the assistance of a leading architect, Edward Godwin, and painter, James McNeill Whistler, the Wildes created a famously fashionable house at 16 Tite Street, Chelsea. From this address Wilde preached to others about "The House Beautiful" and made popular blue china and dados (a dado is a lining of the lower part of an interior wall of a different material from that of the upper part).

Only months after his marriage, Wilde began a lecture tour of cities in ENGLAND. In "Beauty, Taste, and Ugliness in Dress," a typical one, he told his listeners it would be better—more healthy and more beautiful—to have clothes for men and women hang from the shoulders rather than the waist, in the fashion of the ancients in togas rather than the Victorians in belted trousers and corseted gowns. To art students, he explained that pictures that make people exclaim, "How curious!" or "How sad!"

or "How interesting!" are all bad pictures; a good picture makes one exclaim only, "How beautiful."

As to literature itself, Wilde tried writing MELODRAMA (Vera; or, The Nihilists) and historical verse drama (The Duchess of Padua), but the first flopped in 1883, and the second had a similar fate in 1891. His talent emerged, however, in his superior reviews of inferior novels (one title is "Half-Hours with the Worst Authors"), elaborately clever letters to the editor, and accounts of painting exhibitions. Wilde's journalism is unique in its attention to precise diction and highly patterned sentence structure. Whatever he wrote was an expression of wit. Only with "The Portrait of Mr. W. H." in 1889, however, did he begin to show that he was not only a clever but a great writer. With a scholarly wit that foreshadows Jorge Luis Borges, the story tells of an effeminate young man in 19th-century England who has a theory about the identity of that "W. H." to whom William Shakespeare devoted his sonnets: the initials belonged to a boy-actor named Willie Hughes with whom the playwright was in love. Due to its elaborately arranged plausibility, the story was shocking: Shakespeare was a married man with two children, and yet he was sexually infatuated with a boy.

But all this was true in 1888 of Wilde himself. He had been seduced by Robert Ross, a Cambridge undergraduate he had met in 1886. Wilde then took a step into what thereafter had to be a secret life, for homosexuality was a criminal offense at the time. Hidden desires, false identities, the superficiality of custom and morality became the stuff of Wilde's personal life and subsequently of his fiction and plays. The Picture of Dorian Gray (1891), his one novel and a masterpiece, was immediately seen to concern the "filthy" desires of men. It certainly had a liberating effect on young men of similar temperament, such as Lionel Johnson, Max Beerbohm, Aubrey Beardsley, and John Gray, who looked upon Wilde as their hero. They became the "decadents" or "aesthetes" of the 1890s.

While it was apparent that Dorian Gray was crammed with sin and beauty, its moral and philosophical implications were unclear. For the instruction of those uncertain of his beliefs, Wilde published a number of profound if paradoxical essays at this time. "The Decay of Lying" (1889) made fun of honesty, a Victorian shibboleth, on the grounds that it censored and diminished creativity. "The Soul of Man Under Socialism" (1891) surprisingly gave support for socialism, though for a kind of socialism based on the primacy of the individual (not the couple, the family, the masses, or the state). In a proper society, he thought that each individual should be as free from compulsion as every rich person. His most Nietzschean work—a classic of criticism—is "The Critic as Artist," a Platonic dialogue that refutes Matthew Arnold, saying that the real purpose of criticism is not to see the object as it really is; it is to see the object as it is not. The highest criticism, he proclaimed, is "the record of one's own soul."

Wilde's impact on theater followed his considerable achievements with other forms—poetry, journalism, short stories, a novel, philosophy, and criticism. In 1891, in Paris, he wrote a symbolist play about Salomé, who falls in love with the sexually pure John the Baptist, demands his head from her besotted stepfather Herod, and then lustfully dances with the severed head. The dialogue (in French) is encrusted with poetic imagery, slow moving, doom laden, and undramatic. In England, Salomé was denied a license for performance, but it became influential upon opera, upon the plays of W. B. Yeats, and after its 1896 production by Lugné-Poe at the Théâtre de l'Oeuvre, on European symbolist theater in general.

1892–1900: FAMOUS, THEN INFAMOUS

Wilde's first COMEDY, LADY WINDERMERE'S FAN, opened at George Alexander's fashionable West End London theater on February 20, 1892, to a full house. The play appears to be a high-society melodrama, but everything is not what it appears. Mrs. Erlynne seems to be an immoral woman, come to blackmail a man for sins past. In fact, she does ask Lord Windermere for money for keeping it a secret that his puritanical wife is actually her daughter, by an affair that forced her out of good society. But Mrs. Erlynne ultimately intervenes to save her daughter from the imputation of immorality on her part and takes the blame upon herself, an expression of instinctive motherliness that she finds anything but pleasant. The foppish and witty Lord Darlington is the first of what became a common type in Wilde's plays: the wit who seems superficial but is actually moved by deep feeling and good sense.

A little more than a year later, on April 19, 1893, Wilde's second comedy, A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE, opened in a production by Herbert Beerbohm Tree. Wilde told Tree that he took the plot from a family magazine, which had stolen it from a novel (his own!): "People love a wicked aristocrat who seduces a virtuous maid, and they love a virtuous maiden for being seduced. . . . I have given them what they like, so that they may learn to appreciate what I like to give them." There is much truth in this comment. With a blasé surrender to popular taste, Wilde did borrow plots from contemporary popular fiction and theater. He altered them here and there in small ways, so as to upset conventions. He also put into each play, even into the mouth of each character in each play, maxims on life that have devastatingly anarchic and satirical power. Such revolutionary one-sentence teachings are what he "liked to give" his hypocritical public. For example, explaining why women have more happiness and pleasure than men, Mrs. Allonby says, "There are far more things forbidden to us than are forbidden to them." Lord Illingworth is Wildean in his maxims: as Lady Hunstanton says, shaking her fan at Illingworth, "Everything you have said today seems to me excessively immoral. It has been most interesting, listening to you."

Jokes about temptation were not simply stage persiflage for Wilde. By the middle of 1892 he had embarked on a grand passion with an Oxford undergraduate of remarkable beauty, Lord Alfred Douglas, nicknamed "Bosie." For a second time, the author, husband, and father of two was "led astray" by a very young man. Bosie loved to spend money on restaurants, hotels, rent-boys, jewelry, and travels in England, FRANCE, and Algeria. With a lord's sense of being far above common society, he was reckless in the public display of unusual manners and morals. As Wilde was anyway one of the most famous men in England, whose face was well known through newspaper depictions, the couple could count on very little privacy for their love affair (and mutual love it was). In fact, they did not seek privacy; they sought celebrity instead, relishing outrage and danger.

It was difficult for Wilde to devote himself fully to writing while keeping this double life going. However, during a vacation by Bosie to the Continent, Wilde remained in England and rapidly wrote his two greatest plays, AN IDEAL HUSBAND and THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST. The first opened on January 3, 1895. The prime minister, the prince of Wales, and many government ministers took box seats; the house was full. Society had come to expect from Wilde nothing but masterpieces, and nothing but masterpieces would he give them.

An Ideal Husband possessed elements that had become familiar in a Wilde play: an adventuress, an aristocratic wit with a fancy costume and a heart of gold, and a youthful sin that comes back to haunt the sinner. In this case, the sin was the sale of state secrets by Sir Robert Chiltern, now a cabinet minister of highest character, thought to be a future prime minister. The originality of the play, apart from its brilliant language, appears in its very modern and Nietzschean moral development. Chiltern refuses to be ashamed of his youthful misdeed. It got him the money that enabled him to enter both society and politics; everything good about his life follows from, and rests on, that act of misconduct. It took courage to sin, and he will not renounce it. While these ethics of a superman are not plainly endorsed in the play, they are made to seem superior to the high-toned moralism of Chiltern's wife, whose idealism comes off as cold and shallow.

The play broadly concerns a scandal of 1890s political life: the fall of Charles Stewart Parnell, who had been identified in a divorce suit by a fellow member of Parliament as the adulterous long-term lover of his wife, Katherine O'Shea. Parnell did not renounce his love. The Irish Catholic priests and English Protestant preachers all demanded that Parnell be dropped from the leadership of the Irish party and from any alliance with the ruling Liberal Party. Yet, by the logic of An Ideal Husband, Parnell's daring passion for O'Shea was not a sign of unfitness for office; it was an attribute inseparable from his greatness.

Wilde's relationship to Irish nationalism was complicated. Aristocratic and bohemian English society circles were his element; his manners were peerless. Yet his satire of English common sense, puritanism, snobbery, and hypocrisy was satire from an Irish point of view. When he appeared at the Southwark Irish Literary Club in 1887, at the start of the Irish Revival, the others were not pleased to see in their midst "the head centre of aestheticism," even if he were the son of "Speranza," a hero of Young Ireland. Nonetheless, Wilde was friendly to their cause and to individual Irish writers. Yeats especially was grateful for Wilde's kindness and profoundly influenced by his work. That the Irish Revival became a kind of branch of aestheticism is the result of Wilde's influence.

In August and September of 1894, Wilde dashed off his greatest work, The Importance of Being Earnest. He was threatened by debt and, more seriously, by the dogged demands of the Marquess of Queensberry that Wilde see no more of his son "Bosie." Queensberry played the part of the righteous Victorian patriarch, but he was also a very unpleasant ruffian. While writing his play, Wilde kept all seriousness at bay. Its principle is to treat as trivial everything important (family, property, marriage) and to treat as important things that are trivial, such as cucumber sandwiches. At the heart of the play is Algernon's defense of the double life. He pretends to have a friend in the country named Bunbury, who is always falling ill. Whenever an unpleasant obligation appears in town, he dashes off supposedly to see Bunbury but actually to have riotous fun in country houses. The complications implicit in leading a double life lead to cock-ups all around. It had been Wilde's practice to employ somewhat silly and conventional plots, but in The Importance of Being Earnest the silliness was deliberately carried to zany lengths. While often farcical, Wilde realized that success onstage depended on a certain style of ACTING: rapid pace (like "a pistol shot"), indolent deadpan delivery, and perfect carriage. While rehearsing the actors, Wilde learned that the Marquess of Queensberry was planning a scandalous demonstration against Wilde's homosexuality during the first-night performance. Wilde had Queensberry's ticket canceled, and policemen stood at the theater door to bar his entry. On St. Valentine's Day of 1895, the play opened to immediate and unmarred success.

Only days later, Queensberry left a card with the porter of Wilde's club on which he had written, "To Oscar Wilde posing Somdomite" [sic]. The aim was to expose and humiliate Wilde among his friends. Wilde would have been better advised to tear up the card and treat it with amused triviality in the spirit of The Importance of Being Earnest. However, urged on by Bosie, he sued the Marquess of Queensberry for libel. This was a fatal mistake: Queensberry had for a long time employed detectives to follow Oscar and Bosie. By the time of the trial, a considerable number of male prostitutes and other men had given affidavits of having had sexual relations with Wilde. During the libel trial, Queensberry's defense was that the libel was true: Wilde was a homosexual. The jury decided against Wilde. As a result, a warrant of arrest was issued, and bravely if foolishly, Wilde declined to escape to France, as did most homosexual English aristocrats in flight from the police. Tried for sexual crimes, there was a hung jury; so he was tried again, found guilty, and sentenced to hard labor for two years.

In London, Wilde's crime and trial were the scandal of the decade, perhaps of the century. An Ideal Husband and The Importance of Being Earnest, both smash hits at first, were taken offstage, not to be revived for years. His name had become a dirty word, unmentionable. He was bankrupt. His wife divorced him. He was denied the chance to see his sons.

There were to be no more comedies from Oscar Wilde, but in prison he did write one more masterpiece, in the form of an immensely long letter to Lord Alfred Douglas, De Profundis. It is the autobiography of a disaster and a moving meditation on themes in the life of Jesus. Blame is mercilessly placed on Douglas, but love is expressed for him as well. After serving his sentence, Wilde was reunited with Douglas in Paris, where, writing no more, he died on November 30, 1900, evidently of an infection of the inner ear.

PLAYS: Vera, or, The Nihilists (1880); The Duchess of Padua (1883); Lady Windermere's Fan (1892); Salomé (1892); A Woman of No Importance (1893); An Ideal Husband (1895); The Importance of Being Earnest (1895)

FURTHER READING

- Bloom, Harold, ed. Oscar Wilde. New York: Chelsea, 1985.
 Ellmann, Richard. Oscar Wilde. New York: Knopf, 1988.
 Gagnier, Regenia, ed. Critical Essays on Oscar Wilde. New York: Maxwell Macmillan, 1991.
 Knox, Melissa. Oscar Wilde: A Long and Lovely Suicide. New Haven, Conn.: Yale Univ. Press, 1994.
 Powell, Kerry. Oscar Wilde and the Theatre of the 1890s. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1990.

Adrian Frazier

WILDER, THORNTON (1897–1975)

Imaginative narration—the invention of souls and destinies—is to a philosopher an all but indefensible activity.

—Thornton Wilder, “Some Thoughts on Playwriting,” 1941

The literary reputation of Thornton Wilder has not diminished in the decades since his death. His writings inject a calm yet stirring nostalgia unique to itself. His young life enveloped a far bigger world than most of his peers. Wilder was born in Madison, Wisconsin, on April 17, 1897. When he was eight years old, his family moved from the midwestern UNITED STATES to Hong Kong, where his father served as American consul general (1906–1908). After only six months in CHINA, Wilder was sent to school in California. In 1911 he returned to China, where he attended an English mission school at Chefoo. In 1912 Wilder attended Berkeley High School in California. From 1915 to 1917 he attended Oberlin College, where he wrote for the Oberlin Literary Magazine. In 1917 he transferred to his father's alma mater, Yale, where he published short plays and essays in the Yale Literary Magazine. In 1918 he served for a year in the Coast Artillery. He returned to Yale, earning his bachelor of arts degree in 1920. In 1920–1921 he spent ten months in Rome at the American Academy while beginning The Cabala, which the New York Times praised for its exquisite prose and “its jewels of charming observation and felicitous expression.” From 1921 to 1928, Wilder taught French at Lawrenceville School in New Jersey. Wilder earned his master's degree from Princeton University in 1926.

In 1927 the American Laboratory Theatre produced his play The Trumpet Shall Sound; but it was his 1928 Pulitzer Prize-winning novel The Bridge of San Luis Rey that made him a bestselling author. This skillful novel interlaces the personalities of one story in the destinies of another. Wilder's newly earned wealth allowed him to stop teaching and devote all of his energies to his writing. He bought a house in Connecticut for himself and his mother and culled from a group of previously written short plays The Angel that Troubled the Waters (1928). While traveling in Europe, he began writing The Woman of Andros. He taught at the University of Chicago from 1930 to 1936, while also writing Hollywood movie scripts. He adapted André Obey's The Rape of Lucrece (Le Viol de Lucrece). In 1935 Wilder's novel Heaven's My Destination was published, and by 1937 he completed his adaptation of HENRIK IBSEN'S A Doll's House.

In 1938 OUR TOWN opened on a Boston stage to poor reviews. Despite that, the show moved to New York, where it was a smashing success, earning Wilder his second Pulitzer Prize, making him the first writer to receive this award for both literature and drama. Our Town celebrated the miracles of birth, death, and the human spirit of American small-town life. In December 1938 The Merchant of Yonkers debuted but closed after three weeks. Four years later, Wilder wrote an Alfred Hitchcock movie, The Shadow of a Doubt.

In 1942 he enlisted in the air force where, despite very poor eyesight, he was commissioned a captain. While in the service, Wilder's 1942 smash hit THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH earned him the 1943 Pulitzer Prize in Drama. This fantastic parable deals with mankind's age-long struggle to achieve civilization. More shockingly controversial than the play were the accusations of Joseph Campbell and H. M. Robinson that Wilder had plagiarized from James Joyce's Finnegan's Wake (1939). This seems as absurd as accusing Arthur Laurents (West Side Story) of plagiarizing from Romeo and Juliet, or GEORGE BERNARD SHAW in Pygmalion of stealing from Ovid's Metamorphoses. Nevertheless, Wilder graciously acknowledged that he was “deeply indebted” to Joyce. About The Skin of Our Teeth Wilder states, “It was written on the eve of our entrance into the war and under strong emotion.” This influential and vital drama has profoundly contributed to the American stage.

During World War II, Wilder served in AFRICA, ITALY, and the United States until September 1945. His 1948 novel The Ides of March centers on the assassination of Julius Caesar. Wilder then reworked The Merchant of Yonkers, a play based on Johann Nestroy's He'll Have Himself a Good Time (Einen Jux will es sich Machen, 1842), in turn based on John Oxenford's A Day Well Spent (1835). Newly titled, The Matchmaker (1954) was made into a motion picture in 1958 and later adapted in 1964 as the musical COMEDY Hello Dolly!—which was filmed in 1969.

At the Edinburgh Festival The Alcestiad was produced in 1955. The Long Christmas Dinner, a one-act play, was converted into an opera, performed at Mannheim in German in 1961, as was The Alcestiad in 1962. That same year three new one-act plays in two forms, The Seven Deadly Sins and The Seven Ages of Man, opened in New York. In 1967, Wilder published his longest novel, The Eighth Day. The title refers to a midwestern, 20th-century murder in which the falsely accused man (John Ashley) escapes. Wilder's last published work Theophilus North (1973) is a novel about the development of an artist (loosely based on Joyce's autobiographical novel A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, 1916). Theophilus explores nine career choices before realizing that being a writer incorporates all nine professions.

Wilder died of a heart attack in Hamden, Connecticut, on December 7, 1975, while living with his devoted sister Isabel, also a writer. He authored seven novels, many essays, scholarly articles, movie scripts, shorter works, and dozens of plays.

Wilder fashioned narrative prose into a physical medium harvested of the intellectual and chimerical. Wilder had an optimistic attitude about life and a genuine interest in people, especially the common person whose fibers are sinuous. Wilder's novels and plays vividly summon forth an often forgotten era in a style that is unique and incandescent. His themes are thoroughly human and impeccably simple. Paradoxically, they can only achieve their pricelessness when they are contrasted with the massive unimaginable events of history. It is only against such a background that the full individuality and poignancies of our personal microcosms become evident. His dramatic trademark involved creating extraordinarily stark sets where the individual stands out. Trivial people and events take on great relevance in Wilder's writings. Too often our lives involve misguided passions that are frequently sterile, self-seeking, and false. Wilder intermingles the serious with the comic, the sentimental with the harsh. His writings pay eloquent homage to the human race despite man's and nature's destructive powers, ignorance, follies, and shortcomings.

SELECT PLAYS: The Trumpet Shall Sound (1927); The Angel that Troubled the Waters and Other Plays (1928); The Long Christmas Dinner and Other Plays (1931); Lucrèce (from a play by André Obey, 1932); A Doll's House (from a play by Ibsen, 1937); The Merchant of Yonkers (from a play by Johann Nestroy, 1938; revised as The Matchmaker, 1954); Our Town (1938); The Skin of Our Teeth (1942); The Victors (from a play by Sartre, 1949); A Life in the Sun (1955, published as The Alcestiad with The Drunken Sisters: A Satyr Play, 1977); Plays for Bleecker Street (1962)

FURTHER READING

Goldstein, Malcolm. The Art of Thornton Wilder. Lincoln: Univ. of Nebraska Press, 1965.

Haberman, Donald. The Plays of Thornton Wilder: A Critical Study. Middletown: Wesleyan Univ. Press, 1967.

Wilson, Edmund. The Shores of Light. Boston: Northeastern Univ. Press, 1952.

Meg Walters

WILLEMS, PAUL (1912–1997)

Paul Willems, the son of well-known Belgian novelist Marie Gevers, was born in 1912 in Edegem, BELGIUM, and lived his entire life in the family château, Missembourg, south of Antwerp. His family was of the old French-language bourgeoisie of Flanders, a breed that slowly but surely had become a vestigial appendage. Having done his studies in law, Willems was for many years the director of the Palais de Beaux Arts in Brussels, the principal performing arts center of the European capital. In addition to being a celebrated playwright, he wrote novels and short stories. He died in 1997 in Edegem.

Heir to the DRAMATURGY of his compatriots MAURICE MAETERLINCK, FERNAND CROMMELYNCK, and MICHEL DE GHELDERODE, his is an idiom of fantasy, dreams, and fables. At times one has the feeling that the dream world has broken in on the waking one or that there is no escape from a dream. While his theater may at first glance seem saccharine, particularly with his enormous hit It's Raining in My House (Il pleut dans ma maison, 1958), closer examination reveals a thick layer of grotesquerie, cynicism, feelings of loss, frustration, cruelty, and futility.

His early play Mr. Nuche's Fine Wine (Le bon vin de m. Nuche, 1949) is a love story about a pathetically cliché and fear-driven middle-class couple, the Nuches, who attempt to keep their adolescent daughter, Isabelle, safe from the possibility of love, a plan that backfires. Her natural drives triumph, as she falls in love with the very person her parents had thought was "safe" and whom they put over her as her minder. The COMEDY is replete with all the charm of a JEAN GIRAUDOUX or JEAN ANHOUILH bauble, such as Ring Around the Moon.

Life in a bubble is a recurring image in the Willems canon. The bubble may be a social barrier created by parents attempting to keep their daughter chaste as in Mr. Nuche's Fine Wine or one constructed by parents conniving to marry their daughter off to an aged, wealthy pretendant, as in The Sailing City (La ville à voile, 1967). But the bubble may also be a buffer from life's cruel realizations. A dotty family in It's Raining in My House is hiding out in their house with the leaking roof, surrounded by an extensive, overgrown, and neglected terrain. Their amiable world has its own logic, nicer and kinder than that outside their walls, and one in which all the potential suffering life holds has no part, including the menace of passing time. All interlopers forget their pragmatic purposes and fall prey to the household's aimless charm.

Reminiscent of Ghelderode and Maeterlinck, Willems's The Weight of the Snow (Warna ou le poids de la neige, 1962) is set in a medieval castle replete with a moat. Outside the plague is raging and has claimed the vast majority of the populace. Inside the middle-aged Countess Warna is keeping her consort Ernevelde in a velvet prison. The dangers outside the castle walls are too great to brave, but staying inside pursuing an unvarying routine with the domineering Warna whose love is suffocating has become intolerable. When Ernevelde ultimately attempts a getaway, Willems orders her minions to destroy a dangerous bear on the loose and has him shot. She opts to kill her coveted love, rather than suffer him living away from her.

Willems's late play The Brief Life (La vita breve, 1991) takes place on a ship, a bubble floating on an endless sea, in which fantasies promise to be realized but are disappointed. Josty, an aged roué suffering from an incurable disease, is attempting to arrest his doom by reviving his experience of young love with the sacrificial virgin, Anne-Marie. In this project, he overlooks Mesdemoiselles, a middle-aged companion, who would be more appropriate. The atmosphere in this play is even more surreal or Felliniesque than usual.

The more somber She Confused Sleeping and Dying (Elle disait dormir pour mourir, 1983) depicts the life of a woman whose father, to protect her from the war that is raging, has deposited his daughter in the House on the Marsh, a refuge meant to be unattainable from the dangerous outside world. Again, the heroine is trapped in a time bubble, one that is meant to protect her but that also arrests her development.

PLAYS: Lamentable Julie (1949); Mr. Nuche's Fine Wine (Le bon vin de m. Nuche, 1949); Skin of the Bear (Peau d'ours, 1951); Tender and Barbarous Melody (Air barbare et tendre, 1952); Off and the Moon (Off et la lune, 1954); It's Raining in My House (Il pleut dans ma maison, 1958); Eel Beach (La plage aux anguilles, 1959); The Weight of the Snow (Warna ou le poids de la neige, 1962); The Early Morning Market (Le marché des petites heures, 1964); The Sailing City (La ville à voile, 1967); The Sun on the Sea (Le soleil sur la mer, 1970); The Mirrors of Ostend (Les miroirs d'Ostende, 1974); Night with Colored Shadows (Nuit avec ombres en couleurs, 1983); She Confused Sleeping and Dying (Elle disait dormir pour mourir, 1983); The Brief Life (La vita breve, 1989); Marceline (1995)

FURTHER READING

- Dieckman, Suzanne Burgoyne, ed. Four Plays of Paul Willems. New York: Garland, 1992.
- Freidman, Donald Flanell, and Suzanne Burgoyne, eds. Paul Willems' The Drowned Land and La Vita Breve. New York: P. Lang, 1994.
- Glasheen, Anne-Marie, ed. Gambit, 42–43: Four Belgian Playwrights. London: John Calder, 1986.
- Van de Kerckhove, Fabrice, ed. Paul Willems, L'enchanteur [Paul Willems, the Enchanter]. New York: P. Lang, 2002.

David Paul Willinger

WILLIAMS, EMLYN (1905–1987)

George Emlyn Williams was born on November 26, 1905, in Flintshire, north Wales. At school he received particular encouragement from one teacher: Miss Cooke, the model for Miss Moffat in his best-known play THE CORN IS GREEN (1938). Coached by Miss Cooke, Williams was entered for an Open Scholarship at Christs Church, Oxford, which, to his surprise, he won. The transition from Flintshire to Oxford was extremely disorientating. However, Williams soon found himself relatively comfortable in this alien but intriguing world. He was less than absorbed by academic work but developed a conviction that his future lay in the theater. He became a member of the Oxford University Dramatic Society in 1924 and chose the professional name Emlyn Williams. ACTING stimulated Williams to write his own dramas. His obsession with theater and his disinterest in formal study combined with a brief love affair with another Oxford student led to a nervous breakdown. He returned home to recover. There, he quickly wrote a play called Full Moon, which was accepted for production in 1927 at the Oxford Playhouse by J. B. Fagan. Shortly afterward, Williams left his family home after an argument and caught a train to London. Fagan, the producer of Full Moon, arranged for him to take a walk-on part in his own play about Samuel Pepys, And So to Bed. Fagan thus launched Williams as playwright and actor. Immediately, Williams set to work on both aspects of his career. While acting, he wrote two new plays, Glamour (1929) and A Murder Has Been Arranged (1930).

In 1931 A Murder Has Been Arranged was given a single evening performance at the Strand Theatre, London. Reviewers were astonished by the originality of the piece: though in the relatively familiar form of the thriller, its setting in an allegedly haunted theater had a capacity genuinely to terrify audiences, with its sustained and increasingly intense atmosphere. The next day, eleven theaters made offers for the play. This was the turning point of Williams's career as dramatist, bringing him reputation and much-needed income. Over the next two decades Williams wrote some twelve further plays, mainly in a thriller or historical mode. His plays were very much well-made dramas and did not engage in MODERNIST experiment, but they were nevertheless original and serious.

Though they have largely not survived in the modern repertoire, all of his plays were effective and original, with a fluent command of theatrical devices and of dialogue. His best remembered plays are the thriller Night Must Fall (1935) and his most autobiographical play, The Corn Is Green (1938). He Was Born Gay (1937), a play about the exiled Louis XVII living in exile in Dover (and about the various imposters who claim to be the king) is a further good, if neglected, example of his work. Williams was also very well known for his one-man stage shows about DYLAN THOMAS and Charles Dickens. He died on September 25, 1987, in London, leaving a reputation as a talented dramatist and a distinguished actor in film and onstage.

PLAYS: Vigil (1926); Full Moon (1927); Glamour (1929); A Murder Has Been Arranged (1930); Port Said (1931); Spring, 1600 (1934); Night Must Fall (1935); He Was Born Gay (1937); The Corn Is Green (1938); The Druid's Rest (1944); The Winds of Heaven (1945); Trespass (1947); Accolade (1950); Someone Waiting (1953)

FURTHER READING

- Dale-Jones, Don. Emlyn Williams. Cardiff: Univ. of Wales Press and Welsh Arts Council, 1979.
- Harding, James. Emlyn Williams: A Life. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1993.

Stokes, Sewell. "Emlyn Williams." Theatre Arts 26 (1942): 697–705.

Williams, Emlyn. George: An Early Autobiography. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1961.

———. Emlyn. London: Penguin, 1976.

Chris Hopkins

WILLIAMS, TENNESSEE (1911–1983)

Tennessee Williams does not accuse; he describes. The social atmosphere of his plays is dramatized through characters in whom the social disorientation is mirrored in the frustrations of their love life. This is not the same thing as an obsession with sex: sex in Williams is the focal area at which the deeper trauma reveals itself. . . . The half-light in which Williams' stage seems to be plunged, as if he were writing of secret places of half-sinful and half-sacred sentiments, gives his plays their theatrical glow and appeal. There is a romantic mysteriousness in Williams' treatment of his characters, as if he took a peculiar pleasure in sharing the shadowy world in which they dwell. He is no stranger to their plight.

—Harold Clurman, "A Playwright's Symposium," 1969

Generally regarded as the foremost American dramatist of the post–World War II era, Tennessee Williams was a theatrical innovator equaled only by EUGENE O'NEILL. Honored with two Pulitzer Prizes (A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE, and CAT ON A HOT TIN ROOF), Williams's poetic, often impressionistic, character-driven dramas probed repressed tensions and sexual confusions that occasionally shocked mid-20th-century audiences unaccustomed to the frankness and intense emotions characteristic of Williams. His plays initiated a period of renewed energy and excitement to post–World War II American drama, inspiring theatrical artists in both form and content.

EARLY CAREER, 1911–1944

Thomas Lanier Williams was born in 1911 in Columbus, Mississippi, to Cornelius Coffin ("C. C.") and Edwina Estelle (Dakin) Williams. His father was a traveling shoe salesman who ridiculed young Tom, a sickly and effeminate child who preferred books to sports. Williams's mother was the domineering, over-protective daughter of an Episcopalian minister, Walter Dakin, and she would provide a model for several of Williams's greatest dramatic characters, most particularly Amanda Wingfield of THE GLASS MENAGERIE. The marriage of Williams's parents was an unhappy one, and their frequent arguments deeply affected Williams and his sensitive sister, Rose. Much of his childhood was spent in various rectories where his grandfather presided.

Deeply interested in literature, Williams particularly admired the writing of D. H. LAWRENCE and ANTON CHEKHOV, both of whom he frequently acknowledged as significant influences on his own work. Williams achieved modest successes as a writer beginning in his teen years. He won third place ($5) in a national essay contest on the question "Can a good wife be a good sport?"

promoted by The Smart Set magazine in 1927. He also won a prize for a review of the Barbara Stanwyck film Stella Dallas. In 1928, Williams published a short story, "The Vengeance of Nitocris," in Weird Tales. The following year, he entered the University of Missouri, where attending a production of HENRIK IBSEN's GHOSTS whetted his appetite to write for the stage. In 1930 Williams completed a one-act play, Beauty Is the Word, which won honorable mention from the University's Dramatic Arts Club, the first time such an honor was given to a freshman. Williams's education was abruptly interrupted by his father's insistence that he leave school to take a job as a typist at the International Shoe Company, a miserable experience he later chronicled in The Glass Menagerie. An even more significant trauma resulted from news of the deteriorating mental condition of his sister.

While working in St. Louis at the factory job, Williams enrolled in the University of Missouri at Columbia's School of Journalism. He managed to complete three years of college, but when he flunked ROTC training, his father compelled him to give up school once again and return to work at the shoe factory. Despite his dreary job, Williams continued to write. In 1933 his short story "Stella for Star" won first place in the St. Louis Writers Guild contest. When he collapsed from exhaustion resulting from his unhappiness at the shoe company, Williams spent the summer of 1935 with his grandparents in Memphis, Tennessee. There he wrote Cairo! Shanghai! Bombay!—his first play to be staged in a production by an amateur troupe in Memphis. In the fall of 1935 Williams returned to St. Louis and audited courses at Washington University. The following year, he was admitted to the university and worked on two plays, Candles to the Sun and The Fugitive Kind, both of which were produced early in 1937 by a St. Louis community troupe called the Mummars. With the financial support of his grandparents, Williams completed his education at the University of Iowa, where he studied playwriting with E. C. Mabie and E. P. Conkle. In that period he experimented with a "living newspaper" drama and completed another play, Spring Storm (1937), which was not well received when read to his playwriting class in early 1938. Graduating with a bachelor of arts degree in English in 1938, Williams returned to St. Louis in hopes that the Mummars might produce Spring Storm. When they refused, he commenced work on Not About Nightingales (1938), a drama inspired by newspaper accounts of inmates suffocated in a steam room at a Pennsylvania prison.

Finding little support for his work in St. Louis, Williams moved to New Orleans, where he was initially unsettled by the permissive sexual attitudes of its citizens. Williams eventually found the New Orleans environment comfortable as he slowly accepted his own homosexuality. During this time he supported himself as a waiter and continued to write, taking the first name "Tennessee" in acknowledgment of the prominence of his father's family in Tennessee history. The name change initiated an acceleration of his career: Williams engaged Audrey Wood as his agent, and she successfully placed his short story "The Field of Blue Children" in Story magazine, his first published work under the name "Tennessee Williams." An important theatrical break came in 1939 when he won a $1,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, which allowed him to polish his newest drama, The Battle of Angels (1940), and to move to New York, where he studied at ERWIN PISCATOR's Drama Workshop at the New School for Social Research. He also spent some time in Provincetown, Massachusetts, the setting for one of his last plays, the autobiographical Something Cloudy, Something Clear (1981). In Provincetown, Williams met and became romantically involved with a dancer named Kip Kiernan, the first significant homosexual relationship of his life.

The Battle of Angels went into production starring Miriam Hopkins under the direction of Margaret Webster, trying out in Boston in late December 1940. The ineffective production never made it to Broadway, closing in Boston in early January 1941. The THEATRE GUILD advanced Williams financial support to rewrite The Battle of Angels but ultimately rejected his revised script. Later that year, supporting himself as a cashier in a New Orleans restaurant, Williams completed a new play, Stairs to the Roof (1941). He worked on several projects during the subsequent two years, but he was devastated when his sister Rose was subjected to a frontal lobotomy at his mother's insistence in January 1943.

In New York, Williams found employment as an elevator operator, bellhop, and movie theater usher while living at the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA). He returned to St. Louis to work on adapting his short story "Portrait of a Girl in Glass" to dramatic form, calling it The Gentleman Caller. Audrey Wood secured him a $250 a week position as a screenwriter for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Unhappy with his assignments working on scripts for Lana Turner and child star Margaret O'Brien, Williams instead continued to polish The Gentleman Caller. When he submitted the script to his superiors, he was summarily fired for failing to fulfill the assignments he had been given.

Compounding this setback, in early 1944 Williams was distressed by the deaths of his grandmother Dakin and Kip Kiernan, who succumbed to a brain tumor. With a $1,000 grant from the American Academy of Arts and Letters, Williams retreated to Provincetown to complete The Gentleman Caller, renaming it The Glass Menagerie. The play, which was filled with autobiographical elements, was produced in Chicago in late December 1944, featuring a cast of four: Eddie Dowling, Julie Haydon, Anthony Ross, and the legendary stage star Laurette Taylor, who scored a personal triumph in the role of Amanda Wingfield, a character modeled on Williams's mother. A "memory play" narrated by Williams's alter ego Tom Wingfield, The Glass Menagerie explores the troubled relationship of Amanda with her two adult children, Tom and Laura. Laura is a delicate, hypersensitive creature clearly modeled on Williams's sister Rose. Laura retreats into an imaginary world of glass figurines, while Amanda plots ways to find her a "gentleman caller" who, she hopes, will secure Laura's future. Amanda also retreats into her own imaginary world, recalling her past as a flirtatious Southern belle. Tom dreams of escaping his factory job to become a writer but feels obligated to support his mother and sister. Amanda nags Tom to bring a young man to meet Laura. When he does, Amanda's hopes are dashed when it turns out that the young man is engaged to another girl. Amanda and Tom argue bitterly, and Tom leaves, but he explains that despite geographic distance and the passage of time, he cannot put the memory of his sister out of his mind. After a successful run in Chicago, the play moved to Broadway, and most critics recognized it as a masterpiece and its author as a promising new voice in American drama. The Glass Menagerie won the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award and was filmed (for the first of four times) in 1950. The commercial success of The Glass Menagerie alleviated Williams's immediate financial needs, allowing him to focus full-time on his writing.

BROADWAY AND BEYOND, 1945–1960

As The Glass Menagerie ran triumphantly on Broadway, Williams continued a collaboration with a friend, Donald Windham, on a stage adaptation of a D. H. Lawrence story, You Touched Me! (1945), but it won only lukewarm response from critics and audiences. Following eye surgery, Williams went to MEXICO to recover and worked on a new play, initially titled The Moth. Renamed Blanche's Chair in the Moon and then The Poker Night, it eventually became A Streetcar Named Desire, a drama that consolidated his predominance among the newest generation of playwrights. A searing, lyrical drama illuminating the mental disintegration of the deeply troubled Blanche DuBois, A Streetcar Named Desire was optioned for production by Irene Selznick. At this time, Williams also worked on a new play, Chart of Anatomy, which would evolve into SUMMER AND SMOKE (1948), and he began work on a long one-act, Ten Blocks on the Camino Real, which he subsequently revised as CAMINO REAL for a Broadway production in 1953.

Directed by Elia Kazan in 1947, the cast of A Streetcar Named Desire was led by Jessica Tandy, whose acclaimed performance as Blanche exposed the complexities of a character at once fragile and strong, sensitive and cruel, damaged and poetic. Marlon Brando, in a star-making performance as the brutish Stanley Kowalski, Blanche's brother-in-law, also won acclaim. Blanche is horrified that her younger sister, Stella, has married a man she regards as beneath her social class. The passionate sexual bond between Stanley and Stella disturbs Blanche, and she is horrified when she learns that Stella is pregnant. Stanley's co-worker, Mitch, a gentle man attracted to Blanche's sensitivity and charm, courts her. When Blanche admits that Belle Reve, the family home, has been lost because of catastrophic expenses in caring for dying family members, Stanley secretly contacts a friend in Blanche's hometown and learns that she has been sexually promiscuous and was fired from her high school teaching job for becoming inappropriately involved with a student. Blanche is also haunted by the memory of her young husband, Alan, who killed himself when Blanche caught him in bed with a man. The animosity between Stanley and Blanche comes to a head when Stanley sexually assaults Blanche while Stella is in the hospital following the birth of her baby. Unhinged by this trauma, Blanche cannot convince Stella of the rape, and with nowhere to turn, the desperate Blanche falls victim to Stanley once again as he arranges for her to be institutionalized. This profoundly disturbing drama was awarded the 1948 Pulitzer Prize, the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award, and numerous other honors, and it was subsequently filmed with its original stage cast (which also included Karl Malden as Mitch and Kim Hunter as Stella) under Kazan's direction. Vivien Leigh, in an Academy Award-winning performance as Blanche (Malden and Hunter also won Oscars), replaced Tandy on screen, but Brando again played Stanley, and his performance launched him as one of the iconic stars of Hollywood films. A Streetcar Named Desire has been revived frequently, and there have been at least two other screen versions.

Among its many legacies, A Streetcar Named Desire explored sexuality at a level of frankness previously unseen in the American theater. Its inclusion of homosexual elements subtly acknowledged Williams's own conflicted feelings about his homosexuality. Stability was brought to his life at this time when he met Frank Merlo in 1948 and began a long-term relationship that ended when Merlo died of lung cancer in 1961. Merlo was central to Williams's life during his most productive and successful years as a dramatist, which, most critics acknowledge, began a precipitous decline about the time of Merlo's death.

Williams completed Summer and Smoke in late 1947, and it was produced in Dallas, Texas, under the direction of Margo Jones. Its 1948 New York production featured Margaret Phillips in the leading role of Alma Winemiller, a sexually repressed, small-town woman who finds liberation without redemption. The production was received respectfully if unenthusiastically by critics and audiences. Williams himself felt the production was inadequate, and he continued to revise Summer and Smoke over the course of nearly twenty years before it was produced again under the title Eccentricities of a Nightingale in the 1960s. Concerned for his sister's well-being, Williams arranged for her to receive half of the royalties of Summer and Smoke (he had done the same for his mother with the royalties of The Glass Menagerie). By 1949, Williams was beginning to fall victim to substance abuse, depending heavily on drugs and alcohol, but he continued to busy himself with new projects. These included his first novella, The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone, which was published in 1950, and a new play, The Rose Tattoo, produced on Broadway in 1951 by Cheryl Crawford. Williams bought a house in Key West, and he also spent part of 1950 in Sicily attempting to pick up the local dialects for The Rose Tattoo, a robust play about the painful relationship of a proud Italian widow and a truck driver, played in the original Broadway production by Maureen Stapleton and Eli Wallach. The play won the Tony Award as Best Play that year, but Williams continued to abuse alcohol and drugs. After several attempts to find a suitable environment for his sister, Williams settled Rose at Stony Lodge in Ossining, New York, where she lived for most of her remaining life.

Williams was pleased in 1952 when José Quintero staged a successful revival of Summer and Smoke at New York's Circle in the Square Theatre, starring Geraldine Page (who later appeared in the 1961 film version of the play). While working on a screenplay, "Hide and Seek," that would evolve into the controversial film Baby Doll, released in 1956, he completed his revision of Ten Blocks on the Camino Real as Camino Real. It was produced in New York in March 1953 to scathing reviews and a quick commercial failure. Williams was devastated by the response to this complex play that brought together a host of literary and mythical figures—Don Quixote, Casanova, Marguerite Gautier, Marcel Proust's Baron de Charlus, Kilroy—in a phantasmagoric setting in which the fragile and damaged beings of the world struggle to survive its harsh realities. Williams believed strongly in the play's worth and was proud of its ambition, points he made when he defended it against its critics in an essay published in the New York Times on March 15, 1953. In spite of its initial failure, Camino Real has continued to interest theatrical artists and perplex critics and audiences through revivals, television productions, and a proposed film version as yet unmade.

In 1953, Williams wrote "Man Bring This Up Road," a short story he later transformed into The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore (1963). He also revised The Battle of Angels as Orpheus Descending, but it was not produced until 1957. Much of 1954 was spent on his next major project, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof. Elia Kazan, who had directed the original production of A Streetcar Named Desire, as well as its 1951 film version, was selected as director of Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, in which a Mississippi Delta family battles over the estate of its dying patriarch, Big Daddy. Williams focused the drama's attention on Brick, Big Daddy's son, a former athlete who has slipped into alcoholism. Trapped in his bedroom with a broken leg, Brick must face his former beauty queen wife, Maggie, who wants Brick to return to her bed. He is, however, struggling with doubts about his sexuality. Was his close relationship with his now-deceased teammate Skipper latently homosexual? Confronted by Big Daddy, Brick rejects the "mendacity" around him, including the machinations of his brother, Gooper, to become Big Daddy's heir. Painfully, Brick reveals the secret that the old man is dying of cancer. In the play's final act, Big Daddy comes to acceptance of his fate and urges Brick to get past his own struggles. When Maggie tells Big Daddy that she is expecting a child, Big Daddy makes it clear that Brick will inherit his fortune. Brick, moved by the comfort this lie has given Big Daddy, returns to Maggie's bed, where they intend to make their deception into a reality.

Cat on a Hot Tin Roof opened on Broadway on March 24, 1955, and scored a triumph with critics and audiences, winning the Pulitzer Prize for Drama, as well as the Drama Critics' Circle Award. Despite believing he was suffering from writer's block, Williams was heartened by the reception of Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, as well as good reviews for the 1955 screen version of The Rose Tattoo, starring Anna Magnani (the celebrated Italian actress who had become one of Williams's close friends) and Burt Lancaster.

Williams completed the screenplay for Baby Doll in 1955, and it was filmed under the direction of Elia Kazan, starring Carroll Baker and Eli Wallach. The Catholic Church's Legion of Decency denounced Baby Doll's unprecedented sexuality, and the subsequent controversy distressed Williams, although it helped make Baby Doll one of the most-talked-about films of 1956. During this turmoil Williams began work on a new play, The Enemy: Time. As he revised it over a two-year period, Williams changed its title to Sweet Bird of Youth. Meanwhile, 1957 brought a production of Orpheus Descending under the direction of Harold Clurman, but it received generally negative reviews and closed after a two-month run. Williams continued to treat his increasing depression with alcohol and drugs, as well as psychotherapy, but to little avail. During 1957, Williams also began work on SUDDENLY LAST SUMMER, a long one-act play about a battle of wills between Mrs. Venable, the imperious mother of a recently deceased poet, Sebastian, and her niece, Catherine Holly, who has witnessed Sebastian's death. Cannibalized by a mob of young men he had sexually exploited, Sebastian's horrific end leads his mother to attempt to have Catherine lobotomized so that her account of events will not prevail. A sympathetic surgeon draws the frightening story out of Catherine as Mrs. Venable sinks into madness. Produced OFF-BROADWAY on a double-bill titled Garden District, Suddenly Last Summer won critical approval. A film version was initiated, and under the direction of Joseph Mankiewicz, a stellar cast including Katharine Hepburn, Elizabeth Taylor, and Montgomery Clift was assembled. With a screenplay by Williams and his friend, Gore Vidal, the film version of Suddenly Last Summer was a success in 1959, as the screen adaptation of Cat on a Hot Tin Roof had been a year earlier, despite the fact that the filmmakers felt compelled to delete homosexual references from the script.

In early 1959, Sweet Bird of Youth was produced on Broadway under Elia Kazan's direction. Starring Geraldine Page and Paul Newman, its tale of a young hustler and a fading actress who use each other failed to interest most critics. Newman's screen popularity helped keep the play running, but Williams was disappointed by its critical failure. In 1960, Williams and Merlo journeyed to Key West where Williams completed two new plays, NIGHT OF THE IGUANA and Period of Adjustment. Merlo became ill with the cancer that would kill him within a year, and that situation, coupled with the tepid response to Period of Adjustment on Broadway, made for a distressing year. The only good news was the success of The Fugitive Kind, a screen version of Orpheus Descending, which starred Anna Magnani and Marlon Brando.

FRAGILE YEARS, 1961–1972

Williams sank further into depression in the early 1960s, believing that his skills as a writer were fading. At the end of 1961, Night of the Iguana opened on Broadway with a strong cast led by screen star Bette Davis, Margaret Leighton, and Patrick O'Neal. The play, a touching, nearly plotless drama about the search for spiritual redemption and the longing for various forms of freedom, won the Drama Critics' Circle Award. Williams was also recognized with a lifetime membership in the American Academy of Arts and Letters. He journeyed to the Spoleto Festival of Two Worlds in ITALY to see the premiere of The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore but rushed back to the UNITED STATES when he learned that Merlo was fatally ill. The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore managed only two months on Broadway beginning in January 1963, but Williams revised the play for a revival in early 1964. Preparations were interrupted when Merlo died of lung cancer in September 1963. After Merlo's funeral, a deeply depressed Williams traveled to Mexico to observe filming of the screen version of Night of the Iguana, directed by John Huston and starring Richard Burton, Deborah Kerr, and Ava Gardner.

Williams's depression was not helped by the mere three performances that the revised version of The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore managed, despite a strong cast including Tallulah Bankhead, Tab Hunter, Ruth Ford, and Marian Seldes. To deal with his depressed state, Williams consulted Dr. Max Jacobson, the notorious "Dr. Feelgood," who provided Williams with a flow of drugs that undermined his health and mental condition. He later referred to this period as the "Stoned Age."

Despite his fragile state, Williams continued to write, working on a bill of two short plays, The Gnädiges Fräulein and The Mutilated, under the title Slapstick Tragedy. In late 1964 the film version of Night of the Iguana opened to positive reviews, as did a Broadway revival of The Glass Menagerie starring Maureen Stapleton. The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore was revived again, this time in San Francisco, and it won positive critical response, while Williams also completed The Eccentricities of a Nightingale, his revision of Summer and Smoke.

When Slapstick Tragedy opened in New York in January 1966, it closed after only four performances. This distressing failure was only slightly assuaged by the moderate success of This Property Is Condemned, a film adaptation of one of Williams's early one-act plays. He worked on a screenplay of The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore, which was filmed in 1967 in Sardinia with a stellar cast including Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, and NOËL COWARD. Released under the title Boom!, it was not well received. In December 1967 a new Williams drama, The Two-Character Play, opened in London to a tepid critical response.

Williams continued to slide into an increased dependence on drugs. Considered mentally unstable by friends and family members, Williams continued to write and involve himself in productions of his plays. In February 1968, his Kingdom of Earth opened in Philadelphia, with a cast featuring Harry Guardino, Estelle Parsons, and Brian Bedford, prior to a Broadway opening on March 27, 1968, under a new title, The Seven Descents of Myrtle. Critics were not kind, and the play ran barely a month. For much of the rest of 1968, Williams worked on a revision of The Two-Character Play and a new play, In the Bar of a Tokyo Hotel, but his mental condition continued to disintegrate due to his addictions. He retreated to Key West, where his younger brother, Dakin, came and participated in Williams's conversion to Catholicism, although Williams later denied he had agreed to the conversion.

Despite his declining physical and mental state, Williams spent mid-1969 in New York, where he took over the direction of In the Bar of a Tokyo Hotel, but he was unable to save it. When the play opened on May 11, 1969, critics were unanimous in their condemnation, most viewing the play as a confused rehashing of old themes. Williams faced this sort of critical condemnation through the remainder of his career. Given that Williams became increasingly open about his homosexuality and that the plays often dealt with an exploration of sex, critics may well have been unduly harsh in response. These later Williams plays are generally small in scale and scope than his pre-1960 plays—more in the style of chamber pieces. Critics clearly preferred Williams's more operative works and, as such, found that the later plays seemed to be striving for less than Williams had earlier. In fact, the later plays demonstrate a dramatist whose gifts may be waning but one who continued to experiment in the areas of structure, language, and characterization, as he plunged more deeply into the themes of his earlier works. In the years following Williams's death, critics and scholars began a reexamination of these later plays with some finding that they are of greater worth than earlier critics found.

Although his new plays found no favor, Williams continued to receive honors for the body of his work, including the National Institute of Arts and Letters gold medal and an honorary degree from the University of Missouri at Columbia, where he had been a student. Shortly after the failure of In the Bar of a Tokyo Hotel, Williams traveled to JAPAN to see a production of A Streetcar Named Desire, but his drug use caused him an increasing number of paranoid attacks. Dakin finally succeeded in persuading his brother to seek medical help. At Barnes Hospital in St. Louis, Williams was placed in the mental ward where he endured seizures and two heart attacks as he went through a difficult withdrawal from drugs.

In December 1969, Williams had recovered sufficiently from drug withdrawal to seek comfort in familiar surroundings in Key West. A revival of Camino Real, featuring Jessica Tandy and Al Pacino, brought him to New York, where he appeared on David Frost's television show and openly discussed his homosexuality. He spent much of the rest of the year traveling throughout Asia. In early 1970 Out Cry, Williams's revision of The Two-Character Play, was produced in Chicago with Donald Madden and Eileen Herlie, but the results were less than satisfying. Transforming the two young characters of Out Cry into a middle-aged pair did little to help the work, and Williams's editing made the complicated play more difficult to grasp. Unfortunately, Williams fell back into drug use, and a renewed paranoia inspired him to fire his longtime agent, Audrey Wood. He continued to write, completing a new play, Small Craft Warnings (1971), a character-driven chamber drama about a diverse group of troubled individuals who each have an opportunity to reveal their inner struggles. It was first performed in Philadelphia in February 1972, followed by an off-Broadway run in April. Despite critical apathy, the production eked out a run, partly because Williams agreed to step into the cast in the role of the down-and-out "Doc" in an attempt to attract an audience.

THE FINAL DECADE, 1973–1983

Williams, who had vaguely socialist leanings (he had voted for Norman Thomas in the 1930s), spoke out against America's military involvement in Vietnam, but his personal woes overwhelmed his political energies. In the spring of 1972 Williams was awarded an honorary degree by Indiana's Purdue University, and he worked on an autobiography, Memoirs. A retooled production of Out Cry, now starring two younger actors, Michael York and Cara Duff-MacCormick, opened on Broadway on March 1, 1973, but closed after twelve performances. Although his new works were not appreciated, Williams continued to write, and he worked on The Red Devil Battery Sign throughout 1973 and 1974. His early works, however, continued to build his reputation. An acclaimed 1974 Broadway revival of Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, starring Elizabeth Ashley, Keir Dullea, and Fred Gwynne, lifted his spirits, as did receiving the National Arts Club literary medal and the key to New York City.

In early 1975 Williams began work on a new play, This Is (An Entertainment), and published a novel called Moise and the World of Reason, and The Red Devil Battery Sign was mounted for a Broadway production. Beginning its out-of-town tryout in Boston in June 1975, the production, starring Anthony Quinn and Claire Bloom, folded in less than two weeks. Williams's Memoirs was published, but critical reaction was decidedly mixed for this fragmented autobiography. These disappointments were somewhat allayed by well-received New York revivals of three Williams plays: Sweet Bird of Youth, The Glass Menagerie, and Summer and Smoke.

The January 1976 premiere of This Is (An Entertainment) in San Francisco generated little interest, but Night of the Iguana was successfully revived in London, and Williams was inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Letters. A new Williams play, Vieux Carré, premiered on Broadway in May 1977, but critical response was harsh, and the play closed after only five performances. The continuing disappointment from the long string of failures did not stop Williams from writing, and he pressed on with Tiger Tail, a stage adaptation of his screenplay for Baby Doll, and a new play, Creve Coeur. Tiger Tail flopped in a production in Atlanta, Georgia, in early 1978, and Creve Coeur, retitled A Lovely Sunday for Creve Coeur, was produced at the Spoleto Festival in Charleston, South Carolina. When it moved to New York on January 1, 1979, it quickly closed. During 1979 Williams worked on yet another revision of The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore and a new play, Clothes for a Summer Hotel, which dealt with madness and creativity by examining the lives of F. Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald. In September 1979, Williams's Kirche, Kuchen, und Kinder opened in New York to unenthusiastic response, but Williams was pleased to be one of the Kennedy Center Honors recipients in December 1979.

A new Williams play, Will Mr. Merriwether Return from Memphis?, was produced in Key West for the gala opening of the Tennessee Williams Performing Arts Center. After runs in Washington, D.C. and Chicago, Williams's Clothes for a Summer Hotel, starring Geraldine Page and Kenneth Haigh under José Quintero's direction, opened on Broadway on March 26, 1980. The play was not well received, but New York's Mayor Ed Koch declared the opening day, which was also Williams's birthday, "Tennessee Williams Day" in New York.

Williams's mother, Edwina, died on June 1, 1980, at the age of ninety-five and although Williams was frequently estranged from his brother Dakin, he continued to look after his sister Rose. That year, Williams spent time at Chicago's Goodman Theatre working on a bill of three one-act plays under the title Tennessee Laughs. Enjoying his connection with the Goodman, Williams worked on a new play, A House Not Meant to Stand, to be produced there. In March, it opened at the Goodman for a limited run. During the course of the year, Williams worked on two projects. The first, an adaptation of Anton Chekhov's THE SEAGULL, which he ultimately titled The Notebook of Trigorin, generated some small controversy with Chekhov purists because Williams freely adapted the play and invented a bisexual life for the character of Boris Trigorin. Williams deeply admired Chekhov, and The Seagull was his particular favorite among the great Russian playwright's work. He had hoped to direct The Seagull early in his career, when he identified with the artistic aspirations of Constantin Treplev, as well as the character's troubled relationship with his mother, Arkadina. By the time Williams worked on this adaptation, he identified more with the world-weariness and self-doubt of the established writer Trigorin.

The other Williams project in 1980 was an autobiographical drama, Something Cloudy, Something Clear, a "memory play" like The Glass Menagerie, which explored the events of the summer of 1940 when Williams had broken away from his St. Louis roots and was on the brink of theatrical success. The play's fractured reality allows August, the Williams alter ego, to view the events of 1940 from the perspective of 1980. Something Cloudy, Something Clear opened at New York's Jean Cocteau Repertory Theatre on August 24, 1981, for a limited run.

In February 1982, the Jean Cocteau Repertory revived Something Cloudy, Something Clear. A revised and expanded version of A House

Not Meant to Stand opened in Chicago for a limited engagement in April 1982. That summer, Williams attended a series of his plays produced by the Williamstown Theatre Festival in Massachusetts, and he began work on a new play, The Lingerin' Hour, but was interrupted by a hospital stay to deal with a case of drug toxicity.

Williams spent the first weeks of 1983 at Key West before making a brief trip to Taormina, after which he returned to New York. The events of the last hours of Williams's life are not clear, but he died on February 24, 1983, of asphyxia, which was caused by choking on a plastic bottle cap. His funeral was held on March 5, 1983, at the St. Louis Cathedral, and he was buried beside his mother at the Calvary Cemetery in St. Louis.

Despite his tragic end, various addictions, and nearly two decades of poorly received plays, Williams's reputation as a dramatist has only grown in the decades following his death. The problems with alcohol and drugs inform his plays as well as his abuse of them surely made the task of writing them difficult. Williams's homosexuality similarly informs his work, and one can trace Williams's slow and often reluctant acceptance of his sexual proclivities through the course of his dramatic accomplishment. Despite his addictions, Williams proved to be a remarkably prolific writer—an experimenter in all forms of writing who excelled in the dramatic form and forever left his impression upon it. Williams's predominance in American theater is unchallenged, and audiences continue to enjoy revivals of his greatest plays while discovering both early and late works that were little seen during Williams's lifetime. These have contributed to a richer and more complex understanding of the experimentation of this most searching of American artists.

PLAYS: Beauty Is the Word (1930); Cairo! Shanghai! Bombay! (co-written with Doris Shapiro, 1935); Candles to the Sun (1936); Headlines (1936); The Magic Tower (1936); The Fugitive Kind (1937); Spring Storm (1937); Not About Nightingales (1938); The Battle of Angels (1940; later revised as Orpheus Descending); The Long Goodbye (one-act, 1940); At Liberty (one-act, 1941); I Rise in Flame, Cried the Phoenix (one-act, 1941); Stairs to the Roof (1941); This Property Is Condemned (1942); You Touched Me! (co-authored with Donald Windham, 1942); The Glass Menagerie (1945); The Unsatisfactory Supper (one-act, 1945; revised in 1948 as The Long Stay Cut Short, or, The Unsatisfactory Supper); Auto-da-Fé (one-act, 1946); Hello from Bertha (one-act, 1946); The Lady of Larkspur Lotion (one-act, 1946); The Last of My Solid Gold Watches (one-act, 1946); The Long Goodbye (one-act, 1946); Lord Byron's Love Letter (one-act, 1946); Moony's Kid Don't Cry (one-act, 1946); Portrait of a Madonna (one-act, 1946); The Purification (one-act, 1946); The Strangest Kind of Romance (one-act, 1946); Ten Blocks on the Camino Real (one-act, 1946; expanded into a full-length play, Camino Real); 27 Wagons Full of Cotton (one-act, 1946); A Streetcar Named Desire (1947); The Case of the Crushed Petunias (one-act, 1948); The Dark Room (one-act, 1948); The Long Stay Cut Short, or, The Unsatisfactory Supper (one-act, 1948; revised from The Unsatisfactory Supper); Summer and Smoke (1948; revised in 1965 as Eccentricities of a Nightingale);

Ten Blocks on the Camino Real (one-act, 1948; later revised as full-length Camino Real); The Rose Tattoo (1951); Camino Real (1953; adapted from one-act Ten Blocks on the Camino Real); Something Unspoken (one-act, 1953); "Something Wild" (one-act, 1953); Talk to Me Like the Rain and Let Me Listen (one-act, 1953); Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1955); Three Players of a Summer Game (one-act, 1955); Orpheus Descending (1957; revised from Battle of Angels); The Enemy: Time (one-act, 1958; revised as Sweet Bird of Youth); The Perfect Analysis Given by a Parrot (one-act, 1958); Suddenly Last Summer (1958); Sweet Bird of Youth (1959); Period of Adjustment (1960); Night of the Iguana (1961); To Heaven in a Golden Coach (one-act, 1961); The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore (1963; revised 1964); The Eccentricities of a Nightingale (1965; revised from Summer and Smoke); Slapstick Tragedy (1966; bill of two one-acts, The Gnädiges Fräulein and The Mutilated); The Two-Character Play (1967; later revised as Out Cry); The Seven Descents of Myrtle (also titled Kingdom of Earth, 1968); In the Bar of a Tokyo Hotel (1969); Confessional (one-act, 1970; later revised as Small Craft Warnings); The Frosted Glass Coffin (one-act, 1970); I Can't Imagine Tomorrow (one-act, 1970); Some Problems for the Moose Lodge (one-act, 1970; later revised as A House Not Meant to Stand); Out Cry (1971; revised from Two-Character Play); Small Craft Warnings (1971); The Red Devil Battery Sign (1975); Demolition Downtown: Count Ten in Arabic—Then Run (1976); This Is (An Entertainment) (1976); Lifeboat Drill (1977); Vieux Carré (1977); Tiger Tail (1978); A Lovely Sunday for Creve Coeur (1979; originally titled Creve Coeur); Clothes for a Summer Hotel (1980); Kirche, Kuchen, und Kinder (1980); Steps Must Be Gentle (1980); Will Mr. Merriwether Return from Memphis? (1980); Tennessee Laughs (1980); A House Not Meant to Stand (1981; revised version of one-act Some Problems for the Moose Lodge); The Notebook of Trigorin (1981; free adaptation of Anton Chekhov's The Seagull); Something Cloudy, Something Clear (1981); The Lingering Hour (1982; unfinished); The Remarkable Rooming-House of Mme Le Monde (1983)

FURTHER READING

- Clurman, Harold. "A Playwright's Symposium." In The Playwrights Speak, ed. by Walter Wager. New York: Longmans, 1969.
- Crandell, George W., ed. The Critical Response to Tennessee Williams. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1996.
- Hayman, Ronald. Tennessee Williams: Everyone Else Is an Audience. New Haven, Conn.: Yale Univ. Press, 1993.
- Leverich, Lyle. Tom: The Unknown Tennessee Williams. New York: Crown, 1995.
- Rader, Dotson. Tennessee, Cry of the Heart. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1985.
- Roudané, Matthew C. The Cambridge Companion to Tennessee Williams. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1997.
- Saddik, Annette J. Politics of Reputation: The Critical Reception of Tennessee Williams' Later Plays. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1999.
- Savran, David. Communists, Cowboys, and Queers: The Politics of Masculinity in the Works of Arthur Miller and Tennessee Williams. Minneapolis: Univ. of Minnesota Press, 1992.

Spoto, Donald. The Kindness of Strangers: The Life of Tennessee Williams.

Boston: Little, Brown, 1985.

Williams, Dakin, and Shepherd Mead. Tennessee Williams: An Intimate Biography. New York: Arbor House, 1983.

Williams, Edwina. Remember Me to Tom. As told to Lucy Freeman. New York: Putnam's, 1963.

James Fisher

WILLIAMSON, DAVID (1942–)

David Williamson, born in Melbourne, Victoria, AUSTRALIA, is a phenomenon in the Australian theater. By far its most popular and prolific playwright, he has been cleverly crafting images of contemporary Australian life for over thirty years, and in more than twenty plays. He received a bachelor's degree in English from Monash University in 1964 and once described himself as "a storyteller to the tribe." His affinity with his middle-class audiences seems undiminished.

Williamson became synonymous with box-office success in the subsidized theater; The Club in 1977 ran for eight weeks for the Melbourne Theatre Company at ninety-six percent capacity houses, and when the company gambled on a return season, it played for another eight weeks at ninety-eight percent capacity. Williamson's early, scandalous, "New Wave" dramas The Coming of Stork (1970), The Removalists (1972), and Don's Party (1973) violated most of the decorums governing what might be said and done on the stage; The Removalists, which deals with police and domestic violence, remains both physically and verbally a profoundly confronting play.

Increasingly, Williamson depicts relationships in the educated middle class. A Handful of Friends (1976) and The Perfectionist (1983) explore with a satirical but increasingly compassionate eye the messiness of contemporary marriage in the wake of feminism and an at least perceived openness in sexual behavior. Travelling North (1980) is a moving treatment of aging and death, juxtaposing the values of hedonistic north and morally serious south and recalling RAY LAWLER's classic The Summer of the Seventeenth Doll. In the 1990s, Williamson's dramatic subjects were placed a little higher on the social ladder, and plays like Money and Friends (1991) and After the Ball (1997) looked at the effects of affluence on close relationships.

Inevitably, when the characters supposedly at risk become remarkably comfortable people, there is some slackening of dramatic pressure in comparison with the unpredictable and uncompromising manner of the early work. But Williamson remains, always, a playwright with a keen interest in moral choices. Occasionally this has involved an expression of his own attitudes and values; in Sons of Cain (1985), with its treatment of journalistic ethics, and Dead White Males (1995), with its pillorying of the absurdities of literary theory as a form of prejudicial mantra, the playwright's views are unapologetically on display: a writer with strong opinions that he suspends in his investigation of the human COMEDY and with a focus on situational ethics rather than complex individual motivation. As people attempt to convince or deceive themselves and others, what they may believe is less consequential to the drama than why and how they profess it. This fascination with the dynamics of human interaction, which Williamson has traced to his early training as a social psychologist, has led him in some recent work to present highly structured (and intensely public) mediations of conflict; thus more than half of the action of Brilliant Lies (1993), about an allegation of sexual harassment, occurs in the artificially constrained formal negotiation setting, and Face to Face (1999) is set entirely in an industrial arbitration hearing. In the end, it may be as much Williamson's delight in the detail of social ritual as his uncanny ability to catch or anticipate the current preoccupations of his "tribe" that accounts for his unique place in Australian theater.

SELECT PLAYS: The Coming of Stork (1970); The Removalists (1972); Don's Party (1973); A Handful of Friends (1976); The Club (1977); Travelling North (1980); The Perfectionist (1983); Sons of Cain (1985); Money and Friends (1991); Brilliant Lies (1993); Dead White Males (1995); After the Ball (1997); Face to Face (1999)

FURTHER READING

Carroll, Dennis. Australian Contemporary Drama from 1909. 2d ed. Sydney: Currency Press, 1995.
Fitzpatrick, Peter. Williamson. Sydney: Currency Press, 1987.
Kiernan, Brian. David Williamson—A Writer's Career. Melbourne: Heinemann, 1990.

Peter Fitzpatrick

WILLS, FINGAL O'FLAHERTIE See WILDE, OSCAR

WILSON, AUGUST (1945–2005)

Prolific playwright August Wilson has consistently and eloquently chronicled African American life in a series of critically acclaimed dramas, including MA RAINEY'S BLACK BOTTOM (1982), Jitney (1982), FENCES (1983), Joe Turner's Come and Gone (1984), THE PIANO LESSON (1986), Two Trains Running (1990), Seven Guitars (1994), King Hedley II (2002), and Gem of the Ocean (2002). Wilson is one of only seven American playwrights to win the Pulitzer Prize twice, and he is the only black playwright to have had two plays running on Broadway simultaneously. His plays have been performed on Broadway and in regional theaters across the country, and Wilson is considered one of the most important American playwrights of the 20th century.

Wilson was born Frederick August Kittel on April 27, 1945, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to his African American mother, Daisy Wilson, and his German immigrant father, Frederick Kittel, who never lived with the family. Wilson's mother raised him and his five siblings in Pittsburgh's Hill district, but during Wilson's teenage years, she married David Bedford, and the family moved to the predominantly white suburban neighborhood of Hazelwood. The racial hostility they encountered there would shape Wilson's life in many important ways. The family was subject to violent acts during their time in Hazelwood: a brick was thrown into the window of their new home, and at school, white schoolmates often left notes on Wilson's desk reading "Nigger, go home." When his tenth-grade teacher accused Wilson of plagiarizing a twenty-page paper on Napoleon Bonaparte, he dropped out of school for good; it was months before he told his mother or stepfather. Each morning he would leave home, carrying his books as if he were going to school, but instead he would spend his day either playing basketball or reading the works of LANGSTON HUGHES, Richard Wright, JAMES BALDWIN, or Ralph Ellison in the "Negro section" of the public library. "These books were a comfort," Wilson remarked in a 1987 interview. "Just the idea black people would write books. I wanted my book up there, too. I used to dream about being a part of the Harlem Renaissance." In 1962, after a brief stint in the U.S. Army, he returned to Pittsburgh and civilian life. At the age of eighteen he began working a series of menial jobs that would later influence his writing.

On April 1, 1965, Wilson bought his first typewriter for $20, moved into his own apartment, and changed his name to August Wilson. "The first thing I wanted to type," he later said, "was my name." Reflecting on his youth, he described himself as "a 20-year-old poet wrestling with the world and his place in it." He supported himself working in a series of low-paying jobs for the next twelve years while at the same time founding two new institutions in Pittsburgh: the Center Avenue Poets Theatre Workshop and a theater, Black Horizons on the Hill, which he started with Rob Penny. Wilson's earliest plays, Recycle (1973) and The Homecoming (1979), were written for Black Horizons with the aim of exploring issues facing African Americans. Certain early influences played a key role in Wilson's development as a writer: "In terms of influence on my work, I have what I call the four B's: Romare Bearden, Amiri Baraka, Jorge Luis Borges and the biggest B of all, the blues." BARAKA's plays were also produced by Black Horizons and inspired Wilson to search for the roots of black theater. In a 1988 interview with scholar David Savran, Wilson described his goals for the theater: "I am trying to write plays that contain the sum total of black culture in America, and its difference from white culture. Once you put in the daily rituals of black life, the play starts to get richer and bigger." That year he wrote The Homecoming, a play that examines the mystery surrounding the death of Blind Willie Johnson, a character based on the blues legend Blind Lemon Jefferson. The Homecoming was staged by the Kunta Theatre, an amateur theater in Pittsburgh.

In the mid-1970s Wilson gave a reading of his epic poem Black Bart and the Sacred Hills, the story of a stagecoach robber in the Old West. Claude Perdy, a friend and stage director, urged Wilson to turn the poem into a play. The piece became a musical satire, complete with six songs Wilson wrote himself. It was first presented as a staged reading at the Inner City Cultural Center in Los Angeles, but it ran over five hours, and the project's director cut the work to less than one hour without discussing the changes with Wilson. Upset by the experience, Wilson sent the script to Purdy, who had moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, to direct Penumbra, an African American theater. With Purdy's encouragement, Wilson rewrote the musical in 1977, and it was produced at Penumbra. With its large cast and rambling structure, Black Bart was not a success, and Wilson did not seek further productions. However, he did realize that he preferred St. Paul to his native Pittsburgh and thus decided to make it his home. For two years he worked for the Science Museum in Minneapolis as a writer of the diorama exhibits.

In 1980 Wilson was the recipient of a Jerome Fellowship at the Minneapolis Playwrights Center for his play Jitney (produced 1982). This realistic drama set in a gypsy cab station in Pittsburgh represented a significant change in Wilson's dramaturgical style. Wilson quit his job at the Science Museum to devote more time to writing. His next play was titled Fullerton Street (1980). Set in 1941, it explores the tension between rural southern and urban northern values. Wilson submitted both Fullerton Street and Jitney to the EUGENE O'NEILL Theatre Center's National Playwrights Conference in Connecticut. Neither play was accepted, but Wilson continued to write, and in 1982 he submitted Ma Rainey's Black Bottom to the O'Neill Center. It is the story of the legendary blues singer Ma Rainey and the musicians in her band. Set in Chicago in 1927, the play focuses on white record companies' exploitation of black musicians. It was accepted to the conference, and director Lloyd Richards staged a production of the play at the Yale Repertory Theatre just two years later.

Ma Rainey's Black Bottom marked the beginning of a long-time association between Wilson and Richards, who went on to direct six of Wilson's plays. From the beginning, Wilson associated the process of refining his plays with Richards, who was artistic director of both the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center and the Yale Repertory Theatre. The two men became close, both creatively and personally. They both believed in the need to put the African American experience onstage. In a March 27, 1988 article in the New York Times titled "August Wilson's Voices From the Past," Richards said: "Black people are a disinherited nation, stripped of their lands and put into servitude in another land, where their culture was not so much a matter of choice as a matter of imposition." The two men respected each other's values and goals for the theater. Wilson says of Richards: "Our visions are the same. We come from the same place. I trust Lloyd's understanding of the characters." Ma Rainey's Black Bottom won several awards, including the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award for best play, a Tony nomination (1985), the League of New York Theatre and Producers Award (1985), and the Whiting Writers' Award from the Whiting Foundation (1986).

Wilson's career flourished in the following years as he wrote a series of plays chronicling African American life in successive decades of the 20th century: Fences, Joe Turner's Come and Gone, The Piano Lesson, Two Trains Running, Seven Guitars, King Hedley II, and Gem of the Ocean. Fences, written in 1983, is set in the 1950s and tells the story of a former athlete, Troy Maxson, who forbids his talented son, Corey, to accept an athletic scholarship to play baseball in college. Troy Maxson is based on Wilson's stepfather, David Bedford, a talented high school football player who had hoped for a career in medicine but was denied a college education. Troy is a big talker who often entertains friends with humorous stories and is hardworking but embittered by racism and discrimination. Fences was first staged at the O'Neill Theatre in 1983, was produced at the Yale Repertory Theatre in 1985, and opened on Broadway in 1987. That same year the Chicago Tribune named Wilson Artist of the Year, and Fences won the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award for Best Play, four Tony Awards, and the Pulitzer Prize for Drama.

Joe Turner's Come and Gone, set in the 1910s, opened on Broadway in 1988 while Fences was still running. This earned Wilson the distinction of being the first black American with two concurrent plays on Broadway. Joe Turner's Come and Gone, also set in Pittsburgh, focuses on the lingering effects of slavery, the flight of blacks from the South, and their attempts to assimilate in the urban North. It received several Tony nominations and a Drama Desk Award. The Piano Lesson, which appeared two years later, is set in 1969 in a local diner where the characters are dealing with issues of spiritual and economic empowerment; The Piano Lesson followed the same route as Wilson's other works, premiering on Broadway in 1990.

Two Trains Running, written in 1989 and produced at Yale in 1990, came to Broadway in 1991, to continue Wilson's cycle about African American life. Like many of Wilson's other plays, it also received the New York Drama Critics Award, was nominated for a Tony, and was awarded the American Theatre Critics' Association Award. Wilson's next play, Seven Guitars, recounts the fate of a Pittsburgh blues musician, Floyd "Schoolboy" Barton, who scores a hit record in Chicago but falls short of capitalizing on his success. Newsweek reviewer Jack Kroll described Seven Guitars as "a kind of JAZZ cantata for actors," with "a gritty, lyrical polyphony of voices that evokes the character and destiny of these men and women who can't help singing the blues even when they're just talking."

Wilson's 2002 play King Hedley II is an allegorical drama filled with metaphor and SYMBOLISM and tells the story of King Hedley, who lives with his mother Ruby and his wife Tonya. The play is set in a shared backyard occupied by the family of King himself and his slightly mad, Bible-bashing neighbor, Stool Pigeon. Pittsburgh in the 1980s is depicted as a violent and racist place to live; everybody carries a gun, and the life expectancy is short. Gem of the Ocean, which reached Broadway in 2004, actually constitutes the first chronological play in Wilson's cycle and is the imagistic story of a 285-year-old shamanist community matriarch, Aunt Ester, whose special powers allow Citizen

Barlow (in flight from the law) to see the past and envision a future of spiritual redemption in the "City of Bones."

Wilson was one of the most honored and prolific American playwrights of the 20th century, yet he continues to pressure himself to have a play in progress at all times. In April 1990 Wilson was quoted in the New York Times by Mervyn Rothstein as saying: "All those awards, all that stuff, I take them and I hang them on my wall. But then I turn around and my typewriter's sitting there, and it doesn't know from awards. I always tell people I'm a struggling playwright." Wilson is the recipient of the Bush, McKnight, Rockefeller, and Guggenheim Foundation fellowships in playwriting; he was elected to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Letters. In reflecting on Wilson's work, the Chicago Tribune wrote, "August Wilson has created the most complete cultural chronicle since Balzac wrote his vast 'Human Comedy'; an artistic whole that has grown even greater than its prize-winning parts."

What remains at the center of his work is his commitment to chronicling the experience of African Americans. In his preface to Fences, Wilson writes:

Near the turn of the century, the destitute of Europe sprang on the city with tenacious claws and an honest and solid dream. The city grew. It nourished itself and offered each man a partnership limited only by his talent, his guile and his willingness and capacity for hard work. For the immigrants of Europe, a dream dared and won true. The descendants of African slaves were offered no such welcome or participation. They came from places called the Carolinas, the Virginias, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee. The city rejected them and they fled and settled along the riverbanks and under bridges in shallow, ramshackle houses made of sticks and tarp paper.

In his plays, Wilson gives voice to African Americans who have been previously denied a place on the mainstream American stage. In his speech "The Ground on Which I Stand," presented at the Théâtre Communications Group National Conference at Princeton University, Wilson expressed his serious concerns about the American theater's lack of support for black artists.

Lloyd Richards describes Wilson as revolutionary in his aim to effect a change on the American stage. Always challenging the tradition handed down to him by white dramatists, Wilson's work is influenced by the African oral tradition and the lyricism of the blues and dramatizes the struggle of African Americans in the 20th century. He was interested in the impact of the past on the present. Wilson died on October 2, 2005, in Seattle, Washington.

PLAYS: Recycle (1973); The Coldest Day of the Year (1979); The Homecoming (1979); Fullerton Street (1980); Black Bart and the Sacred Hills (1981); Jitney (1982); Ma Rainey's Black Bottom (1982); Fences (1983); The Mill Hand's Lunch Bucket (1983); Joe Turner's Come and Gone (1984); The Piano Lesson (1986); Two Trains Running (1990); Seven Guitars (1994); Gem of the Ocean (2002); King Hedley II (2002)

FURTHER READING

- Elam, Harry J., Jr. The Past as Present in the Dramas of August Wilson. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, 2004.
- Harrington, Joan. I Ain't Sorry for Nothin' I Done: August Wilson's Process of Playwriting. New York: Limelight Ed., 1998.
- Pereira, Kim. August Wilson and the African-American Odyssey. Urbana: Univ. of Illinois Press, 1995.
- Wang, Qun. An In-Depth Study of the Major Plays of African-American Playwright August Wilson: Vernacularizing the Blues on Stage. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1999.

Ellen Anthony-Moore and Christopher Moore

WILSON, LANFORD (1937–)

Having cut themselves off from the past by their cavalier treatment of their inheritance, they become rootless. The are from "somewhere else," as they live out their rootlessness in the Hotel Baltimores, Needle Parks and affluent living rooms of large American cities. Bitter indictments of humanity gone to seed in an American Eden.

—Lanford Wilson, quoted in Barnett, Lanford Wilson, 1987

Lanford Wilson's varied and extensive writings about contemporary American life led critic Frank Rich to class him as "one of the few artists who can truly make America sing" (New York Times, Oct. 18, 1982). Having received a strict Baptist upbringing, Wilson, born on April 13, 1937, in Lebanon, Missouri, discovered what he describes as his calling after taking a playwriting class at the University of Chicago. He now considers it sinful not to write. Since his first play, So Long at the Fair, was produced in 1963 at New York City's experimental Caffé Cino, Wilson has gone on to write seventeen full-length plays and over thirty one-acts, making him one of America's most prolific living playwrights.

If Caffé Cino gave him the opportunity to establish himself OFF-OFF-BROADWAY, Ellen Stuart's La Mama Experimental Theatre Club allowed him to write for more elaborate casts and sets. Balm in Gilead (1964) and The Rimers of Eldritch (1965) were first produced at La Mama to popular and critical acclaim. His first Broadway production, The Gingham Dog (1968), was less successful, closing after five performances. In 1969 Wilson was one of four founding members of the Circle Repertory Theatre in Greenwich Village, where he was resident playwright from 1969 to 1995. His long and successful collaboration with Circle Rep director Marshall Mason resulted in the production of many of Wilson's most acclaimed works. These included The Hot 1 Baltimore (1973), which ran for 1,166 performances (breaking the off-Broadway record for a nonmusical play), and Talley's Folly, for which Wilson was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1980.

Wilson has been the recipient of numerous theater awards, and many of his plays have been widely produced across the UNITED STATES and Europe. Nevertheless, his career has been uneven. In part, this can be explained by his experimentation with dramatic narrative and his interest in a broad cross section of American society. Wilson's anatomies of contemporary life have been explored in ways that extend from grittily naturalistic exposés of America's urban underbelly to self-consciously theatrical portraits of the nuclear family.

In style, Wilson's plays often involve extensive experimentation while retaining a traditional basis. His trilogy of Talley family plays illustrates these traits, combining Wilson's customary conversational dialogue with a variety of narrative techniques to chart the destruction and reconstruction of two generations of the Lebanon, Missouri, family. FIFTH OF JULY (1978), chronologically the last play in the series, was the first to be written and is a straightforward piece of REALISM. In Talley's Folly (1979) and Talley and Son (1985), Wilson moves back in time to explore how similar issues affected the previous generation. The realistic elements of these dramas—which take place in real time, involve some of the same characters, and occur simultaneously on different parts of the family estate—are offset by the deliberately artificial nature of the events. Both plays include engaged narrators who address the audience directly, commenting on the other characters and action and even divulging the running time and encouraging spectators to get refreshments. Such theatrical devices are taken further in other works. The highly experimental and autobiographical Lemon Sky (1968) plays with free-flowing time and memory and includes a character who is reminded by the narrator she has been dead for ten years since the events of the play took place. The domestic TRAGEDY Serenading Louie (1970) employs a fluid structure, eliding scenes through time and place by using a single location to represent the respective homes of two different couples.

Other dramas contrast just as sharply through Wilson's choice of mise-en-scène. The Tally saga is set in and around an elegant farmhouse in the playwright's home state and explores the issues devastating a small town's prominent and wealthy family. The Hot 1 Baltimore explores American life at the other end of the spectrum and is set in a decaying hotel populated by prostitutes, junkies, and other social misfits. An archeological dig provides the backdrop to a university professor's meditations on the past in The Mound Builders (1975); Angels Fall (1982) brings four strangers together to confront their own mortality in a small Catholic mission in New Mexico; a converted loft in New York sets the stage for finding love after death in Burn This (1987). Wilson is equally comfortable writing about grieving Manhattan yuppies and proud midwestern farmers and considers all people worthy of his attention and compassion. He has written for casts as large as thirty-two (Balm in Gilead, 1964) and as small as one (The Madness of Lady Bright, 1964).

No matter how eclectic his technique or subject, Wilson repeatedly returns to the same themes. At the heart of his work is the concern for the state of contemporary America and the decay of the nation, something realized through feelings of alienation, loneliness, and shattered dreams. Whether set amidst urban decay or in lush rural heartlands, the landscape, like the country it represents, is revealed to be a mere shadow of its former self. The characters who live there are as spiritually destitute as the place, the victims of their own false hopes and the corrupted ideals of the previous generation. Emotionally displaced, they long to rediscover their roots and return to a loving home and family. It is a difficult ideal to attain. The society of Wilson's plays became restless and rootless in the social flux and economic revival that followed World War II. As critic Gene Barnett (1987) comments, "It is a society thoughtlessly turned destructive of a heritage it never learned to appreciate."

Wilson takes great pride in his heritage and is concerned to preserve it, something that applies as strongly to his craft as his homeland. The influences of such American icons as TENNESSEE WILLIAMS, LILLIAN HELLMAN, and THORNTON WILDER are explicitly and implicitly acknowledged in his works. Wilson's recent Book of Days (1998), for example, clearly recalls the stage manager from OUR TOWN, as the players gather onstage to set the scene. Book of Days was presented alongside his latest work, Rain Dance (2002), as part of Signature Theatre Company's 2002–2003 Wilson season and contains all of the playwright's trademarks. Directed by Marshall Mason, it uses Wilson's favorite technique of splintering the veneer of realism while remaining true to its essence and is set in the small town of Dublin, Missouri, where rot has set in beneath surface prosperity. T. S. ELIOT's aphorism "in my end is my beginning" seems to apply.

PLAYS: So Long at the Fair (1963); Balm in Gilead (1964); Home Free! (1964); The Madness of Lady Bright (1964); No Trespassing (1964); Days Ahead (1965); Ludlow Fair (1965); The Rimers of Eldritch (1965); The Sand Castle (1965); Sex is Between Two People (1965); This Is the Rill Speaking (1965); Wandering (1966); Miss Williams: A Turn (1967); The Gingham Dog (1968); Lemon Sky (1968); Serenading Louie (1970); Sextet (YES) (1970); Stoop (1970); Ikke, Ikke, Nye, Nye, Nye (1971); The Family Continues (1972); The Hot 1 Baltimore (1973); Victory on Mrs. Dandywine's Island (1973); The Mound Builders (1975); Knock Knock (1976); Brontosaurus (1977); Gemini (1977); Fifth of July (1978); Bar Play (1979); The Great Nebula in Orion (1979); Talley's Folly (1979); A Tale Told (1981); Angels Fall (1982); Thymus Vulgaris (1982); A Betrothal (1984); The Sandcastle (1984); Unfinished Play (1984); As Is (1985); Say De Kooning (1985); Talley and Son (1985); Abstinence (1986); A Betrothal (1986); Sa-Hurt? (1986); Burn This (1987); Dying Breed (1987); Hall of North American Forests (1987); The Musical Comedy Murders of 1940 (1987); A Poster of the Cosmos (1987); The Moonshot Tape (1990); Prelude to a Kiss (1991); Ukiah (1991); Redwood Curtain (1992); Master Class (1995); A Sense of Place (1997); Sympathetic Magic (1997); Three Sisters (1997); Book of Days (1998); Rain Dance (2002)

FURTHER READING

Barnett, Gene. Lanford Wilson. New York: G. K. Hall, 1987.
Bryer, Jackson R., ed. Lanford Wilson: A Casebook. New York: Garland, 1994.

- Busby, M. Lanford Wilson. Indiana: Boise State Univ. Press, 1987.
- Dean, Anne M. Discovery and Invention: The Urban Plays of Lanford Wilson.
Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. Press, 1994.
- Williams, Phillip Middleton. A Comfortable House: Lanford Wilson,
Marshall W. Mason, and the Circle Repertory Theatre. Jefferson, N.C.:
McFarland, 1993.

Olivia Turnbull

WILSON, ROBERT (1941–)

[Wilson] is what we, from whom Surrealism was born, dreamed would come after us and go beyond us.

—Louis Aragon, 1971

The American director, writer, and performer Robert Wilson was born on October 4, 1941, in Waco, Texas. After studying architecture and design at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, New York, he studied painting in Paris, returning to New York City in the mid-1960s. In 1968 he established the Byrd Hoffman School of Byrds, an interdisciplinary group of artists that developed experimental pieces in Wilson's loft in Soho. His first major work premiered at the Brooklyn Academy of Music—The Life and Times of Sigmund Freud (1969), a "dance-play" in three acts in which the death of Freud's grandson was the axis around which swirled a profusion of polyvalent imagery. In 1970, Wilson achieved international acclaim with Deafman Glance, a "silent opera" inspired by his work in movement therapy for mentally- and hearing-impaired children and conceived as a vehicle for fifteen-year-old Raymond Andrews, a deaf-mute performer. The world premiere of Einstein on the Beach (1976), with music by Philip Glass, at the Festival d'Avignon, secured his reputation internationally and was later revived in two world tours (1984 and 1992). Although the production's ostensible theme (as critic John Rockwell put it in 1976) was "consideration of the same moral and cosmic issues that concerned Einstein himself," the piece resists easy interpretation. Wilson's collaborators have included choreographer Meredith Monk, playwright HEINER MÜLLER, performance artist Laurie Anderson, musicians David Byrne and Tom Waits, writer William Burroughs, and many others. He is the recipient of numerous awards, including two Rockefeller and two Guggenheim fellowships.

While the ideas informing Wilson's productions are varied and eclectic, certain formal characteristics consistently obtain. His stage works are, in a sense, animated paintings or sculptures—or both—in which traditional dramatic concerns, such as plot, character development, psychological insight, metaphysical problems, social issues, and so on, are either subordinate to the visual and aural experience or entirely nonexistent. Lighting is employed with painterly precision and often mesmerizing effect; sculptured set pieces (sometimes simple, sometimes exceedingly complex) are moved with glacial slowness across the stage; actors engage in repetitive, highly stylized movements; dialogue and speech are treated as aspects of music and sound, which are always carefully controlled and often repetitious, hypnotic, and fragmentary. But despite his tendency to reduce language, as well as performers, to aspects of the mise-en-scène, during the last twenty-five years Wilson has mounted a number of established operas and dramatic texts, such as RICHARD WAGNER's Parsifal (1991) and Georg Buchner's Woyzeck (2000).

Wilson has been characterized as a "director/designer," but this is by no means delimiting or definitive. In addition, although he has scripted numerous original stage works, Wilson is not generally regarded as a playwright. Yet he is clearly the sole author of some of the late 20th century's most spectacular theater. Although he had no formal training in the performing arts, Wilson is nonetheless brilliantly capable of approaching theater holistically, without having to make sharp distinctions between the function and realization of the various components (text, set, light, sound, performer) of which theater is a synthesis.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: The King of Spain (1969); The Life and Times of Sigmund Freud (1969); Deafman Glance (1970); KA MOUNTAIN AND GUARDENIA TERRACE (1972); The Life and Times of Joseph Stalin (1973); A Letter for Queen Victoria (1974); Einstein on the Beach (1976); Death Destruction & Detroit (1980); the CIVIL warS: a tree is best measured when it is down (1983–1984); The Forest (1988); Quartet (1988); The Black Rider (1990); Alice (1992); Monsters of Grace (1998); POetry (2000); Prometheus (2001); Doctor Caligari (2002)

FURTHER READING

- Brecht, Stefan. The Theatre of Visions: Robert Wilson. The Original Theatre of the City of New York from the Mid-60s to the Mid-70s, Book 1. London: Methuen, 1985.
- Holmberg, Arthur. The Theatre of Robert Wilson. New York: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1997.
- Morey, Miguel, and Carmen Prado, eds. Robert Wilson. Barcelona: Ediciones Polígrafa, 2002.
- Quadri, Franco, et al. Robert Wilson. New York: Rizzoli, 1984.
- Shyer, Lawrence. Robert Wilson and His Collaborators. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1989.
- Wilson, Robert, and Byrd Hoffman Foundation. Theater of Images. 2d ed. New York: HarperCollins, 1984.

Bill Conte

WINTERSET

Winterset, a modern poetic TRAGEDY in blank verse with a contemporary setting, could only prove to be an experiment, a "new convention" to MAXWELL ANDERSON, as he remarks in his essay "Poetry in the Theater" (1947). In Winterset, which opened on Broadway on September 25, 1935, he was trying "to make tragic poetry out of the stuff of their own times" (Anderson, 1947). The play artistically reiterates within a romantic framework the Nicola Sacco-Bartolomeo Vanzetti case of 1921 that Anderson had touched upon in Gods of the Lightning (1928). Not only does the play possess a contemporary social relevance; it is “the product of a poet’s brooding” (Krutch, 1957), turning it into his “most complex psychological drama” (Shivers, 1976), a commercial failure that “remains Anderson’s masterpiece” (Miller and Frazer, 1991).

The setting of the play is a Manhattan slum neighborhood at the base of a gigantic bridge that arches high over the heads of the audience, symbolizing the alienated equations of wealth and poverty, centrality and marginality in the modern city. Here Mio enters, a Hamlet-like young man keen to square accounts about the injustice and death inflicted upon his father Romagna thirteen years earlier. The murder for which the latter paid with execution after being framed was actually committed by Trock Estralla, a seasoned gangster who was sentenced to jail on a different charge. Garth Esdras, son of a rabbi and Trock’s accomplice, knows the truth but has never testified out of fear. But the moment arrives when Necessity, in the form of Mio, seeks Garth’s cooperation in order to expose the truth. Trock, newly released, gets in the way of that move.

Into this picture comes Judge Gaunt, a King Lear-like figure who was the man responsible for convicting the innocent Romagna and whose unresolved guilt has turned his mind. In a mock trial conducted by Gaunt—reminiscent of Lear on the heath—Trock, in a state of shock, absolves Romagna by conceding the past.

The plot is complicated by the new love between Mio and Miriamne, Garth’s sister. Mio realizes that his mission will endanger his beloved and her kin. He, therefore, relinquishes vengeance for the sake of the love that has been awakened in his heart. In a moving recognition scene Miriamne convinces Mio that his father’s innocence has been vindicated and that violence may be replaced by faith: “I came here seeking / light in darkness, running, from the dawn, / and stumbled into a morning.” All this in the presence of others like Shadow who has resurfaced, mutilated, like a macabre Banquo. “The essence of tragedy,” as Anderson had observed, “is the spiritual awakening or regeneration of the hero.” Caught in the crossfire of urban ambitions, the star-crossed lovers, like Romeo and Juliet, face death at the moment when they are most ready to create a new era of truth.

When the first Drama Critic’s Circle Award was offered for Winterset in 1935, it was EUGENE O’NEILL who praised the group for choosing Anderson for his “splendid contribution . . . to what is finest in the American theatre.”

[See also United States, 1929–1940]

FURTHER READING

Abernethy, Frances E. “Winterset: A Modern Revenge Tragedy.” Modern Drama, 1, no. 7 (September 1964): 184–189.

Anderson, Maxwell. Off Broadway: Essays About the Theater. New York: William Sloane Assoc., 1947.

Brown, John Mason. Dramatis Personae. New York: Viking, 1929.

Jones, John Bush. “Shakespeare as Myth and Structure in Winterset.”

Educational Theatre Journal 25 (October 1954): 241–248.

Krutch, Joseph Wood. “The Poetic Drama: Maxwell Anderson.” In The American Drama Since 1918. New York: Braziller, 1957.

Miller, Jordan Y., and Winifred L. Frazer. American Drama Between the Wars: A Critical History. Boston: Twayne, 1991.

Shivers, Alfred S. Maxwell Anderson. Boston: Twayne, 1976.

Rupendra Guha-Majumdar

WITKIEWICZ, STANISŁAW IGNACY (1885–1939)

Witkacy is by birth, by race, to the very marrow of his bones an artist. He lives exclusively by and for art. And his relationship to art is profoundly dramatic; he is one of those tormented spirits who in art seek the solution not to problems of success, but to the problem of their own being.

—Tadeusz Boy-Żeleński, 1921

Polish playwright, painter, novelist, and philosopher Stanisław Ignacy Witkiewicz, or Witkacy (his artistic persona), is now recognized as a major figure in 20th-century European AVANT-GARDE, but fame came only posthumously two decades after his suicide. He was born on February 24, 1885, in Warsaw in the Russian sector of partitioned POLAND. In 1890 his father, painter and cultural critic Stanisław Witkiewicz, for reasons of health retired to the picturesque resort Zakopane in the Tatras Mountains, where he educated his son at home to develop the boy’s creative abilities and independence of mind. Witkacy, who wrote his first plays at eight, embarked upon a career as an artist but suffered doubts about his calling, underwent a mental crisis, and was treated by a Freudian psychoanalyst. After his fiancée’s suicide in 1914, for which he felt responsible, he went to AUSTRALIA to attend a scientific congress with his lifelong friend, the anthropologist Bronisław Malinowski.

When World War I broke out, he volunteered to serve in the Czarist army, was wounded at the front, and witnessed the 1917 Revolution in St. Petersburg. Returning to Poland in 1918, he became active in the “Vanguard” group of painters called “Formists,” while earning his living as a portraitist, which remained his wage-earning profession until his death.

Between 1918 and 1926, Witkacy wrote over thirty plays, many unpublished and unperformed; those staged had few performances and provoked largely hostile reactions. Highly distorted and ironic in their treatment of artistic and social conventions, Witkacy’s plays were designed to support his theory, “Pure Form in the Theatre” (1920), an antinaturalistic doctrine that sought to liberate drama from storytelling and psychology and make it a formal construction—as in modern art and music—rather than an imitation of reality. Witkacy experimented with drugs and wrote about their impact on creativity. As in altered states of consciousness, the colors and shapes in his dramatic universe are intense, hyperbolic, and surprising.

Multitalented, he brought to the theater an unbridled visual imagination and a wide range of intellectual, artistic, and scientific interests.

He devoted the last ten years of his life to correspondence with professional philosophers and writing his own philosophical treatises. A proponent of biological monadology (derived from Gottfried Leibniz), Witkacy explored the ontological problem posed by the directly given feeling of the unity of each Individual Being (the "I" or self) as it confronts the plurality of all that lies outside it (the "non-I" or other). These existential premises gave rise to a tragic sense of life, composed of feelings of extreme loneliness and bewilderment, consciousness of the accidental character of everything, and recognition of the constant menace of nothingness. The function of art was to recapture the metaphysical feeling of the mystery of existence, which was in danger of being lost forever in the mechanized "happiness" of the coming anthill civilization.

Witkacy's plays, which portray "the experiences of a group of degenerate ex-people in the face of the growing mechanization of life," are characterized by grotesque humor, drug-induced dream logic, psychedelic colors, and spectacular stage effects. Some like They (Oni, written 1920, published 1962), Gyubal Wahazar (written 1921, published 1962), The Crazy Locomotive (Szalona lokomotywa, written 1923, published 1962), The Mother (Matka, written 1924, published 1962), and The Shoemakers (Szewcy, written 1927–1934, published 1948) paint an apocalyptic picture of a dystopian future where art and metaphysical feelings are becoming extinct. Others like The Water Hen (Kurka Wodna, written 1921, produced 1922), Metaphysics of a Two-Headed Calf (Metafizyka dwugłowego cielęcia, written 1921, produced 1928), and THE MADMAN AND THE NUN (Wariat i zakonnica, written 1923, produced 1924) portray the existential anguish felt by lonely human beings lost in an alien world. Artistic creativity is the major theme of plays such as The Anonymous Work (Bezimienne dzieło, written 1921, published 1962), The Cuttlefish (Mątwą, written 1922, published 1923), and The Beelzebub Sonata (Sonata Bełzebuba, written 1925, published 1938).

Witkacy's heroes are often painters, poets, musicians, or sometimes scientists, thinkers, and social activists. At odds with the universe, with their society, and with themselves, these self-tormented pseudo-geniuses are filled with rage or despair and rendered absurdly helpless by their own unruly creativity. They must battle against state control, commercial exploitation, cultural leveling, self-doubts, and the theft of their work and IDENTITY.

At a period in European history when writers and artists were enrolling under various political banners, Witkacy remained skeptical, resisting all ideologies of either right or left. He saw the danger of mass movements fueled by slogans, and the picture of modern totalitarian regimes and crazed dictators contained in his dystopian fantasies has proved prophetic.

Witkacy created an autonomous scenic language, based on playfulness, CHANCE associations and random borrowings, verbal games, and a variety of parodied and quoted performance styles. Mockery and subversion are his tools.

Through parody and playfulness he called into question the grandiose mission accorded to the artist in Poland and challenged his own artistic importance by constantly clowning before the camera, staging hundreds of bizarre "auto-Witkacies"—his own version of PERFORMANCE ART (he was also a pioneer photographer, creating powerful metaphysical portraits). This aspect of Witkacy—the artist as prankster, displaying a fondness for jokes, tricks, and games—kept his contemporaries from treating him seriously. His plays are full of riddles, anagrams, and enigmas, beginning with the often bizarre titles. Literary allusions and appropriations abound; someone else's drama is enough to set Witkacy off on his own creative path, playing with the skeleton of a forbear and building his own structure out of the bones. Such "aesthetic irresponsibility," or creative playing, is a defining element of Witkacy's theater.

Witkacy's flamboyant life and uncompromising suicide on September 18, 1939, in Jeziory, Poland (now in Ukraine) in order to evade Nazis and Bolsheviks made him an artist hero to postwar intellectuals. Starting with Tadeusz Kantor's revival of The Cuttlefish in 1956, premieres of Witkacy's plays became major events in the formation of modern Polish theater. First discovered by the theatrical elite in their battle against Soviet-imposed SOCIALIST REALISM, Witkacy's "non-Euclidean dramas" gradually became accessible to the broad public and assimilated into popular culture in cabaret performance and rock musicals. With the fall of communism, he has become a classic avant-gardist and the most important Polish playwright-theorist of the 20th century. No longer forced into an antiregime mold, Witkacy—with his self-referential parody of modernism, strategies of appropriation, pastiche of different styles, blending of theory and practice, and mixture of high and low genres—can now be regarded as one of the first POST-MODERN playwrights.

SELECT PLAYS (with dates of composition): The Pragmatists

(Pragmatyści, 1919); Mister Price or Tropical Madness (Mister Price, czyli bzik tropikalny, 1920); They (Oni, 1920); Tumor Brainiowicz (Tumor Mózgowicz, 1920); Gyubal Wahazar or Along the Cliffs of the Absurd (Gyubal Wahazar, czyli na przełęczach absurdu, 1921); Metaphysics of a Two-headed Calf (Metafizyka dwugłowego cielęcia, 1921); The Water Hen (Kurka Wodna, 1921); The Cuttlefish or the Hyrcanic Worldview (Mątwą, czyli Hyrcaniczny światopogląd, 1922); Dainty Shapes and Hairy Apes, or the Green Pill (Nadobnisie i koczkodany, czyli zielona pigułka, 1922); The Crazy Locomotive (Szalona lokomotywa, 1923); Janulka, Daughter of Fizdejko (Janulka, córka Fizdejki, 1923); The Madman and the Nun, or There Is Nothing Bad Which Could Not Turn Into Something Worse (Wariat i zakonnica, czyli nie ma złego, co by na jeszcze gorsze nie wyszło, 1923); The Mother (Matka, 1924); The Beelzebub Sonata, or What Really Happened in Mordovar (Sonata Bełzebuba, czyli prawdziwe zdarzenie w Mordowarze, 1925); The Shoemakers (Szewcy, 1927–1934)

FURTHER READING

- Gerould, Daniel. Witkacy as an Imaginative Writer. Seattle: Univ. of Washington Press, 1983.
- Kiebzinska, Christine Olga. Revolutionaries in the Theater: Meyerhold, Brecht, and Witkiewicz. Ann Arbor: UMI Res. Press, 1988.
- Micińska, Anna. Witkacy: Stanisław Ignacy Witkiewicz, Life and Work. Tr. by Bogna Piotrowska. Warsaw: Interpress, 1990.
- Seven Plays by Stanisław Ignacy Witkiewicz. Ed. and tr. by Daniel Gerould. New York: Martin E. Segal Theatre Center Pubs., 2004.
- The Theatre in Poland*. Special Witkiewicz issues. 3 (March 1970); 6–7 (June–July 1978); 10–12 (October–December 1984).
- The Witkiewicz Reader*. Ed. and tr. by Daniel Gerould. Evanston: Northwestern Univ. Press, 1995.

Daniel Gerould

WM, HUAJU See WE

WOLF, FRIEDRICH (1888–1953)Art is a weapon.

—Friedrich Wolf, 1928

Like his contemporaries BERTOLT BRECHT and ERNST TOLLER, Friedrich Wolf ranks among the leading socialist playwrights in GERMANY. As a committed author who felt the poet's task was to represent the conscience of society, Wolf had strong faith in the vigor of the word and saw the theater as a powerful weapon for social change. To this end, Wolf sought to produce a didactic theater for the proletariat.

Born on December 23, 1888, in Neuwied, Germany, the son of a Jewish merchant, Wolf studied medicine in Munich and worked as a ship's doctor in 1913–1914. During World War I he served in the medical corps until he was jailed as a conscientious objector. Before establishing himself as a playwright, Wolf was well known for his manual of popular medicine. His first drama, Poor Conrad (Der arme Konrad, produced 1924), depicts the German peasant revolt of 1514 and exemplifies Wolf's commitment to bringing social problems onto the stage. Integrating the social complaints of the 20th-century worker with those of the peasants of 1514, Poor Conrad represents the historical power of the people and sets a precedent for revolution. Wolf joined the Communist Party in 1928, and according to Lothar Kahn (1993), none of Wolf's contemporaries were "more completely socialist, more completely communist" than he. Wolf's scandalous breakthrough occurred in 1929 with the staging of the controversial play Cyanide (Cyankali), the story of an unmarried, poor, and unemployed pregnant young woman who dies as a result of an illegal, botched abortion. The play attacks Germany's antiabortion laws, in particular the infamous Paragraph 218. Soon after the premiere of Cyanide, the playwright and medical doctor Wolf was imprisoned for violating the very same paragraph. Following mass demonstrations in support of his release, he was eventually freed.

After the great success of Cyanide, Wolf continued to practice medicine and dramatize pressing social issues. Sailors of Cattaro (Die Matrosen von Cattaro, produced 1930) is based on an Austro-Hungarian naval mutiny and conveys Wolf's belief in the imminence of world revolution. The drama was performed successfully in New York in 1934–1935.

Among the many writers forced into exile by the Nazis (Wolf spent 1933–1945 in Paris and Moscow), Wolf stands out as one of the first to tackle anti-Semitism and Nazism with Professor Mamlock (produced 1934). The drama's title character is a Jewish war veteran and surgeon who attempts to cope with the rise of Nazism and its destruction of his life. Mamlock's fate is doomed by his political ignorance, but hope remains in the conversion of a Nazi to a Jewish sympathizer and in the relentless pamphleteering of Mamlock's son. After World War II ended, Wolf returned to Germany in 1945 and settled in the Soviet Occupation Zone. He worked there as a medical doctor, writer, and editor of the journal Volk und Kunst (People and Art), remaining politically active until his death on October 5, 1953, in Lehnitz, East Germany.

Wolf was a prolific writer whose complete works comprise sixteen volumes. While widely accessible in German, the highly topical nature of his texts has resulted in their limited availability in English translation.

SELECT PLAYS: Mohammed (1917); The Absolute (Der Unbedingte, 1919); This Is You (Das bist du, 1919); Black Sun (Die schwarze Sonne, 1921); Poor Conrad (Der arme Konrad, 1924); Man in the Dark (Der Mann im dunkel, 1925); Kolonie Hund (1927); Koritke (1927); Cyanide (Cyankali, 1929); Boys of Mons (Die Jungens von Mons, 1930); Sailors of Cattaro (Die Matrosen von Cattaro, 1930); Tai Yang Awakes (Tai Yang erwacht, 1930); From New York to Shanghai (Von New York bis Schanghai, 1932); How Are the Fronts? (Wie stehn die Fronten? 1932); Peasant Baetz (Bauer Baetz, 1932); Professor Mamlock (1934); Florisdorf (1935); The Trojan Horse (Das trojanische Pferd, 1937); Beaumarchais (1941); Dr. Lilli Wanner (1944); Mayor Anna (Bürgermeister Anna, 1950); Thomas Münzer (1953)

FURTHER READING

- Garten, H. F. Modern German Drama. London: Methuen, 1964.
- Heizer, Donna K. Jewish-German Identity in the Orientalist Literature of Else Lasker-Schüler, Friedrich Wolf, and Franz Werfel. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1996.
- Kahn, Lothar. Between Two Worlds. A Cultural History of German-Jewish Writers. Ames: Iowa State Univ. Press, 1993.
- Müller, Henning. Friedrich Wolf. Weltbürger aus Neuwied [Friedrich Wolf: Cosmopolitan from Neuwied]. Neuwied: Peter Kehrein, 1988.

Maya Gerig and Cyrus M. Shahan

WOLFE, GEORGE C. (1954–)

Although he has arguably made his most lasting impact as a director and producer, George C. Wolfe has also been an innovative and important playwright. He received his bachelor's degree from Pomona College, where productions of his early plays Up for Grabs (1975) and Block Party (1976) received awards from the American College Theater Festival. Following graduation, he worked as a playwright, director, and actor in Los Angeles.

Wolfe relocated to New York in 1979, earning a master's degree in dramatic writing from New York University. The OFF-BROADWAY company Playwrights Horizons produced his musical Paradise in 1985, to largely negative reviews. However, his next effort, The Colored Museum, was both a critical and popular success when it debuted at New Jersey's Crossroads Theater in 1986. This satirical examination of black culture stirred up controversy because in it Wolfe dared to lampoon some of black America's most sacred cows. It also brought him to the attention of Joseph Papp, who transferred the play to New York's Public Theater.

Wolfe's next major work was Spunk (1989), adapted from three short stories by renowned black author ZORA NEALE HURSTON. In 1991, Wolfe wrote the book and was the co-lyricist for the Broadway musical Jelly's Last Jam, which he also directed. Based on the life of JAZZ musician "Jelly Roll" Morton, the show received ten Tony nominations, including Best Musical, Best Book, and Best Director.

Wolfe's continued work as a director, combined with his 1993 appointment as artistic director and producer of the New York Shakespeare Festival / Joseph Papp Public Theater prevented him from concentrating on his own playwriting for several years. However, in 1996, he conceived and directed the popular Broadway dance musical Bring in 'da Noise, Bring in 'da Funk, featuring a book by Reg E. Gaines and choreography by Savion Glover. Wolfe also co-wrote the book for Michael John LaChiusa's musical adaptation of The Wild Party in 2000, which debuted on Broadway under Wolfe's direction. His next solo playwriting effort was Harlem Song (2002), which he staged at the historic Apollo Theatre. Structured as a musical revue, the piece chronicles 100 years of Harlem's history, with special emphasis on the Harlem Renaissance of the 1920s.

In 1995 Wolfe was named a "living landmark" by the New York Landmarks Conservancy. His contributions to the American theater have been numerous. His plays and musical theater pieces range from irreverent satires to historical tributes and have heavily influenced the stage representation of African Americans. He has directed some of the most important theater works of the late 20th and early 21st century, including TONY KUSHNER'S ANGELS IN AMERICA, Parts I and II, ANNA DEVERE SMITH'S Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992, and SUZAN-LORI PARKS'S Topdog/Underdog. As head of the Public Theater, Wolfe diversified the choice of plays offered there, creating the legacy of a truly multiethnic theater.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

SELECT PLAYS: Up for Grabs (1975); Block Party (1976); Tribal Rites (1978); Back Alley Tales (1979); Paradise (1985); The Colored Museum

(1986); Queenie Pie (1987); Over There (1988); Spunk (1989); Blackout (1990); Jelly's Last Jam (1991); Bring in 'da Noise, Bring in 'da Funk (concept, 1996); The Wild Party (co-librettist, 2000); Harlem Song (2002)

FURTHER READING

- Jackson, Pamela Faith, and Karimah, eds. Black Comedy: Nine Plays, A Critical Anthology with Interviews and Essays. New York: Applause, 1997.
- Kroll, Jack. "Zapping Black Stereotypes." Newsweek (November 17, 1986): 84–85.
- McKinley, Jesse. "Exiting the Public Stage." New York Times (May 29, 2005).
- Rowell, Charles H. "'I Just Want to Keep Telling Stories': An Interview with George C. Wolfe." Callaloo 16, no. 3 (Summer 1993): 602–623.

Dan Bacalzo

WOLFF, EGON (1926–)

Born in Santiago, CHILE, in 1926, Egon Wolff was the son of German immigrants. Wolff began his career as a dramatist in 1958 with the debut of Mansion of Owls (Mansión de luchazas) and Disciples of Fear (Discípulos del miedo). In these two earliest pieces, he exhibits some of the obsessions that would come to characterize his later work: imprisonment, the rigidity of familial relations, the threat of the external world, and the conception of man's obscure psychological motivations as rooted in a repressed past. As a result, Wolff garnered attention as an adept investigator of the human psyche. Groups of Clothes (Parejas de trapo, 1960) is marked by a preoccupation with the concept of a false existence and the immoral compromises one must make when aspiring to a higher social level. It is the story of Jaime and the web of lies he must spin in order to sustain the way of life of his spouse Christina, the daughter of an elite upper-class Chilean family. As is often the case in the Wolffian universe, the moral comes from one of the play's more humble characters—in this case, a Czech immigrant who has suffered through some of the horrors of war.

The Invaders (Los invasores, 1963) solidified Wolff's position as an internationally successful playwright. Inspired by Casa tomada (Drunken Home), a story by the Argentine author Julio Cortázar, the play offers up a stark portrait of the guilty psychoses of the powerful and denounces the abysmal social practices that exacerbate class differences. In this work, Wolff introduces expressionist techniques that contrast sharply with the psychological REALISM of his earlier works.

Among his later plays, Paper Flowers (Flores de papel, 1970)—considered by many to be his masterpiece—and The Pool of the Jellyfish (La Balsa de la medusa, 1984)—similar in subject matter to Luis Buñuel's The Exterminating Angel—continue along similar lines. Thematically, they deal with the external threat—represented by individuals who have been condemned to the lowest rung of the social ladder—that perpetually hovers over the comfortable bourgeois world. In this way, reality is deconstructed until it becomes fantastical, marking the characters' moral decline.

Wolff's universe is vicious in its social criticisms, and during the 1960s his work was interpreted only within this rubric. Yet the strong Catholic influence he brings to his plays persists, saving them from any simplistic classification. Wolff's artistic obsessions have remained the same for almost a half century, serving as a sort of national conscience, alert to developments within Chilean society. He has continued to focus on an analysis of interpersonal relations within small groups, in particular, the family. Occasionally, as well, he has journeyed into the realms of FARCE (The Blue Envelope [El sobre azul, 1978]) and COMEDY (Poplars on the Terrace [A lamos en la azotea, 1981]).

SELECT PLAYS: Mansion of Owls (Mansión de lechuzas, 1958); Disciples of Fear (Discípulos del miedo, 1958); Groups of Clothes (Parejas de trapo, 1960); Child-Mother (Niñamadre, 1962); The Invaders (Los invasores, 1963); Paper Flowers (Flores de papel, 1970); (Kindergarten 1977); The Blue Envelope (El sobre azul, 1978); (Minages Espejismos, 1978); José (1980); Poplars on the Terrace (Alamos en la azotea, 1981); The Pool of the Jellyfish (La balsa de la medusa, 1984); Speak to Me of Laura (Háblame de Laura, 1986); Invitation to Eat (Invitación a come, 1994) Scars (Cicatrices, 1994); Chiaroscuro (Claroscuro, 1995); Crossroads (Encrucijada, 2000); Behind a Closed Door (Tras una puerta cerrada, 2002); The Recommendation (La recomendación, 2003)

FURTHER READING

- Bravo Elizondo, Pedro. La dramaturgia de Egon Wolff: Interpretaciones críticas (1971–1981) [The dramaturgy of Egon Wolff: Critical interpretations (1971–1981)]. Santiago, Chile: Editorial Nascimento, 1985.
- Castedo Ellerman, Elena. "Variantes de Egon Wolff: fórmulas dramática y social" [Variants of Egon Wolff: Dramatic and social formulas]. Hispanérica 5, no. 15 (1976): 15–38.
- López, Daniel. "Ambiguity in Flores de Papel." Latin American Theatre Review 12, no. 1 (Fall 1978): 43–50.
- Sayers Peden, Margaret. "The Theater of Egon Wolff." In Dramatists in Revolt: The New Latin American Theater, ed. by Leon Lyday and George Woodyard. Austin: Univ. of Texas Press, 1976. 190–201.

Norberto Cambiasso (Tr. by Gabriel Milner)

A WOMAN'S LIFE

A Woman's Life (Onna no Isshō) is a Japanese SHINGEKI play written by MORIMOTO KAORU and first staged by the Literary Theater (Bungakuzo) in April 1945. The action concerns Nunobiki Kei, orphaned by the Sino-Japanese War of 1894–1895 and adopted by the well-to-do Tsutsumi family. She shows gratitude by rendering unflagging service to the family for many years, then marries the eldest son. He lacks business sense, but Kei also shines in that arena and works vigilantly for the family's ongoing prosperity. Yet, in the measure that she is successful, she gradually loses the ready warmth and sensitivity that the rest of the family had grown to expect of her.

One by one, the family members move out—including her husband, who eventually dies—and she is left alone in the large house. The play ends with Kei, now fifty-nine, but looking considerably older, sitting alone in the ruins of the firebombed house. She encounters her brother-in-law Eiji and reflects, as if for the first time, on her life. Eiji attempts to suggest that the future will be better. Sugimura Haruko, the Literary Theater's foremost actress, played the lead.

Morimoto had worked often with Sugimura during the war and in fact crafted the play as a vehicle for her remarkable skills. Onstage virtually the whole time, she had to age more than forty years.

Curiously, the play had been commissioned by the military, ostensibly to shore up the home front during the increasingly dark days of the war. Yet Morimoto, with no overt political stance, did not create that sort of play. In fact, there are many sympathetic references to CHINA, which the censors inexplicably left untouched. In vividly portraying a woman who unreservedly sacrifices herself for her family but is dehumanized—even defeminized—in the process, Morimoto simply reflected the prevailing mood of futility and despair of a war-weary Japanese public.

Even without war as backdrop, this play had far wider appeal for the Japanese than the work of such Western playwrights as HENRIK IBSEN, whose plays, while popular, were peopled with self-assertive, aggressive heroes. Whether their theater is new or old, the Japanese appear to prefer characters, like Kei, whose inner strength is emphasized and made manifest by enduring the unendurable, not by rebelling against it.

Conditions for rehearsal and performance were dire. Air raids systematically strafed Tokyo, and the actors were not alone in fearing for their lives. Many theaters had been destroyed, and there were numerous restrictions on stage materials, lighting, and performance time. The play's premiere took place in a film theater. In spite of the dangerous atmosphere, however, performances were well attended. A Woman's Life was the Literary Theater's final production before JAPAN's defeat in August 1945. The play touched a chord with its audience and was a huge hit. It was Sugimura's path to glory for many years, with over 250 performances to the mid-1950s, and propelled her to superstar status onstage and in film.

FURTHER READING

- Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era—Poetry, Drama, Criticism. New York: Holt, 1984.
- Nihon Kindai Engeki-shi Kenkyūkai, ed. Nijusseiki no Gikyoku I: Nihon Kindai Gikyoku no Sekai [Twentieth-century plays I: The world of modern Japanese plays]. Tokyo: Shakai Hyōronsha, 2002.
- Powell, Brian. Japan's Modern Theatre: A Century of Continuity and Change. London: Japan Library, 2002.
- Rimer, J. Thomas. Toward a Modern Japanese Theatre. Kishida Kunio. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Univ. Press, 1974.

John K. Gillespie

THE WOMEN

I don't feel sorry for any woman who thinks the world owes her breakfast in bed.

—Miss Watts (Stephen Haines's secretary), Act 2

Although spoken by a minor character, the sentence quoted above is an apt expression of CLARE BOOTHE's view of the characters in The Women, her stinging satiric COMEDY of the way of life and social attitudes of a group of pampered women whose husbands' wealth protects them from the everyday concerns that beset most human beings of either sex. The play opened in New York on December 26, 1936, with, true to its title, a cast made up entirely of women. It won out over a barrage of critical complaints about the morality and manners of its characters to achieve a run of 657 performances.

The plot, as Boothe admitted in the introduction of the printed text of the play, is relatively simple. Mary Haines, married and the mother of two children, discovers, with "help" from her fiendish friend Sylvia Fowler, that her husband, Stephen, is having an affair with a salesclerk, Crystal Allen, who works behind the perfume counter at Saks' Fifth Avenue. Ignoring the sensible advice of her mother, whose husband had also failed to keep his marriage vows, Mary decides to get a divorce. She is a sympathetic character but, as Boothe also admitted, far from sparkling. As Crystal tells her in a high-keyed confrontation scene, she is "a hell of a dull woman!" But she is sharp enough to act swiftly to reclaim her man when, in the last of the play's twelve scenes, she discovers that Crystal is having an affair with the sexy young husband of a middle-aged woman, Countess de Lage. Sylvia too gets her comeuppance: she loses her very rich husband to an ex-chorus girl, Miriam Aarons.

Mary's travail and ultimate revenge provide Boothe with an opportunity to present a striking variety of locales and a diverse cast of characters. The settings include, among others, a hairdresser's salon, a hospital room, Mary's Reno hotel room, Crystal's absurdly luxurious bathroom, and finally, the "powder room" of a nightclub. Among the characters are representatives of virtually all social classes from Mary's Park Avenue friends down through the ranks to clerks, manicurists, mannequins, and domestic servants. The play's opening scene, which takes place in Mary's living room, strikes a note that will echo through all the action to the final curtain, as the women assembled chatter incessantly, and entertainingly, about marital infidelity, including Stephen's when Mary is not present. What has brought them together is a bridge party, an event that in itself offers an ironic comment on the intellectual limitations of this group. An exception, however, is Nancy Blake, a thoroughly undeceived and, incidentally, unmarried writer and perhaps, in her mordant remarks on womankind, a spokesperson for Boothe herself. She alone is insightful. The others in this set, apart from Mary and a very young woman, Peggy Day, are merely catty. The push and pull of their dialogue was the principal reason for the success of the play in its original production and accounts for its continuing popularity.

[See also United States, 1929–1940]

FURTHER READING

Chase, Ilka. Past Imperfect. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, Doran, 1944

[Chase played Sylvia Fowler in the original production].

Morris, Sylvia Jukes. Rage for Fame: The Ascent of Clare Boothe Luce.

New York: Random House, 1997.

Shadegg, Stephen C. Clare Boothe Luce: A Biography. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1970.

Sheed, Wilfred. Clare Boothe Luce. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1982.

Malcolm Goldstein

WOOD, ELLEN (1814–1887)

Ellen Wood (born in Worcester, ENGLAND), who published under the name Mrs. Henry Wood, is best known as the author of the 1861 sensation novel EAST LYNNE. Significantly, she is not a playwright but has the distinction of having written a novel that spawned an entire theatrical industry. Her plot lent itself well to MELODRAMA, the most popular theatrical form in mid-Victorian England. East Lynne was adapted for the stage by dozens of playwrights beginning almost immediately after it was published until the craze died off early in the 20th century. Many accounts report that adaptations of East Lynne were nearly ubiquitous in the latter half of the 19th century. Wood herself once commented to her publisher on the prevalence of posters advertising productions of East Lynne on walls everywhere, especially in rural areas. She acknowledged, however, that the chief compensation for her novel being so often adapted was that the theatrical productions increased her book sales, for she never received any theater royalties.

Victorian audiences found her story bold and compelling in its exploration of domestic TRAGEDY, though some critics and readers felt she went too far in mediating her adulterous heroine's moral responsibility for her downfall. In creating a sympathetic portrait of a "fallen woman," Wood violated cultural notions that an adulterous woman was evil through and through.

Wood began her writing career publishing short stories and essays in British periodicals. East Lynne, however, was her first major success—as well as the biggest hit of her career. After the publication of East Lynne, she continued writing until her death, producing twenty more novels (now almost all out of print) over the succeeding twenty-five years. She wrote at a breakneck pace, often working on more than one novel at a time. Critically, her novels have been classified as mid-Victorian sensation fiction, a category of popular writing on the edge of what was considered appropriate for general audiences. Sensation fiction often explored the underside of proper domesticity with its references to secret sexual liaisons and dark psychological aspects of hidden criminality. As a result, readers and critics of sensation fiction found it both titillating and distressing.

[See also England, 1860–1940]

FURTHER READING

- Booth, Michael R. English Melodrama. London: Jenkins, 1965.
- Cross, Gilbert B. Next Week—East Lynne: Domestic Drama in Performance 1820–1874. Lewisburg, Pa.: Bucknell Univ. Press, 1976.
- Scullion, Adrienne, ed. Female Playwrights of the Nineteenth Century. London: Dent, 1996.
- Wood, Ellen. East Lynne. Ed. by Andrew Maunder. Orchard Park, N.Y.: Broadview, 2002.
- Wynne, Deborah. "See What a Big Wide Bed It Is!: Mrs. Henry Wood and the Phillistine Imagination." In Feminist Readings of Victorian Popular Texts: Divergent Femininities, ed. by Emma Higgins and Daniel Duffy. Brookfield, Vt.: Ashgate, 2001. 89–107.

Julianne Smith

THE WOOD CARVER'S WIFE

The Wood Carver's Wife, a one-act play in verse by MARJORIE PICKTHALL (1883–1922), was first published in 1920 in University Magazine. The scene is a rustic-log room, with a silent forest beyond. The wood carver Jean Marchant is carving a Pietà as an altar piece for the church on panels of red cedar wood. His wife, Dorette, sits as his model for the Madonna, as the pair is observed by the treacherous Indian lad Shagonas. Jean struggles with his carving because Dorette's face lacks the Virgin's expression of unutterable despair. Frustrated by his progress, Jean leaves with Shagonas for the church to observe the shrine where his carving will be placed. As Dorette kneels in prayer before the unfinished Pietà, her lover Louis De Lotbinière joins her. The couple proclaims their love for one another, and Dorette persuades the faithful Louis to leave shortly before the return of the wood carver, who has been informed of his wife's adultery by Shagonas. Jean sends the Indian boy to murder Louis, and Shagonas returns with the dead man's sword, which he lays across Dorette's lap. She gazes at Louis's sword with a look of inconsolable grief, and the wood carver resumes his work.

The play initially received mixed praise, with critics both celebrating the beauty of Pickthall's verse and voicing concern with a perceived lack of dramatic interest and cumbersome dialogue. A popular poet of her age, Pickthall's single attempt at drama was seen by some as evidence of her great theatrical promise and a positive example of the development of a rich body of Canadian drama. Others, however, believed that the play suffered from staging difficulties and uneven flow of action.

Performed by various Canadian amateur theater companies in the early years after its publication, The Wood Carver's Wife is now out of print, although more recent stagings include a production at the University of British Columbia in April 2000. The play is an example of the age when Canadian theater was in transition, as it embodies the Victorian sensibilities evident in Pickthall's other literature, while simultaneously demonstrating the author's engagement with new MODERNIST approaches to theater.

With its striking SYMBOLISM and imagery, Pickthall's play is further evidence of her devotion to Canadian themes and her contribution to the development of a distinctly Canadian literature. Set in New France, the play explores themes of violence, RELIGION, artistic creation, sex, and femininity against a distinctly Canadian backdrop. Fraught with repressed emotions and desires, the play explores a violent act of artistic creation, as the suffering of both man and wife is reflected in the wood carver's brutal rendering of the Pietà. With its juxtaposition of the wood carver's wife and the Virgin Mary, Pickthall's drama explores the difficult expectations placed on women. Ultimately, the lovers are punished for their desires, and Dorette remains trapped in her role as the wood carver's wife, her inability to escape her existence being symbolized by the act of her likeness being carved in the "imprisoning dead cedar wood."

[See also Canada]

FURTHER READING

- Badir, Patricia L. " 'So entirely unexpected': The Modernist Dramaturgy of Marjorie Pickthall's The Wood Carver's Wife." Modern Drama 43, no. 2 (2000): 216–245.
- Logan, J. D. Marjorie Pickthall: Her Poetic Genius and Art. An Appreciation and an Analysis of Aesthetic Paradox. Halifax: T. C. Allen, 1922.
- Pickthall, Marjorie L. C. The Wood Carver's Wife and Later Poems. Toronto: McClelland & Stewart, 1922.
- Pierce, Lorne. Marjorie Pickthall: A Book of Remembrance. Toronto: Ryerson Press, 1925.
- Relke, Diana M. A. "Killed Into Art: Marjorie Pickthall and The Wood Carver's Wife." Canadian Drama/L'Art Dramatique Canadien 13, no. 2 (1987): 187–200.

Elizabeth Galway

THE WORD

Give me the Word, the Word, Christ handed down to us from Heaven, the creative vitalizing Word. Give it to me now.

—Johannes, Act 4

The Word (Ordet; written 1925; staged 1932) is KAJ MUNK's most original drama—a modern miracle play in a realist setting, far from the large gestures and pathos of his great historical dramas. The Word was written at the request of Professor Hans Brix, Munk's mentor and dramatic adviser at the Royal Theatre in Copenhagen, DENMARK. In 1925 he asked the young dramatist, who in his parsonage in Vederso impatiently awaited the performance of An Idealist, to pass the waiting time by writing a serious play about peasants. A few months later the first draft of The Word landed on Brix's desk.

The drama deals with the power of faith and takes place in a West Jutland milieu dominated by two competing religious movements: the liberal and broad-minded grundtvigianism and an evangelic fundamentalist sect, represented, respectively, by the old wealthy farmer Mikkell Borgen and the poor artisan Peter the Tailor. The two movements are confronted when Mikkell's youngest son, Anders, falls in love with the tailor's daughter. Mikkell decides to conquer his disgust for the sectarians and visits Peter to sanction the alliance between the two young people but is humiliated by Peter, who rejects his offer and asks God to put him under severe trials. At the very same moment Mikkell is told that his pregnant daughter-in-law, Inger, whose naive and nonconfessional belief and sunny disposition keep the family together, has become seriously ill, and he rushes home.

Inger's illness and following death confront Mikkell with the impotence of his faith. His prayers have no power as he has lost his trust in the miracle, for Munk the very core of Christianity. Everyone around the open coffin stands powerless. Inger's husband has no faith, the doctor has done what his science is capable of, and the representative of the official church has only empty phrases to offer. The only one with the right faith in God is Mikkell's son Johannes, who turned insane when his fiancée died and since then has believed himself to be an incarnation of Jesus Christ. When looking at the dead Inger, he regains his sanity and is now, with the help from Inger's child Maren and the power of his faith, able to do what he could not do when he lost his fiancée—to perform the miracle that brings Inger back to life.

In spite of Brix's warm recommendation, Munk's modern miracle play was never staged at the Royal Theatre. After the first performance of the play in the Betty Nansen Theatre in 1932, leading critic Frederik Schyberg blamed the National Theatre for its neglect and called the play "the most conquering sermon" he had ever heard. In 1955, Carl Th. Dreyer made The Word internationally famous with his adaptation for the screen, and in 2004 The Handcart Ensemble staged the play in New York on the basis of Dreyer's film.

FURTHER READING

Fujiwara, Chris. Ordet. The Criterion Collection. <http://www.criterionco.com/asp/release.asp?id=126&eid=136§ion=essay>.

Munk, Kaj. Five Plays. New York: American Scandinavian Foundation, 1953.

Sandmann, Sandy. Review of Ordet. CurtainUp. <http://www.curtainup.com/ordet.html>.

Kela Kvam

WRIGHT, DOUG (1962–)

You must save everything. And you must show it—auf English, we say—"as is." It is a record, yes? Of living. Of lives.

—Charlotte Von Mahlsdorf, "On Curating" in Act 2, I Am My Own Wife

Doug Wright was born in Dallas, Texas, on December 20, 1962. He graduated from Yale University with a bachelor's degree in art history in 1985 and a master of fine arts degree in playwriting from New York University's Tisch School of the Arts in 1987, after which he resided in New York City.

Wright achieved early success when, as an undergraduate, his play The Stonewater Rapture (1983) was performed at SCOTLAND's Edinburgh Festival Fringe in August 1984. Subsequent plays have garnered significant awards, including the 1996 Obie Award for Quills (1995) and the 2004 Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award for Best Play for I AM MY OWN WIFE (2003). Wright has also penned several screenplays, including the screenplay for Quills, which was nominated for a Golden Globe Award and received the Paul Selvin Award from the Writer's Guild of America. (The film was named Best Picture by the National Board of Review and nominated for three Academy Awards.)

Wright's broad oeuvre ranges from spare one-act, bare-stage pieces to elaborate dramas, black COMEDIES, FARCES, and musicals. Many plays rework theatrical genres, from 1930s musicals in Buzzsaw Berkeley (1989) to the 19th-century Grand Guignol tradition of melodramatic horror in Quills. Even more characteristic is Wright's impressive ability to adapt conventions from other art forms. Interrogating the Nude (1989), for example, draws on AVANT-GARDE visual culture from the early 20th century, while Lot 13: The Bone Violin, one of the four one-act plays written between 1992 and 2001 that make up Unwrap Your Candy, is a "fugue for five actors" who perform behind music stands.

Despite this diversity, Wright's body of work is unified by its devotion to witty, nuanced language as well as its untrusting exploration of the macabre, which Wright has called his "métier." In many plays, this fascination with the eccentric and grotesque materializes in his choice of historical or fictive protagonists from the extreme margins of society, such as the evangelist-wrestling manager and the country western superstar who battle over the site of a dinosaur theme park in Dinosaurs (1988), the iconoclastic artist Marcel Duchamp in Interrogating the Nude, the Marquis de Sade in Quills, the East German transvestite Charlotte von Mahlsdorf in Wife, and the eccentric Bouvier Beale family in Grey Gardens (2005). While Wright's plays induce audiences to see surprising aspects of themselves in these larger-than-life figures, his works just as often probe the uncanny facets of reality closer to home. Watbanaland (1993), for instance, explores unacknowledged fears aroused in parents by advances in reproductive science. Similarly, the hilarious one-act Baby Talk, part of Unwrap Your Candy, reveals the deeply weird aspects of "natural" human reproduction found in the celebrated emotional bonds between an expectant mother and her unborn child.

For all its whimsy and startling humor, however, Wright's predilection for the bizarre is infused with subtly fierce anger, kindled by "growing up gay in the Bible belt," as he has himself say onstage in Wife. That earlier state of siege has led to psychologically insightful, conceptually engaging, and wickedly charged theater that affirms the centrality of stories imagined—and lived—at the margins. Like von Mahlsdorf in Wife, his storytelling is its own act of survival.

PLAYS: The Stonewater Rapture (1983); Dinosaurs (1988); Buzzsaw Berkeley (1989); Interrogating the Nude (1989); Unwrap Your Candy (1992–2001); Watbanaland (1993); Quills (1995); I Am My Own Wife (2003); Grey Gardens (2005)

FURTHER READING

- Bossler, Gregory. "Doug Wright." Dramatist 7, no. 2 (2004): 8–18.
 Ryan, Kate Moira. "Adapting Biography for the Stage." Dramatists Guild Quarterly 32, no. 4 (1996): 24–29.
 Wright, Doug. I Am My Own Wife. Studies for a Play About Charlotte von Mahlsdorf. With an introduction by the author. New York: Faber, 2004.
 ——. "Playwrights on Writing: The Outsider Within Us." Los Angeles Times (June 12, 2005): E33.
 ——. Quills and Other Plays. New York: Faber, 2005.

Jeffrey Schneider

WU ZUGUANG (1917–2003)

Wu Zuguang is one of modern CHINA's most eminent playwrights. He was born in Beijing on April 2, 1917, into an intellectual family originally from Changzhou, Jiangsu Province. From childhood, Wu was nurtured on Chinese art and literature. During his lifetime, he wrote scripts for a wide variety of art forms including Beijing Opera, Ping Opera, and modern spoken drama. He also directed several films and documentaries that recorded the performances and lives of prestigious Beijing Opera artists such as MEI LANFANG and Cheng Yanqiu. Wu earned the title "A Child Prodigy in Drama" when his successful launch onto the dramatic stage came at the age of nineteen with the publication of his first drama, Phoenix City (Feng Huang Cheng), in the winter of 1937, which was at the beginning of the War of Resistance Against Japanese Aggression (1937–1945). The drama's instant rise to popularity owed much to its inspiring patriotic theme, which echoed the timely sentiments of the nation.

In the following two years, he produced several popular dramas inspired by the same patriotic theme, such as The Song of Righteousness (Zheng qi ge, c. 1938–1939), and Children's Army (Hai zi jun, c. 1938–1939), which extolled the courage of the Chinese people during the war and urged them to fight the Japanese invaders.

The period of 1937–1947 is regarded as the first high point of Wu's creativity. During this decade he produced eleven dramas. Among them, Return Home on a Snowy Night (Feng xue ye gui ren, 1942) came to be regarded as Wu's best work and established him as a dramatist of repute. The drama is a melodramatic story about the tragic love affair between a Beijing Opera star (Wei Liansheng) and a bureaucrat's concubine (Yu Chun) in an age of moral corruption. The drama was performed thousands of times on stages across the nation. Its popular appeal lies in part in its elaborate Beijing Opera setting, costuming, and singing and in part in its undertones of ambiguous sexuality.

In late 1947 Wu fled to Hong Kong to escape persecution at the hands of the Kuomintang, because two of his dramas—Chang'e Flying to the Moon (Chang'e ben yue) and Catching the Devil (Zhao gui zhuan)—satirized governmental corruption at the time. During his three years of exile in Hong Kong, Wu produced and directed several films, including Return Home on a Snowy Night and Waste Not Our Youth (Mo fu qing chun). In 1957 Wu was labeled a rightist and sent to the northeast by the communist regime.

On his return in 1960, Wu embarked on his second artistic high in the period of 1961–1965. In 1964 his lifelong interest in traditional theater inspired him to produce the well-known Pingju Opera Flower as Our Matchmaker (Hua wei mei) in which his wife, Xin Fengxia (1927–1998), a famous Pingju Opera singer, played the leading role. His 1979 modern spoken drama Itinerant Performer (Chuang jiang hu) is another popular favorite. It was based on the real life-experiences of Wu's wife.

The names of Wu and Xin, one a talented dramatist and the other a well-loved Pingju Opera star, were always spoken of as one. Wu died in Beijing on April 19, 2003.

PLAYS: Phoenix City (Feng Huang Cheng, 1937); Children's Army (Hai zi jun, c. 1938–1939); The Song of Righteousness (Zheng qi ge, c. 1938–1939); The Cowhead and the Girl Weaver (Niu lang zhi nu, 1942); Return Home on a Snowy Night (Feng xue ye gui ren, 1942); Lin Chong (Li Chong ye ben, 1943); The Journey of the Boy (Shao nian you, 1944); Catching the Devil (Zhao gui zhuan, c. 1947); Chang'e Flying to the Moon (Chang'e ben yue, c. 1947); Flower as Our Matchmaker (Hua wei mei, 1964); Itinerant Performer (Chuang jiang hu, 1979)

FURTHER READING

- McDougall, Bonnie S., and Kam Louie. The Literature of China in the Twentieth Century. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1997.
 Wu Zuguan. Wu Zuguang xuanji [Selected works of Wu Zuguang]. Shijiazhuang: Hebei renmin chubanshe, 1995.
 Xin Fengxia. Wo yu Wu Zuguang [Wu Zuguang and I]. Nanning: Guangxi jiaoyu chubanshe, 1994.

Hongwei Lu

WYSPIAŃSKI, STANISŁAW (1869–1907)

Son of a sculptor, Stanisław Wyspiański was born on January 15, 1869, in Cracow in the Austrian sector of partitioned POLAND. He was educated in Cracow, the ancient capital of Poland and center of its cultural life. All his works both as painter and playwright have deep roots in the artistic heritage of Cracow, which nurtured and shaped his visual imagination. There Wyspiański studied art, architecture, history, and literature; worked on church restorations; created stained glass windows, book illustrations, and stage designs; and in ten years wrote some twenty plays (plus fragments of incomplete works), adaptations of Pierre Corneille and Voltaire, two epic poems, lyric poetry, and a long essay on staging Hamlet.

Contact with European modernism set his creativity ablaze. Between 1890 and 1894 Wyspiański traveled three times to Western Europe, spending two and a half years in Paris, where he studied painting and was exposed to SYMBOLISM. Under the spell of RICHARD WAGNER and the Paris opera, he conceived of a poetic drama unifying all the arts (Gesamtkunstwerk) that would have a musical structure but transpose into visual imagery the power of operatic theater.

On returning to Cracow, Wyspiański worked as graphic artist for STANISŁAW PRZYBYŚZEWSKI's new MODERNIST journal Życie and became associated as designer and author with Teatr Miejski, where between 1898 and 1907 seven of his dramas were staged. His plays can conveniently be classified as historical, contemporary, classically inspired, and mythological-metaphysical. Each play has a powerfully visualized setting out of which the action grows. Wyspiański's sense of life was darkly tragic; he portrayed man's desperate battle with the invincible power of fate from an ironic and satiric viewpoint.

The November Uprising of 1830 against RUSSIA provides the subject of his early one-act Warszawianka (1898), a Maeterlinckian mood drama of ominous foreboding given a precise historical and political context. The popular song inspired by the insurrection, "La Varsovienne," recurs as a leitmotiv throughout the play, as a group of officers and the combatants' wives and daughters wait in growing terror for news of the outcome of a lost battle.

Wyspiański's most important contemporary drama, The Wedding (Wesele), was staged in 1901 with resounding success. Based on the marriage of his poet friend to a peasant girl, the drama evokes a heroic past through visions and dreams, satirizes a self-indulgent present, and bitterly mocks a future that refuses to be born. The same year Wyspiański adapted, published, and helped to mount the first production of Adam Mickiewicz's seminal romantic drama Forefathers' Eve (1820–1832).

As part of an ongoing dialogue of Polish drama with its own past, Wyspiański uses the device of theater-in-the-theater in The Deliverance (Wyzwolenie, 1903) and locates the action of the play on the bare stage of a contemporary Cracow theater, where Konrad, hero of Forefathers' Eve, has come to lead the nation to salvation. Konrad declares to the actors that there will be no play today, only a commedia improvisation to awaken the people from paralyzing dreams of past glory. In its theatricalist reckoning with masks of the past and settlement of accounts with romantic drama, Deliverance introduces techniques of parody, appropriation, and allusion characteristic of much 20th-century Polish drama.

Immersed in ancient Greek myth and Old Testament prophecy, Wyspiański brings the past alive in the present. The Curse (Klątwa, 1899) and The Judges (Sędziowie, 1907) are modern crime stories, rural faits divers (stories in the news) given high pictorial relief and elevated to the level of tragic fatality. Seeking the cause of a terrible drought that has blighted their crops, peasants in The Curse burn alive the mistress of their parish priest in order to bring rain. A family of Jewish country innkeepers in Judges calls down God's vengeance in condemning one of their own who has committed murder.

Turning to his beloved Homer, whose work he had illustrated, in Achilles (1903) Wyspiański reinterpreted the epic hero as a disillusioned and alienated opponent of the Trojan war, while he made his last play, The Return of Odysseus (Powrót Odysa, 1907), a sinister drama of the evil fate pursuing a violent, haunted man who cannot escape God's curse—a reflection of his own slow, agonizing death from syphilis contracted years earlier in Paris. He died on November 28, 1907 in Cracow.

In November Night (Noc listopadowa, 1904), his second drama about the 1830 uprising, Greek mythology animates Polish history. The entire action unfolds on the night of November 29 in the real places in Warsaw where the rebellion took place, but historical events are juxtaposed with the myth of Demeter and Persephone. The historical and supernatural become one; the soldiers engaged in the insurrection enact the roles of ancient warriors, playthings in the hands of Homeric gods, and the 1830 rebellion is transformed into an Eleusinian seasonal mystery of death and rebirth.

Influenced by Edouard Schuré's ideas about a "theatre of the soul," Wyspiański in Acropolis (1904) fashions a syncretism of Judaic, Greek, and Christian religious mythology. Set, on Easter eve, in the royal castle overlooking the city of Cracow and the river Vistula (which metaphorically become the Acropolis, Athens, and the Scamander), Wyspiański's visionary drama of death and resurrection has no human characters, only figures from sculpture, wall hangings, and architecture that, as the bells toll midnight, step down from their niches and tapestries to enact their stories from the Bible and Iliad. In the celebrated 1962 production by Jerzy Grotowski and Józef Szajna at the Laboratory Theatre, the action of Acropolis was transferred from the royal castle in Cracow to nearby Auschwitz.

Wyspiański's farsighted ideas about a new stagecraft, too advanced for his own day, became widely accepted and influential in the 1920s. Since then, Wyspiański's dramas have become a mainstay of the Polish repertory, constantly to be challenged and reinterpreted.

Wyspiański's language is impassioned and highly stylized, full of archaisms, folk dialect, and terse aphoristic sayings; his rhyming verse is richly allusive, containing antique motifs and manifold references to Polish history and art. His remarkable plays, which integrate the arts of poetry, painting, and music, have great power to stir the Polish cultural memory but remain almost impossible to translate or transpose to non-Polish dramatic traditions. For these reasons Wyspiański is an author who has not yet been estimated at his true worth outside Poland.

PLAYS: Meleager (1898); Warszawianka (1898); The Curse (Klątwa, 1899); Lelewel (1899); Protesilas and Laodamia (Protesilas i Laodamia, 1899); Legion (1900); The Wedding (Wesele, 1901); Achilles (1903); Boleslaw the Bold (Boleslaw Śmiały, 1903); The Deliverance (Wyzwolenie, 1903);

Acropolis (1904); Legenda (1904); November Night (Noc listopadowa, 1904); The Rock (Skalka, 1905); The Judges (Sędziowie, 1907); The Return of Odysseus (Powrót Odysa, 1907); Zygmunt August (1907)

FURTHER READING

"Profiles: Stanisław Wyspiański." www.culture.pl. [managed by Adam Mickiewicz Institute (AMI)]. http://www.culture.pl/en/culture/artykuly/os_wyspianski_stanislaw.
Schiller, Leon de Schildrenfeld. "The New Theatre in Poland: Stanisław Wyspiański." The Mask 2, nos. 1–3 (July 1909): 11–27; 2, nos. 4–6 (September 1909): 59–71.

Terlecka, Antonina Maria (Tola Korian). Stanisław Wyspiański and Symbolism. 27–28. Rome: Ex Antemurale, 1985–1986.

Terlecki, Tymon. Stanisław Wyspiański. Boston: Twayne, 1983.

Wyspiański, Stanisław. The Return of Odysseus. Tr. and intro. by Howard Clark. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 1966.

Daniel Gerould

XENOPOULOS, GRIGORIOS (1867–1951)

A prolific playwright, novelist, and critic, Grigorios Xenopoulos dominated Greek cultural life for at least three decades. Xenopoulos was born in Istanbul (Constantinople) but spent his childhood and youth in the Ionian island of Zakynthos and all his adult life in Athens, GREECE. Already from his student years, he frequented literary circles of the capital, and he soon started working for the Press. His first attachment to theater came through criticism. In November 1894, in a speech preceding the first Greek performance of HENRIK IBSEN'S GHOSTS, he urged Greek playwrights to follow contemporary European developments and to embrace the vigorous realistic movement and especially Ibsen.

A year later, Xenopoulos wrote two plays influenced by the Norwegian dramatist: The Foster Father (O psychopateras, 1895) and The Third Man (O tritos, 1895). Nikolaos Lekatsas, the leading actor manager of the time, immediately performed both plays, which, despite their limited success onstage, initiated a thriving new career for their author and a whole new era for Greek DRAMATURGY. Xenopoulos's pieces were praised for their carefully constructed plot, the scrupulous but direct language, and the profound characterization. Moreover, they supplied directors and actors with intriguing plots and ingenious roles; most significantly, they advanced the tradition of middle-class drama in Greek theater.

Countess Valeraina's Secret (To mystiko tis Kontessas Valerainas), the drama Konstantinos Christomanos directed in 1904 at his pioneering independent theater in Athens, became a popular example of the new, realistic drama, for it recounted the departure from the ideals and principles upon which the nobility of the Ionian island had grounded its existence. The suppression of women and their right to love against patriarchal authority (Foteini Santri [1908] and Stella Violanti [1909]), the barriers that different religions and social classes raise between people (All Soul's Saturday [To psychosavvato, 1911] and Rachel [1909]), and the aspiring dreams and deadly conflicts that decide life for young students (The Students [Foititai, 1919]) are some of the subjects Xenopoulos discussed in his dramas, and they all manifest his intention to record aspects of contemporary life.

His COMEDIES also focused on the change in beliefs, mentality, and customs that Greek society was experiencing at the time. However, many of his plays are often accused of excessive sentimentality and a structure far too obedient to the stereotypes of the "well-made play" to be considered as a genuine part of the realistic tradition of the late 19th century. Xenopoulos's work, though, exactly demonstrates the way REALISM was initially embedded in Greek drama in order to reach contemporary audiences. The merging of realistic themes and perspective with earlier dramatic techniques facilitated the acceptance and presentation of these plays onstage, for it gave an appealing answer to a dominant question in Greek theater: the effects of foreign influences on national drama. Xenopoulos used previous trends that helped to attest Greekness to balance the "invasion" of the new trend. His success denotes not simply the limits of realism in the Greek drama of the time but also the unhurried path to the West that Greece was following.

SELECT PLAYS: The Foster Father (O psychopateras, 1895); The Third Man (O tritos, 1895); Countess Valeraina's Secret (To mystiko tis Kontessas Valerainas, 1904); Foteini Santri (1908); Rachel (1909); Stella Violanti (1909); The Temptation (O peirasmos, 1910); All Soul's Saturday (To psychosavvato, 1911); The Flower of Levant (To fioro tou Levante, 1914); It's Not Me (Den eimai ego, 1915); The Students (Foititai, 1919); The Plebeian (O popolaros, 1933)

FURTHER READING

"Grigorios Xenopoulos." Special issue of Nea Estia, no. 50 (Christmas 1951).

Spathis, Dimitris. "Grigorios Xenopoulos." In Istoria tou Neou Ellinismou [History of modern Hellenism]. Athens: Ellinika Grammata, 2004. 6:206.

Xenopoulos, Grigorios. I zoe mou san mythistorima [My life as a novel]. 1938–1939. Athens: Afoi Blassi, 1984.

Ioulia Pipinia

XIA YAN (1900–1995)

Xia Yan, whose original name was Shen Naixi, was one of the most prominent, influential, pioneering, and highly respected figures in the fields of modern drama, film, and literature in CHINA. He was awarded many official titles in the governing body of the Chinese cultural and literary worlds, including the associate chair of the Association of Chinese Literature and Arts. In 1965 he was harshly criticized for his assertions in literature and arts, removed from his official positions, and spent eight years in prison. He was rehabilitated in 1978, resumed his official posts, and was primarily in charge of the development of Chinese theater and filmmaking.

Born on October 30, 1900, in Zhejiang Province, China, at the age of twenty Xia Yan went to JAPAN, where he studied electronic engineering and participated in many leftist activities. After his return from Japan in 1927, he joined the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) and enthusiastically advocated "the proletarian drama," believing that drama of the time should represent the commoners and their lives. He translated many foreign literary theories and works into Chinese including MAKSIM GORKY'S novel Mat (Mother). In October 1929, he founded the Society of Shanghai Dramatists together with several new drama advocators and also became the chief editor of the leftist journal The Arts. In 1930, Xia helped to found the League of Left-Wing Writers and served as its first executive committee member.

As a witness of the turbulent events and tremendous social changes in Chinese society in the last century, Xia Yan passionately reflected his keen observations in his writings. His highly acclaimed play Under the Eaves of Shanghai (Shanghai wuyan xia, 1937) presented an innovative picture of the common people's struggle to survive against the backdrop of the impending national crisis of a Japanese invasion. Dramatizing the lives of five families residing in a typical house in Shanghai, Xia situated his three-set play in the early rainy summer and constituted the core of his theatrical tension on a revolutionist, Kuang Fu, and his homecoming after an eight-year imprisonment. Upon his return, he found his wife Cai Yu was living with his friend Lin Zhicheng and emotionally conflicted. The three of them nevertheless encountered the thorny issues of love, feeling, friendship, and grace accompanied by internal sorrow, frustration, despair, guilt, and the residuals of social turbulence. In the play, Xia also sketched a group of marginalized yet phenotypical and chromatic people—a discontented elementary school teacher, a sorrowful prostitute, a jobless clerk, a lonely senior news vendor who lost his son, and their unbearable and hopeless reality—and permitted the many individual problems of his characters to become the central problems of the play as a whole. He interwove such a love-triangle tale with multiple perspectives of individual character's depressing stories so as to evoke audience sympathy with them and to awake their desire for change. As a consequence of the Japanese invasion of Shanghai in 1937, Under the Eaves of Shanghai was not staged in Chongqing until 1939.

Xia Yan spent a great part of his life on the evolution of Chinese filmmaking. Many Chinese award-winning films were either scripted or adapted by him from successful stage performances and popular novels, including great modern Chinese writers Lu Xun's Sacrifice and Mao Dun's The Shop of the Lin Family.

In the People's Republic of China, it is customary to credit Xia Yan as a distinguished writer, journalist, translator, dramatist, screenwriter, film director, and film theorist. He died on February 6, 1995, in Beijing, China.

SELECT PLAYS: Madam Sai jinhua (Sai jinhua, 1936); Under the Eaves of Shanghai (Shanghai wuyan xia, 1937); Free Soul/The Story of Qiu Jin (Ziyou hun/Qiu Jin zhuang, 1937/1950); In a Year/Paradise (Yi nian jian/Tian shang ren jian, 1939/1944); The Heart's Defense (Xin fang, 1940); The Account of Sorrow City (Chou cheng ji, 1941); The Fascist Bacillus (Faxisi xijun, 1944); The Fragrant Grass at the End of the World (Fang cao tian ya, 1945); The Test (Kaoyan, 1955)

FURTHER READING

Chen Xiaomei. "Twentieth-Century Spoken Drama." In The Columbia History of Chinese Literature, ed. by Victor Mair. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 2001.

Ge Yihon and Lu Fu, eds. Zhongguo zuoyi xiju jia lianmeng shi liao ji [Collected materials of the Chinese League of Left-Wing Dramatists]. Beijing: Zhongguo xiju chubanshe, 1991.

Hui Lin, Chen Jian, and Shao Wu, eds. Xia Yan yanjiu ziliao [The materials of Xia Yan studies]. Beijing: Zhongguo xiju chubanshe, 1983.

Tian Benxiang and Jiao Shangzhi. Zhongguo huaaju shi yanjiu kaishu [An outline of Chinese spoken drama study]. Tianjin: Tianjin guji chubanshe, 1993.

Xia Yan. Under the Eaves of Shanghai: An Annotated Chinese Play. Tr. by Richard Chang and William Lewis MacDonald. New Haven, Conn.: Far Eastern Publications, Yale Univ. Press, 1974.

Ping Fu

XIN JUZHANG LAI DAO ZHI QIAN, HUAJU

See BEFORE THE NEW BUREAU DIRECTOR CAME

XIONG FOXI (1900–1965)

Chinese playwright and educator Xiong Foxi was born in Fengcheng County, Jiangxi Province, CHINA, in 1900. He started schooling in a missionary school in Hankou, Hubei Province, where he often participated in its theatrical performances. From 1919 to 1922, Xiong studied education and Western literature at Yen-ching University, where he found his favorite authors in William Shakespeare, HENRIK IBSEN, GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, and others. In 1921 he joined the Literary Association, helped establish the People's Drama Society, and became an editor for the journal Theater. Xiong went on to do graduate work in drama and literature at Columbia University, New York City, in 1923. During that time he wrote The First Day in the Year of Jiazi (Jiazi di yi tian, 1926), All from a Patriotic Heart (Yi pian aiguo xin, 1925), and other plays. His first collection of plays was published in 1924 under the title Sorrows of the Youth. After his return to China in 1926, Xiong became a professor of dramatic arts at Beijing National Arts School, National Peking University, and Yen-ching University consecutively. During that time he wrote Foxi on Drama, Principles of Playwriting, and quite a few plays, of which The Artist (Yishu jia, 1928) and The Tragedy of Lanzhi and Zhongqing (Lanzhi yu Zhongqing, 1929) are more well known. At the invitation of the Chinese Society for Promoting Education among Common People in 1932, Xiong Foxi went to a rural experimental theater in Ding County of Hebei Province to engage in the experimentation and popularization of drama for the peasants.

During the Sino-Japanese War (1937–1945), Xiong served the Nationalist government as a theater director, president of Sichuan Provincial Drama School, and director of the Central Youth Theatrical Society. He went to various places to promote drama and wrote a number of anti-Japanese plays. After 1949, he was appointed a member of the National Association of Literature and Art and a member of the standing committee of the Chinese Playwrights' Association, among other titles. He served as the first president of the Shanghai Drama School, later to be renamed Shanghai Institute of Drama. Meanwhile, Xiong Foxi continued to write plays and novels as well as short stories until his death on October 26, 1965, in Shanghai.

As an educator of drama, Xiong Foxi is primarily known for his role in promoting "amateur theater," along with Chen Dabai, Pu Boying, and OUYANG YUQIAN. Being quite versatile, he was good at producing COMEDIES of satire and FARCES, plays of parables, and social plays (All from a Patriotic Heart). All from a Patriotic Heart, a three-act play, was written in 1925 and published a year later. Centering on the issue of whether to sign a contract that betrayed Chinese coal mine rights, the play depicts a series of fundamental conflicts between Tang Huating, a revolutionary in the early republican period, and his Japanese wife Akiko, together with his son and daughter. Making use of the family conflict, the play successfully portrays a life-and-death struggle between the patriots and the traitors, eulogizing anti-imperialist patriotism. Besides its social significance, the play is also known for its vivid character portrayal, well-knit structure, and use of fluent vernacular. It is one of the most influential plays in Xiong Foxi's early playwriting.

SELECT PLAYS: Whose Fault Is This? (Zhe shi shui de cuo, 1921); Sorrows of the Youth (Qingchun di bei'ai, 1923); All from a Patriotic Heart (Yi pian aiguo xin, 1925); The First Day in the Year of Jiazi (Jiazi di yi tian, 1926); The Artist (Yishu jia, 1928); The Drunkard (Zuil, 1928); The Tragedy of Lanzhi and Zhongqing (Lanzhi yu Zhongqing, 1929); The Fruit of Love (Aiqing de jiejing, 1930); The Tragedy of a Poet (Shiren de beiju, 1930); The Chinese Descendants (Zhonghua minzu de zisun, 1938); Yuan Shikai (1942); The Spring in Shanghai (Shanghai tan de chuntian, 1956)

FURTHER READING

Chen Duo, et al. Xiandai xiju jia Xiong Foxi [The modern playwright Xiong Foxi]. Beijing: Zhongguo xiju chubanshe, 1985.

"Development of Peasants Drama." ChinaCulture.org. http://www.chinaculture.org/gb/en_artqa/2003-09/24/content_38624.htm.

Judd, Ellen R. "Cultural Articulation in the Chinese Countryside, 1937–1947." Modern China 16, no. 3 (July 1990): 269–308.

Sun Huizhu. "Xiong Foxi lingdao de dingxian nongmin xiju shiyan jiqi xianshi yiyi" [Xiong Foxi's experiment on peasant theater in Ding County and its social significance]. Xiju yishu (Theatre Arts) 1 (2001).

Xiong Foxi. The Artist. Translation of Yishu jia by Ku Tsong-nee.

In Modern Chinese Plays, ed. and tr. by Ku Tsong-nee. Shanghai: Commercial Press, 1941. 119–137.

Hongchu Fu and Cai Xingshui

XU FEN (1933–)

Born in Chongqing in August 1933, Xu Fen was an actor in an army performance troupe from 1949 to 1954. She studied journalism at Beijing University, graduated in 1958, and was assigned to work in Sichuan Province. In 1961 she became the first female playwright in the history of chuanju (Sichuan Opera). Since then she has written more than thirty plays, mostly for the chuanju theater. She has been affiliated with the Chengdu Chuanju Troupe.

Her most representative work before the Cultural Revolution was Yanyan (1956), which promoted a revision, from a feminist point of view, of the characterization of the leading character of Guan Hanqing's Yuan zaju play A Girl Tricked Into Amorous Relations (Zha nizi tiao fengyue), in which Yanyan accepts her position as a concubine even after she had been taken advantage of, betrayed, and ridiculed by her man. Xu Fen could not accept such a fate for Yanyan; she turned the COMEDY into a TRAGEDY that calls for women's dignity by creating an unyielding and honest soul in Yanyan. Since the late 1970s, Xu's revision has been adapted into productions by troupes of different regional theaters and also produced on television.

In the same vein, she continued to write a series of plays, focusing on new portrayals of women, such as Sister Tian and Zhuang Zi (Tianjie yu Zhuang Zhou, 1986), Interrupted Dream of Red Chamber (Honglou jing meng, 1982), and Mulian's Mother (Mulian zhi mu, 1992). She has also turned to modern and contemporary themes, producing such plays as Billows out of Dead Waters (Sishui weilan, 1995), Governor's Wife: Dong Zhujun (Dudu furen Dong Zhujun, 2000), and Raging Tides in the Sea of Desire (Yuhai kuangchao, 1989). Billows out of Dead Waters, adapted from a novel of the same title, tells the story of a countrywoman who rebels against feudal ethics and pursues her own love in the ending years of the Qing Dynasty. Governor's Wife is based on an autobiography by Dong Zhujun, a woman entrepreneur, who had escaped from her occupation as a singsong girl at the age of fifteen and, after the failure of her marriage to one governor of Sichuan, started a restaurant of Sichuan cuisine in Shanghai, which later developed into the famous Jinjiang Hotel. Raging Tides in the Sea of Desire is adapted from EUGENE O'NEILL'S DESIRE UNDER THE ELMS, transforming the original story with a distinct Chinese environment. In this Sichuan Opera version, desire to possess permeates every character and brings everyone to ruin: the old landlord, his youngest son, his young wife, and the baby born out of the incestuous relationship. Xu Fen also wrote a one-act xiqu play, Lady Macbeth (Maikebai furen), joining the vogue of adapting Western classics onto the Chinese xiqu stage. Structurally, Xu Fen consciously reformed some of the chuanju conventions by quickening the pace of dramatic development, avoiding repetitions of similar plots, and replacing stock characters with those showing individual personalities.

Like WEI MINGLUN, Xu Fen has been writing mainly for Sichuan Opera. These two playwrights have been very innovative and, sometimes, controversial on the chuanju stage. Xu is undoubtedly one of the most important female playwrights on the contemporary scene. Her works have also appeared in Beijing Opera (The One and Only [Qiangyu yiren, 1996]), spoken drama (The Tide of the 1911 Revolution [Xinhai chao, 1990]), and dance drama (Flowers of Distant Mountains [Yuanshan de huaduo]).

[See also China]

SELECT PLAYS: Yanyan (1956); The Story of a Scholar (Xiucui waizhuan, 1960); Wang Xifeng (Wang Xifeng, 1963); Interrupted Dream of Red Chamber (Honglou jing meng, 1982); Sister Tian and Zhuang Zi (Tianjie yu Zhuang Zhou, 1986); Raging Tides in the Sea of Desire (Yuhai kuangchao, 1989); The Tide of the 1911 Revolution (Xinhai chao, 1990); Mulian's Mother (Mulian zhi mu, 1992); Billows out of Dead Waters (Sishui weilan, 1995); The One and Only (Qiangyu yiren, 1996); Governor's Wife: Dong Zhujun (Dudu furen Dong Zhujun, 2000); The Fall of Dust (Chen'ai luoding, 2004); Under the Mount Lanke (Lanke shanxia, 2005)

FURTHER READING

"Chuanju Dudu furen Dong Zhujun zhuan" [Special issue on the Sichuan Opera Governor's Wife: Dong Zhujun]. Shanghai xiju (Shanghai Drama) 11 (2001): 9–19.

Xu Fen. Mulian zhi mu [Mulian's Mother]. Sichuan xiju (Sichuan Drama) 4 (1993): 53–62.

———. Sishui weilan [Billows out of Dead Waters]. Juben (Play Scripts) 4 (1996): 2–18.

———. Xu Fen xiju zuopin xuan [Xu Fen's selected works of drama]. 2 vols. Chengdu: Sichuan wenyi chubanshe, 2001.

Wenwei Du

XU JIUJING SHENGGUAN JI, JINJU

See XU JIUJING'S PROMOTION

XU JIUJING'S PROMOTION

The Beijing Opera (jingju) Xu Jiujiang's Promotion (Xu Jiujiang shengguan ji, jinju), by Guo Dayou (1948–) and Xi Zhigan (1947–), belongs to a subgenre known as courtroom drama that dates back to the 13th century. (Guo Dayou and Xi Zhigan, both affiliated with the Beijing Opera Company of Hubei Province, write operas as well as film and television scripts.) As an embodiment of the Chinese conception of justice, Xu Jiujiang's Promotion has been very popular with Chinese audiences since its premiere. In this modern version of the courtroom play (premiered in 1981), a low-ranking official, Xu Jiujiang, is suddenly promoted to be the chief justice of the Supreme Court in order to try the case of a prince and a commander of the army suing each other, a case that the other justices are too afraid to take.

Unlike the judges in the traditional courtroom drama who mete out punishments to the others, Xu Jiujiang must put his own conscience on trial as well. In the course of his investigation of this case, he discovers that the real culprit is the Prince's brother-in-law, not the Commander's son, as he had suspected. This turn of events is similar to the plot of "judgment reversal" plays in which the verdict of the first corrupt judge is overturned by that of the second. Xu now faces the moral dilemma of whether to repay the kindness of the Prince, who recommended him for the judgeship, or to rule in favor of the Commander, who is his political enemy. To maintain his original judgment or to overturn it becomes an ultimate test of his integrity and the focal point of the play. In the long aria "It's Hard to Be an Official," the playwrights display great verbal ingenuity by using the word official more than sixty times to highlight Xu's long-cherished ambition to climb the official ladder and the heavy price he must pay for it. Xu's self-revelation brings into sharp focus the conflict between his conscience and his self-interest. His inner struggle is further dramatized by two phantom images of himself, one urging him to follow his conscience, the other counseling him to look after his career. Emphasis on psychological conflict makes this opera different from the conventional courtroom drama.

Another innovation of this opera is to cast Xu Jiujiang in the role of a clown (one of the four major role types in Beijing Opera) and to turn the solemn courtroom drama into a hilarious COMEDY. Xu's comic role also calls attention to the difficulty of upholding the rule of law. He succeeds in bringing the criminal to justice not by the power of law but through a ruse. The reward for his labor is not a promising official career but its termination. Despite the appearance of justice restored and the comic tone of the play, there is a note of resignation, as can be seen in Xu's exit poem: "The law of the land exists in vain. Common people have no recourse against power and rank. My official robe and cap I leave behind. You will find me under a crooked tree selling wine." Through this historical play, the playwrights expose the ills of contemporary Chinese society: official corruption and abuse of power in high places.

[See also China]

FURTHER READING

Guo Dayou and Xi Zhigan. Xu Jiujiang Shengguan ji [Xu Jiujiang's Promotion]. Juben (Play Scripts) 5 (1981): 2–24.

Hayden, George A. Crime and Punishment in Medieval Chinese Drama: Three Judge Pao Plays. Cambridge: Harvard Univ. Press, 1978.

Qi Zhixiang. "Xu Jiujiang shengguan ji guanju duanxiang" [Thoughts on Xu Jiujiang's Promotion]. Juben (Play Scripts) 5 (1981): 74–75.

Xu Jiujiang's Promotion. In Chinese Drama After the Cultural Revolution, 1979–1989, tr. and ed. by Shiao-ling S. Yu. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1996. 35–94.

Shiao-ling Yu

YAMAMOTO YŪZŌ (1887–1974)

Yamamoto Yūzō (1887–1974), a Japanese SHINGEKI and SHINPA playwright, was born in Tochigi Machi, Tochigi Prefecture. His father was a dry-goods dealer, and Yamamoto, at the age of fifteen, started working at a dry-goods store in Tokyo. But he persuaded his father to let him attend school, and in 1909, at twenty-one, he entered the First Gymnasium in Tokyo. In the fall of that year, he saw HENRIK IBSEN's JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN at the Free Theatre (Jiyū Gekijō), the first Ibsen performance in JAPAN, and was greatly moved. The next year, he wrote his first play, A Hole (Ana, 1911) which was performed by students of the Tokyo School of Actors a year later. A Hole was based on his own experience of visiting the Ashio Copper Mine, the subject of much contemporary criticism for mine pollution. The author's intention, however, was to draw a realistic picture of mining without any particular bias. This would be Yamamoto Yūzō's basic attitude throughout his playwrighting career.

In 1912, Yamamoto entered Tokyo Imperial University, majoring in German literature. He began to translate German plays and write theater reviews. Graduating in 1915, Yamamoto joined the Inoue Masao Company but soon after moved to the Shinpa Triangular League (Shinpa Sankaku Dōmei) of Akizuki Keitarō, Kawakami Sadayakko, and Kitamura Rokurō, where he directed Mushakōji Saneatsu's Two Hearts and His Sister. In 1917 Yamamoto wrote Professor Tsumura (Tsumura Kyōju), now considered one of his best plays. It has been pointed out that AUGUST STRINDBERG's CREDITORS influenced this play, but Yamamoto had no sympathy with Strindberg's woman hating. He was much closer to the sentiment and morality of the Edo era (1603–1868). Professor Tsumura was produced by a kabuki actor, Morita Kan'ya XIII, at the Imperial Theatre (Teikoku Gekijō) in 1920. Shortly before that, Yamamoto's new play, The Crown of Life (Inochi no Kanmuri, 1920) was performed by the Inoue Company. Both productions were successful, and he firmly established his position as a promising young playwright. Thus, he was one of those contributing to the so-called Flowering Age of Taishō (1912–1923) Drama.

During the 1920s, most of Yamamoto's plays were performed by progressive young kabuki actors, such as Kan'ya, Onoe Kikugorō VI, and Matsumoto Kōshirō VII, or by talented shinpa actors, such as Inoue Masao, Mizutani Yaeko, and Hanayagi Shōtarō. In 1924 Yamamoto started a theater magazine, Engeki Shinchō, together with KIKUCHI KAN, OSANAI KAORU, and others but came to be in conflict with Osanai, who declared that he found no Japanese play good enough to be put onstage at his newly founded Tsukiji Little Theatre (Tsukiji Shōgekijō). Osanai's criticism of new Japanese plays was in a way justified, for young dramatists were mainly interested in commercial success in the traditional theater world. Yamamoto Yūzō was no doubt one of them. Even his best-known play, Baby-Killing (Eiji Goroshi, 1921) in which the author is sympathetic to a poor woman's baby killing, ends with the arrest of the woman.

Yamamoto wrote several historical plays, too, such as Sakazaki, Lord of Dewa (Sakazaki Dewa no Kami, 1921), Comrades (Dōshi no Hitobito, 1925), Saigō and Ōkubo (Saigō to Ōkubo, 1928), and The Sad Tale of a Woman, the Story of Chink Okichi (Nyonin Aishi, 1933), among others, all of which were performed by either kabuki or shinpa actors. In the Shōwa era (1926–1989), however, Yamamoto was primarily engaged with writing novels.

[See also Shin Kabuki]

SELECT PLAYS: A Hole (Ana, 1911); The Cluster-Amaryllis (Manjushage, published 1914); Professor Tsumura (Tsumura Kyōju, 1919); The Crown of Life (Inochi no Kanmuri, 1920); Baby-Killing (Eiji Goroshi, 1921); Sakazaki, Lord of Dewa (Sakazaki Dewa no Kami, 1921); Mother (Onna Oya, 1922); Shiman Story (Shiman Enngi, 1922); The Maid's Illness (Jochū no Byōki, published 1924); Monk Kumagai Renshō (Kumagai Renshō Bō, 1924); The Patron Saint (Honzon, 1924); Susanoo no Mikoto (published 1924); Umihiko and Yamahiko (Umihiko Yamahiko, 1924); Visiting Ōiso (Ōiso-Gayoi, published 1924); Comrades (Dōshi no Hitobito, 1925); Kamon and Hichirōemon (Kamon to Hichirōemon, 1927); Saigō and Ōkubo (Saigō to Ōkubo, 1928); Blind Brother (Mōmoku no Otōto, 1930); The Sad Tale of a Woman, the Story of Chink Okichi (Nyonin Aishi, 1933); Father (Chichioya, 1934); Hundred Bags of Rice (Kome Hyappō, 1943)

FURTHER READING

Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era:

Poetry, Drama, Criticism. New York: Henry Holt, 1984.

Yamamoto, Yūzō. Three Plays by Yamamoto Yūzō. Tr. by Glenn W. Shaw. Tokyo: Hokuseido, 1957.

—. Yamamoto Yūzō Zenshū [The collected works of Yamamoto Yūzō]. Tokyo: Iwanami Shoten, 1939–1941.

—. Yamamoto Yūzō Zenshū [The collected works of Yamamoto Yūzō]. Tokyo: Shinchōsha, 1976–1977.

INOUE Yoshie and Mitsuya Mori

YAMAZAKI MASAKAZU (1934–)

Yamazaki Masakazu (1934–), a Japanese SHINGEKI playwright, philosopher, critic, political adviser, and college president, was born in Manchuria while it was a Japanese colony. Writing in a wide range of styles, his constant theme is the shifts between reality and illusion, as individuals forge their identities through action (or inaction).

Often Yamazaki's plots revolve around a historic figure caught in a crucible of ambition, obligation, and faith: In Zeami (1963), Yamazaki explores the eponymous founder of classical Nō theater. The actor-director's struggle to achieve individual expression even while enjoying the protection of the shogun is depicted as "the tension between a total dedication to art and the human pressures of society, family, and the familiar world" (Rimer, 1980). Rather than transmit his art to an unworthy successor, Zeami refuses to divulge his secrets, content to be a shadow, fighting the darkness, following the light. Yamazaki's philosophical debates are skillfully interwoven with dance and song (Zeami later became a musical). The play is full of resonant symbols, such as a damask drum that makes a sound when struck.

Sanetomo Sets Sail (Sanemoto Shuppan, 1973) portrays the brief life of Minamoto Sanetomo (1192–1219), who attempted unsuccessfully to build a ship to sail to CHINA. Sanetomo's story is told by reluctant ghosts rehearsing their histories, gradually drawn into their roles by Sanetomo's charismatic force. J. Thomas Rimer hears echoes of Hamlet in the play's family intrigues and play-within-play framing, while Ted Takaya finds in Sanetomo's ambitious failure the need of an individual with a "profound spiritual vacuum . . . desperately trying to fill this void by immersing himself in feverish activity" (Takaya, 1979).

This Boat Is a Sailboat (Fune wa Hansen yo, 1973) has a contemporary setting, depicting the vague ambivalence of the postwar generation unable to feel passionately toward a career, marriage partner, or even a hobby. The style is semiabsurd, with mysterious visitors, elliptical conversations, and repetitions. At its end, the young company man antihero, who has changed jobs and residence every two years, disappears again. In a stunningly theatrical finale, the movers disassemble his room (the stage set) panel by panel, leaving a retired museum guard from the prewar generation alone on the bare stage, silent in an antique rocking chair.

Yamazaki demonstrates broad knowledge of both Western and Japanese history and literature. The musical We Saw Rome (Roma o Mita, 1989) follows the triumph and terror of the four young imperial envoys accompanying an Italian missionary to visit the pope in 1590, only to discover on their return to Japan that Christianity has been banned. The tensions between the great self-made shogun and his tea master are revealed in Keeping a Lion: Rikyū and Hideyoshi (Shishi o Kau, Rikyū to Hideoyoshi, 1992). Modernity is viewed through the lens of the pioneering career of Life photographer Margaret Bourke-White in 20th Century (Nijū Seiki, 2000).

Yamazaki's works are stimulating expressions of the postwar theater's continuing redefinition of individual freedom and responsibility as traditional values confront the pressures of modern institutions. His plays fuse Japanese sensitivity to the transience of material objects with a practical application of Western play craftsmanship.

[See also Absurdism; Japan]

SELECT PLAYS: Castle of Cards (Karta no Shirō, 1962); Zeami (1963); Ambition and Summer Grass (Yabō to Natsugusa, 1970); Sanemoto Sets Sail (Sanemoto Shuppan, 1973); This Boat Is a Sailboat (Fune wa Hansen yo, 1973); We Saw Rome (Roma o Mita [musical], 1989); Zeami ([musical] 1990); Keeping a Lion: Rikyū and Hideyoshi (Shishi o Kau, Rikyū to Hideoyoshi, 1992); 20th Century (Nijū Seiki, 2000)

FURTHER READING

- Yamazaki Masakazu. This Boat Is a Sailboat. Tr. by Ted Takaya. In Modern Japanese Drama: An Anthology, ed. and tr. by Ted Takaya. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1979. 137–202.
- . Zeami and Sanemoto. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer. In Mask and Sword: Two Plays for the Contemporary Japanese Theater, ed. by J. Thomas Rimer. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1980. 1–93; 98–181.
- . "The Aesthetics of Transformation: Zeami's Dramatic Theories." Tr. by Susan Matisoff. Journal of Japanese Studies 7 (Summer 1981): 215–358.
- . Chōsakushū [Collected plays]. 12 vols. Tokyo: Chūō Kōronsha, 1982.
- . Individualism and the Japanese: An Alternative Approach to Cultural Comparison. Tr. by Barbara Sugihara. Tokyo: Japan Echo, 2001.
- Zeami Motokiyo. On the Art of Nō Drama: The Major Treatises of Zeami. Tr. by J. Thomas Rimer and Masakazu Yamazaki. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Univ. Press, 1984.

Jonah Salz

YANG LANCHUN (1921–)

Born in Wu'an, Hebei Province, in 1921, Yang Lanchun joined the Eighth Route Army in 1943, where he was engaged in educational activities through theatrical performances till 1948. After his demobilization from the army, he worked as head of the performing troupe (wengongtuan) of the Luoyang City, then as head of the Luoyang District of Henan Province. From 1950 to 1953, he studied in the Song and Dance Department of the Central Academy of Drama in Beijing. Then he was appointed the associate leader and director of the Henan Folk Opera Troupe (Henan Geju Tuan). In 1956 he was reassigned to the Henan Yuju Opera Troupe (Henan Yuju Yuan) as the leader of its third performance division (Henan Yuju Yuan San Tuan). Since then he has been professionally adapting and writing plays for yuju, one of the leading and most influential regional traditional theaters in CHINA. His troupe has been nationally influential as well. His reputation arose nationally when his yuju play Chao Yang Village (Chao Yang Gou) achieved huge success in 1958.

Chao Yang Village is a play in the traditional theatrical form but with a modern theme—belonging to a theatrical category termed in Chinese xiqu xiandaixi (xiqu plays of modern or contemporary themes). The genre was started in the 1950s when there was a national call for theatrical reforms on xiqu (traditional theater). The underlying reason for this reform was that the time had changed and the more than 300 forms of traditional theater should also depict the life and events of the contemporary people and society. Throughout the late 1950s and early 1960s, plays of modern and contemporary themes were one of the three major directions for xiqu playwriting and performances. Chao Yang Village has remained a classic in this direction, and its arias have been popularized through its later performances and the film it was made into in 1963.

It tells the story of Yinhuan, an educated city girl, following Shuanbao, her classmate and boyfriend, to Shuanbao's home village Chao Yang Gou (literally, Sun-facing Valley). Unaccustomed to the simple life and hard labor in the countryside, and pressured by her mother who looks down upon agricultural work, Yinhuan returns to her city temporarily. She later finds that her mother has pretended to be sick in order to lure her back to the city. At the same time, she is moved by Shuanbao and his villagers' boundless concern for her. She goes back to settle down in the countryside with Shuanbao as the first generation of peasants who have received education. The play develops through a series of tortuous but rewarding life experiences to reflect new images of educated youths in a vast agricultural field where they can also put their knowledge and strength to good use. The play was successfully revived after the Cultural Revolution. In 1982, Yang wrote its sequel, titled Inside Story of Chao Yang Village (Chao Yang Gou neizhuan).

Like Chao Yang Village, most of Yang Lanchun's plays focus on modern and contemporary themes, staged by his third division of the Henan Yuju Troupe. His major contribution as a playwright and director has been his successful advocacy and support of the modern plays of the xiqu form. Although his plays have been mainly of the yuju type, some of his plays have been adapted into other regional theaters as well, such as Beijing Opera, pingju, lüju, and meihu. The spirit and experience of his focus on modern plays have exerted significant influence on the whole movement of theater reform. He has served as vice chairman of the Association of Chinese Dramatists.

SELECT PLAYS: Xiao Erhei's Marriage (Xiao Erhei jiehun, geju, 1952; yuju, 1953); Chao Yang Village (Chao Yang Gou, yuju, 1958); Spring Comes as Winter Goes (Dong qu chun lai, yuju, 1959); Li Shuangshuang (yuju, 1963); Apricot Flower Camp (Xinghua ying, yuju, 1965); Inside Story of Chao Yang Village (Chao Yang Gou neizhuan, yuju, 1982); Inside and Outside the Family (Jia li jia wai, yuju, 1990)

FURTHER READING

Niu Qingpo. "Yang Lanchun xiandaixi chuanguozuo qiantan" [Preliminary remarks on Yang Lanchun's creation of modern plays]. Henan xiju (Henan Drama) 12 (1984).

Wang Hongyu et al., eds. Yang Lanchun bian dao yishu lun [On the aesthetics of Yang Lanchun's playwriting and directing]. Beijing: Zhongguo xiju chubanshe, 1993.

Yang Lanchun. Chao Yang Gou [Chao Yang Village]. Juben (Play Scripts) 7 (1958).

Cai Xingshui and Wenwei Du

YANKOWITZ, SUSAN (1941–)

Playwright, screenwriter, and novelist Susan Yankowitz was born on February 20, 1941, in Newark, New Jersey. She earned her bachelor's degree from Sarah Lawrence College in 1963 and went on to earn her master's of fine arts degree in playwriting from the Yale School of Drama in 1968. Her first play, The Cage, was produced at Omar Khayyam Café in New York in 1965. Nightmare was produced at Yale in 1967, followed by Old Rock-a-Bye at Cooper Square Arts Theatre in 1968. Yankowitz's career as a writer thus began in the Yale–New York corridor of the mid-1960s, a time when the methods of the theatrical AVANT-GARDE included collaboration, political engagement, formal innovation, and risk taking.

Yankowitz began collaborating with the Open Theatre, directed by Joseph Chaikin, shortly after leaving Yale. Her abilities as a DRAMATURG and synthesizer of collaboratively generated material led to one of her best-known early works, Terminal (1969), with the Open Theatre. Yankowitz also was a founder and vigorous collaborator with other theater groups during this period: the Playwrights' Cooperative; the Cubiculo Theatre (where she wrote The Ha-Ha Play in 1970); Joseph Papp and the New York Shakespeare Festival, which produced her Slaughterhouse Play (1971); and the Westbeth Playwrights' Feminist Collective, where she wrote the one-act Positions (1972) and contributed to The Wicked Women Revue (1975). Yankowitz also gained recognition outside New York in this period with, for example, The Lamb (1973), at the Academy Theatre, Atlanta; American Piece (1974), for the Provisional Theatre in Los Angeles; and Qui est Anna Marks? (1979), at Théâtre l'Est Parisien in Paris.

FEMINIST concerns, social justice, civil rights issues, and the sources and effects of violence have been consistent themes in Yankowitz's work. "As a writer, I am almost always drawn to the drama of people in extreme situations, people pushed by fate or accident or character to the edge of some abyss, personal or political," Yankowitz explained in her introduction to Night Sky (1992).

Yankowitz's plays have had a significant production history in New York and throughout the UNITED STATES, and many of her dramas have been published and translated. Her play about a mass murderer, A Knife in the Heart, premiered at the EUGENE O'NEILL Theatre Center in 1982, was produced at Williamstown Theater Festival the following year, and was revived by Sledgehammer Theatre in San Diego in 2002. Baby opened at the Barrymore Theater in New York in 1983. The British company MONSTROUS REGIMENT commissioned her to write Alarms, a romp about Greek deities, fairy tales, and sexism, in 1986. Night Sky, about a woman astronomer who develops aphasia, was produced at Women's Project and Productions (1992). Yankowitz joined the 1996 reunion of Open Theatre members for a reconsideration of Terminal, writing 1969 Terminal 1996, which premiered at Seven Stages Theatre in Atlanta. Phaedra in Delirium was co-produced by the Women's Project and Classic Stage Company in 1998 and again at Sledgehammer in 2003. Cheri, a musical with composer Michael Dellaira, premiered at Actors' Studio in New York in June 2003. Yankowitz has received National Endowment for the Arts, Guggenheim, and Rockefeller Foundation grants and awards and is a member of PEN and New Dramatists.

SELECT PLAYS: The Cage (1965); Nightmare (1967); Old Rock-a-Bye (1968); Rats' Alley (1969); Terminal (1969); The Ha-Ha Play (1970); Slaughterhouse Play (1971); Boxes (1972); Positions (1972); The Lamb (1973); Wooden Nickels (1973); American Piece (1974); Portrait of a Scientist as a Dumb Broad (1974); Still Life (1977); True Romances (1978); Qui est Anna Marks? (1979); A Knife in the Heart (1982); Who Done It? (1982); Baby (1983); Alarms (1986); Night Sky (1992); 1969 Terminal 1996 (1996); Slain in the Spirit: The Promise of Jim Jones (music by Taj Mahal, 1996); Phaedra in Delirium (1998); Cheri (music by Michael Dellaira, 2003)

FURTHER READING

Betsko, Kathleen, and R. Koenig, eds. Interviews with Contemporary Women Playwrights. New York: Beech Tree Bks., 1987.
 Partnow, Elaine. The Female Dramatist. New York: Facts on File, 1998.
 Sainer, Arthur. The Radical Theatre Notebook. New York: Avon Bks., 1975.

Beth Cleary

YAO YI-WEI (1922–1997)

Yao Yi-wei was born in Mainland CHINA. He received his bachelor's degree from the University of Xiamen in Mainland China in 1946. After graduation, he went to Taiwan. While working at the Bank of Taiwan, Yao devoted himself to drama education, playwriting, and theater activities.

In Taiwan, the beginning of the dynamic contemporary huaju theater can be traced back to huaju reform, which started in the 1960s and promoted pursuit of the arts rather than promotion of an anticommunist ideology. As a leading member of the Committee of Chinese Spoken Drama Appreciation, Yao held the five-year Experimental Drama Festival from 1980 to 1984, which made the LITTLE THEATER MOVEMENT successful in the 1980s and helped modernize Taiwan theater. In 1982, retired from the bank, he helped found the National Institute of the Arts (renamed as Taipei National University of the Arts in 2001), where he established the Department of Theatre. He inspired and educated numerous talents and was called "the mentor of our time" (yidai daoshi).

Yao Yi-wei expanded the repertoire of locally written plays and took a more creative direction for spoken drama. He wrote fourteen plays and directed two productions—Red Nose (Hong bizi, co-directed with Chen Ling-ling, 1989) and Re-Start (Chongxin kaishi, 1995). His works deal with such themes as the existence of human beings, moral integrity, personal freedom, and the pursuit of artistic perfection.

Yao Yi-wei's Red Nose, the first stage play produced by a professional troupe, became a classic among local plays. After its 1970 debut by amateurs, the play was staged by professionals in Beijing in 1982 and JAPAN in 1987. In 1988, it was the first stage production produced by the new National Theater in Taipei. In Red Nose, Yao explored the issues of human nature, good deeds, pretense and truth, power and virtue, through the protagonist, who is playing a clown in a troupe. The clown, Red Nose, performs in the hotel with his circus team members in order to have shelter and food. Red Nose, who always wears a mask, not only brings laughter to the guests in the hotel but also takes care of his teamworkers as a spiritual supporter. His existence is symbolized as a Nobody, and yet he brings happiness to people in the world. It is only in the end that we (the troupe members, the hotel guests in the play, and the readers and spectators) find out that underneath the funny mask the person who plays the outgoing clown is in fact a shy white-collar bourgeois worker who has fled his previous life. He had disappeared for several years. At the play's climax, his wife, who has been looking for him, takes off his mask. Hidden in a small troupe, beneath the grotesque makeup, costume, ridiculous jokes, songs, and dance, the confident clown performer is actually her missing shy husband who was not happy with his former life. Yao's Red Nose gets at the core of human nature and discusses the essence of happiness and accomplishments.

Yao Yi-wei pointed out: "A great artist not only belongs to the people in his/her time, but also belongs to . . . mankind [a] thousand years later. [S]he not only belongs to a narrow area, but also belongs to the human beings in broad sense. Thus, [s]he must be the artist of the whole human beings." (Yao Yi-wei, 1968). Yao is also accomplished in aesthetic theories; literary, dramatic, and artistic criticism; and essays. Since the 1950s, Yao had participated in editing several important literary journals, such as Literature Review and Modern Literature. He is regarded by the literature world as "the person holding the light lamp at dark night."

PLAYS: From Phoenix Town (Laizi fenghuangzhen de ren, 1963); Sun Feihu Robs the Bride (Sun Feihu qiang qin, 1965); The Emerald Bodhisattva (Nian yu Guanyin, 1967); Red Nose (Hong bizi, 1969); The Crown Prince Shen-Sheng (Shen sheng, 1971); A Suitcase (Yi kou xiangzi, 1973); Fu Qingzhu (1978); Let's Go and See Together (Women yitong zouzou kan, 1979); Zuo Botao (1980); Visitor (Fang ke, 1984); The Legend of the Tree

God (Da shu shen chuanqi, 1985); The Courier Station of Ma Wei (Ma Wei Yi, 1987); Miss X (X xiaojie, 1991); Re-start (Chongxin kaishi, 1993)

FURTHER READING

- Hwang Mei-shu. "Yao Yi-wei: A Modern Chinese Playwright." Tamkang Review 9, no. 2 (Winter 1978): 159–198.
- Tian Benxiang. "Yao Yi-wei lun" [On Yao Yi-wei]. Xiju yishu (Theatre Art) 6 (2000): 81–87.
- Yao Yi-wei. The Secret of Art. Taipei: Kai Ming, 1968.
- . The Chest. Tr. of Yi kou xiangzi by Mei-shu Hwang. Tamkang Review 9, no. 2 (Winter 1978): 199–232.
- . Hong bizi [Red Nose]. Tr. by Ying-chu Yeh. Master's thesis, Iowa State Univ., 1981.

Iris Hsin-chun Tuan

YEATS, W. B. (1865–1946)

What attracts me to drama is that it is, in the most obvious way, what all the arts are upon analysis. A farce and a tragedy are alike in this, that they are a moment of intense life. An action is taken out of all other actions; it is reduced to its simplest form. . . . The characters that are involved in it are freed from everything that is not a part of that action . . . it is an energy, an eddy of life, purified of everything but itself. The dramatist must picture life in acting . . . as the musician pictures it in sound and the sculptor in form.

—W. B. Yeats, 1904

William Butler (W. B.) Yeats, poet and playwright, was born on June 13, 1865, in Sandymount, County, Dublin, IRELAND, the eldest of four children of John Butler (J. B.) Yeats and Susan Pollexfen Yeats. His mother sank into decline as J. B. Yeats gave up the practice of law to become a painter and, going deeper with each year into debt, took his family to London, where W. B. Yeats went to school; his happiest days were summers in Sligo, where his mother's father and brothers were important figures in commerce and shipping. During the 1880s, Yeats entered art school in Dublin, but his real gift rapidly showed itself to be literary. By the 1890s, his mother was dead by a stroke, and his father was unable to support the family; Yeats had to make a living by his pen.

After meeting the beautiful insurrectionary Maud Gonne, in January 1889, Yeats began his first verse play, The Countess Kathleen (1892). Its central character is a wealthy Irish landowner who gives her wealth away and finally sells her soul to save a starving peasantry. Yeats's subsequent plays also drew upon his own life experience, symbolically transfigured. His first play to be staged was The Land of Heart's Desire at the Avenue Theatre, London, in 1894. Set in a peasant's cabin, in County Sligo, and based on folklore about Irish faeries, The Land of Heart's Desire became a model for other playwrights of the Irish Literary Revival.

While his reputation as a poet grew, Yeats longed to give himself and Ireland a forum for literary expression on an Irish stage. In 1897, Yeats, Edward Martyn, LADY GREGORY, and George Moore began to establish the Irish Literary Theatre (1899–1901). Yeats's The Countess Kathleen was produced during its first season, May 1899. It was condemned for its unorthodox presentation of Catholic beliefs and its favorable picture of an Irish landlord. In April 1902, CATHLEEN NI HOULIHAN, a one-act folkplay in prose, with Maud Gonne in the title role, and co-authored by Lady Gregory, was a great success. It was obvious propaganda for physical-force resistance to British rule in Ireland, and Yeats wrote no other plays quite like it.

In the summer of 1902, Yeats was elected president of the Irish National Theatre Society, a position he held until his last years. Yeats's aim as leader of the theater was not to propagandize for Irish Home Rule but to create an aesthetic and Irish alternative to HENRIK IBSEN'S REALISM and to London's drawing-room romances and COMEDIES. Yeats's ideals for theater were antimodern, antirealistic, and anti-middle class; he was in favor of a total theater, involving music, painting, poetry, and dancelike movement. On behalf of these aims, he engaged the support of an English heiress, Annie Horniman, who bought the Abbey Theatre for the Irish National Theatre Society and subsidized its actors. Yeats tried many innovative experiments at the Abbey, with nonrealistic lighting, sets, and costume designs by English artists such as Charles Ricketts and Gordon Craig, musical accompaniment by a stringed instrument called a psaltery, and various methods of producing dramatic verse. The chief successes of the theater by 1910, however, were its realistic plays by LENNOX ROBINSON and T. C. Murray.

In 1916, Yeats received new inspiration for playwriting from the nō plays of JAPAN, which combine poetic texts with masked actors, a chorus, dance, music, simple props, and no scenery. That nō performances were ceremonies for initiates also pleased Yeats, who was weary of failures to write down to the popular taste. The first performance of AT THE HAWK'S WELL (1916) was in the drawing room of a London mansion. The play resembles the concerns of his poetry and early dramatic work in that it gives a picture of the heroic life with great intensity, draws upon Irish myths, and foregrounds the speaking of beautiful verse, but the AVANT-GARDE adaptation of the Japanese form managed to escape the pseudo-Shakespearianism of Yeats's early work. Most of Yeats's later dramatic work follows from this formal experiment.

Two thematic elements of the nō plays that attracted Yeats—always interested in the occult and otherworldly beliefs—were the representation of ghosts who appear onstage to tell of the passions of their past lives and of demons who must be exorcised. Yeats's The Only Jealousy of Emer (1919) had both these elements: the appearance of the Ghost of Cuchulain, after he had died fighting the sea, and his possession by the demon Bricriu, who must be exorcised by Cuchulain's wife Emer. Because the play is so deeply involved with Yeats's conflicts over his recent marriage to George Hyde-Lees, and his forsaking of Maud Gonne, the action is not easy to comprehend, but it is one of the most intensely beautiful of his theater pieces.

In November 1923 Yeats won the Nobel Prize; his speech of acceptance gave credit to "The Irish Dramatic Movement" as a whole. Yeats's contribution to the cultural movement in Ireland was also recognized by his election to the Senate of the Irish Free State (1923–1928). In February 1926, when the Abbey audience disrupted a performance of SEAN O'CASEY'S THE PLOUGH AND THE STARS (felt to be an offense to those who died in the 1916 rebellion), Senator Yeats came before the curtain to denounce with great magnificence the disgraceful treatment of a work of art; the protestors were simply rocking "the cradle of genius," a phrase that became an epithet for the Abbey Theatre.

In May 1928 Yeats rejected for performance O'Casey's THE SILVER TASSIE, leading to a prolonged withdrawal by the Abbey Theatre's finest playwright. Yeats had little understanding of, and no sympathy for, EXPRESSIONISM, a style in which part of O'Casey's play was written. The same dislike caused Yeats to reject Denis Johnston's expressionist The Old Lady Says "No!" in 1928. Yet the poet had not become a theatrical traditionalist; he was simply interested in other kinds of experiment. In 1929, for instance, he rewrote The Only Jealousy of Emer as a ballet for Ninette de Valois, with avant-garde music scored by Ezra Pound's friend George Antheil.

Three of Yeats's most successful theater pieces were written in the 1930s, a period when he kept abreast of experiments in the writing of verse drama by W. H. AUDEN and T. S. ELIOT. The first of these successes—The Words Upon the Windowpane (1934)—was based on a modern séance (many of Yeats's plays are virtual séances themselves) in which the turbulent ghost of Jonathan Swift takes possession of the medium, an old woman named Mrs. Henderson. Swift is followed by the ghosts of his two lovers, Stella and Vanessa. The whole agonized drama of Swift's romantic, political, and medical life is then played out through Mrs. Henderson in front of guests who had hoped to contact departed friends and relatives. The drama manages to be spine-tingling and historically fascinating at once.

The second theatrical triumph of the poet in the 1930s was PURGATORY (1938), a horrifying one-act ghost play in which an old man tries by means of murder of his own son to free his mother from suffering in the next life. Its form is a very free adaptation from the nō tradition: centering on a remorseful ghost, but played without masks, the ritual unfolding of a curtain, attendant musicians, or a chorus. At the play's end, Yeats faced an Abbey audience for the last time, and after storms of applause (unusual in his experience), he said he had put into the play "my own beliefs about this world and the next." The Death of Cuchulain (1939) was being written right up to the death of Yeats. The fifth play about the Irish hero with whom the poet had come to identify, it depicts Cuchulain with mistress, wife, muse, and the goddess of war, all of whom confront him at death's door. In the end, a blind man beheads the hero, bound and wounded, for a few pennies' reward. The dying man sees his soul take the shape of a bird, and Emer comes on to dance with his severed head. The play is weird, grand, brutal, and highly personal.

Yeats created a forum for the first subsidized national theater in the English-speaking world. He managed its affairs so that the Abbey became known worldwide for the quality of its dramatic writing and its focus on storytelling. Few playwrights had either the desire or ability to follow Yeats in the lyric and tragic qualities of his own plays, nor did those works—because of their strangeness, intensity, and limited plots—attract popular audiences. Playgoers continued to prefer what Yeats hated: realistic representations of modern life in conversational prose. Still, Yeats's verse plays are the best in English in the past two centuries. He influenced the dramatic work of T. S. Eliot, SAMUEL BECKETT, THOMAS KILROY, and others. His work presents one of the few alternatives to the central realist tradition of the modern stage. Yeats died January 28, 1939, at Cap Martin, Riviera, FRANCE.

SELECT PLAYS: The Countess Kathleen (1892); The Land of Heart's Desire (1894); Cathleen ni Houlihan (with Lady Gregory, 1902); The Pot of Broth (with Lady Gregory, 1902); The King's Threshold (1903); On Baile's Strand (1904); Deirdre (1906); At the Hawk's Well (1916); The Dreaming of the Bones (1919); The Only Jealousy of Emer (1919); Calvary (1920); The Cat and the Moon (1926); Sophocles' King Oedipus (1928); The Resurrection (1931); The Words Upon the Windowpane (1934); Purgatory (1938); The Death of Cuchulain (1939)

FURTHER READING

- Cave, Richard Allen. "Yeats's Late Plays: 'A High Grave Dignity and Strangeness.'" Proceedings of the British Academy 68 (1982): 299–327.
- Foster, R. F. W. B. Yeats, a Life: The Apprentice Mage, 1865–1914. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 1997.
- . W. B. Yeats, a Life: The Arch-poet, 1915–1939. Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 2003.
- Ure, Peter. Yeats the Playwright: A Commentary on Character and Design in the Major Plays. New York: Barnes & Noble, 1963.

Adrian Frazier

YERMA

Yerma, written in 1934, is the second rural TRAGEDY by FEDERICO GARCÍA LORCA. It centers on the life of Yerma, a rural middle-class woman, and her strong desire to beget a son. Yerma and her husband do not have sexual relations. But she seems to feel strongly attracted to Víctor, a shepherd working for her husband. As her desperation to have a baby grows deeper, Yerma ends up consulting a rural fortune teller who suggests that she go to a fertility pilgrimage. The husband finds her at the pilgrimage, and they engage in an argument where he tells her that, in spite of their inability to have a baby, he wants to have sex with her. He tries to kiss her, but she strangles him, after which she claims that she has just killed her son.

Birth in Yerma is represented on a sacred level, as Lorca establishes a clear relationship between the birth that Yerma aspires to and the Virgin Mary's childbirth. In fact, during the pilgrimage, Yerma and a chorus of six women say a prayer that contains direct allusions to the biblical scene of Annunciation, where the Archangel Gabriel announces the birth of Jesus to the Virgin Mary. However, unlike the original referent, the Archangel in Yerma has "las alas como tormentas" (the wings as storms) and "los ojos como agonías" (the eyes as agonies). Thus, God's messenger is represented as death's messenger announcing Yerma's destiny, that is, the killing of her husband, who she claims to be her own son. In some symbolic sense, then, Lorca is showing a Virgin Mary who kills her divine baby—or more profoundly, who kills the possibility of giving birth to him.

As in his previous play BLOOD WEDDING (1932), the topic of incest is also present in Yerma. Here it can be traced to the attraction that Yerma feels for Víctor, the shepherd. At the beginning of the play, Yerma dreams about a shepherd who is holding the hand of a child—the child she desires. Later in the play, we find out that Yerma is the daughter of Enrique "the shepherd." Therefore, in the dream (subconscious) of Yerma the figure of the shepherd is a fusion of the image of the father, of the man she feels attracted to, and the son she desires. And like the Mother and the Groom in Lorca's first tragedy, Yerma is also identified with the earth and does not maintain sexual relations with her husband or with the man she feels attracted to.

Considering the confusion Yerma herself creates when she says she has killed her son—when she has actually killed her husband—we can interpret her words as meaning that by killing her husband she really has killed her son. Thus, like in Blood Wedding, Yerma's sexual repression symbolically represents the prevention of incest. This shows how Lorca's women always prevent the completion of those rites that require or imply sexual consummation (weddings and childbirth). As Beth Wellington says in Reflections on Lorca's Private Mythology (1993), Lorca's rites are aborted rituals.

[See also Spain; Symbolism]

FURTHER READING

- Feal, Carlos. La idea del honor en las tragedias de Lorca. Lanham, Md.: Univ. Press of America, 1988.
- Fusco, Antonio, and Rosella Tomassoni. "A Psychological Outline of 'Yerma's Dream.'" CLCWeb: Comparative Literature and Culture 3, no. 3 (2001): 10.
- Knapp, Bettina. "García Lorca's Yerma: A Woman's Mystery." In Lorca's Legacy. Essays on Lorca's Life, Poetry, and Theatre, ed. by Manule Durán and Franchesca Collechchia. New York: Peter Lang, 1993.

Lima, Robert. "Towards the Dionysiac: Pagan Elements and Rites in Yerma." In Lorca's Legacy. Essays on Lorca's Life, Poetry, and Theatre, ed. by Manule Durán and Franchesca Collechchia. New York: P. Lang, 1991.

Wellington, Beth. Reflections on Lorca's Private Mythology: Once Five Years Pass and the Rural Plays. New York: P. Lang, 1993.

Maribel Parra-Domínguez

YIDDISH THEATER

In the popular imagination, the modern Yiddish theater emerged full blown in 1876, when AVROM GOLDFADEN organized a small troupe in ROMANIA. In fact, Yiddish theater had already been centuries in the making—though mostly in an amateur capacity—and Goldfaden's dramas, like those of his contemporaries and successors, drew upon both Jewish and non-Jewish textual, musical, and performance traditions. These activities gave birth to one of the most popular cultural institutions in modern Jewish life; though its roots were Eastern European, its branches would span six continents.

PRECURSORS

Theatrical performances in Yiddish (a Germanic language written in Hebrew characters, with added linguistic components from Slavic and other languages) date back to the Middle Ages.

PURIMSHPIIL

Jewish law prohibited women from performing in public and men from dressing in women's clothes, thus limiting the types of performances acceptable within the Jewish community—at least during most of the year. The exception was on Purim, a festive late-winter holiday celebrating the victory of Jews over deadly enemies in ancient Persia described in the Book of Esther; so light is the communal mood on Purim that Jews are encouraged to drink until they can no longer distinguish the hero of the Esther story from its villain. It was in this context that the PURIMSHPIIL (plural: purimshpiln), or Purim play, was born.

Extant manuscripts of Yiddish poems about the Purim story date back to the 15th century, and printed versions as early as the 16th. The subject matter of the purimshpil was often, though by no means always, the Purim story itself. Other popular subjects included the sale of Joseph into slavery, the binding of Isaac, David, and Goliath, and Samson and Delilah. Some Purim plays also addressed contemporary issues and featured contemporary character types, but regardless of the subject matter, the performances exuded a spirit of irreverence befitting the holiday. The humor of these plays relied heavily on scatological and sexual jokes and puns, which not infrequently drew the wrath of religious and communal authorities.

The form of the purimshpil resembles the German Fastnachtspiel in many ways, including not only the aforementioned profanity and eroticism but the central role of a narrator (here known as the loyfer, shrayber, or payats). The traditional purimshpil was performed entirely by men and boys—often students from the yeshivas (religious seminaries). Since most performances took place in the homes of wealthy families, the plays needed to be short so that companies could make their rounds. Masks and primitive costumes were the norm, and extant early texts do not tend to indicate changes of costume or scenery. Beginning in the 16th century, purimshpiln gradually became more elaborate, and in some places, they expanded beyond the one-day festival itself, with performances being offered for up to two weeks on either side of the holiday. By the early 18th century, purimshpiln reflected many trends in the contemporary European theater in literary style, subject matter, and scene design. Nevertheless, the plays maintained a connection with Purim and were performed during the appropriate season.

THE JEWISH ENLIGHTENMENT

It would take a sea change in religious practice to allow theatrical performances to find a more regular place in Jewish life. Such a change came in the late 18th century in the form of the Haskala, or Jewish Enlightenment. The movement's proponents (maskilim) urged fellow Jews to become less insular, to integrate more fully into European society (at least to the extent that the law and their non-Jewish neighbors allowed), and reap the fruits of secular thought in politics, philosophy, science, and the arts. While the movement initially met with fierce resistance from religious Jews, it would ultimately pave the way toward new forms of religious expression and a new orientation toward the non-Jewish world.

While no professional Jewish theater as yet existed, a number of maskilim took a strong interest in drama. Among them were two of the leading figures in Jewish Enlightenment circles in Berlin. The literary reputations of both Aaron Halle-Wolfssohn and Isaac Euchel rest in large part on works they wrote in Hebrew, and in genres other than drama, but each penned important Yiddish dramatic satires in the 1790s: Euchel's Reb Henokh, or What Can Be Done With It? (Reb Henokh, oder vos tut men damit?, c. 1792) and Wolfssohn's Frivolity and False Piety (Leichtsinn und Frömmelei, c. 1794). In subsequent decades, a number of other maskilim would write dramas—almost always COMEDIES. Among the most important were Solomon Ettinger's Serkele (Serkele, 1838); Avrom Ber Gottlob's The Bridal Veil, or Two Weddings in One Night (Der dektukh, oder tsvey khupes in eyn nakht, 1839); several comedies and MELODRAMAS by Israel Aksenfeld written in the 1830s and 1840s, including The First Jewish Recruit in Russia (Der ershter yidisher rekrut in rusland); the anonymous satire The Duped World (Di genarte velt); and S. Y. Abramovitsh's The Tax (Di takse, 1869).

BRODER SINGERS

The 1850s also saw the rise of a type of Yiddish performer who would directly influence later, more structured theatrical activity. The performers in question were called Broder Singers, after the Galician city of Brody, where the reputed "father" of the form, Berl Broder, had been active. Like the purimshpil, the performances of the Broder Singers became more elaborate over time. Initially, songs telling a story—often based on familiar character types and situations from everyday Jewish life—were accompanied by facial expressions and gestures. From there it was a short step to embedding the songs into theatrical situations with a couple of performers, quick changes of costume to suit the characters described in the lyrics, and the crudeness of makeup.

As the Broder Singers' fame grew, so did their geographical reach. They spread throughout Galicia and Romania, and from there into RUSSIA. The most renowned of these figures, including Berl Broder and Velvl Zbarzher, would significantly influence the beginnings of professional Yiddish theater and develop close ties to writers like Goldfaden, Yisroel Yitskhok Linetski, and Eliakum Zunser, whose songs and sketches they performed.

THE BIRTH OF THE PROFESSIONAL YIDDISH THEATER

Though Yiddish companies managed to perform in places like Warsaw (in the 1830s and 1860s) during seasons completely unconnected to Purim, such efforts met with stiff resistance from Jewish community leaders and left no direct legacy. Avrom Goldfaden, on the other hand, would earn the title of "Father of the Yiddish Theater" by forming the first relatively stable professional Yiddish troupe and proceeding to write its plays and compose its music.

THE FATHER OF THE YIDDISH THEATER

Goldfaden's background prepared him in many ways for the task. He claimed to have begun composing songs as a young boy and was a published poet and dramatist by the time he completed his rabbinical studies in the 1860s. His first full-length play, Aunt Sosya (Di mume Sosya), bore the clear influence of Solomon Ettinger's comic melodrama Serkele—not entirely surprising, since Goldfaden had played the title role in a production staged at his seminary in Zhitomir in 1862. And one of Goldfaden's early teachers was none other than the noted satirical writer and dramatist Avrom Ber Gottlob.

After trying his hand at several different careers, Goldfaden assembled his first company (whose star performer, Yisroel Grodner, was a seasoned Broder Singer) in Jassy, Romania, in 1876. Over the next several years, the playwright would turn out a stream of vaudevilles, burlesques, and full-length comedies, including highly popular (and often controversial) works like Shmendrik, The Two Kuni-Lemls (Di tsvey Kuni-lemle), and The Sorceress (Di kishfemakerin). Within the first year of its existence, Goldfaden's company hired its actress, and two rival troupes were formed, one led by Joseph Lateiner and the other by Moyshe Hurwitz. These two men would become Goldfaden's lifelong rivals. Though critics would always favor Goldfaden, Hurwitz and Lateiner would become as popular as they were prolific, each with an enormous number of musicals and melodramas to his credit. In addition to this trio, other playwrights who would contribute to the foundation of the professional repertoire were Nokhem-Meyer ("Shomer") Sheykevitch and Yoysef-Yude Lerner.

WESTWARD EXODUS

The next sea change in Eastern European Jewish life followed the assassination of Tsar Alexander II in 1881. An outbreak of pogroms ensued, bringing with it a decline in the economic fortunes of Russian Jewry. These events sparked an exodus out of Russia, mostly to the West, and particularly to North America. The Yiddish theater would move with the masses. To be sure, it was given a firm push by the czarist authorities, who banned Yiddish theater in 1883. Though the ban would turn out to be capricious and inconsistent, it made a difficult business all the more precarious, and many performers and playwrights headed west. Companies were created or expanded in Eastern European cities like Warsaw and Lemberg (present-day Lwów), while new centers of Yiddish theater arose further west—most notably, at first, in London's East End and New York's Lower East Side. The repertoire in the first decade of activity in these new centers included the most popular plays from Eastern Europe, as well as new works written largely in the same vein: that is, primarily melodramas, musicals, and broad comedies. New writers emerging in the 1880s included Sigmund Feinman, Israel Barski, Rudolph Marks, and Reuben Weissman.

Such playwrights often irritated the critics in inverse proportion to how they pleased audiences. Reviewers constantly lamented the "low" taste of the Yiddish audience (pejoratively nicknamed "Moyshe") and the dominance of shund (popular theater; literally, "trash") in the repertoire. For these critics, a new ray of light burst through the clouds in the early 1890s in the person of JACOB GORDIN. Gordin, a new Russian immigrant to New York with a background in utopian politics and intellectual activity, also deplored the existing repertoire but was pleasantly surprised by the sophistication of performers like Jacob P. Adler, whom he met in the months after moving to New York's Lower East Side. Gordin was persuaded to write a play for Adler, and the result was Siberia, a work with its share of melodramatic touches but far more naturalistic than anything that had previously been shown in the Yiddish theater. Gordin would be hailed in many circles as the great reformer of Yiddish drama; works such as The Jewish King Lear (Der yidisher kenig Lir), Khasye the Orphan Girl (Khasye di yesoyme), God, Man, and Devil (Got, mentsh un tayvl), Mirele Effros, and many others would become staples in the Yiddish theatrical repertoire, and their main roles became proving grounds for leading men and women as well as character actors. Like the Europeans he emulated, including HENRIK IBSEN, GERHART HAUPTMANN, and MAKSIM GORKY, Gordin often sparked controversy for his treatment of delicate social issues.

Gordin's social engagement, as well as his dramaturgical technique, drew a following not just among audiences and critics but among a new generation of playwrights. Successful dramatists and their plays in turn-of-the-20th-century New York included Leon Kobrin's Yankl Boyle, Riverside Drive, Back to His Peo- ple (Tsurik tsu zayn folk), and The Lady Next Door (Di nekst-dorike); Zalmen Libin's Hannele, or the Jewish Medea (Hanele oder di yidishe Medea) and Broken Hearts (Tsebrokhene hertser); Nokhem Rakov's The Idler (Der batlen), The Green Girl (Di grüne moyd), and Khantshe in America (Khantshe in amerike); and Isidore Zolotarevsky's The Yeshiva Boy (Der yeshive bokher), The Jewish Anna Karenina (Di yidishe Ana Karenina), and The White Slave (Di vayshe shklavin). Other popular playwrights of the time included Anshl and Moyshe Shor, Harry Sackler, and Moyshe Richter.

THE NEW YIDDISH DRAMATURGY

In New York, Gordin was often hailed as the great reformer of Yiddish drama. European critics like I. L. Peretz and Noyekh Prilutski had different standards and saw Gordin as little more than dressed-up shund.

EASTERN EUROPE

Peretz, one of the so-called classic Yiddish writers and the center of the Warsaw Yiddish literary universe in the early 1900s, turned his hand to drama among other genres, with grand symbolist works like A Night in the Old Marketplace (Baynakht afn altn mark) and The Golden Chain (Di goldene keyt) and naturalist one-act dramas like Sisters (Shvester) and It's Burning (Es brent). Fellow "classic" writer Sholem Aleichem, like Peretz better known for prose than for drama, also wrote a number of plays, including one-act comedies like People (Mentshn) and Mazl-tov and full-length comedies like Hard to Be a Jew (Shver tsu zayn a yid), The Jackpot (Dos groyse gevins), and Gold Diggers (Gold-greber). These authors had little success as dramatists in their own lifetimes, though a number of these works became successful in revivals and adaptations by such companies as the MOSCOW STATE YIDDISH THEATRE and the Yiddish Art Theatre in New York.

The greatest posthumous success—and arguably the most popular drama—in all of Yiddish theater history was S. Ansky's THE DYBBUK (Der dibek), which took Warsaw by storm when it premiered in 1920, shortly after the writer's death. Like many Yiddish writers who wrote plays, Ansky was not primarily a playwright; The Dybbuk, redolent with Eastern European Jewish folklore and superstition, grew out of a major ethnographic expedition Ansky led in the years before World War I. The play's wild success helped launch the Vilna Troupe, who staged it, to international prominence. Warsaw would also become home to other important ensembles during the interwar period, most notably Mikhl Weichert's Yung Teater and the Warsaw Yiddish Art Theatre (VYKT), run by the theatrical dynasty of the Turkow/Kaminska family. Other playwrights active in Warsaw between the world wars include Alter Kacyzne, Leib Malach, and Jacob Preger.

The formation of the Soviet Union would give rise to new theater ensembles in a number of cities, but none would attract more attention than the Moscow State Yiddish Theatre (better known by its Russian acronym, GOSET). The company revolutionized Yiddish theater with AVANT-GARDE productions of many of the Yiddish classics, including Goldfaden's The Sorceress, Peretz's A Night in the Old Marketplace, Sholem Aleichem's The Jackpot, and a dramatization of S. Y. Abramovitch's novel The Travels of Benjamin III (Masoes Binyomin hashlishi). It would also give voice to new writers, like Moyshe Kulbak (Boytre) and Dovid Bergelson (The Deaf Man [Der toyber], Prince Reuveni). Like Soviet Yiddish artists working in other genres, the company would encounter grave dangers from ideological enforcers. A number of important figures associated with GOSET, including the brilliant actors Solomon Mikhoels and Benjamin Zuskin, would meet their deaths under gruesome circumstances.

NEW YORK

As long as talented immigrants kept moving westward, New York would continue to assert itself as one of the world capitals of Yiddish theater. Almost all of the most important actors and performers in the American Yiddish theater would be foreign born, and many would start their careers in cultural centers like Warsaw and Odessa. Among the playwrights in this category were David Pinski and PERETZ HIRSCHBEIN. Both men were talented journalists and prose writers, and both generated a distinguished body of dramatic work as well. Pinski could write biting satires, like The Treasure (Der oytser), but often wrote in a darker vein, in dramas like The Eternal Jew (Der eybiker yid), The Family Tsvi (Di famillye Tsvi), and Isaac Shefit (Ayzik Shefit). He also wrote popular dramas revolving around tempestuous human passions in works like Yankl the Blacksmith (Yankl der shmid) and Gabri and the Women (Gabri un di froyen). Hirschbein experimented with various dramatic modes and registers but is best known for his idylls of village life, relying more on deftly developed characters and convincing dialogue than on plot. These include A Forsaken Nook (A farvorfn vinkl), The Idle Inn (Di puste kretshme), and Green Fields (Grine felder). Other accomplished members of this new wave of dramatists working primarily in New York were writers like Osip Dimov (Hear, O Israel [Shma yisroel]), Bronx Express, Yoshke the Musician [Yoshke muzikant]), H. Leivick (Rags [Shmates]), Shop, The Golem (Der goylem]), and Fishl Bimko (Thieves [Ganovim], Oaks [Dembes]).

Playwrights like these would enrich the Yiddish repertoire, writing their material for performance by companies that would join the pantheon of the great Yiddish troupes. Foremost among them in New York was Maurice Schwartz's Yiddish Art Theatre, which subsisted on a diet of Western and Yiddish classics, new Yiddish dramas, and—most lucratively—adaptations of Yiddish novels, like Sholem Aleichem's Tevey the Dairyman (Tevey der milkhiker) and I. J. Singer's Yoshe Kalb, dramatized by Schwartz himself. Schwartz's company was in theory an ensemble, but in practice it belonged very much to the 19th-century star system. For true ensemble acting, New York Yiddish audiences went to Artef (from the Yiddish acronym for Workers' Theatre Collective), which opened its doors in 1928 with a production of Soviet Yiddish playwright Beynush Shteyman's At the Gate (Bam toyer). The company established itself as the avant-garde answer to commercial offerings with innovative productions of such works as Yisroel Aksensfeld's Recruits (Der ershter yidisher rekrut in rusland, also known as Rekrutn) and Sholem Aleichem's 200,000 (Dos groyshe gevin).

OTHER CENTERS

The three great Yiddish cultural centers of Moscow, Warsaw, and New York had the highest concentration of Yiddish theaters, playwrights, and performers, but Yiddish speakers established theaters wherever they went, and Yiddish stars from major centers toured far and wide. In the countries with the largest Yiddish-speaking populations, numerous cities emerged as "provincial" centers: such as Minsk, Kharkov, and Kiev in the USSR; Cracow and Vienna in east-central Europe; and Philadelphia, Chicago, and Montreal in North America.

A number of other cities along the axes of Jewish migration emerged as important centers in their own right. The primary venue in Western Europe was London's East End, which spawned successful playwrights like Joseph Markovitch and Shmuel Harendorf. In the Southern Hemisphere, AUSTRALIA and SOUTH AFRICA were small satellites of activity, while Buenos Aires was Latin America's important Yiddish theatrical center. Companies were also formed in MEXICO, Uruguay, Chile, and BRAZIL, but Buenos Aires was a popular touring destination for many American and European stars and generated its own companies and writers, most notably Jacob Botoshansky and Leib Malach. In ISRAEL, Yiddish cultural activity was initially suppressed, but these restrictions were ultimately loosened, leading to a flourishing of Yiddish theater beginning in the 1960s.

From its modest beginnings in the wine gardens of Romania, the Yiddish theater rapidly spread to other regions. Jewish emigrants from Eastern Europe took the Yiddish language and its cultural traditions with them, came in contact with other theatrical cultures, and planted Yiddish theater wherever they went. Yet much of this activity was cut short just as it was maturing. The main factor was the Holocaust, which wiped out much of Eastern European Jewish culture as it decimated those who created it. Yet Yiddish theater ultimately did not fare well in more hospitable climates, either. As audiences in such places as Western Europe and the Americas acculturated, they often abandoned cultural expression in Yiddish in favor of the local vernacular. At the start of the 21st century, efforts to produce Yiddish theater in centers like New York and Tel Aviv tend to arise out of a zealous commitment to the culture rather than—as in past decades—in response to a feverish demand from large audiences of Yiddish speakers.

FURTHER READING

- Berkowitz, Joel, ed. Yiddish Theatre: New Approaches. London: Littman Library of Jewish Civilization, 2003.
- Hoberman, J. Bridge of Light: Yiddish Film Between Two Worlds. New York: Museum of Modern Art and Schocken Books, 1991.
- Nahshon, Edna. Yiddish Proletarian Theatre: The Art and Politics of the Artef, 1925–1940. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1998.
- Sandrow, Nahma. Vagabond Stars: A World History of Yiddish Theater. 1977. Syracuse: Syracuse Univ. Press, 1999.

Veidlinger, Jeffrey. The Moscow State Yiddish Theatre. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press, 2000.

Yidisher teater tsvishn beyde velt-milkhomes [Yiddish Theatre Between the Two World Wars]. 2 vols. New York: Congress for Jewish Culture, 1931–1969.

Zylbercweig, Zalmen. Leksikon fun yidishn teater. 6 vols. New York: Elisheva, 1931–1969.

Joel Berkowitz

YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU

In You Can't Take It With You, by GEORGE S. KAUFMAN and MOSS HART, the Vanderhofs are a “slightly mad family” who maintain an idiosyncratic household where all are free to pursue their whims. Grandpa lives off his investments and genially declines to pay taxes, and the rest of his family is equally unconventional. Because they mean no harm, they cannot imagine why anyone would approach them with suspicion or hostility.

In order to juxtapose the Vanderhofs with the outside world, Kaufman and Hart employ the Menandrian (a comedic form derived from the comedies of the Greek playwright Menander) formula of a young man in love, a girl with a flaw (here, her family) that makes her unmarriageable, and the opposition of a stern older man. Alice Sycamore (Grandpa Vanderhof's older granddaughter) loves Tony Kirby, her boss's son, but she feels sure that she will never win the blessing of Mr. Kirby, a Wall Street financier, and she doubts that she and Tony could find domestic bliss while living amidst the unpredictable Vanderhof clan. Nevertheless, the lovers arrange for the Kirbys to dine at the Vanderhof home, but Tony forces a spontaneous confrontation by bringing his parents on the wrong night. After the evening leads to general embarrassment and a mass arrest by the FBI, Alice resolves to leave home and never see anyone, including Tony, ever again, but the experience alters Kirby's perceptions and values so that he accepts not only Alice but the entire eccentric family. The love match unites two apparently irreconcilable points of view.

The contrast between the two families clarifies the comic potential of each. The Vanderhofs are active and free, while the Kirbys are restricted and sterile; that is, the Vanderhofs are what they do, while the Kirbys are what they do not do. Grandpa welcomes new experiences, while Mr. Kirby shies away from them, avoiding peculiar food and disapproving of unconventional behavior. The Vanderhofs include in their family a myriad of relatives, friends, and chance acquaintances, but the Kirbys remain a small, tight group that suspects outsiders. The Vanderhofs enjoy the eccentricities of such characters as Kolenkhov, the loud, Russian ballet teacher, but the Kirbys run from idiosyncrasy in confusion. The Kirbys are fettered by their preconceived notions of how people should behave, and their expectations are constantly undermined in the unpredictable Vanderhof home.

Kirby's experiences with the Vanderhofs may embarrass or humiliate him, but there is no malice intended. His night in jail leads him to a clearer understanding of himself and of his unique worth as an individual. For years, he has struggled to forget his youthful idealism and assume the trappings of convention to build up his business. Grandpa teaches him that a man can find security and a full life without the tension and indigestion of Wall Street. Kirby realizes that he has been wearing a mask, the product of values he has forced himself to accept, and that he is not really happy. He is reluctant to admit that he has always misunderstood himself, but Grandpa encourages him and finally Kirby relents.

Grandpa lives up to the American faith in individuality and freedom. He is an anachronism from America's earlier days, when backwoodsmen and pioneers created the law anew every day and kept a close, critical eye on it to see that it continued to serve them as they intended. Grandpa wants to know how he and his family will benefit before he awards his loyalty to convention, custom, or government. He is able to create the unique Vanderhof household because he is a maverick in the tradition of the American frontier, a loner who is not lonely, a man who lives his own life and revels in it.

The play opened on December 14, 1936, and won the Pulitzer Prize in 1937. In the New York Times, Brooks Atkinson hailed the play as the team's “most thoroughly ingratiating comedy, . . . a study in vertigo about a lovable family of hobby-horse riders, funny without being shrill, sensible without being earnest.” Comparing it with the “machine-gun barrage of low comedy satire” that he remembered from their ONCE IN A LIFETIME (1930), he assured his readers that “you will find their current lark a much more spontaneous piece of hilarity; it is written with a dash of affection to season the humor and played with gayety and simple good spirit.” He praised Kaufman and Hart as “fantastic humorists with a knack for extravagances of word and episode and an eye for hilarious incongruities” who may “have been more rigidly brilliant in the past, but they have never scooped up an evening of such tickling fun.”

[See also Comedy; United States, 1929–1940]

FURTHER READING

Gaines, James R. Wit's End: Days and Nights of the Algonquin Round Table. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1977.

Goldstein, Malcolm. George S. Kaufman: His Life, His Theater. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1979.

Hart, Moss. Act One. New York: Random House–Vintage, 1959.

Mason, Jeffrey D. Wisecracks: The Farces of George S. Kaufman. Ann Arbor: UMI Res. Press, 1988.

Meredith, Scott. George S. Kaufman and His Friends. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

Teichmann, Howard. George S. Kaufman: An Intimate Portrait. New York: Atheneum, 1972.

Jeffrey D. Mason

YOUNG, DAVID (1946–)

David Young was born in Oakville, Ontario, CANADA, in 1946. He developed a leg infection as a child and had to be hospitalized for eighteen months. The sense of isolation he experienced during this time strongly informs the themes of some of his most successful plays. Young studied at the University of Western Ontario. In 1981 he joined the staff of Coach House Press, where he worked as an editor and eventually became president until 1996, when that company folded. During his tenure at Coach House, he worked on various writing projects. While there he also became acquainted with novelist MICHAEL ONDAATJE and eventually worked on the screenplay for the wildly successful adaptation of Ondaatje's novel The English Patient.

Early in his playwriting career, Young collaborated with writer Paul Ledoux. Their first collaboration, Fire (1983), received great acclaim across Canada, winning a Chalmers Award and receiving a nomination for a Dora Mavor Moore Award. The two also collaborated on Love Is Strange (1984) the following year. Young often uses true stories as the bases for his plays. For example, Glenn (1992) is based on the life of the famous pianist Glenn Gould; Inexpressible Island (1997) dramatizes the story of six men who took part in Robert Scott's ill-fated 1912 expedition to the South Pole; and Love Is Strange is based on the true story of a Saskatchewan man who stalked singer Anne Murray. Several of Young's plays have been developed and premiered at the Necessary Angel Theatre Company, a company known for its productions of challenging and innovative plays.

Even though Young often uses real stories as his basis, he uses very nonrealistic styles to present his subjects. Young's most successful play, Glenn, is a fantasy profile of the life of pianist Glenn Gould. The show presents the fractured psyche of the famous pianist by having him portrayed by four performers, each representing a different time period in his life. It is written in thirty-two small sections that Young structured to match the parts of Johann Sebastian Bach's Goldberg Variations in voice, tempo, and mood. The show premiered at the Necessary Angel Theatre Company in 1992 to great acclaim. It received seven Dora Mavor Moore Award nominations, in addition to a Governor General's Award nomination and Chalmers Award nomination. The play was revived at the Stratford Festival in 1999. This production proved wildly successful as well. Young's play Clout (2001) is also written in a challenging, expressionistic style. The play actually takes place in the mind of a dying hospital patient who is on a morphine drip. As the patient drifts in and out of consciousness, disjointed scenes of reality and fantasy intersect. Young says of the work, "The overriding impression should be of story elements drifting through each other like twists of smoke." His most recent play is No Great Mischief (2004), an adaptation of Alistair MacLeod's award-winning novel. Young has had a varied writing career, having written several novels, nonfiction books, screenplays, and tele-plays. He is most well known, however, as the playwright who has written some of Canada's edgiest and most challenging plays.

SELECT PLAYS: Fire (with Paul Ledoux, 1983); Love Is Strange:

A Courtroom Romance (with Paul Ledoux, 1984); Glenn (1992);

Inexpressible Island (1997); Cavies (1999); Preschool (1999); Two Beers

For Three People (1999); Visions of Prostitutes (1999); Antarctica (2001);

Clout (2001); No Great Mischief (2004)

FURTHER READING

Connolly, Kevin. "What's Left: Playwright David Young Sorts

Through the Rubble of '60s Radicalism in His New Comedy,

Clout." Eye Weekly (February 15, 2001). http://www.eye.net/eye/issue/issue_02.15.01/arts/lead.php.

Hood, Sarah B. "Glenn, Again." Performing Arts and Entertainment in Canada 33, no. 2 (2000): 31–34.

Vicari, Ben. "Expressions of the Inexpressible." Performing Arts and Entertainment in Canada 32, no. 2 (1999): 36–37.

Young, David. Clout. Coach House Books. http://www.chbooks.com/archives/online_books/clout/. Accessed 8/26/04. [Contains the entire text of Young's play, Clout, as well as the playwright's notes and production photographs.]

Beth A. Kattelman

YUNG, DANNY N. T. (1943–)

Danny Yung (Ning-tsun) was born in 1943 in Shanghai but moved to Hong Kong with his family at the age of five. He studied architecture at the University of California, Berkeley, and urban design and urban planning at Columbia University. In 1979, he returned to Hong Kong and presented his structuralist theater work, Broken Record #1. In the following year, he produced his first performance series, Journey to the East (Zhongguo lücheng, 1980), in four parts, in Hong Kong. Its fifth part (Hong Kong-Taipei-Hong Kong) was staged in Taipei as the first production of Zuni Icosahedron, an art collective Yung founded with his friends in 1982. Since then, as a theater maker, he has coordinated, directed, and produced close to a hundred stage productions, including the One Hundred Years of Solitude (Bainian guji) series, the Chronicle of Women (Lienü zhuan) series, the Opium War (Yapian Zhanzheng) series, the Journey to the East series, the Deep Structure of Chinese Culture (Zhongguo wenhua shengceng jiegou) series, the Two or Three Things About Hong Kong (Xianggang er san shi) series, The Book of Mountain and Ocean (Shanghai jing), Four Grand Inventions (Sida faming), Sigmund Freud in Search of Chinese Matter and Mind (Foluoyide xunzhao zhongguo qing yu shi), and In Search of Modern China (Xunzhao xin Zhongguo).

In the provocative exploration of subjects such as history, gender, and cultural IDENTITY, politics, and ideology in the Zuni productions, Yung relies heavily on the orchestration of visual images, sound, movement, and the use of various media. In Sigmund Freud, a traditional Chinese theater female player in the male role is placed on one end of the stage in full costume, singing and enacting movements from a scene in Peony Pavilion (Mudan ting). She/he is then joined by a male player in his ordinary modern clothing on the other end of the stage, ACTING out the counterpart female character. The two players are aware of, but not interacting with, each other. Ample space is put between the lovers who are supposed to act intimately. This space is a visualization of the temporal distance of modern and traditional forms. The gender relationship between the players and the characters is destabilized. Then the players' singing is treated and given digitalized effects. Video clips are projected on the stage. This accentuates the discrepancy between the traditional and the modern. The scene concludes with an anarchic explosion of sounds and visual images of curves and shapes projected from digital video. The strong images are the main vocabulary of expression. This approach, puzzling to the more conservative theatergoers, is found to be challenging and attractive to a generation of young theater workers. This displacement of emphasis on language, together with the innovative perspective and critique in the content, makes the productions more accessible to non-Chinese audiences.

With the accentuation of cross-cultural elements, Yung's works are well received outside Hong Kong. Performance tours of his work with Zuni have visited Beijing, Brussels, London, Edinburgh, Munich, New York City, Los Angeles, Singapore, Taipei, Tokyo, and many other cities. Yung organized an eleven-week Festival of Vision—a cross-cultural festival and conference series in Berlin and Hong Kong, which involved 1,000 artists and cultural practitioners from some thirty-five cities in Asia and Europe. Yung is a political activist and works with groups attempting to affect cultural policy issues in Hong Kong.

[See also China]

SELECT PLAY: Broken Record #1 (1979)

FURTHER READING

Cheung, Martha, and Jane Lai, eds. An Oxford Anthology of Contemporary Chinese Drama. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1997.

Lilley, Rozanna. Staging Hong Kong Gender and Performance in Transition. Richmond, Surrey, U.K.: Curzon Press, 1998.

Yung, Danny. Chronicle of Women. Tr. by Martha Cheung. In An Oxford Anthology of Contemporary Chinese Drama, ed. by Martha Cheung and Jane Lai. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1997. 825–873.

Jane Lai and Jessica Yeung

YU WU SHENG CHU See IN A LAND OF SILENCE

YŪZURU See TWILIGHT CRANE

ZAGAVOR CHUVSTV See A CONSPIRACY OF FEELINGS

ZAPOLSKA, GABRIELA (1857–1921)

At times I have the urge to get married so as to stop working so hard.
But I gave up the idea realizing that I'd be nothing more than a legal prostitute.

—Gabriela Zapolska

Gabriela Zapolska was an innovative playwright, actor, theater manager, teacher, journalist, and novelist, whose unconventional behavior and outspoken views provoked controversy and scandal. Born Gabriela Korwin Piotrowska on March 30, 1857, near Lwów in the Austrian sector of partitioned POLAND, Zapolska married at nineteen, abandoned her husband, and severed ties with her well-to-do family to embark on a precarious career as an actor in Warsaw amateur theaters. An affair with a theater manager left her with a child who died shortly thereafter. In 1882 she began her professional ACTING career in Cracow under the name of Zapolska.

In 1883, appearing as Nora in A DOLL'S HOUSE on tour in St. Petersburg, Zapolska introduced HENRIK IBSEN in RUSSIA. For the next five years she performed in Cracow and Lwów and toured the provinces, enduring a life of hardship. She published her first novel, Małazska, in 1885, achieving notoriety for the frank treatment of sexuality. In 1888 she attempted suicide.

Forced by her outraged family to leave Poland in 1889, Zapolska moved to Paris, where she studied acting in hopes of achieving international stardom. While working as a cultural correspondent for Warsaw newspapers, she appeared in minor roles in boulevard theaters and at ANDRÉ ANTOINE's Théâtre Libre and in MAURICE MAETERLINCK's Interior and Ibsen's LITTLE EYOLF at Lugné-Poe's Théâtre de l'Oeuvre. As the lover of Paul Serusier, leader of the Nabis, she moved in AVANT-GARDE artistic circles and collected postimpressionist paintings including a Vincent Van Gogh, Paul Gauguin, and Georges Seurat.

Returning to Poland in 1894 as a proponent of NATURALISM with socialist sympathies, Zapolska continued her acting career (until 1900) and wrote many plays and novels, often sensational in form, about alcoholism, prostitution, venereal disease, class and ethnic conflicts, and oppression of women. She established a drama school and independent theater and, with her second husband, ran a company bearing her name. Under a pseudonym, she wrote successful patriotic social dramas. Her witty COMEDIES of sex and marriage—The Little Frog (Żabusia, 1897), The Four of Them (Ich czworo, 1907), and The Secret of Skiz (Skiz, 1908)—tear off the facade of respectability and reveal the erotic underpinnings of society.

Her satirical social dramas contain outstanding roles for women. Małka Szwarcenkopf (1897) depicts Jewish life in Warsaw; Miss Maliczewska (Panna Maliczewska, 1910) portrays the exploitation by men of a young dancer aspiring to be an actress. Her masterpiece, Mrs. Dulska's Morality (Moralność Pani Dulskiej, 1906), a “tragi-FARCE,” exposes bourgeois hypocrisy embodied in the overbearing heroine (film scenario by the author, 1912).

Although denounced by the clergy and conservative critics, her plays were popular with audiences and constantly staged in all three sectors of Poland and in Central Europe (several were filmed), but it was difficult for Zapolska to collect royalties. Separated from her husband and in poor health, she was obliged to sell her valuable paintings and lived alone in poverty during World War I. On December 21, 1921, in Lwów, Poland, Zapolska died insolvent; her funeral expenses had to be paid out of municipal funds. In the 1920s her views on marriage and sexual equality made her a pioneer for women's rights. In 1927 her play Tsarevitch (Carewicz, 1917) was made into an operetta by Franz Lehar. New productions since 1989 reveal the continuing timeliness of Zapolska's satire.

SELECT PLAYS: The First Ball (Pierwszy Bal, 1883); Małazska (1886); Kate Caryatid (Kaska Kariatyda, 1895); The Little Frog (Żabusia, 1897); Małka Szwarcenkopf (1897); Jojne Firułkes (1898); The Other (Tamten, 1898); Siberia (Sybir, 1899); A Virgin Evening (Dziewiczy wieczór, 1899); Life as a Jest (Życie na żart, 1901); A Man (Mężczyzna, 1902); The Trained Souls (Tresowane dusze, 1902); The Tsar Is Coming (Car jedzie, 1902); Misundersanding (Nieporozumienie, 1903); One Autumn Day (Jesiennym wieczorem, 1903); Mrs. Dulska's Morality (Moralność Pani Dulskiej, 1906); The Four of Them (Ich czworo, 1907); The Secret of Skiz (Skiz, 1908); Miss Maliczewska (Panna Maliczewska, 1910); Nervous Racket (Nerwowa awantura, 1912); A Woman Without a Blemish (Kobieta bez skazy, 1912); Outcasts (Pariasy, 1914); Tsarevitch (Carewicz, 1917); The Assistant (Asystent, 1919)

FURTHER READING

Barr, Alan P. Modern Women Playwrights of Europe. New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 2000.

“Gabriela Zapolska.” NEDWEB Literature in Context. http://www.ned.univie.ac.at/lic/autor.asp?paras=/lg;4/aut_id;26664/.

Rurawski, Józef. Gabriela Zapolska. Warsaw: Wiedza Powszechna, 1981.

Jadwiga Kosicka Gerould

ZARZUELA

Zarzuela is a Spanish lyric theater genre that mixes sung text with spoken dialogue. During the 17th and 18th centuries, zarzuela was essentially Italian opera (albeit without recitative) as written by Spanish composers for court entertainments. This form of zarzuela declined at the end of the 18th century as Italian composers became more popular. Modern zarzuela dates from the late 1840s; the revival of the form was due to an increasing interest in creating some form of Spanish opera. Although the musical style of early zarzuelas such as Emilio Arrieta's Marina (1855) and Francisco Asenjo Barbieri's Bread and Bulls (Pan y toros, 1864) was heavily derived from Italian opera, composers also self-consciously used Spanish folk music to turn the genre into a nationalist form of lyric theater. Zarzuela also turned to French opéra-comique for its plot devices—often plagiarizing librettos from French authors like Eugène Scribe—albeit adapting these devices to reflect Peninsular settings and Spanish historical events. During the 1870s and 1880s, zarzuela firmly cemented its identity as a popular and nationalistic entertainment, placing itself in opposition to Italian opera with its aristocratic supporters.

Beginning in the mid-1880s the form and content of zarzuela began to shift dramatically. Theaters in Madrid, SPAIN, had begun turning to the staging of one-act plays (the género chico) as a way of generating more money. Zarzuelas of the género chico placed more emphasis on the dialogue portions of the works than on the musical sections, and the music was almost exclusively drawn from urban dance hall idioms, such as the polka, the mazurka, or the schottische. The majority of género chico works were either satirical reviews, such as Federico Chueca's The Grand Boulevard (La gran vía, 1886), or COMEDIES of manners set among the working-class inhabitants of Madrid, of which Tomás Bretón's The Festival of Our Lady of the Dove (La verbená de la paloma, 1894) is the best known. The production of género chico works went into decline at the beginning of the 20th century, and in the decade after 1910 zarzuela became increasingly influenced by the popularity of Viennese operetta. Works such as José Serrano's The Song of Oblivion (La canción del olvido, 1916–1918) replaced the dance hall tunes and satirical plots of the género chico with lushly melodic music and romantic stories.

Zarzuela entered its heyday in the 1920s. This “silver age” of zarzuela was virtually a summation of the previous century of zarzuela: the traditions of Italian opera, the género chico, and Viennese operetta combined in a series of highly romantic and dramatic works such as Amadeo Vives's Doña Francisquita (1923) and Federico Moreno Torroba's Luisa Fernanda (1932). However, as a popular entertainment, zarzuela was losing ground against the increasing popularity of cinema (especially after the advent of sound film). The disruptions caused by the Spanish Civil War killed off zarzuela as a living theatrical genre. Although the Francisco Franco government attempted to revive interest in the genre through radio broadcasts of recordings and television productions of classic works, the genre remained moribund. Today zarzuela remains primarily a nostalgic entertainment, although there is increasing scholarly interest in the subject.

FURTHER READING

- Alier, Roger. La zarzuela. Barcelona: Ma Non Troppo, 2002.
- Casares Rodicio, Emilio, and Celsa Alonso González, eds. La música española en el siglo XIX [Spanish music in the 19th century]. Oviedo: Univ. of Oviedo, 1995.
- Membrez, Nancy J. “The Teatro Por Horas: History, Dynamics, and Comprehensive Bibliography of a Madrid Industry, 1867–1922.” Ph.D. diss., Univ. of California, Santa Barbara, 1987.
- Stein, Louise K., and Roger Alier. “Zarzuela.” In The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, ed. by Stanley Sadie and John Tyrrell. 2d ed. Vol. 27. London: Macmillan, 2001.
- Webber, Christopher. The Zarzuela Companion. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow, 2003.
- Young, Clinton D. “Zarzuela; or, Lyric Theatre as Consumer Nationalism in Spain, 1874–1930.” Ph.D. diss., Univ. of California, San Diego, 2006.
- “Zarzuela!” <http://www.zarzuela.net/index.htm>.

Clinton D. Young

ZASTROZZI: THE MASTER OF DISCIPLINE

Written by GEORGE F. WALKER, Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline premiered at Toronto's Free Theatre on November 2, 1977. It is a stylish black COMEDY in two acts about the obsessive pursuit of revenge and power. It has had over 100 productions in the English-speaking world.

Set in Europe, “probably ITALY,” in 1893, the character known as Zastrozzi is an atheist and self-styled “master criminal of all Europe.” He is also an agent of the fundamental disorder of life. He pursues the artist and dreamer Verezzi to avenge the murder of his mother but also for the sheer fun of the chase. In this pursuit he wreaks havoc with everyone he comes into contact with. He abandons his dark lover Matilda for the aristocratic and innocent Julia. When Matilda goes after Julia, Julia inadvertently kills her. Bernardo, Zastrozzi's henchman in love with Matilda, murders Julia. Zastrozzi makes short work of Bernardo and then Victor, Verezzi's tutor. The play is a darkly comic series of violent encounters, in which everyone, except the arch enemies Zastrozzi and Verezzi, dies.

Its style is, as Walker intended, melodramatic. There is also a hint of the commedia dell'arte, ANTONIN ARTAUD's Theatre of Cruelty, and an underlying SURREALISM, creating a potent mix. Jerry Wasserman, in Modern Canadian Plays (1994), characterizes Walker's plays as “[a]voiding the subjects and styles that have come to characterize the Canadian theatrical mainstream”; he says they lie “somewhere between satire and parody.” Certainly Zastrozzi is a prime example of this.

The era of the play's setting is crucial; the 19th century is coming to an end, and new ideas and philosophies are taking root. It is a time of shifting social and ideological milieus. In his opening monologue, Zastrozzi states: “I am disturbing social patterns and upsetting established cultures.” In reality, he is attempting to retain control of a culture of absurd violence. Verezzi embodies the artistic and religious aspect of humanity, but he is insane and believes himself a messenger of God. It is this perverse innocence in juxtaposition with Zastrozzi's evil that provides the matrix for this drama to unfold. The women, Matilda and Julia, are also opposites of one another; one is sensuous, experienced, and cruel; the other naive and overly trusting: "a product of healthy civilization thrown into a jungle of the deranged." Yet it is Julia's defense of her life against Matilda's jealous attack that leads her to kill the older woman.

The wordplay in Zastrozzi is delightful and intelligent; the action is rambunctious: both create a strong counterpoint to the other. The result is a highly theatrical play, the kind that allows actors to make the grand and passionate gestures and an audience to delight in its strong cathartic possibilities.

[See also Canada; Melodrama]

FURTHER READING

Johnson, Chris. Essays on George F. Walker: Playing with Anxiety.

Vancouver: Talonbooks, 1999.

Walker, Craig. "George F. Walker: Postmodern City Comedy." In The Buried Astrolabe: Canadian Dramatic Imagination and Western Tradition. Montreal: McGill-Queen's Univ. Press, 2001.

Wasserman, Jerry, ed. Modern Canadian Plays: Volume II. 3d ed.

Vancouver: Talonbooks, 1994.

"Zastrozzi." Canadian Theatre Encyclopedia. <http://www.canadiantheatre.com/dict.pl?term=Zastrozzi>.

Valerie Senyk

ZE ŽIVOTA HMYZU See THE INSECT COMEDY

ZHIZN' CHELOVEKA See THE LIFE OF MAN

ZHENG HUAIXING (1948–)

Born in Xiyou, Fujian Province, CHINA, in 1948, Zheng Huaixing finished his second year of high school when the Cultural Revolution started in 1966 and disrupted the education for all youths in China. After serving in the army for two years, he returned to his hometown and first did farmwork for three years and then taught at a local school and worked as an editor for the local culture center. With the institutions of higher learning nationwide starting to take in students again in 1977, Zheng completed a three-year college program in political science. Upon his graduation in 1980, he began his career as a playwright for puxianxi, the traditional regional theater of his birthplace. Since then, he has written more than twenty plays, mostly for traditional theater. Seven of his plays have, respectively, received top prizes as the best plays in the Fujian Province. His Tears of New Pavilion (Xinting lei, 1981), The Story of the Ugly Duck (Yazi chou xiaozhuan, 1984), Wang Zhaojun (1999), and Shangguan Wan'er (2002) have won national prizes for outstanding plays in different years.

His best-known play Tears of New Pavilion falls into a category termed "newly written historical play" (xinbian lishi ju). It is set in A.D. 322 of the Eastern Jin period. Based on real historical figures, it tells the story of how the imperial court of the Jin Yuan emperor is almost overthrown by its rebel general due to suspicion, jealousy, and internal strife among court officials, including the emperor himself. Of the major political players, Zhou Boren, minister of Official Personnel Affairs, is portrayed as an upright person who stands above his self-interest, with a strong sense of historical mission to restore the lost glory and unity of the Jin Dynasty. At two critical moments, he acts: to rescue the prime minister Wang Dao, the cousin of rebel general Wang Dun, from being executed by the emperor and later to protect the emperor from being overthrown by the rebel. But finally at New Pavilion, where Zhou used to drink with the Wang cousins, sharing their aspirations, he himself is killed by the rebel general, Zhou's own friend, based on the prime minister's suspicion of Zhou. The prime minister later learns that it was Zhou who once saved his life. Zhou's utter selflessness moves the prime minister to persuade his cousin general to retreat. Finally peace is restored.

The play was premiered in 1981 as a puxianxi music drama by the Li Sheng Troupe of the playwright's hometown and first published in 1982. The play has won several prizes at provincial and national levels and has been anthologized in at least five collections of plays. Apart from the beauty of its language and the superb performance of its puxianxi style, the play has political and social significance in that it reflects the historical reality of the ruling class and alludes to contemporary political and social issues. Zhou Boren, the protagonist, is the playwright's social call for a national spirit that will lead people to be concerned with the interests of the nation and its people.

As Zheng's reputation increases nationally, some of his plays have been adapted for other regional dramas such as jingju, hanju, yueju, chaoju, and gaojiaxi. In recent years, Zheng has also been engaged in writing scripts for television series.

SELECT PLAYS: The Story of Lost Pearl (Yi zhu ji, 1980); Tears of New Pavilion (Xinting lei, 1981); The Trial of the Beggar (Shen qigai, 1982); The Cold Moon of the Jin Palace (Jin gong han yue, 1983); The Story of the Ugly Duck (Yazi chou xiaozhuan, 1984); The Story of Frogs (Qingwa ji, 1986); Borrowing the Bride (Jie xinniang, 1989); The Story of Sorcery (Xi wu ji, 1991); The Celestial Book of Qian You Shan (Qian you shan tian shu, 1996); Ye Liniang (1998); Wang Zhaojun (1999); Shangguan Wan'er (2002)

FURTHER READING

An Kui. "Xunzhao tupo de bashe—shilun Zheng Huaixing de xiju chuanzuo" [Looking for breakthroughs: Comments on Zheng Huaixing's playwrighting]. Wenyi bao (Literature and Art Paper) (December 29, 1990).

Liao Ben. "Zheng Huaixing juzuo de gexing jiqi chaoyue jiazhi" [The characteristics of Zheng Huaixing's plays and their transcending value]. Wenlun bao (Literary Commentary) (June 11, 1987).

Wang Pingzhang. "Lun Zheng Huaixing de chuanguo" [A study of Zheng Huaixing's Creation]. Wenyi yanjiu (Literature and Art Studies) 2 (1989).

Zheng Huaixing. Xinting lei [Tears of New Pavilion]. In Zhongguo xiqu jingpin [Best plays of the Chinese xiqu], ed. by Guo Hancheng and Wu Qianhao. Jinan: Shangdong jiaoyu chubanshe, 2002. 3: 125–184.

Cai Xingshui and Wenwei Du

ZINDEL, PAUL (1936–2003)

I see the world as a problem solving situation, and the solution of those problems through fiction seems to be the adventure that I've chosen for myself.

—Paul Janeczko, 1977

Paul Zindel won overnight recognition as a dramatist with the 1971 OFF-BROADWAY production of The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds. It was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Drama, but subsequent Zindel plays failed to build on the promise of this early work critics compared favorably to TENNESSEE WILLIAMS's THE GLASS MENAGERIE. Despite the fact that he always considered himself first and foremost a playwright, Zindel spent much of his career as a pioneering writer of a new wave of young reader fiction focusing with greater REALISM on contemporary problems of teenage sexuality and drug use.

Born in 1936, in the fall of 1954 Zindel entered Wagner College, graduating in 1958 with a bachelor of science degree in chemistry. During his last year at Wagner, Zindel's father died, a loss that only intensified his difficult relationship with his mother. Following graduation, Zindel went to work as a technical writer for the Allied Chemical Company and continued his education at Wagner, completing a master's degree in education in 1959. At Wagner, Zindel took a writing course taught by dramatist EDWARD ALBEE, who encouraged him to continue writing. That same year, Dimensions of Peacocks, Zindel's first play, was produced. Zindel's fascination with dementia praecox is central to the play, as the youth attempts to understand his mother's disturbed behavior.

For the next decade, Zindel taught chemistry and physics at Staten Island's Tottenville High School, but he continued to write plays, including A Dream of Swallows (1964), which dealt with a mean-spirited drunk who finds pleasure in torturing inmates at an asylum she regularly visits, and most significantly, Gamma Rays, which had a successful first production at Houston's Alley Theatre in 1965. The play's positive reception encouraged Zindel to take a sabbatical from teaching during 1966–1967 to serve as playwright-in-residence at the Alley. During that time, National Education Television (NET) produced a short version of Gamma Rays along with another Zindel play, Let Me Hear You Whisper (1966) about dolphins.

The 1970 publication of Gamma Rays (with Let Me Hear You Whisper) inspired an off-Broadway production of Gamma Rays starring Sada Thompson, and the play won that year's Obie Award for Best Play. In 1971, Gamma Rays brought Zindel the Pulitzer Prize and established his reputation as perhaps the best writer of women's roles since Tennessee Williams, an image confirmed by his next important play, And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little (1967), produced on Broadway in 1971. Featuring Julie Harris in the leading role of Anna Reardon, a mentally disturbed high school girl, the plot is a vivid exploration of the interrelationships of the sisters and their uniquely individual characters. The play was only moderately successful but paved the way for the 1972 Broadway production of Zindel's The Secret Affairs of Mildred Wild, starring Maureen Stapleton. Focusing on another troubled middle-aged woman, Mildred, who escapes her squalid life by imagining herself in famous movie roles, the play failed despite critical acclaim for Stapleton's performance.

In 1973, Zindel's next major play, The Ladies Should Be in Bed, was published with The Secret Affairs of Mildred Wild. The play failed to garner critical approval. In 1975 Zindel's play Ladies at the Alamo, which dealt with a battle of wills among five strong women for control of a Texas theater, found no critical favor.

Zindel died of lung cancer in New York City in 2003. Although his obituaries commented on his plays, especially the Pulitzer Prize-winning Gamma Rays, Zindel was described as a prosperous writer of teenage fiction.

PLAYS: Dimensions of Peacocks (1959); Euthanasia and the Endless Hearts (1960); A Dream of Swallows (1962); The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds (1964); Let Me Hear You Whisper (1966); And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little (1967); The Secret Affairs of Mildred Wild (1972); Ladies Should Be in Bed (1973); Ladies at the Alamo (1975); Amulets Against the Dragon Forces (1989; initially titled A Destiny with Half Moon Street); Every Seventeen Minutes the Crowd Goes Crazy! (2000); Naughty Shrinks on Broadway (2003, incomplete libretto for a musical)

FURTHER READING

Dace, Tish. "Paul Zindel." In Contemporary American Dramatists, ed. by K. A. Berney. London: St. James Press, 1994. 586–588.

Flatley, Guy. ". . . And Gamma Rays Did It!" New York Times (April 19, 1970).

Forman, Jack Jacob. Presenting Paul Zindel. Boston, Mass.: Twayne, 1988.

Prideaux, Tom. "Man With a Bag of Marigold Dust." Life 69 (July 4, 1970): 8–9.

"Prizewinning Marigolds." Time 97 (May 17, 1971): 66.

Strickland, Ruth L. "Paul Zindel." In Twentieth-Century American Dramatists, ed. by John MacNicholas. 2 vols. Detroit, Mich: Gale, 1981.

James Fisher

ZO See THE ELEPHANT

ZOLA, ÉMILE (1840–1902)

Inspired by radical thinkers such as Charles Darwin and Hippolyte Taine, Émile Zola proclaimed that literature should reject ROMANTICISM for NATURALISM, which would adopt the methods of modern science and set up experiments; like the scientist, the writer's task was then to observe carefully and objectively record the results. The result would replace "metaphysical man" with "physiological man." Zola developed this theory in his novels, as well as critical writings on literature, painting, and the theater. His most enduring success was as a novelist; Zola's first literary success came with the novel THÉRÈSE RAQUIN (1867) and continued through the twenty volumes of the "Rougon-Macquart" series (including L'Assommoir, Germinal, and Nana). A tireless social reformer, he campaigned against literary and theatrical censorship and exposed the anti-Semitism of French society in J'accuse (I Accuse). He was born in Paris on April 2, 1840, and died of carbon monoxide poisoning on September 28, 1902. This happened under mysterious circumstances; allegations that he was murdered for his catalytic role in the Dreyfus Affair persist.

Zola's importance to the theater rests more on his critical writings than his plays. His first produced work, a stage adaptation of Thérèse Raquin (1873), is revived on occasion, but he remained unable to find a way to reveal his characters' psychological states through action; his characters recount their emotions for each other rather than embodying them.

Zola's theories on the theater appear in a chapter of Le roman expérimental (The Experimental Novel, 1879) and the books Nos auteurs dramatiques (Our Dramatic Authors) and Le naturalisme au théâtre (Naturalism in the Theater), both published in 1881. In place of the moralistic plots and character conventions established by playwrights such as VICTORIEN SARDOU and DUMAS FILS in their popular "thesis plays" that confirmed the preconceptions of a bourgeois audience, Zola called for the stage to match the scientific sophistication of the modern novel, replacing plot with "temperaments" and purging morals for observed facts. In place of ACTING directed to the audience, and costumes designed to reflect and set fashions, Zola advocated a style of acting where actors would concentrate on the other characters and the onstage reality, even if this meant turning their backs to the audience, and costumes would be merely clothes.

These theories had a great influence within and outside of FRANCE. AUGUST STRINDBERG's MISS JULIE and its preface reveal his debt to Zola's ideas on character and staging; GERHART HAUPTMANN's THE WEAVERS dramatically succeeds in replacing the individual protagonist with a social class. While Zola seems to have undervalued the work of these playwrights (as well as HENRIK IBSEN, another writer frequently compared to him in outlook), this did not prevent him from promoting the work of new playwrights to a French audience. In addition to writing an introduction to the French translation of Strindberg's THE FATHER, Zola championed the young director ANDRÉ ANTOINE, an important innovator in naturalistic staging and advocate for new playwrights. Zola's public support for Antoine's Théâtre Libre may have ensured its survival and influenced the breadth of its repertoire.

[See also France]

SELECT PLAYS: Thérèse Raquin (1873); Rabourdin's Heirs (Les Héritiers Rabourdin, from Ben Jonson's Volpone, 1874); L'Assommoir (adapted with Zola's collaboration by William Brunsnach and Octave Gastineau, 1879); Nana (adapted with Zola's collaboration by Brunsnach, 1881); Messidor (opera libretto, 1897)

FURTHER READING

Brown, Frederick. Zola: A Life. New York: Farrar Straus Giroux, 1995.

Carter, Lawson A. Zola and the Theater. New Haven, Conn.: Yale Univ. Press, 1963.

Richardson, Joanna. Zola. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1978.

Zola, Émile. "From Naturalism in the Theatre." In The Theory of the Modern Stage, ed. by Eric Bentley. 1968. Harmondsworth: Penguin, 1972. 352–372.

———. "Naturalism on the Stage." In Dramatic Theory and Criticism: Greeks to Grotowski, ed. by Bernard F. Dukore. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1974. 692–719.

Walter Bilderback

THE ZOO STORY

EDWARD ALBEE's first play The Zoo Story is a deceptively short one-act set in Central Park in New York City. It was first staged at the Schiller Theater in Berlin in 1959 and then at New York's Provincetown Playhouse the following year.

Peter, a middle-aged publisher, is sitting on a bench, reading. Jerry, a younger man who has just visited the Central Park Zoo, enters. Jerry engages Peter in an unwilling conversation in which he extracts many details of Peter's life: he is married with two daughters and lives in a house with cats and two parakeets. The parallel is drawn between Jerry's excursion and Peter's existence in a kind of domestic "zoo." Jerry, in turn, divulges details of his own life, providing a stark contrast with Peter: in a monologue that lasts almost for a quarter of the play, Jerry describes his relationship with his landlady's dog, which he hates and has attempted to poison.

Jerry's narrative turns to an account of his recent visit to the zoo, during which his actions become far more physically challenging to his unwilling listener. Peter begins to feel both threatened and angry but seems unable to respond effectively. Jerry draws a flick knife and throws it to Peter, who holds it as far away from himself as possible. But Jerry runs at him, impaling himself. Peter is horrified: suddenly Jerry's prediction, earlier in the scene, that their encounter would make the news, becomes horribly true. Peter escapes, returning to his own form of incarceration in his own version of the "zoo" from which Jerry has now permanently escaped.

The juxtaposition between the unfolding drama and the humor of the sharply constructed dialogue contributes to the deeply disturbing atmosphere that pervades Albee's first play and contributes in a major way to the construction of dramatic tension.

The play is unpredictable and confounds the audience's expectations by developing a shocking scenario from the most innocuous beginnings. Audiences would naturally identify with the very ordinariness of the character Peter, the classic innocent bystander caught up in an incident far from their own making. The unpredictability of Jerry's character threatens the conventional. The audience is made to feel uncomfortable by diverse and contrasting reactions to the characters and what they represent: Jerry is a bully and threatens physical violence; Peter seems unnaturally protective of what he perceives as his personal space: his park bench. Is this COMEDY or TRAGEDY? Should we laugh at or feel irritated by the absurdity of Peter's dilemma—he could just walk away—or be angered and disturbed by the apparent randomness of Jerry's violent actions, which threatens our accepted patterns of social behavior?

The convention of the long central monologue utilized by Albee, in which Jerry relates his relationship with the dog, seems to pay homage in equal part to both the stand-up storytelling traditions of American vaudeville and the soliloquies of the Shakespearean stage. Punctuated by asides, the monologue is balanced between the evidently comic and the distinctly cruel, a device later developed in WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF? (1962).

How should the audience respond to this unpredictable situation, presented to them in an unconventional dramatic form (characters did not frequently perform monologues in plays of this period)? The Zoo Story seems to hover between comedy and tragedy, and the uncertainty of the audience can be an exhausting experience. In this play Albee confronts the audience with a kind of human zoo, in which the apparent passivity of Peter can have as dangerous and tragic an outcome as the apparent aggression of Jerry. Where does the audience stand in this? They are shocked and yet powerless observers having to make the choice of whether they should simply observe the action that passes before them or actively respond to the dilemma that develops from the seeming innocence of a few minutes sitting on a park bench and a trip to the zoo.

Over four decades after writing The Zoo Story, Albee returned to its difficult world with Homelife, which shows us Peter's relationship with his wife Ann immediately before he leaves for the park where he will meet Jerry. Homelife and The Zoo Story were performed together in 2004 at the Hartford Stage as acts 1 and 2 of Peter and Jerry.

[See also United States, 1940–Present]

FURTHER READING

Gussow, Mel. Edward Albee: A Singular Journey. London: Oberon Books, 1999.

McCarthy, Gerald. Edward Albee. London: Macmillan Modern Dramatists, 1987.

Roudane, Mathew. Understanding Edward Albee. Columbia: Univ. of South Carolina Press, 1987.

Paul E. Fryer

ZUCKMAYER, CARL (1896–1977)

The grand old man of German letters.

—Walter Killy

Although primarily known as a playwright, Carl Zuckmayer's work also encompasses prose fiction, lyric poetry, essays, adaptations for the stage, and film scripts such as The Blue Angel (Der blaue Engel, 1930). Zuckmayer was born on December 27, 1896, in Nackenheim, GERMANY, and began his career as a dramatist in the early 1920s with a play in the then current expressionist fashion, but he achieved his breakthrough with the Berlin premiere of the hugely popular The Merry Vineyard (Der fröhliche Weinberg, 1925). Zuckmayer dispensed with the bloodless abstractions and idealistic aspirations for a regeneration of humankind as espoused by expressionist drama in favor of unsophisticated humor, time-honored comedic devices, and down-to-earth characters who, imbued with a boundless zest for life, speak the dialect of his wine-growing home region on the Rhine. Owing to the immense appeal of the play, Zuckmayer was credited with almost single-handedly ending the vogue of EXPRESSIONISM on the stage and initiating a return to realistic representation by way of his revival of the Volksstück.

Schinderhannes (1927), a play named after a German Robin Hood-type figure from the late 1700s, and Katharina Knie (1928), a somewhat sentimental drama featuring a courageous circus artist as heroine, represent variations of the Volksstück. But Zuckmayer's best-known drama, which has become part of the theater canon, strikes out in a somewhat different direction. The plot of The Captain of Köpenick (Der Hauptmann von Köpenick, 1931) derives from a bizarre, well-documented 1906 incident: the impersonation of a captain in the imperial army by Wilhelm Voigt, an unemployed cobbler and ex-convict. Voigt managed to abscond with the municipal funds of the town of Köpenick (then outside the city limits of Berlin). The incident was widely construed to offer a prime example of the dominance of Prussian-German militarism in civil society, yet Zuckmayer's critique of the reliance on blind obedience and the veneration of the uniform is muted. He endows his play with fairy-tale elements by attributing magical powers to the uniform, powers that seem to derive from the ideas and principles underlying an oppressive regime and absolve uniform wearers from personal responsibility. The play ends on a conciliatory note when Voigt makes his peace with his former foes, the representatives of the state.

Zuckmayer's rather benign criticism of militarism was sufficient reason for the Nazis to put the playwright on their blacklist and, after Adolf Hitler's assumption of power in 1933, force him into exile. Until the Nazi annexation of AUSTRIA in 1938, Zuckmayer lived just outside Salzburg, then immigrated to the UNITED STATES. Banned from German stages, Zuckmayer concentrated on writing short prose fiction and film scripts. However, isolated on a remote farm in Vermont during World War II, he composed what became one of the most controversial and, at the same time, enormously successful dramas of the postwar years, The Devil's General (Des Teufels General, 1946). Protagonist General Harras of the Luftwaffe is faced with the moral predicament of despising Hitler, on the one hand, and of supporting Hitler's war effort via his expertise, on the other. In the end, he submits to "divine judgment" by flying a malfunctioning airplane and is killed in the ensuing crash. While Harras's case provides a partial explanation of Hitler's support among large segments of the population, it does not fully endorse the resistance movement, as is evident in Zuckmayer's ambivalent treatment of its chief representative. Despite its perceived shortcomings, the play, which features a host of characters espousing a broad spectrum of views on Nazism from principled opposition to wholesale acceptance, was instrumental in initiating an intense debate in postwar West Germany about coming to terms with the Nazi past.

Although Zuckmayer's subsequent plays tended to address topical issues related to World War II and the Cold War, they attracted limited public attention and little positive comment. The Song of the Fiery Furnace (Der Gesang im Feuerofen, 1950), a drama about resistance and betrayal in Nazi-occupied FRANCE, and The Cold Light (Das kalte Licht, 1955), a play about atomic espionage, subordinate political analysis to individualistic, humanitarian considerations. With his widely acclaimed autobiography A Part of Myself (Als wär's ein Stück von mir, 1966), Zuckmayer achieved a great success that his plays of the 1960s and 1970s could not match. In The Life of Horace A. W. Tabor (Das Leben des Horace A. W. Tabor, 1964) and Dance of the Herons (Der Kranichtanz, 1967), Zuckmayer chose his erstwhile host country, the United States, as his setting. He died on January 18, 1977, in Visp, SWITZERLAND.

SELECT PLAYS: Crossroads (Kreuzweg, 1920); The Merry Vineyard (Der fröhliche Weinberg, 1925); Schinderhannes (1927); Katharina Knie (1928); The Captain of Köpenick (Der Hauptmann von Köpenick, 1931); The Devil's General (Des Teufels General, 1946); The Song of the Fiery Furnace (Der Gesang im Feuerofen, 1950); The Cold Light (Das kalte Licht, 1955); The Clock Strikes One (Die Uhr schlägt eins, 1961); The Life of Horace A. W. Tabor (Das Leben des Horace A. W. Tabor, 1964); Dance of the Herons (Der Kranichtanz, 1967); The Pied Piper (Der Rattenfänger, 1975)

FURTHER READING

Mews, Siegfried. Carl Zuckmayer. Boston: Twayne, 1981.

Wagener, Hans. Carl Zuckmayer Criticism: Tracing Endangered Fame.

Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1995.

Siegfried Mews

DIRECTORY OF CONTRIBUTORS

Aarseth, Asbjørn

Retired Professor of Scandinavian Literature, University of Bergen,
Norway

Enemy of the People, An; Ghosts; Grieg, Nordahl; Ibsen, Henrik; Norway; Our Power and Our Glory; Peer Gynt; Pillars of Society

Abrams, Josh

Lecturer in Drama, Roehampton University, United Kingdom
Environmental Theater

Aksu Erol, Simin

PhD Candidate, Istanbul University, Turkey
Turkey

Alker, Gwendolyn

Associate Teacher of Theatre Studies, New York University
Cruz, Migdalia; Ensler, Eve; Fefu and Her Friends; Fornes, Maria Irene

Ametsbichler, Elizabeth

Professor of German, University of Montana
Anatol; Liebele; Professor Bernhardt; Reigen; Schnitzler, Arthur

Amkpa, Awam

Associate Professor, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University
Africa; Blood Knot, The; Fugard, Athol; Onwueme, Tess; Osofisan, Femi; Sizwe Bansi Is Dead; Soyinka, Wole; Tsegaye
Gabre-Medhin

Andrews, Jamie

Curator of Modern Literary Manuscripts, British Library, United Kingdom
Day in the Death of Joe Egg, A

Andrucki, Martin

Charles A. Dana Professor of Theater, Bates College
Baal; Caucasian Chalk Circle, The; Good Woman of Setzuan, The;
Mother Courage and Her Children; Piscator, Erwin; Reinhardt, Max; Threepenny Opera, The

Anthony-Moore, Ellen

Assistant Professor, City University of New York; Ph.D. Candidate,
The Graduate Center, City University of New York
Baldwin, James (w/ Christopher Moore); Blessing, Lee (w/Christopher Moore); Bullins, Ed (w/ Christopher Moore); Fences (w/ Christopher Moore); Gurney, A. R. (w/ Christopher Moore); Kanin, Garson (w/ Christopher Moore); Ma Rainey's Black Bottom (w/ Christopher Moore); Medoff, Mark (w/
Christopher Moore); Piano Lesson, The (w/ Christopher Moore); Wilson, August (w/ Christopher Moore)

Applebaum, Jessica Kaplow

Independent Scholar and Production Dramaturg, New York, New York
Five Lesbian Brothers; Grimke, Angelina Weld; Split Britches

Arancibia, Juana

Lecturer, Department of Foreign Languages, California State University, Dominguez Hills

Halac, Ricardo (w/ Benito Gómez)

Armstrong, Jolene

Assistant Professor, Centre for Language and Literature, Athabasca
University, Canada

Highway, Tomson; Maggie and Pierre; Marcel Pursued by Hounds; Sisters in Law

Arntzen, Even

Associate Professor, Department of Comparative Literature,
University of Tromsø, Norway

Game of Life, The

Aronson-Lehavi, Sharon

Ph.D. Candidate in Theatre, The Graduate Center, City University of New York

Avant-Garde Drama, Israel-Palestine

Arrow, Michelle

Lecturer, Department of Modern History, Macquarie University,
Australia

Australia, Women Playwrights Before 1970

Asensio, Paloma

Lecturer, Department of Spanish and Portuguese, Dartmouth College

Gambaro, Griselda; Information for Foreigners

Asiedu, Awo Mana

Lecturer, Department of Theater Arts, University of Ghana
Abdallah, Mohammed Ben; Aidoo, Ama Ata; Sutherland, Efua Theodora

Bacalzo, Dan

Adjunct Faculty, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University
Chong, Ping; Hughes, Holly; Hwang, David Henry; Wolfe, George C.

Baldwin, Jane

Full-time Faculty, Theatre Division, The Boston Conservatory
Henley, Beth; Howe, Tina

Ballesteros, Isolina

Assistant Professor, Department of Modern Languages and Comparative Literature, Baruch College, City University of New York
Theater of Urgency

Barlow, Judith E.

Professor, Department of English, University at Albany, State
University of New York

Children's Hour, The; Gale, Zona; Hellman, Lillian; Little Foxes, The; Miss Lulu Bett

Bar-On, Gefen

Postdoctoral Fellow, McGill University, Canada
Copenhagen

Basham, Rebecca R.

Assistant Professor, Department of English, Rider University
Arden, John

Baumrin, Seth

Department of Communication Skills, John Jay College of Criminal Justice, City University of New York
Poor Theater

Bay-Cheng, Sarah

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre and Dance and Department of Media Study, University at Buffalo, The State University of New York
Avant-Garde Drama, Western Europe

Beeman, William O.

Professor of Anthropology, and Theatre, Speech and Dance, Brown
University
Iran; Iraq

Beene, LynnDianne

Professor, Department of English Language and Literature,
University of New Mexico
Madness of George III, The

Behlau, Ulrike

Department of English, Johannes Gutenberg University, Mainz, Germany
Wandor, Michelene

Bell, Barbara A. E.

Independent Scholar, Roxburghshire, United Kingdom
Bondagers; Cheviot, the Stag, and the Black, Black Oil, The; Glover, Sue; Maiden Stone, The; McGrath, John; Munro, Rona

Bell, John

Assistant Professor, Department of Performing Arts, Emerson College
Gray, Spalding; Off- and Off-Off-Broadway; Political Theater in the United States, Second Half 20th Century;
United States, 1940-Present; Valdez, Luis

Bell, John M.

A.B.D., Southern Illinois University, Carbondale
Melodrama

Berkowitz, Joel

Associate Professor and Chair, Judaic Studies Department, University at Albany, State University of New York
Goldfaden, Avrom; Gordin, Jacob; Moscow State Yiddish Theatre; Yiddish Theater

Bermel, Albert

Professor of Theatre Emeritus, The Graduate Center, City University of New York
Comedy; Farce; Romanticism; Tragedy; Tragicomedy

Bernstein, Ana

Adjunct Faculty, College of Arts and Science, New Jersey City University
Candle King, The; Guarnieri, Gianfrancesco; They Don't Wear Black Tie

Betanzos, Lourdes

Associate Professor, Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, Auburn University
Schmidhuber de la Mora, Guillermo

Bial, Henry

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre and Film, University of Kansas
American Buffalo; Glengarry Glen Ross; Mamet, David; Oleanna; Sexual Perversity in Chicago

Bilderback, Walter

Dramaturg and Literary Manager, The Wilma Theater,
Philadelphia, PA
Canada, English Language; Canada, French Language;
Césaire, Aimé; Cocteau, Jean; Jarry, Alfred; League of Nathans, The; Reading Hebron; Romains, Jules; Sherman, Jason; Thérèse Raquin; Ubu Trilog; Voaden, Herman; Zola, Émile

Billings, Brian C.

Independent Scholar, San Antonio, Texas
Blithe Spirit

Bird, Kym

Associate Professor, York University, Canada
Anderson, Clara Rothwell; Hayes, Kate Simpson; Mock Parliaments, The

Birns, Margaret Boe

Adjunct Assistant Professor, School of Continuing and Professional Studies, New York University
Van Druten, John

Birns, Nicholas

Professor, Department of English, New School University
Corker; Lill, Wendy; Occupation of Heather Rose, The; Reaney, James; Wiebe, Rudy

Bjørby, Pål

Associate Professor, Department of Scandinavian Studies, University of Bergen, Norway
Bankruptcy, A; Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne

Bladel, Roderick

Librarian, Billy Rose Theatre Division, New York Public Library for the Performing Arts
Life with Father; Lindsay, Howard, and Russel Crouse

Blansfield, Karen

Adjunct Assistant Professor, Department of Dramatic Art, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
In Abraham's Bosom; Seven Keys to Baldpate; Why Marry?

Bloom, Arthur W.

Retired Dean, Visual and Performing Arts, Kutztown University
Rip Van Winkle

Boateng, Alex

Lecturer, Department of English, Southern Connecticut State
University
Africa, West Africa

Bohm, Arnd

Associate Professor, Department of English Language and Literature,
Carleton University, Canada

Andorra; Fear and Misery in the Third Reich; Frisch, Max;
Hein, Christoph; Kokoschka, Oskar; Learning Play;
Mother, The; New Objectivity; Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, The; Sternheim, Carl; Toller, Ernst; Transfiguration

Boles, William C.

Professor, English Department, Rollins College
Butterfly Kiss; Trainspotting

Borja-Jimenez, Francisco

Independent Scholar, Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico
Dorr, Nicolás

Boyd, Mari

Chair, Department of Liberal Arts, Sophia University, Japan
Iwamatsu Ryō; Kishida Rio; Kōkami Shōji; Makino Nozomi; Ōta Shōgo; Water Station, The

Bramwell, Murray

Associate Professor, Department of Drama, Flinders University,
Australia
Balodis, Janis; Nowra, Louis

Bredeson, Kate

Assistant Professor of Theatre, Dalhousie University, Canada
Antigone; Blacks, The; Gatti, Armand; Sarraute, Nathalie

Breitinger, Eckhard

Professor Emeritus, Institute for African Studies, Bayreuth
University, Germany
Africa, Postcolonial Drama; Africa, East Africa

Brewer, Andrea

Graduate Student, Department of Philosophy, Princeton University
Kaspar

Brisbane, Katharine

Co-Founder and Publisher (1971–2001), Currency Press, Australia
Australia, 1860–1945

Brogyányi, Eugene

Artistic Director, Threshold Theater Company, New York City
Hungary; Molnár, Ferenc; Örkény, István; Páskándi, Géza; Spiró, György; Toth Family, The

Brousseau, Elaine

Special Lecturer of English, Providence College
Dear Brutus; Magistrate, The; Mid-Channel

Brown, Ian Jarvis

Independent Scholar, Australia
Cockroach Opera, The; Riantiaro, Nano

Brown, Lorraine A.

Professor of English, George Mason University
Federal Theatre Project

Brynhildsvoll, Knut

Professor, Centre for Ibsen Studies, University of Oslo, Norway
Hedda Gabler; Pretenders, The; Wild Duck, The

Brzovic, Kathy

Lecturer, Business Writing Program, California State University, Fullerton
Measures Taken, The

Burian, Jarka M.

Professor Emeritus, Department of Theatre, University at Albany,
State University of New York
Čapek, Karel; Czechoslovakia; Fischerová, Daniela; Havel, Václav; Insect Comedy, The; Langer, František; Memorandum,
The; R.U.R.; Steigerwald, Karel; Topol, Josef

Butler, Erik

Assistant Professor of German Studies, Emory University
Dadaism; Epic Theater

Byckling, Liisa

Ph.D. Researcher, Renvall-Institute, University of Helsinki,
Finland
Forest, The; Moscow Art Theatre and Studios; Ostrovsky, Aleksandr; Scoundrel, The; Stanislavsky, Konstantin;
Thunderstorm, The

Caballero, I. Carolina

Assistant Professor of Spanish, Regis University
Bufo Theater; Triana, José

Cai, Xingshui

Associate Professor, School of Performing Arts, Shanghai Institute of Visual Art, Fudan University, China
After the Reunion (w/ Hongchu Fu); Before the New Bureau
Director Came (w/ Hongchu Fu); Liang Bingkun (w/ Li-hua Ying); Ma Zhongjun (w/ Hongchu Fu); Xiong Foxi
(w/ Hongchu Fu); Yang Lanchun (w/ Wenwei Du); Zheng
Huaixing (w/ Wenwei Du)

Čakare, Valda

Professor of Theatre and Drama, Latvian Academy of Culture
Latvia; Rainis

Cale Feldman, Lada

Professor of Theatre Studies, Department for Comparative Literature,
Faculty of Philosophy, Zagreb, Croatia
Croatia; Krleža, Miroslav; Vojnović, Ivo

Cambiasso, Norberto

Professor of Social Communication, Universidad de Buenos Aires,
Argentina
Bridge, The; Grotesco Criollo; Open Theater; Raznovich,
Diana; Sánchez, Florencio; Topography of a Nude; Wolff, Egon

Campbell-Speltz, Heather

Academic Coordinator, Department of Hispanic Studies, University of Kentucky
Spain

Casey, Maryrose

ARC Postdoctoral Fellow, Monash University, Australia
Australia, Women Playwrights, 1980–1990s; Australia, Indigenous Performance; Australia, Indigenous Playwrights

Cassidy, Michael W.

Independent Researcher, Japan
Miyoshi Jūro

Castellote, Molly

Ph.D. Performance Studies, New York University; Adjunct Faculty, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University
Baraka, Amiri; Dutchman; Kennedy, Adrienne; Smith,
Anna Deavere

Cervinka, Sarah

BA Spec. Honours, Theatre, York University, Canada
I Love You, Baby Blue; Thompson, Paul

Champagne, Carole Anne

Associate Professor of Modern Languages and Spanish Program Coordinator, University of Maryland Eastern Shore
Costa Rica; Cuba; Piñera, Virgilio; Puerto Rico; Usigli, Rodolfo

Charlton, Debra

Assistant Professor, Department of Theater and Dance, Texas State
University
Richardson, Jack

Chatterjee, Sudipto

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre, Dance, and Performance
Studies, University of California, Berkeley
Dutt, Utpal; Ebong Indrajit; Great Rebellion, The; Hashmi, Safdar; Sircar, Badal; Wave, The Chemers, Michael M.

Assistant Professor of Dramatic Literature and Head of Dramaturgy Program, Purnell Center for the Arts, Carnegie Mellon
University
Barnes, Djuna; Front Page, The; Performance Art; Performance Studies

Chen, Xiaomei

Professor of Chinese Literature, University of California, Davis
Bai Fengxi; Chronicles of Sangshuping, The; Jin Yun; Power Versus Law

Chirico, Miriam M.

Associate Professor, English Department, Eastern Connecticut State
University
Cummings, E. E. (w/ Jeffrey D. Mason)

Cleary, Beth

Associate Professor and Chair, Department of Theater and Dance, Macalester College
Under the Gaslight; Yankowitz, Susan

Cody, Gabrielle H.

Chair and Associate Professor, Department of Drama and Film, Vassar College
Duras, Marguerite

Conte, Bill

Department of Theater, The Graduate Center, City University of
New York
Rabe, David; Sticks and Bones; Wilson, Robert

Cormier, J. Briggs

Ohio State University
Bogart, Anne; Donmar Warehouse; Joint Stock Theatre
Group; Monstrous Regiment; SITI Company

Corsa, Lissette

Graduate Student, University of South Florida
Brazil

Costantino, Roselyn

Associate Professor of Spanish and Women's Studies, Pennsylvania
State University Altoona
Rodríguez, Jesusa

Courtney, Angela

Librarian for English Literatures, Theater, Film Studies, and Philosophy, Indiana University
Jones, Henry Arthur; Robertson, Thomas William

Crockett, Roger A.

Chair, German and Russian Department, Washington and Lee
University
Dürrenmatt, Friedrich; Physicists, The; Visit of the Old Lady, The Crouch, Kristin A.

Assistant Professor of Drama, Trinity University Shared Experience Theatre; Suspect Culture; Wildcat Stage Productions

Dahm, Jacobia

Doctoral Candidate in Film Studies, University of Mainz, Germany
Homecoming, The

Dassori, Emma

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Drama and Dance, Tufts University; Adjunct Professor, Pine Manor College
'Night Mother; Norman, Marsha

Davis, Rick

Associate Dean, College of Visual and Performing Arts, George Mason
University
Cyrano de Bergerac; Rostand, Edmond; Scrap of Paper, A

Däwes, Birgit

Ph.D., Lecturer of American Studies, University of Würzburg,
Germany
Baby Blues, The; Taylor, Drew Hayden

Dean, Marla

Director of New Play Development, Remembrance Through the Performing Arts, Austin, Texas
Saved

Decker, Craig

Professor of German, Bates College
Austria; Horváth, Ödön von; Tales from the Vienna Woods; Turrini, Peter; Volksstück

Defraeye, Piet

Associate Professor, Department of Drama, University of Alberta,
Canada
Happenings and Intermedia

Dent, Frank Lloyd

Director, Center for Arts and Church, First Presbyterian Church in the City of New York Religion and Drama

De Ornellas, Kevin

Lecturer in English, University of Ulster, United Kingdom
Ackland, Rodney; Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God; Bent; Charley's Aunt; Coward, Noël; Dangerous Corner; Dry Lips Oughta Move to Kapuskasing; Essex Girls; Guantanamo: "Honor Bound to Defend Freedom"; Hobson's Choice; Houghton, William Stanley; Luscombe, George; MacDonald, Bryden; Marchessault, Jovette; Maugham, William Somerset; Milner, Arthur; Normal; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis; Sears, Djanet; Serjeant Musgrave's Dance; Sherman, Martin; Sowerby, Githa; Stuff Happens; Talking Heads; Truth About Blayds, The; Whale Riding Weather

Dersofi, Nancy

Professor Emeritus of Italian and Comparative Literature, Bryn Mawr College Bracco, Roberto; Praga, Marco

Di Cintio, Matt

Producing Director, Emigrant Theater, Minneapolis, Minnesota
Antoine, André; Becque, Henry; Brioux, Eugene; Copeau, Jacques; Illegitimate Son, The; Sardou, Victorien; Tremblay, Michel; Waltz of the Toreadors, The

Dickert, J. Nick

Assistant Professor of Theatre, Northeastern State University
Count of Monte Cristo, The

Dickinson, Peter

Assistant Professor and Associate/Undergraduate Chair, Department of English, Simon Fraser University, Canada
Hare, David

Dixon, Ros

Department of English, National University of Ireland, Galway
Russia and the Soviet Union, Set Design; Socialist Realism, Soviet Union

Dorney, Kate

Curator of Modern and Contemporary Performance, Victoria and Albert Theatre Museum, United Kingdom
England, 1960–1980; Entertaining Mr Sloane; Orton, Joe

Dorsey, Zachary A.

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Theatre and Dance, University of Texas at Austin
Death and the Maiden; Dorfman, Ariel

Dovale, Leslie A.

Graduate Student, Department of English, Rutgers University
Pinero, Arthur

Du, Wenwei

Associate Professor of Chinese and Comparative Literature, and Chair, Chinese and Japanese Department, Vassar College

China; Guo Qihong; Luo Huaizhen; Wang Renjie; Xu Fen; Yang Lanchun (w/ Cai Xingshui); Zheng Huaixing (w/ Cai Xingshui)

Duffy, Meghan

Ph.D. Candidate, Theatre Department, The Graduate Center, City University of New York
McNally, Terrence; Owens, Rochelle; Terry, Megan

Dukes, Gerry

Independent Scholar and Writer, Dublin, Ireland
All That Fall; Beckett, Samuel; Beckett, Samuel: Short Plays and Dramaticules; Endgame; Happy Days; Krapp's Last Tape; Waiting for Godot

Dupuis, Chris

Independent Scholar, Ontario, Canada
Hosanna; Lilies

Durham, Leslie

Associate Professor, Department of Theatre Arts, Boise State University
Kane, Sarah

Dvergsdal, Alvhild

Professor, Department of Scandinavian Studies, University of Bergen, Norway
Beyond Human Power; Seagull Eaters

Dymond, Erica Joan

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of English, Lehigh University
Ondaatje, Michael

Earnest, Steve

Associate Professor, Department of Theater, Coastal Carolina University
Formalism; Socialist Realism Outside the U.S.S.R.

Edmond, Murray

Associate Professor in Drama and English, English Department, University of Auckland, New Zealand
New Zealand, 1960–1980

Einarsson, Sveinn

Theater Director, Iceland; Former Artistic Director of the National Theatre of Iceland Iceland; Sigurjonsson, Johann

Eisler, Garrett

Freelance Drama Critic; Adjunct Professor, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University
Durang, Christopher; Heidi Chronicles, The; Lawrence, Jerome, and Robert E. Lee; Odd Couple, The; Simon, Neil; Uncommon Women and Others; Wasserstein, Wendy

Ellam, Julie

Freelance Writer, United Kingdom
Blood Relations

Elliott, Winter S.

Assistant Professor of English, Brenau University Bouchard, Michel Marc; Coronation Voyage, The; Tale of Teeka, The

Engle, Sherry D.

Assistant Professor, Department of Speech, Communications and Theatre Arts, Borough of Manhattan Community College
Abie's Irish Rose; Crothers, Rachel; Fitch, Clyde; Machinal; Treadwell, Sophie; Truth, The; West, Mae

Estima, Christine L.

MA, Interdisciplinary Studies, York University, Canada; Playwright
 Jewel

Ewert, Kevin

Associate Professor of Theatre, University of Pittsburgh at Bradford
 Skriker, The

Farnsworth, May Summer

Lecturer in Spanish, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
D'Erzell, Catalina; Mondragón Aguirre, Magdalena;
 Ocampo, María Luisa; Sándor, Malena

Farrell, Joseph

Professor of Italian, University of Strathclyde, United Kingdom
Accidental Death of an Anarchist; Comic Mystery; Fo, Dario; Italy; Theater of the Grotesque

Feliciano, Wilma

Professor of Spanish and Latin American Studies, State University of New York at New Paltz Casas, Myrna; Great Uskranian Circus, The; Hands of God, The;
 Hernández, Luisa Josefina; Peru, Religious Theater; Royal Guests; Solórzano, Carlos

Ferrari, Rossella

Lecturer in Modern Chinese Culture and Language, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, United Kingdom
Avant-Garde Drama, China

Ferris, Lesley

Professor, Department of Theatre, Ohio State University
Horse and Bamboo Theatre; Matura, Mustapha

Finotti, Fabio

Professor of Italian Literature, University of Trieste, Italy
Giacosa, Giuseppe

Fisher, James

Professor of Theater, Wabash College
Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes. Part One: Millennium Approaches; Camino Real; Cat on a Hot Tin Roof; Glass Menagerie, The; Inge, William; Kushner, Tony; Night of the Iguana, The; Patrick, John; Picnic; Streetcar Named Desire, A; Suddenly Last Summer; Summer and Smoke; Williams, Tennessee; Zindel, Paul

Fisler, Ben

Theatre Program Advisor, Harford Community College
Almighty Voice and His Wife; Aria; Gilbert, William Schwenck; Moses, Daniel David

Fitzpatrick, Peter

Professor and Head, Centre for Drama and Theatre Studies, Monash University, Australia

Lawler, Ray; Rayson, Hannie; Sewell, Stephen;
 Williamson, David

Flaherty, Jennifer

Graduate Student, Program of Comparative Literature, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
Goodnight Desdemona (Good Morning Juliet)

Fleischer, Mary

Professor of Theatre Arts, Marymount Manhattan College
 Bowles, Jane; Buried Child; Curse of the Starving Class; Fool for Love; In the Summer House; Shepard, Sam; True West

Fletcher, Anne

Assistant Professor, Theater Department, Southern Illinois University, Carbondale
 United States, 1929–1940

Fletcher, John

Assistant Professor of Theatre History, Louisiana State University Community Theater

Foley, Kathy

Professor, Theater Arts Department, University of California, Santa Cruz
Burma; Cambodia; Hang Thun Hak; Ilagan, Bonifacio;
 Jacob, Malou; Joaquin, Nick; Laos; Lapeña-Bonifacio,
 Amelia; Philippine Educational Theater Association; Philippines; Vietnam

Frassica, Pietro

Professor of French and Italian, Princeton University
 Pirandello, Luigi

Frazier, Adrian

Professor, English Department, National University of Ireland, Galway
At the Hawk's Well; Boucicault, Dionysius; Cathleen ni Houlihan; Colleen Bawn, The; Gregory, Lady; Importance of Being Earnest, The; In the Shadow of the Glen; Ireland; Lady Windermere's Fan; MacLiammóir, Micheál; Playboy of the Western World, The; Purgatory; Riders to the Sea; Robinson, Lennox; Spreading the News; Synge, John Millington; Wilde, Oscar; Yeats, W. B.

Freedman, John

Theatre Critic, The Moscow Times, Russia
 Arbuzov, Aleksei; Conspiracy of Feelings, A; Erdman, Nikolai; Kharms, Daniil Ivanovich; Lunacharsky, Anatoly Vasilyevich; Lyubimov, Yury Petrovich; Olesha, Yury; Russia and the Soviet Union; Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich; Suicide, The Frick, John W.

Professor, Department of Drama, University of Virginia
 Mitchell, Langdon; New York Idea, The Fryer, Paul E.

Programme Director, MA Theatre and Performance Studies, Rose Bruford College, United Kingdom
 Albee, Edward; Three Tall Women; Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?; Zoo Story, The

Fu, Hongchu

Associate Professor of East Asian Languages and Literatures,
Washington and Lee University

After the Reunion (w/ Cai Xingshui); Before the New Bureau Director Came (w/ Cai Xingshui); Cao Yu; Eight Revolutionary Model Plays; Hai Rui's Dismissal; Hong Shen; In a Land of Silence; Lao She; Ma Zhongjun (w/ Cai Xingshui); Mei Lanfang; Ouyang Yuqian; Tian Han; Wei Minglun; Xiong Foxi (w/ Cai Xingshui)

Fu, Ping

Visiting Assistant Professor, Film Studies and East Asian Studies, Dickinson College

Chen Baichen; Ding Xilin; Guo Moruo; Li Jianwu; On Guard Beneath the Neon Lights; Xia Yan

Fuchs, Elinor

Professor of Dramaturgy and Dramatic Criticism, Yale School of Drama

Apocalypse in Modern Drama

Gabriele, Tommasina

Professor and Coordinator of Italian Studies, Wheaton College, Massachusetts

Dreams of Clytemnestra, The; Female Parts; Maraini, Dacia; Rame, Franca

Gaddy, Kerstin T.

Assistant Professor for Professional Practice in German, The Catholic University of America

Before Daybreak; Brahm, Otto; Hauptmann, Gerhart; Sudermann, Hermann; Weavers, The

Gaensbauer, Deborah

Professor of French, Regis University
Absurdism

Gainor, J. Ellen

Professor of Theatre, Cornell University

Alison's House; Glaspell, Susan; Trifles

Gallimore, Daniel

D.Phil., Department of English, Japan Women's University
Fukuda Tsuneari

Galway, Elizabeth

Assistant Professor, Department of English, University of Lethbridge, Canada

Wood Carver's Wife, The

Gerig, Maya

Visiting Lecturer, Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

Drums in the Night (w/ Cyrus M. Shahan); Wolf, Friedrich
(w/ Cyrus M. Shahan)

Gerould, Daniel

Lucille Lantel Distinguished Professor of Theatre and Comparative Literature, The Graduate Center, City University of New York
Avant-Garde Drama, Eastern Europe; Avant-Garde Drama, Russia and the Soviet Union; Madman and the Nun, The; Monodrama; Mrozek, Sławomir; Poland (w/ Jadwiga Kosicka Gerould); Wedding, The; Witkiewicz, Stanisław Ignacy; Wyspiański, Stanisław

Gerould, Jadwiga Kosicka

Independent Scholar, New York, New York

Danton Case, The; Poland (w/ Daniel Gerould); Przybyszewska, Stanisława; Różewicz, Tadeusz; Zapolska, Gabriela

Gianakaris, C. J.

Professor Emeritus of English and Theatre, Western Michigan
University

Arcadia; Bond, Edward; Equus; Invention of Love, The;
Look Back in Anger; Osborne, John; Pinter, Harold;
Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead; Shaffer, Peter;
Stoppard, Tom

Giannini, Stefano

Assistant Professor, Department of French, Italian and Spanish, University of Calgary, Canada

Enrico IV; Right You Are; Six Characters in Search of an Author;
Tonight We Improvise

Gibbs, A. M.

Emeritus Professor of English, Division of Humanities, Macquarie
University, Sydney, Australia

Arms and the Man; Back to Methuselah; Heartbreak House; John Bull's Other Island; Major Barbara; Man and Superman; Mrs. Warren's Profession; Pygmalion; Saint Joan; Shaw, George Bernard

Gibson, Melissa Dana

Associate Professor, Theatre Arts Department, California State University, Fresno

Ayckbourn, Alan; Lady's Not for Burning, The Gillespie, John K.

President, Gillespie Global Group, New York

Betsuyaku Minoru; Elephant, The; En the Ascetic; Furuhashi Teiji; Inoue Hisashi; Kinoshita Junji; Morimoto Kaoru; Ohashi Yasuhiko; Sakate Yōji; Shimizu Kunio; Tsubouchi Shōyō; Twilight Crane; Woman's Life, A

Gillitt, Cobina

Adjunct Instructor of Drama, Tisch School of the Arts, New York
University

Indonesia; Moths; Noer, Arifin C.; Rendra; Struggle of the Naga Tribe, The; Wijaya, Putu

Gleed, Paul

University at Buffalo, The State University of New York

Greig, David; Wesker, Arnold

Godiwala, Dimple

Ph.D., University of Oxford, United Kingdom

Bennett, Alan; Our Country's Good

Goldberg, Daniel

Department of Art History and Communication Studies, McGill
University, Canada

Albertine in Five Times; Memoir; Simard, Andre; Verdecchia, Guillermo

Goldstein, Malcolm

Professor Emeritus of English, Queens College and The Graduate Center, City University of New York Boothe, Clare; Women, The

Gómez, Benito

Assistant Professor, Department of Foreign Languages, California State University, Dominguez Hills
Catalan Experimental Theater (w/ Jorge Herreros);
Dragún, Osvaldo (w/ Jorge Herreros); Gorostiza, Carlos (w/ Jorge Herreros); Halac, Ricardo (w/ Juana Arancibia);
Martínez Sierra, Gregorio (w/ Jorge Herreros); Posibilismo and Imposibilismo (w/ Jorge Herreros)

González, Bernardo Antonio

Professor, Department of Romance Languages and Literatures, Wesleyan University Benavente, Jacinto; García Lorca, Federico

Goodman, David G.

Professor, Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
Akimoto Matsuyo; Angura and Shōgekijō; Avant-Garde Drama, Japan; Head of Mary; Kubo Sakae; Land of Volcanic Ash; Satoh Makoto; Shingeki; Tanaka Chikao

Gordon, Eric A.

Director, The Workmen's Circle/Arbeter Ring, Southern California District Blitzstein, Marc; Cradle Will Rock, The

Gordon, Kelly Carolyn

Visiting Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre, University of North Carolina at Greensboro
Guerrilla Theater

Graham-Jones, Jean

Professor, Ph.D. Program in Theatre, The Graduate Center, City University of New York
Avant-Garde Drama, Argentina

Gray, Frances

Reader in Drama, Sheffield University, United Kingdom
Albanesi, Meggie; Loyalties

Grehan, Helena

Senior Lecturer in Theater and Creative Arts, Murdoch University, Australia Australia, Multicultural Identities in Drama; Davis, Jack

Gribben, Crawford

Lecturer in Renaissance Literature, University of Manchester, United Kingdom
Scotland

Grundmann, Heike

Ph.D., Department of English and American Literature, University of Munich, Germany
Blood, Sweat and Fears; Ravenhill, Mark

Guha-Majumdar, Rupendra

Reader in English, Ramjas College, Delhi University, India

Anderson, Maxwell; Beggar on Horseback; Connelly, Marc; Elizabeth the Queen; Green Pastures, The; What Price Glory?; Winterset

Hacksley, Gregory

Ph.D., Rhodes University, South Africa
Birthday Party, The; Russell, Willy; Song at Twilight, A

Haney, Peter

Visiting Assistant Professor of Anthropology, Colorado College
Çarpa

Hansen, Mei-Lin Te-Puea

Ph.D., Department of English, University of Auckland, New Zealand
Grace-Smith, Briar; Kouka, Hone; New Zealand, Maori Drama

Harding, James

Associate Professor of English, University of Mary Washington
Collage

Haynes, Robert

Associate Professor of English, Texas A&M International University
Bolt, Robert

He, Donghui

Assistant Professor, Department of Modern Languages, University of Tennessee
Gao Xingjian; Guo Shixing; Little Theater Movement; Sha Yexin

Herreros, Jorge

Doctoral Student, Department of Spanish, Alcala de Henares University, Madrid, Spain
Catalan Experimental Theater (w/ Benito Gómez); Dragún, Osvaldo (w/ Benito Gómez); Gorostiza, Carlos (w/ Benito Gómez); Martínez Sierra, Gregorio (w/ Benito Gómez); Posibilismo and Imposibilismo (w/ Benito Gómez)

Heteren, Lucia van

Senior Lecturer, Department for Arts, Culture, and Media, Theatre Studies, Groningen University, Netherlands
Heijermans, Herman; Netherlands

Hilger, Christine Marie

Doctoral Student, Texas Women's University
Ross, Cree Ian

Himmelstein, Morgan Y.

Professor of English Emeritus, Adelphi University Political Theater in the United States, Great Depression Roots

Hinton, KaaVonia

Assistant Professor, Educational Curriculum and Instruction, Old Dominion University
Oshodi, Maria

Hintz, Carrie

Associate Professor of English, Queens College, City University of New York
Peter Pan

- Hischak, Thomas S.
Professor of Theatre, State University of New York College at Cortland Librettists
- Hohman, Valleri Robinson
Assistant Professor, School of Theatre Arts, University of Arizona
Futurism, Russian
- Holm, Bent
Associate Professor, Department of Arts and Cultural Studies, University of Copenhagen, Denmark
Club, The; Denmark; Jepsen, Erling; Knutzon, Line; Ørnsbo, Jess; Saalbach, Astrid; Soon the Time Will Come
- Honegger, Gitta
Professor of Theater, Arizona State University
Bernhard, Thomas; Eve of Retirement; Heldenplatz; Jelinek, Elfriede; Peymann, Claus
- Hopkins, Chris
Professor of English Studies and Head of the Humanities Research
Centre, Sheffield Hallam University, United Kingdom
Ascent of F6, The; Corn is Green, The; Williams, Emlin
- Horstein, Scott
Freelance Dramaturg, Los Angeles, CA
Vinaver, Michel
- Hunter, Mary Ann
Lecturer in Drama Studies, University of Queensland, Australia Australia, Drama for Young People
- Iles, Lawrence I.
British Historian, UK Labour International Section; Independent Scholar Historian MLA
England, 1980–Present (w/ Betty L. McLane-Iles)
- Inoue Yoshie
Kibi International University, Japan
Yamamoto Yūzō (w/ Mitsuya Mori)
- Irwin, Derek
Lecturer, Department of English, Arts and Science Program, Lakehead University-Orillia Campus, Canada
Ryga, George
- Jannarone, Kimberly
Assistant Professor of Theater Arts, University of California at Santa Cruz
Artaud, Antonin; Futurism, Italian; Salacrou, Armand; Surrealism; Vitrac, Roger
- Jeffreys, Joe E.
Adjunct Instructor, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University and Department of Theatre Arts, Stony Brook University, State University of New York
Crowley, Mart; Fierstein, Harvey; Lucas, Craig; Ludlam, Charles
- Jernigan, Daniel
Assistant Professor of English, Nanyang Technological University,
Singapore
Mighton, John; Scientific Americans
- Jiang, Jin
Professor of History, East China Normal University
Sister Xianglin
- Johnsen-Neshati, Kristin
Associate Professor of Theater, George Mason University
Gide, André; Mnouchkine, Ariane; Théâtre du Grand-Guignol
- Johnson, Jeff
Professor of English and Humanities, Brevard Community College
Lithuania
- Johnson, Jerelyn
Assistant Professor of Spanish, College of Staten Island, City
University of New York
Echegaray, José; Great Galeoto, The
- Johnson, Katie N.
Associate Professor, Department of English, Miami University Easiest Way, The; Salvation Nell
- Johnson, Marlys H.
Graduate Student, Department of Theatre, University of Missouri-Columbia
Egloff, Elizabeth
- Jones, Calvin N.
Professor of German, University of South Alabama
Fassbinder, Rainer Werner; Fleißer, Marieluise; Kroetz, Franz Xaver
- Jortner, David
Visiting Assistant Professor, Department of Communication Arts and Theatre, Allegheny College
Abe Kōbō; Friends
- Kallin, Britta
Assistant Professor of German, Georgia Institute of Technology
Loher, Dea; Strauss, Botho; Streeruwitz, Marlene
- Kattelman, Beth A.
Associate Curator and Assistant Professor, Ohio State University
Lawrence & Lee Theatre Research Institute
Jitters; Still Stands the House; Storey, Raymond; Young, David
- Keele, Alan
Professor of German Literature, Brigham Young University
Borchert, Wolfgang; Grass, Günter
- Kerr, David
Professor and Head of Department of Media Studies, University of Botswana
Africa, Central and Southern Africa
- Kich, Martin
Professor of English, Wright State University
Afghanistan; al-Hakim, Tawfiq; Choukri, Mohamed;
Cook, Michael; Dadie, Bernard; Dike, Fatima; Fennario,
David; Frayn, Michael; Freeman, David; French, David; Gray, John; Khan-Din, Ayub; "Master Harold" . . . and the boys; Murrell, John; Nadeem, Shahid; Pakistan; South Africa; Storey, David

Kidd, Kerry

Wellcome Postdoctoral Research Fellow, University of Nottingham,
United Kingdom
Jellicoe, Ann; Knack, The; Whiting, John

Kilpatrick, David

Assistant Professor, Literature, Language, and Communication, Mercy College
Barker, Howard; LaBute, Neil

Kilpatrick, David R.

Ph.D. Student, University of Missouri-Columbia
Overmyer, Eric

King, Lovalerie

Assistant Professor of English, Pennsylvania State University
Childress, Alice; Hansberry, Lorraine; Raisin in the Sun, A

Kinghorn, Michael

Playwright, Director, and Educator; Former Senior Dramaturg, Arena Stage, Washington, D.C., and the Alliance Theatre, Atlanta, Georgia
Grumberg, Jean-Claude; Pinget, Robert

Kirk, Connie Ann

Ph.D., Writer, Painted Post, New York
Milne, Alan Alexander

Kittang, Atle

Professor of Comparative Literature, University of Bergen, Norway;
Professor, Centre for Ibsen Studies, University of Oslo, Norway
Brand; John Gabriel Borkman; Master Builder, The

Klett, Elizabeth

Lecturer, University of Houston
Blasted

Knowles, Joanne

Senior Lecturer, School of Media, Critical and Creative Arts, Liverpool
John Moores University, United Kingdom
James, Henry

Kochhar-Lindgren, Kanta

Assistant Professor, Interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences Program,
University of Washington Bothell
Boal, Augusto; Identity Theater

Koike, Misako

Professor of English, Ochanomizu University, Japan
Dinner at Eight; Ferber, Edna; Stage Door

Koger, Alicia Kae

Associate Professor of Drama, University of Oklahoma
Harrigan, Edward G.

Kominz, Laurence

Professor of Japanese Literature, Portland State University
Madame de Sade; Mishima Yukio

Komporaly, Jozefina

Senior Lecturer in Drama, School of English, Performance and Historical Studies, De Montfort University, Leicester, United Kingdom
Under the Whaleback

Krueger, Antonia Sophia

Ph.D., Independent Scholar, St. Paul, Minnesota
Browning Version, The; Deep Blue Sea, The; Page, Louise;
Rattigan, Terence

Kuharski, Allen J.

Associate Professor and Chair, Department of Theater, Swarthmore
College
Gombrowicz, Witold

Kuhn, John G.

Professor Emeritus of English and Theater, Rosemont College
Fall of the City, The; Heyward, Dorothy, and Heyward, Dubose; MacLeish, Archibald; Porgy and Bess

Kvam, Kela

Professor Emeritus, Institute of Theatre Studies, University of Copenhagen, Denmark
Abell, Kjeld; Anna Sophie Hedvig; Branner, Hans Christian;
Drachmann, Holger; Madsen, Sven Åge; Munk, Kaj; Nathansen, Henri; Olsen, Ernst Bruun; Parasites, The;
Soya, Carl Erik; Word, The Lai, Jane

Honorary Professor, Department of English Language and Literature,
Hong Kong Baptist University, China
Chan, Anthony (w/ Jessica Yeung); Chan, Joanna (w/Jessica Yeung); To, Raymond (w/ Jessica Yeung); Yung, Danny N. T. (w/ Jessica Yeung)

Lamartina-Lens, Iride

Professor of Modern Languages and Cultures, Pace University
Diosdado, Ana; Resino, Carmen

Langås, Unni

Professor of Scandinavian Literature, Agder University College,
Norway
Fosse, Jon; Løveid, Cecilie; Name, The

Lee, Amy

Assistant Professor, Department of English Language and Literature, Hong Kong Baptist University, China
Hay Fever

Lei, Daphne

Assistant Professor, Department of Drama, University of California, Irvine
Lai Sheng-ch'uan; Liu Ching-min

Leichman, Jeffrey M.

Department of French, Yale University
Copi

Leising, Gary

Assistant Professor, Department of English, Utica College
Walcott, Derek

Leiter, Samuel L.

Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Theatre, Brooklyn College and
The Graduate Center, City University of New York
Kawatake Mokuami

Leonard, Candyce

Associate Professor, Humanities Program, Wake Forest University
 Prerero, Paloma

Levin, Laura

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre, York University, Canada
Saga of the Wet Hens

Licastro, Emanuele

Professor, Department of Romance Languages and Literatures,
 University at Buffalo, The State University of New York
 Betti, Ugo; Queen and the Rebels, The Lindenblatt, Michelle

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Performance Studies, New York
 University
 MacLeod, Joan

Lomas-Sampedro, Esther

Clinical Assistant Professor, Modern Languages Department,
 Fordham University
 Mihura, Miguel; Sanchis Sinisterra, José; Sastre, Alfonso

Loneragan, Patrick

Lecturer, English Department, National University of Ireland, Galway
 Behan, Brendan; Carr, Marina; Field Day Theatre
 Company; Friel, Brian; Kilroy, Thomas; McDonagh, Martin; McGuinness, Frank; McPherson, Conor; Murphy,
 Tom; Observe the Sons of Ulster Marching Towards the Somme;
 Philadelphia, Here I Come; Quare Fellow, The; Translations;
Whistle in the Dark, A

Longoria, Andrew

Associate Professor and Director of Theatre, Mansfield University of Pennsylvania
 Howard, Sidney; They Knew What They Wanted

Longstaffe, Stephen

Senior Lecturer in English, University of Cumbria, United Kingdom Bed; Cartwright, Jim; Road

Lord, Mark

Associate Professor of Theater on the Theresa Helburn Fund, Bryn Mawr College
Four Saints in Three Acts; Stein, Gertrude

Lu, Hongwei

Assistant Professor, Asian Studies Program, University of Redlands
Story of Butterfly Lovers, The; White Snake, The; Wu Zuguang

Lucero Baran, Nicole

Graduate of University of California, Los Angeles, English Literature, 1994
Architect and the Emperor of Assyria, The

MacCionnaith, Eric-Michael

University of Oregon
 Boss, The

Mackerras, Colin

Professor Emeritus, China Studies, Griffith University, Australia

Dream of the Red Chamber; Fifteen Strings of Cash; Forced Up
Mount Liang; Married to a Celestial Lady; Third Sister Liu;
White-Haired Girl

Malague, Rosemary

Senior Lecturer, Theatre Arts Program, University of Pennsylvania
Churchill, Caryl; Cloud Nine; Top Girls

Malarcher, Jay

Associate Professor of Theatre, West Virginia University
 Horovitz, Israel

Malick, Javed

Reader, Department of English, Delhi University, India
Agra Bazaar; Charandas the Thief; Tanvir, Habib

Maples, Holly

Department of Drama, Trinity College Dublin
 Clark, Sally; Clothes They Stood Up In, The; Collected Works of Billy the Kid, The; Fraser, Brad; Gilbert, Sky; Unidentified
Human Remains and the True Nature of Love

Marko, Marton

Lecturer in German, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute
 Handke, Peter

Marsh, Cynthia

Professor of Russian Drama and Literature, University of Nottingham, United Kingdom
Gorky, Maksim; Lower Depths, The; Summerfolk

Martin, Carol

Associate Professor of Drama, Tisch School of the Arts, New York
 University
Feminist Drama in the United States; Gelber, Jack; Mann, Emily; Shange, Ntozake

Masanovic, Natasa

Assistant Professor and Coordinator of the German Language Program, University of Alaska Anchorage
Hamletmachine; Müller, Heiner

Mason, Jeffrey D.

Dean, College of Arts and Letters, and Professor of Theatre and Dance, California State University, Sacramento
All God's Chillun Got Wings; Anna Christie; Baker, George
 Pierce; Beyond the Horizon; Campbell, Bartley; Cummings,
 E. E. (w/ Miriam M. Chirico); Desire Under the Elms; Emperor
Jones, The; Gillette, William; Great God Brown, The; Hairy
Ape, The; Harte, Bret; Howard, Bronson; Hughie; Iceman
Cometh, The; Kaufman, George S.; Lazarus Laughed; Long
Day's Journey Into Night; Long Voyage Home, The; Miller, Joaquin; Moon for the Misbegotten, A; Mourning Becomes Electra; My Partner; Once in a Lifetime; O'Neill, Eugene; Secret Service; Shenandoah; Strange Interlude; Touch of the Poet, A; You Can't Take it With You

Masor, Alyssa

Graduate Student in Yiddish Studies, Columbia University
Purimshpil

Masulis, Martins

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of German Studies, Cornell University
Earth Spirit; Spring Awakening; Wedekind, Frank

Maurer, Kate

English Instructor, Anoka-Ramsey Community College
Campbell, William Wilfred; Krizanc, John; Maillet, Antonine

McDaniel, L. Bailey

Teaching Fellow, Department of English, Indiana University
MacDonald, Ann-Marie; Pollock, Sharon

McLane-Iles, Betty L.

Professor of French and Québécois Studies, Truman State University
England, 1980–Present (w/ Lawrence I. Iles)

McLane, Chad Lawrence

Brigham Young University-Idaho
Taylor, Thomas; Ticket-of-Leave Man, The McLaren, Joseph

Professor of English, Hofstra University
Hughes, Langston; Little Ham; Mulatto

McManus, Donald Cameron

Assistant Professor of Theatre and Film, Franklin and Marshall College
Balconville; On the Job; Power Plays, The; Walker, George F.

McNulty, Charles

Chief Theater Critic, Los Angeles Times
Condemned of Altona, The; Flies, The; No Exit; Sartre, Jean-Paul

Medenica, Ivan

Professor, Faculty of Drama Arts, Belgrade; Theater Critic, Vreme;
Artistic Director, Sterijino Pozorje Festival in Novi Sad, Serbia
Popović, Aleksandar; Serbia

Mee, Erin B.

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre, Swarthmore College
Army Formation; Dattani, Mahesh; Ganguli, Usha; Hayavadana; India; Karnad, Girish; On a Muggy Night in Mumbai; Ottayan; Panikkar, Kavalam Narayana; Rudali;
Sharma, Tripurari; Theyyatheyyam; Thirty Days in September;
Thiyam, Ratan; Tughlaq

Meserve, Walter J.

Distinguished Professor Emeritus, Ph.D. Programs in Theatre and English, The Graduate Center, City University of New York
Abe Lincoln in Illinois; Idiot's Delight; Millay, Edna St. Vincent;
My Heart's in the Highlands; Petrified Forest, The; Saroyan, William; Sherwood, Robert E.; Time of Your Life, The

Meyrick, Julian

Associate Director and Literary Adviser, Melbourne Theatre
Company, Australia; Honorary Associate, Theatre and Drama
Program, La Trobe University, Australia
Australia, 1945–1969; Australia, New Wave Productions

Mews, Siegfried

Professor of German, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
Brecht, Bertolt; Germany; Zuckmayer, Carl

Miller, Gavin

Research Fellow, Institute for Advanced Studies in the Humanities, University of Edinburgh, United Kingdom
Admirable Crichton, The; 7:84

Miller, Jordan

Professor Emeritus, Department of English, University of Rhode Island
Awake and Sing!; Golden Boy; Group Theatre, The; Odets, Clifford; Waiting for Lefty

Miller, Renata Kobetts

Assistant Professor, Department of English, City College of New York,
City University of New York
Caste; Waste

Milleret, Margo

Associate Professor of Portuguese and Spanish, University of New Mexico
Arena Theater of São Paulo; Castro, Consuelo de

Milne, Geoffrey

Head of Program and Senior Lecturer, Theatre and Drama Program, La Trobe University, Australia
Australia, New Wave Drama; Australia, Male Playwrights, 1980–1990s; Enright, Nick; Romeril, John

Montley, Patricia

Director of Theatre, Chatham College, 1983–2000
Bald Soprano, The; Caligula; Camus, Albert; Giraudoux, Jean; Ondine

Moore, Christopher

Editor-in-Chief, Broadway Magazine, New York
Baldwin, James (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Blessing, Lee
(w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Bullins, Ed (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Fences (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Gurney, A. R.
(w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Kanin, Garson (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Ma Rainey's Black Bottom (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Medoff, Mark (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore); Piano Lesson, The (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore);
Wilson, August (w/ Ellen Anthony-Moore)

Moore, Kerry

Visiting Assistant Professor of Drama, Vassar College
Brenton, Howard; Far Away; History Boys, The;
Hollingsworth, Michael; Margolin, Deb; Nagy, Phyllis;
Pillowman, The

Mori, Mitsuya

Professor of Theatre Studies, Seijo University, Japan
Yamamoto Yūzō (w/ Inoue Yoshie)

Morillo, María Dolores

Graduate Student, Department of Spanish and Portuguese, Columbia University
Bohemian Lights

Morra, Irene

Lecturer in English Literature, Cardiff University, United Kingdom
Duncan, Ronald; England, 1940–1960

Morrison, Michael A.

Independent Scholar, New York, New York
Jones, Robert Edmond; Sheldon, Edward

Moser, Marlene

Associate Professor, Department of Dramatic Arts, Brock University,
Canada

Crackwalker, The; Hollingsworth, Margaret; Lion in the Streets; MacIvor, Daniel; Polygraph; Thompson, Judith

Mounsef, Donia

Associate Professor of French and Theater Studies, Yale University
France; Koltès, Bernard-Marie; Roberto Zucco

Mufson, Daniel

Independent Scholar and Freelance Writer and Translator, Berlin,
Germany

America Play, The; Claudel, Paul; Foreman, Richard; Maeterlinck, Maurice; Mee, Charles; Parks, Suzan-Lori

Müller, Anja

Assistant Professor, English Literature, University of Bamberg, Germany
Travesties

Murphy, A. Mary

Instructor, Department of English, The University of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada
Loot

Murphy, Brenda

Professor, Department of English, University of Connecticut
Howells, William Dean

Murray, Christopher

Professor Emeritus, School of English and Drama, University College
Dublin, Ireland

Juno and the Paycock; O'Casey, Sean; Plough and the Stars, The;
Shadow of a Gunman, The; Silver Tassie, The Nadel, Norman

Author of A Pictorial History of the Theatre Guild (1969) and Retired Drama Critic
Theatre Guild

Nanney, Nancy

Chair, Humanities Division, West Virginia University at Parkersburg

Hassan, Noordin; Husain, Shaharom; It Is Not the Tall Grass
Blown By the Wind; Leow Puay Tin; Malaysia

Nassar, Hala Khamis

Assistant Professor of Modern Arabic Culture and Literature and Director of Undergraduate Studies, Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations, and Women, Gender and Sexuality Studies, Yale
University

Egypt; Palestine

Nath, Rajinder

Director, Shram Centre New Delhi, India (1975, 1981, 1983, and 1989); Editor, Theatre India (1998–2003)

Halfway House; One Day in Asadh; Rakesh, Mohan

Ndung'u, Bantu

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Performance Studies, New York
University

Ngema, Mbongeni; Ngugi wa Thiong'o; Ruyendo, Mukotani; Serumaga, Robert

Nelson, Byron

Associate Professor, Department of English, West Virginia
University

Entertainer, The

Nguyen, Lam-Thao

Visiting Instructor, Department of French, Classics and Italian,
Michigan State University

Dubillard, Roland; Season in the Congo, A

Niemi, Irmeli

Retired Professor of Comparative Literature, Drama, and Film, University of Turku, Finland

Finland

Nunes, Luiz Arthur Ferreira Freire

Theatre Director, Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, Brazil; Professor, Graduate Program in Theater, Universidade Federal do Estado do Rio de Janeiro, Brazil

Rodrigues, Nelson; Wedding Gown

Olid-Peña, Estefania

Graduate Student, Department of Modern and Classical Languages, Georgia State University

Akins, Zoë; Hart, Moss; I'd Rather Be Right; June Moon; Lardner, Ring

Olivares, Lissette

Ph.D. Student, History of Consciousness Graduate Program, University of California, Santa Cruz

Radrigán, Juan

Olsen, Chris

Assistant Professor of Drama, University of Puerto Rico
Philosophy and Drama, 1960–Present

Orenstein, Claudia

Associate Professor, Theatre Department, Hunter College and The Graduate Center, City University of New York

Agitation-Propaganda

Ormsby, Robert

Sessional Lecturer, University of Toronto, Canada
Brooks, Daniel

Orvis, David L.

Doctoral Student, Department of English, University of Arizona
Shape of Things, The

Paget, Derek

Reader in Theatre and Television, University of Reading, United Kingdom

Documentary Drama

Pandit, Maya

Professor, Central Institute of English and Foreign Languages,
Hyderabad, India

- Bhagat, Datta; Elkunchwar, Mahesh; Ghashiram Kotwal;
Old Stone Mansion; Routes and Escape Routes; Sakharum Binder;
Tendulkar, Vijay
- Paris, Marta de
Independent Scholar, Buenos Aires, Argentina
Argentina
- Parkin, Gil
Independent Scholar and Researcher, New York, New York
Doubt
- Parra-Domínguez, Maribel
Harvard University
Blood Wedding; House of Bernarda Alba, The; Yerma
- Patruno, Nicholas
Professor of Italian, Bryn Mawr College
Verga, Giovanni
- Patterson, Jim
Distinguished Professor Emeritus, University of South Carolina
Morning's at Seven; Osborn, Paul
- Peimer, David
Principal Tutor, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg,
South Africa; Guest Professor, Prague Division, New York University
Avant-Garde Drama, South Africa
- Pelizzari, David
Educational and Cultural Programs, The Smithsonian Institution,
Washington, D.C.
Balcony, The; Crommelynck, Fernand; Genet, Jean;
Lenormand, Henri-René; Montherlant, Henry de; Satin
Slipper, The; Tardieu, Jean; Vauthier, Jean
- Pender, Judith Midyett
Associate Professor of Drama, University of Oklahoma
Barry, Philip; Green, Paul; Holiday; Philadelphia Story, The
- Penner, James L.
Lecturer, English Department, University of Southern California
Marber, Patrick; Neilson, Anthony
- Penuel, Suzanne
Doctoral Student, University of Texas at Austin
Fen
- Peterson, William
Senior Lecturer in Drama and Theatre Studies, Monash University, Australia
Avant-Garde Drama, Southeast Asia; Coffin Is Too Big for the Hole, The; Kon, Stella; Kuo Pao Kun; Ong Keng Sen;
Singapore
- Picarazzi, Teresa
Teacher, Modern Language Department, Hopkins School, Connecticut
Ginzburg, Natalia
- Pierce, Jason A.
Associate Professor of English, Mars Hill College
Bridie, James
- Pipinia, Ioulia
Lecturer of Drama, Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greece
Greece; Kambanellis, Iakovos; Xenopoulos, Grigorios
- Pizer, John D.
Professor of German and Comparative Literature, Louisiana State
University
Kraus, Karl
- Pizzato, Mark
Professor of Theatre, University of North Carolina at Charlotte Psychoanalysis
- Poulton, M. Cody
Associate Professor, Department of Pacific and Asian Studies, University of Victoria, Canada
Hirata Oriza; Izumi Kyōka; Kubota Mantarō; Mori Ōgai;
Osanai Kaoru; Shinpa; Suzuki Senzaburō; Tokyo Notes
- Pounders, Steven C.
Associate Professor, Department of Theatre Arts, Baylor University
Closer
- Powell, Brian
Emeritus Fellow, Keble College, University of Oxford, United Kingdom
Father Returns, The; Fukuda Yoshiyuki; Hōjō Hideji; Japan;
Katō Michio; Mayama Seika; Murayama Tomoyoshi;
Okamoto Kidō; Shin kabuki; Tale of Shuzenji
- Powers, W. Douglas
Associate Professor, Department of Theatre, Susquehanna University Fry, Christopher; Voice of the Turtle, The
- Puchner, Martin
H. Gordon Garbedian Professor of English and Comparative Literature, Columbia University
Closet Drama; Modernist Drama
- Pullen, Kirsten
Assistant Professor, Department of English, University of Calgary, Canada
Interculturalism
- Quint, Alyssa
Princeton University
Dybbuk, The
- Rähesoo, Jaak
Freelance Critic and Translator, Estonia
Estonia
- Reilly, Kara
Postdoctoral Teaching Fellow, Stanford University
Avant-Garde Drama, United States; Postmodernism
- Richardson, Stanley R.
Adjunct Professor of Dramaturgy, Emerson College
Baitz, Jon Robin; Bentley, Eric; Foote, Horton; Guare, John; Nelson, Richard; New Dramatists; Shawn, Wallace
- Ridley, Clifford A.
Retired Theater Critic, Philadelphia Inquirer

- Boy Meets Girl; Dead End; Kingsley, Sidney; Men in White; Spewack, Bella, and Spewack, Sam
- Rimer, J. Thomas
Professor Emeritus of Japanese Literature, University of Pittsburgh Suzuki Tadashi
- Rogowski, Christian
Professor of German, Amherst College
Brasch, Thomas; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von
- Romanska, Magda
Assistant Professor and Head of Theatre Studies, Department of Performing Arts, Emerson College
Boucher, Denise; Curzon, Sarah Anne; Denison, Merrill; Griffiths, Linda; Kerr, Lois Reynolds; Pickthall, Marjorie
- Rosenberg, Ellen
Humanities Faculty, North Carolina School of the Arts
Guy Domville
- Rosenthal, Cindy
Associate Professor of Drama and Dance, Hofstra University
Living Theatre
- Rothkirch, Alyce von
Lecturer and Coordinator, M.A. Lifelong Learning, Department of Adult Continuing Education, University of Wales Swansea, United Kingdom
Edwards, Dic; House of America; Keep, The; Osborne, Alan; Thomas, Dylan; Thomas, Edward; Thomas, Gwyn; Rowlands, Ian
- Ruppel, Richard R.
Professor of German and Chair, Department of Foreign Languages, University of Wisconsin, Stevens Point
Switzerland
- Ryan, Delyse
Senior Lecturer in Drama, Australian Catholic University
Cusack, Dymphna; Gow, Michael
- Sacca, Annalisa
Associate Professor of Italian, St. John's University
De Filippo, Eduardo
- Sadock, Benjamin
Graduate Student, Department of Germanic Languages, Columbia University
Hirschbein, Peretz
- Sæther, Astrid
Associate Professor, Centre for Ibsen Studies, University of Oslo, Norway
Lady from the Sea, The; Little Eyolf; Rosmersholm
- Saivetz, Deborah
Associate Professor of Theatre, Baruch College, City College of New York
Me xihc co Teatro (MxTeatro); Morett, María
- Sajko, Brian
Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid, Vice President of Admissions and Marketing, and Professor of Theatre Arts and Drama, Eureka College
Hoyt, Charles H.; Robins, Elizabeth
- Salz, Jonah
Professor, Faculty of Intercultural Communication, Ryukoku University, Japan
Kawakami Otojirō; Nō and Kyōgen; Yamazaki Masakazu
- Sams, Victoria
Assistant Professor of Modern Dramatic Literature, Dickinson College
Wallace, Naomi
- Sanabria, Enrique A.
Assistant Professor of History, University of New Mexico
Buero Vallejo, Antonio; Pérez Galdós, Benito; Valle-Inclán, Ramón María del
- Sanhueza, Ma. Teresa
Associate Professor of Romance Languages, Wake Forest University
Discépolo, Armando
- Sauer, David
Professor, Languages and Literature Division, Spring Hill College
Behrman, S. N.; Biography; No Time for Comedy; Rain from Heaven
- Scheeder, Louis
Arts Professor, Associate Dean of Faculty, Director of The Classical Studio, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University
Kopit, Arthur; Linney, Romulus; Tally, Ted
- Schildcrout, Jordan
Assistant Professor, School of Theater, Ohio University
Gay and Lesbian Drama
- Schneider, Jeffrey
Associate Professor of German, Vassar College
I Am My Own Wife; Offending the Audience; Wright, Doug
- Schneider, Robert
Assistant Professor of Theater and Dance, Northern Illinois University Ionesco, Eugene; Lesson, The; Reza, Yasmina; Screens, The; Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom Sihanouk, King of Cambodia, The
- Schwartz, Michael
Ph.D. Candidate, University of Pittsburgh
It Pays to Advertise
- Scullion, Adrienne
James Arnott Professor of Drama, University of Glasgow, United Kingdom
Circle, The; Constant Wife, The; Daphne Laureola; Journey's End; Sheppey; Sherriff, Robert Cedric
- Seaton Brown, Robin
Doctoral Student, Department of English, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill Caretaker, The; Old Times
- Sebesta, Juraj
Director of the City Library, Bratislava, Slovakia
Absolute Prohibition; Karvaš, Peter; Slovakia

Sejersted, Jørgen

Assistant Professor, Department of Scandinavian Studies, University of Bergen, Norway
Bird Lovers, The; Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald

Sell, Mike

Associate Professor, Department of English, Indiana University of Pennsylvania
Avant-Garde Drama; Black Arts Movement; Chance; Jazz

Senyk, Valerie

Associate Professor of Theatre Arts, Thorneloe College, Laurentian University, Canada
Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline

Shafer, Leah R.

Ph.D. Candidate, Theatre Studies, Cornell University
Davy Crockett; Great Divide, The; Moody, William Vaughn

Shahan, Cyrus M.

Graduate Student, Department of Germanic Languages, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill Drums in the Night (w/ Maya Gerig); Wolf, Friedrich (w/ Maya Gerig)

Shandell, Jonathan

Adjunct Instructor, Theater Studies, Tisch School of the Arts, New York University
Anouilh, Jean; Eurydice

Shantz, Jeff

York University, Toronto, Canada
Bean, Richard

Shastri, Sudha

Assistant Professor of English, Indian Institute of Technology, Bombay
Kureishi, Hanif

Sierz, Aleks

Visiting Research Fellow, Rose Bruford College, United Kingdom
Angry Young Men

Sílvia Betti, Maria

Professor, Area of Linguistic and Literary Studies in English, University of Sao Paulo, Brazil
Break the Heart; Vianna Filho ("Vianinha"), Oduvaldo

Skidmore, Jamie

Assistant Professor, Department of English, Memorial University of Newfoundland, Canada
Tamara

Slywka, Nikolai

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of English, Stanford University Coast of Utopia, The; Real Thing, The Smalls, Shanté T.

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Performance Studies, New York University
Auden, Wystan Hugh; Barrie, J. M.; Galsworthy, John; Granville-Barker, Harley; Isherwood, Christopher; Lawrence, David Herbert; Nottage, Lynn

Smith, Julianne

Associate Professor of English, Pepperdine University
East Lynne; Wood, Ellen

Smith, Robert Lewis

AAssociate Professor of Theatre and Theatre Subgroup Chair, Department of Speech Communication and Theatre, Kutztown University of Pennsylvania
Strictly Dishonorable; Thomas, Augustus

Sollars, Michael D.

Assistant Professor of English, Texas Southern University
Betrayal; Delaney, Shelagh

Sorgenfrei, Carol Fisher

Professor, Department of Theater, University of California, Los Angeles
Hunchback of Aomori, The; Terayama Shūji

Southerland, Stacy

Professor of Spanish, University of Central Oklahoma Garro, Elena; Lady on her Balcony, The

Spreizer, Christa

Assistant Professor, Department of European Languages and Literatures, Queens College, City University of New York
Bronnen, Arnolt; Chlumberg, Hans; Goll, Yvan; Hasenclever, Walter; Johst, Hanns; Kornfeld, Paul; Son, The; Sorge, Reinhard Johannes

Sprinchorn, Evert

Professor and Chairman Emeritus, Department of Drama, Vassar College
Acting; Days Without End; Directing Plays; Dramatic Criticism; Dramatic Cycles; Dramatic Dialogue; Dramatic Structure; Expressionism; Hamsun, Knut; Naturalism; Nietzsche, Friedrich; Philosophy and Drama, 1860–1960; Problem Play; Realism; Stage Directions and Stage Sets; Subtext; Symbolism; Wagner, Richard

Starrs, D. Bruno

School of Creative Arts, University of Melbourne, Australia Needles and Opium; Seven Streams of the River Ota, The

Stefanova, Kalina

Associate Professor of Theatre Criticism, National Academy of Theatre and Film Arts, Bulgaria
Bulgaria

Stefanovski, Risto

Theatrolgist, Macedonia
Macedonia; Stefanovski, Goran

Steinberger, Rebecca

Associate Professor, English Department, College Misericordia
Ervin, St. John

Stevens, Andrea R.

Ph.D. Candidate, English Department, University of Virginia
Billy Bishop Goes to War; Davies, Robertson; Princess Pocahontas and the Blue Spots

Stoudt, Charlotte

Dramaturg and Writer

Breasts of Tiresias, The; Cixous, Hélène; Infernal Machine, The; Jet of Blood, The; Maids, The; Orpheus; Trojan War Will Not Take Place, The

Suppes, Patricia

Instructor, Department of Foreign Languages, Elon University
Peru

Swain, John D.

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre, California State University, Northridge

Atami Murder Case, The; Kara Jūrō; Kitamura Sō; Noda Hideki; Senda Koreya; Tsuka Kōhei; Virgin's Mask, The;
Watanabe Eriko

Switzky, Lawrence

Harvard University

Priestley, John Boynton; Return of the Prodigal, The

Syssoyeva, Kathryn

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Drama and Graduate Program in the Humanities, Stanford University

Pomerance, Bernard; Tesich, Steve; Wellman, Mac

Tait, Peta

Professor, Theater and Drama Program, La Trobe University, Australia

Australia, Gender and Sexuality in Drama and Physical Theater; De Groen, Alma; Hewett, Dorothy; Kemp, Jenny

Tanaka, Rokuo

Independent Scholar, Honolulu, Hawaii

Ariyoshi Sawako; Mafune Yutaka

Tautz, Birgit

Assistant Professor, Department of German, Bowdoin College
Tabori, George

Tharp, Richard K.

Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Theatre, University of Maryland, College Park

John Ferguson

Törnqvist, Egil

Professor Emeritus, Scandinavian Studies, University of Amsterdam,
Netherlands

Advent; Bergman, Hjalmar; Bergman, Ingmar; Carl XII;
Chamber Plays; Creditors; Crimes and Crimes; Dagerman, Stig; Dance of Death, The; Dream Play, A; Easter; Enquist, Per Olov; Erik XIV; Father, The; Forssell, Lars; Ghost Sonata, The;
Gustav Vasa; Hangman, The; Lagerkvist, Pär; Master Olof;
Miss Julie; Night is Mother to the Day, The; Night of the Tribades,
The; Norén, Lars; Strindberg, August; Stronger, The; Sunday
Promenade, The; Sweden; To Damascus

Toten Beard, DeAnna M.

Assistant Professor, Department of Theatre Arts, Baylor University
Adding Machine, The; Hazel Kirke; Lawson, John Howard;
MacKaye, Percy; MacKaye, Steele; Processional; Rice, Elmer; Street Scene; Voysey Inheritance, The

Tuan, Iris Hsin-chun

Assistant Professor, Department of Humanities and Social Sciences, National Chiao Tung University, Taiwan

Hwang Mei-shu; Ma Sen; Yao Yi-wei

Turnbull, Olivia

Senior Lecturer, Department of Drama, Bath Spa University, United Kingdom

Baltimore Waltz, The; Fifth of July; Innaurato, Albert; Rivera, José; Shanley, John Patrick; Vogel, Paula; Wilson, Lanford

Tylee, Claire M.

Senior Lecturer, English Department, Brunel University, United Kingdom

Rutherford and Son

Urian, Dan

Professor, Department of Theater Arts, Tel Aviv University, Israel
Israel

Valentini, Daria

Associate Professor of Italian, Stonehill College

Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso

Varderi, Alejandro

Professor of Spanish, Borough of Manhattan Community College,
City University of New York

Venezuela

Vargas, Margarita

Associate Professor, Department of Romance Languages and Literatures, University at Buffalo, The State University of New York Berman, Sabina; Mexico

Vena, Michael

Professor of Foreign Languages, Southern Connecticut State University
Chiarelli, Luigi

Vey, Shauna

Assistant Professor of Humanities, New York City College of Technology
Daly, Augustin; Johnson, Georgia Douglas

Violanti, Heather Jeanne

Freelance Dramaturg and Writer

Apollinaire, Guillaume; Arrabal, Fernando; Audiberti, Jacques

Virulak, Surapone

Member, Royal Institute, Bangkok, Thailand

Chandrababha, Sompop; Rama V; Thailand

Wachter, David

Graduate Student, Department of Comparative Literature, Free
University of Berlin, Germany

Art

Wærp, Lisbeth Pettersen

Associate Professor of Literature, University of Tromsø, Norway

Doll's House, A; Emperor and Galilean; When We Dead Awaken

Wakefield, Thaddeus

Instructor, Santa Rosa Junior College

Mouawad, Wajdi; Wedding Day at the Cro-Magnons'

Walters, Meg

Former Director of Academics, Rosemont School of the Holy Child, Pennsylvania
Our Town; Skin of Our Teeth, The; Wilder, Thornton

Wandor, Michelene

Royal Literary Fund Fellowship, Birkbeck College, London University, United Kingdom
Bagnold, Enid

Wasserman, Jerry

Professor of English and Theatre, University of British Columbia, Canada
War Babies

Weales, Gerald

Emeritus Professor of English, University of Pennsylvania
After the Fall; All My Sons; Crucible, The; Death of a Salesman; Miller, Arthur; Price, The; View from the Bridge, A

Weckwerth, Wendy A.

Visiting Faculty, Department of Theater and Dance, Colby College
Adamov, Arthur; Dumas fils; Ghelderode, Michel de

Weidauer, Friedemann J.

Associate Professor of German, University of Connecticut Alienation Effect; Hochhuth, Rolf; Investigation, The;
Kipphardt, Heinar; Life of Galileo, The; Marat/Sade;
Underpants, The; Weiss, Peter

Weinstein, John B.

Assistant Professor of Chinese and Asian Studies, Division of Languages and Literature, Simon's Rock College of Bard
Lee Kuo-hsiu

Werner, Robin A.

Ph.D., Instructor of English, University of New Orleans
England, 1860–1940; Second Mrs. Tanqueray, The West, Ron

Ph.D., Metropolitan Community College
Herne, James A.; Margaret Fleming; Saratoga; Shore Acres

Westphalen, Timothy C.

Associate Professor and Director of Graduate Studies, Department of European Languages, Literatures, and Cultures, Stony Brook
University, State University of New York
Andreev, Leonid; Bathhouse, The; Bedbug, The; Blok, Aleksandr; Chekhov, Anton; Cherry Orchard, The; He Who Gets Slapped; Ivanov; Life of Man, The; Mayakovsky, Vladimir; Meyerhold, Vsevolod; Mystery-Bouffe; Platonov; Puppet Show,
A; Russia and the Soviet Union, Russian Symbolist Drama;
Seagull, The; Three Sisters; Uncle Vanya

Weyenberg, Astrid Van

Amsterdam School for Cultural Analysis, University of Amsterdam, Netherlands
Lochhead, Liz; Mary Queen of Scots Got Her Head Chopped Off

Whittaker, Robin C.

Doctoral Candidate, Graduate Centre for Study of Drama, University of Toronto, Canada
Saint Frances of Hollywood

Wichmann-Walczak, Elizabeth

Professor and Director of Asian Theatre, Department of Theatre and Dance, University of Hawaii at Manoa
Cao Cao and Yang Xiu

Wilcox, Dean

Theatre History and Dramatic Literature, North Carolina School of the Arts
Deconstruction

Willeke, Audrone B.

Professor Emerita of German, Miami University
From Morning to Midnight; Kaiser, Georg

Willinger, David Paul

Professor of Theatre, City College of New York, City University of
New York
Belgium; Claus, Hugo; Jenkin, Len; Kalisky, René; Kramer, Larry; Machado, Eduardo; Willems, Paul

Willis, Craig

Independent Scholar, Eugene, Oregon
Kelly, George

Wilmeth, Don B.

Asa Messer Emeritus Professor and Emeritus Professor of Theatre and English, Brown University
United States, 1860–1929

Winet, Evan Darwin

Assistant Professor, Theater and Dance Department, Macalester College
Sarumpaet, Ratna

Witt, Gavin

Resident Dramaturg, Center Stage, Maryland
Feydeau, Georges; Flea in Her Ear, A

Wixson, Christopher

Assistant Professor of English, Eastern Illinois University
Cavalcade; Daughter in Law, The; Hindle Wakes; Private Lives;
Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd, The

Woodhouse, John

Fiat-Serena Professor of Italian Emeritus, Magdalen College, University of Oxford, United Kingdom
D'Annunzio, Gabriele

Worrall, Nick

Retired Principal Lecturer, Middlesex University, London
Bulgakov, Mikhail; Days of the Turbins; Evreinov, Nikolai; Flight; Month in the Country, A; Optimistic Tragedy, An; Power of Darkness, The; Russia and the Soviet Union, Dramatic Criticism; Tretyakov, Sergei; Theatricality; Tolstoy, Lyov

Wyllie, Andrew

Senior Lecturer, Department of Drama, University of the West of England, United Kingdom
Design for Living; Inspector Calls, An

Yamanashi, Makiko

Post Graduate, School of Asian Studies, University of Edinburgh,
United Kingdom
Takarazuka Revue Company

Yassur, Moshe

Off-Off-Broadway Director; Adjunct Faculty of Speech and Communication, School of New Resources, College of New Rochelle, New York

Caragiale, Ion Luca; Jonah; Naghiu, Iosif; Popescu, Dumitru Radu; Romania; Sorescu, Marin

Ybarra, Patricia

Assistant Professor of Theatre, Speech and Dance, Brown University
Corona Trilogy

Yeung, Jessica

Assistant Professor, Department of English Language and Literature, Hong Kong Baptist University, China
Chan, Anthony (w/ Jane Lai); Chan, Joanna (w/ Jane Lai); To, Raymond (w/ Jane Lai); Yung, Danny N. T. (w/ Jane Lai)

Ying, Li-hua

Associate Professor and Director of Chinese Program, Bard College
Liang Bingkun (w/ Cai Xingshui)

Young, Clinton D.

Visiting Assistant Professor, Department of History, Western Carolina University
Álvarez Quintero, Joaquín, and Serafín Álvarez Quintero; Sainete; Zarzuela

Young, Stuart

Associate Professor and Head of Theatre Studies Programme, University of Otago, New Zealand

Geary, David; Hall, Roger; Lord, Robert; Mason, Bruce; McGee, Greg; New Zealand, 1870–1960; New Zealand, 1980–Present; New Zealand, Feminist Drama; Renée; Thompson, Mervyn

Ystad, Vigdis

Professor, Centre for Ibsen Studies, University of Oslo, Norway
Heiberg, Gunnar

Yu, Shiao-ling

Associate Professor of Chinese Language and Literature, Oregon State University
First House of Beijing Duck, The; Li Longyun; We; Xu Jiujiang's Promotion

Zelenak, Michael X.

Associate Professor, Department of Theatre Arts, Stony Brook University, State University of New York
Dramaturgy

Zhang, Lei

Doctoral Student, Texas Woman's University
Foon, Dennis

Zinman, Toby

Professor of English, University of the Arts
Eliot, Thomas Stearns; Family Reunion, The; Murder in the Cathedral

Zwerling, Philip

Assistant Professor of English and Creative Writing, Ursinus College
Belasco, David; Girl of the Golden West, The; Hurston, Zora Neale

SYNOPTIC OUTLINE OF CONTENTS

The outline presents entries organized by topics to help users navigate the contents. Entries are listed by countries; plays; playwrights; movements, forms, and genres; companies, groups, and theaters; and concepts and terms. The final section is a list of entries organized by country.

COUNTRIES

Afghanistan
Africa
Argentina
Australia
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Bulgaria
Burma
Cambodia
Canada
China
Costa Rica
Croatia
Cuba
Czechoslovakia
Denmark
Egypt
England
Estonia
Finland
France
Germany
Greece
Hungary
Iceland
India
Indonesia
Iran
Iraq
Ireland
Israel
Italy
Japan

Laos
Latvia
Lithuania
Macedonia
Malaysia
Mexico
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Pakistan
Palestine
Peru
Philippines
Poland
Puerto Rico
Romania
Russia and the Soviet Union
Scotland
Serbia
Singapore
Slovakia
South Africa
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Thailand
Turkey
United States
Venezuela
Vietnam

PLAYS

Abe Lincoln in Illinois
Abie's Irish Rose
Absolute Prohibition
Accidental Death of an Anarchist
Adding Machine, The Admirable Crichton, The Advent
Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God
After the Fall
After the Reunion
Agra Bazaar
Albertine in Five Times
Alison's House

All God's Chillun Got Wings
All My Sons
All That Fall
Almighty Voice and His Wife
American Buffalo
America Play, The Anatol
Andorra
Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes.
Part One: Millennium Approaches
Anna Christie
Anna Sophie Hedvig
Antigone
Arcadia
Architect and the Emperor of Assyria, The Aria
Arms and the Man
Army Formation
Art
Ascent of F6, The
Atami Murder Case, The
At the Hawk's Well
Awake and Sing!
Baal
Baby Blues, The
Back to Methuselah
Balconville
Balcony, The Bald Soprano, The
Baltimore Waltz, The Bankruptcy, A
Bathhouse, The Bed
Bedbug, The
Before Daybreak
Before the New Bureau Director Came Beggar on Horseback
Bent
Betrayal
Beyond Human Power
Beyond the Horizon
Billy Bishop Goes to War
Biography

Bird Lovers, The Birthday Party, The Blacks, The Blasted
Blithe Spirit
Blood Knot, The Blood Relations
Blood, Sweat and Fears
Blood Wedding
Bohemian Lights
Bondagers
Boss, The Boy Meets Girl
Brand
Break the Heart
Breasts of Tiresias, The
Bridge, The Browning Version, The Buried Child
Butterfly Kiss
Caligula
Camino Real
Candle King, The
Cao Cao and Yang Xiu
Caretaker, The
Carl XII
Caste
Cathleen ni Houlihan
Cat on a Hot Tin Roof
Caucasian Chalk Circle, The Cavalcade
Chamber Plays
Charandas the Thief
Charley's Aunt
Cherry Orchard, The
Cheviot, the Stag and the Black, Black Oil, The Children's Hour, The
Chronicle of Sangshuping, The Circle, The Closer
Clothes They Stood Up In, The
Cloud Nine
Club, The Coast of Utopia, The
Cockroach Opera, The Coffin is Too Big for the Hole, The

- Collected Works of Billy the Kid, The Colleen Bawn, The
 Comic Mystery
 Condemned of Altona, The
 Conspiracy of Feelings, A Constant Wife, The Copenhagen
 Corker
 Corn is Green, The Coronation Voyage, The
 Corona Trilogy
 Count of Monte Cristo, The Crackwalker, The
 Cradle Will Rock, The Creditors
 Crimes and Crimes
 Crucible, The
 Curse of the Starving Class
 Cyrano de Bergerac
 Dance of Death, The Dangerous Corner
 Danton Case, The
 Daphne Laureola
 Daughter in Law, The
 Davy Crockett
 Day in the Death of Joe Egg, A
 Days of the Turbins
 Days Without End
 Dead End
 Dear Brutus
 Death and the Maiden
 Death of a Salesman
 Deep Blue Sea, The
 Design for Living
 Desire Under the Elms
 Dinner at Eight
 Doll's House, A
 Doubt
 Dream of the Red Chamber
 Dream Play, A
 Dreams of Clytemnestra, The
 Drums in the Night
 Dry Lips Oughta Move to Kapuskasing
 Dutchman
 Dybbuk, The Earth Spirit
 Easiest Way, The Easter
- East Lynne
 Ebong Indrajit
 Eight Revolutionary Model Plays
 Elephant, The
 Elizabeth the Queen
 Emperor and Galilean
 Emperor Jones, The
 Endgame
 Enemy of the People, An
 Enrico IV
 Entertainer, The Entertaining Mr Sloane
 En the Ascetic
 Equus
 Erik XIV
 Essex Girls
 Eurydice
 Eve of Retirement
 Fall of the City, The Family Reunion, The Far Away
 Father, The
 Father Returns, The Fear and Misery in the Third Reich
 Fefu and Her Friends
 Female Parts
 Fen
 Fences
 Fifteen Strings of Cash
 Fifth of July
 First House of Beijing Duck, The Flea in Her Ear, A
 Flies, The Flight
 Fool for Love
 Forced Up Mount Liang
 Forest, The
 Four Saints in Three Acts
 Friends
 From Morning to Midnight
 Front Page, The Game of Life, The Ghashiram Kotwal
 Ghosts
 Ghost Sonata, The
 Girl of the Golden West, The Glass Menagerie, The Glengarry Glen Ross
 Golden Boy
- Goodnight Desdemona (Good Morning Juliet)
 Good Woman of Setzuan, The Great Divide, The Great Galeoto, The
 Great God Brown, The
 Great Rebellion, The Great USkranian Circus, The
 Green Pastures, The
 Guantanamo: "Honor Bound to Defend Freedom"
 Gustav Vasa
 Guy Domville
 Hai Rui's Dismissal
 Hairy Ape, The Halfway House
 Hamletmachine
 Hands of God, The Hangman, The Happy Days
 Hayavadana
 Hay Fever
 Hazel Kirke
 Head of Mary
 Heartbreak House
 Hedda Gabler
 Heidi Chronicles, The
 Heldenplatz
 He Who Gets Slapped
 Hindle Wakes
 History Boys, The
 Hobson's Choice
 Holiday
 Homecoming, The Hosanna
 House of America
 House of Bernarda Alba, The Hughie
 Hunchback of Aomori, The
 I Am My Own Wife
 Iceman Cometh, The
 Idiot's Delight
 I'd Rather Be Right
 Illegitimate Son, The
 I Love You, Baby Blue
 Importance of Being Earnest, The
 In Abraham's Bosom
 In a Land of Silence
 Infernal Machine, The
 Information for Foreigners
 Insect Comedy, The
- Inspector Calls, An
 In the Shadow of the Glen
 In the Summer House
 Invention of Love, The Investigation, The
 It Is Not the Tall Grass Blown by the Wind
 It Pays to Advertise
 Ivanov
 Jet of Blood, The Jewel
 Jitters
 John Bull's Other Island
 John Ferguson
 John Gabriel Borkman
 Jonah
 Journey's End
 June Moon
 Juno and the Paycock
 Kaspar
 Keep, The Knack, The
 Krapp's Last Tape
 Lady from the Sea, The
 Lady on Her Balcony, The
 Lady's Not for Burning, The Lady Windermere's Fan
 Land of Volcanic Ash
 Lazarus Laughed
 League of Nathans, The Lesson, The Liebele
 Life of Galileo, The Life of Man, The Life with Father
 Lilies
 Lion in the Streets
 Little Eyolf
 Little Foxes, The
 Little Ham
 Long Day's Journey Into Night
 Long Voyage Home, The Look Back in Anger
 Loot
 Lower Depths, The Loyalties
 Machinal
 Madame de Sade
 Madman and the Nun, The
 Madness of George III, The
 Maggie and Pierre

Magistrate, The	Old Stone Mansion	Real Thing, The	Skriker, The
Maiden Stone, The	Old Times	Reigen	Son, The
Maids, The	Oleanna	Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, The	Song at Twilight, A
Major Barbara	On a Muggy Night in Mumbai	Return of the Prodigal, The	Soon the Time Will Come
Man and Superman	Once in a Lifetime	Riders to the Sea	Spreading the News
Ma Rainey's Black Bottom	Ondine	Right You Are	Spring Awakening
Marat/Sade	One Day in Asadh	Rip Van Winkle	Stage Door
Marcel Pursued by Hounds	On Guard Beneath the Neon	Road	Sticks and Bones
Margaret Fleming	Lights	Roberto Zucco	Still Stands the House
Married to a Celestial Lady	On the Job	Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are	Story of Butterfly Lovers, The
Mary Queen of Scots Got Her	Optimistic Tragedy, An	Dead	Strange Interlude
Head Chopped Off	Orpheus	Rosmersholm	Streetcar Named Desire, A
Master Builder, The	Ottayan	Routes and Escape Routes	Street Scene
"Master Harold" . . . and the	Our Country's Good	Royal Guests	Strictly Dishonorable boys	Our Power and Our Glory	Rudali	Stronger, The Master Olof	Our Town	R.U.R.	Struggle of the Naga Tribe, The
Measures Taken, The	Parasites, The	Rutherford and Son	Stuff Happens
Memoir	Peer Gynt	Saga of the Wet Hens	Suddenly Last Summer
Memorandum, The	Peter Pan	Saint Frances of Hollywood	Suicide, The
Men in White	Petrified Forest, The	Saint Joan	Summer and Smoke
Mid-Channel	Philadelphia, Here I Come	Sakharam Binder	Summerfolk
Miss Julie	Philadelphia Story, The	Salvation Nell	Sunday Promenade, The
Miss Lulu Bett	Physicists, The	Saratoga	Tale of Shuzenji
Month in the Country, A	Piano Lesson, The	Satin Slipper, The	Tale of Teeka, The
Moon for the Misbegotten, A	Picnic	Saved	Tales from the Vienna Woods
Morning's at Seven	Pillars of Society	Scientific Americans	Talking Heads
Mother, The	Pillowman, The	Scoundrel, The	Tamara
Mother Courage and Her Children	Platonov	Scrap of Paper, A	Terrible but Unfinished Story of Moths	Playboy of the Western World,	Screens, The	Norodom Sihanouk, King of Mourning Becomes Electra	The	Seagull, The	Cambodia, The
Mrs. Warren's Profession	Plough and the Stars, The	Seagull Eaters	Thérèse Raquin
Mulatto	Polygraph	Season in the Congo, A	They Don't Wear Black Tie
Murder in the Cathedral	Porgy and Bess	Second Mrs. Tanqueray, The	They Knew What They Wanted
My Heart's in the Highlands	Power of Darkness, The	Secret Service	Theyyattheyyam
My Partner	Power Plays, The	Serjeant Musgrave's Dance	Third Sister Liu
Mystery-Bouffe	Power Versus Law	Seven Keys to Baldpate	Thirty Days in September
Name, The	Pretenders, The	Seven Streams of the River Ota,	Threepenny Opera, The
Needles and Opium	Price, The	The	Three Sisters
New York Idea, The	Princess Pocahontas and the Blue	Sexual Perversity in Chicago	Three Tall Women
Night Is Mother to the Day, The	Spots	Shadow of a Gunman, The	Thunderstorm, The 'Night Mother	Private Lives	Shape of Things, The	Ticket-of-Leave Man, The Night of the Iguana, The	Processional	Shenandoah	Time of Your Life, The Night of the Tribades, The	Professor Bernhardt	Sheppey	To Damascus
No Exit	Puppet Show, A	Shore Acres	Tokyo Notes
Normal	Purgatory	Silver Tassie, The	Tonight We Improvise
No Time for Comedy	Pygmalion	Sisters in Law	Top Girls
Observe the Sons of Ulster	Quare Fellow, The	Sister Xianglin	Topography of a Nude
Marching Towards the Somme	Queen and the Rebels, The	Six Characters in Search of an	Toth Family, The Occupation of Heather Rose, The	Rain from Heaven	Author	Touch of the Poet, A
Odd Couple, The	Raisin in the Sun, A	Sizwe Bansi Is Dead	Trainspotting
Offending the Audience	Reading Hebron	Skin of Our Teeth, The	Transfiguration

- Translations
 Travesties
 Trifles
 Trojan War Will Not Take Place, The True West
 Truth, The Truth About Blayds, The Tughlaq
 Twilight Crane
 Ubu Trilogiy
 Uncle Vanya
 Uncommon Women and Others
 Underpants, The
 Under the Gaslight
 Under the Whaleback
 Unidentified Human Remains and the True Nature of Love
 View from the Bridge, A
 Virgin's Mask, The
 Visit of the Old Lady, The Voice of the Turtle, The Voysey Inheritance, The
 Waiting for Godot
 Waiting for Lefty
 Waltz of the Toreadors, The War Babies
 Waste Water Station, The Wave, The
 We
 Weavers, The
 Wedding Day at the Cro-Magnons'
 Wedding Gown
 Whale Riding Weather
 What Price Glory?
 When We Dead Awaken
 Whistle in the Dark, A
 White-Haired Girl
 White Snake, The
 Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?
 Why Marry?
 Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd, The Wild Duck, The
 Winterset
 Woman's Life, A
 Women, The Wood Carver's Wife, The Word, The Wedding, The
- Xu Jiujiang's Promotion
 Yerma
 You Can't Take It With You
 Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline
 Zoo Story, The
- PLAYWRIGHTS
 Abdallah, Mohammed Ben
 Abe Kōbō
 Abell, Kjeld
 Ackland, Rodney
 Adamov, Arthur
 Aidoo, Ama Ata
 Akimoto Matsuyo
 Akins, Zoë
 Albee, Edward
 al-Hakim, Tawfiq
 Álvarez Quintero, Joaquín, and Serafín Álvarez Quintero
 Anderson, Clara Rothwell
 Anderson, Maxwell
 Andreev, Leonid
 Anouilh, Jean
 Apollinaire, Guillaume
 Arbuzov, Aleksei
 Arden, John
 Ariyoshi Sawako
 Arrabal, Fernando
 Artaud, Antonin
 Auden, Wystan Hugh
 Audiberti, Jacques
 Ayckbourn, Alan
 Bagnold, Enid
 Bai Fengxi
 Baitz, Jon Robin
 Baker, George Pierce
 Baldwin, James
 Balodis, Janis
 Baraka, Amiri
 Barker, Howard
 Barnes, Djuna
 Barrie, J. M.
 Barry, Philip
 Bean, Richard
 Beckett, Samuel
 Becque, Henry
 Behan, Brendan
 Behrman, S.N.
 Belasco, David
- Benavente, Jacinto
 Bennett, Alan
 Bentley, Eric
 Bergman, Hjalmar
 Bergman, Ingmar
 Berman, Sabina
 Bernhard, Thomas
 Betsuyaku Minoru
 Betti, Ugo
 Bhagat, Datta
 Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald
 Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne
 Blessing, Lee
 Blitzstein, Marc
 Blok, Aleksandr
 Bogart, Anne
 Bolt, Robert
 Bond, Edward
 Boothe, Clare
 Borchert, Wolfgang
 Bouchard, Michel Marc
 Boucher, Denise
 Boucicault, Dionysius
 Bowles, Jane
 Bracco, Roberto
 Branner, Hans Christian
 Brasch, Thomas
 Brecht, Bertolt
 Brenton, Howard
 Bridie, James
 Brioux, Eugene
 Bronnen, Arnolt
 Brooks, Daniel
 Buero Vallejo, Antonio
 Bulgakov, Mikhail
 Bullins, Ed
 Campbell, Bartley
 Campbell, William Wilfred
 Camus, Albert
 Cao Yu
 Čapek, Karel
 Caragiale, Ion Luca
 Carr, Marina
 Cartwright, Jim
 Casas, Myrna
 Castro, Consuelo de
 Césaire, Aimé
 Chan, Anthony
 Chan, Joanna
 Chandrababha, Sompop
 Chekhov, Anton
- Chen Baichen
 Chiarelli, Luigi
 Childress, Alice
 Chlumberg, Hans
 Chong, Ping
 Choukri, Mohamed
 Churchill, Caryl
 Cixous, Hélène
 Clark, Sally
 Claudel, Paul
 Claus, Hugo
 Cocteau, Jean
 Connelly, Marc
 Cook, Michael
 Copi
 Coward, Noël
 Crommelynck, Fernand
 Crothers, Rachel
 Crowley, Mart
 Cruz, Migdalia
 Cummings, E.E.
 Curzon, Sarah Anne
 Cusack, Dymphna
 Dadie, Bernard
 Dagerman, Stig
 Daly, Augustin
 D'Annunzio, Gabriele
 Dattani, Mahesh
 Davies, Robertson
 Davis, Jack
 De Filippo, Eduardo
 De Groen, Alma
 Delaney, Shelagh
 Denison, Merrill
 D'Erzell, Catalina
 Dike, Fatima
 Ding Xilin
 Diosdado, Ana
 Discépolo, Armando
 Dorfman, Ariel
 Dorr, Nicolás
 Drachmann, Holger
 Dragún, Osvaldo
 Dubillard, Roland
 Dumas fils
 Duncan, Ronald
 Durang, Christopher
 Duras, Marguerite
 Dürrenmatt, Friedrich
 Dutt, Utpal
 Echegaray, José

Edwards, Dic	Gilbert, William Schwenck	Henley, Beth	Kalisky, René
Egloff, Elizabeth	Gillette, William	Hernández, Luisa Josefina	Kambanellis, Iakovos
Eliot, Thomas Stearns	Ginzburg, Natalia	Herne, James A.	Kane, Sarah
Elkunchwar, Mahesh	Giraudoux, Jean	Hewett, Dorothy	Kanin, Garson
Enquist, Per Olov	Glaspell, Susan	Heyward, Dorothy, and Heyward, Dubose	Kara Jūrō
Enright, Nick	Glover, Sue	Highway, Tomson	Karnad, Girish
Ensler, Eve	Goldfaden, Avrom	Hirata Oriza	Karvaš, Peter
Erdman, Nikolai	Goll, Yvan	Hirschbein, Peretz	Katō Michio
Ervine, St. John	Gombrowicz, Witold	Hochhuth, Rolf	Kaufman, George S.
Evreinov, Nikolai	Gordin, Jacob	Hofmannsthal, Hugo von	Kawakami Otojirō
Fassbinder, Rainer Werner	Gorky, Maksim	Hōjō Hideji	Kawatake Mokuami
Fennario, David	Gorostiza, Carlos	Hollingsworth, Margaret	Kelly, George
Ferber, Edna	Gow, Michael	Hollingsworth, Michael	Kemp, Jenny
Feydeau, Georges	Grace-Smith, Briar	Hong Shen	Kennedy, Adrienne
Fierstein, Harvey	Granville-Barker, Harley	Horowitz, Israel	Kerr, Lois Reynolds
Fischerová, Daniela	Grass, Günter	Horváth, Ödön von	Khan-Din, Ayub
Fitch, Clyde	Gray, John	Houghton, William Stanley	Kharms, Daniil Ivanovich
Fleißer, Marieluise	Gray, Spalding	Howard, Bronson	Kilroy, Thomas
Fo, Dario	Green, Paul	Howard, Sidney	Kingsley, Sidney
Foon, Dennis	Gregory, Lady	Howe, Tina	Kinoshita Junji
Foote, Horton	Greig, David	Howells, William Dean	Kipphardt, Heinar
Foreman, Richard	Grieg, Nordahl	Hoyt, Charles H.	Kishida Rio
Fornes, Maria Irene	Griffiths, Linda	Hughes, Holly	Kitamura Sō
Forssell, Lars	Grimke, Angelina Weld	Hughes, Langston	Knutzon, Line
Fosse, Jon	Grumberg, Jean-Claude	Hurston, Zora Neale	Kōkami Shōji
Fraser, Brad	Guare, John	Husain, Shaharom	Kokoschka, Oskar
Frayn, Michael	Guarnieri, Gianfrancesco	Hwang, David Henry	Koltès, Bernard-Marie
Freeman, David	Guo Moruo	Hwang Mei-shu	Kon, Stella
French, David	Guo Qihong	Ibsen, Henrik	Kopit, Arthur
Friel, Brian	Guo Shixing	Ilagan, Bonifacio	Kornfeld, Paul
Frisch, Max	Gurney, A. R.	Inge, William	Kouka, Hone
Fry, Christopher	Halac, Ricardo	Innaurato, Albert	Kramer, Larry
Fugard, Athol	Hall, Roger	Inoue Hisashi	Kraus, Karl
Fukuda Tsuneari	Hamsun, Knut	Ionesco, Eugene	Krizanc, John
Fukuda Yoshiyuki	Handke, Peter	Isherwood, Christopher	Krleža, Miroslav
Furuhashi Teiji	Hang Thun Hak	Iwamatsu Ryō	Kroetz, Franz Xaver
Gale, Zona	Hansberry, Lorraine	Izumi Kyōka	Kubo Sakae
Galsworthy, John	Hare, David	Jacob, Malou	Kubota Mantarō
Gambaro, Griselda	Harrigan, Edward G.	James, Henry	Kuo Pao Kun
Ganguli, Usha	Hart, Moss	Jarry, Alfred	Kureishi, Hanif
Gao Xingjian	Harte, Bret	Jelinek, Elfriede	Kushner, Tony
García Lorca, Federico	Hasenclever, Walter	Jellicoe, Ann	LaBute, Neil
Garro, Elena	Hashmi, Safdar	Jenkin, Len	Lagerkvist, Pär
Gatti, Armand	Hassan, Noordin	Jepsen, Erling	Lai Sheng-ch'uan
Geary, David	Hauptmann, Gerhart	Jin Yun	Langer, František
Gelber, Jack	Havel, Václav	Joaquin, Nick	Lao She
Genet, Jean	Hayes, Kate Simpson	Johnson, Georgia Douglas	Lapeña-Bonifacio, Amelia
Ghelderode, Michel de	Heiberg, Gunnar	Johst, Hanns	Lardner, Ring
Giacosa, Giuseppe	Heijermans, Herman	Jones, Henry Arthur	Lawler, Ray
Gide, André	Hein, Christoph	Kaiser, Georg	Lawrence, David Herbert
Gilbert, Sky	Hellman, Lillian

- Lawrence, Jerome and Robert E. Lee
 Lawson, John Howard
 Lee Kuo-hsiu
 Lenormand, Henri-René
 Leow Puay Tin
 Liang Bingkun
 Li Jianwu
 Lill, Wendy
 Li Longyun
 Lindsay, Howard, and Russel Crouse
 Linney, Romulus
 Liu Ching-min
 Lochhead, Liz
 Loher, Dea
 Lord, Robert
 Løveid, Cecilie
 Lucas, Craig
 Ludlam, Charles
 Lunacharsky, Anatoly Vasilyevich
 Luo Huaizhen
 MacDonald, Ann-Marie
 MacDonald, Bryden
 Machado, Eduardo
 MacIvor, Daniel
 MacKaye, Percy
 MacKaye, Steele
 MacLeish, Archibald
 MacLeod, Joan
 MacLiammóir, Micheál
 Madsen, Svend Åge
 Maeterlinck, Maurice
 Mafune Yutaka
 Maillet, Antonine
 Makino Nozomi
 Mamet, David
 Mann, Emily
 Maraini, Dacia
 Marber, Patrick
 Marchessault, Jovette
 Margolin, Deb
 Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso
 Martínez Sierra, Gregorio
 Ma Sen
 Mason, Bruce
 Matura, Mustapha
 Maugham, William Somerset
 Mayakovsky, Vladimir
 Mayama Seika
 Ma Zhongjun
 McDonagh, Martin
 McGee, Greg
 McGrath, John
 McGuinness, Frank
 McNally, Terrence
 McPherson, Conor
 Medoff, Mark
 Mee, Charles
 Mighon, John
 Mihura, Miguel
 Millay, Edna St. Vincent
 Miller, Arthur
 Miller, Joaquin
 Milne, Alan Alexander
 Milner, Arthur
 Mishima Yukio
 Mitchell, Langdon
 Miyoshi Jūrō
 Molnár, Ferenc
 Mondragón Aguirre, Magdalena
 Montherlant, Henry de
 Moody, William Vaughn
 Morett, María
 Morimoto Kaoru
 Mori Ōgai
 Moses, Daniel David
 Mouawad, Wajdi
 Mrozek, Sławomir
 Müller, Heiner
 Munk, Kaj
 Munro, Rona
 Murayama Tomoyoshi
 Murphy, Tom
 Murrell, John
 Nadeem, Shahid
 Naghiu, Iosif
 Nagy, Phyllis
 Nathansen, Henri
 Neilson, Anthony
 Nelson, Richard
 Ngema, Mbongeni
 Ngugi wa Thiong'o
 Noda Hideki
 Noer, Arifin C.
 Norén, Lars
 Norman, Marsha
 Nottage, Lynn
 Nowra, Louis
 Ocampo, María Luisa
 O'Casey, Sean
 Odets, Clifford
 Ohashi Yasuhiko
 Okamoto Kidō
 Olesha, Yury
 Olsen, Ernst Bruun
 Ondaatje, Michael
 O'Neill, Eugene
 Onwueme, Tess
 Őrkény, István
 Ørnsbo, Jess
 Orton, Joe
 Osanai Kaoru
 Osborn, Paul
 Osborne, Alan
 Osborne, John
 Oshodi, Maria
 Osofisan, Femi
 Ostrovsky, Aleksandr
 Ōta Shōgo
 Ouyang Yuqian
 Overmyer, Eric
 Owens, Rochelle
 Page, Louise
 Panikkar, Kavalam Narayana
 Parks, Suzan-Lori
 Páskándi, Géza
 Patrick, John
 Pedrero, Paloma
 Pérez Galdós, Benito
 Pickthall, Marjorie
 Piñera, Virgilio
 Pinero, Arthur
 Pinget, Robert
 Pinter, Harold
 Pirandello, Luigi
 Pollock, Sharon
 Pomerance, Bernard
 Popescu, Dumitru Radu
 Popović, Aleksandar
 Praga, Marco
 Priestley, John Boynton
 Przybyszewska, Stanisława
 Rabe, David
 Radrigán, Juan
 Rainis (pseudonym for Jānis Pliekšāns)
 Rakesh, Mohan
 Rama V
 Rame, Franca
 Rattigan, Terence
 Ravenhill, Mark
 Rayson, Hannie
 Raznovich, Diana
 Reaney, James
 Rendra
 Renée
 Resino, Carmen
 Reza, Yasmina
 Riantiaro, Nano
 Rice, Elmer
 Richardson, Jack
 Ringwood, Gwen Pharis
 Rivera, José
 Robertson, Thomas William
 Robins, Elizabeth
 Robinson, Lennox
 Rodrigues, Nelson
 Rodríguez, Jesusa
 Romans, Jules
 Romeril, John
 Ross, Cree Ian
 Rostand, Edmond
 Rowlands, Ian
 Różewicz, Tadeusz
 Rugyendo, Mukotani
 Russell, Willy
 Ryga, George
 Saalbach, Astrid
 Sakate Yōji
 Salacrou, Armand
 Sánchez, Florencio
 Sanchis Sinisterra, José
 Sándor, Malena
 Sardou, Victorien
 Saroyan, William
 Sarraute, Nathalie
 Sartre, Jean-Paul
 Sarumpaet, Ratna
 Sastre, Alfonso
 Satoh Makoto
 Schmidhuber de la Mora, Guillermo
 Schnitzler, Arthur
 Sears, Djanet
 Senda Koreya
 Serumaga, Robert
 Sewell, Stephen
 Shaffer, Peter
 Shange, Ntozake
 Shanley, John Patrick
 Sharma, Tripurari

Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Theater of the Grotesque
 Theater of Urgency
 Tragedy
 Tragicomedy
 Volksstück
 Yiddish Theater
 Zarzuela

COMPANIES, GROUPS, AND THEATERS

Arena Theater of São Paulo
 Community Theater
 Donmar Warehouse
 Federal Theatre Project
 Field Day Theatre Company
 Five Lesbian Brothers
 Group Theatre, The
 Horse and Bamboo Theatre
 Joint Stock Theatre Group
 Living Theatre
 Me xihc co Teatro (MxTeatro)
 Monstrous Regiment
 Moscow Art Theatre and Studios
 Moscow State Yiddish Theatre
 New Dramatists
 Philippine Educational
 Theater Association
 7:84
 Shared Experience Theatre
 SITI Company
 Split Britches
 Suspect Culture
 Takarazuka Revue Company
 Théâtre du Grand-Guignol
 Theatre Guild
 Wildcat Stage Productions

CONCEPTS AND TERMS

Acting
 Collage
 Deconstruction
 Directing Plays
 Dramatic Criticism
 Dramatic Cycles
 Dramatic Dialogue
 Dramatic Structure
 Dramaturgy
 Performance Studies

Stage Directions and Stage Sets
 Subtext
 Theatricality

ENTRIES ORGANIZED BY COUNTRY

Africa

Choukri, Mohamed
 Documentary Drama
 Identity Theater
 Interculturalism
 Surrealism

East Africa

Ngugi wa Thiong'o
 Rugyendo, Mukotani
 Serumaga, Robert
 Tsegaye Gabre-Medhin

West Africa

Abdallah, Mohammed
 Ben
 Aidoo, Ama Ata
 Dadie, Bernard
 Onwueme, Tess
 Osofisan, Femi
 Soyinka, Wole
 Sutherland, Efua
 Theodora
 See also Egypt and South Africa

Argentina

Absurdism
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Bridge, The Discépolo, Armando
 Dragún, Osvaldo
 Gambaro, Griselda
 Gorostiza, Carlos
 Grotesco Criollo
 Halac, Ricardo
 Information for Foreigners
 Interculturalism
 Open Theater
 Raznovich, Diana
 Sánchez, Florencio
 Sándor, Malena
 Socialist Realism

Australia

Balodis, Janis
 Cusack, Dymphna
 Davis, Jack

De Groen, Alma
 Enright, Nick
 Gow, Michael
 Hewett, Dorothy
 Identity Theater
 Interculturalism
 Kemp, Jenny
 Lawler, Ray
 Lord, Robert
 Nowra, Louis
 Rayson, Hannie
 Romeril, John
 Sewell, Stephen
 Williamson, David

Austria

Anatol
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Bernhard, Thomas
 Chlumberg, Hans
 Eve of Retirement
 Expressionism
 Handke, Peter
 Happenings and
 Intermedia
 Heldenplatz
 Hofmannsthal, Hugo von
 Jelinek, Elfriede
 Kaspar
 Kokoschka, Oskar
 Kraus, Karl
 Learning Play
 Liebele
 Offending the Audience
 Professor Bernhadi
 Reigen
 Reinhardt, Max
 Schnitzler, Arthur
 Streeruwitz, Marlene
 Surrealism
 Turrini, Peter
 Volksstück

Belgium

Avant-Garde Drama
 Claus, Hugo
 Crommelynck, Fernand
 Dadaism
 Ghelderode, Michel de
 Happenings and
 Intermedia
 Kalisky, René
 Maeterlinck, Maurice

Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Willems, Paul

Brazil

Arena Theater of São
 Paulo
 Boal, Augusto
 Break the Heart
 Candle King, The Castro, Consuelo de
 Documentary Drama
 Guarnieri, Gianfrancesco
 Rodrigues, Nelson
 They Don't Wear Black Tie
 Vianna Filho ("Vianinha"),
 Oduvaldo
 Wedding Gown

Cambodia

Hang Thun Hak

Canada

Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Albertine in Five Times
 Almighty Voice and His Wife
 Anderson, Clara Rothwell
 Aria
 Baby Blues, The Balconville
 Billy Bishop Goes to War
 Blood Relations
 Bouchard, Michel Marc
 Boucher, Denise
 Brooks, Daniel
 Campbell, William
 Wilfred
 Clark, Sally
 Collected Works of Billy the Kid, The Cook, Michael
 Corker
 Coronation Voyage, The Crackwalker, The
 Curzon, Sarah Anne
 Davies, Robertson
 Denison, Merrill
 Dry Lips Oughta Move to Kapuskasing
 Environmental Theater
 Fennario, David
 Foon, Dennis

- Fraser, Brad
 Freeman, David
 French, David
 Gilbert, Sky
 Goodnight Desdemona (Good Morning Juliet)
 Gray, John
 Griffiths, Linda
 Hayes, Kate Simpson
 Highway, Tomson
 Hollingsworth, Margaret
 Hollingsworth, Michael
 Hosanna
 I Love You, Baby Blue
 Interculturalism
 Jewel
 Jitters
 Kerr, Lois Reynolds
 Krizanc, John
 League of Nathans, The Lilies
 Lill, Wendy
 Lion in the Streets
 Luscombe, George
 MacDonald, Ann-Marie
 MacDonald, Bryden
 MacIvor, Daniel
 MacLeod, Joan
 Maggie and Pierre
 Mailliet, Antonine
 Marcel Pursued by Hounds
 Marchessault, Jovette
 Memoir
 Mighton, John
 Milner, Arthur
 Mock Parliaments, The
 Moses, Daniel David
 Mouawad, Wajdi
 Murrell, John
 Needles and Opium
 Occupation of Heather Rose, The Ondaatje, Michael
 On the Job
 Pickthall, Marjorie
 Pollock, Sharon
 Polygraph
 Power Plays, The Princess Pocahontas and the Blue Spots
 Reading Hebron
- Reaney, James
 Ringwood, Gwen Pharis
 Ross, Cree Ian
 Ryga, George
 Saga of the Wet Hens
 Saint Frances of Hollywood
 Scientific Americans
 Sears, Djanet
 Seven Streams of the River Ota, The Sherman, Jason
 Simard, Andre
 Sisters in Law
 Still Stands the House
 Storey, Raymond
 Tale of Teeka, The
 Tamara
 Taylor, Drew Hayden
 Thompson, Judith
 Thompson, Paul
 Tremblay, Michel
 Unidentified Human Remains and the True Nature of Love
 Verdecchia, Guillermo
 Voaden, Herman
 Walker, George F.
 War Babies
 Wedding Day at the Cro-Magnons'
 Whale Riding Weather
 Wiebe, Rudy
 Wood Carver's Wife, The
 Young, David
 Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline
- China*
 After the Reunion
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Bai Fengxi
 Before the New Bureau Director Came
 Cao Cao and Yang Xiu
 Cao Yu
 Chan, Anthony
 Chan, Joanna
 Chen Baichen
 Chronicle of Sangshuping, The
 Ding Xilin
 Dream of the Red Chamber
 Fifteen Strings of Cash
- First House of Beijing Duck, The
 Forced Up Mount Liang
 Gao Xingjian
 Guo Moruo
 Guo Qihong
 Guo Shixing
 Hai Rui's Dismissal
 Hong Shen
 Hwang Mei-shu
 In a Land of Silence
 Jin Yun
 Lai Sheng-ch'uan
 Lao She
 Lee Kuo-hsiu
 Liang Bingkun
 Li Jianwu
 Li Longyun
 Little Theater Movement
 Liu Ching-min
 Luo Huaizhen
 Married to a Celestial Lady
 Ma Sen
 Ma Zhongjun
 Mei Lanfang
 On Guard Beneath the Neon Lights
 Ouyang Yuqian
 Power Versus Law
 Sha Yexin
 Sister Xianglin
 Socialist Realism
 Story of Butterfly Lovers, The Third Sister Liu
 Tian Han
 To, Raymond
 Wang Renjie
 We
 Wei Minglun
 White-Haired Girl
 White Snake, The Wu Zuguang
 Xia Yan
 Xiong Foxi
 Xu Fen
 Xu Jiuqing's Promotion
 Yang Lanchun
 Yao Yi-wei
 Yung, Danny N. T.
 Zheng Huaixing
- Croatia*
 Krleža, Miroslav
 Vojnović, Ivo
- Cuba*
 Bufo Theater
 Dorr, Nicolás
 Piñera, Virgilio
 Triana, José
- Czechoslovakia*
 Absurdism
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Čapek, Karel
 Fischerová, Daniela
 Havel, Václav
 Insect Comedy, The
 Langer, František
 Memorandum, The
 R.U.R.
 Steigerwald, Karel
 Surrealism
 Topol, Josef
- Denmark*
 Abell, Kjeld
 Anna Sophie Hedvig
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Branner, Hans Christian
 Club, The
 Drachmann, Holger
 Jepsen, Erling
 Knutzon, Line
 Madsen, Svend Åge
 Munk, Kaj
 Nathansen, Henri
 Olsen, Ernst Bruun
 Ørnsbo, Jess
 Parasites, The
 Saalbach, Astrid
 Soon the Time Will Come
 Soya, Carl Erik
 Word, The
- Egypt*
 Al-Hakim, Tawfiq
- England*
 Absurdism
 Ackland, Rodney
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Albanesi, Meggie
 Angry Young Men
 Arcadia
 Arden, John
 Ascent of F6, The

- Auden, Wystan Hugh
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Ayckbourn, Alan
 Bagnold, Enid
 Barker, Howard
 Bean, Richard
 Bed
 Bennett, Alan
 Bent
 Betrayal
 Birthday Party, The Blasted
 Blithe Spirit
 Blood, Sweat and Fears
 Bolt, Robert
 Bond, Edward
 Brenton, Howard
 Browning Version, The
 Caretaker, The
 Cartwright, Jim
 Caste
 Cavalcade
 Chance
 Charley's Aunt
 Cheviot, the Stag and the Black, Black Oil, The Churchill, Caryl
 Circle, The Closer
 Clothes They Stood Up In, The
 Cloud Nine
 Coast of Utopia, The Constant Wife, The Copenhagen
 Corn Is Green, The Coward, Noël
 Dangerous Corner
 Daughter in Law, The Day in the Death of Joe Egg, A
 Deep Blue Sea, The Delaney, Shelagh
 Design for Living
 Documentary Drama
 Donmar Warehouse
 Duncan, Ronald
 East Lynne
 Edwards, Dic
 Entertainer, The
 Entertaining Mr Sloane
 Environmental Theater
 Epic Theater
- Equus
 Essex Girls
 Far Away
 Fen
 Frayn, Michael
 Fry, Christopher
 Galsworthy, John
 Gilbert, William
 Schwenck
 Granville-Barker, Harley
 Guantanamo: "Honor Bound to Defend Freedom"
 Happenings and Intermedia
 Hare, David
 Hay Fever
 Hindle Wakes
 History Boys, The Hobson's Choice
 Homecoming, The
 Horse and Bamboo Theatre
 Houghton, William
 Stanley
 House of America
 Identity Theater
 Inspector Calls, An
 Interculturalism
 Invention of Love, The Isherwood, Christopher
 Jellicoe, Ann
 Joint Stock Theatre Group
 Jones, Henry Arthur
 Journey's End
 Kane, Sarah
 Keep, The Khan-Din, Ayub
 Knack, The
 Kureishi, Hanif
 Lady's Not for Burning, The
 Lawrence, David Herbert
 Look Back in Anger
 Loot
 Loyalties
 Madness of George III, The Magistrate, The
 Marber, Patrick
 Matura, Mustapha
 Maugham, William
 Somerset
 McGrath, John
- Mid-Channel
 Milne, Alan Alexander
 Monstrous Regiment
 Old Times
 Orton, Joe
 Osborne, Alan
 Osborne, John
 Oshodi, Maria
 Our Country's Good
 Page, Louise
 Pinero, Arthur
 Pinter, Harold
 Priestley, John Boynton
 Private Lives
 Rattigan, Terence
 Ravenhill, Mark
 Real Thing, The Return of the Prodigal, The Road
 Robertson, Thomas
 William
 Robins, Elizabeth
 Romanticism
 Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead
 Rowlands, Ian
 Russell, Willy
 Rutherford and Son
 Saved
 Second Mrs. Tanqueray, The
 Serjeant Musgrave's Dance
 Shaffer, Peter
 Shared Experience Theatre
 Sheppey
 Sherman, Martin
 Sherriff, Robert Cedric
 Skriker, The Song at Twilight, A
 Sowerby, Githa
 Stoppard, Tom
 Storey, David
 Stuff Happens
 Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Talking Heads
 Taylor, Thomas
 Thomas, Dylan
 Thomas, Edward
 Thomas, Gwyn
 Ticket-of-Leave Man, The Top Girls
- Trainspotting
 Travesties
 Truth About Blayds, The
 Under the Whaleback
 Voysey Inheritance, The Wandor, Michelene
 Waste
 Wesker, Arnold
 Whiting, John
 Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd, The
 Williams, Emllyn
 Wood, Ellen
 Yiddish Theater
- France*
 Absurdism
 Adamov, Arthur
 Anouilh, Jean
 Antigone
 Antoine, André
 Apollinaire, Guillaume
 Art
 Artaud, Antonin
 Audiberti, Jacques
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Balcony, The
 Bald Soprano, The Becque, Henry
 Blacks, The Brieux, Eugene
 Breasts of Tiresias, The Caligula
 Camus, Albert
 Césaire, Aimé
 Chance
 Cixous, Hélène
 Claudel, Paul
 Cocteau, Jean
 Condemned of Altona, The Copeau, Jacques
 Copi
 Count of Monte Cristo, The Cyrano de Bergerac
 Dadaism
 Documentary Drama
 Dubillard, Roland
 Dumas fils
 Duras, Marguerite
 Environmental Theater
 Eurydice
 Feydeau, Georges

- Flea in Her Ear, A
 Flies, The
 Gatti, Armand
 Genet, Jean
 Gide, André
 Giraudoux, Jean
 Goll, Yvan
 Grumberg, Jean-Claude
 Happenings and Intermedia
 Illegitimate Son, The
 Infernal Machine, The
 Interculturalism
 Ionesco, Eugene
 Jarry, Alfred
 Jet of Blood, The Koltès, Bernard-Marie
 Lenormand, Henri-René
 Lesson, The Maids, The Montherlant, Henry de
 Mnouchkine, Ariane
 Naturalism
 No Exit
 Ondine
 Orpheus
 Pinget, Robert
 Reza, Yasmina
 Roberto Zucco
 Romain, Jules
 Romanticism
 Rostand, Edmond
 Salacrou, Armand
 Sardou, Victorien
 Sarraute, Nathalie
 Sartre, Jean-Paul
 Satin Slipper, The Scrap of Paper, A
 Screens, The Season in the Congo, A
 Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Tardieu, Jean
 Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom Sihanouk,
 King of Cambodia, The
 Théâtre du Grand-Guignol
 Thérèse Raquin
 Trojan War Will Not Take Place, The Ubu Triloggy
- Vauthier, Jean
 Vinaver, Michel
 Vitrac, Roger
 Waltz of the Toreadors, The Zola, Émile
- Germany
- Absurdism
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Alienation Effect
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Baal
 Before Daybreak
 Borchert, Wolfgang
 Brahm, Otto
 Brasch, Thomas
 Brecht, Bertolt
 Bronnen, Arnolt
 Caucasian Chalk Circle, The Chance
 Dadaism
 Documentary Drama
 Drums in the Night
 Earth Spirit
 Epic Theater
 Expressionism
 Fassbinder, Rainer Werner
 Fear and Misery in the Third Reich
 Fleißer, Marieluise
 Formalism
 From Morning to Midnight
 Good Woman of Setzuan, The Hamletmachine
 Happenings and
 Intermedia
 Hasenclever, Walter
 Hauptmann, Gerhart
 Hein, Christoph
 Hochhuth, Rolf
 Horváth, Ödön von
 Interculturalism
 Investigation, The
 Johst, Hanns
 Kaiser, Georg
 Kipphardt, Heinar
 Kornfeld, Paul
 Kroetz, Franz Xaver
 Learning Play
 Life of Galileo, The Loher, Dea
 Marat/Sade
- Measures Taken, The Mother, The Mother Courage and Her Children
 Müller, Heiner
 New Objectivity
 Nietzsche, Friedrich
 Peymann, Claus
 Piscator, Erwin
 Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui,
 The
 Romanticism
 Socialist Realism
 Son, The Sorge, Reinhard Johannes
 Spring Awakening
 Sternheim, Carl
 Strauss, Botho
 Sudermann, Hermann
 Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Threepenny Opera, The Toller, Ernst
 Transfiguration
 Underpants, The
 Volksstück
 Wagner, Richard
 Weavers, The
 Wedekind, Frank
 Weiss, Peter
 Wolf, Friedrich
 Yiddish Theater
 Zuckmayer, Carl
- Greece
- Kambanellis, Iakovos
 Xenopoulos, Grigorios
- Hungary
- Absurdism
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Molnár, Ferenc
 Örkény, István
 Páskándi, Géza
 Socialist Realism
 Spiró, György
 Toth Family, The
- Iceland
- Sigurjonsson, Johann
- India
- Agra Bazaar
 Army Formation
 Bhagat, Datta
- Charandas the Thief
 Dattani, Mahesh
 Dutt, Utpal
 Ebong Indrajit
 Elkunchwar, Mahesh
 Ganguli, Usha
 Ghashiram Kotwal
 Great Rebellion, The Halfway House
 Hashmi, Safdar
 Hayavadana
 Identity Theater
 Interculturalism
 Karnad, Girish
 Old Stone Mansion
 On a Muggy Night in Mumbai
 One Day in Asadh
 Ottayan
 Panikkar, Kavalam
 Narayana
 Rakesh, Mohan
 Routes and Escape Routes
 Rudali
 Sakharan Binder
 Sharma, Tripurari
 Sircar, Badal
 Tanvir, Habib
 Tendulkar, Vijay
 Theyyatheyyam
 Thirty Days in September
 Thiyam, Ratan
 Tughlaq
 Wave, The
- Indonesia
- Agitation-Propaganda
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Cockroach Opera, The
 Identity Theater
 Interculturalism
 Moths
 Noer, Arifin C.
 Rendra
 Riantiarno, Nano
 Sarumpaet, Ratna
 Struggle of the Naga Tribe,
 The
 Surrealism
 Wijaya, Putu
- Ireland
- Absurdism

- All That Fall
 Arms and the Man
 At the Hawk's Well
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Back to Methuselah
 Beckett, Samuel
 Behan, Brendan
 Boucicault, Dionysius
 Carr, Marina
 Cathleen ni Houlihan
 Colleen Bawn, The
 Endgame
 Ervine, St. John
 Field Day Theatre
 Company
 Friel, Brian
 Gregory, Lady
 Happy Days
 Heartbreak House
 Importance of Being Earnest,
 The
 Interculturalism
 In the Shadow of the Glen
 John Bull's Other Island
 John Ferguson
 Juno and the Paycock
 Kilroy, Thomas
 Krapp's Last Tape
 Lady Windermere's Fan
 MacLiammóir, Micheál
 Major Barbara
 Man and Superman
 McDonagh, Martin
 McGuinness, Frank
 McPherson, Conor
 Mrs. Warren's Profession
 Murphy, Tom
 Observe the Sons of Ulster
 Marching Towards the Somme
 O'Casey, Sean
 Philadelphia, Here I Come
 Pillowman, The
 Playboy of the Western World,
 The
 Plough and the Stars, The Purgatory
 Pygmalion
 Quare Fellow, The Riders to the Sea
 Rip Van Winkle
- Robinson, Lennox
 Romanticism
 Saint Joan
 Shadow of a Gunman, The Shaw, George Bernard
 Silver Tassie, The
 Spreading the News
 Synge, John Millington
 Translations
 Waiting for Godot
 Whistle in the Dark, A
 Wilde, Oscar
 Yeats, W. B.
- Israel*
 Avant-Garde Drama
- Italy*
 Accidental Death of an Anarchist
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Betti, Ugo
 Bracco, Roberto
 Chiarelli, Luigi
 Comic Mystery
 D'Annunzio, Gabriele
 De Filippo, Eduardo
 Dreams of Clytemnestra, The
 Enrico IV
 Female Parts
 Fo, Dario
 Futurism
 Giacosa, Giuseppe
 Ginzburg, Natalia
 Happenings and
 Intermedia
 Interculturalism
 Maraini, Dacia
 Marinetti, Filippo
 Tommaso
 Pirandello, Luigi
 Praga, Marco
 Queen and the Rebels, The Rame, Franca
 Right You Are
 Six Characters in Search of an Author
 Surrealism
 Theater of the Grotesque
 Tonight We Improvise
 Verga, Giovanni
- Japan*
 Abe Kōbō
- Akimoto Matsuyo
 Angura and Shōgekijō
 Ariyoshi Sawako
 Atami Murder Case, The
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Betsuyaku Minoru
 Elephant, The
 En the Ascetic
 Father Returns, The Friends
 Fukuda Tsuneari
 Fukuda Yoshiyuki
 Furuhashi Teiji
 Head of Mary
 Hirata Oriza
 Hōjō Hideji
 Hunchback of Aomori, The
 Inoue Hisashi
 Iwamatsu Ryō
 Izumi Kyōka
 Kara Jūrō
 Katō Michio
 Kawakami Otojirō
 Kawatake Mokuami
 Kinoshita Junji
 Kishida Rio
 Kitamura Sō
 Kōkami Shōji
 Kubo Sakae
 Kubota Mantarō
 Land of Volcanic Ash
 Madame de Sade
 Mafune Yutaka
 Makino Nozomi
 Mayama Seika
 Mishima Yukio
 Miyoshi Jūrō
 Morimoto Kaoru
 Mori Ōgai
 Murayama Tomoyoshi
 Nō and Kyōgen
 Noda Hideki
 Ohashi Yasuhiko
 Okamoto Kidō
 Osanai Kaoru
 Ōta Shōgo
 Sakate Yōji
 Satoh Makoto
 Senda Koreya
 Shimizu Kunio
 Shingeki
- Shin kabuki
 Shinpa
 Suzuki Senzaburō
 Suzuki Tadashi
 Takarazuka Revue
 Company
 Tale of Shūzenji
 Tanaka Chikao
 Terayama Shūji
 Tokyo Notes
 Tsubouchi Shōyō
 Tsuka Kōhei
 Twilight Crane
 Virgin's Mask, The
 Watanabe Eriko
 Woman's Life, A
 Yamamoto Yūzō
 Yamazaki Masakazu
- Latvia*
 Rainis
- Macedonia*
 Stefanovski, Goran
- Malaysia*
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Identity Theater
 Interculturalism
 Leow Puay Tin
 Hassan, Noordin
 Husain, Shaharom
 It Is Not the Tall Grass Blown by the Wind
- Mexico*
 Berman, Sabina
 Carpa
 Corona Trilogy
 D'Erzell, Catalina
 Garro, Elena
 Hernández, Luisa Josefina
 Interculturalism
 Lady on Her Balcony, The Me xihc co Teatro
 (MxTeatro)
 Mondragón Aguirre,
 Magdalena
 Morett, María
 Ocampo, María Luisa
 Rodríguez, Jesusa
 Royal Guests
 Schmidhuber de la Mora,
 Guillermo

- Surrealism
 Usigli, Rodolfo
Netherlands
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Dadaism
 Happenings and Intermedia
 Heijermans, Herman
 Surrealism
 Symbolism
New Zealand
 Geary, David
 Grace-Smith, Briar
 Hall, Roger
 Kouka, Hone
 Mason, Bruce
 McGee, Greg
 Renée
 Thompson, Mervyn
Norway
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Bankruptcy, A
 Beyond Human Power
 Bird Lovers, The
 Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald
 Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne
 Brand
 Doll's House, A
 Emperor and Galilean
 Enemy of the People, An Fosse, Jon
 Game of Life, The Ghosts
 Grieg, Nordahl
 Hamsun, Knut
 Hedda Gabler
 Heiberg, Gunnar
 Ibsen, Henrik
 John Gabriel Borkman
 Lady From the Sea, The Little Eyolf
 Løveid, Cecilie
 Master Builder, The Name, The
 Naturalism
 Our Power and Our Glory
 Peer Gynt
 Pillars of Society
 Pretenders, The Rosmersholm
 Seagull Eaters
 When We Dead Awaken
 Wild Duck, The
Pakistan
 Nadeem, Shahid
Palestine
 Avant-Garde Drama
Peru
 Religious Theater
Philippines
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Identity Theater
 Ilagan, Bonifacio
 Interculturalism
 Jacob, Malou
 Joaquin, Nick
 Lapeña-Bonifacio, Amelia
 Philippine Educational Theater Association
Poland
 Absurdism
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Danton Case, The
 Dybbuk, The
 Formalism
 Gombrowicz, Witold
 Grass, Günter
 Madman and the Nun, The Mrożek, Sławomir
 Poor Theater
 Przybyszewska, Stanisława
 Różewicz, Tadeusz
 Socialist Realism
 Surrealism
 Wedding, The Witkiewicz, Stanisław
 Ignacy
 Wyspiański, Stanisław
 Yiddish Theater
 Zapolska, Gabriela
Puerto Rico
 Casas, Myrna
 Great USkranian Circus, The Romania
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Caragiale, Ion Luca
 Chance
 Dadaism
 Goldfaden, Avrom
 Jonah
 Naghiu, Iosif
 Popescu, Dumitru Radu
 Sorescu, Marin
 Surrealism
 Yiddish Theater
Russia and the Soviet Union
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Andreev, Leonid
 Arbuzov, Aleksei
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Bathhouse, The
 Bedbug, The
 Blok, Aleksandr
 Bulgakov, Mikhail
 Chekhov, Anton
 Cherry Orchard, The
 Conspiracy of Feelings, A
 Days of the Turbins
 Documentary Drama
 Erdman, Nikolai
 Evreinov, Nikolai
 Flight
 Forest, The Formalism
 Futurism
 Gordin, Jacob
 Gorky, Maksim
 He Who Gets Slapped
 Ivanov
 Kharms, Daniil Ivanovich
 Life of Man, The
 Lower Depths, The
 Lunacharsky, Anatoly
 Vasilyevich
 Lyubimov, Yury Petrovich
 Mayakovsky, Vladimir
 Meyerhold, Vsevolod
 Month in the Country, A
 Moscow Art Theatre and Studios
 Moscow State Yiddish
 Theatre
 Mystery-Bouffé
 Naturalism
 Olesha, Yury
 Optimistic Tragedy, An
 Ostrovsky, Aleksandr
 Platonov
 Power of Darkness, The Puppet Show, A Scoundrel, The
 Seagull, The
 Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich
 Socialist Realism
 Stanislavsky, Konstantin
 Suicide, The Summerfolk
 Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Three Sisters
 Thunderstorm, The Tolstoy, Lyov
 Tretyakov, Sergei
 Uncle Vanya
 Yiddish Theater
Scotland
 Admirable Crichton, The
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Barrie, J. M.
 Bondagers
 Bridie, James
 Daphne Laureola
 Dear Brutus
 Glover, Sue
 Greig, David
 Lochhead, Liz
 Maiden Stone, The
 Mary Queen of Scots Got Her Head Chopped Off
 Munro, Rona
 Neilson, Anthony
 Normal
 Peter Pan
 Romanticism
 7:84
 Suspect Culture
 Wildcat Stage Productions
Serbia
 Popović, Aleksandar
Singapore
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Coffin Is Too Big for the Hole,
 The
 Kon, Stella
 Kuo Pao Kun
 Ong Keng Sen
Slovakia
 Absolute Prohibition
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Karvaš, Peter
South Africa
 Avant-Garde Drama

- Blood Knot, The Dike, Fatima
 Fugard, Athol
 Interculturalism
 "Master Harold" . . . and the boys
 Ngema, Mbongeni
 Sizwe Bansi Is Dead
 Surrealism
- Spain*
 Absurdism
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Alvarez Quintero, Joaquín, and Serafin Álvarez Quintero
 Architect and the Emperor of Assyria, The Arrabal, Fernando
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Benavente, Jacinto
 Blood Wedding
 Bohemian Lights
 Buero Vallejo, Antonio
 Catalan Experimental Theater
 Dadaism
 Diosdado, Ana
 Echegaray, José
 Great Galeoto, The Happenings and Intermedia
 House of Bernarda Alba, The
 Interculturalism
 Lorca, Federico García
 Martínez Sierra, Gregorio
 Mihura, Miguel
 Pedrero, Paloma
 Pérez Galdós, Benito
 Posibilismo and Imposibilismo
 Resino, Carmen
 Sainete
 Sanchis Sinisterra, José
 Sastre, Alfonso
 Surrealism
 Theater of Urgency
 Valle-Inclán, Ramón
 María del
 Yerma
 Zarzuela
- Sweden*
 Advent
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Bergman, Hjalmar
 Bergman, Ingmar
 Carl XII
 Chamber Plays
 Creditors
 Crimes and Crimes
 Dagerman, Stig
 Dance of Death, The Dream Play, A
 Easter
 Enquist, Per Olov
 Erik XIV
 Father, The Forssell, Lars
 Ghost Sonata, The Gustav Vasa
 Hangman, The
 Lagerkvist, Pär
 Master Olof
 Miss Julie
 Naturalism
 Night Is Mother to the Day, The Night of the Tribades, The Norén, Lars
 Strindberg, August
 Stronger, The Sunday Promenade, The
 Symbolism
 To Damascus
- Switzerland*
 Absurdism
 Andorra
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Chance
 Dadaism
 Dürrenmatt, Friedrich
 Frisch, Max
 Learning Play
 Physicists, The
 Surrealism
 Symbolism
 Visit of the Old Lady, The
- Thailand*
 Chandrababha, Sompop
 Rama V
- United States*
 Abe Lincoln in Illinois
- Abie's Irish Rose
 Absurdism
 Adding Machine, The
 After the Fall
 Agitation-Propaganda
 Akins, Zoë
 Albee, Edward
 Alison's House
 All God's Chillun Got Wings
 All My Sons
 American Buffalo
 America Play, The
 Anderson, Maxwell
 Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes. Part One: Millennium Approaches
 Anna Christie
 Avant-Garde Drama
 Awake and Sing!
 Baitz, Jon Robin
 Baker, George Pierce
 Baldwin, James
 Baltimore Waltz, The
 Barnes, Djuna
 Barry, Philip
 Beggar on Horseback
 Behrman, S.N.
 Belasco, David
 Bentley, Eric
 Beyond the Horizon
 Biography
 Black Arts Movement
 Blessing, Lee
 Blitzstein, Marc
 Bogart, Anne
 Boothe, Clare
 Boss, The
 Bowles, Jane
 Boy Meets Girl
 Bullins, Ed
 Buried Child
 Butterfly Kiss
 Camino Real
 Campbell, Bartley
 Carpa
 Cat on a Hot Tin Roof
 Chance
 Children's Hour, The Childress, Alice
 Chong, Ping
- Community Theater
 Connelly, Marc
 Cradle Will Rock, The Crothers, Rachel
 Crowley, Mart
 Crucible, The
 Cruz, Migdalia
 Cummings, E.E.
 Curse of the Starving Class
 Dadaism
 Daly, Augustin
 Davy Crockett
 Days Without End
 Dead End
 Death of a Salesman
 Desire Under the Elms
 Dinner at Eight
 Documentary Drama
 Doubt
 Durang, Christopher
 Dutchman
 Easiest Way, The Egloff, Elizabeth
 Eliot, Thomas Stearns
 Elizabeth the Queen
 Emperor Jones, The
 Ensler, Eve
 Environmental Theater
 Epic Theater
 Fall of the City, The Family Reunion, The Federal Theatre Project
 Fefu and Her Friends
 Feminist Drama in the United States
 Fences
 Ferber, Edna
 Fierstein, Harvey
 Fifth of July
 Fitch, Clyde
 Five Lesbian Brothers
 Fool for Love
 Foote, Horton
 Foreman, Richard
 Formalism
 Fornes, Maria Irene
 Four Saints in Three Acts
 Front Page, The Gale, Zona
 Gelber, Jack
 Gillette, William

- Girl of the Golden West, The*
 Glaspell, Susan
Glass Menagerie, The Glengarry Glen Ross
 Golden Boy
 Gray, Spalding
Great Divide, The Great God Brown, The
 Green, Paul
Green Pastures, The Grimke, Angelina Weld
 Group Theatre, The Guare, John
 Guerrilla Theater
 Gurney, A. R.
 Guy Domville
Hairy Ape, The Hansberry, Lorraine
 Happenings and
 Intermedia
 Harrigan, Edward G.
 Hart, Moss
 Harte, Bret
 Hazel Kirke
Heidi Chronicles, The
 Hellman, Lillian
 Henley, Beth
 Herne, James A.
 Heyward, Dorothy, and Heyward, Dubose
 Holiday
 Horovitz, Israel
 Howard, Bronson
 Howard, Sidney
 Howe, Tina
 Howells, William Dean
 Hoyt, Charles H.
 Hughes, Holly
 Hughes, Langston
 Hughie
 Hurston, Zora Neale
 Hwang, David Henry
I Am My Own Wife
Iceman Cometh, The
 Identity Theater
Idiot's Delight
I'd Rather Be Right
In Abraham's Bosom
 Inge, William
 Innaurato, Albert
 Interculturalism
- In the Summer House*
It Pays to Advertise
 James, Henry
 Jazz
 Jenkin, Len
 Johnson, Georgia Douglas
 Jones, Robert Edmond
 June Moon
 Kanin, Garson
 Kaufman, George S.
 Kelly, George
 Kennedy, Adrienne
 Kingsley, Sidney
 Kopit, Arthur
 Kushner, Tony
 LaBute, Neil
 Lardner, Ring
 Lawrence, Jerome, and
 Robert E. Lee
 Lawson, John Howard
Lazarus Laughed
 Librettists
Life with Father
 Lindsay, Howard, and Russel Crouse
 Linney, Romulus
Little Foxes, The Little Ham
 Living Theatre
Long Day's Journey Into Night
Long Voyage Home, The
 Lucas, Craig
 Ludlam, Charles
 Machado, Eduardo
Machinal
 MacKaye, Percy
 MacKaye, Steele
 MacLeish, Archibald
 Mamet, David
 Mann, Emily
Ma Rainey's Black Bottom
 Margaret Fleming
 Margolin, Deb
 McNally, Terrence
 Medoff, Mark
 Mee, Charles
Men in White
 Millay, Edna St. Vincent
 Miller, Arthur
 Miller, Joaquin
 Miss Lulu Bett
- Mitchell, Langdon
 Moody, William Vaughn
Moon for the Misbegotten, A
Mourning Becomes Electra
 Mulatto
Murder in the Cathedral
My Heart's in the Highlands
My Partner
 Nagy, Phyllis
 Nelson, Richard
 New Dramatists
New York Idea, The Night of the Iguana, The 'Night Mother
 Norman, Marsha
No Time for Comedy
 Nottage, Lynn
Odd Couple, The Odets, Clifford
 Off- and Off-Off-Broadway
 Oleanna
Once in a Lifetime
 O'Neill, Eugene
 Osborn, Paul
Our Town
 Overmyer, Eric
 Owens, Rochelle
 Parks, Suzan-Lori
 Patrick, John
Petrified Forest, The Philadelphia Story, The Piano Lesson, The Picnic
 Political Theater in the
 United States
 Pomerance, Bernard
Porgy and Bess
 Price, The Processional
 Rabe, David
Rain From Heaven
Raisin in the Sun, A
 Rice, Elmer
 Richardson, Jack
 Rivera, Jose
 Romanticism
Salvation Nell
Saratoga
 Saroyan, William
Secret Service
- Seven Keys to Baldpate*
Sexual Perversity in Chicago
 Shange, Ntozake
 Shanley, John Patrick
Shape of Things, The Shawn, Wallace
 Sheldon, Edward
 Shenandoah
 Shepard, Sam
 Sherwood, Robert E.
 Shore Acres
 Simon, Neil
 SITI Company
Skin of Our Teeth, The
 Smith, Anna Deavere
 Socialist Realism
 Spewack, Bella, and
 Spewack, Sam
 Split Britches
Stage Door
 Stein, Gertrude
Sticks and Bones
Strange Interlude
Streetcar Named Desire, A
Street Scene
Strictly Dishonorable
Suddenly Last Summer
Summer and Smoke
 Surrealism
 Tally, Ted
 Terry, Megan
 Tesich, Steve
 Theatre Guild
They Knew What They Wanted
 Thomas, Augustus
Three Tall Women
Time of Your Life, The Touch of the Poet, A
 Treadwell, Sophie
 Trifles
True West Truth, The Uncommon Women and Others
Under the Gaslight
 Valdez, Luis
 Van Druten, John
View from the Bridge, A
 Vogel, Paula
Voice of the Turtle, The

Waiting for Lefty
Wallace, Naomi
Wasserstein, Wendy
Wellman, Mac
West, Mae
What Price Glory?

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?
Why Marry?
Wilder, Thornton
Williams, Tennessee
Wilson, August

Wilson, Lanford
Wilson, Robert
Winterset
Wolfe, George C.
Women, The Wright, Doug

Yankowitz, Susan
Yiddish Theater
You Can't Take It with You
Zindel, Paul
Zoo Story, The

INDEX

Page numbers in boldface type indicate articles in which the index entry is the featured topic of discussion.

Arabic names beginning with the prefix "al-" are found in the As.

When looking up a subject, be sure to scan the column for entries beginning with the word in question. Subject entries do not include duplications of nearby titles. For example, "alienation" does not include Alien Creature among its subentries.

- Aarguaer dialect, 1316
Aarhus Theatre (Denmark), 343–344, 772
Aaron the Jew (Eichelbaum), 61
Abad, Juan, 659; Golden Chain, 1052
Abafumbi (Uganda), 1212
Abba, Marta, 1070
‘Abbās-Āqā, Worker (Soltanpur), 696
Abbey Theatre (Dublin), 370, 700–705, 1201, 1400
Abbey Theatre (Dublin), -playwrights: Behan, Brendan, 138; Carr, Marina, 228, 707; Ervine, St. John, 427, 738; Friel, Brian, 450, 491; Gregory, Lady, 232, 558–559, 702, 1145, 1274; Keane, John B., 708; Kilroy, Thomas, 766; McGuinness, Frank, 884, 981; Murphy, Tom, 942; O’Casey, Sean, 982–983, 985, 1078, 1216, 1244; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Shaw, George Bernard, 1223; Synge, John Millington, 1077, 1145, 1321; Yeats, William Butler, 1079, 1108, 1274, 1370, 1503
Abbott, George, 371, 751
ABC Theater (Vienna), 85
Abdallah, Mohammed Ben, 1–2, 23–24
Abdoh, Reza, 1413
‘Abdulḥamīd, Samī‘, 698
Abe Kōbō, 2, 727, 1209, 1240; Friends, 491
Abel, Lionel, 526
Abel and Bela (Pinget), 1065
Ābele, Inga, 802
Abe Lincoln in Illinois (Sherwood), 2–3, 944, 1237, 1402
Abell, Kjeld, 3–4, 343; Anna Sophie Hedvig, 50; The Melody That Disappeared, 342
Abend di Anni Nouveau (Lardner), 800
Abe no Seimei (Yōjirō), 970
Abe Sada’s Dogs (Satoh), 1193
Abibigoro, 1
Abibigroma (Ghana), 1, 23
Abibiman Concert Party, 1
Abide with Me (Boothe), 177
Abie’s Irish Rose (Nichols), 4, 1187, 1399
Abingdon Square (Fornes), 468
Aboriginal Demonstrators Confront . . . (Mudrooro), 79
Aborigines, Australian. See indigenous people and performance abortion, 767, 782, 895, 1274, 1287
Abortive (Churchill), 263
About Last Night . . . (Mamet), 1216
About Morton (Pinget), 1065
Above the Ruins (Pairó), 61
Abramovitch, S. Y., 1506, 1507; The Travels of Benjamin III, 929
Abreaktionsspiele (Nitsch), 584
The Absence (Naghui), 947
The Absence of War (Hare), 414, 415, 586
“absent center” characters, 1378
The Absolute Airplane (Satoh), 1193
Absolute Hell (Ackland), 7
Absolute Prohibition (Karvaš), 4–5, 754
Absolute Signal (Gao), 90
An Absolute Turkey (Feydeau), 449 abstract art, 130
abstraction, 783
absurdism, 5–6. See also Theater of the Absurd. Abe Kōbō, 491; Adamov, Arthur, 10; Albee, Edward, 6, 31; Amalrik, Andrei, 1167–1168; Argentinian drama, 89; Betsuyaku Minoru, 155; Bulgarian drama, 206; Camus, Albert, 211; Carr, Marina, 228, 707; Cartwright, Jim, 134; Chinese drama, 255, 820, 827; Claus, Hugo, 269; Cuban drama, 310; Danish theater, 342, 343; deconstruction, 337; Dubillard, Roland, 376; Durang, Christopher, 378; Forssell, Lars, 1313; French drama, 211; Genet, Jean, 165; Goll, Yvan, 364, 540–541; Hungarian drama, 640; Icelandic drama, 654–655; Inge, William, 682; Ionesco, Eugène, 360, 364, 378, 689–690; Israeli drama, 710; Italian drama, 716; Izumi Kyōka, 723; Jellicoe, Ann, 731, 771; Jepsen, Erling, 342; Kharms, Daniil Ivanovich, 765; Knutzon, Line, 771; Koltès, Bernard-Marie, 1142–1143; Lahola, Leopold, 1254; Netherlandish drama, 957; Nietzsche, Friedrich, 966; Noer, Arifin C., 970; O’Casey, Sean, 985; Ohashi Yasuhiko, 992; Ørnsbo, Jess, 342, 1012; Pásándi, Géza, 1038; Pinter, Harold, 161, 623, 1067; Resino, Carmen, 1132–1133; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1145; Salacrou, Armand, 1181; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 215; Serbian drama, 1210, 1211; Slavkin, Viktor, 1168; Southeast Asian drama, 103; Stoppard, Tom, 1152, 1282; Strindberg, August, 527–528; Stumbre, Lelde, 801; Vitrac, Roger, 1426; Walker, George F., 1515; Western philosophy, 1011; Williams, Tennessee, 213
Absurdities in Solitude (Casas), 1106
Abundance (Henley), 608
Abu-Salim, François, 97
Abyad, Dawlat, 391
Abyad, George, 391
Académie Française, 1154
Academy Award (United States): Barry, Philip, 1050; Coward, Noël, 235; Foote, Horton, 464; Howard, Sidney, 632; Inge, William, 682; MacLeish, Archibald, 849; Mighton, John, 901; Norman, Marc, 1284; Osborne, John, 1016; Stoppard, Tom, 1284; Tesich, Steve, 1336

- Academy of Theatrical Arts (Egypt), 391
- Academy Theatre (Atlanta), 1501
- Acadia, Canada, 858–859
- Accademia d'Italia, 1071
- Accident (Pinter), 1068
- Accidental Death of an Anarchist (Fo), 6–7, 461, 719, 827
- Accidental Phantasies (Johnson), 964
- Acconci, Vito, 585, 1043
- Ace of Clubs (Coward), 297
- Achebe, Chinua, 15
- Achilles (Wyspiański), 1493
- Achurch, Janet, 402
- Acid Tests, 87
- Ackland, Rodney, 7
- Acre Festival for Alternative Theatre (Israel), 96, 1034
- An Acre of Time (Sherman), 1235
- Acropolis (Sherwood), 1237
- Acropolis (Wyspiański), 1493
- Across the River (Hirschbein), 614
- Across the River in May (Hirata and Kim), 614
- Acterian, Haig, 1149
- The Acting Company (New York), 989
- acting troupes. See individual troupes and companies
- Action in the North Atlantic (Lawson), 805
- Actions (La Fura dels Baus), 232
- Action-Theater (Munich), 438
- Action Theatre (Singapore), 1247
- Action Tomato, 957
- The Active Side of Endlessness (Klimenko), 1171
- The Actors (McPherson), 886
- actors, acting, 7–9. See also subsequent entries. actor-authors, 376, 379, 718–719; actor-centered theater, 212, 713–715, 717–718, 1135; “the Barry Girl,” 621; carpa (Mexico), 227; casting, 265, 892; comedy and timing, 364; Coward, Noël, 296, 298; Craig, Gordon, 1014; The Deep Blue Sea (Rattigan), 337; dialogue, 363–365; epic theater, 350; formalization, 288; happenings, 584; HB Studios, 1025; Howard, Bronson, 631; improvization, 353; Indian drama, 675; Irish drama, 702; Italian drama, 713–715; Japanese drama, 726, 1014; kabuki, 1014; MacKaye, Steele, 1398; naturalism, 359, 1517; Netherlandish drama, 954–955; Noer, Arifin C., 971; objective style, 352; Osanai Kaoru, 1014; Plenty (Hare), 586; presence of character, 990; presence of the performer, 990; realism, 322; Robertson, Thomas William, 349; Russian naturalism, 1019; A Streetcar Named Desire (Williams), 337, 359, 364; Taiwanese drama, 258–259; technological actors, 352
- actors, female: Actresses’ Franchise League, 405; Chinese drama, 253; Egyptian drama, 391; images of, 386; Japanese drama, 726; off-stage lives, 403; Palestinian drama, 1031–1032
- Actors Company of San Francisco, 1212
- The Actor’s Nightmare (Durang), 379
- Actors’ Playhouse (New York), 989
- Actor’s Revolution, 94
- Actors Studio (New York), 213, 565, 862, 1287, 1323, 1502
- Actors Theater (Japan), 48
- Actor’s Theater (Moscow), 305
- Actors Theater of Louisville, 788, 974
- Actors’ Theatre (Washington), 1281
- Actors Theatre Company (Japan), 99, 1208, 1209, 1240
- Actors Theatre of Louisville Award, 173
- Actors Theatre Training School (Japan), 48, 1193, 1329
- Actor’s Workshop of San Francisco, 106, 1086, 1408
- Actresses’ Franchise League, 405
- ACT UP, 1087
- Act Without Words 1 and 2 (Beckett), 133
- Adam and Eve, 1219
- Adam and Eve (Bulgakov), 205
- Adam and Eve (Krežža), 781
- Adam and Eve and Job (Gjuzel), 845
- Adam Geist (Loher), 830
- Adamov, Arthur, 5, 10, 483; The Invasion, 1057; Off Limits, 486; Parody, 1057; Professor Taranne, 437; Spring ’71, 484
- Adam Son of a Dog (Kanyuk), 97
- Adam’s Rib (Gordon and Kanin), 751
- Adam the Creator (Čapek), 224
- Adar heb Adenydd (Thomas), 1351
- addiction. See alcoholism
- The Adding Machine (Rice), 10–11, 433, 916, 1136, 1400–1401
- Adelaide Festival (Australia), 73
- Adelphi Theatre (London), 295, 401, 551
- Adila (Jad), 392
- Adler, Stella, 8, 1406
- The Admirable Crichton (Barrie), 11–12, 405
- The Adolescents (Chalraud), 1419
- adoption, 1272
- Adoration of the Old Woman (Rivera), 1141
- Adorno, Theodor, 87
- adultery, 1303, 1321. See also family drama
- Adult Hunting (Terayama), 1334
- Advent (Strindberg), 12, 303, 1296
- The Adventure (Tsvetayeva), 1163
- An Adventurer at the Doors (Begović), 304
- The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12–13, 1206
- The Adventures of Francois (Mitchell), 913
- Adventures of the Good Soldier Schweik (Brod and Reimann), 1076
- Adventure Story (Rattigan), 1120
- advertising, 1182
- Advice to Eastern Europe (Nelson), 954
- Aeschylus, 1369
- aestheticism, modern European, 529
- Aesthetics (Hegel), 1041
- aesthetics, politics of, 671–672
- Aesthetics of Reception, 1184
- AETT. See Australian Elizabethan Theatre Trust
- The Affair (Lord), 834
- The Affair of Innocent Annabelle (Lukić), 1210
- Afghanistan, 13–14, 788
- Afghan Woman (Sharif), 14, 1029
- The Afghan Women (Mastrosimone), 14
- Afinogenov, Aleksandr, 1164, 1257
- Afinogenov, Maxim: Fear, 928
- Afore Night Came (Rudkin), 412
- Africa, 14–25. See also individual countries.
- Abdallah, Mohammed ben, 1; culture, 1058; Dadie, Bernard, 320; documentary drama, 353; Funnyhouse of a Negro (Kennedy), 761; popular drama, 1158; 20th century drama, 320; Umbabumba (Soya), 1266
- Africa (Arlt), 62, 88
- African American theater: Blues for Mister Charlie

- (Baldwin), 1129; Hallelujah, Baby! (Laurents), 814; identity theater, 657; In Abraham's Bosom (Green), 661–662; Interwar drama, 397; Little Ham (Hughes), 826; off-Broadway, 989; Parks, Suzan-Lori, 1037; A Raisin in the Sun (Hansberry), 1116; religious drama, 1129; 20th century drama, 1059, 1085
- African Music and Drama Association, 1262
- Afrikaans language, 1262–1263
- Afrikaners Make Merry (Brink), 1263
- Afrika Solo (Sears), 1206
- Afrocentrism, 15, 1267
- After a Fashion (Hughes), 636
- The After-life of Arthur Cravan (De Groen), 339
- After Magritte (Stoppard), 1282, 1283
- After Miss Julie (Marber), 868
- Afternoon of a Faun (Mallarmé), 916
- After Shakespeare (Césaire), 236
- After Sorrow (Chong), 260
- Aftertaste (Zorin), 1167
- After the Ball (Williamson), 1478
- After the Blowout (Soyinka), 1267
- After the Crash (Hall), 578
- After the Dance (Rattigan), 1120
- After the Fall (Miller), 25–26, 903, 906
- After the Fire. See The Burned House (Strindberg)
- After the Rehearsal (Bergman), 149
- After the Reunion (Chen), 26
- the afterworld. See the underworld
- The Agamemnon Mystery (Naghiu), 947
- Agaoglu, Adalet: The Crack on the Roof, 1386
- Agapetus, 454
- Agate, James, 743, 984, 1236
- Agatomania (Goldflam), 317
- The Age of Gold (Théâtre du Soleil), 913
- The Age of Night (Kambanellis), 750
- agitation-propaganda, 27. See also avant-garde drama; political drama. avant-garde drama, 87, 106; Black Arts Movement, 164; The Cheviot, the Stag and the Black, Black Oil (McGrath), 247; Cixous, Hélène, 267; Dutt, Utpal, 382; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; Fo, Dario, 282; Group Theatre, 988; Hughes, Langston, 637; Indian drama, 382; Irish drama, 983; Japanese drama, 727; Kroetz, Franz Xaver, 782; Louvet, Jean, 143; Nelson, Richard, 954; Roland, Betty, 77; Romeril, John, 1151; Russian and Soviet drama, 332, 369, 1022; Scottish drama, 1201; Senda Koreya, 1209; shinpa, 1241; Southeast Asian drama, 103; Spanish drama, 1270; Swedish drama, 1313; U.S. drama, 1083, 1401–1404; Waiting for Lefty (Odets), 988; Waiting for Lefty (Odets), 1436; Wildcat Stage Productions, 1464–1465
- The Agitators (Rovinski), 294
- agit-prop. See agitation-propaganda
- Agnete (Skram), 976
- Agni Koothu (Singapore), 1247
- The Agonies of Job (Levin), 710
- Agop, Güllü, 1384
- Agra Bazaar (Tanvir), 28, 1329
- Agricola and the Fox (Haavikko), 454
- Aguirre, the Tyrannous (Picón), 1418
- Agustini, Margarita, 1418
- Ah, Wilderness! (O'Neill), 1370, 1400
- Ahasuerus, King, 1108
- Ahlfors, Bengt, 454
- Ahmad, Rukhsana: Song for a Sanctuary, 1028
- Ahmanson Theatre (Los Angeles), 1005
- Ahmed, Ali: Subh Honay Tak, 1028
- Ah Sin (Harte and Twain), 589
- Ah Wilderness! (O'Neill), 1003–1004
- Aida (Hwang, librettist), 643
- Aida Defeated (Kalisky), 749
- Aidoo, Ama Ata, 17, 23, 28
- AIDS. See also HIV/AIDS
- AIDS and Genesis (Palencia), 1419
- AID Thy Neighbour (Wandor), 1440
- Aiken, George, 891, 892
- Aimee and Jaguar (Munro), 939
- Ain't Lookin' (Luscombe), 840
- Airo and Brita (Haavikko), 454
- Airplanes (Gorostiza), 546
- Airport (Suspect Culture), 1309
- Air Raid (MacLeish), 435, 849
- Aizman, David, 1162
- Ajoka (Pakistan), 1028
- Ajoka Theater (Pakistan), 947
- Akademietheater (Vienna), 1389
- Akaigo's Love (Akimoto), 29
- Akbarabadi, Nazir, 28
- Akbar the Champion Dies (Bezā'i), 695
- Akhashveyrosh-Shpil, 1109
- Akhnaton (Waltari), 454
- Akhron, Joseph, 928
- Akhudiat, 680
- Ākhundzādeh, Mirzā Fath 'Ali, 693
- Akhurst, William Mower, 72
- Akimoto Matsuyo, 29, 48
- Akins, Zoë, 29–30
- Akio, Miyazawa, 722
- Akita Ujaku, 727
- Akropolis (Grotowski), 1090
- Aksal, Sabahattin Kudret: The Feast at the Café, 1386
- Aksensfeld, Israel, 1506
- Aksyonov, Vasily, 100, 1167
- Aktie Tomaat, 584
- Aktionisten (Vienna, Austria), 584
- Alabama (Thomas), 1349, 1398
- Alam, Pervaiz: Safar—The Journey, 1029
- al-'Ānī, Yūsuf, 698
- Alan's Wife (Bell and Robins), 402, 1144
- al-Aqsa massacres, 1035
- Alarconeando (Morett), 898, 923
- Alarippu, 1221
- Alarms (Yankowitz), 1501
- The Alarm Signal (Gao), 506, 827
- alaukika, 1036
- al-Bahri, Gamil: His Brother's Murderer, 1031
- Albanesi, Meggie, 30–31
- al-Banhawi, Nadia, 392
- Albanian Softshoe (Wellman), 1454
- The Albany Depot (Howells), 634
- Albee, Edward, 31–34; The American Dream, 1057; The Zoo Story, 990; Three Tall Women, 1356; Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, 359, 1057, 1356, 1460–1461, 1517–1518; absurdism, 6, 1408, 1409; Broadway, 1411; contemporary realism, 32; critical reception, 359; Crowley, Mart, 307; forerunners, 1101; gay playwrights, 1412; Group Theatre, 565; influence on drama, 834, 1516; Kennedy, Adrienne, 761; Little Carib Theatre Workshop, 1436; off-Broadway theater, 990; O'Neill, Eugene, 1005; Signature Theatre, 1412; symbolism, 1320

- Alberta Culture Award, 1088
 Alberta Theatre Project
 (Calgary), 943, 1179, 1281
 Alberti, Rafael, 27, 1270–
 1271, 1339; Cantata of the Heroes . . . , 1340
 Albertine in Five Times
 (Tremblay), 34
 Albert Names Edward (Nowra),
 979
 Albert's Bridge (Stoppard), 1282
 The Alcestiad (Wilder), 1469,
 1470
 The Alchemist (Vančura), 315
 alcoholism: The Bars
 (Carling), 977; The Dead
 (Sánchez), 1183; Honor
 (Sudermann), 1303; The Iceman Cometh (O'Neill),
 655–656; Long Day's Journey into Night (O'Neill), 830–831; A Moon for the
 Misbegotten (O'Neill), 922–
 923; and religious theater,
 1129; Rip Van Winkle
 (Boucicault), 1140–1141;
 Salvation Nell (Sheldon),
 1182; Zapolska, Gabriela,
 1513
 Aldwych Theatre (London),
 411, 623, 625, 628, 1374,
 1460
 Alecsandri, Vasile, 1148, 1149
 Alec Wilder, Clues to a Life
 (Lucas), 837
 Aleichem, Sholem, 1246,
 1507; The Big Win, 928–929;
 An Evening of Sholem
 Aleichem, 928; Luck, 929
 Alekar, Satish, 671, 672
 Aleksandrinsky Theater
 (Moscow), 243, 244, 611
 Aleksandrinsky Theater (St.
 Petersburg), 1204
 Aleksandrov, Vladimir, 1163
 Alexander, George, 350, 364
 Alexander Korda Award, 765
 The Alexander Plays (Kennedy),
 763 Alexiada (Gjuzel), 845
 Alfaro, Luis, 511
 Alfieri, Vittorio, 555, 714
 Alfreds, Mike, 1220
 Algerian War of Independence, 1203
 Algonquin Round Table, 756, 1237 al-Guzi, Firqat, 1031
 al-Guzi, Nazri, 1031
 al-Hakawati Palestinian Theatre (Jerusalem), 97,
 1033 al-Hakim, Tawfiq, 15, 34–35,
 390, 698
 Alhamra Drama Group
 (Pakistan), 1028
 al-Hanajir Theater, 392
 Ali, Thou Galilean (al-Hakawati
 Theatre), 1034
 Ali, Wajahat: Domestic
 Crusaders, 1029
 Alia, Wound on the Doorstep to
 Mecca (Sarumpaet), 1191
 Alice B. Theatre (Seattle), 457
 The Alienated Woman (Bhagat), 158 alienation: Abdallah,
 Mohammed ben, 1; Alrawi,
 Karim, 1029; Bhagat,
 Datta, 158; Brecht, Bertolt,
 191; Chekhov, Anton, 1162;
 The Dark Deer (Âbele), 802;
 Erualien (Stefanovski), 845; expressionist drama, 916;
 Fosse, Jon, 949; Griffiths,
 Linda, 561; Kōkami Shōji,
 772; Lord, Robert, 834; The Madman and the Nun
 (Witkiewicz), 852; Maori drama, 963; Marcel Pursued by Hounds (Tremblay), 868–
 869; Ngugi wa Thiong'o,
 965; Nowra, Louis, 979;
 Rózewicz, Tadeusz, 1157;
 Sisters in Law (Tremblay),
 1249 alienation effect, 35–36. See also epic theater. Brecht,
 Bertolt, 35, 192, 234, 404,
 424, 519, 1057, 1105, 1354;
 Brenton, Howard, 198;
 description, 1057;
 Foreman, Richard, 465;
 formalism, 467;
 Przybyszewska,
 Stanisława, 1104; Wallace,
 Naomi, 1438–1439; Weill,
 Kurt, 1354
 Alien Creature (Griffiths), 561
 The Alien King (Abdallah), 1
 Aliens (Alrawi), 1029
 Aliqueen (Albee), 31
 Alison's House (Glaspell),
 36–37, 536, 1378
 Alive! (Mozhayev), 841
 Alive Forever (Rozov), 1167
 Alkazi, Ebrahim, 1384
 Alkestis (Hofmannsthal), 619
 Alki (Overmyer), 1025
 al-Kurd, Mustafa, 1033
 Allcraft Center (New York), 1273 allegory: The Balcony (Genet),
 117; Bebasari (Effendi), 678;
 Bezā'i, Bahrām, 695; The Birthday Party (Pinter), 161; Bridie, James, 199; The Cloister (Meyerhold), 141;
 Fire and Night (Rainis),
 1115; Indonesian nationalism, 678;
 Information for Foreigners
 (Gambaro), 681; Iona
 (Sorescu), 1150; It Is Not
 Tall Grass Blown by the Wind
 (Hassan), 720; Lithuanian drama, 823, 824; Little Eyolf
 (Ibsen), 825; Luo
 Huaizhen, 839; The
 Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui
 (Brecht), 1133–1134
 Allegro (Rodgers and Hammerstein), 813
 Allen, Claudia, 511
 Alley Theatre (Houston), 33,
 788, 1408, 1409, 1516
 All Fall Down (Lill), 820
 All from a Patriotic Heart
 (Xiong), 1496
 All God's Chillun Got Wings
 (O'Neill), 37, 558, 1002,
 1173
 All House, Bed and Church
 (Rame), 1118
 Alliance of Antifascist
 Intellectuals, 1339
 Alliance of Canadian Cinema,
 Television and Radio
 Artists Award, 820
 All-Ireland Drama
 Competition Award, 708
 All My Sons (Miller), 37–38,
 904–905, 1129, 1370
 All of Them Have It (Casas), 229
 Allons Enfants (Vojnović), 1430
 All Over (Albee), 32
 All Quiet on the Western Front
 (Anderson), 43
 All Roads Lead to Heaven (Lilar), 143
 All Soul's Saturday
 (Xenopoulos), 1495
 All Stops Out (Gow), 547
 All That Fall (Beckett), 38–39,
 133, 484, 1065
 All the Best (Pirandello), 1070
 All the King's Men, 1076
 All This Long Night (Diaz), 1366 al-Mahdiyya, Munira, 391
 al-masrah, 698
 al-Masrah al-Hadith (Iraq), 698
 Almeida Theatre (London),
 209
 Almighty Voice and His Wife
 (Moses), 39, 929–930
 An Almost-Believable Story
 (Sándor), 1185
 Almost Free Theatre
 (London), 1235
 al-Naqqāsh, Marūn Mikhāil,
 390, 692, 698
 Alondra, 1045
 Alone (Brigué), 1418
 Alone (Thomas), 1349
 Aloni, Nissim, 95, 710
 Alonso de Santos, José Luis,
 1271
 Alpers, Boris, 1171
 Alpine Glow (Turrini), 86, 1389
 al-Qabbānī, Ahmad Abū al
 Kalil, 693
 al-Qardāhī, Sulaymān, 693
 al-Qasaba (Palestine), 1035
 al-Qasim, Samih: Qaraqas, 1032 Alrawi, Karim, 1029
 al-Shibli, Haqqi, 698
 Altan, Çetin: The Circles, 1386

- Altanima (Audiberti), 71
 Altars of Steel (Hall-Rogers), 442
 An Altar to Himself (Iredyński), 1082
 Altenberg, Peter, 82
 Alternation of Character (Corra), 108
 Alternatives (Taylor), 1331
 The Alternative Stage, 862 alternative theater movement.
 See entries at experimental theater
 Altes Stadttheater (Cologne, Germany), 323
 Alunāns, Ādolfis, 800
 Alvarez, Basilio, 1419
 Álvarez Quintero, Joaquín, 39–40
 Álvarez Quintero, Serafín, 39–40
 Alveine School of Dramatic Art, 756
 Alvin Theatre (New York), 658
 Always (Stoppard), 1283
 Always on Sale (Aksyonov), 100, 1167 al-Yusuf, Fatima, 391
 Amadeus (Shaffer), 1217
 Amakosi (Zimbabwe), 22
 Amala, Kamala (Norén), 1314
 Amalrik, Andrei, 1167, 1168
 A.M./A.M.—The Articulated Man (Chong), 260
 Amamus (New Zealand), 961, 1353
 Amanat, Mizra, 1027
 Amandiers-Nanterre (Paris), 774
 amateur theater. See also community theater.
 Anderson, Clara Rothwell, 42; Australia, 72; Brazil, 1145; Czechoslovakia, 1159; Iceland, 652; India, 663, 675; Iran, 694; Ireland, 700, 707–708, 1145; Soviet Union, 1171; United States, pre-Depression, 1400; Voaden, Herman, 1428; Xiong Foxi, 1497
 The Ambassador (Craigie), 402–403
 Ambedkari Jalsa, 674
 The Amber Express (Connelly), 284
 Ambush at Tether's End (Walker), 1437
 Amédée, or How to Get Rid of It (Ionesco), 690
 The Amen Corner (Baldwin), 118
 America, Part II (Srbijanović), 1211
 America Hurrah! (van Itallie), 1409
 The American (James), 725
 Americana, 732
 American Academy of Arts and Letters Award, 989, 1349, 1473, 1475, 1481
 American Academy of Dramatic Art (New York), 1131
 American Association of Community Theatre, 283
 American Buffalo (Mamet), 40–41, 862, 863
 The American Clock (Miller), 903, 906
 American College Theater Festival Award, 1487
 An American Comedy (Nelson), 954
 American Conservatory Theatre (San Francisco), 688
 American Copyright Act (1891). See copyright laws
 An American Daughter (Wasserstein), 1442
 American Drama from the Colonial Period Through World War I (Richardson), 1399
 American Dramatists Club, 306, 631
 The American Dream (Albee), 31, 1057
 American Fellowship in Poetry and Drama, 848
 American Flyers (Tesich), 1336
 American House (Chan), 238
 American King's English for Queens (Terry), 1336
 American Laboratory Theatre, 1469, 1493
 American Landscape (Rice), 1402
 American Negro Theatre, 249, 1406
 American Notes (Jenkin), 732
 American Pageant movement, 1085
 American Piece (Yankowitz), 1501
 American Place Theatre, 442
 The American Play (Parks), 41, 1037
 American Playhouse (PBS), 1116, 1380
 American Playwrights on Drama (Frenz), 139
 American Playwrights Theatre, 803
 The American Princess (Aloni), 95, 710
 American Rain Won't Wet My Sleeves (Ariyoshi), 63
 American Repertory Theatre (Cambridge, MA), 308, 968, 974, 994
 Americans (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
 The American Story: Ten Radio Scripts (MacLeish), 849
 American Theatre Association Award, 557
 American Theatre Critics' Association Award, 974, 978, 1060, 1480
 American Theatre Wing (New York), 306, 761
 The American Way (Kaufman and Hart), 279, 588, 944
 America Play (Parks), 1094
 Amharic (language), 1381
 Am I Blue (Henley), 607
 Amichai, Yehuda, 95
 Amigo's Blue Guitar (MacLeod), 850
 Amin, Aziza, 391
 Amin, Idi, 1213
 Amma Pranaa (Yirenkyi), 23
 amnesia, 1238
 Among Those Present (Kerr), 764
 Amore Cultural Troupe, 1
 Amorphe d'Ottenburg (Grumberg), 565
 Amphitryon (Giraudoux), 534
 Amphitryon (Overmyer), 1025 amplification, 382
 Amsterdamsch Tooneel, 956
 Amy's View (Hare), 414
 An, Azwar, 680
 Ana 3/11 (Pedrero), 1040
 The Anabaptists (Dürrenmatt), 381
 Anagnostaki, Loula, 556
 Ana in the Tropics (Cruz), 310
 Anaïs in the Tail of Comet (Marchessault), 869
 Anamika (Kolkata), 999, 1117
 Ananse and the Dwarf Brigade (Sutherland), 1310
 Anansegoro, 1
 Ananse play, 1309
 Anansem tradition, 24
 anarchism. See also political drama. Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald, 162; Brasch, Thomas, 187; The Breasts of Tiresias (Apollinaire), 190; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Fo, Dario, 6, 461; Ibsen, Henrik, 649; The Iceman Cometh (O'Neill), 655; Paul Kauvar; or, Anarchy (MacKaye), 1398; Sánchez, Florencio, 1183
 Anarchy in Sillian (Bronnen), 201
 Anathema (Andreev), 45, 1162
 Anatol (Schnitzler), 41–42, 83, 1196, 1198
 The Anatomist (Bridie), 199
 Anatomy of Corruption (Jacob), 725, 1053
 Ancestral Women (Grace-Smith), 547
 Anchieta Prize, 188
 Andalucia, 171, 507
 Anday, Melih Cevdet, 1386–1387
 And Baby Makes Seven (Vogel), 1429

- And Death Brought Forth the Light (Solórzano), 1258
- And the Dogs Were Silent (Césaire), 236
- Anders, Glenn, 1345
- Andersen, Hans Christian, 1243, 1313
- Anderson, Clara Rothwell, 42–43
- Anderson, Dave, 1464–1465
- Anderson, John, 943
- Anderson, Laurie, 1043
- Anderson, Maxwell, 43–44, 632, 1085, 1137, 1401–1404; Elizabeth the Queen, 395; Gods of the Lightning, 1484; Night Over Taos, 564; What Price Glory?, 1457; Winterset, 1483–1484
- Anderson, Robert, 510, 958, 1407
- Andersson, Claes, 454
- Andersson, Kent, 1313
- And Grant Us the Shadows (Norén), 973
- And He Said, and He Walked, and They Bowled, and He Feared (Yerushalmi), 96–97
- And Indrojit (Sircar), 1248
- ... and Juliet (Demou), 557
- And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little (Zindel), 1516
- Andorra (Frisch), 44–45, 492, 493, 1317
- And Pippa Dances! (Hauptmann), 517, 593
- Andrade, Oswald de, 188, 221
- Andrea Chenier (Giordano), 714
- Andreev, Leonid, 45–46, 1162, 1277; Black Masks, 919; He Who Gets Slapped, 281, 611; The Life of Man, 817
- Andre's Mother (McNally), 885
- Androcles and the Lion (Shaw), 1128, 1225
- And So to Bed (Williams), 1471
- And the Big Men Fly (Hopgood), 73
- And Things That Go Bump in the Night (McNally), 885
- And We'll Never Be Parted (Fosse), 470
- And Yet They Paused (Johnson), 739
- Ane Satire of the Three Estates (Lindsey), 1200
- Anfisa (Andreev), 45, 1162
- anganmancha, 1248
- Angel Award, Edinburgh Festival, 1156
- Angel City (Shepard), 1233
- An Angel Comes to Babylon (Dürrenmatt), 380
- Angelface (Foreman), 465
- Angelina (Stalev), 845
- Angel Knife (Sigrid), 143
- Angel of the Medicine Show (Moses), 929
- Angelo Herndone Jones (Hughes), 637
- Angelos, Maureen, 457
- Angels Among Us (Langer), 315, 797
- Angels Fall (Wilson), 1482
- The Angel's Forty Winks (Solórzano), 1258
- Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes; Part One: Millennium Approaches (Kushner), 46–47, 55, 511, 786, 959, 1087, 1130, 1372, 1411, 1412. See also Perestroika (Kushner)
- Angels of Iron (Brasch), 186
- Angel's Trumpet (Pollock), 1088
- Angels with Closed Eyes, International Version (Kökami), 772
- The Angel that Troubled the Waters (Wildert), 1469
- Anglo-Irish War of Independence, 127, 1216
- Anglophone. See English language drama
- Angola, 20
- Angry Waves (Morimoto), 924
- Angry Young Men (AYM), 47–48
- angura, 48–49; Betsuyaku Minoru, 393; Hirata Oriza, 1361; Inoue Hisashi, 684; Japanese drama, 727; Kara Jürō, 99, 752; Noda Hideki, 970; Ohashi Yasuhiko, 992; Ōta Shōgo, 1020; Sakate Yōji, 1180; Satoh Makoto, 1193; shingeki, 1240
- Anikst, Aleksandr, 1172
- Animal Crackers (Kaufman), 812
- Animal Crackers (Kaufman and Ryskind), 756
- The Animal Kingdom (Barry), 124
- Anirun, Suyatna, 680
- Ankara Sanat Tiyatrosu (Turkish theater company), 1387
- Anna (Kemala), 861
- Anna and the Law of Gravitation (Jepsen), 733
- Anna Christie (O'Neill), 49–50, 1002, 1005, 1056, 1400
- Anna Karenina (Tolstoy), 928, 1220, 1364, 1507
- Anna Liisa (Canth), 453
- Anna Lucasta (Hill), 1406
- The Annamite Frenchman (Nam), 1423
- Anna Sophie Hedvig (Abell), 3, 50–51
- Anne Boleyn (Taylor), 1332
- Anne Frank Prize, 957
- Annensky, Innokenty, 1163, 1174
- Anne of a Thousand Days (Anderson), 43
- Annex Theater (Toronto), 542
- Annie (Meehan), 815
- Anniversary Concert (Rovner), 62
- Ann Portuguese (Barnes), 123
- Annulla Allen: The Autobiography of a Survivor (Mann), 864
- the Annunciation, 1505
- Anomaly (Galin), 1169
- anomie, 1113
- The Anonymous Work (Witkiewicz), 1485
- Another Antigone (Gurney), 572
- Another Moon Called Earth (Stoppard), 1282
- Another Part of the Forest (Hellman), 606, 826
- Another Tuesday (Matura), 878
- Anouilh, Jean, 51–52, 376, 1181, 1210, 1243; Antigone, 52, 429, 481, 1369; Eurydice, 429; The Lark, 1130; Media, 429; Romeo and Jeannette, 1369; Victor, or The Children Take Over (Vitrac), 1427; The Waltz of the Toreadors, 1439–1440
- Anowa (Aidoo), 17, 23, 28
- Ansell, Mary, 123
- Ansky, S., 1507
- Ansky, Solomon: The Dybbuk, 927
- Ansky, Szymon. See Rappoport, Shloyme Zanvi
- ANT. See American Negro Theatre
- The Anthill (Zaourou), 24
- Anthill Theatre (Australia), 75
- Anthony and Anna (Ervin), 427
- Antichrist (Sorge), 1261
- antifascism, 748
- Antigona and the Others (Karvaš), 754
- Antigone (Anouilh), 52, 429, 481, 1348, 1369
- Antigone (Brecht), 1086
- Antigone (Cocteau), 1369
- Antigone (Hasenclever), 589
- Antigone (Living Theatre), 828
- Antigone (Rendra), 1131
- Antigone (Thiyam), 1348
- Antigone (Wellman), 1454
- Antilopa (Lagronová), 317
- antinaturalism, 1342
- The Antiphon (Barnes), 123
- antirealism, 1427, 1454
- anti-Semitism: Andorra (Frisch), 44; The Dreyfus Affair (Zola), 475; Grumberg, Jean-Claude, 565–566; The Jews (Chirikov), 1162; The King (Yushkevich), 1162; Loyalties (Galsworthy), 836; Oberammergau, 1130;

- Olga's Room (Loher), 830;
Only in America (Lawrence and Lee), 804; Rain from Heaven (Behrman), 1114–
1115; Reinhardt, Max,
1127; Reza, Yasmina, 1135;
Schnitzler, Arthur, 1103;
Sebastian, Michael, 1149;
The Seven Streams of the River
Ota (Lepage and Ex
Machina), 1214;
Strindberg, August, 1297;
Sweet Jew (Kornfeld), 777;
Tabori, George, 1323; The Thorn Bush (Aizman), 1162;
Wagner, Richard, 1434
- antiwar drama. See also pacifism. Bread and Puppet Theater, 1086;
Buero Vallejo, Antonio,
203; Episode: A Tropical Fantasy (Katō), 756;
Germany, 589; Giraudoux,
Jean, 1379; Idiot's Delight
(Sherwood), 1237;
Ireland, 981; Kaiser,
Georg, 747, 748; Krleža,
Miroslav, 781; The Last
Days of Mankind (Kraus),
780; Miracle at Verdun
(Chlumberg, Hans), 259;
Observe the Sons of Ulster . .
. (McGuinness), 981;
O'Casey, Sean, 982, 1079;
Oh What a Lovely War, 353;
Pinter, Harold, 1066;
Poland, 1080; The Road to Rome (Sherwood), 1237;
Serjeant Musgrave's Dance
(Arden), 1212; Sherwood,
Robert E., 1237; The Silver
Tassie (O'Casey), 983,
1244; United States, 353
- Antiworlds (Voznesensky), 841
- Antoine, André, 52–53;
acting teacher, 8; director,
350; influence on drama,
700; naturalism, 359, 377;
realism, 474–475; Théâtre
Libre, 1079, 1095, 1340,
1513; Voaden, Herman,
1428; Zola, Emile, 1517
- Anton and the Others
(Kazantsev), 1170
- Antonelli, Luigi, 248, 717; The Man Who Met Himself, 1338
- Antonietta (Saura), 896
- Antonio Ettegui, Marco, 1419
- Antrakt magazine (Russia), 1171
- The Ants (Churchill), 263
- Ants and Crickets (Stodola), 1254
- anukirthanam, 1035
- The Anvil (Hayes), 597
- Anybody's Woman (Akins), 30
- Anyone Can Whistle (Laurents),
814
- Anything Goes (Lindsay and Crouse), 821
- Any Woman Can't
(Wasserstein), 1409, 1442
- Anzengruber, Ludwig, 82
- apartheid, 101–102, 1252,
1262–1264. See also race and race relations; South
Africa
- Apel, Paul: Hans Sonnenstrossers
Hollenfahrt, 137
- The Apes Are Coming (Lunts),
1165
- APES Best Playwright Award, 1114
- APG. See Australian
Performing Group
- aphasia, 1502
- Apocalypse (Gjuzel), 845
- Apocalypse According to Janko
(Horák), 1254
- apocalypse in modern drama,
53–56
- The Apocalypse of Beijing Opera
(Lee), 808
- apocalyptic melodrama. See
fantasy melodrama
- Apollinaire, Guillaume, 56,
93, 275, 477–478, 734,
1308; The Breasts of Tiresias,
189, 281, 478, 916
- Apollo Theatre (London),
296, 616, 628, 743, 1120,
1236, 1487
- The Apostle (Bahr), 82
- Apoteotic soiree (Els Comediants), 232
- Appalachia Sounding (Linney),
1409
- Appia, Adolphe, 476, 1172,
1427
- Applause (Comden and Green), 813
- The Applause Goes Inside
(Montañés), 1419
- The Apple (Gelber), 512
- The Apple Cart (Shaw), 1226
- Apple in the Eye
(Hollingsworth), 622
- Apple Orchard Diary (Kubo),
784
- The Apple Thief (Dragunskaya),
1170
- The Apply (Bensusan), 77
- Approaching Simone (Terry),
445, 1336
- Approaching Zanzibar (Howe),
633
- April Snow (Linney), 822
- Āqā, Mirzā, 693
- Āqā Hashem's Love Affair (Āqā), 693
- Aquash, Anna Mae, 1100
- Arabella (Hofmannsthal), 619
- Arabian Nights, 1220
- Arabic Comedy Troupe
(Egypt), 391
- Arabic drama, 34, 390, 1030.
See also Palestine
- Arab-Israeli conflict, 1032,
1123–1124. See also entries at Israel
- Aragon, Louis, 320
- Aramba Chekkan (Panikkar),
1036
- Araquistain, Luis: La batalla
teatral, 1339
- Araujo, Antonio, 189
- Araullo, Jesus: A Modern
Filipina, 1052
- Arayıcı, Oktay: Nickname
Goncagül, 1387
- Araya, Andrés Pérez, 1335
- Arbour Theatre (Ontario), 111
- Arbuzov, Aleksei
Nikolayevich, 57, 1165;
Cruel Games, 1168; It
Happened in Irkutsk, 1168;
My Poor Marat, 1168
- Arcadia (Stoppard), 57–58,
411, 1282, 1284
- Arcand, Denis, 1396
- Archangels Don't Play Pinball
(Fo), 461
- The Archbishop's Ceiling
(Miller), 906
- Archer, Robyn, 75
- Archer, William, 363, 366–
367, 370, 1014, 1101, 1185,
1223–1224
- The Architect (Greig), 560
- The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria (Arrabal), 58–59,
485, 1270
- architects, architecture, 58–
59, 485, 560, 1065, 1186,
1270, 1295
- Architric (Pinget), 1065
- Arch Street Theatre
(Philadelphia), 331
- Arden, Eve, 1429
- Arden, John, 59, 584, 986,
1016; Ballygombeen Bequest,
413; Live Like Pigs, 409;
Serjeant Musgrave's Dance,
409, 1212
- An Ardent Heart (Ostrovsky),
1277
- Ardrey, Robert, 565
- Arena (New York), 1212
- Arena Narrates Tiradentes
(Guarnieri), 568
- Arena Narrates Zumbi
(Guarnieri), 568
- Arena Stage (Washington, DC), 371, 776, 1408
- Arena Tells the Story of Tiradentes
(Arena Theater), 60
- Arena Tells the Story of Zumbi
(Arena Theater), 60
- Arena Theater (Philippines),
1052
- Arena Theater of São Paulo,
59–61, 188, 353, 567, 568,
1344, 1421
- Arena Theatre (Australia), 73
- Arent, Arthur: Injunction,
1084; One-Third of a Nation,
1084, 1102; Pins and Needles,
1084; Power, 1084; Triple-A
Plowed Under, 1084

- Arethaeus, or The Legend of St. Ancilla, the Bird of Heaven (Krléža), 304, 781
 Arévalo Beluche, José Antonio, 1418
Are You Listening, Moscow? (Tretyakov), 1164, 1377
Are You Now or Have You Ever Been? (Bentley), 147
Are You Ready, Comrade? (Roland), 77
 Areyto Drama Society (Puerto Rico), 1106
 Argentina, 61–62; avant-garde drama, 88–89; cocoliche language, 563; dictatorial period, 576; Discépolo, Armando, 351; Dragún, Osvaldo, 358; Gorostiza, Carlos, 546; grotesco criollo, 576; Halac, Ricardo, 576; Information for Foreigners (Gambaro), 681; national theater, 577; Open Theater, 1009–1010; Raznovich, Diana, 1122–1123; realism, 351; sainete, 351, 358, 576; Sánchez, Florencio, 1183–1184; Sándor, Malena, 1184–1185; social realism, 576; theater of the grotesque, 351, 562–563; 20th century drama, 351, 358, 576, 1009; vaudeville, 351; Yiddish theater, 1508
Aria (Highway), 62–63
Aria da Capo (Millay), 902
Ariadne (Tsvetayeva), 1163
Ariadne (Zaitsev), 1163
Ariadne on Naxos (Hofmannsthal), 619
 Ariel Award (Mexico), 150
Aristocracy (Howard), 630, 1397
 Aristocrats (Friel), 491
 Aristocrats (Pogodin), 1166
Aristophaniana with Frogs (Aksyonov), 1167
 Aristotle, Aristotelian theater, 424, 523, 1369
 Ariyoshi Sawako, 63–64
 Ariza, René, 310
 Arizona (Thomas), 1349, 1397, 1398
 Arlequin Theater (Cuba), 355
 Arlt, Roberto, 62, 88, 563
Armageddon on the Grb Hill (Sloboda), 1254
Armored Train No.14–69 (Ivanov), 927, 1164, 1227
Armors of Smoke (Rengifo), 1418
Arms and the Man (Shaw), 64, 403, 1128, 1225, 1457
Armstrong's Last Goodnight (Arden), 59
 Army Art Theatre, 1366
Army Formation (Thiyam), 64–65, 1348
 Árnadóttir, Nína Björk, 655
 Árnason, Jónas, 654, 655
 Árnason, Jón Múli, 654, 655
 Arnér, Sivar, 1314
 Arniches, Carlos, 1269
 Aron, Robert, 67, 1427
Around the Fountain (Zingeris), 824
 Arp, Hans, 108, 319, 320
 Arrabal, Fernando, 5, 65–66, 483, 584, 1270–1271, 1308; The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria, 58, 485
Arrah-na-Pogue (Boucicault), 181
 Arriaga, Guillermo, 294
 Arrieta, Emilio, 1514
The Arrival of Spring (Benavides Ponce), 1418
 Arrived (Bernhard), 153
 Arriví, Francisco: Vegi-Giants, 1106
 Arrowsmith (Howard), 632
 Arroyo, Jorge, 294
 Arrufat, Antón, 309–310
Arsenic and Old Lace, 821
 Arsovski, Tome, 845
 art, 27, 471, 726
 Art (Reza), 66–67, 1135
 Artaud, Antonin, 67–68; The Jet of Blood, 480, 733–734; The Theater and Its Double, 106; absurdism, 6; antidrama manifesto, 87, 480; apocalypse, 54; Balinese theater, 1343; deconstruction, 337; French comedy, 281; influence on Bene, 719; influence on drama, 1085; influence on Claus, 269; influence on drama, 1085, 1366; influence on feminist drama, 445; influence on guerilla theater, 568; influence on Sanchis Sinisterra, 1184; interculturalism, 686; Jungian psychoanalysis, 1105; surrealism, 108, 1308; Theater of Cruelty, 1057; Théâtre Alfred Jarry, 728, 1427; theatricality, 639, 1343; Walker, George F., 1514
 Artef, 1508
 Arte Nuevo (Madrid), 1191
 Arthurian legend, 1243
 Article 330 (Courteline), 437
The Artificial Jungle (Ludlam), 838
The Artist (Xiong), 1496
Artist Descending a Staircase (Stoppard), 1283 Art 'n' Life (Gow), 547
 art nouveau, 517
The Art of Departing (Daněk), 316
The Art of Dining (Howe), 633
The Art of Dutch Playwriting: An Attempt to Explain an Absence (Stroman), 957
The Art of War (Walker), 1095, 1437
 Arts Foundation of New Zealand Laureate Award, 547
 Arts International Award, 924
 Arts Network Asia, 1006
 Arts Theatre (London), 793
 Artsybashev, Mikhail, 1162
 Art Theater (Greece), 556 art theater movement, 1001
 Art Theatre Shinjuku Bunka, 1238
 Arusi (Hussein), 19
- Arveit macht frei vom Totland Europa (Ma'ayan), 96
 Arx, Cäsar von, 1316
 Arye, Yevgeny, 97
 Asachi, Gheorghe, 1148, 1149
As a Man Thinks (Thomas), 1398, 1399
As Before, Better than Before (Pirandello), 1070
Ascend as the Sun (Voaden), 1427
 Ascension (Nordal), 654
The Ascent of F6 (Auden and Isherwood), 68–69
 Asch, Sholom, 509
 ASEAN. See Association of Southeast Asian Nations
 Asena, Orhan: Gelgamesh, 1387; Hürrem Sultan, 1387
 Ashai Theatre Award (Japan), 614
As Happy as Kings (Richardson), 1138
 Ashcroft, Peggy, 404
Ashes (Valle-Inclán), 1416
Ashes to Ashes (Pinter), 1068
Ashes to Ashes, Dust to Dust (Saalbach), 1177
Asia and the Far East (Chocrón), 1419
 Asia Award for Film and Television, 765
 Asia-in-Theatre Research Centre (Singapore), 1247
 Asian American theater, 657
Asinimali—We Have No Money! (Ngema), 101, 964
 As Is (Hoffman), 511, 1087
 Asmussen, Peter, 344
 Aspazjia, 800, 1115
 Aspenström, Werner, 1314
The Aspern Papers (Duras), 379
Ass and Shadow (Voskovec and Werich), 94
 Assassination (Lahola), 1254
 Assassins (Sondheim and Weidman), 354
 Assassins (Weidman), 815
The Assault Upon Charles Sumner (Hivnor), 281

- The Assembly Centre (Kovačević), 1211
- Assembly Hall (Edinburgh), 1201
- As She Lay Dying (Ptushkina), 1170
- Assis, Francisco de, 60
- Association for Real Art (Soviet Union), 1174
- Association for Theater in Higher Education Award, 173
- Association of Palestinian Theater, 1032
- Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), 1051
- The Assurance (Weiss), 1452
- As Time Goes By (Matura), 877
- Astma-5 (Ørnsbo), 1012
- Astoria (Soyfer), 85
- Astor Theatre (New York), 178
- Asylum (Kopit), 776
- As You Desire Me (Pirandello), 1071
- As You Please (Chashule), 845
- The Atami Murder Case (Tsuka), 69–70, 860, 1383
- Ataraxia (Škéma), 824
- Atay, Cahit: Gültepe Plays, 1386; Memet of the Blackness, 1387; Sultan Bride, 1386
- At Dusk (Krlježa), 781
- Ateneo de Manila, 1052
- Ateneo Puertorriqueño Award, 1106
- Athenaeum (Ireland), 699
- Athénée (Paris), 999
- At Hove Manor (Bjørnson), 163
- Atie's Marriage (Simons-Mees), 955
- Atkinson, Brooks: Connelly, Marc, 285; criticism, 359, 612, 1405, 1406, 1408; Hart, Moss, 1509; Howard, Sidney, 632; Kaufman, George S., 1509; O'Casey, Sean, 359; O'Neill, Eugene, 359, 933–934; Treadwell, Sophie, 846–847
- The Atlantic (Greig), 560
- Atlantic Acting School, 863
- Atlantic Theatre Company, 757, 863
- Atlantis (Rovinski), 294
- Atomic Power and Sexual Attraction (Pórðarson), 654
- The Atriden Tetralogy (Hauptmann), 594
- At Sankt Hans (Jepsen), 733
- At "The Eternal Tap" (Nastasijević), 1210
- At the Foot of the Mountain, 445
- At the Foot of the Wall (Aragon), 1308
- At the Gate (Shteyman), 1508
- At the Gates of the Kingdom (Hamsun), 505, 579
- At the Hawk's Well (Yeats), 70, 703, 970, 1503
- Attila József Prize (Hungary), 1011, 1038
- Aub, Max, 1270, 1339; Pedro López García, 1340
- Auckland Festival Award, 875
- Audaces, 1045
- AUDELCO Award, 1218
- Auden, Wystan Hugh, 70–71, 268, 495, 984, 1504; The Ascent of F6, 68
- Audiberti, Jacques, 71–72; The Evil Spreads, 484; The Loner, 485
- audience, 726, 731, 807, 1518
- Audience (Havel), 595
- audience participation, 423, 424, 1043, 1328, 1334, 1335
- Auernheimer, Raoul, 82
- Augier, Émile, 377, 1124; Giboyer's Son, 473; Mr. Poirier's Son-in-Law, 473; Olympe's Marriage, 1101; Shameless, 473
- August, August, August (Kohout), 316
- August, Duke Karl, 367
- Augusta Company, 202
- Augustus in Search of a Father (Chapin), 1014
- Aukin, David, 740
- Aum Shinrikyō cult, 1180
- Aunt Alejandra (Berman and Careaga), 150
- Aunt Dan and Lemon (Shawn), 1229, 1412
- Auntie Mame (Lawrence and Lee), 804
- Aunt Sophie Speaks (Anderson), 42
- Aunt Sosya (Goldfaden), 539, 1506
- Aunt Ulrikke (Heiberg), 601
- Auschwitz concentration camp, 689, 1210
- Auslander, Phillip, 337
- Australasian Playwrights' Workshop, 511
- Australia, 72–81. See also indigenous people and performance. aboriginal drama, 330; Balodis, Janis, 119; Cusack, Dymphna, 313; Davis, Jack, 330; De Groen, Alma, 339; Hewett, Dorothy, 610; Kemp, Jenny, 760–761; Lawler, Ray, 802; male playwrights, 418; National Playwrights Conference, 834; Nowra, Louis, 979; Our Country's Good (Wertenbaker), 1022; Rayson, Hannie, 1122; Romeril, John, 1151–1152; Sewell, Stephen, 1215; 20th century drama, 313, 330, 339, 610; Yiddish theater, 1508
- Australia Council, 75
- Australia Medal, 314
- Australian Children's Theatre, 73
- Australian Elizabethan Theatre Trust (AETT), 73, 75
- Australian Film Institute Award, 547
- Australian Performing Group (APG, Melbourne), 75, 1151
- Australian Theatre for Young People, 73
- Australian Writers' Guild Award (AWGIE), 73, 330, 340, 420
- Austria, 81–87; Bernhard, Thomas, 151, 605; Chlumberg, Hans, 259; fin de siècle drama, 617–620; Handke, Peter, 807; Happenings, 584; Heldenplatz (Bernhard), 605; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von, 617; Jung Wien (Young Vienna), 618; Kokoschka, Oskar, 773; Kraus, Karl, 780; Liebele (Schnitzler), 815–816; modernism, 618; Peymann, Claus, 605; Reigen (Schnitzler), 1126; Reinhardt, Max, 618, 1127; Salzburg Festival, 580, 617; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1195–1199; Second Republic, 1326; Sprachkrise, 618, 626; Streeruwitz, Marlene, 1289–1290; 20th century drama, 605; Yiddish theater, 1508
- auteurism, 1214
- authoritarianism, 1189
- autobiography. See also biography. Annula Allen: The Autobiography of a Survivor (Mann), 864; Brighton Beach Memoirs (Simon), 1246; From the Memoirs of Pontius Pilate (Bentley), 147; Kennedy, Adrienne, 763; Memoir (Murrell), 893–894, 943
- Autobiography (Elkunchwar), 396
- Autobodys (Oldenburg), 584
- Auto da Fé (Suzuki), 1310
- Autopsy (Myers), 73
- Autumn and Winter (Norén), 973
- Autumn Dream (Fosse), 470
- The Autumn Garden (Hellman), 606
- Available Light (De Groen), 340
- Avant Garde Arts Theater (Pakistan), 1028

- avant-garde drama. See also agitation-propaganda; experimental theater; modernism; postmodernism
- avant-garde drama, 87–109; and agit-prop, 27; apocalypse, 54; closet drama, 271; Dadism, 319–320; and interculturalism, 686; Living Theatre, 1408; Moscow State Yiddish Theatre, 928–929, 1507; overview, 87; performance art, 1042; as precursor to Happenings and Intermedia, 584
- avant-garde drama, plays and playwrights: Antoine, André, 475; Apollinaire, Guillaume, 56; The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria (Arrabal), 58; Artaud, Antonin, 67; The Ascent of F6 (Auden and Isherwood), 68; Audiberti, Jacques, 71; Bernhard, Thomas, 151; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Casas, Myrna, 553–554; Chong Ping, 260; Cocteau, Jean, 275–276; Foreman, Richard, 465–466; García Lorca, Federico, 507–508; Ghelderode, Michel de, 526; Goll, Yvan, 540–541; Gombrowicz, Witold, 541–542; Gray, Spaulding, 550–551; Hamletmachine (Müller), 578; He Who Gets Slapped (Andreev), 611; Jarry, Alfred, 728; Jelinek, Elfriede, 731; Klimenko, Vladimir (Klim), 1171; Le Bourgeois Avant-Garde (Ludlam), 838; Mou Sen, 827; Nagy, Phyllis, 948; O'Casey, Sean, 985; Ōta Shōgo, 1020; Sanchis Sinisterra, José, 1184; Stein, Gertrude, 1279; Vitrac, Roger, 1426; Yankowitz, Susan, 1501; Yeats, William Butler, 1503
- avant-garde drama, by country or region: Argentina, 88–89, 1009–1010; Belgium, 142, 144; Brazil, 221–222, 1145; Cambodia, 211–212; Canada, 216; China, 89–91, 255; England, 403; France, 578; Hungary, 640; Iceland, 654; Iran, 696; Italy, 716, 719; Malaysia, 861; Mexico, 896; Poland, 1080; Puerto Rico, 229; Russia and the Soviet Union, 611, 1172, 1376; Southeast Asia, 102–105; United States, 1025, 1400–1401, 1413
- avarice, as theme, 825–826, 830–831
- Avatar Body Collision, 585
- The Avenger's Wife* (Echegaray), 388
- Avenue Theatre (London), 64, 1225, 1503
- Averkiyev, Dmitry, 1161
- Avignon Festival (France), 480, 482
- Avignon Festival (United States), 55
- Avon Theatre, 1292
- Awake and Sing!* (Odets), 109–110, 564, 988, 1085, 1257, 1402
- The Awakening* (Chambers), 405
- Awakening of Spring. See* Spring Awakening (Wedekind)
- Awang, Usman, 861
- Awatea (Mason), 875
- Away (Gow), 546, 547
- AWGIE. See Australian Writers' Guild Award
- "A" Without a Hat, "A" With a Hat (Sā'edi), 695
- Axel (Villiers de l'Isle Adam), 1319
- Ayala Michelena, Leopoldo, 1418
- iAy, Carmela! (Sanchis Sinisterra), 1184
- Ayckbourn, Alan, 110, 280, 578
- AYM. See Angry Young Men
- Aymara, 1046
- Ayyub, Samiha, 392
- Āzād, Afrāsiyāb, 694
- Azerbaijan, 693
- The Azereados and the Benevides* (Vianna Filho), 1422
- Azevedo, Arturo, 188
- Aziz, Ali, 861
- Azizah and Firdaws (Jad), 392
- Azorín, 1270
- Başkut, Cevat Fehmi: The Little City, 1386
- The Baachae of Euripides* (Soyinka), 24
- Baader-Meinhof trial, 430
- Baal (Brecht), 108, 111, 190, 359, 518, 1450
- Baal (Netherlands), 957
- BaAnansi (Brolin), 143
- Baargeld, Johannes, 319
- Babatha (Kainy), 712
- Babel (Wolkers), 957
- Babel, Isaac, 1164
- Bābella, Ashurbanipal, 696
- Babes in the Bighouse* (Terry), 1336
- Baboon Brother and Sister (U Ku), 208
- Baby (Yankowitz), 1501
- Baby Blue (Toronto), 660
- The Baby Blues* (Taylor), 111–112, 1331
- Baby Boom in Paradise (Istarú), 294
- Baby Doll (Williams), 1474, 1475
- The Baby Elephant* (Brecht), 191
- Baby-Killing (Yamamoto), 1499
- Babylon (Discépolo), 563
- Baby Talk (Wright), 1491
- Baby Tsepang (Foot-Newton), 102
- Baby with the Bathwater (Durang), 378
- BACA Downtown (New York), 1454
- The Bacchae* (Euripides), 1311
- The Bacchae of Euripides* (Soyinka), 18, 1267
- Bacchanalia (Stefanovski), 845
- Bacchus (Cocteau), 276
- Bachelis, Tat'yana, 1172
- Bachelor Girls (Wasserstein), 1442
- Back Channels (Gelman), 1168
- Backgammon (Kehaidis), 556
- Back Home (Claus), 270
- Backlash (Bennett), 79
- Backstage of the Soul* (Yevreinov), 1163
- Backstage with the Quigleys* (Geary), 511
- Back Street Mammy (Cooke), 417
- Back to His People (Kobrin), 1507
- Back to Methuselah (Shaw), 112–113, 362, 1056, 1109, 1128, 1226
- Backwards and Forwards (Raznovich), 1123
- Backyard (Balodis), 119
- Bac Son Village (Nguyen), 1423
- Badar, Menachem, 709
- Bad Blood (Gambaro), 62
- The Baden-Baden Cantata of Acquiescence* (Brecht), 807
- Badger's Green (Sherriff), 1236
- Badian, Seydou, 25
- Badillo, Juan Carlos, 62
- Bad Penny (Wellman), 1454
- The Bad Seed* (Anderson), 43
- BAFTA. See British Academy of Film and Theatre Arts Award
- Bagasse (Ayala Michelena), 1418
- Bagdad Saloon (Walker), 1437
- Bagman (Arden), 59
- Bagnacavallo (Streeruwitz), 1289
- Bagnold, Enid, 113
- Bahr, Hermann, 82, 517, 618, 1196
- Bahrain, 693
- Bahumutsi Drama Group (South Africa), 1264
- Bai Fengxi, 113–114, 255
- Bailegangaire (Murphy), 706, 942

- Bailey, Brett, 102
 Bains, Andrew Geddes, 1262
 Baitz, Jon Robin, 114–115, 1412
 Baker, Bobby, 1043
 Baker, Elizabeth: Chains, 404–405
 Baker, George Pierce, 115–116; Hong Shen, 624; Howard, Sidney, 632; O'Neill, Eugene, 1000; Osborn, Paul, 1014; Sheldon, Edward, 1230; theater education, 285, 1341, 1398; Voaden, Herman, 1427
 The Baker's Wife (Stein), 813–814
 Bal (Nelson), 954
 Bala King (Nadeem), 947
 The Balance (Strauss), 1288
 Balance of Payments (Lord), 834
 Balanchine, Georges, 3
 Balázs, Béla, 639
 Balconville (Fennario), 116, 217, 448
 The Balcony (Genet), 116–117, 484, 514, 1057
 The Balcony (Heiberg), 601, 976
 Balcovske, Sandra, 561
 Bald (Dino), 1386
 Bald/Brunet (Gink), 1169
 The Bald Prima Donna. See The Bald Soprano (Ionesco)
 The Bald Soprano (Ionesco), 117–118, 483, 689–690, 1062
 Baldwin, James, 118–119, 786, 959, 1037; Blues for Mister Charlie, 1129
 Balfour Declaration, 1030
 Bal I den Borgerlige (Olsen), 996
 Balinese theater, 1343
 The Balkans Are Not Dead (Dukowski), 845
 Balkan Spy (Kovačević), 1211
 Balkan wars, 844
 Ball, Hugo, 108, 319
 The Ballad (Valdez), 1415
 The Ballad of Ellen Strange (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 625
 Ballad of Lois Ryan (Bovell), 76
 The Ballad of the Sad Café (Albee), 32
 Ballad of Those Condemned to Dream (Radrigán), 1114 ballad plays, 647, 648, 670
 Ballerinas and Channel Surfers (Kroetz), 783
 Ballester, Manuel Méndez: The Clamor of Furrows, 1106; Hilarión, 1106 ballet, 3, 393, 885
 Ballet (Rijnders), 957
 Ballet, Arthur, 371
 Balloons theatre troupe (Palestine), 1033 ballroom dancing, 1286
 Ballygombeen Bequest (Arden and D'Arcy), 413
 Balm in Gilead (Wilson), 1481, 1482
 Balodis, Janis, 119
 Baltazar, Francisco, 1051
 The Baltimore Waltz (Vogel), 119–120, 1087, 1428
 Balzac, Honoré de, 1150
 Balzaminov's Wedding (Ostrovsky), 1019
 Bambiland (Jelinek), 730
 Banana Boots (Fennario), 116
 The Banana Tree (Ng'ombe), 22
 Bancroft, Marie (nee Wilton), 231, 400, 401, 1063, 1143
 Bancroft, Squire, 400, 401, 1063, 1143
 Bandit! (Valdez), 1415 bandit plays (shiranami mono), 758
 Bando Tamasaburō V, 723
 Ban Empty Barn (Onwueme), 1008
 Banff School of Fine Arts, 850, 909
 Bangarra Dance Company (Australia), 79
 Bangkok Theatre Festival, 1338
 bangsawan (Malaysia), 678, 861–862, 1247
 Banjo Eyes (Quillan and Ellinson), 1405
 The Banker's Daughter (Howard), 630–631, 1397
 A Bankruptcy (Bjørnson), 120–121, 163, 975, 1102
 Bannerjee, Sumanta, 669
 Banović Strahinja (Mihiz), 1211
 The Banquet (Ariza), 310
 Bantu Dramatic Society (South Africa), 1262
 Bao Hanlin, 257
 The Baptism (Baraka), 121
 Barabbas (Greig), 560
 Barabbas (Lagerkvist), 794
 Baraka, Amiri, 121–122; Dutchman, 381, 990; The Toilet, 510; Black Arts Movement, 106, 164, 1058, 1086, 1410; chance, 239; jazz influence, 729; Owens, Rochelle, 1025
 Baran, Michael, 455
 Barangay Theatre Guild (Philippines), 736
 Barba, Eugenio, 162, 343, 351, 686, 1090
 Barbara Frietchie (Fitch), 456, 1397
 Barbarians (Gorky), 545
 Barbeau, Jean, 220
 The Barbed Wire and Other Plays (Rugyendo), 1158
 Barbican Theatre (London), 411
 Barbie dolls, 1289
 Barbieri, Francisco Asenjo, 1514
 Barbosa, Ruy, 60
 Barceló, Simón, 1418
 Barč-Ivan, Júli, 1254
 Bard College Kellogg Award, 173
 Bare (Fraser), 962
 Barefoot in Athens (Anderson), 43
 Barefoot in the Park (Simon), 987, 1246, 1408
 Baret Players (South Africa), 1262
 The Barge (Defresne), 956
 Bargum, Johan, 454
 Baring My Heart (Mou), 91
 Barker, Howard, 122, 740, 1058
 Barker-Vedrenne Management, 548
 Bar Kokhba (Halkin and Goldfaden), 929
 Barletta, Leónidas, 88–89
 Barmaids (Thomson), 78
 Barnes, Djuna, 122–123, 916, 1400
 Barnes, Peter, 414–415
 Barnett, Pat, 77
 Barnum (Stewart), 813
 Barnum was Right (Sears and Sherwood), 1237
 Baroque Frieze (Løveid), 835
 Barrault, Jean-Louis, 1184
 Barrault's Theater of Nations (Paris), 1090
 Barreland (theater company), 957
 The Barren Flower (Persiyaninova), 1163
 Barrett, Lawrence, 634
 Barrie, J. M., 123–124; The Admirable Crichton, 11, 405; The Boy David, 405, 1130; Dear Brutus, 334; The Little Minister, 1200; Peter Pan, 405, 1047; The Professor's Love Story, 1200; Quality Street, 405; Walker, London, 1200
 The Barrier (Hughes and Meyerowitz), 637
 Barrière, Théodore: Marble Girls, 1101
 Barry, Philip, 124–125, 1085, 1358, 1401; Cock Robin (with Rice), 1137; Holiday, 621; The Philadelphia Story, 944, 1050
 Barry, Sebastian, 706
 the Barry Girl, 124
 Barrymore, John, 1230, 1375
 Barrymore Theatre (New York), 354, 1502
 The Bars (Carling), 977
 Barski, Israel, 1507
 Barta, Sándor, 92
 Barthes, Roland, 474, 1057

- Bartleby the Scrivener (Albee and Flanagan), 31
- Bartók, Béla, 639
- Bartoshevich, Aleksei, 1172
- Baruch Performing Arts Center, 871
- Bar-Yosef, Yosef, 96
- The Barzanji Chant (Rendra), 1190
- baseball, 800
- Basement (Closson), 142
- The Basement (Pinter), 1068
- Bash; Latterday Plays (LaBute), 791
- The Basic Training of Paulo Hummel (Rabe), 1113, 1280, 1409
- Bass, George, 390
- The Bastard (Petersons), 801
- Bastardy (Romeril), 1151
- The Bat (Rinehart and Hopwood), 1399
- Bat-Dori, Shulamit, 95
- The Bathhouse (Mayakovsky), 100, 125, 880, 1164
- Bathurst Street United Church Theater, 660
- Batten, Francis, 961
- Battersea Art Centre (London), 169
- The Battle (Calsamiglia), 293
- Battle in the West (Vishnevsky), 1165
- Battle of Angels (Williams), 1406, 1473
- Battle of Cedar Creek, 1231
- Battle of the Birds and Beasts (Ilzawa), 924
- Battle of the Nuts and Fruits (Shigeyama), 970
- The Battles of Coxinga (Chikamatsu), 98
- Batu, Selahattin: Beautiful Helena, 1386
- Batum (Bulgakov), 205
- Baty, Gaston, 479
- Bauchau, Henri, 143
- Baudelaire, Charles, 476, 1078, 1318
- Bausch, Pina, 102
- Baxter, James K., 961
- Baxter, Virginia, 75
- Bay Area Playwrights' Festival, 959
- Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle Award, 864
- Baydur, Mehmet: Girl of the Republic, 1387; Lemon, 1387; Woman Station, 1387
- Bayreuth Festspielhaus (Germany), 516
- Bayt al-Karma (Arab-Israeli center in Haifa), 1033
- Bazhenov, Aleksandr, 1171
- The Beachcombers (Taylor), 1331
- Bean, Richard, 125–126; Under the Whaleback, 1395
- The Bear (Chekhov), 243
- Bearden, Romare, 1059
- Bearskin (Sowerby), 1266
- Bear's Lullaby (Gulbis), 801
- The Beatas (Joaquin), 736
- The Beatification of Area Boy (Soyinka), 1267
- Beatles screenplay, 411
- Beat movement, 121
- Beaton, Hilary, 962, 964
- Beatrice's Veil (Schnitzler), 1197
- Beau Brummell (Fitch), 456
- Beaulieu, Victor-Lévy, 220, 221
- Beaumarchais, Pierre Augustin Caron de, 419
- Beautiful City (Walker), 1095
- The Beautiful Despot (Evreinov), 431
- Beautiful Helen (Halévy and Meilhac), 474
- Beautiful Helena (Batu), 1386
- Beautiful Katie (Lardner), 800
- The Beautiful People (Saroyan), 1187
- A Beautiful Tale of Statesmanship (Kawakami), 757
- Beauty and the Beast (Margolin et al.), 871, 1273
- Beauty Defies Tyranny, 889
- Beauty Is the Word (Williams), 1472
- The Beauty Queen of Leenane (McDonagh), 417, 706, 882
- Beauvoir, Simone de, 481
- The Beaver Coat (Hauptmann), 516, 593
- Bebasari (Effendi), 678
- BecauseHeCan (Kopit), 776
- Because I Feel Like It (Mondragón Aguirre), 918
- Because You Are Mine (Williamson), 76
- Beck, Julian, 55, 106, 729, 828, 1085, 1343, 1408
- Becket, or The Honor of God (Anouilh), 51
- Beckett, Samuel, 126–133. See also Waiting for Godot. All That Fall, 38, 484; Catastrophe, 416; Embers, 484; Endgame, 398, 484; Happy Days, 585; Krapp's Last Tape, 779, 1367; Ohio Impromptu, 416; Rockaby, 416; The Old Tune, 1065; What Where, 416; Abbey Theatre (Dublin), 704; absurdism, 5; apocalypse, 55; on critics, 360; deconstruction, 336–337; dramatic dialogue, 365; dramatic structure, 367; farce, 438; forerunners, 1101; Horowitz, Israel, 625; influenced by Evreinov, 431; influenced by Synge, 1322; influenced by Yeats, 1108, 1504; influence on Kōkami, 772; influence on Ørnsbo, 1012; influence on Overmyer, 1025; influence on Sanchis Sinisterra, 1184; influence on Stefanovski, 1278; influence on Stoppard, 1282; influence on Tsuka, 1383; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; Little Carib Theatre Workshop (Trinidad), 1436; modernism, 87, 917, 919; nouveau théâtre, 483; O'Casey, Sean, 985, 986; off-Broadway theater, 990; O'Neill, Eugene, 1005; Owens, Rochelle, 1026; Panic to Two Voices (Radrigán), 1114; post-World War II drama, 704–705; as reviewer, 984; silences, 278; theatricality, 1343
- Beckett Room (Barcelona), 1184
- Beckett Theater (Ireland), 1250
- Beck-Nielsen, Claus, 344
- Beckwith, Jon, 1126
- Becky Sharp (Mitchell), 912, 960
- Becque, Henry, 133–134; The Vultures, 475
- Bed (Cartwright), 134–135, 229
- Bed Among the Lentils. See Talking Heads (Bennett)
- The Bedbug (Mayakovsky), 100, 125, 135, 880, 1164
- Bed of State (Heiberg), 601
- Bedroom Government (Rovinski), 294
- The Beelzebub Sonata (Witkiewicz), 281, 1485
- Beerbohm, Max, 737
- Beer-Hofmann, Richard, 82, 1196
- The Beet Garden (Dubillard), 376
- Before and After (Lyubimov), 841
- Before Breakfast (O'Neill), 1001, 1299
- Before Breakfast (Sowerby), 1266
- Before Dawn (Alrawi), 1029
- Before Daybreak (Hauptmann), 84, 135–136, 184, 516, 592, 1302
- Before Sunrise (Hauptmann), 1102
- Before Sunset (Hauptmann), 594
- Before the Blackout (Soyinka), 1267
- Before the Cock Crows (Bjørneboe), 162
- Before the Cock Crows (Bukovčan), 1254

- Before the Dawn Wind Rises* (Chan), 238
- Before the New Bureau Director Came* (He), 136–137
- The Beggar* (Sorge), 108, 432, 1261
- Beggar on Horseback* (Connelly and Kaufman), 137, 284–285, 756, 1400
- The Beggar's Opera* (Gay), 1354
- Beggar's Opera* (Havel), 317, 595
- Begović, Milan, 304
- Behan, Brendan, 137–138, 340, 704; The Quare Fellow, 1111
- Behind the Flower Garden* (Hōjō), 621
- Behind the Green Curtains* (O'Casey), 985
- Behind the Mirror* (Gremina), 1170
- Behrman, S. N., 138–139, 632, 1137, 1401–1404; Biography, 159; Jacobowsky and the Colonel, 1405; No Time for Comedy, 944, 977–978; Rain from Heaven, 1114–1115
- Beichman, Janine, 970
- Beijing Experimental Theater. See National Theater Company of China
- Beijing Heibei Bangzi Troupe, 570
- Beijing Jingju Troupe, 570
- Beijing Opera, 1497–1498
- Beijing operas (jingju), 222, 575, 1024
- Beijing People's Art Theater, 455, 506, 735
- Beil, Hermann, 1049
- Bein, Albert, 1257, 1403
- Being Choosy Turns Out Bad* (Pham), 1423
- Békés, Pál, 641
- Belasco, David, 139–140, 370, 609, 892, 1001, 1137, 1397, 1398; The Easiest Way, 385; The Girl of the Golden West, 535, 891
- Belasco Theatre (New York), 140, 334, 535, 767
- Belaval, Emilio, 1106
- Belbel, Sergi, 1271
- Belén Silveira (Gramcko), 1419
- Belgium, 140–145, 305, 584, 749
- Belgrade National Theatre, 1209
- The Belgrade Trilogy* (Srbijanović), 1211
- Belisa in the Garden (García Lorca), 507
- Bell, Book, and Candle (Van Drueten), 1417, 1429
- Bell, Florence, 1144; Alan's Wife, 402
- Bellas Artes Prize, 608
- Belle Lamar (Boucicault), 1397
- Belle Reprieve* (BlooLips), 1273
- Belle's Place* (Renée), 1132
- A Bell for Adano* (Osborn), 1015, 1405
- Bellini, Vincenzo, 646
- Bell of Iceland* (Laxness), 654
- The Bells* (Lewis), 401–402
- Bells Are Ringing* (Comden and Green), 813
- The Bell Tolls for Huang Di's Descendants* (Hong), 251
- Belmont School, 877
- Belmont Theater (New York), 503, 912
- Belugin's Marriage (Ostrovsky), 1019
- Bely, Andrei: Petersburg, 927
- Belyayev, Yury, 1163
- Belz, Albert, 963
- Bemba, Sylvain, 487
- Benavente, Jacinto, 145, 360, 1269; Bonds of Interest, 1341
- Benavides Ponce, Rafael, 1418
- Bene, Carmelo, 719
- Beneath the Skin of the Statue of Liberty* (Yevtushenko), 841
- The Benefactors* (Brieux), 200
- Benefactors* (Fraysn), 489
- Bener, Vüs'at O.: The Linden Tree, 1386
- Bengali (language), 388, 1028, 1384
- Bengali theater, 668–669
- Bengkel Teater (Indonesia), 679, 680, 1131, 1299
- Bengt, Bratt, 1313
- Benjamin, Walter, 787, 1193
- Benkel (Indonesia), 103
- Benn, Gottfried, 108
- Bennett, Alan, 145–146; Beyond the Fringe, 415; The Clothes They Stood Up In, 272; An Englishman Abroad, 415; Fortunes of War, 415; The History Boys, 615; The Insurance Man, 415; Kafka's Dick, 415; The Madness of George III, 415, 853; A Question of Attribution, 415; Selling Hitler, 415; Talking Heads 1 and 2, 415, 1326
- Bennett, Bill, 79
- Bennett, Richard, 1345
- Bennett, Roger, 79
- Benrimo, J. H., 892
- Benston, Kimberly, 729
- Bensusan, Inez, 77
- Bent (Sherman), 146–147, 510, 1130, 1235
- Bentley, Eric, 147–148, 359, 360, 972, 1424
- Benzon, Otto, 342
- Bereményi, Géza, 641
- Berg, Peter, 568
- Bergelson, Dovid, 1508
- Bergen Theater (Norway), 646, 647, 1465–1466
- Berger, Henning: The Flood, 927
- Berghof, Herbert, 1025
- Bergman, Hjalmar, 148–149, 1306, 1312
- Bergman, Ingmar, 149, 351, 418, 1298, 1312–1313, 1426
- Bergson, Henri, 1054, 1225
- Beringer, Mrs. Oscar, 402
- Berlau, Ruth, 192
- Berlin, Irving, 588
- The Berlin Circle* (Mee), 888
- Berliner Ensemble (East Berlin), 160, 196, 369, 523, 524–525, 816, 937
- Berlin Philharmonic, 886
- The Berlin Stories* (Isherwood), 708
- Berlin Wall, 1288
- Berman, Sabina, 149–150, 897
- Bernadetje (Sierens and Platel), 144
- Bernard, Claude, 950
- Bernardo de Palissy (Tapia y Rivera), 1106
- Bernhard, Thomas, 86, 151–154, 523, 1048; Eve of Retirement, 430; Heldenplatz, 605
- Bernhardt, Sarah, 325, 715, 716, 955
- Bernice (Glaspell), 36, 1378
- Bernstein, Leonard, 813, 1250
- Bernstein, Normal Ackland. See Ackland, Rodney
- Berrigan, Daniel, 353, 1087; The Trial of the Catonsville Nine, 1130
- Berrilla-Kerr Award, 420
- Berruti, Alejandro, 61
- Bersezio, Vittorio, 715
- Bert and Maisie (Lord), 834
- Bertin, Charles, 143
- Bertolazzi, Carlo, 715
- Bertrand de Born (Lunts), 1165
- Berutti, Alejandro, 563
- Besieged Young Man* (Vianna Filho), 1422
- Besson, Benno, 604
- Best Ensemble (The Villager), 1273
- Best New Zealand Play, 547
- Best New Zealand Short Play, 547
- The Best of All Possible Worlds* (Theatre Action), 961
- Best Play (Romania), 947
- Best Play, Fujian Province (China), 1515
- The Best Years of Our Lives* (Sherwood), 1237
- Betrayal* (Pinter), 154–155, 1068
- Betsuyaku Minoru, 49, 99, 155, 614, 727, 1311, 1383; The Elephant, 393

- The Better Half (Garland), 915
 Betti, Ugo, 155–156; The Queen and the Rebels, 1111–1112
 Betts, Jean, 964
 Betty Nansen on Betty Nansen (Olsen), 996
 Betty's Summer Vacation (Durang), 378
 Between East and West (Nelson), 954
 Between God and Man—Judgment on War Crimes (Kinoshita), 768, 1240
 Between Life and Death (Gao), 506
 Between the Battles (Bjørnson), 162
 Between the Iron (Discépolo), 351
 Between Three People (Tör), 1386
 Between Two Worlds (Rice), 1137
 Between Villa and a Naked Woman (Berman), 897
 Between Villa and a Woman Undresses (Berman), 150
 Beutler, Maja, 1317
 Beuys, Joseph, 584
 Beverly Hills/Hollywood Area NAACP Award, 864
 Beware of the Dog (Anday), 1387
 Bewitched (Howard and Sheldon), 1230
 Bèye, Alioune Badara, 487
 Beyer, Georgina, 512
 Beynon, Richard: The Shifting Heart, 73
 Beyond (Hasenclever), 589
 Beyond Human Power I and II (Bjørnson), 156–157, 163, 976
 Beyond Mozambique (Walker), 1437
 Beyond the Beaded Curtain (MacDonald), 844
 Beyond the Fringe (Bennett), 145, 415
 Beyond the Horizon (O'Neill), 157–158, 364, 1002, 1400
 Beyond the Law (Lunts), 100
 Beyond Therapy (Durang), 378
 Bezā'i, Bahrām, 695
 Bezymensky, Aleksandr, 1164
 Bhagat, Datta, 158–159; Routes and Escape Routes, 674, 1154–1155
 bharata natyam (Singapore), 1247
 Bharatiya Jnanpith (India), 754
 Bharat Rang Mahotsav (Indian National Theater Festival), 676
 Bhasa, 676
 Bhatia, Nandi, 553
 Bhattacharya, Bijon, 671
 Bhave, Vishnudas, 664–665
 Bhoma (Sircar), 1248
 Bhuchar, Sudha: House of the Sun, 417
 Bialik, H. N., 614
 Bialoszewski, Miron, 1081
 Bicât, Tony, 586
 Bicol (language), 1052
 The Bicycle of Cengizhan (Erduran), 1386
 Bidenjarreb Pinjarra (collaboration), 79
 Biedermann, Felix. See Dörmann, Felix
 Biermann, Wolf, 768
 Big and Little (Strauss), 523, 1288
 The Big and Small Maneuver (Adamov), 10
 Big Bertha (Voskovec and Werich), 315
 The Big Bet (Heijermans), 603
 Big Buck City (Moses), 929
 big city melodrama, 892
 The Big Funk (Shanley), 1218, 1219
 Biggers, Earl Derr, 1214
 The Biggest Park in the City (Marichal), 1107 Big Hotel (Ludlam), 837
 The Big House (Behan), 138
 The Big House (Robinson), 702, 1145
 The Big Knife (Odets), 988
 Big Love (Mee and Waters), 888
 Big Maggie (Keane), 708
 Bigot, George, 1335
 Bigsby, Christopher, 452
 Big White Fog (Ward), 442, 1405–1406
 A Big Wig (Karvaš), 4, 754
 The Big Win (Aleichem), 928–929
 Bijou Theatre (New York), 628, 915
 Bilginer, Recep: Rebels, 1386
 bilingual (French-English) theatre, 116
 Bill-Belotserkovsky, Vladimir, 1164
 Bill Brand (Barnes), 414
 The Billionaires, 27
 A Bill of Divorcement (Dane), 30
 Billows out of Dead Waters (Xu), 1497
 A Bill to be Passed (Johnson), 739
 Billy (O'Sullivan), 962
 Billy Bathgate (Doctorow), 1284
 Billy Bishop Goes to War (Gray), 159
 Billy Rose Theater, 1460
 Biloxi Blues (Simon), 1246
 Bimko, Fischl, 1508
 The Binding of Isaac (Goldfaden), 540
 Binet, Alfred, 1071
 Bingo (Bond), 176, 414
 Binh Duy Ta, 80
 biography, 36. See also autobiography
 Biography (Behrman), 139, 159–160
 Biography: A Game (Frisch), 493
 Biography of Julie von Bartmann (Barnes), 123
 biomechanics, 27, 916
 Bip Bop (Rendra), 679, 1131
 The Birdcatcher in Hell (Schumann), 1086
 The Bird Lovers (Bjørneboe), 160–161, 977
 Birdmen (Guo), 571
 The Bird of Youth (Bronnen), 201
 The Birds Go Away with Death (Peña), 1419
 Birds in the Wilderness (Mason), 875
 Birds of Passage (Kureishi), 786
 The Bird That Could Not Sing (Foon), 463
 Birmingham Arts Lab (England), 1027
 Birmingham Repertory Theatre (England), 404, 1129, 1236
 The Birthday Party (Pinter), 106, 161, 409, 414, 421, 1057, 1066
 Birthdays Are Not For Dying (Osofisan), 1018
 The Birth of Tragedy from the Spirit of Music (Nietzsche), 966
 The Bishop's Bonfire (O'Casey), 985
 The Bite of the Night (Barker), 122
 A Bitter Fate (Pisemsky), 1160
 Bitterness (Gorky), 774
 Bitter Stream (Wolfson), 1083
 Bitter-Sweet (Coward), 299, 406
 The Bitter Tears of Petra von Kant (Fassbinder), 438
 Bizet, Georges: Carmen, 474
 Bizzio, Sergio, 62
 Bjorkman, Edwin, 1462
 Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald, 161–162, 977; The Bird Lovers, 160
 Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 162–164, 342, 601, 650, 653, 975–976, 1124; A Bankruptcy, 120, 1102; Beyond Human Power I and II, 156
 Björnsson, Oddur, 654
 Blabber Mouth (Morris), 73
 The Blabbermouths (Rovinski), 294
 Black and White (Kandinsky), 108
 Black Angel (Rodrigues), 1145

- Black Arts Movement, 164–165; agit-prop, 27; Baraka, Amiri, 105–106, 121, 381; Black Consciousness, 1086; Bullins, Ed, 207; Childress, Alice, 249; grassroots performance activism, 283; Hansberry, Lorraine, 583; jazz influence, 729; Kennedy, Adrienne, 763; racism, 1058; U.S. avant-garde drama, 105–106
- Black Arts Repertory Theatre and School (Harlem), 106, 121, 164
- Black Arts West, 164
- Black Bart and the Sacred Hills (Wilson), 1479, 1480
- Black Battles with Dog (Koltès), 774
- The Black Captain (Faassen), 955
- Black Cargo (Romeril), 1151
- black comedy: All That Fall (Beckett), 38; Balance of Payments (Lord), 834; The Baltimore Waltz (Vogel), 119; Bohemian Lights (Valle-Inclán), 174; Christian, Beatrice, 78; The Death and Resurrection of Mr. Roche (Kilroy), 766; Gambaro, Griselda, 504; The Missing Teaspoon (Ragnarsson), 655; Mother Clap's Molly House (Ravenhill), 1121; Norén, Lars, 972; Saint Frances of Hollywood (Clark), 1179; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1514
- Black Comedy (Shaffer), 1217
- Black Eyed Susan (Jerrold), 892
- blackface in Iran, 693
- The Black Glove (Strindberg), 236, 1297
- Black Griet (Faassen), 955
- The Black Hermit (Ngugi), 965
- The Black Hole (Stefanovski), 845
- Black Hole Theatre Company (Manitoba), 1179
- Black Horizons on the Hill (Pittsburgh, PA), 1479
- Black House (United States), 106, 164
- The Black Jacobins (James), 417
- blacklisting. See censorship
- The Black Lizard (Mishima), 910
- Black Masks (Andreyev), 45, 919
- A Black Mass (Baraka), 121, 164, 729
- Black Milk (Sigarev), 1169
- Black Mime Theatre Women's Troupe: Drowning, 417; Mother, 417; Total Rethink, 417
- Black Mountain College (North Carolina), 105, 1411
- Black Nativity (Hughes), 637
- The Black One (Nasirián), 695
- Blackout (Spiró), 1273
- Black Pieces (Matura), 877
- Black Piglet cabaret, 1079
- Black Pit (Maltz), 1083, 1403
- black playwrights. See individual playwrights
- Blackrock (Enright), 419
- The Blacks: A Clown Show (Genet), 105–106, 117, 165, 484, 514
- The Black Sequin Dress (Kemp), 761
- Black Slaves (Matura), 878
- Black Snow (Bulgakov), 205
- Black Swan (Perth, Australia), 75
- Black Tent Theater (Japan), 48, 99, 1193
- Black Theater movement, 417, 990, 1410, 1413
- Black Theatre Co-Operative (England), 417, 878
- Black Theatre in Redfern (Sydney), 79
- Blaga, Lucian, 1149
- Blair, Ron, 74
- Blair, Tony, 1300
- Blake (Kilroy), 705
- Blake, Eubie, 729
- Blake, William, 1227
- Blanchette (Brieux), 475
- Blanco, Gerardo, 1419
- Bland, Peter, 961
- blank verse dialogue, 395
- Blasband, Philippe, 144
- Blasted (Kane), 166, 417, 751
- Blast journal, 271
- Blau, Herbert, 106, 337, 1043
- Blaumanis, Rüdolfs, 800–801
- Blažek, Vratislav, 316
- Bleak House (Dickens), 1220
- Bleasdale, Alan: The Boys from Blackstuff, 415
- Bleat (van Woensel), 957
- Bleecker Street Theatre (New York), 566
- The Blessed Child (Saalbach), 1177
- Blessing, Lee, 166–167; A Walk in the Woods, 1412
- Blewett, Dorothy, 77
- The Blind (Maeterlinck), 107, 141, 854
- Blind Expectation (Ebrahimi), 695
- The Blind Giant is Dancing (Sewell), 1215
- The Blind Goddess (Toller), 1362
- The Blind Man (Dürrenmatt), 380
- Blind Men (Maeterlinck), 928
- The Blinkards (Sakyl), 23
- Bliss (Bulgakov), 205
- Blithe Spirit (Coward), 167, 297, 407, 598
- Blitzstein, Marc, 168, 1257; The Cradle Will Rock, 302, 1084; Pins and Needles, 1084
- BLKARTSWEST (United States), 106
- Bloch, William, 350
- The Blockade (Ivanov), 927
- Blockade (Lawson), 805
- Blok, Aleksandr, 168–169, 246, 368, 431, 841, 916; The Fairground Booth, 99; A Puppet Show, 611, 1107, 1163, 1174; The Rose and the Cross, 611, 1174; Russian poetic drama, 1163–1164; Song of Fate, 1174; The Stranger, 99; The Unknown Woman, 611, 1107, 1174
- Blood (Vauthier), 485
- Blood, Sweat and Fears (Oshodi), 169–170, 1017
- Blood and Honour (Harding), 75
- Blood and Ice (Lochhead), 829
- blood and thunder melodrama, 891, 893
- Blood Brothers (Russell), 1160
- Bloodgood, Clara, 1380
- Blood Harvest (Tsegaye), 1382
- Blood is Mysterious (Sutherland), 1310
- Blood Is Standing Asleep (Terayama), 1334
- The Blood Knot (Fugard), 170–171, 1263
- Blood Moon (Lyssiotis), 80
- Blood of the Lamb (Mason), 875
- The Blood of the Nation of Kampuchea (Chheng), 212
- Blood Rain (Elkunchwar), 396
- Blood Relations (Örkény), 1011
- Blood Relations (Pollock), 171, 1088
- Bloodrites (Baraka), 164
- Blood-Stained Banner (Tahm), 1423
- Blood Wedding (García Lorca), 109, 171–172, 417, 507, 1270, 1505
- Bloody Poetry (Brenton), 414
- BlooLips, 1273
- The Bloomers (Sternheim). See The Underpants (Sternheim)
- Blossom Time (Donnelly), 812
- Blow, Wind! (Rainis), 1115
- Blowup (Bond), 176
- Blue, White & Red (Dutt), 383
- The Blue Angel (Zuckmayer), 1518
- Blueback (Murray), 73
- Bluebeard, Hope of Women (Loher), 830
- Bluebeard's Castle (Balázs), 639
- The Blue Bicyclist (Déry), 93
- Blue Bird (Japan), 769
- The Blue Bird (Maeterlinck), 855, 919
- Blue Blood (Johnson), 739

- Blue Blouse (Russian troupe), 27, 87, 729
- The Blue Envelope (Wolff), 1488
- Blue-Eyed Black Boy (Johnson), 739
- The Blue Fountain (Özakman), 1387
- Bluegrass (Crowley), 307
- Blue Heart (Churchill), 265
- Blue Heron in the Womb (Rowlands), 1156
- Blue Hills (Meredith), 77
- Blue Kettle (Churchill), 1253
- Blue Murder (Christian), 78
- Blue Murder (Nichols), 332
- The Blue One (Priede), 801
- The Blue Pekinese (Abell), 3
- The Blue Room (Hare), 414, 586
- Blues Afrika Café (Manaka), 1265
- Blues for a Prodigal (Soyinka), 1267
- Blues for Mister Charlie (Baldwin), 118, 1129
- Blues People (Baraka), 729
- Blue Visage (Goldflam), 317
- Blue Window (Lucas), 837
- The Blunder (Gambaro), 89
- Blythe, Ernest, 703–704, 707
- Boal, Augusto, 60, 172–173, 188, 283, 353, 485, 656, 1050
- The Boat (Díaz Dufóo Jr.), 896
- Bob (Clarke), 1250
- Boborykin, Pyotr, 1161, 1163
- Boccaleonei (Streeruwitz), 1289
- Böcklin, Arnold, 527, 528
- Boddy, Michael, 74
- Bodmer, Johann Jakob, 1315
- Body and Soul (Mighton), 901
- Body and Soul (Tulloch), 73
- body art, 585, 1043
- body-based performance, 75
- The Body Beautiful (Stein), 813
- Boedo (literary group, Buenos Aires), 88
- Boelen, Hendrik, 955
- Boer War, 1262
- Boesman and Lena (Fugard), 1263
- Bogart, Anne, 173, 1250, 1311
- Bogayev, Oleg, 1169
- Bogdanovski, Rusomir, 845
- Bogosian, Eric, 1087, 1413
- Bogris, Demetris, 555–556
- Boguslawski, Wojciech, 700
- Bohemia, or The Lottery of Art (Murdoch), 331
- Bohemian Club (San Francisco), 214
- Bohemian Lights (Valle-Inclán), 174, 1270, 1416
- Bohemian National Theatre (Prague), 701
- Bohemia on the Sea (Braun), 524
- Boiadzhiyev, Grigory, 1171
- Bokarev, Gennady, 1168
- Bolcom, William, 1424
- Bold Girls (Munro), 939–940
- Boleslavsky, Richard, 8
- Bolet Peraza, Nicanor, 1418
- Bolith, Hector, 1120
- Bolivia, 88
- The Bolsheviks (Shatrov), 1168
- Bolt, Carol, 218, 219
- Bolt, Robert, 174–175, 219; A Man for All Seasons, 1130
- Bombay. See Mumbai, India
- Bombay Amateur Theatre (Mumbai), 663–664
- The Bond (Strindberg), 1296
- Bond, Chris: Scum: Death, Destruction and Dirty Washing, 919
- Bond, Edward, 175–176, 219, 409, 424, 788, 986, 1016, 1458; Bingo, 414; Restoration, 414; Saved, 428, 1194; War Plays, 414
- Bondagers (Glover), 176–177, 538
- The Bond around Our Hearts (Brink), 1263
- The Bonds of Interest (Benavente), 145, 1269
- Bonds of Interest (Benavente), 1341
- The Bonds of Love (Mason), 875
- Bone-the-Fish (Kopit), 776
- “Boniface VIII” (Fo), 282
- Bonn (Norén), 973
- Bontemps, Arna, 637
- book collecting, 1232
- bookish plays, India, 666–667
- The Book of Christopher Columbus (Claudel), 269
- Book of Days (Wilson), 1482
- A Book of Hours (Rodríguez), 1146
- Book of Kings (Ferdowsi), 691
- The Book of Mountain and Ocean (Yung), 1510
- Book-of-the-Month Club Award, 905
- Boom! (Williams), 1475
- Boonen, Johan, 143
- The Boor and the Coquette (Arévalo Beluche), 1418
- Booth, Edwin, 713
- Booth, Shirley, 1050
- Boot Has to Die (Brasch), 187
- Boothe, Clare, 177; The Women, 1489
- Bootleg Faust (Meng), 91
- The Bootlegger Blues (Taylor), 1331
- Bopha! (Mtwā), 1264
- Bopha—Arrest! (Mtwā), 101
- Bor, Jan, 316
- Borberg, Svend, 342
- Borchert, Wolfgang, 177–178; The Man Outside, 521
- Borderline (Kureishi), 786
- Boredom (Heijerman), 1299
- Borgen, Johan, 977
- Borges, Jorge Luis, 88
- Boris Godunov (Pushkin), 841, 1160
- Born in the RSA (Simon), 101
- Bornstein, Kate, 511
- Born Yesterday (Kanin), 751, 1283, 1407
- Borovik, Genrikh, 1168
- Borovsky, David, 1173
- Borstal Boy (Behan), 138
- Bortnik, Aida, 62
- The Boss (Sheldon), 178–179, 1230, 1398
- Boss of the Pool (Morris), 73
- Bostock, Gerry, 79
- Boston Evening Transcript (Gillette), 532
- Boston Museum Company, 1144
- Both Your Houses (Anderson), 43, 1404
- Botoshansky, Jacob, 1508
- Botswana, 21, 22
- Botticelli (McNally), 885
- The Bottomless Well (Noer), 679, 971
- Boubouroche (Courteline), 437, 476
- Bouchard, Michel Marc, 179–180, 221, 487; The Coronation Voyage, 291; Lilies, 819; The Tale of Teeka, 1325
- Boucher, Denise, 180, 221
- Boucicault, Dionysius, 181; Rip Van Winkle, 1140–1141; Streets of New York, 891; The Colleen Bawn, 279, 400, 401; The Octoroon, 214, 893; The Poor of New York, 891; Australian drama, 72; comedy, 280; Daly, Augustin, 1394; dramaturgy, 370; in England, 699; O’Casey, Sean, 702, 982; profit issues, 1397
- Bought and Paid For (Broadhurst), 892
- Bouhuys, Mies, 957
- Boulevard (Özakman), 1387
- Boulevard drama, 728, 1391
- The Boundary (Exton and Stoppard), 1283
- Bound East for Cardiff (O’Neill), 832, 1001, 1400
- The Bounty (Bolt), 175
- Bourdet, Edouard, 509
- bourgeois class. See also class, class politics. Magda (Sudermann), 1303; Mrs. Warren’s Profession (Shaw), 1224; Nušić, Branislav, 1209; Pygmalion (Shaw), 1225; Sircar, Badal, 1248; Sticks and Bones (Rabe), 1280; Stodola, Ivan, 1254; Summerfolk (Gorky), 1306; The Underpants (Sternheim), 1393

- Bourke-White, Margaret, 1500
- Boutet, Eduardo, 715
- Bouwmeester, Theo, 955
- Bovasso, Julie, 468, 990, 1087
- Bovell, Andrew, 76
- Bow Hall, 1324
- Bowles, Jane, 181–182, 687, 1407
- Bowles, Paul, 261
- Bowman, Edward, 961
- Box (Albee), 32
- The Box Office (Ayala Michelenia), 1418
- Box the Pony (Purcell), 79
- The Boy and the Fog (Usigli), 1414
- The Boy David (Barrie), 405, 1130
- Boyd gang, 1286
- Boyd's Shop (Ervine), 427
- The Boy from Oz (Enright), 419
- The Boy in the Tree House (Taylor), 1331
- Boyle, Danny, 1201, 1372
- Boyle, Mark, 584
- Boy Meets Girl (Kaufman), 182–183
- Boy Meets Girl (Spewack and Spewack), 182–183, 1272
- The Boys from Blackstuff (Bleasdale), 415
- Boys from the Men (Crowley), 307
- The Boys in the Band (Crowley), 307, 510, 1410
- Boys in the Band (Wongmontha), 1338
- Boychev, Hristo, 206
- Boytre (Kulbak), 1508
- Boytre the Bandit (Kulbak), 929
- The Boy Who Would Not Grow Up. See Peter Pan (Barrie)
- The Boy with a Cart (Fry), 495
- Bracco, Roberto, 183–184
- Bracho, Julio, 896
- Brades, Georg, 342
- Brahm, Otto, 83, 184, 1127
- Brahminic ritual, 753
- Brand (Ibsen), 184–185, 363, 648–649, 975, 1054
- Brand, Mona, 72
- Brandane, John, 1201
- Brandes, Edvard, 342
- Brandes, Georg, 342, 357, 359, 976, 1293
- Brando, Marlon, 9, 1290, 1406
- Brandstaetter, Roman, 1081
- Branner, Hans Christian, 185–186, 343
- Bran Nue Dae (Chi), 79
- Brasch, Charles, 961
- Brasch, Thomas, 186–187, 1256; Rotter, 524
- Brass Ankle (Heyward), 612
- Brassard, Marie; Polygraph, 1089
- Brassneck (Brenton and Hare), 197
- Brau, Salvador: From the Surface to the Depths, 1106; Hero and Martyr, 1106; The Return Home, 1106
- Braun, Volker, 524, 1256
- Brau Teatre (Spain), 232
- Braveheart (Gibson), 1201
- Bravely Fought the Queen (Dattani), 328
- Brave Smiles . . . Another Lesbian Tragedy (Five Lesbian Brothers), 457
- Braving the Waves (Liang), 810
- Bravo! (Ferber and Kaufman), 448
- Bray, Merrill, 79
- Brazil, 187–189; Andrade, Oswald de, 221; Arena Theater of São Paulo, 59–61, 567–568; Castro, Consuelo de, 231; censorship, 231; Ludlam, Charles, 838; Modernist movement, 221–222; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1145–1146; Sánchez, Florencio, 1183; teatro novo, 231; Tropicalismo, 222; 21st century drama, 231; Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo, 189; Yiddish theater, 1508
- Brazil (Stoppard), 1283
- Brazilian Comedie Theatrical Company (TBC), 188
- Brazilian Comedy Theater (São Paulo), 1345
- Brazilian Version (Vianna Filho), 1422
- Bread (Kirshon), 928
- Bread and Bulls (Barbieri), 1514
- Bread and Puppet Theater (New York and Vermont), 27, 106, 232, 423, 990, 1050, 1085, 1343, 1409, 1410, 1411
- The Break (Ginand), 1418
- The Break (Lavrenyov), 1164
- Break Away (Tesch), 1336
- Breakfast at Tiffany's (Albee), 32
- Breaking News (Mazarkis), 102
- Breaking Out (Renée), 964, 1132
- Breaking the Code (Sartre), 1068
- Breaking the Code (Whitemore), 510
- Break the Heart (Vianna Filho), 189, 1422
- Break the Idols! (al-Guzi), 1031
- breast cancer, 1027
- The Breasts of Tiresias (Apollinaire), 56, 189–190, 281, 478, 734, 916, 1308
- Breath (Beckett), 133
- Breathless (Sakate), 1180
- The Breath of Life (Hare), 586
- Brecht, Bertolt, plays. See also subsequent entries. Baal, 111, 359, 518; The Baden-Baden Cantata of Acquiescence, 807; The Caucasian Chalk Circle, 195, 234–235, 251, 254, 543, 888, 1343; Drums in the Night, 108, 374, 518; The Exception and the Rule, 807; Fear and Misery in the Third Reich, 441, 520; The Flight Over the Ocean, 807; Galileo, 1129; The Good Woman of Setzuan, 543, 841, 1372; He Who Says No, 807; He Who Says Yes, 807; In the Jungle of the Cities, 917; Jungle of Cities, 108, 518; The Life of Galileo, 543, 718, 816–817, 1059, 1085; A Man's a Man, 518, 1372; The Measures Taken, 807, 886–887, 917; The Mother, 369, 807, 930–931, 1083, 1086; Mother Courage and Her Children, 106, 483, 543, 673, 930, 931; Mr. Puntila and His Man Matti, 453, 521, 1372; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, 524, 1133–1134, 1372; Roundheads and Pointed Heads, 520; Saint Joan of the Stockyards, 519; Señora Carrar's Rifles, 520; The Seven Deadly Sins, 1372; The Threepenny Opera (with Weill), 380, 519, 718, 989, 1354; The Trial of Lucullus, 523
- Brecht, Bertolt, 190–197; Abell, Kjeld, 342; acting style, 352; agit-prop, 27; alienation effect, 35, 192, 404, 424, 1057, 1105; apocalypse, 54; Berliner Ensemble, 369; Chinese adaptations of, 256; creative collaboration, 350, 374; critics, 359, 361; deconstruction, 337; documentary drama, 352; dramaturgy, 369, 576; epic theater, 350, 359, 375, 423, 586, 991, 1076; episodic drama, 278; exile, 234, 520, 543, 816, 1133; Experimental Theatre, 1408; historical satire, 640; Indian adaptations, 1329; interculturalism, 686; Japanese drama, comparisons, 1390; Jungian psychoanalysis, 1105; learning plays (Lehrstücke), 807; Living Theatre, 1408; on Lukács, 1256; Müller, Heiner, 937–938; new objectivity, 959; off-Broadway theater, 989; philosophical dialogue, 271; socialist realism, 1256; stagecraft, 409, 639;

- Brecht (continued)
 Tabori's adaptation, 1323;
 Turkish audiences, 1387;
 Unión General de
 Trabajadores (UGT), 1339;
 Volksstück, 626, 1431
- Brecht, Bertolt, influence: by Chinese drama, 251, 254;
 by Kraus, 780; by Marxism,
 519, 1056; by Michael Kramer
 (Hauptmann), 593; by Saint Joan (Shaw), 1226; by Wedekind, 1450; on
 Abdallah, 1; on Arden,
 1212; on Churchill, 265; on
 Claus, 269; on Dragún,
 358; on drama, 1366; on feminist drama, 445; on Fleißer, 519; on guerilla theater, 568; on Halac, 576; on Hein, 604; on Icelandic drama, 654; on Indian drama, 673; on Kipphardt,
 769; on Kushner, 787, 789;
 on Living Theatre, 1085; on Norwegian drama, 977; on Olsen, 996; on Parks, 1037;
 on Peymann, 1048; on Philippine drama, 1050,
 1053; on Popović, 1211; on Salacrou, 1182; on Sanchis
 Sinisterra, 1184; on Sastre,
 1191; on Senda, 1208,
 1209; on Shvarts, 1243; on Tanvir, 1329; on Vianna
 Filho, 1421; on Vietnamese drama, 1423; on Vinaver,
 1425; on world drama, 986
- A Breeze from the Gulf
 (Crowley), 307
- Bremen Freedom (Fassbinder),
 438
- Bremer Theater Lab, 1323
- Brenton, Howard, 197–198,
 219, 586, 1017; *Bloody
 Poetry*, 414; *The Churchill
 Play*, 413; Greenland, 414;
Prauda, 414; The Romans in Britain, 413, 414; *Thirteenth
 Night*, 414; Utopia Trilogy,
 414; Weapons of Happiness,
 413, 414
- Breth, Andrea, 1049
- Breton, André, 108, 275, 281,
 320, 728, 1307
- Bretón, Tomás, 1178, 1514
- Breuer, Lee, 686, 1130
- The Bridal Crown. See The Crownbride (Strindberg)
- The Bridal Veil, or Two Weddings in One Night (Gottlober), 1506
- The Bride and the Butterfly
 Hunter (Aloni), 95
- Bride in the Morning (Claus),
 143, 269
- The Brides of Garryowen. See The Colleen Bawn (Boucicault)
- Brides to the Moon (Five Lesbian Brothers), 457
- The Bridge (Gorostiza), 89,
 198–199, 546
- The Bridge (Kon), 775
- The Bridge (Tätte), 429
- The Bridge (Thompson), 73
- Bridge of Dreams (Jakuchō),
 970
- Bridie, James, 199–200, 1201;
Daphne Laureola, 327
- Brief Encounter (Coward), 297
- The Brief Life (Willems), 1471
- Brief Night (Kubota), 784
- A Brief Respite (Steinsson), 654
- Brieux, Eugène, 200–201,
 1102; Blanchette, 475; The Red Robe, 475
- The Brig (Brown), 106, 353,
 828, 1408
- The Brig (Living Theatre),
 1085
- The Brigadier (Fonvizin), 1160
- Brigadere, Anna, 800
- Brigadoon (Lerner and Loewe),
 813
- The Brigand (Čapek and Čapek), 224
- Brighthouse, Harold, 628;
Hobson's Choice, 616
- Brighter than a Thousand Suns
 (Jungk), 1059
- Brighton Beach Memoirs
 (Simon), 1246
- A Bright Room Called Day
 (Kushner), 787
- A Bright Shining Day (Szabó),
 640
- Bright Sky (Cao), 223
- Brigué, Carmen, 1418
- brilliant comedy, 528–529
- Brilliant Lies (Williamson),
 1479
- Bring Back the Drums
 (Maponya), 1264
- Bring in 'da Noise, Bring in 'da
 Funk (Wolfe), 1412, 1487
- Brink, Andre, 1263
- Brisbane, Katherine, 119
- Brisebarre, Edouard-Louis-
 Alexandre: *La retour de
 Melun*, 1358
- Brisson, Elizabeth, 369
- British Academy of Film and Theatre Arts Award
 (BAFTA), 629, 1160
- British Amateur Society
 (Pakistan), 1028
- British Drama League, 404,
 961
- British Independent Film
 Award, 765
- British Mandate in Palestine,
 1030, 1031
- British Theatre Association
 Award, 463, 1264
- Brittain, Victoria, 566
- Britto García, Luis, 1419
- Briusov, Valery, 107
- Broadhurst, George, 757, 892
- Broadhurst Theatre, 744
- Broad Theatre (Newark, NJ),
 298
- Broadway Bound (Simon), 1246
- Broadway Melody 1942
 (Soyfer), 85
- Broadway theater, 811–815,
 812, 1405–1411. See also off-
 Broadway theater; off-off-
 Broadway theater
- Broadway Theatre (New York), 295
- Broche, Branchard de la, 798
- Brocka, Lina, 1051
- Brod, Max: Adventures of the Good Soldier Schweik, 1076
- Brodele, Anna, 801
- Broder, Berl, 1506
- Broder Singers, 1506
- Brodsky, Iosif, 841, 1168
- Bródy, Sándor, 639
- Broken Birds (Ong), 1006
- Broken Birds (Theatre Works), 104
- The Broken Calabash
 (Onwueme), 1008
- Broken Eggs (Machado), 310,
 845–846
- Broken Glass (Miller), 907
- Broken Glass in Time (Casas),
 1106
- Broken Hearts (Libin), 1507
- Broken Record #1 (Yung), 1510
- The Broken Ship (Bhagat), 158
- Bronnen, Arnolt, 201, 520;
Patricide, 518
- Brontë, Charlotte, 763
- Bronx Express (Dimov), 1508
- Bronze Statues of Days Gone By (Calsamiglia), 293
- Brook, Peter: Mahabharata,
 686; Claudel, Paul, 1193;
 director, 353; Festival of the Arts, 696; Kilroy,
 Thomas, 705; on melodrama, 472; Miller,
 Arthur, 1424; performance
 art, 1043; poor theater,
 1090; religious theater,
 1130; Royal Shakespeare
 Company, 1057; Theater of Cruelty, 734; theatricality,
 1343
- Brooks, Daniel, 202
- Brooks, Jeremy, 370
- Brooks Atkinson Theatre
 (New York), 335
- Broszkiewicz, Jerzy: The Names of Power, 1081
- Brother Chichikov (Sadur),
 1169
- Brotherhood Park (Triana), 309
- Brother in Arms (Giacosa), 528
- Brother Jero's Metamorphosis
 (Soyinka), 1267
- The Brother-Murderer (Olsson),
 453
- Brothers in Arms (Denison),
 217, 341

- The Brothers Karamazov (Copeau), 287
 The Brothers Karamazov (Dostoyevsky and Sherman), 1235
 The Brothers Karamazov (Nemirovich and Dostoevsky), 927
 Brothers Tur, 1166
 Broughton, John, 963
 Broun, Heywood, 157
 Brown, David, 73
 Brown, Henry, 788
 Brown, Kenneth, 106, 353, 828, 1408
 Brown, Maurice, 1001
 Brown, Trisha, 423
 Browne, E. Martin, 1111
 Browne, Maurice, 743
 Browne, Thomas, 788
 Browning, Robert, 926
 The Browning Version (Rattigan), 202–203, 1120
 Bruch: Play in Four Acts (Hein), 604
 Brulin, Tone, 143
 Brumby Innes (Prichard), 77
 Brundibar (Kushner), 788
 Brunton, Alan, 962
 Brunzli, James, 1089
 Brus, Günther, 584
 Brustein, Robert, 371, 378
 Brymer, Patrick, 561
 BTT. See Black Tent Theater (Japan)
 The Bubble Boy (Glover), 538
 Buchanan, George, 1200
 Buchanan, Robert, 1200
 Büchner, George, 278
 Buckland, Andrew, 102
 Buddhism, 208, 770, 797
 Buddies in Bad Times Theatre (Toronto), 202, 218, 268, 510, 530
 Buero Vallejo, Antonio, 203, 1270, 1271
 bufo theater, 203–204, 309, 355
 Bühler, Jakob, 1316
 Bui Kiem's Failure at the Exams (Tong), 1422
 Builders (Todorov), 206
 Building on Sand (Martín de la Guardia), 1418
 Bukovčan, Ivan, 1254
 Buldocina (Pitínski), 317
 Bulgakov, Mikhail, 7, 204–205; Days of the Turbins, 101, 332, 927; Flight, 101, 460, 928, 1164; The Master and Margarita, 841; Molière, 927–928; The White Guard, 101; Zoya's Apartment, 1164
 Bulgaria, 205–206
 Bulha (Nadeem), 947
 Bull, Rock, and Nut (Osborne), 1015
 The Bull by Its Horns (Radrigán), 1114
 The Bullet (Dutt), 553
 Bullins, Ed, 27, 106, 207, 362, 371, 729, 1086, 1410; Clara's Ole Man, 510; Gem of the Ocean, 362
 Bullrich, Silvina, 1184
 Bulwer-Lytton, Edward, 758
 Bumi Teater, 680
 A Bunch of Keys (Hoyt), 635
 Bunch of Lies (Shah), 1029
 Bunker (Mészöly), 640
 bunraky puppet theater. See puppet plays
 Buñuel, Luis, 763
 Bunyan, John, 1223, 1227
 Buoy (Miyoshi), 913
 Buoyant Billions (Shaw), 1227
 Burden, Chris, 585
 The Burden of Love, 970
 bureaucracy, 785
 Bureau of Surrealist Investigations, 67
 The Burgers of Calais (Kaiser), 518, 747
 The Burglar (Thomas), 1349
 Burgtheater (Jelinek), 86
 Burgtheater (Vienna), 81, 151, 370, 604, 730, 780, 815
 Burial (Nádas), 641
 The Burial Mound (Ibsen), 646–647, 970
 Burian, Emil Frantisek, 94
 Buried Child (Shepard), 207–208, 312, 1233
 The Burlador (Lilar), 143 burlesque, 72, 400, 401, 1418
 Burma, 104, 208–209
 The Burned House (Strindberg), 236–237, 1297
 The Burned Orange (Manner), 454
 Burning Beach (Machado), 845
 The Burning Bush (Kokoschka), 773
 The Burning Candles (al-Guzi), 1031
 The Burning of Judas (Chalbaud), 1419
 Burns, Carolyn, 964
 Burns, Robert, 1200, 1244
 Burn This (Wilson), 1482
 burrakatha, 670
 Burrill, Mary, 446
 Burrows, Abe, 371, 813
 Burrows, Arthur, 764
 Bursa, Andrzej, 1081
 Burst of Summer (Gray), 77
 Burykin, Aleksei, 1169
 Bury the Dead (Shaw), 564
 Bus (Stratiev), 206
 Busch, Charles, 510
 Bush, George W., 1300
 Bush, Laura, 788
 Bush Theatre (England), 125, 878, 886 business, 1397–1398, 1424. See also capitalism
 The Business Firm (Surguchyov), 1162
 The Business of Good Government (Arden and D'Arcy), 59
 Bus Stop (Gao), 90, 255
 Bus Stop (Inge), 682, 683
 The Busybodies of the Wide Way (Rovinski), 294
 Butler, Guy, 1262
 Butler, Samuel, 1225
 Butterfly Dreams (Chan), 238
 Butterfly Kiss (Nagy), 209, 948
 The Butterfly Seer (Mahjoeddin), 80
 But Tomorrow (Greig), 560
 Buysse, Cyriel, 141
 The Buz'Gem Blues (Taylor), 1331
 Buzo, Alex, 74
 Buzzsaw Berkeley (Wright), 1491
 By Degrees (Hall), 578
 Bye, Bye, Beethoven (Els Joglars), 232
 Bye Bye Birdie (Stewart), 813
 Byrd Hoffman School of Byrds, 1483
 Byrne, Jack, 1455
 Byron, H. J.: Our Boys, 402
 Byron, Lord (George Gordon), 370
 Byron's Cave (Stanislavsky), 927
 by the bog of cats (Carr), 228
 By the Light of Others' Candles (Ptushkina), 1170
 By the Olive (Hassan), 591
 By Way of Obit (O'Neill), 638
 Cabal, Fermín, 1271
 Caballero, Ernesto, 1271
 Caballero, Néstor, 1419
 A Cabal of Hypocrites (Bulgakov), 205
 Cabaret (Kander and Ebb), 354
 Cabaret (Van Druten), 1417
 cabaret in Hungary, 92
 Cabaret Voltaire (Zurich), 108, 319
 cabbage patch writers. See kailyard writers (Scotland)
 Caberet (Isherwood), 708
 The Cabinet Minister (Pinero), 1064
 Cabin in the Sky (Root), 1405
 Cabin Pressure (Bogart), 1250
 Cabiria (D'Annunzio), 325, 326
 Cabral, Amilsan, 1
 Cabrujas, José Ignacio. See Ignacio, José Cabrujas
 Cache-Cache Pastoral (Terayama), 1334
 Caesar (Brink), 1263
 Caesar (Voskovec and Werich), 315
 Caesar and Cleopatra (Shaw), 1224, 1225
 Caesar-Antichrist (Jarry), 54
 Café La Mama (New York), 1336

- Caffé Cino (New York), 510, 990, 1232, 1409, 1410, 1481
- Çağan, Sermet: Foot Leg Factory, 1386
- The Cage* (Yankowitz), 1501
- Cage, John, 239, 278, 584, 1411
- Cahan, Abraham, 543
- Čahojová, Božena, 1254
- Cahoots Theatre Project (Toronto), 1420
- caidiao, 1347
- Cain (Byron), 1277
- Cain Adolescent (Chalraud), 1419
- Caine, Hall, 1134
- The Caine Mutiny Court Martial* (Wouk), 1407
- Cain's Republic (Planchart), 1418
- Caird, John, 218
- Cairo, 392, 698
- Cairo! Shanghai! Bombay! (Williams), 1472
- The Cake Man* (Merritt), 79
- Calcaño, Eduardo, 1418
- Calcutta. See Kolkata, India
- Caldwell, Ben, 27, 87, 106, 164, 729
- Caliban, by the Yellow Sands (MacKaye), 848
- Caligula (Camus), 211, 216, 481, 482
- Calling for Help* (Handke), 580
- Call Libby Manaoang (Magtoto), 1051
- Call Me Jacky (Bagnold), 113
- The Call of the White Orchid* (Chan), 237
- Call of the Wild* (Kemp), 761
- The Call of Time* (Sáenz), 294
- Call Up Your Ghosts* (Cusack), 313
- Calm Down Mother* (Terry), 1336
- Calsamiglia, Eduardo, 293
- Calusari (Moldavian dance), 1148
- Calvinism, 1199, 1262, 1315
- The Camaraman* (Keaton), 893
- Cambodia, 104, 211–213, 583, 1335
- Camel (Mamet), 862
- Camelot (Lerner and Loewe), 588, 813
- Camel Through a Needle's Eye* (Langer), 315, 797
- Cameri Theatre (Tel Aviv), 95
- Cameron, Alasdair, 1201
- Camille (Akins), 30
- Camille (Dumas fils), 252, 366, 376–377, 1101
- Camille (Gems), 416
- Camille (Ludlam), 510, 838, 1410
- Camino Real* (Williams), 213–214, 1473, 1476
- Campos, David, 310
- Campbell, Alistair, 961
- Campbell, Bartley, 214–215, 1397; My Partner, 944
- Campbell, William Wilfred, 215
- Camus, Albert, 5, 215–216, 321, 1189, 1210; Caligula, 211, 481, 482; The Just, 482; The Rebel, 482; State of Siege, 482
- Canada, 216–221; 19th century drama, 313, 597; 20th century drama, 341, 622–623; early–20th century drama, 597; late–20th century drama, 268, 278, 287, 290–291, 301, 375, 612, 627, 986, 1007; aboriginal peoples, 1153–1154; collective creations, 1354; dramaturgy, 371; English language, 216–219; French language, 219–221; gay and lesbian drama, 627–628; joul (dialect), 628; Quebecois drama, 1375; realism, 341; Regina plays, 597; Yiddish theater, 1508
- Canada, plays and playwrights: Bouchard, Michel Marc, 291; Brooks, Daniel, 202; Campbell, William Wilfred, 215; Clark, Sally, 268; Cook, Michael, 287; Curzon, Sarah Anne, 313; Davies, Robertson, 329; Denison, Merrill, 341; Fennario, David, 1007; Hayes, Kate Simpson, 597; Highway, Tomson, 375, 612; The History of the Village of Small Huts (Hollingsworth), 622–623; Hollingsworth, Margaret, 622; I Love You Baby Blue (Theatre Passe Muraille), 660; Kerr, Lois Reynolds, 763–764; Krizanc, John, 780–781; The League of Nathans (Sherman), 806; Lilies (Bouchard), 819; Lill, Wendy, 290, 819–820, 986; Luscombe, George, 840; Maggie and Pierre (Griffiths and Thompson), 856; Ondaatje, Michael, 278, 998; Reading Hebron (Sherman), 1123; Reaney, James, 613, 1125–1126; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1139–1140; Ross, Cree Ian, 1153–1154; Ryga, George, 1175; Sears, Djanet, 1206; Sherman, Jason, 1234–1235; Simard, Andre, 1245–1246; Storey, Raymond, 1286; Tremblay, Michel, 613, 627; Voaden, Herman, 1427; Young, David, 1510; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1514
- Canada–Australian Literary Award, 1088
- Canada–United States relations, 1235
- Canadian Arts Council, 1427
- Canadian Authors' Association Award, 843, 1331
- Canadian Conference of the Arts, 1427
- Canadian Stage Theatre (Toronto), 1179, 1438
- Canal Cafe Theatre (England), 126
- The Canaries* (Rengifo), 1418
- Cañas, Alberto, 293
- Can-Can (Burrows), 813
- Candida (Shaw), 1226, 1275
- Candide (Hellman), 606
- Candidus, Caroli, 216
- Candle in the Wind* (Anderson), 43
- The Candle King* (Andrade), 188, 221–222
- candlelight, 1342
- The Candlestickmaker* (Rajan), 963
- Candles to the Sun* (Williams), 1472
- Candy Shoppe Miriam (Klíma), 316
- Cangiullo, Francesco, 108; Detonation: Synthesis of Modern Theater, 499
- Canillita (Sánchez), 1183
- The Cannibals* (Tabori), 1323
- canovaccio, 915
- Cant (Munk), 939
- Cantata of the Heroes and the Fraternity of the Peoples* (Alberti), 1340
- Canterbury Festival of Music and Drama, 941
- Canterbury Pilgrims (MacKaye), 848
- Canterbury Repertory Theatre (Christchurch), 961
- Canth, Minna, 453
- Can Three Make It?* (Lee), 808
- Cantiflas, 227
- Cantor, Eddie, 1405
- Can You Take It?* (Kente), 1264
- Canzonissima (Rame and Fo), 1118
- Cao Cao and Chen Gong* (Chen), 223, 256
- Cao Cao and Yang Xiu* (Chen), 222–223
- Cao Uo Award, 1440
- Cao Yu, 223–224, 252, 662
- Čapek, Josef, 224; The Insect Comedy, 315, 685; The Makropoulos Affair, 315; The Mother, 315; R.U.R., 315, 1159; The White Disease, 315

- Čapek, Karel, 93–94, 224–225
- The Capeman (Walcott), 1437
- Capital (Burmese troupe), 209
- Capital Cabaret Strut (Red Mole), 962
- Capital Critics Award, 202
- capitalism: Bond, Edward, 175; Hydriotaphia, or The Death of Dr. Browne (Kushner), 788; The Intelligent Homosexual's Guide to Capitalism and Socialism with a Key to the Scriptures (Kushner), 788; Kōkami Shōji, 772; Kinoshita Junji, 767; Mrs. Warren's Profession (Shaw), 935; Neither Fish nor Fowl (Kroetz), 783; Saratoga (Howard), 1185; Scotland, 1201; Shore Acres (Herne), 1242; Shylock (Kawakami), 758; Spiró, György, 1272; Streeruwitz, Marlene, 1289; The Threepenny Opera (Brecht and Weill), 1133
- capital punishment, 1111, 1312
- The Capitol (Thomas), 1349, 1398
- capocomico, 713–715
- Capote, Truman, 989
- Cappella (Horovitz), 625
- Cappuccio, Ruggero, 719
- Capra (Romanian Christmas dance), 1148
- Caprice in Red (Felipe), 309
- The Capricious Bride (Goldfaden), 539
- Capricornia (Nowra), 979
- Captain Bada (Vauthier), 1417
- The Captain of Köpenick (Zuckmayer), 1518
- The Captive (Bourdet), 510
- Captive Spirits (Presnyakov), 1170
- Caragiale, Ion Luca, 225, 1149
- Carballido, Emilio, 897
- Carbone 14 (Quebec), 221, 1428
- Carboni (Romeril), 1151
- The Car Crash (Dine), 584
- The Cardboard Palace (Dorr), 309
- Card File (Różewicz), 1081
- The Card Index (Różewicz), 1157
- Careaga, Delfina, 150
- The Caretaker (Pinter), 226, 1057, 1067
- Carette, Louis. See Marceau, Félicien
- Carey, Patrick, 961
- Cargo: 32nd Effort to Escape One's Own Skin (Brasch), 186
- Carib (British theater), 417
- Carioca, Tahia, 392
- Carling, Finn, 977
- The Carlist War (Valle-Inclán), 1416
- Carlota de México (Lira), 292
- Carl XII (Strindberg), 226–227, 1297
- Carmelina (Lerner), 813
- Carmen (Bizet), 474
- Carmen (Lardner), 800
- Carmen Jones (Hammerstein), 1405
- Carmines, Al, 990
- Carnegie Hall (New York), 637
- Carnival (Stewart), 813
- A Carnival Absurdity (Caragiale), 225
- Carnival of Manila (Ramon Obusan Folkloric Group), 1053
- Carolina Playmakers (United States), 557
- Caroline, or Change (Kushner), 788
- Carousel (Rodgers and Hammerstein), 813
- carpa, 227–228
- Carr, Henry, 1374
- Carr, Marina, 228, 706–707
- Carroll, Kathleen, 77
- Carroll, Vinnette, 1087, 1406
- Carrubber's Close Theatre (Edinburgh), 1200
- The Cart (Marques), 1106
- Cartel des Quatre (Paris), 808
- Carter, Angela, 1220
- Carter, Ruth: Women of the Dust, 417
- Carthaginians (McGuinness), 884
- The Carton's Palace (Dorr), 355
- Cartoon Archetypal Slogan Theatre (CAST), 1464
- Cartoucherie (Paris), 423, 1335
- Cartwright, Jim, 228–229; Bed, 134; Road, 1142
- Casabalkan (Stefanovski), 845
- Casa de las Américas Prize, 1063, 1377
- Casanova Undone (Edwards), 389
- Casarès, Maria, 482
- Casas, Myrna, 229–230; Absurdities in Solitude, 1106; Broken Glass in Time, 1106; Eugenia Victoria Herrera, 1106; The Great Uskranian Circus, 553–554, 1106; Three, 1106
- The Case (Sukhovo-Kobylin), 1160
- The Case about the Man with the Black Suitcase (Gorostiza), 546
- The Case of Pregnancy (Ye and Wu), 256
- The Case of Rebellious Susan (Jones), 742
- The Case of the Woman Assassin with Álvaro of the Church (Mihura et al.), 901–902
- Casimir and Carolina (Horváth), 627
- Casona, Alejandro, 369
- cast. See entries at actor
- caste. See also entries at class, class politics. Caste (Robertson), 230–231; Death by Beheading (Karnad), 753; India, 668, 674; Karimkuttý (Panikkar), 1036; Routes and Escape Routes (Bhagat), 1154–1155; Rudali (Ganguli), 1157–1158
- Caste (Robertson), 230–231, 349, 401, 1143, 1275
- Castillejo, Lino: A Modern Filipina, 1052
- The Castle (Barker), 122
- The Castle (Klíma), 316
- The Castle Tower (Kyōka), 723
- castration, 785
- Castro, Alfred, 293
- Castro, Consuelo de, 231
- Castro, Fidel, 1063
- Catalan Experimental Theater, 232
- Catalan language, 1271
- Catalina (Ibsen), 876
- Catalunian Battle (Bronnen), 201
- The Catalyst (Duncan), 378
- The Cat and the Fiddle (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
- Catania, Alfredo, 293
- Catastrophe (Beckett), 416, 1068
- Catching the Devil (Wu), 1492
- Cathay Visions (Hwang), 644
- Cathedral Folk (Sadur), 1169
- Cathleen ni Houlihan (Gregory and Yeats), 232–233, 559, 700, 1503
- Catholicism. See Roman Catholicism
- Catiline (Ibsen), 645–646, 647, 650
- The Cat of the New Year (Popescu), 1091
- Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Williams), 233–234, 350, 510, 1371, 1472, 1474, 1476
- Cat on the Rails (Topol), 1367
- Cats (Stoppard), 1284
- Cat's-Paw (Wellman), 1454
- Catsplay (Örkény), 1011
- The Caucasian Chalk Circle (Brecht), 195, 234–235, 251, 254, 543, 888, 1343
- cause célèbre melodrama, 890, 891–892
- The Cause of It All (Tolstoy), 1363
- Cavacchioli, Enrico, 248, 717, 1338

- Cavalcade* (Coward), 235, 299, 406
- Cavalcade of America*, 904
- Cavalleria Rusticana* (Mascagni), 714
- The Cave Dwellers* (Saroyan), 1187
- Cavellini, Leda, 294
- Cavort with Angels* (Florentino), 1052
- Cecil and Sally (Patrick), 1039
- Cederholm, Nikolai, 344
- ceildh-house style, 1201, 1213
- Celal, Musahipzade: The Judge of Mount Athos, 1386; Monday–Thursday, 1386; A Turban Has Fallen, 1386
- Celebration* (Pinter), 1068
- celebrity, 1179
- Celestino Gorostiza Award for Children's Theatre, 150
- Celi, Adolfo, 188
- The Cell* (Mwansa), 22
- The Cell of the Disappeared Poet* (Naghiu), 947
- The Celluloid Mistress* (Ackland and Grant), 7
- Celso, José, 188
- The Cenci* (Artaud), 68
- The Cenci* (Shelley), 935
- The Censor* (Neilson), 953
- censorship: Arena Theater of São Paulo, 60; bufo theater, 204; Chamberlain, Lord, 400; closet drama in response, 271; Comédie-Française, 471; by donors, 1034; English Stage Company, 412; Federal Theatre Project, 1086; funding cuts, 1084; government-approved writing style, 1081; NEA Awards, 1087; occupation, military, 1032; problem plays, 1102; Royal Court Theatre, 412; Thatcher, Margaret, 416
- censorship, plays and playwrights: Arbutov, Aleksei Nikolayevich, 1165; The Balcony (Genet), 117; Bond, Edward, 175; Bracco, Roberto, 183; Break the Heart (Vianna Filho), 189; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Buero Vallejo, Antonio, 203; Bulgakov, Mikhail, 205; The Censor (Neilson), 953; The Children's Hour (Hellman), 248; The Cockroach Opera (Riantiaro), 1136; Coward, Noël, 297, 300; Desire Under the Elms (O'Neill), 1002–1003; The Drums of Father Ned (O'Casey), 985; Ethiopia (Living Newspaper), 1137; Fleck, John, 1087; Flight (Bulgakov), 1164; Gregory, Lady Augusta, 1226; Hang Thun Hak, 583; He Qiu, 136; Horváth, Ödön von, 522; Idiot's Delight (Sherwood), 658; I Love You Baby Blue (Theatre Passe Muraille), 660; Joaquin, Nick, 736; Land of Volcanic Ash (Kubo), 796; Lawrence, David Herbert, 803; Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 92; Nadeem, Shahid, 947; Naghiu, Iosif, 947, 1150; Neilson, Anthony, 953; Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 965; Pirandello, Luigi, 92; Rame, Franca, 1118–1119; Reigen (Schnitzler), 1126; Rendra, 1131; Riantiaro, Nano, 1136; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1145; Salomé (Wilde), 271; Saved (Bond), 1194; Sex (West), 1455–1456; Shakespeare's Cousin (Sorescu), 1260; Shaw, George Bernard, 271, 634; Shipenko, Aleksei, 1168; The Silver Pearl (Halac), 576; A Spring Morning's Dream (D'Annunzio), 325; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo, 1422; We (Wang and Wang), 1446; The Weavers (Hauptmann), 1446; The White-Haired Girl (He et al.), 253, 1458–1459; Wilde, Oscar, 271; Wilder, Thornton, 92; Within the Gates (O'Casey), 984; Xia Yan, 1495; Yeats, William Butler, 1226; Zola, Émile, 1517; Zorin, Leonid, 1167
- censorship, by country or region: Africa (colonial), 17, 19, 20; Argentina, 62, 576, 1009; Australia, 72, 74; Austria, 1103; Brazil, 188, 231; Burma, 209; Cambodia, 583; China, 89–91, 575, 1229; Costa Rica, 294; Cuba, 309–310, 1063; Czechoslovakia, 316, 595; East Germany, 186; Egypt, 392; England, 248, 271, 297, 300, 325, 332, 400, 403, 411–413, 416, 833; Estonia, 428; Ethiopia, 1381; France, 471; Germany, 184, 369, 589, 1049, 1279, 1303; Hungary, 92–93, 640; India, 667, 1333; Indonesia, 680; Iran, 695; Iraq, 698; Ireland, 703, 707, 985, 1226, 1245; Israel, 1508; Italy, 183; Japan, 98, 258, 727, 1324; Lithuania, 824; Ottoman Empire, 691; Palestine, 1031, 1032, 1033; Peru, 1047; Philippines, 1052; Poland, 1079, 1090; Puerto Rico, 1106; Romania, 1149, 1150; Russia and the Soviet Union, 100–101, 369, 425, 460, 1160–1161, 1164–1166, 1168, 1243, 1257, 1303, 1377, 1507; Singapore, 1248; South Africa, 101, 1264; Spain, 1093, 1270–1271; Sweden, 1312; Switzerland, 1316; Turkey, 1385; United States, 248, 634, 984, 1002–1003, 1043, 1084, 1086; Venezuela, 1418
- Centaur Theatre (Montreal), 116, 217, 447, 1007
- Center Stage (Baltimore), 1025
- Central Academy of Drama (Beijing), 1024, 1500
- Central Africa. See also individual countries
- Central African drama, 20–23
- Central Drama Academy (China), 827
- Central Drama Institute (China), 455
- Central Drama School (England), 731
- Central Experimental Theater Company (China), 91
- Central Park (New York), 1517–1518
- Central Park (Wasserstein), 1442
- Central School of Speech and Drama (England), 1066
- Central Spoken Drama Troupe (Vietnam), 1423
- Centre dramatique de l'Est (Strasbourg), 774
- The Centrifugal Dancer* (Manojlović), 1210
- The Centrifuge* (Priede), 801
- Centro de Investigación Teatral Rodolfo Usigli (Mexico City), 1414
- Centro Nacional de Artes (Mexico), 924
- Centro Popular de Cultura da União Nacional dos Estudantes (Brazil), 1421
- Centrum Theater Company, 957
- Century Theatre (New York), 800, 1097
- Cepenkov, Marko, 844
- Cerceanu (Slavkin), 1168
- Ceremonial de guerra* (Triana), 1377
- Cervantes, Behn, 1053; Numancia, 1340
- Césaire, Aimé, 18, 235–236, 487, 1058, 1105; A Season in the Congo, 1206–1207

- Céspedes, Dario: To Play with Fire, 1052
- Chagall, Marc, 928
- Chaikin, Joseph, 990
- Chaim (Badar), 709
- Chaimano, Satit: Lady Amarapa, 1338
- Chains (Baker), 404–405
- The Chairs* (Ionesco), 690, 1057
- Chalbaud, Román, 1419
- The Chalk Circle* (Yunan zaju drama), 251, 254
- The Chalk Garden* (Bagnold), 113
- The Chalky White Substance* (Williams), 55
- Chalmers Award (Canada): Brooks, Daniel, 202; Clark, Sally, 268; Fennario, David, 448; Foon, Dennis, 463; Fraser, Brad, 1396; Freeman, David, 489; French, David, 490, 736; Griffiths, Linda, 561; Krizanc, John, 781; Ledoux, Paul, 1510; Lepage, Robert, 952; Lill, Wendy, 820; MacDonald, Ann-Marie, 843; MacIvor, Daniel, 847; MacLeod, Joan, 850; Maillet, Antonine, 859; Murrell, John, 943; Sherman, Jason, 806, 1234; Taylor, Drew Harden, 1331; Thompson, Judith, 1352; Verdecchia, Guillermo, 1420; VideoCabaret International, 623; Walker, George F., 1438; Young, David, 1510
- Chamberlain, Lord, 400
- chamber plays, 148, 236–237, 386, 1012, 1297
- Chambers, Haddon: The Awakening, 405; Passers-By, 405
- Chambers, Jane, 446, 510
- Chambers, Mary Sharon. See Pollock, Sharon
- Chamorro, Guillermo Ugarte, 1044
- Chan, Anthony, 237–238, 258
- Chan, Joanna, 238, 258
- Chana Senesh (Meged), 95
- chance, 238–239
- Chancellor Liu and the Hunchback (Chen and Chen), 223
- Chandrabhabha, Sompop, 239–240, 1338
- Change (Francis), 629, 760
- Change's Flying to the Moon* (Wu), 1492
- Chang Hsiao-fen, 258
- The Changing Room* (Storey), 1285
- Chanticleer (Rostand), 1154
- Chantu and Champa* (Sovanna Phum), 212
- Chaos is God's Neighbor (Norén), 967, 973
- chaos theory, 1058
- Chao Yang Village (Yang), 1500
- The Chapel Perilous* (Hewett), 74, 610
- Chapetuba Football Club (Vianna Filho), 1421
- Chapí, Ruperto, 39, 1178
- Chapin, Harold, 1014
- Chaplin, Charlie, 1227
- Chapter Two (Simon), 1246
- character-centered theater, 1143, 1154–1155
- characterization: "absent center" characters, 1378; Becque, Henry, 134; Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 157; Chinese drama, 90; Mitchell, Langdon, 960; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 990; stereotypes, 1103; stock characters, 693; Thomson, Katherine, 78; tricksters, 1415; Xenopoulos, Grigorios, 1495
- Characters of the Individual* (Saint-Pol-Roux), 919
- Charandas the Thief* (Tanvir), 240, 1330
- Charelet Théâtre* (Paris), 326
- Chargesheet* (Dutt), 382
- Charles Stuart (Fleißer), 458
- Charley's Aunt (Thomas), 240–241, 296
- Charlie (Mrožek), 934
- Charlie McDeath (Forssell), 469
- Charlotte, or the Mexican Night (Wouters), 143
- Charlton, Peter, 73
- The Charm School* (Miller), 30
- Charred Coal* (Dutt), 382
- Charrington, Charles, 402
- Charter 77, 1283
- Charudattam, 676
- Chashule, Kole, 844–845
- Chat Keo drama company (Thailand), 239
- The Chattering and the Song* (Osofisan), 24, 1018
- Chatterton (de Vigny), 1150
- Chattopadhyay, Dakshina-Charan, 666
- Chaudhury, Neelam Mansingh, 671
- Chaurette, Normand, 221
- Chautauqua Institute, 42
- Chayefsky, Paddy, 1407
- Chayev, Nikolai, 1161
- Chay Yew, 1006
- Cheap Cigarettes* (Tsegaye), 1382
- Checkmate* (Francheschi), 719
- Chedid, Andrée, 487
- Chee-Chee* (Pirandello), 1070
- Cheek by Jowl, 1220
- Cheek to Cheek* (Storey), 1286
- Cheetham, Deborah, 79
- A Cheever Evening* (Gurney), 572
- Chekhov, Anton, plays. See also subsequent entries. The Cherry Orchard, 246–247, 348, 396, 1077, 1162, 1173, 1371; Ivanov, 721–722, 1371; Platonov, 1077, 1162; The Seagull, 350, 721, 926, 1162, 1173, 1204–1205, 1355, 1371; Three Sisters, 350, 364, 367, 369, 721, 928, 1162, 1173, 1355, 1371; Uncle Vanya, 1162, 1355, 1371, 1392; The Wedding at the Third Studio, 927
- Chekhov, Anton, 241–245; apocalypse, 54; Barker's adaptation, 122; collective direction, 244, 246, 368; direct and indirect action, 242–244, 246; director's role, 350; dramatic dialogue, 241–244, 246, 364; dramatic structure, 367; Efros, Anatolii, 1173; Efros, Nikolai, 1171; Field Day Theatre Company, 450; Hall's adaptation, 578; Jungian psychoanalysis, 1105; naturalism, 244, 1055; new poetics, 244; off-Broadway theater, 990; one-act plays, 242–243; Senda Koreya, 1209; set design, 1172; Sherman's adaptation, 1235; Simon's adaptation, 1246; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 350
- Chekhov, Anton, influence: on Chinese drama, 252; on Finnish drama, 452; on French realism, 474; on Greek drama, 556; on Hellman, Lillian, 606; on modern drama, 659, 702, 707, 1145, 1170, 1397; on Netherlandish drama, 955; on Overmyer, 1025; on Vinaver, 1425; on Williams, 233
- Chekhov, Michael, 984; Hamlet, 927
- Chelsea Centre (London), 729, 788
- Chen Baichen, 245–246, 252, 820
- Chen Canxia, 256
- Chen Dabei, 1497
- Cheney, Sheldon, 1001
- Chengdu Chuanju Troupe, 1497
- Chen Jianqui, 223
- Chennai, India, 663, 673
- Chen Renjian: After the Reunion, 26
- Chen Yaxian, 222, 256

- Chen Zhongzi and His Wife (Wang), 1440
- Chen Zidu, 90, 255, 262
- cheo, 1422–1423
- Cheri (Yankowitz), 1502
- Chernodrinski, Viodan, 844
- Chernodrinski Is Coming Home (Stefanovski), 845
- Cherry Lane Theatre (New York), 121, 984, 989, 1215, 1336, 1408
- The Cherry Orchard* (Chekhov), 246–247; Efros, Anatolii, 1173; Elkunchwar, Mahesh, 396; Gorky, Maksim, 1305; human drama, 348; influence, 702; masterpiece, 721; new poetics, 244; Platonov compared, 1077; stage sounds, 1276; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1162; subtext, 1301; symbolism, 1320; tragedy, 1371
- The Cherry Pickers* (Gilbert), 79
- A Cherry Soul* (White), 73
- Chessman (Guo), 571
- Chess Master (Hōjō), 621
- The Chess-Play* (Leino), 453
- Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres de France, 1376
- Chevalier de l'Ordre National de Québec, 1376
- Chevalier des Arts et des Lettres, 66
- The Cheviot, the Stag and the Black, Black Oil* (McGrath), 247, 1201, 1213
- Chhattisgarhi dramatic form. See nacha drama
- Chheng Phon, 212
- Chi, Jimmy, 79
- Chiang, Michael, 1006, 1247
- Chiarelli, Luigi, 247–248, 562; The Mask and the Face, 717, 1338
- Chicago (Innaurato), 510
- Chicago (Shepard), 990
- Chicago '70 (Luscombe), 840
- Chicago Chicago (Romeril), 1151
- Chicago Little Theatre, 1001
- Chicano theater, 1086, 1415
- Chichester Theatre Festival, 793
- Chickenhead (Spiró), 1272
- Chicken Soup with Barley (Wesker), 410, 1455
- Chidley (De Groen), 339
- Chifunyise, Stephen, 22
- Chifunyise, Tisa, 23
- Chikamatsu Monzaemon, 98
- Chickenhead (Spiró), 641
- Chikufu, Tobari, 723
- Chikwakwa Theatre (Zambia), 22
- The Child* (Fosse), 470
- child abuse, 179, 420, 876–877, 1325, 1347
- childbirth, 1504
- child custody, 1296
- Childe Byron (Linney), 822
- A Child in the Heart* (Alrawi), 1029
- The Child of Allah* (Gumilyov), 1163
- Child of Another* (Shkvarkin), 1166
- Child of the Morning* (Boothe), 177
- The Children After Today* (Ørnsbo), 1012
- Children of a Lesser God* (Medoff), 887
- Children of Asazi* (Manaka), 1265
- The Children of Baikal* (Saisio), 454
- Children of the Shadow* (Tomer), 95
- Children of the Sun* (Gorky), 545, 1277
- Children of the Sun* (Mafune), 855
- Children of This Land* (Hassan), 591
- Children's Army* (Wu), 1492
- The Children's Hour* (Hellman), 248–249, 510, 606, 1403
- children's theater: al-Guzi, Nazri, 1031; Australia, 73; Berman, Sabina, 150; Bouchard, Michel Marc, 179, 1325; Brasch, Thomas, 186; Celestino Gorostiza Award, 150; Hungary, 92; India, 674; Jellicoe, Ann, 731; Milner, Arthur, 909; Netherlands, 957; Palestine, 1034; Turkey, 1386
- Childress, Alice, 249–250, 446, 1407; Troubles in Mind, 1086
- Chile, 88, 335, 355, 1113–1114, 1365, 1508
- The Chill* (Sorescu), 1260
- Chilton, Nola, 96
- The Chimney Play* (Laxness), 654
- Chimombo, Steve, 22
- China, 250–259. See also Cultural Revolution (China); Hong Kong; Taiwan. actors, acting, 252–253; avant-garde drama, 89–91, 881; Beijing operas (jingju), 222, 250–255, 575, 1024; censorship and control, 253, 1347; Civil War, 1250; comedy, 347; development of the modern stage, 624; folktales, folklore, 1136; history plays, 262; Hong Kong drama, 256–259; little theater movement, 827; little theatre movement, 255; Mao Tse Tung, pre and post, 114, 1096; model plays, 392; national drama movement, 253; New Period, 255; 19th century drama, 251–252; operas, 889, 1497; socialist realism, 1256; Taiwan drama, 256–259; traditional theater, 26; troupes, 252–254; 20th century drama, 238, 245, 255–256, 276, 347, 371, 575, 624, 644, 1007, 1024; Western philosophy and drama, 223, 251–253; Zhejiang Yueju (Shaoxing Opera) style, 371–372
- China, plays and playwrights: Bai Fengxi, 114; Cao Yu, 223; Chan, Joanna, 238; Chen Baichen, 245; Chen Yaxian, 222; The Chronicle of Sangshuping (Chen et al.), 262; Hong Shen, 624; In a Land of Silence (Zong), 662–663; Jiang Qing, 254–255; Jin Yun, 735; Kuo Pao Kun, 276; Lai Sheng-ch'uan, 796; Lao She, 798–799; Lee Kuo-hsiu, 807–808; Liang Bingkun, 810–811; Li Jianwu, 818–819; Li Longyun, 820–821; Luo Huaizhen, 839–840; Lu Xingchem, 1007; Mo Yan, 1007; Power Versus Law (Xing), 1096; Sha Yexin, 1229–1230; Shen Ximeng, 1007; Sister Xianglin (Lu and Nan), 1250; Thunderstorm (Cao), 223; Tian Han, 1357; Wu Han, 575; Xu Jin, 371; Yang Lanchun, 1500–1501; Yao Yi-Wei, 1502–1503; Zheng Huaixing, 1515
- China Beijing Opera Academy, 889
- China Central Drama College, 262
- The Chinaman* (Felipe), 309
- China Pingju Troupe, 570
- China Wars (Lord), 834
- China Youth Art Theater, 113, 881, 1096
- Chin-Chun-Chan (Elizondo), 895
- Chinese box technique, 854
- Chinese Comedy in the Late 20th Century* (Lee), 808
- Chinese Communist Party, 1458–1459
- Chinese drama, traditional, 26
- Chinese language theater, 796, 807–808

- Chinese Playwrights' Association, 1497
- The Chinese Princess* (Wei), 1451
- Chinese Take Away* (Yen), 80
- Chinese whispers, 1274
- Chinoiserie (Chong), 260–261
- Chin Shih-chieh, 258
- Chips with Everything* (Wesker), 1455
- Chirikov, Yevgeny, 1162
- Chirita in Provincie (Alecsandri), 1148
- Chisiza, Du, Jr., 22
- Chitlin Circuit (United States), 1129
- Chlumberg, Hans, 259–260
- The Chocolate Soldier* (Strauss), 64
- Chocrón, Isaac, 1419
- The Choice* (Arbuzov), 57, 1168
- Chong, Ping, 260–261, 1043, 1413
- choreopoem, 1218
- A Chorus Line* (Furth), 814
- A Chorus Line* (Innaurato), 510
- Chorus Repertory Theatre, 675–676, 1348
- Choukri, Mohamed, 261–262
- Chowdhry, Maya: Monsoon, 417
- Chowringhee Theatre (Kolkata), 668
- Chraïbi, Driss, 487
- Chris Christopherson (O'Neill). See Anna Christie (O'Neill)
- Christensen, Bernhard, 3
- Christ figures, 386
- Christian, Beatrix, 78
- The Christian Brothers* (Blair), 74
- Christian drama, 1127–1131
- Christiania Theater (Oslo), 601, 646–648, 1098
- Christianity Under the Glacier* (Laxness), 654
- Christian morality, 1326
- Christie, Audrey, 1429
- Christie in Love* (Brenton), 197
- Christina Alexandra (Forssell), 469
- Christmas at the Ivanovs'* (Vvedensky), 101, 1165
- Christmas Bridge* (McMillan), 77
- Christmas in Naples* (De Filippo), 338
- Christmas Tale* (Barceló), 1418
- The Christ of the Violets* (Eloy Blanco), 1418
- Christomanos, Konstantinos, 1495
- Christophe Colomb, (Ghelderode), 526
- Christopher Award, 865
- Christopher Blake (Hart), 588
- Christopher Columbus (Bertin), 143
- Christopher Strong (Akins), 30
- Christ's Victory (Sorge), 1261
- Chronic (Griffiths), 561
- The Chronicle of Sangshuping* (Chen et al.), 255, 262
- Chronicle of Women* (Yung), 1510
- Chronicles of Hell* (Ghelderode), 526
- Chronicles of Planet Earth* (Kōkami), 772
- Chubak, Sâdeq, 695
- Chucky's Hunch (Owens), 1026
- Chueca, Federico, 1514
- Chulalongkorn, King. See Rama V
- Chums (Herne), 609
- Church and Stage Guild (England), 402
- Churchill, Caryl, 262–266; Cloud Nine, 219, 272, 280, 412, 428, 1058; Far Away, 280, 436; Fen, 446–447; Light Shining in Buckinghamshire, 272, 412; Serious Money, 446; The Skriker, 416, 1253–1254; Top Girls, 417, 446, 919, 1365; Vinegar Tom, 264, 919; apocalypse, 55; contrasted with Canadian writers, 219; creative collaboration, 350; epic theater, 424; gay and lesbian drama, 510; influenced by Osborne, 1017; Joint Stock Theatre Group, 272, 740; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; New Left playwright, 586
- Churchill, Winston, 1227
- The Churchill Play* (Brenton), 197, 413
- Çiçu (Nesin), 1387
- Čičvák, Martin, 1255
- Cincinatti—Scenes from City Life (Simon), 101
- Cinderelative (Heyward and DeJagers), 612
- Cinderella* (Barceló), 1418
- Cinderella* (Ensler), 420
- Cinderella* (Lardner), 800
- The Cinderella Game* (Rummo), 429
- Cinderella romance*, 1109
- Cinematheque (New York), 465
- Cino, Joe, 990
- Cinzano (Petrushevskaya), 1168
- Circa (Australia), 75
- Circa Theatre* (New Zealand), 578, 964
- The Circle* (Maugham), 266–267, 879
- The Circle* (Peña), 1419
- Circle in the Square Theatre* (New York), 106, 117, 989, 990, 1408, 1474
- Circle in the Square Theatre School* (New York), 761
- Circle of the Witch*, 445
- Circle Repertory Theatre* (New York), 452, 968, 1087, 1481
- The Circles* (Altan), 1386
- circus arts, 1043, 1245
- Circus Busch, 1127
- Circus Oz* (Australia), 75
- Circus Story* (Salacrou), 1308
- Cirque du Soleil*, 1245
- The Cīruliši Farmstead* (Gulbis), 801
- A Citizen Called Teacher* (Blanco), 1419
- Citizens of Seoul* (Hirata), 614
- Citizens' Theatre* (Glasgow), 332, 1201
- The City* (Bergman), 149
- The City* (Fitch), 456–457, 1398
- The City* (Milner), 909
- City of Angels* (Gelbart), 814
- The City of People* (Albee), 31
- A City of Tales* (Mofid), 696
- City of Truth* (Lunts), 100, 1165
- City Street Theatre* (New York), 568
- The City Whose Prince is a Child* (Montherlant), 920
- Civic Repertory Theatre* (New York), 36, 536, 1083, 1405
- civic theater movement, 282
- The Civic Theatre* (MacKaye), 1400
- Civil Death* (Giacometti), 714
- Civilization Misunderstood* (Voinikov), 206
- civilization vs. savagery, 863–864
- Civil Rights in a Cracker Barrel* (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
- civil rights movement (United States), 789, 1087, 1218, 1501
- Civil War. See individual countries*
- Civil Wars* (Wilson), 1058
- Cixous, Hélène, 267–268, 417, 1058, 1105; The Terrible But Unfinished History of Norodom Sihanouk, King of Cambodia, 486–487, 1334
- Clair, René, 728
- Claire Lacombe and the Great Revolution (Olsen), 996
- The Clamor of Furrows* (Ballester), 1106
- The Clancy Name* (Robinson), 702, 1145
- clandestine performances, 1081
- Clara (Miller), 906
- Clara S.: A Musical* (Jelinek), 86, 730
- Clara's Ole Man* (Bullins), 207
- Clara's Relationships* (Loher), 830

- Claridad, 88
- Clark, Barrett, 1406
- Clark, Barrett H., 1287
- Clark, Sally, 268; Saint Frances of Hollywood, 1179
- Clark, Sophia Louise Wepf: Entertainment to Make Votes for Women, 915
- Clark-Bekederemo, John Pepper, 24
- Clarke, Jocelyn, 1250
- Clarke, Marcus, 72
- Clarke, Terence, 419
- Clark in Sarajevo (Zimdahl), 78
- Clash by Night* (Odets), 988
- class, class politics. See also labor issues, as theme
- class, class politics, 204, 562–563. See also bourgeois class; subsequent entries; working class
- class, class politics, plays and playwrights: Barker, Howard, 122; Before Breakfast (Sowerby), 1266; The Boss (Sheldon), 179; The Bridge (Gorostiza), 198; Bullins, Ed, 207; Fraser, Brad, 1395; Genet, Jean, 512–515; Granville-Barker, Harley, 1432; The Green Cockatoo (Schnitzler), 1197; Guarnieri, Gianfrancesco, 567–568; Honor (Sudermann), 1303; The Iceman Cometh (O'Neill), 655; Jones, Henry Arthur, 742; The Maids (Genet), 858; Marcel Pursued by Hounds (Tremblay), 868–869; Margaret Fleming (Herne), 870; The Measures Taken (Brecht), 886–887; Miss Julie (Strindberg), 910–912; Pygmalion (Shaw), 1225; Rengifo, César, 1419; The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky), 1202; They Don't Wear Black Tie (Guarnieri), 1344; The Underpants (Sternheim), 1394
- class, class politics, by country or region: Argentina, 61; China, 393; Egypt, 391; Hungary, 92; India, 1036, 1333; Philippines, 1053; United States, 1083; Wales, 389
- classical theater. See also Greek chorus. colonial Africa, 17; India, 668; Indonesia, 680; influence on Reinhardt, 1127; influence on Sadur, 1169; influence on Sartre, 1189; romanticism, 1151; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1173, 1174
- Classical Theater of Harlem, 165
- classical tragedy. See tragedy
- Classic of Mountains and Seas* (Gao), 506
- Classic Stage Company, 1502
- The Classified Ad* (Ginzburg), 533
- Claudel, Paul, 268–269, 701, 970; Golden Heads, 477; The Satin Slipper, 477, 1192–1193; The Tidings Brought to Mary, 477
- Claus, Hugo, 141, 143, 269–270, 957
- Clausen, Svend, 342
- Claustrophobia (Dodin), 1170
- Clavo y Canela, 1045
- Claw (Barker), 122
- Clay, Frederic, 531
- The Clay Cart* (Tanvir), 1329
- Cleage, Pearl, 446
- Clean Hands* (Hristić), 1210
- Cleansed* (Kane), 751
- Clear All Wires* (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
- A Clever Girl* (Morimoto), 924
- The Climate of Eden* (Hart), 588
- The Climber* (Dagerman), 322
- The Climbers* (Fitch), 456, 1397
- Clit Notes* (Hughes), 636
- Clockopera* (Osborne), 1016
- A Clock With a Cuckoo* (Jürkāns), 801
- The Cloister* (Meyerhold), 141
- Clope (Pinget), 1065
- Close, Glenn, 420, 1393
- Closed Door* (Praga), 1097
- The Closed Mouth* (Badillo), 62
- Close Harmony* (Rice and Parker), 1137
- Closer* (Marber), 270–271, 868
- closet drama, 271–272; Bergman, Hjalmar, 148; Canada, 216; The Great Highway (Strindberg), 1297; Kubota Mantarō, 784; Scotland, 1200; Stein, Gertrude, 239; Western Europe, 107; Yeats, William Butler, 703
- Closson, Hermann, 142
- Clothes for a Summer Hotel* (Williams), 1477
- The Clothes They Stood Up In* (Bennett), 272
- Clothe the Naked* (Pirandello), 1070
- Cloudcolors* (Kruusvall), 429
- Cloud Nine* (Churchill), 219, 265, 272–273, 280, 412, 428, 740, 1058
- The Clouds* (Gale), 503
- The Clouds* (Noer), 679, 971
- Cloudstreet* (Winton), 419
- Cloud Tectonics* (Rivera), 1141
- Clout* (Young), 1510
- clown characters: Hey Rube! (Luscombe), 840; Indonesia, 679–680; Iran, 692–693, 695; Iraq, 697–698; Red Nose (Yao), 1502
- The Clowns* (Théâtre du Soleil), 913
- The Club* (Ørnsbo), 273, 1012
- The Club* (Williamson), 1478
- Club de Teatro de Lima*, 1045
- Club Swing* (Australia), 75
- The Clubwielders of Varazil* (Să'edi), 695
- Clurman, Harold, 371, 1005, 1368
- Clytemnestra* (Suzuki), 1311
- CNT. See Confederación Nacional de Trabajo (CNT)
- Coaltown Blues* (Thompson), 1353
- Coastal Disturbances (Howe), 633, 1412
- The Coast of Utopia* (Stoppard), 274, 411, 1284
- Cobb (Blessing), 167
- The Cobblers* (Kivi), 452
- Cock-a-doodle Dandy* (O'Casey), 984, 985
- Cockpit Theatre* (England), 731
- The Cockroach Opera* (Riantiarno), 103, 274–275, 679, 1136
- Cock Robin* (Rice and Barry), 1137
- The Cocktail Hour* (Gurney), 572
- The Cocktail Party* (Eliot), 378, 395, 408, 915, 1407
- Coco* (Koltès), 774
- Coco* (Lerner), 813
- The Cocoonuts* (Kaufman), 812
- The Cocoonuts* (Kaufman and Ryskind), 756
- cocoliche language (Argentina), 563
- Cocteau, Jean, 275–276, 513–514, 728, 763, 952, 1408; Antigone, 1369; The Infernal Machine, 480, 680, 1369; Les Parents Terribles, 718; The Maids, 858; Orpheus, 1012–1013, 1369; Parade, 108, 478–479; Renaud and Armide, 481; Wedding on the Eiffel Tower, 479–480
- Codron, Michael, 421
- Coelin, or the Child of Mystery (Pixérécourt), 472, 890
- Coffee and Orchids* (Chalbaud), 1419
- Coffee with Milke* (González), 310
- The Coffin is Too Big for the Hole* (Kuo), 104, 276–277, 785, 1247, 1464
- cohabitation, 1181
- Cohan, George M., 658, 720; Seven Keys to Baldpate, 1213–1214
- Cohan Theatre (New York), 720

- Cohen, Hetti, 121
 Cohen, Steven, 102
 Cohn, Roy, 787, 788
 Cold Air (Pinerro), 309
 A Colder Climate (Alrawi), 1029
 The Cold Heart (Saalbach), 1177
 The Cold Light (Zuckmayer), 1519
 Cold War. See also World War II, years after. Abell, Kjeld, 3; Australia, 77; Blessing, Lee, 166; Bowles, Jane, 1407; Brasch, Thomas, 186; Brecht, Bertolt, 196–197; House Un-American Activities Committee, U.S., 196, 905; Iceland, 654; In the Matter of J. Robert Oppenheimer (Kipphardt), 768; jazz influence, 729; The Physicists (Dürrenmatt), 380; The Star Turns Red (O'Casey), 984; United States, 1406–1409; Zuckmayer, Carl, 1519
 The Cold Wind and the Warm (Behrman), 139
 Cole, Catherine, 1043
 Cole, Lord Bob, 1
 Cole, Stephanie, 1327
 Cole, Tom, 1087
 The Collaborator (Dürrenmatt), 381
 collage, 147, 277–278, 776
 Collapse of "The Great Wall" (Lee), 808
 Colleague Crampton (Hauptmann), 593
 Collected Plays (Barrie), 1047
 Collected Works (Ibsen), 647
 The Collected Works of Billy the Kid (Ondaatje), 278–279, 998
 The Collection (Pinter), 412, 1068
 The Colleen Bawn (Boucicault), 181, 279, 400, 401, 699
 Collins, Kathleen, 446
 Collision of Altars (Tsegaye), 1381
 Colón, Miriam, 1406
 The Colonel Bird (Boytchev), 206
 Colonel Tom's Cabin (Hughes), 637
 A Colonial House (Dorr), 356 colonialism and colonization, plays and playwrights: Amala, Kamala (Norén), 1314; Black Battles with Dog (Koltès), 774; The Girl Who Killed to Save (Dhlomo), 1262; Joaquin, Nick, 736; Lenormand, Henri-René, 809; My Beatles (Satoh), 1193; Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 965; Rayson, Hannie, 1122; Return to the Desert (Koltès), 774; The Satin Slipper (Caudel), 1193; A Season in the Congo (Césaire), 1206; Serumaga, Robert, 1213; Soyinka, Wole, 1267; The Tragedy of King Christophe (Césaire), 1206 colonialism and colonization, by country or region: Afghanistan, 13; Africa, 14–19 passim; Algeria, 774, 1203–1204; Argentina, 61; Asia, 77; Australia, 72, 79; Belgium, 143; Costa Rica, 293; India, 663–672; Indonesia, 678; Ireland, 700–702, 1373; Korea, 769, 1193; New Zealand, 961; Nigeria, 1008, 1018; Philippines, 658–659, 736, 1051–1053; Québec, 1249; Singapore and Malaysia, 104; Southeast Asia, 102–104; Uganda, 1158; Vietnam, 1423
 The Colored Museum (Wolfe), 1487
 The Color of August (Pedrero), 1040
 Color Struck (Hurst), 641–642
 Colportage (Kaiser), 748
 Columbia Workshop, 904
 Columbus (Hilbert), 315
 Columbus, Christopher, 781
 Columbus and the Discovery of Japan (Nelson and Gelman), 954
 Columbus 'lapsus' (Els Joglars), 232
 Columbus Theater (Buenos Aires), 61
 Colway Theatre Trust, 731
 Comden, Betty, 813
 Come and Go (Beckett), 133
 The Comeback (Horovitz), 624
 Come Back, Little Sheba (Inge), 682, 683
 Come Blow Your Horn (Simon), 281, 987, 1246, 1408
 The Comedians (Barnes), 414–415
 The Comedians (Brazil), 188
 Comedians (Griffiths), 280
 Comédie Canadienne theater company, 220
 Comédie des Champs-Élysées (Paris), 534, 1252, 1439
 Comédie-Française (Paris): censorship, 471; Audiberti, Jacques, 71; Caudel, Paul, 269, 1193; Cocteau, Jean, 481; Courteline, Georges, 476; Genet, Jean, 515; Gombrowicz's plays, 541; Grumberg, Jean-Claude, 566; Handke, Peter, 581; Ionesco, Eugène, 690; Lenéru, Marie, 476; Montherlant, Henry de, 920
 comédie guignolesque, 360
 comedy, 279–281. See also black comedy; comedy of manners; farce. African American, 1093; avant-garde, 229; Beijing Opera, 1498; boulevard comedy, 281, 578, 589; bourgeois, 639–640; "box set," 230; Broadway, 284–285; Cold War era, 1407; Depression era, 1401–1404; dialogue, 364; drawing room, 328; farce compared, 279; kyōgen theater, 972; Negro folk comedy, 637; newer types, 280; parody, 608, 614; religious theater, 1128; Ridiculous Theater Company, 1058; Ridiculous Theatrical Company (New York), 837–838; romanticism, 1150; sketch comedy, 556, 562; vaudeville, 473; verse, 220; Yiddish theater, 1505–1508 comedy, plays and playwrights: Arcadia (Stoppard), 58; Arms and the Man (Shaw), 64; Ayckbourn, Alan, 110; Bahr, Hermann, 82; Becque, Henry, 134; Behrman, S. N., 139; Belyayev, Yury, 1163; Bennett, Alan, 146; Bernhard, Thomas, 153; Casas, Myrna, 229; Charley's Aunt (Thomas), 240; Chekhov, Anton, 243, 246; Coward, Noël, 598; Dr. Knock, or the Triumph of Medicine (Romains), 1147; Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 380; Educating Rita (Russell), 1159; Enright, Nick, 419; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; Harrigan, Edward G., 587, 1398; Heiberg, Gunnar, 601; Henley, Beth, 607; Holiday (Barry), 621; Howe, Tina, 633; The Importance of Being Earnest (Wilde), 661; It Pays to Advertise (Megrue and Hackett), 720–721; John Bull's Other Island (Shaw), 737; Kanin, Garson, 751; Kaufman, George S., 756; The Keep (Thomas), 760; Kitamura Sō, 770; The Knack (Jellicoe), 771; Kornfeld, Paul, 777; Lao She, 798; Lee Kuo-hsiu, 808; Lunacharsky, Anatoly Vasilyevich, 838; Mitchell, Langdon, 960; Oh, Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in comedy (continued)

- the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad (Kopit), 775; The Old New Year (Roshchin), 1168; Patrick, John, 1039; The Philadelphia Story (Barry), 1050; Picnic (Inge), 1060; Pinero, Arthur, 1064; Playing with Fire: Comedy in One Act (Strindberg), 1296; The Power Plays (Walker), 1095; The Pretty Girl (Naidyonov), 1162; Pygmalion (Shaw), 1109; Rattigan, Terence, 1119–1121; Raznovich, Diana, 1122–1123; The Real Thing (Stoppard), 1125; Reigen (Schnitzler), 1126; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1140; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard), 1152; Sardou, Victorien, 1186; Shanley, John Patrick, 1218; Shkvarkin, Vasily, 1166; Simon, Neil, 1246; Slavs! Thinking About the Longstanding Problems of Virtue and Happiness (Kushner), 788; Society (Robertson), 1143; Spreading the News (Gregory), 1274; Strictly Dishonorable (Sturges), 1292; Tesich, Steve, 1337; Touch of the Sun (Renée), 1132; Travesties (Stoppard), 1374; The Turnabout of Ferdyš Pištora (Langer), 797; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Valdez, Luis, 1415; Van Druten, John, 1417; Vogel, Paula, 1428; Wilde, Oscar, 598; Woe from Wit (Griboyedov), 1160; Xenopoulos, Grigorios, 1495; Xiong Foxi, 1497; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513; The Zoo Story (Albee), 1517–1518
- comedy, by country or region: Argentina, 61; Australia, 72, 76, 78; Austria, 86; Belgium, 141; Bulgaria, 206; Costa Rica, 293; England, 280, 414; Estonia, 428; France, 281; Hungary, 639; Iran, 693, 695; Italy, 719; Japan, 728; New Zealand, 962, 964; Nigeria, 24; Romania, 225; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1173; United States, 279, 281
- The Comedy of Alexis, Man of God* (Kuzmin), 1163
- Comedy of Errors* (Shakespeare): kyōgen theater, 970
- comedy of manners, 403; Barry, Philip, 124; Belgian drama, 141; Brazil, 1145; Close Harmony (Rice and Parker), 1137; The Importance of Being Earnest (Wilde), 661, 699; James, Henry, 726; LaBute, Neil, 791; Life with Father (Lindsay), 818; sainete, 1178; Şannū, Ya'qub, 698; Saratoga (Howard), 1185; school plays (Iceland), 652; A Scrap of Paper (Sardou), 1203; zarzuela (Spain), 1514
- The Comedy of Mr. Allman Yang* (Hwang), 644
- The Comedy of the City of Petersburg* (Kharms), 765
- Comedy of Words* (Schnitzler), 1198
- The Comedy on the Bridge* (Kushner), 788
- Comedy Theatre, 879
- Come into the Garden Maud* (Coward), 1259
- Comenius (Kokoschka), 773
- Come on Strong* (Kanin), 751
- Come Out* (Sakate), 1180
- The Comet* (Stanislavsky), 1277
- Come to Me* (Kokovkin), 1169
- Come to the Stable* (Boothe), 177
- The Comical Wedding* (Goldfaden), 540
- The Comic Artist* (Glaspell), 536
- comic books. See manga
- Comic Finale* (Fo), 461
- comic-frenetic theatre, 772
- Comic Mystery* (Fo), 281–282, 461, 719
- comic theater, 414–415, 531, 692
- Comic Toy* (Agustini), 1418
- Coming Attactions* (Tally), 1327
- The Coming of Christ* (Masefield), 495, 1130
- The Coming of Peace* (Hauptmann), 516, 592, 1449
- The Coming of Stork* (Williamson), 74, 1478
- Comings and Goings* (Terry), 1336
- Coming Through Slaughter* (Ondaatje), 998
- The Coming Wisdom to Don Quixote* (Dyk), 315
- commedia dell'arte: agit-prop, 27; Belgium, 142; Benavente, Jacinto, 145; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; The Bonds of Interest (Benavente), 1269; Brecht, Bertolt, 718; bufo theater, 204; Burgundy, 288; Italy, 713, 1118; Love's Fateful Play (Čapek and Čapek), 224; Russia, 1163, 1174; Valdez, Luis, 1415; Wales, 1155; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1514
- commercial theater. See theater: business or art?
- Commissaris Fennedy* (Reve), 957
- The Common Glory* (Green), 557
- Common Language* (Triana), 1377
- A Common Miracle* (Shvarts), 1243
- Commonwealth Award, 1263
- Common Words (Triana), 310
- communalism, 1221
- Commune (Schechner), 423
- Communicado Theatre Company, 873–874
- Communicating Doors (Ayckbourn), 110
- The Communication Chord* (Friel), 491
- The Communion* (Norén), 973
- communism. See also entries at socialism. Abe Kōbō, 2; Antigona and the Others (Karvaš), 754; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Dirty Hands (Sartre), 1190; environmental theater, 423; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; In the Long Darkness (Sarumpaet), 1191; Kroetz, Franz Xaver, 782; Mystery-Bouffe (Mayakovsky), 945; People from Our Street (Karvaš), 754; Play Comedy (Steigerwald), 1278; Prague (Krizanc), 781; Saint Frances of Hollywood (Clark), 1179; Sastre, Alfonso, 1191; Shaw, George Bernard, 1227; Sha Yexin, 1229
- Communist drama, 801, 1083, 1149, 1164–1166, 1171, 1210
- community theater, 282–283. See also amateur theater; regional theater. Austria, 85; Boal, Augusto, 173; Central and Southern Africa, 22; collaboration with schools, 283; Costa Rica, 294; Fannario, David, 116; grassroots performance activism, 283; international, 283; Jellicoe, Ann, 731; New Zealand, 961; Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 965
- Comolli, Jean Louis, 1394
- Compagnia del Porcospino, 866

- Compagnia Drammatica (Rome), 247
- Compagnia Teatrale (Italy), 719
- Compañía de Teatro Popular El Telón (Chile), 1114
- Companion of the Order of Canada, 859
- Company (Furth), 814
- Company (Sondheim), 354
- Company B (Sydney, Australia), 75
- Company of Angels: The Story of Charlotte Salomon (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 626
- Company Skylark (Australia), 1151
- A Compendium of Japanese Legends (Kunio), 1389
- The Competition (Galin), 1169
- Competitive Tenderness (Rayson), 1122
- The Complete History of Chinese Thought; Cross-Talk Version (Lai), 796
- Compounded Interest (Rovinski), 294
- A Compulsory Option (Pollock), 1088
- computer-mediated theater, 585
- Comrade Ah Q (Meng), 91
- Comrade Christ (Slobodzianek), 1082
- Comrades (Strindberg), 1295
- Comrades (Yamamoto), 1499
- Comus Music Theatre, 850
- Conceived in Sin (Rabinovich), 61
- Concept East Theatre (Detroit), 106, 164, 568
- The Concert (Bahr), 82
- Concert House (Stockholm), 1360
- Concord (Bentley), 147
- Concrete (Bernhard), 153
- The Concrete Night (Saisio), 454
- Concurso Solari Swayne (contest), 1044
- The Condemnation of Lucullus (Brecht), 196
- The Condemned (Blitzstein), 168
- The Condemned (Dagerman), 321, 1312
- The Condemned of Altona (Sartre), 283–284, 1189, 1190
- The Condemned Squad (Sastre), 1270
- Conditions of Agreement (Whiting), 408, 1460
- Condolence (Mungan), 1387
- The Conduct of Life (Fornes), 468
- Coney Island Side Show, 1043
- Confederación Nacional de Trabajo (CNT), 1339
- The Confession (Adamov), 10
- Confession in the Chinese Neighborhood (Dorr), 356
- The Confidential Clerk (Eliot), 408
- confinement. See escape
- Conflagration (Hauptmann), 593
- Conflict in Assyria (Hasenclever), 589
- Conflict of Duties (Echegaray), 388
- conformity, as theme, 690, 772, 1248
- Confrontation (Dorr), 356
- Confusion (Raznovich), 1123
- Confusion, or the Year of 1840 (Belyayev), 1163
- Congo, 21, 1206
- Congreve, William, 661, 668, 699
- Conjuring and Event (Nelson), 954
- A Connecticut Yankee (Fields), 812
- The Connection (Gelber), 106, 353, 512, 828, 990, 1408
- The Connection (Living Theatre), 1085
- Connelly, Madeline, 1048
- Connelly, Marc, 284–285, 637; Beggar on Horseback (with Kaufman), 137, 1400–1401; The Green Pastures, 558, 1130
- Conolly, L. W., 1096
- Conover, Dora Smith, 764
- The Conqueror (Simons-Mees), 955
- Conquest of the Universe (Ludlam), 837
- conquest plays (Peru), 1046
- Conquistador (MacLeish), 849
- conquistadors, 1192
- conscience, 174
- A Conspiracy of Feelings (Olesha), 285–286, 995, 1164
- The Conspirators (Havel), 595
- The Constant Prince (Grotowski), 1090
- The Constant Wife (Maugham), 286–287, 879
- The Constipation Opera (Riantiarino), 1136
- The Construction (Müller), 937
- constructivism: Czechoslovakia, 93; directing plays, 351; Mary Queen of Scots Got Her Head Chopped Off (Lochhead), 873–874; Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 899–900; Murayama Tomoyoshi, 940; overview, 477; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1165, 1172
- Consummate Deeds (Radrigán), 1114
- A Contaminated Family (Tolstoy), 1160
- A Contemporary Idyll (Saltykov-Shchedrin), 1202
- Contemporary Japanese Playwrights Association, 497
- contemporary theater. See under individual countries
- The Contest (Rugyendo), 1158
- Contestation Theater, 188
- The Continuum—Beyond the Killing Fields (Ong), 212, 1006
- Contract (Mrožek), 934
- The Contractor (Storey), 1285
- Control Group Six (sketch comedy troupe), 125
- control theory, 1199
- Conundrums (Berman), 150
- Conversation in Wallonia (Louvet), 143
- Conversations After a Burial (Reza), 1135
- Conversations at Midnight (Millay), 902
- Conversations on a Homecoming (Murphy), 942
- Conversations With Socrates (Radzinsky), 1167
- Conversations with the Dead (Frankland), 79
- Convicts (Foote), 464
- Convocatoria Nacional de Teatro, 923
- The Cooing of Doves (O'Casey), 983
- Cook, George Cram ("Jig"), 371, 535–536, 1001, 1002, 1400
- Cook, Michael, 287
- Cooke, Trish: Back Street Mammy, 417
- Coolen, Anton, 956
- Coole Park, 1108
- Cooper, Walter, 72
- Cooper Square Arts Theatre, 1501
- Coordah (Walley), 79
- Copeau, Jacques, 287–288; avant-garde drama, 107; as dramaturg, 368–369; influence on Kishida, 1239; influence on Legault, 220; influence on Tanaka, 1328; occupied France, 482; stagecraft, 479; Théâtre du Vieux-Colombier, 369, 1400
- Copenhagen (Frayn), 280, 288–289, 1059
- Copi (Raul Taborda Damonte), 289, 485
- The Copperhead (Thomas), 1398
- Copperheads, 1231
- copyright laws, 400–401, 1397
- Coq au Vin (Baitz), 115
- The Coral (Kaiser), 518
- Coram Populo! (Strindberg), 53

- Corbin, John, 1461, 1462
 Corcoran, Dan: Tony and Tina's Wedding, 423
 Corcoran, Joe: Tony and Tina's Wedding, 423
 The Cord (Maniam), 104, 862
 Cordelia's Aspirations (Harrigan), 587, 1398
 Corker (Lill), 290, 820
 Cork realism, 1145
 Cormann, Enzo, 487
 Cormon, Eugene: The Two Orphans, 889–890
 Corneille, Pierre, 787; El Cid, 483
 Cornelius, Patricia, 78
 The Corner (Bullins), 207
 Corner (Tecer), 1386
 Corner Pharmacy (Hernández), 608
 Cornerstone (Meredith), 77
 Cornerstone Theatre Company, 283
 Cornford, Francis, 1402
 The Corn is Green (Williams), 290–291, 629, 760, 1471
 The Coronation (Forssell), 469
 The Coronation Voyage (Bouchard), 179, 291
 Corona Trilogy (Usigli), 291–292, 896, 1414
 Coronet Theatre (New York), 37, 1423
 Corpse (Khan), 861
 Corpus Christi (McNally), 885
 Corra, Bruno, 108
 The Correction (Müller), 937, 1256
 The Corrections (Hare), 586
 The Corrido of Juan Saavedra (Ocampo), 981
 Corrie, Joe, 1201
 Corrugation Road (Chi), 79 corruption: The Guests (Zorin), 1167; Jacob, Malou, 725; Linney, Romulus, 822; Rame, Franca, 1118; Sukhovo-Kobylin, Aleksandr, 1160; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Who Is the Strongest of Us All (Liang), 811; Xu Jiujiang's Promotion (Guo and Xi), 1498
 Corruption in the Palace of Justice (Betti), 156
 The Corrupt Order (Sümer), 1386
 Corsaro, Frank, 968
 Corsetti, Giorgio Barberio, 719
 Cort Theatre, 865
 Coscolluela, Elsa Martinez: My Father's House, 1053
 Coscolluela, Joaquin: My Father's House, 1053
 Così (Nowra), 979
 Così fan tutte (Mozart), 1146
 Cosmic Spring (Smoček), 316
 The Cosmonaut's Last Message to the Woman He Once Loved in the Former Soviet Union (Greig), 560
 Cossa, Roberto, 62, 89, 351, 563
 Costa Rica, 292–295
 costumbrismo (Argentina), 1183, 1418
 costumbrista theater, 1106
 The Costumed (Pachero), 562 costume design: Abell, Kjeld, 3; Chanel, Coco, 276; China, 251; Cocteau, Jean, 276; Happenings, 584; Jones, Robert Edmond, 742; Picasso, Pablo, 275, 276; realism, 239, 322, 350; Thailand, 1337 costume drama, 1400, 1405
 Côte d'Ivoire, 24
 Cottesloe Theatre, 878
 Cotton, Joseph, 1050
 The Councilman's Corner (Dorr), 355
 Council of Love (Panizza), 53 counterculture of the 1960s, Japan, 155
 Counterfeit Coin (Gorky), 545
 A Counterfeit Presentment (Howells), 634
 countermodernism, 16
 The Countess Kathleen (Yeats), 1503
 Countess Valeraina's Secret (Xenopoulos), 1495
 Counting the Ways (Albee), 32
 Count Oderland: A Street Ballad in Twelve Scenes (Frisch), 493
 The Count of Monte Cristo (Dumas fils), 295
 Country Chorale (Roby and Storey), 1286
 Country Cops (Lord), 834
 The Country Girl (Odets), 988
 Country Maiden, 1052
 County Your Blessings (Rijnders), 957
 The Coup—A Play of Revolutionary Dreams (Matura), 878
 A Couple (Barč-Ivan), 1254
 The Courage to Kill (Norén), 967, 973 court drama, 797–798
 Courteline, Georges, 437, 476
 The Courting of Marie Jenvrin (Ringwood), 1140
 The Court of God Indra (Amanat), 1027 court performances (Thai drama), 1338
 courtroom drama, 1498
 Courtship (Foote), 464 court theater, 516
 Court Theatre, 857, 878, 1064
 Court Theatre (Christchurch), 1353
 Court Theatre (London), 405, 859, 863, 1174, 1185, 1225, 1432
 The Courtyard of Miracles (Kambanellis), 750
 Cousin Basilio (Sánchez de Fuentes y Peláez), 1106
 Cousin Kate (Davies), 405
 Covarrubias, Francisco, 204
 Covent Garden (London), 230
 The Coward (Lenormand), 809
 Coward, Noël, plays. See also subsequent entry. Bitter-Sweet, 406; Blithe Spirit, 167, 407; Cavalcade, 235, 406; Design for Living, 345, 354, 406, 510; Easy Virtue, 298–299; Hay Fever, 406, 407, 597; Home Chat, 406; I Leave It to You, 406; The Marquise, 299–300; Post-Mortem, 300–301; Present Laughter, 407; Private Lives, 235, 270, 406, 407, 598, 1101; Relative Values, 407; Scirocco, 406; A Song at Twilight, 1259–1260; This Year of Grace, 406; The Vortex, 297–298, 406; The Young Idea, 406
 Coward, Noël, 295–301; acting, 296, 298; emergence as playwright, 405; films of his plays, 298–299; homosexuality, 296; Lean, David, 297; light opera, 661; O'Casey, Sean, 983–984; revivals, 296; West End, 404; World War II work, 296 cowardice, 783
 Cowboys (Shepard), 1232
 Coyne, Fiona, 1265
 Coyote City (Moses), 930
 The Crabs, or The Hosts and the Guests (Dubillard), 376
 The Crack (Berman), 150
 The Crack on the Roof (Agaoglu), 1386
 Cracks (Parry), 964
 Cracks (Sherman), 1235
 The Crackwalker (Thompson), 301–302, 1352
 Cracow, Poland, 1079
 Cradle Song (Martínez Seirra), 873
 The Cradle Will Rock (Blitzstein), 168, 302, 1084, 1235
 The Crafty Tortoise (Fatima), 347
 Craig, Edward Gordon, 476, 1427
 Craig, Gordon, 142, 271, 368, 1014
 Craigie, Pearl: The Ambassador, 402–403

- Craig's Wife (Kelly), 760
- The Cranes Are Flying (Rozov), 1167
- The Crank La Manivelle (Pinget), 1065
- Crave (Kane), 751
- Craven, Frank, 757
- Crazy (Wijaya), 679
- The Crazy Locomotive (Witkiewicz), 281, 1485
- Crazy to Kill (Reaney and Beckwith), 1126
- A Cream Cracker Under the Settee. See Talking Heads (Bennett)
- The Creation of the World and Other Business (Miller), 903, 906
- creative collaboration:
- Argentinian drama, 89;
 - Cixous, Hélène, 486–487;
 - dramaturgy, 369–370; Joint Stock Theatre Group, 740, 1124; Lepage, Robert, 952; Mnouchkine, Ariane, 486–487; Neilson, Anthony, 953; New Dramatists, 959; performance studies, 1044; Reading Hebron (Sherman), 1124; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1146; Rózewicz, Tadeusz, 1157; Théâtre du Soleil, 369, 485; Thompson, Paul, 1354; Van Italie, Jean Claude, 106
- Creditors (Strindberg), 302–303, 1296, 1370, 1499
- Creeps (Freeman), 489
- Cremona (Discépolo), 351, 563
- Creole Bread (Tiempo), 61
- creole grotesque. See theater of the grotesque
- Crespo y Borbón, Bartolomé, 204
- Cresswell, D'Arcy, 961
- Creve Coeur (Williams), 1476
- Cries and Whispers (Bergman), 1313
- crime and criminals: Adam Geist (Loher), 830; Ashes to Ashes, Dust to Dust (Saalbach), 1177; Cracks (Sherman), 1235; Dead End (Kingsley), 767; Detective Story (Kingsley), 767; The Ill-beloved (Benavente), 1269; The Investigation (Weiss), 689; Kaupēns, My Dear! (Zālīte), 802; The Kelly Dance (Romeril), 1151; The Lady's Not for Burning (Fry), 793; Lilies (Bouchard), 819; The Little Cherry Orchard (Slapovsky), 1170; Little Ham (Hughes), 826; The Long Voyage Home (O'Neill), 832; Loot (Orton), 833; Marathon Runners Run the Lap of Honour (Kovačević), 1211; Motherhood 2000 (Kennedy), 763; NEP satire, Soviet Union, 1164; The Ohio State Murders (Kennedy), 763; Pariah (Strindberg), 1296; Roberto Zucco (Koltès), 774; Spreading the News (Gregory), 1274; Strange Crimes (Sastre), 1192; Suddenly (Na'lbandiān), 696; We Murderers (Kamban), 653; The Wrong Side of the Tracks (Langer), 797; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1514
- Crime and Punishment (Dostoevsky), 1173
- The Crime of Dr. Galigari (Terayama), 1334
- Crime on Goat Island (Betti), 156
- crimes against humanity, 1191
- Crimes and Crimes (Strindberg), 303–304, 528, 1296, 1370
- Crimes of the Heart (Henley), 607–608, 1058, 1412
- The Crimson Island (Bulgakov), 205
- The Cripple (Harris), 417
- The Cripple of Inishmaan (McDonagh), 882
- Crisis (Kingsley), 766
- Cristina's Journey Home (Hofmannsthal), 620
- Cristoval Colon (Krleža), 781
- Criterion Theatre (London), 299, 1119
- Criterion Theatre (New York), 1380
- critical realism, 1161
- criticism, dramatic. See dramatic criticism
- Critics' Circle Award, 270, 932, 999
- Crnjanski, Miloš, 1210
- Croatia, 304–305, 781–782, 1430
- Croatian National Theatre (Zagreb), 781, 1430
- Croatian Rhapsody (Krleža), 781
- Crommelynck, Fernand, 141, 142, 305–306; The Magnanimous Cuckold, 351
- Cromwell (Hugo), 472, 1150
- Crooked Mirror Cabaret (Petersburg), 1163
- cropped-hair plays (zangiri mono), 758
- Cross and Sword (Green), 557
- cross-gender performance, 752
- Crossing (de Wet), 102, 1264
- Crossings: Meeting of the Millennium (Morett), 898, 923
- Crossing the Water (Alrawi), 1029
- Crossroads (Robinson), 702
- Crossroads (Solórzano), 1258
- Crothers, Rachel, 306, 445, 634, 1399
- Crouse, Russel, 818, 821–822
- Crow (Nowra), 979
- Crowbar (Wellman), 1454
- Crowfire (Milroy), 79
- Crowley, Mart, 306–307, 1410; The Boys in the Band, 510
- The Crown (Stumbre), 801
- The Crownbride (Strindberg), 1297
- Crown Heights riots, 1255
- Crown of Fire (Usigli), 896, 1414
- The Crown of Life (Yamamoto), 1499
- Crown of Light (Usigli), 896, 1414
- Crown of Shadow (Usigli), 896–897, 1414
- Crown of Thorns (Tsegaye), 1382
- Crown Ourselves with Roses (Chan), 238
- Crows' School (Tendulkar), 1333
- A Crucial Week in the Life of a Crocer's Assistant (Murphy), 705
- The Crucible (Miller), 307–308, 903, 905, 1129, 1370, 1407
- The Crucified: A Tragic Farce (Solórzano), 1258
- Cruel Figures (Reyes), 896
- Cruel Games (Arbuzov), 1168
- cruelty. See Theater of Cruelty
- Cruel Wild Women (Australian Indigenous collaboration), 79
- Crumbs from the Table of Joy (Nottage), 978
- Crusade of the Innocents (D'Annunzio), 325
- Crusader of the World (Milner), 909
- Crush Franco! (Alberti and León), 27
- Cruz, Isagani: Monster, 1051
- Cruz, Juan: I Am Not Dead, 1052
- Cruz, Migdalia, 308–309, 446, 468, 1413
- Cruz, Nilo, 310, 468, 1412, 1413
- Cruz, Ramón de la, 1178
- Cruzando el puente (Triana), 1377
- The Cry (Maponya), 1264
- The Cry of the People for Meat (Schumann), 1086
- The Cryptogram (Mamet), 862
- Crystal Umbrella (Chandrabhabha), 239
- Cry the Beloved Country (Lawson), 805
- Csáth, Géza, 639
- Csurka, István, 640

- Cuarterona (Tapia y Rivera), 1106
- Cuatrotablas, 1045
- Cuauhtemoc (Novo), 292
- Cuba, 309–311; absurdism, 310; avant-garde drama, 1062; bufo theater, 203; 309; Cold War drama, 309; Dorr, Nicolás, 355; Dragún, Osvaldo, 358; dramaturgy, 1960s, 309; experimental theater, 309, 310; Grupo Teatro Escambray, 310; Le Teatrova, 310; naturalism, 310; New Theater movement, 310; 19th century drama, 309; Piñera, Virgilio, 309–310; realism, 309; repression and censorship, 309–310; Revolution and new dramatists, 309–310; Smith, Anna Deavere, 1256; Teatro de Participación, 310; theatrical movement, 355; theatrical renaissance, 1377; zarzuela, 309
- Cubero, Alejandro, 1052
- Cubiculo Theatre, 1501
- cubism, 56, 477, 1173
- Cubo-Futurist (Russia), 54
- Cuchulain of Muirthemne (Gregory), 1321
- Cukor, Donald, 1050
- Cul-de-Sac (MacIvor), 847
- culinary theater, 424
- cultural Bolshevism, 747
- cultural crisis, 197, 950
- The Cultural Front (Denning), 1403
- Cultural Lesson (Everett), 79
- cultural radicalism, 89–91, 976–977
- Cultural Revolution (China). See also China. censorship, 1347; Hai Rui's Dismissal (Wu), 575; In a Land of Silence (Zong), 662–663; model plays, 393; overview, 254–255; Power Versus Law (Xing), 1096; Sha Yexin, 1229–1230; Tian Han, 1357; Zheng Huaixing, 1515
- culture clash, 1169
- Culture of Desire (Bogart), 1250
- The Culture Project (New York), 566, 871
- Cumali, Necati: The Dry Summer, 1386
- cummings, e. e., 311–312
- Cunillé, Lluïsa, 1271
- Cunningham, Merce, 584, 1411
- The Cunning Wife of the Stupid Husband* (Taner), 1387
- cup-and-saucer dramas, 230, 400, 401
- A Cup of Poison* (Vu), 1423
- Curayú (Rengifo), 1418
- Curel, François de: The New Idol, 476
- The Curious Savage* (Patrick), 1039
- Curnow, Allen, 961
- The Curse* (Wyspiański), 1493
- Curse of the Starving Class* (Shepard), 312–313, 1233
- curse words. See obscenity
- Curtis Institute, 168
- Curtmantle (Fry), 496
- Curzon, Sarah Anne, 313
- Cusack, Dymphna, 72, 77, 313–314
- Customary Love* (Fuenmayor), 1418
- The Cuttlefish* (Witkiewicz), 1485
- Cwojdzński, Antoni: Freud's Theory of Dreams, 1080
- Cyanide (Wolf), 519, 959, 1486
- cyber-performance, 585
- cycles, dramatic, 362–363
- cynicism, 1193
- Cyprine (Boucher), 180
- Cyrano de Bergerac* (Rostand), 314, 476, 1151, 1154
- Cysat, Renward, 1315
- The Czar Has His Picture Taken* (Kaiser and Weill), 748
- Czar Nicholas (Slobodzianek), 1082
- Czechoslovakia, 315–317; avant-garde drama, 93–94; Čapek, Josef, 224; Čapek, Karel, 224; censorship, 595; documentary drama, 370; dramaturgy, 370; First Republic, 224; Havel, Václav, 594; Hilar, Karel Hugo, 224; Langer, František, 797; normalization, 595; R.U.R. (Čapek), 1159; Steigerwald, Karel, 1278–1279; Stoppard, Tom, 1281–1282, 1283; 20th century drama, 594
- D34 (Prague), 94
- dadaism, 319–320; absurdism, 6; Belgium, 142; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; chance, 239; collage aesthetic, 278; “Exquisite Corpse” game, 239; France, 281, 477, 483; happenings and intermedia, 584; Hungary, 93, 640; inception, 108; Ionesco, Eugène, 690–691; Italian futurism, 500; Lardner, Ring, 800; performance art, 1042; Russia and the Soviet Union, 101; Sphinx and Strawman (Kokoschka), 773; Stein, Gertrude, 1279; Stoppard, Tom, 1374; surrealism, 1308; Tzara, Tristan, 1149; Vitrac, Roger, 1426
- da da Kamera (theater troupe), 202, 847
- Daddy (Bullins), 207
- Daddy, I'm Getting a Divorce (Sándor), 1185
- Daddy, I've seen this piece six times before and I still don't know why they're hurting each other (Orlin), 102
- Daddy's Gone A-Hunting (Akins), 30
- Dadie, Bernard, 320–321
- Dad Kicks Goals (Pokorn), 317
- Dad's Bathing (Iwamatsu), 722
- Dad's Dad (Iwamatsu), 722
- Dafoe, Willem, 106
- Dagerman, Stig, 321–322, 1312
- Dagmar Theater (Copenhagen), 302, 1298
- Dagnino, Manuel, 1418
- Dagoll-Dagom (Spain), 232
- Dags (Oswald), 73
- Dairakudakan Butoh (Japan), 99
- Dakolar (MacKaye), 849
- Daldry, Stephen, 265
- Dalit Mitra Award, 159
- dalit theater, 674–675, 1154–1155
- Dalliance (Schnitzler), 1284
- Daly, Augustin, 322–323, 370, 1397; The Red Scarf, 891; Under the Gaslight, 891–892, 1394
- Daly's Theater (New York), 551, 1455
- The Dam* (Butler), 1262
- Damaged Goods* (Brieux), 200, 1102
- The Damask Drum* (Ariyoshi), 63
- The Dam Busters* (Sheriff), 1236
- D'Amico, Silvio, 718
- Damonte, Raul: Copi, 485
- D'Amore, Reynaldo, 1044
- Dance a Little Closer* (Lerner), 813
- The Dance and the Railroad* (Hwang), 643
- Dance at Cry* (Zvon), 1254
- dance drama, 90, 102, 590, 703, 797–798, 1148
- Dance Drama of Talok* (Rama V), 1117
- Dance Drama of the Rain* (Rama V), 1117
- Dance Like a Man* (Dattani), 328
- The Dance of Angels Who Burn Their Own Wings* (Satoh), 49, 1193
- The Dance of Death* (Duras), 379
- The Dance of Death* (Dürrenmatt), 381

- The Dance of Death* (Strindberg), 323–324, 1275, 1297, 1313, 1370
- Dance of the Big Complex Rooster* (Hernández), 608
- A Dance of the Forests* (Soyinka), 19, 24, 1267
- The Dance of the Giants* (Valdez), 1415
- Dance of the Herons* (Zuckmayer), 1519
- Dance on the Wheats* (Kambanellis), 750
- dance-play. See dance drama
- The Dancers of Gigue* (Soumagne), 142
- Dance Theater Workshop* (New York), 991
- Dancing at Lughnasa* (Friel), 450, 491, 1130
- Dancing Stone* (Hang), 212, 583
- Dandy* (Pinero), 857
- Dandy Dick* (Pinero), 1064
- Daněk, Oldřeg*, 316, 317
- Danger: Memory!* (Miller), 906
- Dangerous Corner* (Priestly), 324, 1099
- A Dangerous Man* (Jepsen), 733
- Daniels, Sarah*, 416
- Danish National Theatre School*, 1177
- The Danites* (Miller), 1397
- Danites in the Sierras* (Miller), 908
- Dann, George Landen*, 72
- D'Annunzio, Gabriele*, 324–326, 529, 715–716, 1416
- Danny and the Deep Blue Sea* (Shanley), 1218
- Danquah, Joseph Boakye*, 23
- Dansey, Harry*, 963
- Dansinn í Hruna* (Binarsson), 653
- Dan's Tribulations* (Harrigan), 587, 1398
- Dante* (Sardou), 1186
- Dante Alighieri*, 1345
- The Danton Case* (Przybyszewska), 326–327, 1080, 1104
- Danton's Death* (Büchner), 1206
- The Danube* (Fornes), 468
- The Danube, Mud, and Sarita* (Fornes), 310
- Daphne Laureola* (Bridie), 199, 327–328
- D'Arcy, Margaretta*, 59; Ballygombeen Bequest, 413
- The Dark Alley* (Yao), 257
- The Dark at the Top of the Stairs* (Inge), 682, 683, 1408
- Dark Clouds of Day* (Rojas), 294
- dark comedy. See black comedy
- The Dark Deer* (Åbele), 802
- Dark Harvest* (Ringwood), 217
- The Dark is Light Enough* (Fry), 793
- Darkness* (Chashule), 844
- Darkness and Light* (Haddad), 97
- Darkness at Noon* (Koestler), 767
- The Darling Family* (Griffiths), 561
- Darling of the Day* (Theatre Guild), 1341
- The Darling of the Gods* (Belasco), 1398
- Darwin, Charles*, 650, 651, 951, 1055, 1225, 1320
- Darwin Theatre Company* (Australia), 75
- Das, Upendra Nath*, 666
- dashavatar plays*, 664–665, 669
- Das Rheingold* (Wagner), 1433
- Das Werk* (Jelinek), 730
- Datchev, Yuri*, 206
- The Date of Payment* (Jullien), 366
- Dattani, Mahesh*, 328, 672; On a Muggy Night in Mumbai, 996; Thirty Days in September, 1347
- The Daugava* (Rainis), 1115
- The Daughter in Law* (Lawrence), 328–329
- A Daughter is Born* (Ganguli), 505
- The Daughter of Jerusalem* (Goldfaden), 540
- Daughters of Heaven* (Forster), 962
- Daulac* (Campbell), 215
- Daulte, Javier*, 62
- d'Aurevilly, Jules Bargey*, 1416
- Dave on the Beach* (Kalisky), 749
- The David Show* (Gurney), 572
- Davidson, John*, 1200
- Davies, H. H.: Cousin Kate*, 405
- Davies, Robertson*, 217, 329–330
- Davis, Jack*, 73, 79, 330–331
- Davis, Miles*, 952
- Davis, Owen*, 891
- Davis, R. G.*, 568–569
- Davis, Ronald G.*, 27, 106, 1086
- Davis, Thulani*, 729
- Davy, Babs*, 457
- Davy Crockett* (Murdoch), 331, 891, 892, 1397
- Dawn* (González Rincones), 1418
- Dawn* (Martínez Seirra), 873
- Dawn: A Roguish Play* (Johst), 740
- The Dawns* (Verhaeren), 141
- The Dawns Are Quiet Here* (Vasilyev), 841
- The Day After Yesterday* (Wandor), 1440
- Dayavati Modi Shree Shakti Samman Award*, 506
- The Day Ends Early* (Bergman), 149
- A Day in the Death of Joe Egg* (Nichols), 331–332
- A Day in the Life of a Hospital Nurse* (Gatti), 509
- A Day in the Life of the City* (Living Theatre), 829
- Daylight Saving* (Enright), 419
- The Day Mona Lisa Stopped Smiling* (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- Day of a Dreamer* (Copi), 289
- Day of Hope* (Sigurðsson), 655
- A Day of Joy* (Lasica and Satinský), 1254
- The Day of Judgement* (Dagerman), 322
- Day of Liberation* (Borgen), 977
- Day of Murders in the Story of Hamlet* (Koltès), 774
- Days in the Trees* (Duras), 379
- Days of Our Lives* (Andreev), 45
- Days of the Turbins* (Bulgakov), 101, 205, 332–333, 927, 1164, 1277
- Days on a Cloud*, 3
- Days to Come* (Hellman), 606, 1403
- Days Without End* (O'Neill), 333, 362, 1004
- The Day the Whores Came Out to Play Tennis* (Kopit), 776
- A Day Well Spent* (Oxenford), 1469
- Deacon Brodie* (Stevenson), 1200
- The Dead* (Sánchez), 1183
- Deadbeat* (Ugarov), 1170
- The Dead City* (D'Annunzio), 325, 716
- The Dead Class* (Kantor), 541
- Dead End* (Kingsley), 333–334, 767
- Dead Letter* (Pinget), 1065
- Deadline at Dawn* (Odets), 988
- Deadlock* (Castro), 293
- A Dead Man's Interview with the Living* (Liu), 255
- Dead Man Walking* (McNally), 885
- The Dead Queen* (Montherlant), 480
- The Dead Sea* (Mahen), 315
- Dead Secret* (Ackland), 7
- Dead Souls* (Bulgakov), 205
- Dead Souls* (Gogol), 1277
- Dead Still* (Árnason), 655
- The Dead Visiting the Living* (Liu), 90
- The Dead Want to Speak* (Anday), 1387
- Dead White Males* (Williamson), 1478
- The Deaf Man* (Bergelson), 1508
- Deafman Glance* (Wilson), 1483
- Deaf-Mutes* (Hernández), 608
- Dealer's Choice* (Marber), 868
- Dean, Basil*, 30

- The Dear Brothers (Gorostiza), 546
 Dear Brutus (Barrie), 334–335
 The Dear Departed (Houghton), 628
 Dearest Enemy (Fields), 812
 Dear George (Brasch), 187
 Dear Mrs. Steyn (Mda and Opperman), 1264
 Dear World (Giraudoux), 534
 Dear Yelena Sergeyevna (Razumovskaya), 1169
 Death (Genet), 514
 Death (Moretti), 898, 923
 death and loss: Akimoto Matsuyo, 29; Bernhard, Thomas, 151; Civil Death (Giacometti), 714; Conversations After a Burial (Reza), 1135; Exit the King (Ionesco), 690; The Iceman Cometh (O'Neill), 655–656; Lagerkvist, Pär, 794; Lazarus Laughed (O'Neill), 805–806; Little Eyolf (Ibsen), 825; The Mask (Crnjanski), 1210; Riders to the Sea (Synge), 1138–1139; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1140; Rudali (Ganguli), 1157–1158; R.U.R. (Čapek), 1159; Sheppey (Maugham), 1234; Soon the Time Will Come (Knutzon), 772; Still Stands the House (Ringwood), 1140; Yeats, William Butler, 703
 The Death and Love Sonata (al-Banhawi), 392
 The Death and Resurrection of Mr. Roche (Kilroy), 705, 766
 Death and the King's Horseman (Soyinka), 17, 18, 24, 1058, 1267
 Death and the Maiden (Dorfman), 335, 355
 Death and the Maiden I–V (Jelinek), 730
 Death and Transfiguration (Hasenclever), 589
 Death by Beheading (Karnad), 753
 The Death-God (Hōashi), 970
 Death of a Salesman (Miller), 335–336, 447, 903, 905, 950, 1275, 1291, 1370, 1407
 The Death of Atahualpa (Peru), 1046
 The Death of Bessie Smith (Albee), 31
 The Death of Cuchulain (Yeats), 703, 1504
 The Death of Ioann the Terrible (Tolstoy), 1161
 The Death of Krishna (Brook), 1130
 The Death of Malcolm X (Baraka), 121
 The Death of Pazukhin (Saltykov-Shchedrin), 1160
 The Death of Punch (Bergman), 149
 The Death of Satan (Duncan), 378
 The Death of Tarelkin (Sukhovo-Kobylin), 1160
 Death of the Classes (Norén), 973
 Death of the Land (Hapipi), 963
 The Death of the Last Black Man in the Whole Entire World (Parks), 1037
 The Death of the Mother of Jugović (Vojnović), 1430
 The Death of Van Halen (Shipenko), 1168
 The Death of Yazdigerd (Bezā'i), 695
 The Death of Zand (Olesha), 995
 Death on a Pear Tree (Wandurski), 1080
 Death's Harlequin (Bergman), 148
 Death's Mistake (Khlebnikov), 1163
 Deathtrap (Levin), 510
 Death Valley Junction (Ostermaier), 525
 Deathwatch (Genet), 514
 Death Watch (Genet), 1057
 Death Without Burial (Sartre), 481
 Deauville, Max, 142
 de Beauvoir, Simone, 1058
 De Blauwe Mandaag Compagnie (Belgium), 144 de Boer, Lodewijk, 957
 Deborah (Mitchell), 912
 Debussy, Claude, 1319
 The Debutante Ball (Henley), 608
 decadence, 1162–1163
 The Decade's Last Brunch (Osório Lovera), 1419
 The Deceased (Nušić), 1209, 1210
 The Deceased (Rodrigues), 1146
 The Decembrists (Zorin), 1167
 The Decision (Hasenclever), 589
 Decision; Tragedy in fifty-eight Acts, of Which the First fifty-seven Have Been Cut (Marinetti), 717 declamatory drama, 144
 Declaration of Principles (Palestine), 1034
 Déclassée (Akins), 29
 The Decline and Fall of the House of Suzaku (Mishima), 910
 décollages (Vostell), 584 deconstruction, 336–337; Denmark, 344; description, 1057; dramatic criticism, 337, 361; Halac, Ricardo, 576; Handke, Peter, 581; Hughes, Holly, 636; Müller, Heiner, 578; well-made play, 366
 DeDecker, Jacques, 144
 Deegan, Loughlin, 706
 The Deep Blue Sea (Rattigan), 337, 409, 1120
 The Deep-Sea Fish (Fleißer), 458
 Deep Structure of Chinese Culture (Yung), 1510
 The Deep Tangled Wildwood (Connelly), 284
 The Deep Tangled Wildwood (Kaufman), 757
 Deer Curses (Mungan), 1387
 Deer Kingdom (Raichev), 206
 The Deer's Surrender (Carr), 228
 Deevy, Teresa, 704
 The Defeat (Greig), 560, 976
 The Defeated One (Bhagat), 158
 Deficit (Csurka), 640
 Defilippis Novoa, Francisco, 88
 De Filippo, Eduardo, 337–339, 718–719
 De Filippo, Peppino, 719
 De Filippo, Titina, 719
 Defresne, August, 956
 de Graft, Joe, 23
 De Groen, Alma, 74, 339–340
 Dehlholm, Kirsten, 344
 Dehmél, Richard, 1261 dehumanization, 894–895
 deification, 1346
 Deirdre (Russell), 700
 Deirdre of the Sorrows (Synge), 1322
 DeJagers, Dorothy, 612
 de la Cruz, Ramón. See Cruz, Ramón de la
 Delaney, Shelagh, 340–341, 409
 de Lara, Aminta, 1419
 de la Rama, Atang: Country Maiden, 1052 de la Vega, Ricardo. See Vega, Ricardo de la Delcuvelierie, Jacques, 144
 Deterium búbonis (Árnason), 654
 Delholm, Kirsten, 835
 A Delicate Balance (Albee), 32
 Delirium (Sircar), 1248 de Lorde, André, 1340
 Delsarte, François, 848
 Delsarte method, 848–849
 de Marfa, César, 1045
 DeMille, Henry C., 1397
 The Demi-Monde (Dumas fils), 377, 473, 1102
 Demise of the Okinawa Milk Plant (Sakate), 1180 democracy, 767, 1300
 Democracy (Linney), 822
 Democracy Boulevard (Chisiza), 23
 Democracy in Islam (Sharif), 14 democratization of theater, 670–671, 673 demons, 1503

- Demou, Akis, 557
- de Musset, Alfred, 1150
- Denison, Merrill, 220, 341, 1427; Brothers in Arms, 217; Marsh Hay, 217–218
- 'denity Crisis (Durang), 379
- Denkspieler, 748
- Denmark, 341–344; Abell, Kjeld, 3; Barba, Eugenio, 351; Brandes brothers, 357; Branner, Hans Christian, 185; directing plays, 350; Drachmann, Holger, 357; dramatic criticism, 359, 360; Ibsen, Henrik, 357, 1153; Knutzon, Line, 771–772; late–20th century drama, 273, 1011; new Danish drama, 1011–1012; 19th century drama, 357; Olsen, Ernst Bruun, 996; Ørnsbo, Jess, 1011–1012; romanticism, 357; Saalbach, Astrid, 1177; Sigurjonsson, Johann, 1243–1244; Soya, Carl Erik, 1266–1267; 20th century drama, 996
- Den Nationale Scene (Bergen, Norway), 582, 949
- D'Ennery, Adolphe: The Two Orphans, 889–890
- Denning, Michel, 1403
- Dentro (Streeruwitz), 1289
- Depestre, René, 487
- de Pixérécourt, Guilbert, 890
- The Depot (Ensler), 420
- Depression era. See also Interwar drama. American myths, 1404; Awake and Sing! (Odets), 109; Barry, Philip, 124; Behrman, S. N., 139; Brecht, Bertolt, 193; England, 290; The Group Theatre, 563–565; Howard, Sidney, 632; Hughes, Langston, 637; I'd Rather Be Right (Rodgers and Hart), 658; The Little Foxes (Hellman), 825–826; Little Theatre Movement, 283; Norway, 575, 1022; Odets, Clifford, 539, 564, 987–988, 1023; O'Neill, Eugene, 1023; Our Town (Wilder), 1023–1024; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1010; Spain, 629; Stage Relief Fund, 306; United States, 302, 348, 588, 987–988, 1023, 1401–1404; Wednesday to Come (Renée), 1132
- De Pretore Vincenzo (De Filippo), 339
- De Prins, Pieter, 143
- De Profundis (Wilde), 1469
- The Deputy (Hochhuth), 353, 521, 617, 1076
- De Quinto, Jose M., 1191
- Der Blaue Reiter (Germany), 108
- De Roovers (Netherlands), 957
- Derrida, Jacques, 267, 336–337, 1057
- Der Rosenkavalier (Hofmannsthal, librettist), 619
- Dervogilla (Gregory), 559
- Déry, Tibor, 93, 640
- D'Erzell, Catalina, 344–345
- De Salon (Netherlands), 957
- Descendants of the Eunuch Admiral (Kuo), 104, 785
- Deschevaux-Dumesnil, Suzanne, 130
- Desdemona (Kishida), 769
- Desdemona (Ong), 1006
- Desdemona (Theatre Works), 104, 1248
- Desdemona: A Play about a Handkerchief (Vogel), 1429
- Desert (Marinković), 304
- The Desert Comes to the City (Arlt), 88
- Deserted Garden (Mafune), 855
- Deserted Property (Lapid), 96
- The Desert Encroaches (Onwueme), 1008
- The Desert Island (Arlt), 62, 88
- Deshima (Chong), 260
- de Sica, Vittorio, 1345
- The Designated Mourner (Shawn), 1229
- "Design for a Regulation of Theatre After the War" (Defresne et al.), 956
- Design for Living (Coward), 299, 345–346, 354, 406, 510, 598
- Desire, Desire, Desire (Durang), 379
- Desire Me (Akins), 30
- Desire Under the Elms (O'Neill), 346; censorship, 1002; classical influence, 1370; dramatic dialogue, 363; Quintero revival, 1005; set design, 1276; Tairov, Aleksandr, 1173
- despair, 655–656, 801
- Despair (Nabokov), 1284
- The Desperate Renovation Show of Dr. Dante (Danish troupe), 344
- Despoiled Shore Medeamaterial Landscape with Argonauts (Müller), 55, 938
- despots. See dictators
- Dessau, Paul, 523
- Destiny (Edgar), 411
- The Destiny of Me (Kramer), 778
- destitution. See poverty
- The Destruction of Sodom (Sudermann), 1303
- Detective Story (Kingsley), 767, 821
- determinism, 334, 1182, 1303
- De Tijd (Belgium), 144
- Detonation: Synthesis of Modern Theater (Cangiullo), 108, 499
- DetSociale Teater, 1037
- Deutsch, Michel, 487
- Deutsches Theater (Berlin): Brahm, Otto, 184; Brecht, Bertolt, 191, 369, 523, 931; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 516, 1446; Horváth, Ödön von, 1326; Jones, Robert Edmond, 742; Kipphardt, Heiner, 768; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Synge, John Millington, 701
- Deutsches Volkstheater (Vienna), 82
- de Vega, Lope, 369; Fuenteovejuna, 1340
- The Development of Bora the Tailor (Popović), 1092
- The Development of the Nation of Kampuchea (Chheng), 212
- The Development of the Nation of Laos (Chheng), 212
- Devetsil (Prague), 93
- Devi, Mahasweta, 1157
- de Vigny, Alfred, 1150
- the Devil, 787, 1225
- The Devil (Molnár), 639, 917
- The Devil and the Good Lord (Sartre), 1189, 1190
- Devilish Delights (Sadur), 1169
- The Devils (Dostoyevsky), 390
- The Devils (Egloff), 1412
- The Devils (Whiting), 1460
- The Devil's Comedy (Remizov), 1164
- Devil's Comedy (Remizov), 1174
- The Devil's Disciple (Shaw), 403, 1225
- The Devil's Gateway (Daniels), 416
- The Devil's General (Zuckmayer), 521, 1519
- The Devils Tail (Werewere-Liking), 25
- The Devil with Tits (Fo), 462
- Devine, George, 370, 407
- de Wet, Reza, 102, 1264
- Dhlomo, Herbert, 1262
- Dhondy, Farrukh, 878
- dialect theater: Belgium, 140; Chile, 1114; environmental theater, 423; Ireland, 701–702; Italy, 715, 717; Lao She, 799; Little Ham (Hughes), 826; Lochhead, Liz, 829; Max, A Play (Grass), 522; Müller, Heiner, 936–938; Riders to the Sea (Synge), 1138–1139; Sowerby, Githa, 1175

- Dialeghmenos, Giorgos, 557 dialogue, 363–365;
 Australian vernacular, 73–75, 79–80; Austrian drama, 82, 84; blank verse, 395;
 Irish dialects, 701, 702;
 new objectivity, 959;
 philosophical, 271;
 Thailand, 1118
 dialogue, plays and playwrights: American Buffalo (Mamet), 40; The Bald Soprano (Ionesco), 117;
 The Bathhouse
 (Mayakovsky), 125; Bed
 (Cartwright), 135; Before
 Daybreak (Hauptmann),
 136; Bernhard, Thomas,
 151; Betrayal (Pinter), 154;
 Blok, Aleksandr, 169;
 Blood, Sweat and Fears
 (Oshodi), 170; Bohemian
 Lights (Valle-Inclán), 174;
 The Bridge (Gorostiza), 199;
 Bullins, Ed, 207; Fitch,
 Clyde, 1398; The Illegitimate
 Son (Dumas fils), 660; The Invention of Love (Stoppard),
 688; Jelinek, Elfriede, 730;
 Jellicoe, Ann, 731; June Moon (Lardner and Kaufman), 744; LaBute,
 Neil, 791; Mitchell,
 Langdon, 960; Murphy,
 Tom, 942; Norén, Lars,
 972; Old Man Joseph and His Family (Linney), 822;
 Petrushevskaya, Lyudmila,
 1168–1169; Reigen
 (Schnitzler), 1126; Sigrid,
 Jean, 143; Summer of the Seventeenth Doll (Lawler),
 802; Vinaver, Michel, 1424
 dialogue, verse, 68, 70, 141, 185
 Dialogue (Ginzburg), 533
 Dialogue and etorl (Gao), 506
 Dialogue Between a Prostitute and Her Client (Maraini), 866
 Diamond, Liz, 1037
 Diana and Tuda (Pirandello),
 1070
 Diana of Dobson's (Hamilton),
 404–405
 Diarmuid agus Grainne
 (MacLiammóir), 851
 The Diary of Anne Frank (Frank and Goodrich), 751
 The Diary of a Scoundrel
 (Ostrovsky), 1161. See also
 The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky)
 Díaz, Grégor, 1044
 Diaz, Jorge: All This Long
 Night, 1365; Topography of a Nude, 1365
 Díaz Dufóo, Carlos, Jr.: The Boat, 896
 Díaz Sánchez, Ramón, 1419
 Dibbell, Dominique, 457
 Dibble, Warren, 961
 Dibia, I Wayan, 680
 Dicenta, Joaquín, 1269
 Dickens, Charles, 763
 Dickinson, Thorold, 7
 The Dictatress (Munk), 939
 Dictator Highirte (Vianna Filho), 1422
 dictators, 1243, 1258, 1267
 The Dictatorship of Conscience
 (Shatrov), 1168
 didacticism. See also education, through theater.
 Civil Death (Giacometti),
 714; Germany, 807; Gorky,
 Maksim, 1162; Indian street theater, 673;
 Lunacharsky, Anatoly
 Vasilyevich, 838;
 Potapenko, Ignaty, 1163;
 religious theater, 1129;
 Renée, 1132; Return of the Prodigal (Hankin), 1134;
 Romeril, John, 1151; Routes and Escape Routes (Bhagat),
 1154; socialist realism,
 1168; Tolstoy, Lyov, 1161,
 1162; Tretyakov, Sergei,
 1164 didascalía, 1195
 Did Your Nanny Come from Bergen? (Delaney), 340
 Die Hamletmaschine (Müller), 524
 Dies Irae (Mircevskaya), 845
 Díez, Manuel A., 1418
 The Difficult Hour (Lagerkvist),
 794, 1312
 The Difficult Man
 (Hofmannsthal), 620, 1289
 The Difficulty of Crossing a Field
 (Wellman), 1454
 Digger and Nudger (Betts and Parry), 964
 Digger and Nudger Try Harder
 (Betts et al.), 964
 Dike, Fatima, 346–347, 1264
 The Dilemma of a Ghost (Aidoo),
 23, 28
 Dilmén, Güngör: Midas
 Trilogy, 1387; The Sacrifice,
 1386
 Dimensions of Peacocks (Zindel),
 1516
 Dimitroff (Kazan and Smith),
 1083
 Dimitrov, Bratislav, 845
 Dimov, Osip, 1508
 Dimova, Teodora, 206
 Dinasti Theater (Indonesia),
 103
 dindi (India), 158
 Dindon, 680
 Dine, Jim, 584
 Ding Xilin, 252, 347–348
 Ding Yi: The White-Haired Girl,
 1458–1459
 The Dining Room (Gurney),
 572
 Dinner above Town (Kerata),
 1255 Dinner at Eight (Kaufman and Ferber), 348, 448, 757,
 1402
 Dinner for Two at the Best of Restaurants (Leow),
 809–810
 The Dinner Party (Simon),
 1246
 Dino, Abidin: Bald, 1386
 Dinsman, 861
 Dionysus (Schechner), 423
 Dionysus (Suzuki), 1311
 Diosdado, Ana, 348–349,
 1271 direct address. See fourth wall directing plays, 349–351. See also dramaturgy; stage direction. actor-director, 368, 382; creative collaboration, 368–369;
 The Danton Case
 (Przybyszewska), 327;
 directorial concept, 582;
 England, 370; Italy, 717–
 718; Murayama
 Tomoyoshi, 941; new theater movement, 368;
 playwright-director, 368,
 382; specialist director,
 368
 Directions to Servants
 (Terayama), 1334
 director's theater, 53, 67, 523
 Dirk-Uys, Pieter, 102
 Dirty Hands (Sartre), 481,
 1189, 1190, 1210
 Dirty Linen (Stoppard), 1283
 dirty plays, 412 disability, 331, 657, 1017, 1043 di San Secondo, Rosso:
 Marionettes, 1338
 Disappeared (Nagy), 948
 Discépolo, Armando, 61, 88,
 351–352, 562, 563
 Discépolo, Enrique Santos,
 563
 Disciples of Fear (Wolff), 1487
 Discourse on the Progress of the Prolonged War of Liberation in Viet Nam and the Events
 Leading Up to It as Illustration of the Necessity for Armed Resistance against Oppression and on the Attempts of the United States of America to Destroy the Foundations of Revolution (Weiss), 522, 1453
 A Discovery of Strangers
 (Wiebe), 1463
 disease. See illness
 The Dishevelled Alphabet
 (Stefanovski), 845
 The Dismissal (Reaney), 1125
 Dismorphomania (Sorokin),
 1170
 The Dissolution of Dominic Boot
 (Stoppard), 1282

- Dissonance (Corra and Settimelli), 108
- distancing technique, 162, 175
- Distant Promised Land (Halac), 62
- Distinguished Africanist Award, 966
- A Distinguished Gentleman (Hasenclever), 589
- Dis-United (Chandrababha), 240
- Divide and Rule (Alrawi), 1029
- The Divine Ones (Boucher), 180
- Diving (Hollingsworth), 622
- Diving for Pearls (Thomson), 78
- Divinity Bash/Nine Lives (MacDonald), 844
- Division Street (Tesich), 1337, 1412
- divorce, 1260, 1296, 1397. See also family drama
- Divorce (Wang), 257
- A Divorce for $50 (Hayes), 597
- Dixon, Thomas, 893
- Dixon Place, 871
- Dmitrievskaya, Marina, 1172
- Dobardan (Spiró), 1272
- Dobrevá, Yana, 206
- Dobrushin, Yekhezel: The Sorceress, 928
- Dobuzhinsky, Mstislav, 1172
- Doc (Pollock), 1088
- The Doctor in Spite of Himself (Müller), 937
- Doctor Monica. See Monika's Case (Morozowicz-Szczepkowska)
- The Doctor's Dilemma (Shaw), 405, 1225
- The Doctor's Duty (Pirandello), 1070
- The Doctor's Wife (Ariyoshi), 63
- Doctor Zhivago (Bolt), 174
- docudrama. See documentary drama
- documentary drama, 352–353; Amamus, 961; Czechoslovakia, 370; Denmark, 344; fiction, 418; France, 485; Germany, 441, 991; Hochhuth, Rolf, 617; “living newspaper,” 368; new objectivity, 959; Norway, 977; Soviet prolekult, 368; Teatr.doc, 1170; U.S. Depression era, 1403
- documentary fiction, 418
- Dodin, Lev, 1170
- Dodsworth (Howard), 632
- Dog (Loher), 830
- The Dog God (Terayama), 639
- Dogg's Hamlet, Cahoot's Macbeth (Stoppard), 1283
- Dogg's Our Pet (Stoppard), 1282
- The Dog of Montargis (de Pixérécourt), 890
- The Dogs (Brulin), 143
- Dōjōji (Kawakami), 758
- Dolan, Jill, 968
- A Doll's House (Ibsen), 353–354; dramatic cycle, 363; dramatic structure, 366; Ghosts compared, 526; In the Shadow of the Glen (Synge), 687; London premier, 402; naturalism, 950; “Nora,” 715, 1513; problem play, 1102; Pupa and Butterfly (Drachmann), 357; realism, 1124; Robins, Elizabeth, 1144; stage direction, 1275; stage props, 1276; Synge, John Millington, 700, 1321; writing of, 650
- Dolly West's Kitchen (McGuinness), 884
- The Dolphins (Salom), 1270
- Domba, the Last Prince (Manaka), 1265
- domestic comedy, 1185
- Domestic Crusaders (Ali), 1029
- A Domestic Disturbance (Hayes), 597
- domestic drama, 650, 681, 758, 1513. See also family drama
- Domestic Resurrection Circus (Schumann), 423, 1086
- domestic violence, 420, 1051, 1336
- The Domestic Woman (Bahr), 82
- Domínguez, Pablo, 1418
- Dominici, Aníbal, 1418
- Dominion Drama Festival (Canada), 217, 1088
- Dominion Drama Festival Award (Canada), 220, 329
- Domino (Brasch), 187
- Domino (Jakobsson), 655
- Doña Beatriz, the Luckless Woman (Solórzano), 1258
- Doña Francisquita (Vives), 1514
- Donald Duck, 1289
- Donaldson Award, 682
- Don Carlos (Schiller), 1316
- Don Carlos Palanca Memorial Award, 725
- Don Concepción (Gagini), 293
- Donev, Kamen, 206
- Don Juan (Kharms), 765
- Don Juan (Maraini), 866
- Don Juan (Molière), 419, 1172
- Don Juan (Tolstoy), 1161
- Don Juan, or The Love of Geometry (Frisch), 493
- Don Juan Comes Back from the War (Horváth), 627
- Don Juan Continued (Radzinsky), 1167
- Don Juan in Egypt (Gumilyov), 1163
- Don Juan in Hell (Shaw). See Man and Superman (Shaw)
- Don Juan in NYC (Machado), 845
- Don Juan of Spain (Martínez Seirra), 873
- Don Juan's Last Night (Rostand), 1154
- The Donkey (Sayyād), 696
- Donmar Warehouse, 345, 354–355, 868
- Donnelly, Dorothy, 812
- The Donnellys (Reaney), 217, 1125
- Donoghue, Denis, 1403
- Do Not Do unto Others (Bracco), 183
- Do Not Listen to the Rain (Dialeghmenos), 556
- Don Quixote (Mouawad), 932
- Don Quixote and Sancho Panza on the Island of Taganrog (Korkiya), 1171
- Don Quixote Liberated (Lunacharsky), 839
- Don's Party (Williamson), 1478
- Don't Bother Me, I Can't Cope, 1087
- Don't Call Me Bro (Grace-Smith), 547
- Don't Call Me Mad! (Verdial), 1419
- Don't Cast Pearls Before Swine (Giacosa), 528–529
- Don't Count Your Chickens Before They're Hatched (Giacosa), 528–529
- Don't Get Above Yourself (Ostrovsky), 1019
- Don't Go Away Mad (Saroyan), 1187
- Don't Kill the Butterflies (Hassan), 591
- Don't You Want to Be Free? (Hughes), 637
- Dood Paard (theater company), 957
- Door (Hassan), 591
- Doppio Teatro (Australia), 80
- Dora Kremer (Heijermans), 603
- Dora Mavor Moore Award (Canada): Brooks, Daniel, 202; Brymer, Patrick, 561; Gilbert, Schuyler Lee, Jr., 530; Griffiths, Linda, 561; Highway, Tomson, 612; Krizanc, John, 781; MacLeod, Joan, 850; Mighton, John, 900; Storey, Raymond, 1286; Taylor, Drew Harden, 1331; Thompson, Paul, 561; Verdecchia, Guillermo, 1420; VideoCabaret International, 623; Walker, George F., 1438
- Do Re Mi (Kanin et al.), 751
- Dorfman, Ariel, 355; Death and the Maiden, 335
- Dorkay House (Johannesburg), 170

- Dörmann, Felix, 82
 Doronina, Tatyana, 928
 Dorotéia (Rodrigues), 1145
 Dorr, Nicolás, 355–356; The Cardboard Palace, 309; The Parakeets, 309
 Dorst, Tankred: Toller, 1361
 Dort, Bernard, 482
 Dostigaev and the Others (Gorky), 545, 1162
 Dostlar Tiyatrosu (Turkish theater company), 1387
 Dostoevsky (Gide), 530
 Dostoevsky-Trip (Sorokin), 1170
 Dostoevsky, Fyodor, 7, 592, 1256, 1323; The Devils, 390
 Double-Cross (Kilroy), 450, 705, 706, 766 double stage, 849
 Double Trouble (Sears), 1206
 Double Zeros (Kohout), 317
 doubt, 356–357
 Doubt (Shanley), 1219
 Douglas (Home), 1200
 Doukhbors (Thompson), 1354
 Doux, Emílio, 187
 The Dove Banquet (Laxness), 654
 The Dove Returns (Butler), 1262
 The Dover Road (Milne), 406
 Doves (Ugarov), 1170
 Dowie, Claire, 511
 Dowling, Eddie, 1358
 Downhill (Sánchez), 61
 The Downpour (Karaosmanoğlu), 1386
 Downstage Theatre (Wellington), 834, 961, 1353
 Downstairs (Churchill), 263
 Downstairs at the Royal Court (London), 126, 751.
 See also Royal Court Theatre (London)
 Down the Ravine (Sánchez), 88
 Downtown Theatre (New York), 989, 1138
 Drábek, David, 317
 Drachmann, Holger, 357–358; Once Upon a Time, 342
 Dracul. See Vlad the Impaler
 Dracula (Stoker), 1260
 The Dra-Dra (Biermann), 768
 The Drag (West), 510, 1456
 The Dragon (Shvarts), 281, 1166, 1243
 Dragon Beard Ditch (Lao She), 799
 Dragonfly (Cabal), 1271
 The Dragon Lady's Revenge (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
 The Dragon's Head (Valle-Inclán), 1416
 Dragon's Wedding (Todorov), 206
 Drag Queens in Outer Space (Gilbert), 530
 Drag Queens on Trial (Gilbert), 530
 Dragún, Osvaldo, 62, 89, 358; To the Rapist, 1009
 Dragunskaya, Kseniya, 1170
 Drake-Brockman, Henrietta, 77 drama, feminist. See feminism and feminist themes
 Drama and Commitment (Rabkin), 1404
 Drama at Inish (Robinson), 1145
 Drama Critics' Circle Award. See New York Drama Critics' Circle Award
 Drama Desk Award: Fierstein, Harvey, 451; Freeman, David, 489; Fugard, Athol, 1263; Hwang, David Henry, 643; Ludlam, Charles, 838; Medoff, Mark, 887; Norman, Marsha, 968, 974; Pomerance, Bernard, 1089; Richardson, Jack, 1138; Wilson, August, 1060
 Drama Guild (Pakistan), 1028
 Dramalab, 862
 Drama League, 1400
 Drama League Award, 1263
 Dramalogue Award, 837
 The Drama of Civilization (MacKaye), 849 drama of deficiency, 640–641 drama of discussion, 634 drama of ideas, 916
 The Drama Review, 888
 The Drama Studio Players (Ghana), 1310
 Dramasutra (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
 Dramatic Art School (Brazil), 60
 The Dramatic Circle (Kennedy), 763 dramatic criticism, 358–361; Brecht's learning plays, 807; deconstruction, 337; Howells, William Dean, 634; impact on drama, 410; literary criticism, 359–361; Mori Ōgai, 925; Russia and the Soviet Union, 817; United States, 634; Zola, Émile, 1517 dramatic cycles, 362–363; Camus, Albert, 216; Carr, Marina, 228; Césaire, Aimé, 236; Chong, Ping, 260; Dorfman, Ariel, 355; García Lorca, Federico, 630; Hamsun, Knut, 579; Hare, David, 586; Harrigan, Edward G., 587; Hong Shen, 624; Horowitz, Israel, 625; Nádas, Péter, 641; O'Neill, Eugene, 333, 638 dramatic dialogue, 363–365; Aristotlian (classic model), 367; Bildungsjargon, 626–627; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; Chekhov, Anton, 241–244, 246; China, 252; Coward, Noël, 598; experimentation, 608; expressionism, 589; Fry, Christopher, 280; Handke, Peter, 580; Hasenclever, Walter, 589; Hein, Christoph, 604; Henley, Beth, 608; Houghton, William Stanley, 613; Hungary, 639; idiom, dialect, and slang, 217, 220, 604, 626, 628, 639; Jones, Henry Arthur, 613; Mamet, David, 364; naturalism, 598, 609; philosophical dialogue, 271; Pinero, Arthur, 613; Pinter, Harold, 280; Rakesh, Mohan, 577; realism, 634; Shaw, George Bernard, 600; silent play, 580; verse dramas, 377, 593, 618; Walker, George F., 1515; zarzuela, 1514
 Dramatic Gymnasium (Brazil), 187
 The Dramatic Imagination (Jones), 742 dramatic monologue. See monodrama
 Dramatic Performances Act of 1876 (India), 1333 dramatic proverbs, 528–529
 Dramatic Scene (Schwitter), 108 dramatic societies, 664–665 dramatic structure, 365–367; Aristotlian (classic model), 380; Brecht, Bertolt, 234; carpa, 227; Castro, Consuelo de, 231; Catalan Experimental Theater, 232; Chinese spoken drama (haju), 250–259; Chinese sung drama (xiqu), 250–257; Churchill, Caryl, 265–266; Closer (Marber), 271; collage, 277–278; comedy, 279; The Count of Monte Cristo (Dumas fils), 295; Coward, Noël, 598; das Allomatische, 619; direct action, 242; double story, 229; “drama of discussion,” 634; A Dream Play (Strindberg), 372–373; dream-within-a-dream, 644; Dumas fils, 376; feminist drama, 264, 265; fragmented narrative, 273; France, 376; Happenings, 584; Heiberg, Gunnar, 601; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von,

- 619; indirect action, 244, 246; Konfiguration, 619; melodrama, 607; pageant, 235, 282; play-within-a-play, 260, 591, 622; The Seagull (Chekhov), 244; Shaw, George Bernard, 600, 613; street theater, 232, 584, 590; well-made play, 242, 376, 600, 634
- dramaticules, 133
- Dramatic Workshop (New School for Social Research, NYC), 105, 1406, 1408
- Dramatic Workshop and Studio Theatre (New York), 1085
- Dramatiska Teatern (Stockholm), 830, 1368
- dramatists. See individual playwrights
- Dramatists Guild (United States), 238, 958, 975. See also Hull-Warriner Award
- Drama Troupe of the Chinese Air Force, 1446
- dramaturgy, 367–371; Bentley, Eric, 147; Brecht, Bertolt, 268; Canada, 218; Čapek, Karel, 224; Chinese influences, 254; Churchill, Caryl, 263–264; Claudel, Paul, 268–269; collaborative, 260–261, 264, 586; Costa Rica, 292, 293; Croatia, 304; “dramaturgy of the perverse,” 622; East Germany, 603; Germany, 349; Glaspell, Susan, 36; Hirata Oriza, 1361; Hungary, 641; India, 596; O’Casey, Sean, 983; one-act form, 1378; Osanai Kaoru, 1014; Osofisan, Femi, 1018; Pillars of Society (Ibsen), 650; Rózewicz, Tadeusz, 1157; through-line, 350; Vogel, Paula, 119
- Drama Workshop (Japan), 29
- Drama Workshop (China), 827
- Drammatica Compagnia (Rome), 715
- Dranas, Ahmet Muhip: The Shadows, 1386
- The Drawer Boy* (Healey), 219
- drawing room drama, 50, 808–809. See also comedy of manners
- Draw the Fires (Toller), 1362
- Drayman Henschel (Hauptmann), 594
- Drda, Jan, 316
- Dr. Dantes Aveny Theatre (Copenhagen), 344, 1260
- Dreading Thekla (Innaurato), 683
- Dreadnoughts (Grishkovets), 1170
- A Dream (Kruszewska), 1080
- Dream, But Maybe Not (Pirandello), 1071
- The Dreamers* (Jack), 330
- dream imagery: The End of the World (Saalbach), 1177; Epitaph for the Whales (Sakate), 1180; Kennedy, Adrienne, 763; Man and Superman (Shaw), 1227; Saint Joan (Shaw), 1180; The Silver Tassie (O’Casey), 1244; surrealism, 1308
- The Dreaming Beauty* (Moses), 929
- A Dream Is Just a Dream* (Lai), 796
- The Dreamland* (Roby and Storey), 1286
- Dream of a Bedbug* (Slobodzianek), 1082
- Dream of an Autumn Sunset* (D’Annunzio), 325
- Dream of One Night in August* (Martínez Seirra), 873
- Dream of Sussex Downs* (Hall), 578
- A Dream of Swallows* (Zindel), 1516
- Dream of the Red Chamber* (Li), 257
- Dream of the Red Chamber* (Xu), 238, 371–372
- Dream on Monkey Mountain* (Walcott), 1436
- A Dream Play* (Strindberg), 107, 372–373, 517, 527, 916, 919, 1297, 1298, 1312, 1370
- Dreams* (Mouawad), 932
- Dream Shadows* (Unamuno), 109
- Dreams in an Empty City* (Sewell), 1215
- The Dreams of Clytemnestra* (Maraini), 373–374
- Dreams of Clytemnestra* (Maraini), 866
- Dreams of Home* (Cruz), 308
- Dream Story* (Schnitzler), 1198
- Dream Theater* (Kraus), 780
- Dream Wanderers* (Japan), 970
- Dreiser, Theodore, 1394
- Dresden Höftheater (Germany), 368
- The Dresser* (Harwood), 510
- Dressler, Marie, 30
- Dress Parade* (Horowitz), 96
- Dress Suits for Hire* (Hughes), 636, 1273
- Drexler, Rosalynn, 1087
- Dreyer, Carl, 67
- Dreyfus* (Grumberg), 565
- The Dreyfus Affair* (Zola), 475
- Dr. Faustus Lights the Lights* (Stein), 828
- Dr. Harmer’s Holidays* (Pinero), 1065
- Drifting Apart* (Herne), 609, 1398
- The Drill Hall* (London), 1456
- Drill Place Theatre* (England), 417
- The Drinking Gourd* (Hansberry), 584
- The Drinking Hole* (Zola), 475
- Drinkwater, John, 370
- Dr. Kheal (Fornes), 468
- Dr. Knock, or the Triumph of Medicine* (Romains), 1147
- Drought Dragon-Princess* (Masaaki), 970
- The Drover* (Kinck), 976
- Drowning* (Black Mime Theatre Women’s Troupe), 417
- Dr. Rung (Sigurjonsson), 1244
- Dr Strangelove* (Madsen), 853
- drugs, 786, 952. See also alcoholism
- Druid Theatre (Galway), 450, 706, 882
- Drumbeats in Georgia* (Green), 557
- Drumev, Vassil, 205
- drumming, in drama, 828
- Drums in the Night* (Brecht), 108, 191, 374–375, 518
- The Drums of Father Ned* (O’Casey), 985
- The Drunkard* (Smith), 892
- The Drunken Concubine*, 889
- Drunken Process* (Dostoyevsky), 774
- Drury Lane Theatre (London), 295, 370, 1134
- Dryland, Gordon, 962
- Dry Lips Oughta Move to Kapuskasing* (Highway), 62, 218, 375, 612
- The Dry Summer* (Cumali), 1386
- Dry Wind* (Jaafar), 861
- Du Barry (Belasco), 140, 1398
- DuBarry Was a Lady* (Fields), 812
- Dubé, Marcel, 220
- Duberman, Martin, 353
- Dubey, Lillette, 328, 1347
- Dubillard, Roland, 376, 376
- A Dublin Carol* (McPherson), 886
- Dublin Drama League, 1145
- Dublin Dry Gin Award for Best Production (Ireland), 1156
- Dublin Theatre Festival, 706, 707, 766, 985, 1049, 1156
- Dubois, Réne-Daniel, 221
- DuBois, W. E. B., 164, 1085
- Dubrovnik Festival (Croatia), 782
- Duchamp, Marcel, 320
- The Duchess* (Griffiths), 561
- The Duchess of Padua* (Wilde), 1467
- The Duchess of Wallenstein’s Armies* (Daněk), 317

- Duchess Productions, 561
 Duchess Theatre (London), 297
 Duck Hunting (Vampilov), 1167
 Duck Soap (Kitamura), 770
 The Duck Variations (Mamet), 863, 1215
 Duel (Vazov), 206
 dueling, 1231, 1233, 1303
 Duffy, Marguerite. See Terry, Megan
 Duigidi Duigidi Ha Ha Ha! (Germaine), 1354
 Duke of York's Theatre (London), 124
 Duke's Theatre (London), 298
 Dukhini (Nadeem), 947
 Dukovski, Dejan, 845
 Dulcamara (Gilbert), 531
 Dulcinea of Toboso (Volodin), 1167
 Dulcy (Connelly), 284
 Dulcy (Connelly and Kaufman), 756
 Dullin, Charles, 3, 67, 107, 479
 Dumas, Alexandre fils. See Dumas fils
 Dumas, Alexandre père, 472, 1150
 Dumas fils, 376–377; Camille, 366, 1101; The Count of Monte Cristo, 295; The Demi-Monde, 473, 1102; The Illegitimate Son, 473, 659; Lady of the Camellias, 473, 715; The Natural Son, 1102; The Question of Money, 473; acting style, 349; Chinese performances, 252; dramatic structure, 366; influence on Netherlandish drama, 955; Ludlam, Charles, 838; naturalism, 951; philosophy, 1102; realism, 1124; on Sardou, 1186; Zola, Émile, 1517
 The Dumb Waiter (Pinter), 438, 1066
 Dumont, Louise, 8
 Duncan, Catherine, 77
 Duncan, Isadora, 758, 1235
 Duncan, Ronald, 377–378, 408
 The Duped World (anon.), 1506
 The Duplex (Bullins), 207
 A Duplicate Man, 597
 Durang, Christopher, 378–379, 683, 1105
 Duras, Marguerite, 376, 379–380; India Song, 486; Savannah Bay, 486
 Durch (Germany), 592
 Durgin, Viktor, 1173
 Durif, Eugène, 487
 Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 380–381, 521, 1243, 1316–1317; The Physicists, 1059, 1366; The Visit of the Old Lady, 1366, 1372, 1426
 Dusa (Gems), 412
 Duse, Eleonora, 8, 325, 715, 716
 Düsseldorf Twon Theatre (Germany), 368
 Dutch language drama, 140
 Dutchman (Baraka), 106, 121, 164, 381–382, 990, 1410
 Dutch Theater Proloog, 584
 Dutch Theatre Association, 955
 Dutt, Utpal, 382–383; The Great Rebellion, 553; The Wave, 1445
 Dutta, Michael Madhusan, 668
 Duyns, Don, 957
 DVD players, 1028
 Dvořák, Arnošt, 315
 Dvoretzky, Ignaty, 1168
 The Dwarf in the Summer Garden (Popescu), 1091
 The Dwarf that Disappeared (Ørnsbo), 1012
 Dyachenko, Viktor, 1161
 The Dybbuk (Ansky), 94, 927, 1507
 The Dybbuk (Ansky and Sherman), 1235
 The Dybbuk (Rappoport), 383–384
 A Dying Business (Matura), 878
 The Dying Gaul (Lucas), 837
 Dying of the Story (Estorino), 310
 The Dying Screams of the Moon (Mda), 1265
 Dyk, Viktor, 315
 dyke-noir, 1273
 Dymov, Ossip, 615, 1162
 Dynamite (Lawson), 805
 Dynamo (O'Neill), 333, 362
 dystopia, 711, 772, 1227, 1229
 Dyveke (Abell), 3
 Each Day Dies with Sleep (Rivera), 1141
 Each in His Own Way (Pirandello), 1070, 1251, 1364
 Eagle or Sun (Berman), 150
 The Eagle's Nest (Miller), 904
 The Eaglet (Rostand), 117, 1154
 Eagleton, Terry, 706
 The Eagle with Two Heads (Cocteau), 276
 Early Morning (Bond), 176
 The Ears of Midas (Dilmen), 1387
 The Earth (Briusov), 107
 The Earth (Hirschbein), 615 earthquakes, 1244
 Earthquake Sun (Valdez), 1415
 Earth Song (Voaden), 1427
 Earth Spider (Kawatake), 759
 Earth Spirit (Wedekind), 385, 517
 The Earth Station (Öta), 1444
 Earth Worms (Innaurato), 683
 The Easiest Way (Belasco), 385–386
 The Easiest Way (Walter), 1398
 East Africa, 18–20. See also individual countries
 East Bay Sharks (Berkeley), 568
 East China Festival of Tradition Dramas Prize, 872
 East Culture Centre (Vancouver, Canada), 159
 East End Plays (Walker), 1438
 Easter (Strindberg), 386, 1297
 Eastern China Yueju Opera Troupe, 1287
 Eastern Europe. See also individual countries. avant-garde drama, 91–94; dramaturgy, 370; theatricality, 1343
 Eastern Front Theatre Company (Nova Scotia), 820
 Easter Wine (Iliev), 206
 East from the Gantry (Thomas), 1350
 East Germany, 603, 807
 East Is East (Khan-Din), 764, 1029
 East Lynne (Wood), 402, 890, 1489
 East of Eden (Osborn), 1015
 East of Suez (Maugham), 30, 879
 East Palo Alto Project, 283
 East Pole Expedition (Bronnen), 201
 Eastside Theatre (New York), 420
 Easy Death (Churchill), 263
 Easy Money (Ostrovsky), 1019
 Easy Money (Ostrovsky), 1202
 Easy Now, Elektra (Guðmundsdóttir), 655
 Easy Virtue (Coward), 297, 298–299
 Eat at Joe's (Terry), 1336
 Eaters of the Dead (Hedayat), 695
 Eating Words (Nelson), 954
 Eatough, Graham, 1308
 Eat Your Young (Myers and O'Brien), 73
 Ebb, Fred, 354
 Ebert, Carl, 1385
 Ebond Indrajit (Sircar), 387–388
 Ebrahimi, Nader, 695
 The Eccentricities of a Nightingale (Williams), 1305, 1474
 The Eccentricities of Night (Dorr), 356
 Eccentrics (Gorky), 545
 The Eccentric Woman (Sadur), 1169

- Echagüe, Pedro, 61
 Echegaray, José, 388–389, 1269; The Great Galeoto, 551–552; Mariana, 1144
 The Echelon (Roshchin), 1168
 Échos (Simard), 1245
 Ecstasy of Bedridden Riding Hood (MacDonald), 844
 The Ecstasy of Rita Joe (Ryga), 217, 220, 1175
 The Ecstatic One (Ariyoshi), 63
 Eden Cinema (Duras), 379
 Edens Lost (Gow), 547
 Edgar, David, 586; Destiny, 411; Entertaining Strangers, 414; Maydays, 414; Nicholas Nickleby, 414; Pentecost, 414
 Edinburgh Festival. See also Fringe First Award (Edinburgh). Greig, David, 559; Lochhead, Liz, 829; Neilson, Anthony, 973; Rowlands, Ian, 1156; Stoppard, Tom, 1152, 1282; Tanvir, Habib, 240; Unity Theatre, 1201; Wilder, Thornton, 1469
 The Editor (Bjørnson), 120, 163, 975
 Edmond (Mamet), 862
 Edo era (Japan), 1310, 1499
 Educating Rita (Russell), 1159 education, 690, 804, 810
 Education (Tanaka), 1329 education, in drama: Baker, George Pierce, 1400; English 47 (Harvard University), 1398; Harvard University, Workshop 47, 115, 124, 138; India, 676; New Dramatists, 958–959 education, through theater. See also didacticism. India, 673, 674, 1117; Lapeña-Bonifacio, Amelia, 799; learning plays (Lehrstücke), 807; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht), 1133–1134
 Education Is Our Right (Taylor), 1331
 The Education of Skinny Spew (Brenton), 197
 Edufa (Sutherland), 1310
 Edward Gant's Amazing Feats of Loneliness (Neilson), 953
 Edwards, Dic, 389
 Edwards, Hilton, 702–703, 851, 1049
 The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds (Zindel), 1409, 1516
 Effendi, Rustom, 678
 Efros, Anatolii, 1173
 Efros, Nikolai, 1171
 Eftimiu, Victor, 1149
 The Egg (Marceau), 143
 Egloff, Elizabeth, 390, 1412
 Egoli, City of Gold (Manaka), 101, 1265
 Egressy, Zoltán, 641
 Egypt, 390–392, 698, 1029
 The Egyptian Helen (Hofmannsthal), 619
 Egyptian Institute of Acting, 391
 Egyptian Wheat (Pawlikowska-Jasnorzewska), 1080
 Eh Joe (Beckett), 133
 Eichelbaum, Samuel, 61
 Eichenbaum, Boris, 466
 Eidem, Odd, 977
 18 Happenings in 6 Parts (Kaprow), 105, 1411
 1841 (Chan), 237
 The Eighth Year of One Hundred Years of Solitude—Viva! (Meng), 91
 The Eighties Are Ours (Diosdado), 348
 Eight Plays from Off-Off Broadway (Smith), 1409
 Eight Revolutionary Model Plays, 392–393
 Eikenberry, Jill, 1393
 Einarasson, Indriði, 652
 Einem, Gottfried von, 1426
 The Einsiedler World Theater (Hürlimann), 1317
 Einstein, Albert, 1227
 Einstein on the Beach (Wilson), 1058, 1483
 Eisenberg, Emanuel: Pins and Needles, 1084
 Eisenstein, Sergei, 254, 326, 1376
 Eisler, Hanns, 887
 Ekaterina Ivanovna (Andreev), 45
 Ekhaya: Coming Home (Manaka), 1265
 Ekhaya: Museum over Soweto (Manaka), 1265
 Ekster, Aleksandra, 1172, 1173
 El-Assal, Fathiya, 392
 El Búho, 1339
 El Cid (Corneille), 483
 El Cuervo (Mexico City), 1146
 The Elder Madhavroa Peshwa (Kirtane), 665–666
 The Elder Son (Vampilov), 1167
 The Elder Statesman (Eliot), 394, 432
 The Eleanor Roosevelt Story (MacLeish), 849
 Electra (Pérez Galdós), 1042
 Electra Garrigó (Piñera), 1062
 Electre (Giraudoux), 534
 Electric Dolls (Marinetti), 107, 716, 871
 electricity, 400, 402, 1342
 Electricity (Marinetti). See Electric Dolls (Marinetti)
 The Electricity Pole (Shalhat), 97
 The Electronic Nigger (Bullins), 729
 The Electronic Pacifier: TV or Not TV (Arroyo), 294 electroshock treatment, 1179
 Eleemosynary (Blessing), 167
 Elegy (Gallagher), 78
 Elegy for a Lady (Miller), 906
 Elektra (Hofmannsthal), 618, 619
 Elektra (Hofmannsthal and Strauss), 619
 Elektra (Pérez Galdós), 1270
 Eleni (Tesich), 1336
 The Elephant (Betsuyaku), 49, 155, 393–394
 Elephant (Kopkov), 1165
 Elephant Man (Pomerance), 1089, 1409
 Eleutheria (Beckett), 131
 The Elevator (Howells), 634
 Elf (Todorov), 206
 El Grupo Teatro del 60 (Puerto Rico), 1107 El Hábito (Mexico City), 897, 1146, 1147
 Elfn Helena (Ibsen, Árni), 655
 Elinore and Lou Siminovitch Prize in Theatre, 202
 Eliot, Thomas Stearns, 394–395; The Cocktail Party, 378, 408, 915; The Confidential Clerk, 408; The Elder Statesman, 408; The Family Reunion, 408, 435–436, 1130; Murder in the Cathedral, 378, 407–408, 442, 915, 941, 1084, 1129; The Rock, 1129; Barnes, Djuna, 123; dramatic dialogue, 364; Duncan, Ronald, 377; influence on Fry, 495; influence on Kennedy, 763; jazz influence, 729; poetic dramatist, 327, 377, 984, 1407; Shaw, George Bernard, 1179, 1226, 1227–1228; Yeats, William Butler, 1108, 1504
 Elizabethan drama, 1342
 Elizabeth Bam (Kharm), 101
 Elizabeth II Coronation Medal, 314
 Elizabeth the Queen (Anderson), 43, 395–396, 1403
 Elizondo, José: Chin-Chun-Chan, 895
 Elkunchwar, Mahesh, 396, 671–672; End of an Epoch, 993; Engrossed on the Shores of a Lake, 993; Old Stone Mansion, 993
 Ellen Terry Award, 203
 Ellington, Duke, 1093
 Elliott, Sumner Locke, 72
 Ellis, Bob, 74

- Elmer, the Great (Lardner and Cohan), 800
- El nost Milan (Bertolazzi), 715
- El Nuevo Grupo (Venezuela), 1419
- El Nuevo Teatro Pobre de América (Puerto Rico), 1107
- The Elocution of Benjamin Franklin (Spears), 75
- An Eloquent Marriage Farce (Sommo), 1109
- Eloy Blanco, Andrés, 1418
- El parque de la fraternidad (Triana), 1377
- el-Saadawi, Nawal, 392
- Elsa Schneider (Belbel), 1271
- Els Comediantes (Spain), 232
- Elser, Frank B., 285
- Elsewhere Fine and Warm (Brink), 1263
- Els Joglars (Spain), 232
- El Teatro Campesino (California): agit-prop, 27, 87, 106, 1410; documentary drama, 353; guerilla theater, 283, 568; theatricality, 1343; Valdez, Luis, 1086, 1415
- El Teatro Campesino (Philippines), 1050
- El Teatro de Agitacion Social (Spain), 1191
- Elusive Miracle (Vilde), 428
- Elysian Park (Streeruwitz), 1289
- The Emancipated (Lenéru), 476
- Embassy Theatre (London), 211
- Embedded (Robbins), 1088
- Embers (Beckett), 484, 1065
- The Embezzlers (Kataev), 1277
- The Emergence of the Modern American Theater (Wainscott), 1400
- The Em-Fuehrer Jones (Hughes), 637
- emigration, 1165, 1167–1168, 1195
- Emigrés (Mrožek), 934, 1081
- Emily of Emerald Hill (Kon), 775, 809, 1247
- Eminescu, Mihai, 1148
- Emmert, Richard, 970
- Emond, Paul, 144
- The Emperor (Pirandello). See Enrico IV (Pirandello)
- Emperor and Galilean (Ibsen), 54, 396–397, 649, 650, 975, 1055
- The Emperor and the Witch (Hofmannsthal), 618
- Emperor Jones (Heyward), 612
- The Emperor Jones (O'Neill), 105, 397–398, 433, 558, 575, 624, 1002, 1400
- Emperor of Haiti (Hughes), 637
- Emperor's New Clothes (Pega), 557
- The Emperor Tomato Catcup (Terayama), 1334
- Empire of the Sun (Ballard), 1284
- Empire Theatre (New York), 298, 324, 818
- Empress Wu (Guo), 569
- emptiness of spirit, 802
- The Empty Inn (Hirschbein), 615
- The Enchanted Cottage (Pinero), 1065
- The Enchantress (Cañas), 293
- Encounter (Nádas), 641
- Encounter in a Dangerous Park (Santana), 1419
- Encounter in Umbugland (Tendulkar), 1333
- Endangered Species (Hollingsworth), 622
- Endgame (Beckett), 55, 132, 398–399, 484, 704–705, 1408
- End of an Epoch (Elkunchwar), 396, 993
- End of Carnival (Topol), 1366
- End of December (Halac), 576
- The End of Innocence (Lampela), 455
- The End of Mating (Kroetz), 783
- The End of Night Is Morning (Liang), 811
- The End of Summer (Behrman), 139
- The End of the Beginning (O'Casey), 984
- The End of the Carnival (Topol), 316
- End of the Century (de Lara), 1419
- The End of the Day (Baitz), 115
- The End of the Golden Weather (Mason), 875
- End of the Round (Santana), 1419
- The End of the Word (El Teatro Campesino), 1086
- The End of the World (Saalbach), 1177
- The End of the World (Soyfer), 85
- The End of the World (Valdez), 1415
- End of the World with Symposium to Follow (Kopit), 776
- Enemies (Artsybashev), 1162
- Enemies (Gorky), 545, 927
- Enemies (Hashmi), 590
- An Enemy of the People (Ibsen), 399; influence on Synge, 1321; Miller, Arthur, 905; moralism, 650; production book, 350; religious theater, 1129; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1277
- Enemy of the Stars (Lewis), 108, 271
- Engaged (Gilbert), 402
- The Engagement (Kivi), 452
- The Engagement (Stoppard), 1282
- The Engagement Ring (Kehaidis), 556
- Engels, Friedrich, 1256
- England, 399–417; 1860–1940, 399–407; 1940–1960, 407–410; 1960–1980, 410–413; 1980–2002, 413–417; 19th century drama, 228–230; late–19th century drama, 240, 262–266, 270–273, 288, 586, 613, 628, 1017, 1022; 20th century drama, 226–228, 262–266, 324–331 passim, 340, 377, 586, 615, 623–625, 994, 1013, 1016; early–20th century drama, 266, 334, 345, 613, 616, 628; 21st century drama, 262–266, 274, 586, 615, 1017; anti-Semitism, 836; black British authors, 219, 1017; “box set,” 230; Canadian drama, 219; censorship, 271, 297, 300, 332; comedy, 280; cup and saucer drama, 230; Depression era drama, 290; dialogue, 365; directing plays, 349; dramatic criticism, 360; dramatic structure, 365; dramaturgy, 370; drawing room farce, 324, 328, 340; experimental theater, 229, 340; gay and lesbian drama, 1013; Happenings, 584; Horse and Bamboo Theatre, 625; Ibsen's plays rejected, 360; influence on Indian drama, 663–669; influence on South Asia drama, 657; Interwar drama, 235, 597; In-Yer-Face playwrights, 1058; kitchen sink drama, 340; melodrama, 890; modernism, 327; Monstrous Regiment, 919–920; national theater, 370; naturalism, 329; nautical melodrama, 892; New Left playwrights, 586; post–World War I drama, 295–301; post–World War II drama, 337, 586; realism, 1124; roles for black performers, 1017; satire, 586; social gospel, 1127–1128; Suez Crisis, 421; verse dramas, 377; Victorian theater, 230, 240; World War II drama, 296–297
- England, plays and playwrights: Albanesi, Meggie, 30; Ayckbourn, Alan, 110; Barrie, J. M.,

- 334; Bennett, Alan, 615;
Bolt, Robert, 219; Bond,
Edward, 219; Bridie, James,
327; Brighouse, Harold,
616, 628; Cartwright, Jim,
228; Churchill, Caryl, 219,
262–266; Coward, Noël,
235, 295–301, 345, 597;
Delaney, Shelagh, 340;
Duncan, Ronald, 377;
Entertaining Mr Sloane
(Orton), 421; Hare, David,
586; Houghton, William
Stanley, 613, 628; Kane,
Sarah, 750–751; Kureishi,
Hanif, 785–786; Lawrence,
David Herbert, 328, 329;
The Long Sunset (Sherriff),
1236; Look Back in Anger
(Osborne), 832–833;
Loyalties (Galsworthy), 836;
Maugham, William
Somerset, 266, 286;
McGrath, John, 219;
Nichols, Peter, 331; Orton,
Joe, 1013; Osborne, John,
586; Osborne, John and new themes in, 1016;
Pinter, Harold, 226, 586,
623, 994; Priestley, John
Boynton, 324; Rattigan,
Terence, 337, 1119–1121;
Ravenhill, Mark, 1121;
Return of the Prodigal
(Hankin), 1134;
Robertson, Thomas
William, 230, 1143–1144;
Robins, Elizabeth, 1144;
Russell, Willy, 1159–1160;
Rutherford and Son
(Sowerby), 1174–1175;
Shaffer, Peter, 1217; Shaw,
George Bernard, 599;
Sherriff, Robert Cedric,
1236–1237; Sowerby,
Githa, 1265–1266;
Stoppard, Tom, 1281–
1285; Storey, David, 1285–
1286; Wertenbaker,
Timberlake, 1022
Engländer, Richard, 82
England's Ireland (Hare), 586
English 47 (Harvard
University), 115, 124, 138,
1398
English is Easy, Csaba is Dead
(Klimáček et al.), 1255
English language, colloquial, 1218
English language drama:
Africa, 15; Canada, 216;
India, 328, 672; Malaysia,
861–862; Pakistan, 1028;
Philippines, 1052
The English Lover (Duras), 379
An Englishman Abroad
(Bennett), 415
The English Patient (Ondaatje and Young), 1510
English Spoken (Olmo), 1270
English Stage Company, 407,
408, 411, 412, 1194
English Theatre (Vienna), 32,
1356
Engrossed on the Shores of the Lake
(Elkunchwar), 396, 993
Enigma (Harris), 1284
Ennosuke. See Ichikawa
Ennosuke III
Enomoto Dance (Abe), 2
Enough Simplicity for Every
Wiseman (Ostrovsky), 1161
Enough Stupidity in Every Wise Man (Ostrovsky and Tretyakov), 1376
Enquist, Per Olov, 417–418,
1313; The Night of the Tribades, 969
Enrico IV (Pirandello), 418–
419, 718, 1070
Enright, Nick, 419–420
Ensemble Theater
(Cincinnati), 488
Ensler, Eve, 420–421, 1087,
1413
Enter a Free Man (Stoppard),
1282
Enter a Goldfish
(MacLiammóir), 851
Entering Queens (Nagy), 948
The Entertainer (Osborne), 409,
421, 1016
Entertaining Mr Sloane (Orton),
421–422, 510, 1013
Entertaining Strangers (Edgar),
414
An Entertaining Trip (Dorr), 356
Entertainment to Make Votes for Women (Clark), 915
En the Ascetic (Tsoubouchi), 422–423, 1382
entrèmes, 1269
Enuff (Harding), 79
environmental theater, 49,
103, 423, 780, 1328
Envy (Albee), 32
Eo ipso (Uhlár et al.), 1255
Eörsi, István, 640
éphémères, 584
Ephraim Returns to the Army
(Laor), 96 epic theater, 423–424. See also alienation effect. Angels in America (Kushner), 46;
Australia, 74; Brecht,
Bertolt, 191, 350, 359, 375,
991, 1057, 1105; Brenton,
Howard, 198; Bronnen,
Arnolt, 201; Camino Real
(Williams), 213; China,
255, 820; Chlumberg,
Hans, 260; Forssell, Lars,
1313; Gatti, Armand, 509;
The Glass Menagerie
(Williams), 536–537; Hare,
David, 586; Iran, 692–694;
Kaiser, Georg, 748; Nelson,
Richard, 954; Nowra,
Louis, 979; Piscator,
Erwin, 350, 1076, 1354; The Satin Slipper (Claudel),
1192; Squads Toward Death
(Sastre), 1192; Taiwan,
258; The Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom
Sihanouk, King of Cambodia
(Cixous), 1335; Theatre
Union, 1083; Venezuela,
1418; Vianna Filho,
Oduvaldo, 1421
The Epilogue (Pirandello),
1070
Epilogue of the Human Seasons
(Saint-Pol-Roux), 919
The Epiphanies (Pichette and Philippe), 484
Episode: A Tropical Fantasy
(Katō), 756
Episode on an Autumn Evening
(Dürrenmatt), 380
Epitaph for George Dillion
(Osborne), 1016
Epitaph for the Whales (Sakate),
1180
Epsom Downs (Brenton), 197
Equinox (Vojnović), 1430
Equity Library Theatre, 1061
Equus (Shaffer), 411, 424–425, 1217
Era of Good Feeling, 141
Erdman, Nikolai, 425–426,
838, 841, 1164, 1172; The
Suicide, 928, 1303–1304
Erduran, Refik: The Bicycle of Cengizhan, 1386; In Direklerarası, 1387
Erigon (Plevnes), 845
Erik XIV (Strindberg), 426–
427, 927, 1296
The Ermine (Anouilh), 51
Erminy, Thais, 1419
Ermolova, Maria, 1077
Ernie Pyle Theatre. See Tokyo
Takarazuka Theater
Ernst, Max, 319, 320
Eros at Breakfast (Davies), 329
eroticism: Baal (Brecht), 111;
Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; The Lesson (Ionesco), 810;
Margolin, Deb, 871;
Schnitzler, Arthur, 1196;
The Virgin's Mask (Kara),
1425; Zapolska, Gabriela,
1513
The Erpingham Camp (Orton),
1013
Ervine, St. John, 427, 702; John
Ferguson, 737–738
Escapade (Mafune), 855 escape, 760
Escape (Gao), 90
escapism, 81, 95, 143
Escolares de Teatro, 896
Escudero, Ruth, 1044
Escuela Internacional de Teatro para América Latina
y el Caribe, 358
Eshqi, Mirzādeh, 694

- Esłava Theater, 873
- Esmann, Gustav, 342
- Espace Go (Montreal), 34
- esperanto (Spain), 174, 1191, 1271. See also grotesque theater
- Espinosa, Eugenio Hernández, 310
- espionage, 645, 655, 764, 809, 1519
- The Essence of Waiting (Ebrahimi), 695
- Essex, Mark, 762
- Essex Girls (Prichard), 427–428
- Esslin, Martin, 106, 192, 360, 371, 526, 1190
- Esson, Louis, 72
- Estates-Mistakes (Tajovský), 1254
- Esther (Hughes and Meyerowitz), 637
- Esther (Linney), 822
- Esther, Book of, 1108
- Estonia, 428–429
- An Estonian Funeral (Kivirähk), 429
- Estorino, Abelardo, 309, 310
- Estrella Publishing, 873
- Esu and the Vagabond Minstrel (Osofisan), 1018
- Eternal Bourgeois (Goll), 541
- The Eternal Dream (Kornfeld), 777
- The Eternal Jew (Pinski), 1508
- Ethel Barrymore Theater (New York), 637, 1116
- Ethical Girl (Hang), 583
- ethics, 29, 41, 174
- Ethiopia (Living Newspaper), 1137
- ethnicity. See also race and race relations. It Is Not Tall Grass Blown by the Wind (Hassan), 720; Kazablan (Mossinsohn), 710; The Night We Became Xiangsheng Comedians (Lai), 795–796; The Occupation of Heather Rose (Lill), 820; performance art, 1043; Philippines, 1051; A Raisin in the Sun (Hansberry), 1116; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1140; Rivera, José, 1141; Rugyendo, Mukotani, 1158
- ethnology, 1043
- Ettinger, Solomon, 1506
- Euchel, Isaac, 1506
- Eugene O'Neill Theater Center, 167, 371, 625
- Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center, 1501
- Eugenia (Parry), 964
- Eugenia Victoria Herrera (Casas), 1106
- Eugênio Kusnet Experimental Theater (Brazil), 60
- E. Ultraja (Uslar Pietri), 1418
- Euralien (Stefanovski), 845
- Eureka Theatre (San Francisco), 46, 787
- Euripedes, 1267, 1369
- Europa Press (London), 129
- Europe (Greig), 559
- European Chronicles (Arbuzov), 57
- European languages, 15–16, 24–25
- European theater, 367–370, 695, 697, 827, 1150. See also individual countries
- European Theater Award, 937
- Eurydice (Anouilh), 429–430, 1036
- Eustis, Oskar, 787
- euthanasia, 797
- Eva Bonheur (Heijermans), 603
- Evans, Claude, 961
- Eva Peron (Copi), 289
- Even a Wise Man Stumbles (Ostrovsky). See The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky)
- Evening Dress (Howells), 634
- Evening Glow (Hamsun), 505
- Evening in a Strange Land (Bezā'i), 695
- An Evening in Suzhou (Tian), 1357
- An Evening of Sholem Aleichem (Aleichem), 928
- The Evening Paper (Mason), 875
- Eveningred (Werkteater), 957
- The Evening Sky (Hamsun), 580
- Evening Standard Award: Brenton, Howard, 198; Fugard, Athol, 1263; Marber, Patrick, 270; Matura, Mustapha, 877–878; Orton, Joe, 833; Stoppard, Tom, 1152, 1282; Storey, David, 1285
- Evening Walk (Marichal), 1107
- An Evening with Dead Essex (Kennedy), 164, 762
- An Evening with Mr. Magnus & Sons (Monti), 89
- Even-Shoshan, Yossefa, 712
- Eventide (Kinoshita), 784
- Even Wise Men Err (Ostrovsky). See The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky)
- Eve of Retirement (Bernhard), 152, 430
- Everett, Jimmy, 79
- The Evergreen Tree (MacKaye), 848
- Ever Loving (Hollingsworth), 622
- Everybody Wins (Miller), 906–907
- Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (Stoppard), 1283, 1285
- Everyman (Hofmannsthal), 618, 619, 649, 1127
- Everyman myth, 1234, 1267
- Everyman Theatre (England), 297, 984, 1159
- Everything Relative (Pollock), 1088
- Eve Serves Out Her Childhood (Abell), 3
- Eve's Secret (Akins), 30
- The Eviction (Sánchez), 1183
- evil. See good vs. evil
- Evil Is Spreading (Audiberti), 71
- Evil Remedy (Paz), 310
- The Evil Spreads (Audiberti), 484
- evolutionism in African drama, 16
- Evreinov, Nikolai, 92, 430–431, 1163; Introduction to Monodrama, 919; The Storming of the Winter Palace, 368
- The Exams Never End (De Filippo), 339
- Excellent Play Award (China), 811
- The Exception and the Rule (Brecht), 807
- The Exchange (Trifonov), 841
- The Exciting Midday (Dorr), 356
- The Executioner (Hilst), 188
- Executioner and Fool (Voskovec and Werich), 94, 315
- Execution of Justice (Mann), 864
- exhibitionism, 1280
- exile, 1452–1453. See also subsequent entries
- exile, places from and to: Austria, 85, 86; Cuban, 310–311; Germany, 519–520; Hungary, 92–93; Iran, 696; Ireland, 705; Lithuania, 824; Prague, 93–94; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1165, 1167–1168; Siberia, 426; United States, 520; Zurich, 108
- exile, writers in: Aksyonov, Vasily, 1167; al-ʿĀnī, Yūsuf, 698; Balodis, Janis, 119; Barta, Sándor, 92; Beckett, Samuel, 704; Brasch, Thomas, 524; Brecht, Bertolt, 193–196, 234, 520, 543, 816, 1133; Caragiale, Ion Luca, 1149; Chifunyse, Stephen, 22; Copi, 289; D'Annunzio, Gabriele, 716; Erdman, Nikolai, 426; Fornes, Maria Irene, 310; Gao Xingjian, 90, 506–507; Goll, Yvan, 540–541; Gorenstein, Friedrich, 1169; Gorky, Maksim, 544–546; Hasenclever, Walter, 520; Horváth, Ödön von, 520; Ibsen, Henrik, 648–651; Kaiser, Georg, 520; Lawler, Ray, 802; Lawrence, David Herbert, 803; Lawson, John

- Howard, 805; Lunacharsky, Anatoly Vasilyevich, 838; Lyubimov, Yuri Petrovich, 841; Manet, Eduardo, 310; Mouawad, Wajdi, 221; Nadeem, Shahid, 947; Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 965; Ondaatje, Michael, 998; Piscator, Erwin, 520; Rainis, 1115; Raznovich, Diana, 1122; Reinhardt, Max, 520; Sternheim, Carl, 520; Toller, Ernst, 520; Triana, José, 310; Weill, Kurt, 520; Wolf, Friedrich, 520, 1486; Wu Zuguang, 1492; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513; Zuckmayer, Carl, 520, 1518
- Exile (Huidobro), 310
- Exiled (Galsworthy), 406
- The Exile of the Naked Woman (Radrigán), 1114
- Exiles (Joyce), 915
- Exiles (Mrożek), 281
- existentialism: absurdism, 5, 1408; Albee, Edward, 31; Andreev, Leonid, 45; Anouilh, Jean, 51; Art (Reza), 66; France, 481–482; Gombrowicz, Witold, 542; Hungary, 640; Ibsen, Henrik, 1054; Nietzsche, Friedrich, 966; Pinter, Harold, 226; The Prodigal (Richardson), 1138; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 481, 1188; Sastre, Alfonso, 1191; Shaffer, Peter, 1217; Solórzano, Carlos, 1257; Venezuela, 1419
- Exit the King (Ionesco), 690, 919
- Ex Machina (Quebec): The Seven Streams of the River Ota, 1214
- Ex–Miss Copper Queen on a Set of Pills (Terry), 1336
- Experimental Shakespeare: King Lear (Meng), 91
- Experimental Theater (Puerto Rico), 1106
- experimental theater. See also avant-garde drama.
- alternative theater
- movement, 96, 217, 568; Arena Theater of São Paulo, 60; avant-garde drama, 87; Catalan Experimental Theater, 232; closet drama, 271; collage aesthetic, 278; German expressionists, 983; off-off-Broadway theater, 990; Student Theatre (Denmark), 1012; Theatre Workshop (England), 340; theatricality, 1343; wartime dramas, 1406
- experimental theater, plays and playwrights: Almighty Voice and His Wife (Moses), 39; Artaud, Antonin, 734; Brenton, Howard, 197; Cartwright, Jim, 229; Gelber, Jack, 512; Granville-Barker, Harley, 405; Hunchback of Aomori (Terayama), 638; Lion in the Streets (Thompson), 823; Løveid, Cecilie, 834–835; The Magical City (Akins), 29; Nelson, Richard, 954; O'Casey, Sean, 983–994; O'Neill, Eugene, 983, 1002–1003, 1005; Overmyer, Eric, 1024–1025; Ravenhill, Mark, 1121; Reaney, James, 1126; Reinhardt, Max, 319; Różewicz, Tadeusz, 1157; Rugyendo, Mukotani, 1158; Shipenko, Aleksei, 1168; Stalowa Wola (Kurochkin), 1170; Xiong Foxi, 1496
- experimental theater, by country or region: Argentina, 89; Australia, 74; Belgium, 142; Brazil, 188; Canada, 217, 998; China, 827; Cuba, 309, 310; Denmark, 342–343; England, 229; Germany, 991; Iran, 695; Ireland, 1145; Israel, 96; Japan, 639; Malaysia, 720, 861; Netherlands, 957; Nigeria, 24; Norway, 977; Soviet Union, 1172; Taiwan, 808, 827; Uganda, 1158; United States, 568, 1399–1401, 1409; Venezuela, 1419
- Experimental Theatre (Meiji University), 48
- Experimental Theatre (New York), 1408
- Experimental Theatre Inc., 1002
- Experimental Theatre Wing (ETW, New York University), 173
- Experiment Damokles (Karvaš), 4
- Expletive Deleted (Bentley), 147
- exploitation of workers. See also labor issues, as theme.
- The Golden Spire (Warerker), 667; The Investigation (Weiss), 689; It Is Not Tall Grass Blown by the Wind (Hassan), 720; The Little Foxes (Hellman), 825–826; Machine (Hashmi), 673; On the Line (Lill), 820; The Queen of Bath tub (Levin), 710–711
- The Explorer (Maugham), 878–879
- explosives, 1258
- expressionism, 431–433; apocalypse, 54; avant-garde drama, 105, 108; Catalan Experimental Theater, 232; dadaism, 319; debated during WWII, 194; defined, 517; language of, 517; Provincetown Players, 1400; Symphonic Expressionism, 217
- expressionism, plays and playwrights: Čapek, Karel, 224; The Adding Machine (Rice), 10, 1136; The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12; Andreev, Leonid, 45; The Beggar (Sorge), 1261; Beggar on Horseback (Connelly and Kaufman), 137, 756; Bergman, Hjalmar, 148; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Chlumberg, Hans, 259–260; A Dream Play (Strindberg), 372–373; Halac, Ricardo, 576; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 594; Heyward, Dorothy, 612; Hong Shen, 624; It Is Written (Dürrenmatt), 380; Johst, Hanns, 739; Kaiser, Georg, 747; Kokoschka, Oskar, 773; Kornfeld, Paul, 776; Krleža, Miroslav, 781; Miracle at Verdun (Chlumberg, Hans), 259; Nelson, Richard, 954; O'Casey, Sean, 983, 984; O'Neill, Eugene, 575, 624, 1002, 1005; Our Power and Our Glory (Grieg), 1022–1023; Peggy Ann (Fields), 812; Roger Bloomer (Lawson), 805; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; The Silver Tassie (O'Casey), 983; The Son (Hasenclever), 1258; Spring Awakening (Wedekind), 1274; Strindberg, August, 527–528; Toller, Ernst, 1362; Treadwell, Sophie, 1399; Voaden, Herman, 1427; Yeats, William Butler, 1504; Zuckmayer, Carl, 1518
- expressionism, by country or region: Austria, 83; Belgium, 142; China, 255; Croatia, 304; Denmark, 342; German, 494; Germany, 285, 589, 983; Guatemala, 581; Japan, 727; Netherlands, 956; New Zealand, 961; Puerto Rico, 1106
- Extant (United Kingdom), 1017
- Exton, Clive, 1283

- Extraordinary Measures (Ensler), 420
- The Extras (Gorostiza), 546
- extremism, political, 1193
- The Eye (Zaourou), 24
- Eyen, Tom, 510, 990
- Eyes Wide Shut (Kubrick), 1198
- Eyewitness (Tesich), 1336
- Eymery, Marguerite. See Rachilde
- Eyvind of the Mountains (Sigurjónsson), 653, 1244
- Faassen, Rosier, 955
- Fabian Reform Committee, 427
- Fabian Society, 1223–1224
- Fabien, Michèle, 144
- Fabiola (Machado), 845–846
- The Fable of the Changeling (Pirandello), 1071
- Fabre, Émile, 475
- Fabricius, Jan, 955
- Fabulation (Nottage), 978
- The Fabulous Invalid (Kaufman and Hart), 588, 757
- The Fabulous Miss Marie (Bullins), 207
- Façade (Sitwell), 729
- The Face Maker (Hoar), 962
- Face of a Stranger (Norman), 975
- Face to Face (Williamson), 1479
- Face Value (Hwang), 643
- Factory (Yin), 257
- Factory Girl (Volodin), 1167
- The Factory Girls (McGuinness), 884
- Factory Theatre (Toronto):
alternative theater movement, 217; Griffiths, Linda, 561; MacDonald, Ann-Marie, 843; MacDonald, Bryden, 1456; Sears, Djanet, 1206; Sherman, Jason, 1234; Walker, George F., 1095, 1437
- The Facts of Life (Ocampo), 981
- Fading Roses (Verga), 1421
- Faiko, Aleksei, 1164
- Faint Perfume (Gale), 503
- A Fair Country (Baitz), 115
- Fairfax (Campbell), 214
- The Fairground Booth (Blok), 99
- fairies, fairy tales, 1253, 1288, 1502, 1503
- The Fairies are Thirsty (Boucher), 180
- Fair Slaughter (Barker), 122
- The Fairy Tale (Schnitzler), 1197–1198
- Faith (Simons-Mees), 955
- Faith, Hope and Charity (Horváth and Kristl), 627
- Faith and Dancing (Weaver), 1273
- Faith and Fireside (Schönherr), 82
- Faith Healer (Friel), 491, 707
- The Faith Healer (Moody), 922
- Faiwoo, Ferdinand Kwasi, 23
- Falkenštejn (Hilbert), 315
- the fall, 1219
- The Fall (Srbijanović), 1211
- Fall Down (Lill), 290
- Fallen Fruit (Hernández), 608, 1156
- “fallen woman,” 935–936, 1224
- The Fall Guy (Tsuka), 1383
- Falling from Grace (Rayson), 1122
- The Fall of Constance Wilde (Kilroy), 705
- The Fall of Kumbi (Abdallah), 1, 24
- The Fall of the Amazons (Bentley), 147
- The Fall of the City (MacLeish), 435, 849
- Falls the Shadow (Hamilton), 961
- Falsch (Kalisky), 749
- False Alarm (Pinero), 309
- The False Bottom (Stefanovski), 845
- False Money (Sánchez), 1183
- Falsettoland (Finn), 815
- Family (Cao), 223
- The Family (de Boer), 957
- Family (Leow), 809
- A Family Affair (Ostrovsky), 1019
- Family Album (Rodrigues), 1145, 1146
- Family Devotions (Hwang), 643
- family drama. See also adultery; divorce; domestic drama; infidelity; male-female relationships; marriage. Buried Child (Shêpard), 207–208, 312, 1233; Cocteau, Jean, 681; De Filippo, Eduardo, 719; The Donnellys (Reaney), 1125; Fallen Fruit (Hernández), 1156; Family (Leow), 809; Ghosts (Ibsen), 526–527; Ibsen, Henrik, 650, 1513; India, 672; In the Summer House (Bowles), 687; Kawatake Mokuami, 758; Kazantsev, Aleksei, 1170; Kiddush (Hasfari), 711–712; The Lady from the Sea (Ibsen), 791; Life with Father (Lindsay), 818; Little Eyolf (Ibsen), 825; Long Day's Journey into Night (O'Neill), 830–831; Morning's at Seven (Osborn), 925–926; Murray, T.C., 702; A Raisin in the Sun (Hansberry), 1116; Rayson, Hannie, 1122; Right You Are (Pirandello), 1139; Rivera, José, 1141; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1145–1146; Royal Guests (Hernández), 1156; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1162; Tsar Potap (Kopkov), 1165
- The Family of Atreus (Hauptmann), 1370
- A Family of the Nobility (Tolstoy), 1363
- The Family of the Theater (Ramallah), 1033
- Family Portrait with Stranger (Lobozyorov), 1170
- family relationships. See also feminism and feminist themes. Fosse, Jon, 949; Ibsen, Henrik, 975–976; Jepsen, Erling, 733; Nagy, Phyllis, 948; Norén, Lars, 967; Scott, Norelle, 964; Shepard, Sam, 1233; Shimizu Kunio, 1238; Simon, Neil, 1246; U.S. drama, 1409; Vauthier, Jean, 1417; Verga, Giovanni, 1421; Vogel, Paula, 1428
- The Family Reunion (Eliot), 394, 395, 408, 435–436, 1130
- Family Stories (Srbijanović), 1211
- The Family Tsvi (Pinski), 1508
- Family Week (Henley), 608
- Famine (Murphy), 942
- The Fanlights (Marques), 1106
- Fannario, David: Balconville, 116
- Fanny's First Play (Shaw), 548, 1225
- Fanon, Frantz, 1, 15
- Fanshen (Hare), 740
- The Fantastical History of a Useless Man (Junction Avenue Theatre Company), 1264
- The Fantasticks (Jones and Schmidt), 990
- The Fantasticks (Schmidt), 1154
- The Fantastic Tavern (Sastre), 1191
- fantasy, 112, 205, 728
- fantasy melodrama, 892, 1047, 1187
- Fante language, 1
- Fantine (Howard), 630
- Fantomina (Fischerová), 317, 456
- Farándula Universitaria (Puerto Rico), 1106
- Far as the Eye Can See (Wiebe), 1463
- Far Away (Churchill), 55, 265, 280, 436–437, 1253
- The Faraway Nearby (Murrell), 943
- The Faraway Princess (Rostand), 1154

- Far Away Promised Land* (Halac), 577
- farce, 437–438; Argentina, 61; bufo theater, 204; comedy compared, 279; domestic, 229; dramatic, 338; drawing room, 324, 340; Flemish klucht or slapstick, 270; France, 288; Gilded Age, 635; Indonesia, 103; Italy, 338; kyōgen theater, 970; Las Divas collective (Mexico), 1146; New Zealand, 961, 962; parlour, 597; Venezuela, 1418
- farce, plays and playwrights: Accidental Death of an Anarchist (Fo), 6; The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12; All of Them Have It (Casas), 229; Ayckbourn, Alan, 110; Balance of Payments (Lord), 834; The Bald Soprano (Ionesco), 117; The Barren Flower (Persiyaninova), 1163; Bennett, Alan, 146; Blithe Spirit (Coward), 167; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Boy Meets Girl (Spewack, B. and S.), 182; Charley's Aunt (Thomas), 240; Cocteau, Jean, 681; Cohan, George M., 1213; Dangerous Corner (Priestly), 324; De Filippo, Eduardo, 338; Dramasutra (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195; Dry Lips Oughta Move to Kapuskasing (Highway), 375; Durang, Christopher, 378; Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 381; The End of the Beginning (O'Casey), 984; Enright, Nick, 419; Feydeau, Georges, 449, 458; Harrigan, Edward G., 1398; Hayes, Kate Simpson, 597; Hopwood, Avery, 729; Howells, William Dean, 634; Hoyt, Charles H., 635; Hwang, David Henry, 643; Ibsen, Árne, 655; The Importance of Being Earnest (Wilde), 661, 699; It Pays to Advertise (Megruue and Hackett), 720–721; Jarry, Alfred, 360; Jitters (French), 736; The Lady Philanthropist (Persiyaninova), 1163; Loud Speaker (Lawson), 805; Magazine of Luck (Loher), 830; Mitchell, Langdon, 960; The Mystery Man, or I Am Poor Soso Dzhugashvili (Korkiya), 1171; Neilson, Anthony, 953; Orton, Joe, 1013; Patrick, John, 1039; Pinerro, Arthur, 1063; Popović, Aleksandar, 1092; A Pound on Demand (O'Casey), 984; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1140; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1146; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; Saratoga (Howard), 1185; Self-Sacrificer (Mofid), 696; Simon, Neil, 987; Valle-Inclán, Ramón María del, 1416; While the Sun Shines (Rattigan), 1120; Xiong Foxi, 1497
- Farce of the True Spanish Queen* (Valle-Inclán), 109
- Farce: The Lightning* (Mafune), 855
- Far East* (Gurney), 572
- fareWel* (Ross), 1153
- Farewell, Socrates* (Topol), 317, 1367
- Farewell in June* (Vampilov), 1167
- Farewell Sorrow* (Kohout), 316
- Farewell to a Cannibal Rage* (Osofisan), 24, 1018
- Farewell to Babylon* (Sowande), 24
- Farigoule, Louis. See Romans, Jules
- The Farm* (Geary), 512
- Farmer, Frances, 1179
- The Farmer at Hraun* (Sigurjonsson), 1244
- The Farmer Forsworn* (Anzengruber), 82
- The Farmer's Daughter in Hollywood* (Tervapää), 453
- Farmers Die* (Kroetz), 783
- The Farmer Takes a Wife* (Connelly and Elser), 285
- farm life. See rural and village life
- The Farm Show* (Thompson), 1354
- farm workers, 1415
- Farmyard* (Kroetz), 782
- A Far Off Place* (van der Post), 1284
- Farquhar, George, 668
- Farquharson, Rica McLean, 764
- Farr, Florence, 1223
- Farrell, Fiona, 964
- Farther Off from Heaven* (Inge), 682
- Farther West* (Murrell), 943
- fascism; antifascism, 748; Geneva (Shaw), 1227; I Am the People (Kroetz), 783; impact on drama, 1043, 1326; Italian theater, 718; Jelinek, Elfriede, 730; Midnight Mass (Karvaš), 754
- Fassbinder, Rainer Werner, 438–439, 458; Garbage, the City and Death, 522; Katzelmacher, 522; Volksstück, 1431
- Fast, Howard, 1248
- Fastnachtspiel*, 1109, 1505
- fate, fatalism: The Donnelly's (Reaney), 1125; Dragon Beard Ditch (Lao She), 799; The Infernal Machine (Cocteau), 681; The Life of Man (Andreev), 817; Marcel Pursued by Hounds (Tremblay), 868–869; Resino, Carmen, 1133; Riders to the Sea (Synge), 1138–1139; The Simoom (Lenormand), 808; Soya, Carl Erik, 1267
- Fate of a Cockroach* (al-Hakim), 17
- The Fat Guy and the Skinny Guy* (Piñera), 1062
- The Father* (Strindberg), 303, 439–440, 951, 1295, 1312, 1370, 1517
- Father and Sons* (Joaquin), 736
- Fatherland* (Ragnarsson), 655
- The Father Returns* (Kikuchi), 440–441, 727
- Father's Day* (Bland), 961
- Fat Little Indians* (Dryland), 962
- Fat Pig* (LaBute), 791
- The Fat Woman* (Rame and Fo), 1119
- Faust (Goethe): Ibsen, Henrik, 649; Lunacharsky, Anatoly Vasilyevich, 838; Margarëta (Zälite), 802; Pasternak translation, 1165; The Philosopher's Stone (Lagerkvist), 795; philosophical drama, 1055; Rainis translation, 1115; Ravenhill, Mark, 1121; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; The Seducer Kolobashkin (Radzinsky), 1167; Spring Awakening (Wedekind), 1274; Stein, Gertrude, 828
- Faust* (Gounod), 1222
- Faust* (Panikkar), 1036
- Faust and the City* (Lunacharsky), 838
- Faust in Africa* (Kentridge), 102
- Faust is Dead* (Ravenhill), 1121
- Faustus myth*, 1215
- Fay, W. G., 1077
- Fazilet Pharmacy (Taner), 1386
- Fear (Afinogenov), 928, 1164, 1277
- Fear and Misery in the Third Reich* (Brecht), 193, 441, 520
- The Feast at Solhaug* (Ibsen), 647
- The Feast at the Café* (Aksal), 1386
- The Feast-Day of Steel* (Arlt), 88
- The Feast of Deportation* (al-Guzi), 1031
- Feast of the Sun* (Peru), 1046

- Feathers (Stumbre), 801
- Federal Pageant (Arx), 1316
- Federal Republic of Germany, 521–523
- Federal Theatre Project (United States), 441–443; agit-prop, 27; avant-garde drama, 105; censorship, 1086; The Cradle Will Rock (Blitzstein), 302; discontinuation, 1085; documentary drama, 352–353; Glaspell, Susan, 536; I'd Rather Be Right (Kaufman and Hart), 1402; Johnson, Georgia Douglas, 739; "Living Newspaper Unit," 352–353; Miller, Arthur, 904; overview, 1405; Processional (Lawson), 1103; Rice, Elmer, 1137
- Fefu and Her Friends (Fornes), 442, 443–444, 468, 1058
- Feingold, Michael, 371, 463
- Feinman, Sigmund, 1507
- Fejes, Endre, 640
- Fekri, Morteza, Qoli Khan, 694
- Feld, Paul, 957
- Feldek, L'udomír, 1254
- Feldman, Miroslav, 304
- Fēlikss and Felicita (Pētersons), 801
- Felipe, Carolos, 309–310
- The Female Consistory of Brockville (Candidus), 216
- Female Doctors (Hochhuth), 521–522
- female impersonation, 392, 1241, 1324
- female leads (Japan). See musumeyaku (female leads)
- Female Parts (Rame and Fo), 444, 462, 1119
- female playwrights: American Dramatists Club, 306; Australia, 77–78; New Zealand, 964; United States, pre-Depression, 1399–1400; Venezuela, 1419
- female sexuality. See sexuality in drama
- female theater restrictions, 1385
- feminism and feminist themes. See also women. Broadway, 1412; Cold War drama, 1407; folktales, folklore, 753; The Mock Parliaments, 914–915; Monstrous Regiment, 264, 919–920; oppression, 792, 1513; performance, 87; performance art, 1043; philosophy, 1058; post-World War II, 454–455; romanticism, 1151; Split Britches, 1273; strong characters, 809, 1119, 1132, 1161, 1516; Women's Project Company (New York), 468; women's suffrage, 914–915; Women's Theater Council, 1087
- feminism and feminist themes, plays and playwrights: Aidoo, Ama Ata, 28; Akins, Zoë, 29; Alarms (Yankowitz), 1502; All House, Bed and Church (Rame), 1118; Anderson, Clara Rothwell, 42; Aria (Highway), 62; Ariyoshi Sawako, 63; Aspazjia, 800; Bagnold, Enid, 113; Bai Fengxi, 114; A Bankruptcy (Bjørnson), 120; Barnes, Djuna, 123; Beaton, Hilary, 962; Benavente, Jacinto, 145; Berman, Sabina, 150; Bhagat, Datta, 158; Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 163; Blood Relations (Pollock), 171; Bondagers (Glover), 176; Boucher, Denise, 180; Bracco, Roberto, 183; A Bright Room Called Day (Kushner), 787; Cao Yu, 223; Carr, Marina, 228; Casas, Myrna, 229; The Children's Hour (Hellman), 248; Childress, Alice, 249; Churchill, Caryl, 262–266; Cixous, Hélène, 267; Clark, Sally, 268; Confusion (Raznovich), 1123; Crothers, Rachel, 306, 1399; Dattani, Mahesh, 328; The Day the Whores Came Out to Play Tennis (Kopit), 776; Death by Beheading (Karnad), 753; De Groen, Alma, 339–340; D'Erzell, Catalina, 344; Dobrev, Yana, 206; A Doll's House (Ibsen), 353; Dragunskaya, Kseniya, 1170; The Dreams of Clytemnestra (Maraini), 373; Duras, Margurite, 379; Ensler, Eve, 420; The Facts of Life (Ocampo), 981; Fleißer, Marieluise, 959; Funnyhouse of a Negro (Kennedy), 762; Gale, Zona, 503; Gambaro, Griselda, 504–505; Garro, Elena, 508–509; Glaspell, Susan, 1378; Glover, Sue, 538–539; A Headache, Shoulder Pain and Higuchi Ichiyō (Inoue), 684; Hedda Gabler (Ibsen), 650; The Heidi Chronicles (Wasserstein), 602; Hellman, Lillian, 607; Henley, Beth, 607; Hewett, Dorothy, 610; The High Road (Sheldon), 1230; Hindle Wakes (Houghton), 613; Hollingsworth, Margaret, 622, 1442; The House of Bernarda Alba (García Lorca), 629; Howe, Tina, 633; How the Vote Was Won (Hamilton and St. John), 1226; Istarú, Ana, 294; Jelinek, Elfriede, 86, 730; Jellicoe, Ann, 731; Johnson, Georgia Douglas, 739; Kemp, Jenny, 761; Kishida Rio, 769; Lill, Wendy, 820; Loranger, Françoise, 220; Løveid, Cecilie, 835; Maraini, Dacia, 865–866; Mary Queen of Scots Got Her Head Chopped Off (Lochhead), 873–874; The Matriz Household (Raznovich), 1123; Men in White (Kingsley), 895; Miss Lulu Bett (Gale), 912; A Modern Woman Called Ang Tau Mui (Leow), 809; Mondragón Aguirre, Magdalena, 918; Munro, Rona, 939–940; Murray, Peta, 73; Norman, Marsha, 975; Onwueme, Tess, 1008; Owens, Rochelle, 1025–1026; Page, Louise, 1027; Petrushevskaya, Lyudmila, 1168; Play with a Cobra (Karnad), 753; Praga, Marco, 1097; Ptushkina, Nadezhda, 1170; Rachilde, 476; Radzinsky, Edvard, 1167; A Raisin in the Sun (Hansberry), 1116; Rame, Franca, 1118; Razumovskaya, Lyudmila, 1169; Renée, 1131–1132; Resino, Carmen, 1132–1133; Robins, Elizabeth, 1144; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1147; Ross, Kathleen, 961; Rudali (Ganguli), 1157–1158; Rutherford and Son (Sowerby), 1174–1175; Saga of the Wet Hens (Marchessault), 1177; Saint Joan (Shaw), 1179; Sándor, Malena, 1185; Sarumpaet, Ratna, 1191; Seagull Eaters (Løveid), 1205; The Second Mrs. Tanqueray (Pinero), 900; Shange, Ntozake, 1218; Sharma, Tripurari, 1221; Shaw, George Bernard, 1225–1226; Shore Acres (Herne), 1242; Skram, Amalie, 976; Streeruwitz, Marlene, 1289; Strindberg, August, 1293–1294; Sudermann, Hermann,

- 1303; Summerfolk (Gorky), 1305; Throws Like a Girl (festival), 1273; Top Girls (Churchill), 1365; Van Druten, John, 1417; Vogel, Paula, 1428; Wandor, Micheline, 1440; Wasserstein, Wendy, 1442–1443; Wei Minglun, 1451; The Wood Carver's Wife (Pickthall), 1060; Xenopoulos, Grigorios, 1495; Xu Fen, 1497; Yankowitz, Susan, 1501
- feminism and feminist themes, by country or region: Afghanistan, 13; Australia, 79, 80; Central and Southern Africa, 22; Egypt, 391; England, 404–405, 409, 416–417; France, 478, 486; India, 672–673, 1333; Iran, 695; Ireland, 687; Japan, 1239; Lithuania, 824; Netherlands, 957; New Zealand, 964; Norway, 976–977; Philippines, 1051; Poland, 1080; Puerto Rico, 1106; Scotland, 829; Spain, 1040; Switzerland, 1317; United States, 442, 444–446, 536, 657, 1335–1336, 1409; Venezuela, 1419
- Fen* (Churchill), 265, 446–447, 740
- Fences* (Wilson), 447, 1479, 1480
- Fennario, David, 447–448; Balconville, 217; Nothing to Lose, 1008; On the Job, 217, 1007
- Ferber, Edna, 448–449, 1401; Dinner at Eight, 348; Stage Door (with Kaufman), 1276
- Fermat's Last Theorem, 1282
- Fernández-Shaw, Carlos, 1178
- Ferocious Animals* (Chocrón), 1419
- Ferron, Jacques, 220
- Festival d'Angers, 211
- Festival d'Autonne (Paris), 696
- Festival d'Avignon, 1483
- Festival Internacional Cervantino, 898, 923
- Festival Internacional de Teatro por la Paz, 293
- Festival of Britain Award, 408, 1460
- The Festival of Hiero* (Arlt), 62
- The Festival of Our Lady of the Dove* (Bretón), 1514
- The Festival of Our Lady of the Dove* (Vega and Bretón), 1178
- The Festival of Peace* (Hauptmann), 927
- Festival of Russian and Soviet Drama, 1081
- Festival of the Arts (Shiraz, Iran), 696
- Festival of the Dreaming (Sydney, Australia), 79
- Festival of Vision (Yung et al.), 1511
- Festival Theatre (Chichester), 411
- Feuchtwanger, Lion, 191
- Feuchtwanger Fellowship, 947
- The Fever* (Shawn), 1229
- A Few Stout Individuals* (Guare), 567
- Feydeau, Georges, 449; A Flea in Her Ear, 458, 476
- Fichandler, Zelda, 371, 1408
- Fiction Factory (Wales), 1350
- Fictitious Peace* (Hernández), 608
- Fiddler on the Roof* (Stein), 814, 1168
- Fidelity (Zaitsev), 1163
- The Field* (Keane), 708
- Field, Jameson, 764
- Field Day Theatre Company (Northern Ireland), 449–450, 491, 706, 766, 1373
- Fields, Dorothy, 812
- Fields, Herbert, 812
- The Fields of Heaven* (Hewett), 610
- Fierstein, Harvey, 450–451, 787; La Cage aux Folles, 510; Torch Song Trilogy, 510, 1410
- Fiésole (Ignacio Cabrujas), 1419
- Fife Miner Players, 1213
- The (15 Minute) Dogg's Troupe Hamlet* (Stoppard), 1283
- Fifteen Strings of Cash* (Chen), 451
- The Fifth Act* (Bergman), 149
- Fifth Avenue Theatre (New York), 913, 1185
- The Fifth Landing Stage* (Faiwoo), 23
- The Fifth of July* (Wilson), 452, 1087, 1482
- Fifty Million Frenchmen* (Fields), 812
- '51 (Amamus), 961
- Figaro* (Beaumarchais), 419
- The Fighting Days* (Lill), 820
- The Fighting Personage, or Very Loud* (Vauthier), 1417
- Figuro in the Night* (O'Casey), 985
- File Zero* (Mou), 91, 827
- Filho, Antunes, 188
- Filipino languages, 1050, 1052
- Filloux, Catherine, 446
- film, 404, 415–416, 762, 1028, 1406
- Film (Beckett), 133
- Film (Bergman), 148
- The Film Club (Kennedy), 763
- A Film Is Shot* (Radzinsky), 1167
- The Film Society (Baitz), 114
- Filó, Vera, 641
- films, Dumas. See Dumas films
- Filthy Rich (Walker), 1095, 1438
- Filumena (De Filippo), 339
- Filumena Marturano (De Filippo), 719
- The Final Beatitude* (Thiyam), 1348
- Final Chorus (Strauss), 524, 1288
- The Final Decisive Battle* (Vishnevsky), 1165
- Finale: An Essay in Quinquagigesimal Synthesis (Krléža), 782
- Final Solutions (Dattani), 328
- Final Stroke (Strepconi and Gallegos), 1419
- Finborough Theatre (London), 974
- fin de siècle* drama: Anatol (Schnitzler), 42; Andreev, Leonid, 45; apocalypse, 53; Austria, 81–84, 815; Belgium, 141; Canada, 1514; Eastern Europe, 92; France, 475–477; Germany, 516–517; Greece, 554–556; Italy, 715; melodrama and, 893; Molnár, Ferenc, 917; monodrama and, 918; Rainis, 1115; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1126
- Find Hakamadare! (Fukuda), 48
- Fingers/Dedos de goma* (Purroy), 1419
- Finland, 452–455
- Finley, Karen, 585, 636, 1043, 1087, 1413
- Finn, William, 511, 815
- Fiolteatret (Denmark), 343
- Firbank, Ronald, 1013
- Fire (Ledoux and Young), 1510
- Fire (Schumann), 1086
- Fire and Night* (Rainis), 1115
- The Fire and the Rain* (Karnad), 753
- The Firebugs: A Learning-Play Without a Lesson* (Frisch), 492, 493, 807, 1317, 1372
- The Firefly* (Harbach), 811
- Firehouse Repertory Theatre (San Francisco), 207
- The Fire Raisers: A Morality Without a Moral* (Frisch), 492
- Fires (Mouawad), 932
- Fires in the Mirror: Crown Heights, Brooklyn and Other Identities* (Smith), 1255
- The Fires of St. Dominic* (Zamyatin), 1164
- Fire Tree* (Osborne), 1016

- The Firm Forgives a Moment of Madness (Santana), 1419
- First Bathed in Moonlight (Bai), 114
- The First Cavalry Army (Vishnevsky), 1165
- The First Celestial Adventure of Mr. Antipyrine, Fire Extinguisher (Tzara), 108
- The First Day in the Year of Jiazi (Xiong), 1496
- The First Distiller (Tolstoy), 1363
- First Episode (Rattigan), 1119
- The First Flowers of Ueno (Kawatake), 759
- The First House of Beijing Duck (He), 455
- The First Jewish Recruit in Russia (Aksenfeld), 1506
- The First Joanna (Blewett), 77
- First Kiss (Pedrero), 1040
- First Lady Suite (LaChiusa), 815
- First Love (Mee), 888
- The First Mrs. Fraser (Ervine), 427
- First of All You Are Born (Knutzon), 771
- First Return (Thompson), 1353
- The First South African (Fatima), 347
- First Star (Pedrero), 1040
- First Studio, 927
- First Surrealist Manifesto (Breton), 108
- The First Warning (Strindberg), 1296
- The First World (Osanaï), 1014
- The First World Insurrection Circus (Bread and Puppet Theater), 1088
- Fischer, Leck, 343
- Fischer, Margaret, 75
- Fischerová, Daniela, 455–456; Fantomina, 317; The Hour Between Dog and Wolf, 317; The Massage Table, 317; Princess T, 317
- Fishman (Guo), 571
- Fish-Skin Suit (Grace-Smith), 547
- Fish Stas and Vi (Gems), 412
- Fiske, Minnie Maddern, 912–913
- The Fist (Hilbert), 315
- A Fist in the Eye (Voskovec and Werich), 94
- Fitch, Clyde, 456–457, 634, 1397; Major André, 892; Nathan Hale, 892; The Truth, 1380
- Fitzball, Edward, 890, 891
- Fitzgerald, F. Scott, 763
- Five Arts Center, 862
- Five Arts Centre (Kuala Lumpur), 104
- Five Corners (Kokovkin), 1169
- Five Daughters at the Birthday Party (Gu), 256
- Five Evenings (Volodin), 1167
- Five Farces for Amateurs (Lunacharsky), 838
- Five Finger Exercise (Shaffer), 411, 1217
- Five in the Lake (Alrawi), 1029
- Five Lesbian Brothers, 457, 511, 1273
- Five O'Clock Tea (Howells), 634
- The Five Pillars Stand Shining Upright (Hassan), 591
- Five Plays from the Constitutional Revolution (Sā'edi), 695
- The Five Senses (Squarzina), 718
- Five Streams (Quraishi), 1029
- Fixtures (Thijs), 957
- Flag Day (Blessing), 166
- The Flag Is Waving (Schönherr), 82
- Flags (Paquet), 1076
- Flamingoes (Sowande), 24
- Flanagan, Hallie, 442, 1084
- Flanagan, William, 31
- Flare Path (Rattigan), 1120
- A Flash of a Golden Tooth (Matišić), 305
- A Flash of Lightning (Daly), 1397
- Flatbush Tosca (Fierstein), 450
- Flat Out Brown (Grace-Smith), 547
- Flaubert, Gustave, 474, 475
- The Flea (Zamyatin), 101, 1164
- A Flea in Her Ear (Feydeau), 449, 458, 476
- Fleck, John, 636, 1087
- Fleißer, Marieluise, 438, 458–459, 519, 522, 626, 782, 959, 1431; Purgatory in Ingolstadt, 519; Soldiers in Ingolstadt, 519
- Fleming, Margaret, 1242
- Flemish language drama, 140, 142, 143
- The Flemish People's Theater (Belgium), 526
- The Flies (Sartre), 459–460, 481, 967, 1056, 1189, 1369
- Flight (Bulgakov), 101, 205, 460, 928, 1164, 1277
- The Flight of the Crane (Istarú), 294
- The Flight Over the Ocean (Brecht), 807
- Flight to the West (Rice), 1137
- Flipflaps (Idris), 391
- Floating Island series (Machado), 845–846
- Floating Rhonda and the Glue Man (Ensler), 420
- The Floating World (Romeril), 1151
- the Flood, 1252
- The Flood (Berger), 927
- Flood (Grass), 549
- Flood (Pendovski), 845
- Floorshow (Monstrous Regiment), 919
- Florence (Childress), 249–250, 1407
- Florentino, Alberto: Cavort with Angels, 1052; Oli Iompan, 1052; The World is an Apple, 1052
- Florida (Buenos Aires), 88
- Flower and Sword (Ma), 258, 874
- Flower as Our Matchmaker (Wu), 1492
- Flower Drum Song (Hwang, librettist), 643, 1053
- Flowering Cherry (Bolt), 174
- The Flowering Peach (Odets), 989
- Flower of Sainthood (Valle-Inclán), 1416
- The Flower of the Palace of Han (adaptation of traditional Chinese), 254
- Flowers in the Dark (Inoue), 684
- Flowers of Distant Mountains (Xu), 1498
- Flowers of the Dead Red Sea (Thomas), 1350
- Flowers of Virtue (Connelly), 285
- Floyd S. Chalmers Award (Canada). See Chalmers Award (Canada)
- Fluxus (Germany), 239, 278, 584
- Flying Circus Project, 1006
- The Flying Dutchman (Heijermans), 603
- Flying on the Spot (Stefanovski), 845
- The Flying Wasp (O'Casey), 983
- Fo, Dario, 460–462, 718–719, 1118; Accidental Death of an Anarchist, 6; All House, Bed and Church, 444; Comic Mystery, 281–282; The Fourth Wall, 919
- F.O.B. (Hwang), 643
- Foco Novo (theater), 1089
- Focus (Miller), 904
- Fog (O'Neill), 1001
- Fointrainebleau (Els Joglars), 232
- Fokkema, Frouke, 957
- Földes, Imre, 639
- Folidrome, 485
- Folketætræt (Copenhagen), 344
- Folks in Bed (Tomás Angola), 1419
- folktales and folklore, 767, 1040, 1431
- folktales and folklore, plays and playwrights: Bezä, Bahram, 695; Family (Leow), 809; Ibsen, Henrik, 647; Into the Woods (Lapine), 815; Izumi Kyōka, 723; The Key (al-Ānī), 698; Kinoshita Junji, 767; Lochhead, Liz, 829; Luo Huaizhen, 839–840; Noer,

- Arifin C., 971; Rainis, 1115; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1140; The Skriker (Churchill), 1253; Tanvir, Habib, 1329; Terayama Shūji, 1334; The Wandering Nightingale (Nasirīān), 695; Yeats, William Butler, 703
- folktales and folklore, by country or region: Canada, 217; Estonia, 428; Germany, 1431; Hindi theater, 1117; Iceland, 652, 654; India, 665–671; Indonesia, 680, 1136; Ireland, 687, 701; Japan, 767, 1324; Latvia, 800, 802, 1115; Palestine, 1030, 1034; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1174
- Follies (Goldman), 814–815
- Following the Fleet (Byrne), 1455
- Follow My Leader (Rattigan), 1120
- Fondo Nacional para la Cultura y las Artes (FONCA), 923
- Fonlon-Nichols Prize, 966
- Fonson, Frantz, 141
- Fontana, Pia, 719
- Fontanne, Lynn, 1426
- Fonvizin, Denis, 1160
- The Fool* (Bahr), 82
- Fool for Love* (Shepard), 312, 462–463, 1233
- Fools (Simon), 1246
- The Fool Who Wins an Ass* (Hwang), 258, 644
- Foon, Dennis, 463–464
- Foote, Horton, 362, 464, 959, 1407, 1412
- Footfalls (Beckett), 133
- Foot Leg Factory (Çağan), 1386
- Foot-Newton, Lara, 102
- Footrot Flats (Hall), 578
- For a Yes or a No (Sarraute), 1188
- Forbidden City West (Chan), 238
- Forbidden Hymn (Osborne), 1016
- Forced Up Mount Liang (Yang), 465
- Force of Habit (Bernhard), 152
- for colored girls who have considered suicide/when the rainbow is enuf (Shange), 1218, 1410
- Ford, John, 985, 1125
- Forefathers' Eve (Wyspiański), 1493
- The Foreigner* (Dumas fils), 951
- The Foreigner* (Johst), 740
- The Foreigner* (Sánchez), 1183
- The Foreign Woman* (Sánchez), 61
- Foreman, Richard, 337, 424, 465–466, 467, 1037, 1088, 1454; Pandering to the Masses, 1057; Rhoda in Potatoland, 1057; Ontological Hysteric Theater, 990, 1413
- Forensic and the Navigators (Shepard), 1233
- Foreskin's Lament (McGee), 882–883, 962
- The Forest* (Ostrovsky), 351, 466, 1020, 1161, 1342
- Forest, Eva, 1191
- The Forest of the Wind* (Watanabe), 1444
- Forests (Mouawad), 932–933
- Forever (Ibsen, Árni), 655
- Forever Young (Akins), 30
- Forgách, András, 641
- Forget Herostratus (Gorin), 1168
- Forget Him (Fierstein), 451
- Forget the Drums (Diosdado), 348
- The Forgotten Man* (Hikmet), 1386
- Foriwa (Sutherland), 23, 1310
- formalism, 466–467, 899
- The Former One-on-One Basketball Champion* (Horovitz), 625
- For My Father, Who Failed to Die in the War (Tsuka), 1383
- For Myself (Ganguli), 505
- Fornes, Maria Irene, 467–469; The Danube, Mud, and Sarita, 310; Fefu and Her Friends, 442, 1058; The Successful Life of Three, 1409; Tango, 106; Tango Palace, 310; There! You Died, 106; Cruz, Migdalia, 308; epic theater, 1454; exiled, 310; gay and lesbian themes, 510; Hispanic drama, 1413; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; New Dramatists, 959; off-off-Broadway, 990; Signature Theatre, 1412; Women's Theater Council, 1087
- For Reasons That Remain Unclear (Crowley), 307
- Forsaken House (Guerrero), 1052
- A Forsaken Nook (Hirschbein), 1508
- For Saxophone (Treadwell), 1375
- For Services Rendered (Maugham), 406, 879
- Forssell, Lars, 469–470, 1313; The Sunday Promenade, 1306–1307
- Forster, Michelanne, 962
- The Forsworn City, or the Awakening of the Furies* (Cixous), 913
- The Forsyte Saga* (Galsworthy), 504
- Fort, Paul, 1318, 1319
- For the Sake of Happiness (Przybyszewska), 1079
- For This We Fight (Hughes), 637
- Fortinbras (Blessing), 167
- Fortoul, Vicente, 1418
- The Fortunate Election* (Kjær), 976
- Fortunatus and Cassandra (Sowerby), 1266
- Fortune, My Foe (Davies), 329
- Fortune and Men's Eyes* (Herbert), 217
- The Fortunes of Richard Mahoney* (Gow adaptation), 547
- Fortunes of War* (Bennett), 415
- 46th Street Theatre (New York), 447
- 45th Street Theatre (New York), 211
- 45 Seconds from Broadway (Simon), 1246
- The Forty Lounge Café* (Lyssiotis), 80
- Forty-Nine (Miller), 908
- 42nd Street (Stewart), 813
- Forughi, Abolhasan, 694
- Forum Theater, 172
- Forward One (Prichard), 77
- For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls (Durang), 379
- For Wiping Away the Tears (Salleh), 861
- Forzano, Giovacchino, 718
- Fosse, Jon, 365, 470–471, 977; The Name, 949
- The Fossil* (Sternheim), 1394
- Foster, Lynn, 77
- Foster, Paul, 106
- The Foster Father* (Xenopoulos), 1495
- Foteini Santri (Xenopoulos), 1495
- Foucault, Michel, 1058
- The Foundation* (Manuel Rivas), 1418
- 400 Kilometres (Taylor), 1331
- Four Baboons Adoring the Sun (Guare), 281
- Four Boxes (Bezā'i), 695
- The Four Brothers Aymon* (Closson), 142
- The Four Feathers* (Sheriff), 1236
- 4:48 Psychosis (Kane), 751
- Four Friends (Kramer), 778
- Four Friends (Tesich), 1336
- Four Grand Inventions (Yung), 1510
- The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse* (Jarry), 53
- Four Man Cartel, 479, 482–483
- The Four of Them* (Zapolska), 1513
- Four Pieces of Land (Vianna Filho), 1422
- Four Saints in Three Acts (Stein), 471, 916
- Four Seas Players (New York), 238
- Four Sides of the World* (Lahola), 1254

- 1400 (Hassan), 591
 Fourteen Hundred Thousand (Shepard), 1232
 Fourteen Red Huts (Platonov), 1165
 The Fourth Daughter (Wei), 1451
 Fourth Street Playhouse (New York), 989
 Fourth Studio, 927
 fourth wall, 52, 125, 159, 1229
 The Fourth Wall (Evreinov), 431
 The Fourth Wall (Gurney), 572
 The Fourth Wall (Milne), 406, 908
 The Fourth Wall (Rame and Fo), 919
 The Fourth Wall (Varela), 310
 The Fourth Wall (Yevreinov), 1163
 The Four Twins (Copi), 289
 Foxhunt (Mrožek), 934
 The Fox Hunt (Verga), 1421
 Foxi on Drama (Xiong), 1496
 Foxtrot (Steigerwald), 1278
 fragility, 1177
 Fragments (Albee), 32
 Fragrant Rice (Hong), 624
 Framework (Shotlander), 75
 France, Anatole: The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife, 742 France, 471–488. See also
 French language drama.
 19th century drama, 295, 314, 376; 20th century drama, 275–276, 283–284, 289, 376, 379; early–20th century drama, 268, 287; late–20th century drama, 267; absurdism, 211; avant-garde drama, 578; comedy, 281; dadism, 320; decentralization of French theater, 288; directing plays, 349; dramatic criticism, 359; dramatic structure, 365, 366, 376; dramaturgy, 369; farce, 288; Happenings, 584; Interwar drama, 1012–1013; melodrama, 349, 890; négritude movement, 235; occupation, 376; political drama, 379; post–World War II drama, 320; pre–World War II drama, 998; realism, 1124; romanticism, 1150–1151; stage design, 276; street theater, 584; symbolism, 269, 1173
 France, playwrights:
 Anouilh, Jean, 51; Antoine, André, 53; Audiberti, Jacques, 71; Camus, Albert, 211, 215; Cixous, Hélène, 267; Claudel, Paul, 268; Cocteau, Jean, 275–276, 1012; Copeau, Jacques, 287; Copi, 289; Dubillard, Roland, 376; Dumas fils, 295, 376; Duras, Marguerite, 379; Giraudoux, Jean, 998; Ionesco, Eugène, 689–691, 1149; Koltès, Bernard-Marie, 773–774; Lenormand, Henri-René, 808–809; Reza, Yasmina, 1135; Romain, Jules, 1147–1148; Rostand, Edmond, 314, 1154; Salacrou, Armand, 1181–1182; Sardou, Victorien, 1186–1187; Sarraute, Nathalie, 1188; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 283–284, 1188–1190; Visniec, Matei, 1150; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513; Zola, Émile, 1517; Zuckmayer, Carl, 1519
 Francesca da Rimini (D'Annunzio), 325, 716
 Francesca Primus Prize, 978
 Francheschi, Vittorio, 719
 Francis, J. O., 629
 Franco, Francisco, 1191, 1270–1271
 François, Alain, 1425
 Francophone. See French language drama
 Franco-Prussian War, 1186
 Franco's Bastard (Edwards), 389
 Frano's Luck (Włodzimierz), 1080
 Frank, Anne, 751
 Frank, Dimitri Frenkel, 957
 Frankenstein (Living Theatre), 828, 1086
 Frankie is O.K., Peggy is Fine and the House is Cool (Čičvák), 1255
 Frankland, Richard J., 79
 Franklin, Miles, 77
 Frank P. Graham Award, 557
 Frank Sinatra Centre (Nazareth), 1033
 Frank the Fifth: Opera of a Private Bank (Dürrenmatt), 380
 Fraser, Brad, 218–219, 488; Unidentified Human Remains and the True Nature of Love, 1395–1396
 Fraser, Toa, 962
 Frayn, Michael, 488–489; Copenhagen, 280, 288, 1059; Noises Off, 415; Voices Off, 280
 Freaky Pussy (Fierstein), 450
 Fréchette, Carole, 221
 Fred (Christian), 78
 Fred and Madge (Orton), 1013
 Free (Remigio), 1052
 Free Choice (Soya), 1267
 Freed, Donald, 353 freedom, 856
 Freedom (Ganguli), 505
 Freedom (Gil de Hermoso), 1418
 Freedom Boat Company (Riburesen, Japan), 992
 Freedom in Ndongo, 22
 Freedom of Expression Award, 420 freedom of speech, 804
 The Freedom of the City (Friel), 491
 Freedom Theatre, 1193
 Free Entry (Vitrac), 1308
 Free Game (Schnitzler), 1197
 Free Love (Tolstoy), 1363
 Freeman, David, 218, 489–490
 Free People (Coolen et al.), 956
 Free Ride (Thompson), 1354
 Free Stage (Berlin), 516, 517
 Free Stage (Japan), 155, 184, 393
 free theater, 392, 1086
 Free Theater (Japan), 726, 925, 1014, 1239
 Free Theatre (Toronto), 1514
 The Freethinker (Strindberg), 1295
 free will, 1219, 1253
 A Free Woman (Sándor), 1185
 The Free Zone (Grumberg), 565
 Freie Bühne (Berlin), 592, 1302, 1446
 Freie Volksbühne (West Berlin), 184, 521–524, 1076
 Freimond, Craig, 1265
 Freire, Roberto, 60
 Frejka, Jiří, 93–94
 Frelich, Phyllis, 887
 French, David, 218, 490; Jitters, 735–736
 French Guiana, 1272
 French language drama:
 Africa, 15, 24–25; Beckett, Samuel, 131; Belgium, 141; Canada, 216, 219–221; Crommelynck, Fernand, 305; Dadie, Bernard, 321; Tremblay, Michel, 34, 627
 The French Lieutenant's Woman (Pinter), 1068
 French Quarter, New Orleans, 1290
 French Revolution, 1104, 1197
 French Theater (Istanbul), 1384
 French Without Tears (Rattigan), 1119, 1120
 Frenz, Horst, 139
 Freud, Sigmund, and Freudian concepts: Barry, Philip, 124; Chekhov, Anton, 1204; influence on playwrights, 477, 479; The Jet of Blood (Artaud), 734; Oedipus complex, 1105; Oh, Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad (Kopit), 775; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1195,

- 1196; Sigmund Freud in Search of Chinese Matter and Mind (Yung), 1510; Strange Interlude (O'Neill), 1287; surrealism, 1307; Who Am I? (Soya), 1267; Wolf-man (Egloff's adaptation), 390
- Freud's Theory of Dreams (Cwojdzinski), 1080
- Freyer, Achim, 1048
- Freytag, Gustav, 365
- Frida: The Story of Frida Kahlo (Cruz), 308
- Friday (Claus), 269
- Friday (Kranz), 956
- Friedlander, Mira, 179
- Friedmann, Arje. See Lahola, Leopold
- Friel, Brian, 449–450, 490–491, 704–707, 986; Dancing at Lughnasa, 450, 1130; Philadelphia, Here I Come!, 1049, 1458; Translations, 450, 1373
- Friends (Abe), 2, 491–492, 1240
- Friends and Years (Zorin), 1167
- friendship, 1135
- Friendship Textile Drama Group (Tanganyika), 18
- A Friend's Story (Tendulkar), 1333
- Fringe First Award (Edinburgh): Brooks, Daniel, 202; Freeman, David, 489; Lochhead, Liz, 873–874; Mtwā, Percy, 1264; Ngema, Mbongeni, 1264; Tanvir, Habib, 240; Thiyam, 64; Thiyam, Ratan, 1349
- fringe theater, 1152
- Frisch, Max, 6, 492–494, 521; Andorra, 44, 1317; The Firebugs: A Learning-Play Without a Lesson, 807, 1317, 1372; The Great Wall of China, 1317
- Frith, Bob, 625
- Frivolity and False Piety (Halle-Wolfssohn), 1506
- Frog Experimental Troupe (China), 91
- Frogs Play (Ma), 874
- Frolov, Vladimir, 1172
- From Choices to Chocolate (Oshodi), 1017
- From Midnight to Dawn (Pedrero), 1040
- From Morning to Midnight (Kaiser), 108, 433, 494, 518, 575, 747, 940
- From Ritual to Drama (Turner), 1044
- From the Life of Kamikaze (Shipenko), 1168
- From the Life of the Dead Soul (Parulski), 824
- From the Memoirs of Pontius Pilate (Bentley), 147
- From the Surface to the Depths (Brau), 1106
- From Zia with Love (Soyinka), 1267
- Front, Sydney, 75
- Fronteras Americanas: American Borders (Verdecchia), 1420
- frontier drama, 776, 1397
- The Front Page (Hecht and MacArthur), 494–495, 756, 1401
- Front Porch. See Picnic (Inge)
- Front Porch (Hughes), 637
- The Front Room Boys (Buzo), 74
- Front Room Theater Guild, 445
- Frontwomen (Parry), 964
- Frou-Frou (Halévy and Meilhac), 474
- The Fruits of Enlightenment (Tolstoy), 1161, 1363
- Fruits of the Earth (Gide), 530
- Fry, Christopher, 327, 359, 495–496, 984; The Lady's Not for Burning, 280, 408, 793, 1128, 1130; A Phoenix Too Frequent, 408; A Sleep of Prisoners, 408, 1130; Venus Observed, 408
- FTP. See Federal Theatre Project
- Fuchs, Elinor, 337
- Fuchs, Georg, 1172
- Fuenmayor, Angel, 1418
- Fuenteovejuna (de Vega), 1340
- Fuentes de Arcos, Antonio, 61
- Fugard, Athol, 18, 347, 450, 496–497, 1411; The Blood Knot, 170, 1263; The Island, 101, 1263; A Lesson from Aloes, 1263–1264; "Master Harold" . . . and the Boys, 876–877, 1263–1264; My Children! My Africa!, 1264; A Place with the Pigs, 1264; Playland, 1264; Sizwe Bansi Is Dead, 1252, 1263
- The Fugitive (Betti), 156
- The Fugitive (Galsworthy), 406
- The Fugitive (Hochwälder), 86
- The Fugitive Kind (Williams), 1472, 1475
- Fugitives (Gao), 506
- Fugue (Munro), 939
- Fujimori Seikichi, 727
- Fujisawa Civic Theatre (Japan), 1020
- Fukuda Tsuneari, 497
- Fukuda Yoshiyuki, 48, 497–498
- Fulfillment (Moberg), 1312
- Fuller, William Henry, 216
- Fullerton Street (Wilson), 1480
- The Full Monty (McNally), 815
- Full Moon (Williams), 1471
- Fulton Theatre (New York), 4, 419
- fumisme, 1042
- Funahashi Seichi, 621, 1241
- fundamentalism, 545. See also religion and religious drama
- funding cuts, 1084
- Funeral Games (Orton), 1013
- Funeral in Teruel (Huidobro), 310
- Funny Girl (Lennart), 751
- Funnyhouse of a Negro (Kennedy), 106, 761, 990, 1410
- Funny Man (Stoppard), 1282
- The Funny Old Man (Różewicz), 1157
- A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (Gelbart and Shevelove), 814
- The Furies (Ringwood), 1140
- Furious Antigone (Gambaro), 62
- The Furnishings (Louvet), 143
- Furth, George, 814
- Furuhashi Teiji, 498–499
- Fusco, Coco, 87, 585, 686, 1043
- Füst, Milán, 639
- The Futile Heroes (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- Futon and Daruma (Iwamatsu), 722
- futurism, 499–501; apocalypse, 54; avant-garde drama, 107–109; dadaism, 319; happenings and intermedia, 584; Italian, 107, 499–501, 716–719, 871–872, 916; Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso, 477; Russian, 93, 99, 880
- Futurist Synthetic Theatre (Marinetti et al.), 871
- Futz (Owens), 1026, 1410
- Fuyuhiko and the Good Luck Cat (Makino), 860
- Gaboriau, Linda, 179
- Gabri and the Women (Pinski), 1508
- Gabriel Núñez, José, 1419
- Gaekwad, Texas, 674
- Gafary, Farrokh, 696
- A Gaggle of Saints (LaBute), 791
- Gagini, Carlos, 293
- Gagnon, Madeleine, 180
- Gaiety Theatre (Dublin), 699, 985
- Gaiety Theatre (Manchester), 628
- Gajvi, Premanand, 674
- Galczyński, Konstanty Ildefons: Little Theatre of the Green Goose, 1081
- Gale, Zona, 445, 503; Miss Lulu Bett, 912
- Galich, Aleksandr, 1167
- Galicía, 1506
- Galicía (Krlježa), 781
- Galileo (Brecht), 1129
- Galileo Galilei, 1235, 1316

- Galin, Aleksandr, 1169
 Gallagher, Jodi, 78
 Gall and Sword Piece (Cao), 223
 Gallasch, Keithe, 75
 Gallego, Teotiste, 1419
 Gallegos, Daniel, 294
 Gallegos, Rómulo, 1418, 1419
 The Galley Slave (Campbell), 214
 Gallipoli (Amamus), 962
 Gallo, Carlos Schaeffer, 61
 Gallows Humor (Richardson), 281, 1138, 1408
 Galsworthy, John, 329, 503–504; Exiled, 406; The Fugitive, 406; Loyalties, 836; The Pigeon, 405; The Silver Box, 406; The Skin Game, 406; Strife, 406; Windows, 406
 Galt, John, 1200
 Gambaro, Griselda, 351, 504–505, 563, 1009; Bad Blood, 62; The Blunder, 89; Furious Antigone, 62; Information for Foreigners, 681–682; The Siamese Twins, 89; True Envy, 62
 The Gambler (Stoppard), 1282
 The Gamblers (al-Ānī), 698
 gambling, 1241
 The Gambling House (Bergman), 148
 The Game (Romero), 1419
 The Game of Chess (Giacosa), 528
 The Game of Executioner's Block (Olesha), 995
 A Game of Inches (Griffiths and Balcovske), 561
 The Game of Life (Hamsun), 505, 579
 Games (Klíma), 317
 Games in the Back Yard (Mazya), 712
 Gance, Abel, 67
 Gandrik Theater (Indonesia), 103
 The Gang's All Here (Crouse and Hammerstein), 821
 The Gang's All Here (Lawrence and Lee), 804
 Gangsters (Maponya), 101, 1264
 Ganguli, Usha, 505–506, 676; Rudali, 673, 1157–1158
 Ganguly, Gobindo, 387 gang warfare, 814
 The Gaol Gate (Gregory), 559
 Gaon ka Naam Sasural, Mor Naam Damad (Tanvir), 1330
 Gao Xingjian, 90, 506–507, 571; Bus Stop, 255; Wild Man, 255
 Garaczi, László, 641
 Garage Sale (Ringwood), 1140
 Garage Theater (China), 91
 Garbage, the City and Death (Fassbinder), 438, 522
 Garbea, Horia, 1150
 Garbo (Elkunchwar), 396
 Garbo, Greta, 1071
 Garborg, Arne, 976
 García Lorca, Federico, 507–508; Andalucía trilogy, 630; Blood Wedding, 109, 171–172, 417, 1270, 1505; The House of Bernarda Alba, 629–630, 1270, 1283–1284; Mariana Peneda, 349; Play without a Title, 109; The Public, 109; Yerma, 1270, 1504–1505; Diosdado, Ana, 349; dramaturg, 369; influence on Kambanellis, 750; influence on Kennedy, 763; La Barraca, 369, 1339; Living Theatre, 1408; The Lorca Play (Albee), 32; off-Broadway theater, 989; Spanish Civil War, 1271; theater of urgency, 1339
 García Velloso, Enrique, 62
 Gardel, Julia Sánchez, 61
 Gardell, Jonas, 1313
 Garden District (Williams), 1302
 Gardenia Terrace (Wilson), 423
 Garden in Autumn (Raznovich), 1122–1123
 A Garden Party (Behan), 138
 The Garden Party (Havel), 316, 595, 894
 The Garden Party (Steinsson), 655
 Gardner, Helen, 436
 Garland, Alison, 915
 Garland, Hamlin, 609, 1398
 Garland for a Hoar Head (Arden), 59
 Garneau, Michel, 220
 Garnier, José Fabio, 293
 Garrick Club Award, 1065
 Garrick Theater (New York), 599, 661, 1179, 1345
 Garrick Theatre (Chicago), 551, 922
 Garrick Theatre (Detroit), 178
 Garro, Elena, 508–509, 897; The Lady on Her Balcony, 792–793
 The Garroter (Howells), 634
 Garson, Barbara: Macbird!, 1087
 Gary's House (Oswald), 73
 Gas (Kaiser), 518
 Gascon-Thomas Award, 943
 The Gas Heart (Tzara), 108
 gaslight, 400, 1342
 Gas Masks (Tretyakov), 1164, 1377
 Gassner, John, 371, 1183, 1406
 Gas Station Angel (Thomas), 1351
 Gas trilogy (Kaiser), 54, 518, 747
 Gate, 851
 Gatecrashers: Comedy (Hein), 604
 Gate Theatre (Dublin), 702–703, 705, 706, 751, 1049
 Gatti, Armand, 484, 509; The Second Life of the Tatenberg Camp, 486 gauchesque drama, 61, 1183
 A Gauntlet (Björnson), 163
 Gautier, Théophile, 87
 Gaveau, Claude, 220
 Gavlovski, Johnny, 1419
 Gavran, Miro, 305
 Gay, John, 1354
 gay and lesbian drama, 509–511. See also homosexuality.
 Australia, 75, 80; Buddies in Bad Times, 218; Canada, 217, 218, 220; Cold War drama, 1407; decriminalization, 410; “dyke noir,” 636; feminist themes, 446; Five Lesbian Brothers, 457; identity politics, 1087; India, 672; off-off-Broadway, 1410; performance art, 1043; queer theater, 1410; Queer theory, 1058; Split Britches, 1273; United States, 1409 gay and lesbian drama, plays and playwrights: Albee, Edward, 1356; Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes; Part One: Millenium Approaches (Kushner), 46, 1130; Barnes, Djuna, 122; Bennett, Alan, 615; Bent (Sherman), 146; The Boys in the Band (Crowley), 307; Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Williams), 233; The Children's Hour (Hellman), 248, 1403; Cocteau, Jean, 275–276; Come Out (Sakate), 1180; Copi, 289; Coward, Noël, 295–301, 406, 598; Crowley, Mart, 306–307; Dattani, Mahesh, 328, 996; The Death and Resurrection of Mr. Roche (Kilroy), 766; Design for Living (Coward), 345; Fraser, Brad, 218, 1395; Gilbert, Sky, 218, 530–531; Gustav III (Strindberg), 1297; Handbag (Ravenhill), 1121; Hard Fruit (Cartwright), 229; Herbert, John, 217; The Homosexual: or, The Difficulty of Expressing Oneself (Copi), 289; Hughes, Holly, 636; The Intelligent Homosexual's Guide to Capitalism and Socialism with a Key to the Scriptures (Kushner), 788; The Invention of Love (Stoppard), 688; Isherwood,

- Christopher, 708; Joaquin, Nick, 736; Just Say No (Kramer), 778; Kelly, George, 760; Kramer, Larry, 778; Kushner, Tony, 786; Kuzmin, Mikhail, 1163; Lilies (Bouchard), 819; Longtime Companion (Lucas), 837; Loot (Orton), 833; Marquise (Coward), 300; Meeting Place (Lord), 834; Mother Clap's Molly House (Ravenhill), 1121; My Beautiful Laundrette (Kureishi), 786; Nagy, Phyllis, 948; The Night of the Tribades (Enquist), 969; Observe the Sons of Ulster Marching Towards the Somme (McGuinness), 981; The Oginski Polonaise (Kolyada), 1169; On a Muggy Night in Mumbai (Dattani), 328, 996; Orton, Joe, 1013; Osborne, John, 1016–1017; Parry, Lora, 964; Passing By (Sherman), 1235; Perestroika (Kushner), 787; Plasticene (Sigarev), 1169; Post-Mortem (Coward), 300–301; Rattigan, Terence, 337, 409; Renée, 1132; The Sacrament (Claus), 269; Semi-Monde (Coward), 300; Sexual Perversity in Chicago (Mamet), 862–863, 1215–1216; Sherman, Martin, 1235; Slavs! Thinking About the Longstanding Problems of Virtue and Happiness (Kushner), 788; The Slingshot (Kolyada), 1169; A Song at Twilight (Coward), 1259; Spring Awakening (Wedekind), 1274; A Streetcar Named Desire (Williams), 1290; Suddenly Last Summer (Williams), 1302; Tendulkar, Vijay, 1333; Tremblay, Michel, 220, 627–628; Vogel, Paula, 1428; Volokhov, Mikhail, 1170; Wilson, Lanford, 1410; Yew, Chay, 1248
- Gay and Lesbian Mardi Gras (Sydney, Australia), 75
- The Gayden Chronicles* (Cook), 287
- The Gay Divorcee* (Fischer), 75
- The Gay Lord Quex* (Pinero), 1064
- Gay Sweatshop (London), 510, 948, 1273, 1440
- Gaza. See occupation, military
- Gazooka: A Rhondda Reminiscence* (Thomas), 1351
- GCTC. See Great Canadian Theatre Company
- Geary, David, 511–512
- The Gecko* (Maraini), 866
- Gedikpaşa Theater (Turkey), 1384
- Geertz, Clifford, 1044
- Geez (Wijaya), 679
- geggies (Scotland), 1200
- Gehenna Night* (Tuomarila), 454
- geisha, 723
- The Geisha and the Knight* (Kawakami), 758
- geju. See song drama
- Gekidan Shinpa (Japan), 1242
- Gekisaku, 924
- Gelbart, Larry, 814
- Gelber, Jack, 512, 729, 1408; The Connection, 106, 353, 828, 990
- Gelgamesh (Asena), 1387
- Gélinas, Gratien, 220
- Gelman, Aleksandr, 954, 1168, 1169
- Gémier, Fermin, 728
- Gemini (Innaurato), 510, 683–684, 1409
- Gemini Award (Canada), 463, 560–561, 820
- Gem of the Ocean* (Bullins), 362
- Gem of the Ocean* (Wilson), 1480–1481
- Gems, Pam: Camille, 416; Dusa, 412; Fish Stas and Vi, 412; Loving Women, 412, 416
- gendai geki. See history plays
- gender identity, 645, 1121
- gender in drama, 75–76, 189, 444–447, 511–512, 964, 1425
- Gene, Juan Carlos, 62
- General Administration of Theatre and Spectacle (Spain), 1271
- General Confessions* (Davies), 330
- The General Dies at Dawn* (Odets), 988
- The General from America* (Nelson), 954
- General Society of Authors and Editors (Spain), 924
- A Generation* (Unruh), 518
- generational conflict, 775, 1183, 1254, 1258
- Generation of 1982, 1184
- Generation of '98 (Spain), 388, 1270
- género chico. See short plays
- Genesis (Meged), 95
- Genet, Jean, 512–515; The Balcony, 116, 484, 1057; The Blacks, 105–106, 165, 484–485; Death Watch, 1057; The Maids, 484, 510, 858; The Screens, 484, 1203–1204; absurdism, 5; Choukri, Mohamed, 261; Cocteau, Jean, 276; deconstruction, 337; farce, 438; introduced, 483; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; nouveau théâtre, 483; off-Broadway theater, 990; Orton, Joe, 1013; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 1190; surrealism, 1308
- Geneva (Shaw), 1227
- Genghis Khan (Bauchau), 143
- Gengxin Experimental Theater (Taiwan), 808
- Genie Award, 179
- Gentile, Guillermo, 89
- Gentle Jack* (Bolt), 174
- Gentlemen Please* (Lavery), 919
- Gentlewoman* (Lawson), 1403
- Geography and Love* (Björnson), 163, 976
- Geography and Plays* (Stein), 915–916
- Geography of a Horse Dreamer* (Shepard), 1233
- Georg Büchner Prize, 937
- George, Henry, 1223
- George, Nazli, 1265
- George, Stefan, 1261
- George and the Mad Ad-Man* (Bland), 961
- George Devine Award, 126, 786, 877, 1027, 1395
- George II, Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, 349–350, 368
- George Jean Nathan Award, 682
- George Washington Slept Here* (Kaufman and Hart), 588
- Georgia (Shearer), 78
- Gerhart Hauptmann Prize, 755
- Germaine, Jean-Claude, 220; Duigidi Duigidi Ha Ha Ha!, 1354
- German Democratic Republic's National Prize, 937
- Germania Death in Berlin* (Müller), 55, 937–938
- Germanicus (Van Wyke Louw), 1262
- Germanis 3: Ghosts at Dead Man* (Müller), 937–938
- German language drama, 54, 151, 1315, 1318
- German Notebook* (Öngören), 1387
- The Germans* (Kruczkowski), 1256
- Germany, 515–525; 20th century drama, 578, 580, 617, 991; early–20th century drama, 589; avant-garde drama, 578; boulevard comedy, 589; bourgeois comedy, 1393; bourgeois tragedy, 594; censorship, 589; comedy, 593; dadism, 319; deconstruction, 581; dialogue, 365; directing plays, 349; documentary

- Germany (continued)
 drama, 617, 991;
 dramaturgy, 349, 367–370,
 936–938; dress codes, 627;
 epic theater, 991;
 expressionism, 589; fin de siècle drama, 385; four key positions in theaters of,
 368; Happenings, 584;
 Interwar drama, 374, 626;
 learning plays (Lehrstücke),
 807; Lutheranism, 1109;
 Merz movement, 319–320;
 moral institution, 617, 991;
 Mother Wolff, as national figure, 593; naturalism,
 592–594; New German
 Cinema, 438; new realism,
 580; political theater, 344;
 postmodernism, 581;
 post–World War II drama,
 617, 991; pre–World War I drama, 1393; realism,
 349–350; Reformation,
 1190; satire, 281; secular pulpit, 617; socialist realism, 523–524, 1256;
 Sprechstück (language play),
 580, 991; Volksstück, 626–
 627; Weimar, as literary center, 367; Weimar
 Republic, 191, 517–519
- Germany, plays and playwrights: Brahm, Otto,
 184; Brecht, Bertolt, 190,
 234, 374; Bronnen, Arnolt,
 201; The Devil and the Good
Lord (Sartre), 1190;
 Handke, Peter, 580, 991;
 Hasenclever, Walter, 589;
 Hauptmann, Gerhart, 591;
 Hochhuth, Rolf, 617;
 Ibsen, Henrik, 651; The Joy of Living (Sudermann),
 1303; Kaiser, Georg, 747–
 748; Kipphardt, Heiner,
 768–769; Kornfeld, Paul,
 776–777; Kroetz, Franz
 Xaver, 782–783; Loher,
 Dea, 830; Marat/Sade
 (Weiss), 867; Müller,
 Heiner, 578; Reinhardt,
 Max, 1127; The Resistible
Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht),
 1133–1134; Sorge,
 Reinhard Johannes, 1261–
 1262; Spring Awakening
 (Wedekind), 1274;
 Sternheim, Carl, 1279–
 1280; Strauss, Botho,
 1288–1289; Sudermann,
 Hermann, 1302–1303
 Germinie Lacerteux (Goncourt),
 475 gerontophilia, 1211
 Gerritsen, Esther, 957
 Gershwin, George, 611–612,
 756, 812, 1092
 Gershwin, Ira, 756, 812,
 1092, 1402
 Gertrud (Söderberg), 1312
 Gertrude—The Cry (Barker), 122
 Gesamtkunstwerk, 1127
 Gesher Theatre (Israel), 97
 Get Him! (Kopkov), 1165
 Getting Married (Shaw), 1225, 1226
 Getting Out (Norman), 974,
 1409
 The Gettysburg Sound Bite
 (Tally), 1327
 Getty Scholar, 947
 Get Up and Dance (Kelly), 79
 Geydeau, Georges, 437
 Géza-Boy (Háy), 641
 Ghaffari, Mohammad
 Bāgher, 696
 Ghana, 1, 23, 28, 761,
 1309–1310
 Ghana Drama Studio, 1310
 Ghana Experimental Theatre
 Company, 1309
 Ghana Society of Writers,
 1309
 Ghashiram Kotwal (Tendulkar),
 525–526, 1333
 Ghelderode, Michel de, 141,
 142, 484, 526
 Ghetto (Heijermans), 603
 Ghetto (Sobol), 96
 Ghosh, Girish Chandra, 666–
 667, 670
 The Ghost Manufacturer (Arlt),
 62
 Ghost Rite (Red Mole), 962
 ghosts, 799, 1236, 1503, 1504
 Ghosts (Ibsen), 526–527; dramatic cycle, 363; family drama, 650; Free Stage
 (theater troupe), 184;
 Hauptmann, Gerhart, 592;
 Independent Theatre
 Society (ITS), 402; Italian drama, 715; naturalism,
 950; problem play, 1102;
 realism, 399; Reinhardt,
 Max, 1127; set design,
 1276; social play, 377;
 Synge, John Millington,
 1321; tragedy, 1370
 The Ghosts Are Here (Abe), 2
 The Ghosts of the Free (al-Guzi), 1031
 The Ghost Sonata (Strindberg),
 107, 236–237, 527–528,
 1297, 1298, 1312, 1370
 The Ghosts Trilogy (Balodis),
 119
 Giacometti, Paolo, 714
 Giacosa, Giuseppe, 528–529;
Sad Loves, 714
 Gialamas, Asimakis, 556
 Giannakopoulos, Xristos, 556
 The Giant Baby (Déry), 93,
 640
 Giboyer's Son (Augier), 473
 Gibson, Harry, 1372
 Gibson, Mel, 1201
 Gibson, Melodie, 79
 Gibson, William, 959, 1407 gidayū, 63
 Gide, André, 476, 529–530
 Gielgud, Sir John, 7, 404
 Giese, Therese, 1426
 Giffiths, Trevor, 280
 Gift of a Daughter (Tendulkar),
 1333
 The Gift of the Wise Bees
 (Sologub), 1174
 A Gift of Time (Kanin), 751
 The Gigli Concert (Murphy),
 706, 942
 Gikuyu language (Kenya),
 965
 Gila (Medoff), 887
 Gilbert, Keven, 79
 Gilbert, Schuyler Lee, Jr.. See
 Gilbert, Sky
 Gilbert, Sky, 218, 530–531
 Gilbert, William Schwenk,
 349, 531, 661; Engaged, 402;
Patience, 400
 Gil de Hermoso, Virginia,
 1418
 Gilgamesh, 697, 698
 Gill, Brendan, 1111, 1229
 Gillette, William, 634, 1397–
 1398; Secret Service, 366,
 598, 891, 1208
 Gilman, Richard, 371
 Gilpin Players (Cleveland),
 826
 Gimba (Guarnieri), 567–568
 Giménez, Carlos, 1419
 Ginand, Rafael, 1418
 The Gingerbread Lady (Simon),
 1246
 The Gingham Dog (Wilson),
 1481
 Gink, Daniil, 1169
 Ginzburg, Natalia, 532–533
 Giordano, Umberto, 714
 Giore of the Five Names
 (Maleski), 844
 Giovanni Tenorio (Maraini),
 866
 Gippius, Zinaida, 446, 1163,
 1174
 Giraudoux, Jean, 479, 533–
 535, 989, 1210, 1243;
Ondine, 998; Siegfried, 480;
Tiger at the Gates, 480; The
Trojan War Will Not Take Place, 480, 1369, 1379
 Girl 6 (Parks), 1037
 Girl Bar (Nagy), 948
 The Girl I Left Behind Me
 (Belasco), 140
 The Girl in Montréal (Forssell),
 469
 The Girl of the Golden West
 (Belasco), 140, 535, 891,
 892, 1397
 Girl of the Republic (Baydur),
 1387
 Girls and Boys (Pinero), 1063
 The Girls in the Gang (Roby and Storey), 1286

- A Girl Tricked into Amorous Relations (Guan), 1497
- The Girl Who Cut Flowers (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 626
- The Girl Who Killed to Save (Dhlomo), 1262
- Girl Who Loved Her Horses (Taylor), 1331
- The Girl Who Saw Everything (De Groen), 340
- The Girl with Cut-Off Hands (Quillard), 1319
- A Girl with Eyelids (Watanabe), 1444
- The Girl with the Green Eyes (Fitch), 456
- The Giveaway (Jellicoe), 731
- Give Me Your Answer, Do! (Friel), 491
- Gjuzel, Bogomil, 845
- The Glace Bay Miners' Museum (Lill), 820
- Gladilin, Pyotr, 1170
- Glamour (Williams), 1471
- Glasgow Citizens' Theatre, 199
- Glasgow Repertory Theatre, 199, 404
- glasnost, 429
- Glaspell, Susan, 445, 535–536, 1399–1400; Alison's House, 36, 1378; Bernice, 1378; Provincetown Players, 282, 371, 1001; Trifles, 105, 1378
- The Glass Ball (Salacrou), 734, 1181, 1308
- Glasshouse (Fatima), 347
- Glasshouse (Page), 1027
- The Glass Menagerie (Williams), 213, 354, 536–537, 682, 1304, 1371, 1406, 1472–1473, 1476, 1516
- The Glass Mermaid (Learner), 78
- Glass Shattered Through Time (Casas), 229
- A Glassworks Fairy Tale, 593
- Glembay trilogy (Krlęža), 781
- Glengarry Glen Ross (Mamet), 41, 537–538, 862, 863, 995
- Glenn (Young), 1510
- Glide Time (Hall), 578
- The Glines (New York), 510, 1087
- Glinskis, Juozas, 824
- Glissando on an Empty Harp (Rowlands), 1155
- Global Interest (Kroetz), 782
- globalization, 559–560, 799, 1317
- The Global March (Sovanna Phum), 212
- The Global Soul—the Buddha Project (Ong), 1006
- global theater, 1057
- Globe Theatre (Boston), 295
- Globe Theatre (Dunedin, NZ), 961
- Globe Theatre (London), 879, 1134, 1381
- Gloria (Marinković), 304
- Gloriana (Bronnen), 201
- Glorious Ruins (Lord), 834
- The Glorious Twelfth (Storey), 1286
- Gloucester Pageant (MacKaye), 848
- Gloucester Stage Company (Massachusetts), 625
- Gloudon, Barbara, 417
- Glover, Sue, 538–539
- The Glow (al-Banhawi), 392
- Glowacki, Janusz, 1082
- Glück auf (Heijermans), 603
- The Gnädiges Fräulein (Williams), 1475
- Gnedich, Nikolai, 1163
- Gnedich, Pyotr, 1161
- The Goat (Forssell), 469
- The Goat, or Who Is Sylvia? (Albee), 33
- Go Away, Go Away (Kolyada), 1169
- The Go-Between (Pinter), 1068
- God, Emperor, Peasant (Háy), 640
- God, existence of, 1217
- God, fear of, 1258
- God, Goddess. See also religion and religious drama
- God, Man, and Devil (Brecht), 543
- God, Man, and Devil (Gordin), 1507
- The God Botherers (Bean), 126
- Godefroid de Bouillon (Closson), 142
- The God of Mammon (Kitzberg), 428
- God of Vengeance (Asch), 509
- The Gods Are Not to Blame (Rotimi), 18, 24
- God's Favorite (Simon), 1246
- God's Forgotten (Dirk-Uys), 102
- The Gods Grown Old (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
- God's Heart (Lucas), 837
- Gods of Lightning (Anderson and Nickerson), 1401
- God's Orchid (Bergman), 1314
- God's Own Clowns (Eidem), 977
- Godspell, 1130
- God's Time is the Best (Sutherland), 1310
- Godzilla (Ohasi), 992
- Goering, Reinhard, 518
- Góes, Moacyr, 188
- Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von, 1259, 1289, 1315; Faust, 649, 828, 838, 1055, 1115, 1127; Proserpina, 918
- Goffman, Erving: The Presentation of Self in Everyday Life, 1044
- Gogol, Nikolai, 765, 1209, 1304; The Inspector General, 1160; The Overcoat, 390
- Goh Lay Kuan, 104
- Goh Poh Seng, 1247
- Goin' a Buffalo (Bullins), 729, 1410
- The Going (Saluri), 429
- Going Back (Millán), 310
- Going Down to Marrakech (Alonso de Santos), 1271
- Going Home (De Groen), 339
- Gold (O'Neill), 1002
- Goldberg, Lea, 95
- Gold Diggers (Aleichem), 1507
- The Golden Age (Gurney), 572
- The Golden Age (Nowra), 979
- The Golden Ass (Suspect Culture), 1309
- Goldenberg, Jorge, 61
- Golden Boy (Odets), 539, 564, 988, 1402
- The Golden Calf (Jotuni), 453
- Golden Chain (Abad), 1052
- The Golden Chain (Peretz), 1507
- Golden Child (Hwang), 643
- Golden Dragon and Mayfly (Luo), 256, 839
- The Golden Fleece (Przybyszewska), 1079
- Goldenfodem, Avrom. See Goldfaden, Avrom
- The Golden Gate (Stefánsson), 654
- Golden Girls (Page), 1027
- Golden Heads (Claudel), 477
- Golden Lion Award, Venice Film Festival, 1152, 1283
- Golden Mandalay Troupe (Burma), 209
- The Golden Oldies (Hewett), 610
- Golden Palm Award, 1232
- The Golden Serpent (Nasiriān), 695
- Golden Sheaf Award, 820
- The Golden Spire (Warekar), 667
- The Golden Steed (Rainis), 1115
- Golden Theatre (New York), 537
- The Golden Years (Miller), 904
- Goldfaden, Avrom, 539–540, 1149, 1505, 1506; Bar Kokhba, 929; Shulamis, 929; The Sorceress, 928
- Goldfish (Field), 851
- Goldflam, Arnošt, 317
- Goldman, Emma, 360, 613
- Goldman, James, 814
- Goldman, Max. See Reinhardt, Max
- Gold Medal (American Academy of Arts and Letters), 1232
- The Gold of Midas (Dilmen), 1387
- Goldoni, Carlo, 419, 529, 555, 714, 715, 717, 718
- The Gold Piece (Hughes), 636
- Goldsmith, Oliver, 699
- Gold Through the Trees (Childress), 249

- The Golem (Leivick), 1508
 Golemanov (Kostov), 206
 gölge oyunu (shadow play), 1384
 Golgota (Krléža), 781
 Goll, Yvan, 108, 540–541; Methuselah, 364
 Golovin, Aleksandr, 1172
 The Golovlyovs (Saltykov-Shchedrin), 928
 Gombár, Jozef, 1255
 Gombrowicz, Witold, 5, 541–542; Ivona, 1081; The Marriage, 281, 1081; Operetta, 1081; Princess of Burgundia, 1081
 Gomes dos Santos, Joaquim Heliodoro, 187
 Gomez, Marga, 511
 Gómez Obregón, Jesús, 1419
 Gómez-Peña, Guillermo, 87, 686, 1042
 Goncourt, Edmond, 474; Germinie Lacerteux, 475; Henriette Maréchal, 475
 Gondla (Gumilyov), 1163
 The Gondoliers (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
 Gone Away (Rattigan), 1119
 Gone With the Wind (Howard), 632
 González, Gloria, 310
 González, Lydia Milagros, 1107
 González Caballero de Castillo Ledón, Amalia, 344
 González-González, Ramiro, 227
 González Rincones, Salustio, 1418
 The Good and Faithful Servant (Orton), 1013
 Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Sherriff), 1236
 Goodbye, Night! (Watanabe), 1444
 The Goodbye Girl (Simon), 1246
 The Good Companions (Priestley), 1099
 The Good Doctor (Simon), 1246
 Good Heavens! (Hwang), 644
 Good Lord's Train (Louvét), 143
 Good Luck! (Rozov), 1166
 Goodman, Paul, 1408
 Goodman Theatre (Chicago), 40, 537, 954
 A Good Match (Guitry), 476
 The Good-Natured Ones (Zorin), 1167
 Good Night, Foxes (Rusnák), 1254
 Good Night Desdemona (Good Morning Juliet) (MacDonald), 542–543, 843
 The Good Song (Kohout), 316 good vs. evil, 71, 794, 859–860, 889–893, 945
 Goodwill (Sabuncu), 1386
 Good Will Hunting, 901
 The Good Woman, Bad Woman (Wei), 1451
 The Good Woman of Setzuan (Brecht), 543; Abdallah's reworking, 1; Parks, Suzan-Lori, 1037; political drama, 194, 841, 1317; Schauspielhaus, 520; Tanvir, Habib, 1329; tragicomedy, 1372
 Good Works (Enright), 420
 Goona Goona (Terry), 1336
 Go Out Into the Streets (Terayama), 1334
 Gopie, Rajesh, 1265
 Gorbachev, Mikhail, 429
 Gordin, Jacob, 543–544, 1507
 Gordon, Lyndall, 436
 Gordon, Ruth, 751
 Gorée (Manaka), 1265
 Gorelik, Mordecai, 1406
 Gorenstein, Friedrich, 1169
 Görgey, Gábor, 640
 Gorin, Grigory, 1168
 Gorky, Maksim, 544–546; Enemies, 590, 927; The Lower Depths, 350, 835–836, 1014; Summerfolk, 1305–1306; amplification, 382; Andreev, Leonid, 817; Denison, Merrill, 341; Efros, Nikolai, 1171; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; Gordin, Jacob, 1507; influenced by Chekhov, 1371; Kohout, Pavel, 317; Moscow Art Theatre and Studios, 1162; O'Neill, Eugene, 1000; set design, 1172; socialist realism, 1256, 1257; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1277
 Gorky Academic Art Theatre. See Moscow Art Theatre and Studios
 Gorman, Clem, 75
 Gorodish: The Seventh Day (Mittelpunkt), 96
 Gorostiza, Carlos, 62, 89, 546
 Gorostiza, Celestino, 896. See also Celestino Gorostiza Award for Children's Theatre. The Bridge, 198
 Gorostiza, Manuel Eduard de: Through Hell and Highwater for You, 895
 GOSET. See Moscow State Yiddish Theatre
 The Gospel According to Tane (Muru), 963
 Gospel at Colonus (Breuer), 1130
 Gossip (Walker), 1095, 1437
 Göthe, Staffan, 1313
 The Gothic (Klimáček), 1255
 Gottlober, Avrom Ber, 1506
 Götz von Berlichingen (Goethe), 1316
 Gough, Orlando, 265
 Gould, Glenn, 1510
 Govender, Kessie, 1264 governmental corruption. See political corruption government sponsorship. See under individual countries
 Governor General's Award (Canada): Canadian drama, 217; Clark, Sally, 268; French, David, 490; Gray, John, 159; Griffiths, Linda, 561; Krizanc, John, 781; Lill, Wendy, 820, 986; MacDonald, Ann-Marie, 542, 843; MacLeod, Joan, 850; Marchessault, Jovette, 869; Mighton, John, 901, 1199; Ondaatje, Michael, 278, 998; Pollock, Sharon, 171, 1088; Reaney, James, 1125; Ross, Cree Ian, 1153; Sherman, Jason, 1235; Thompson, Judith, 1352; Verdecchia, Guillermo, 1420; Walker, George F., 1437
 The Governor's Family (Christian), 78
 The Governor's Lady (Belasco), 140, 1398
 Governor's Wife: Dong Zhujun (Xu), 1497
 Gow, Michael, 546–547
 Goytisolo, Juan, 261
 Gozzi, Carlo: Princess Turandot, 927
 The Grace Period (Dürrenmatt), 381
 Grace-Smith, Briar, 547–548
 Graeae Theatre Company, 1017
 Grafted (Pirandello), 1070
 Graham, Martha, 763
 Graham's Town Amateur Company, 1262
 Grain (Kirshon), 1166
 Gramcko, Ida, 1419
 A Grammatical Discussion of the Other Shore (Mou), 91
 Gramsci, Antonio, 248
 A Grand Ball (Björnsson), 654
 The Grand Boulevard (Chueca), 1514
 A grande família (Vianna Filho), 1422
 Grandfather and Half Brother (Hürlimann), 1317
 The Grand Inquisitor (Brook), 1130
 Grand Magic (De Filippo), 339
 Grandmother and Granddaughter (Goldfaden), 539–540
 The Grandmothers' Armoires (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
 Grand Opera House (Belfast), 116, 699

- Grand Opera House (Chicago), 1214
- Grand Opera House (New York), 295
- Grand Prix des Lettres, 71
- The Grand Tarot (Ludlam), 838
- The Grand Tour (Stewart), 813
- Grania (Gregory), 559
- Granite Peak (Roland), 77
- The Granny (Cossa), 89
- Granovsky, Alexander, 928–929; A Night in the Old Marketplace, 929; The Travels of Benjamin III, 929
- Grant, Cary, 1050
- Grant, Elspeth, 7
- Grant Road Theatre (Mumbai), 664–665
- Granville-Barker, Harley, 548; The Voysey Inheritance, 1432; Waste, 1443; on acting, 7; Court Theatre (England), 405; dramaturgy, 367, 370; New Stage Society, 1400; Royal Court Theatre, 1145
- Granville-Barker, Harley and Helen, 40
- Grapes Society (Japan), 767
- Grass, Günter, 548–549; Max, A Play, 522
- Grass and Wild Strawberries (Ryga), 1175
- Grassi, Paolo, 718
- Grasso, Giovanni, 714, 715
- Grau, Jacinto, 1270
- The Gravedigger, 97
- Gray, John, 218, 549–550; Billy Bishop Goes to War, 159
- Gray, Oriel, 72
- Gray, Simon: Quartermaine's Terms, 415
- Gray, Spaulding, 106, 550–551, 1412; Swimming to Cambodia, 1087
- Great Canadian Theatre Company (GCTC, Ottawa), 39, 909, 1456
- The Great Comforter (Volokhov), 1170
- The Great Disobedience (Miller), 904
- The Great Divide (Moody), 551, 922, 1397
- The Great Galeoto (Echegaray), 388, 551–552, 1269
- The Great God Brown (O'Neill), 87, 552–553, 805, 967, 1003, 1004, 1056
- The Great Goodness of Life (A Coon Show) (Baraka), 121
- The Great Highway (Strindberg), 1297
- The Great MacDaddy (Harrison), 164
- The Great Magician (Dyk), 315
- Greatness (Akins), 30
- The Great Rebellion (Dutt), 553
- The Great Role (Olsson), 453
- Great Sein Troupe (Burma), 209
- The Great Swans of the Waves (Rakesh), 1117
- Great Tent of the Underdogs (El Teatro Campesino), 1086
- The Great Tent of the Underdogs (Valdez), 1415
- The Great Uskranian Circus (Casas), 229, 553–554, 1107
- The Great Wall of China (Frisch), 492–493, 1317
- The Great We (Krog), 976
- The Great White Hope (Sackler), 1408
- The Great Whore of Babylon (Levin), 96
- The Great Wrath (Högberg and Viksten), 1314
- Greece, 554–557, 1215, 1291, 1342, 1495. See also classical theater
- Greek chorus (and permutations thereof): The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12; agit-prop, 27; Antigone (Anouilh), 52; Arbuzov, Aleksei Nikolayevich, 57; blank verse, 395; Nietzsche, Friedrich, 966; The Visit of the Old Lady (Dürrenmatt), 1426
- Green, Adolph, 813
- Green, Debbie Tucker, 219
- Green, Paul, 285, 557–558, 987; The House of Connelly, 563–564; Hymn to the Rising Sun, 1083; In Abraham's Bosom, 557, 661–662; Johnny Johnson, 564; Native Son (with Wright), 1406
- The Green Bay Tree (Shairp), 510
- Greenberg, Richard, 511
- Greenburg, Clement, 87
- The Green Cheeks of April (Ugarov), 1170
- The Green Cockatoo (Schnitzler), 1197
- Green Dragon (Hong), 624
- Green Fields (Hirschbein), 615, 1508
- The Green Girl (Rakov), 1507
- Greenland (Brenton), 414
- The Green Land (Símonarson), 655
- The Green Pastures (Connelly), 284–285, 558, 1130
- The Green Ring (Gippius), 1163, 1174
- Green Room Award (Australia), 547
- Greensboro: A Requiem (Mann), 864
- Greens from Balen (Van Den Broeck), 144
- The Green Sound (Kandinsky), 108
- Greenspan, David, 511
- Green Thumb Theater for Young People (Canada), 463
- Greenwich Mews (New York), 989
- Greenwich Theatre (London), 1212
- Gregory, André, 423, 696
- Gregory, Lady Augusta, 558–559; Cathleen ni Houlihan, 232; Spreading the News, 1274; Abbey Theatre, 702, 1145; censorship, 1226; comic playwright, 280; Coole Park, 1108; Irish Literary Theater, 404; Irish theater revival, 700–701, 983; O'Casey, Sean, 1217; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Synge, John Millington, 1321; Yeats, William Butler, 1078
- Greig, David, 559–560
- Grein, J. T., 402, 1428
- Gremina, Yelena, 1169, 1170
- Grey Farm (Rattigan and Bolith), 1120
- Grey Gardens (Wright), 1491
- Grey Lady Cantata #2 (Schumann), 1086
- An Grianán theatre (Ireland), 706
- Griboyedov, Aleksandr, 721, 1077, 1160
- Grieg, Nordahl, 560, 976; Our Power and Our Glory, 1022–1023; The Stock Exchange Man, 1022
- Griffith, D. W., 326
- Griffiths, Linda, 560–561; Maggie and Pierre, 218, 856
- Griffiths, Trevor, 424, 586
- Grigor'yev, Apollon, 1171
- Grigoryev-Istomin, Nikolai, 1162
- Grigulis, Arvids, 801
- Gríma group (Iceland), 654
- Grimké, Angelina Weld, 446, 561–562
- Grinberg, Michel. See Vinaver, Michel
- Gringo (Treadwell), 1375
- griots, drama of the, 14
- Grishkovets, Yevgeny, 1170
- Grochowiak, Stanislaw, 1081
- Gropius, Walter, 1076
- Gross, Robert, 139
- Großes Schauspielhaus (Berlin), 1127
- Grossman, Jan, 370, 595
- Grosz, George, 319
- grotesco criollo, 562–563. See also theater of the grotesque
- grotesque theater. See theater of the grotesque
- Grotowski, Jerzy, 445, 497, 696, 827; Akropolis, 1090

- Grotowski method, 91, 101
 Grotowski Workcenter (Italy), 1090
 The Ground Beneath One's Feet (Rakesh), 1117
 The Ground is Too Short, Violette Leduc (Marchessault), 869
 Groundswell Festival of New Work by Women, 1100
 Groundwork (Renée), 1132
 The Group, 1179
 Groupe Correspondence, 142
 Groupe Littérature, 142
 Group of Seven (Canada), 1427
 Groupov (theater troupe), 144
 Groups of Clothes (Wolff), 1487
 Group Theatre (London), 68
 Group Theatre (New York), 563–565. See also Theatre Guild. avant-garde drama, 105, 1083; creative collaboration, 371, 987–988; Kingsley, Sidney, 767, 895; little theater movement, 1405; Miller, Arthur, 27; Odets, Clifford, 987–998, 1257, 1436; political drama, 1406; socialist realism, 1257
 The Grouse in Justedal (Ibsen), 647
 Grumberg, Jean-Claude, 362, 484–485, 565–566; The Workshop, 486
 Grundy, Sydney, 1101
 Grup d'Acció Teatral (Spain), 232
 Grupo de Teatro Realista, 1191
 Grušas, Juozas, 824
 Guangdong Drama Institute (China), 1024
 guangxi, 1347
 Guan Hanqing, 1497
 Guan Hanquig (Tian), 254, 1357
 Guantánamo: "Honor Bound to Defend Freedom" (Brittain and Slovo), 566
 Guardia, Ricardo Fernández, 293
 The Guardian Angel (Brink), 1263
 The Guardsman (Molnár), 639, 917
 Guare, John, 566–567, 959, 1409, 1412; Four Baboons Adoring the Sun, 281; The House of the Blue Leaves, 281; Six Degrees of Separation, 281
 Guarnieri, Gianfrancesco, 567–568; They Don't Wear Black Tie, 60, 1344–1345
 Guatemala, 1257–1258
 Guðmundsdóttir, Hrafnhildur Hagalín, 655
 Guðmundsson, Sigurður, 652
 Guebel, Danile, 62
 Guelph Spring Festival (Ontario), 894
 Guerilla Goatherd (Haarhoff), 22 guerilla theater, 27, 485, 568–569, 1028
 Guerrero, Wilfred Ma: Forsaken House, 1052; Three Rats, 1052; Wanted: A Chaperone, 1052
 Guerrilla Girls, 1043
 Guerrillas de Teatro (Spain), 1340
 Guest of Honour (Kerr), 764
 Guests (Saluri), 429
 The Guests (Zorin), 1167
 Guevara, Che, 568
 Guggenheim, Peggy, 123
 Guggenheim Fellowship: Bogart, Anne, 173; Ensler, Eve, 420; Flanagan, Hallie, 442; Fornes, Maria Irene, 469; Jenkin, Len, 732; Mann, Emily, 865; Tally, Ted, 1327; Wilson, August, 1481; Wilson, Robert, 1483
 Guglani, Madan Mohan. See Rakesh, Mohan
 Guided Imagery, 626
 Guidote, Cecelia Reyes, 1050, 1053
 The Guild (Özakman), 1386
 Guildford School for Music and Drama (London), 772 guilt, 25, 875–876, 922–923, 933–934, 1426
 Guilty Without Guilt (Ostrovsky), 1020, 1161
 Guinness, Alec, 404
 Guinon, Albert, 475
 Guitry, Sacha: A Good Match, 476; Nono, 476
 Gulbis, Harijs, 801
 Gulf War, 1034
 Gültepe Plays (Atay), 1386
 Gum and Goo (Brenton), 197
 Gumilyov, Acmeist, 1163
 Gumilyov, Boris, 1163
 Gumilyov, Nikolai, 841
 GUnaGU (Slovakia), 1255
 Gundars, Lauris, 802
 Gundling's Life Frederick of Prussia Lessing's Sleep Dream
 Scream (Müller), 55, 937–938
 Guntwar: The School of a Prophet (Sorge), 1261
 Guo Dayou: Xu Jiuqing's Promotion (with Xi), 1498
 Guo Dayu, 256
 Guo Moruo, 252, 347, 569–570
 Guo Qihong, 570–571; Reminiscences of Southern Tang, 256
 Guo Shixing, 255, 571
 Gupta, Jogendrachandra, 668
 Gurik, Robert, 220
 Gurney, A. R., 571–572, 1409
 Guro, Elena, 500
 Gurre (Drachmann), 357
 Gussow, Mel, 967
 Gustav Adolf (Strindberg), 1296–1297
 Gustav III (Strindberg), 1297
 Gustav IV Adolf, 1313
 Gustav Vasa (Strindberg), 426, 572–573, 1296
 Guthrie, Tyrone, 324, 985
 Guthrie Report (Australia), 73
 Guthrie Theatre (Minneapolis), 776, 954, 1204, 1408
 Gutiérrez, Eduardo, 61
 Gutiérrez, Joaquín, 293
 Gutzkow, Karl: Uriel Acosta, 928
 Gu Xidong, 256
 Guy Domville (James), 573, 725
 Guys and Dolls (Runyon and Burrows), 757, 813
 The Guy Son and the Girl Mom (Kok), 212
 Guzmán Blanco, Antonio, 1418
 Gvozdev, Aleksei, 1171
 Gwendolyn Brooks Centre Contributors Award, 966 gymnastics, 1245
 Gypsy (Laurents), 814
 Gybal Wahazar (Witkiewicz), 1485
 Gyurko, László, 640
 Gyurkovics, Tibor, 640
 Haagsche Comedie (theater company), 957
 Haarhoff, Dorian, 22
 Haarla, Lauri, 453
 Haasse, Hella, 957
 Haavikko, Paavo, 454
 Habeas Corpus (Bennett), 146
 Habibi, Emil, 96, 97
 Habima (Israel), 709
 Habima Hebrew Theatre, 384
 Habima Theatre (Moscow), 94–95
 Habitant at the End of Time (Gavlovski), 1419
 Hacia Una Dramaturgia Joven (contest), 1044
 Hackett, Walter, 720
 Hacks, Peter, 523
 Haddad, Mishil, 97
 Hadda Padda (Kamban), 653
 Hades (Osanai), 1014
 Hadi, Wisran, 680
 Had We But World Enough (Gray), 77
 Haff, Stephen, 1438
 Hagedorn, Jessica, 446
 Hagenbek (Šrámek), 315
 The Hag's Children (Khlebnikov), 1163
 The Ha-Ha Play (Yankowitz), 1501

- Haifa Municipal Theatre (Israel), 96; Night of the Twentieth (Sobol), 711
- Haili Selassie I Prize, 1381
- Haili Selassie Theatre (Ethiopia), 1382
- The Hair (Zaourou), 24
- Hairspray (Meehan), 815
- Hair: The American Tribal Love-Rock Musical (Ragni and Rado), 1087, 1409
- Hai Rui's Dismissal (Wu), 575
- The Hairu Ape (O'Neill), 105, 433, 575–576, 916, 1002, 1136, 1173, 1400
- Haitov, Hikolai, 206
- haka, 777
- Halac, Ricardo, 62, 89, 576–577
- Halawa, Fayiz, 392
- Halbe, Max, 517
- Halevi, Moshe, 95
- Halévy, Ludovic, 474
- Half Life (Mighton), 901
- Halfway House (Rakesh), 577–578, 1117
- halkevleri (Turkish drama), 1385, 1386
- Halkin, Shmuel, 540; Bar Kokhba, 929; Shulamis, 929
- halk tiyatrosu (people's drama), 1384
- Hall, Peter, 370, 411, 623, 1068
- Hall, Roger, 578, 962
- Hallelujah (Kornis), 641
- Hallelujah! (Norman), 102, 730
- Hallelujah, Baby! (Laurents), 814
- Haller, Paul, 1316
- Halle-Wolfssohn, Aaron, 1506
- Hall-Rogers, Thomas, 442
- Halmi (Bereményi), 641
- Haman, 1108
- Hamburg National theater (Germany), 367
- The Ham Funeral (White), 73
- Hamidy, Kalam, 861
- Hamilton, Cecily: Diana of Dobson's, 404–405
- Hamilton, Ian: Falls the Shadow, 961
- Hamlet (Shakespeare): Chekhov's adaptation, 927; Day of Murders in the Story of Hamlet (Koltès), 774; Dogg's Hamlet, Cahoot's Macbeth (Stoppard), 1283; The (15 Minute) Dogg's Troupe Hamlet (Stoppard), 1283; Rendra's adaptation, 1131; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard), 1152, 1282; Stanislavsky's production, 1277; Taganka Theater production, 1173
- Hamletmachine (Müller), 55, 578–579, 938, 1094
- The Hammer and the Witches (Brink), 1263
- Hammerstein, Oscar, II, 811–812, 813, 959
- Hammet, Dashiell, 1246
- Hammond, Percy, 1287
- Hamnet, 585
- Hampstead Theatre, 786, 857–858, 878
- Hampton, Christopher, 370; Tales from Hollywood, 413
- Hamsun, Knut, 418, 505, 579–580, 976, 1277, 1313
- Hamvai, Kornél, 641
- hanamichi, 752
- Handbag (Ravenhill), 1121
- Handcart Ensemble (New York), 1491
- Handcuffs (Reaney), 1125
- A Handful of Friends (Williamson), 1478
- Handke, Peter, 86, 365, 522, 580–581; Kaspar, 152, 755, 1049; Offending the Audience, 585, 807, 991, 1049
- The Hand on the Rail (Mason), 875
- Han drama forms, 1347
- Hands (Loher), 830
- Hands Have Meaning (Were-were-Liking), 25
- Hands of Edwige at the Time of Birth (Mouawad), 932
- The Hands of God (Solórzano), 581–582, 1258
- The Hands of Its Enemy (Medoff), 887
- A Handsome Man of 900 (Eichelbaum), 61
- The Hangman (Lagerkvist), 582–583, 795, 1312
- Hang Thun Hak, 212, 583
- Hangula, Victor, 22
- Hankin, St. John, 405, 1134
- Hanna, Gillian, 919–920
- Hannele (Hauptmann), 517, 593
- Hannele, or the Jewish Medea (Libin), 1507
- Hannele's Journey to Heaven (Hauptmann), 919
- Hannibal, 1237
- Hanoi Grand Theatre, 1423
- Hansberry, Lorraine, 164, 583–584, 625, 1407; A Raisin in the Sun, 1086, 1116; The Whites, 515; The Whites and Les Blancs, 165
- Hansen, Al, 584
- Hanson, Charlie, 878
- Hansson, Ola, 1296
- Hans Sonnenstrossers Hollenfahrt (Apel), 137
- Hapgood (Stoppard), 415, 1282, 1284
- Hapi, Rore, 962, 963
- happenings, 584–585; chance, 239; Denmark, 343; Handke, Peter, 522; modernism, 87, 1411; off-off-Broadway, 467, 990; Santa Claus' Army (Denmark), 343; Topography of a Nude (Díaz), 1366
- Happenings (Werkteater), 957
- Happily Never After (Balodis), 119
- Happiness (Choukri), 261
- Happiness (Heijermans), 603
- The Happy, Confident City (Benavente), 145
- Happy Days (Beckett), 55, 132, 585–586
- Happy Days (Kishida and Lee), 769
- The Happy Days of an Unhappy Man (Arbuzov), 57
- Happy New Century, Doktor Freud (Berman), 150, 897
- Harakati za Ukombouzi (Muhando and Lihamba), 19
- Harald Sven's Mother (Heiberg), 602
- Harbach, Otto, 811–812
- Hard-a-Port (Jakobsson), 654
- Hard Fruit (Cartwright), 228, 229
- Hardin, Herschel, 218
- Harding, Alex, 75
- Harding, John, 79
- Hard People (Bar-Yosef), 96
- Hard to Be a Jew (Aleichem), 1507
- Hardy, Sarah, 78
- Hare, David, 586–587; The Absence of War, 414, 415; Amy's View, 414; The Blue Room, 414; The Judas Kiss, 414; Murmuring Judges, 414; Pravda, 414; Racing Demon, 414, 1130; Secret Rapture, 414; Skylight, 414; Stuff Happens, 1300; Via Dolorosa, 414; Arden, John, 409; Brenton, Howard, 197; dramaturg, 370; interculturalism, 686; Joint Stock Theatre Group, 740; knighthood, 586; naturalism, 219; Osborne, John, 1017
- The Hare and the Buzzard (Forssell), 469–470
- Harendorf, Shmuel, 1508
- Harlem Duet (Sears), 1206
- Harlem Experimental Theatre (New York), 739
- Harlem Renaissance, 118, 558, 739
- Harlem Song (Wolfe), 1487
- Harlem Suitcase Players, 637
- Harlequin, Servant of Two Masters (Goldoni), 718
- Harlequinade (Rattigan), 1120
- Harmony Theatre (London), 169, 1017

- Harm's Way (Wellman), 1454
 Harold Award, 623
 Harold Clurman Theater (New York), 989
 The Harpies (Blitzstein), 168
 Harp of Joy (Mishima), 910
 Harrigan, Edward G., 587–588, 634, 1398
 Harrigan Theatre (New York), 587
 Harris, Frank, 1224
 Harris, George, 1087
 Harris, Ruth: The Cripple, 417; Miss Quashie and the Tiger's Tail, 417
 Harris, Sam, 720
 Harrison, Craig, 962
 Harrison, Jane, 79
 Harrison, Paul Carter, 164
 Harry and Martha Cohen Award, 1088
 Hart, Lorenz, 658
 Hart, Moss, 588; The American Way, 279, 944; I'd Rather Be Right (with Rodgers), 658; Jonica, 612; The Man Who Came to Dinner, 279; Once in a Lifetime, 279, 997; You Can't Take It With You (with Kaufman), 279, 1509; comedy, 279; Depression era, 1401–1404; Kaufman, George S., 1401; librettists, 812; New Dramatists, 959; play doctor, 371; producer and director, 588
 Harte, Bret, 214, 588–589, 1397
 Hartford Stage (Connecticut), 1518
 Hart House Theatre (Toronto), 216–217, 341, 764
 Hartlaub, H. F., 959
 Harvard University, Workshop 47, 115, 124, 138, 1398
 Harvest (Hughes), 637
 Harvest (Padmanabhan), 672
 The Harvest Festival (O'Casey), 983
 Harvest of Ghosts (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 626
 Harwood, Ronald, 510
 Hasegawa, Shiguré, 446
 Hasegawa Shin, 1241
 Hasenclever, Walter, 520, 589–590; The Son, 108, 432, 518, 1258–1259
 Hasfari, Shmuel, 96, 710, 711–712
 Hashmi, Safdar, 590, 671–673, 1346
 The Hash-tree (Ørnsbo), 1012
 Haskala. See Jewish Enlightenment
 Hassan, Noordin, 590–591; It Is Not Tall Grass Blown by the Wind, 720, 861
 Hassan Agha's Wife (Simović), 1211
 Hastings, Michael, 394
 The Hasty Heart (Patrick), 821, 1039 hat boi, 1422–1423
 Hate (Sardou), 1186
 Hate (Sewell), 1215
 Hating Alison Ashley (Tulloch), 73
 Hatoum, Noma, 1043
 Hatred of the Black Slaves (Ouyang), 1024
 Hatzor, Ilan, 96
 Hauptmann (Lukosz), 1082
 Hauptmann, Carl, 54, 1449
 Hauptmann, Elisabeth, 191, 1354
 Hauptmann, Gerhart, 591–594; And Pippa Dances!, 517; The Beaver Coat, 516; Before Daybreak, 135, 516; Before Sunrise, 1102; The Coming of Peace, 516, 1449; The Family of Atreus, 1370; The Festival of Peace, 927; Hannele, 517; Hannele's Journey to Heaven, 919; Lonely Lives, 516; Lonely People, 1014; The Sunken Bell, 517; The Weavers, 516, 1446–1447; Austrian drama, 83; Gordin, Jacob, 1507; Kaiser, Georg, 747; naturalism, 618; O'Neill, Eugene, 1000; Russian drama, 1173; Zola, Émile, 1517
 Haus am Pfauen (Zurich), 1316
 Hausmann, Raoul, 319
 Havana is Waiting (Machado), 845
 Havel, Václav, 6, 94, 370, 594–596, 1011, 1283; Beggar's Opera, 317; The Garden Party, 316, 894; The Increasing Difficulty of Concentration, 316; Largo Desolato, 317; The Memorandum, 316, 894–895; Temptation, 317; Urban Renewal, 317
 The Have-Little (Cruz), 308
 Having a Wonderful Time (Churchill), 263
 Having Our Say (Mann), 865
 Hawkins, Adrienne Lita. See Kennedy, Adrienne
 Hawk Princess (Yokomichi), 970
 Hawkshaw, Detective, 1358
 Hawthornden Prize, 146
 Hawthorne, Nathaniel, 1037
 The Hawthornes (Herne), 1242
 Haxton, Gerald, 879
 Háý, Gyula, 640
 Háý, János, 641
 Hayaseca, Jorge. See Echegaray, José
 Hayavadana (Karnad), 596–597
 Hayes, Helen, 1368
 Hayes, Kate Simpson, 597
 Hay Fever (Coward), 297, 406, 407, 597–598
 Haymarket Theatre (London), 402, 414, 628, 757, 879
 The Haytian Earth (Walcott), 1437
 Hazel Kirke (MacKaye), 598–599, 849, 1398
 Hazleton, George, 892
 HBO New Plays USA Award, 864
 HB Studios, 1025
 The Head, Guts, and Sound Bone Dance (Cook), 287
 A Headache, Shoulder Pain and Higuchi Ichiyō (Inoue), 684
 Head-Chopper at Villa Borghese (Maraini), 866
 Headlines Theater (Vancouver, Canada), 173
 Headman's Holiday (Hamvai), 641
 Head of Mary (Tanaka), 599, 727
 The Head of Mary (Tanaka), 1193, 1329
 Heads (Brenton), 197
 Headstate (Welsh), 1373
 Healey, Michael, 219
 Healey, Peg, 457
 He and She (Crothers), 306, 1399
 Heaney, Seamus, 706
 Hear, O Israel (Dimov), 1508
 He Ara Hou, 963
 Hearst, William Randolph, 1227
 Heartbreak House (Shaw), 599–600, 702, 860, 1226, 1275
 Heart of a Dog (Bulgakov), 205
 The Heart of Maryland (Belasco), 140
 The Heart Outright (Medoff), 887
 Hearts of Oak (Herne), 609
 Hearts of Oak (Jones), 742
 Heathen Valley (Linney), 822
 The Heat of the Day (Pinter), 1068
 Heaven (Ibsen and Árni), 655
 Heaven (Walker), 1438
 Heaven, Hell, Spiritual World (Hasenclever), 589
 Heaven and Hell (Kornfeld), 777
 Heavenly Creatures (Jackson), 962
 Heavenly Lovers (Pawlikowska-Jasnorzewska), 1080
 The Heavenly Squad (Lebović and Obrenović), 1210
 Heaven on Earth: Comedy (Hein), 604
 Heavy Barbara (Voskovec and Werich), 94
 Heavysege, Charles, 216
 Hebbel Theater (Berlin), 1250
 Hebrew entries. See also Israel

- Hebrew drama, 709–710, 1109
- Hebrew language theater, 1403, 1506
- Hebriana (Norén), 973
- He Can Swagger Sitting Down* (Romeril), 1151
- Hecht, Ben: The Front Page (with MacArthur), 494, 1401; Ladies and Gentleman, 494; The Twentieth Century, 494
- Hedayat, Sadeq, 695
- Hedberg, Tor, 1312
- Hedda Gabler (Ibsen), 600–601; Baitz, Jon Robin, 114; critics, 360; Independent Theatre Society (ITS), 402; Nietzschean influence, 651; off-Broadway theater, 990; Robins, Elizabeth, 1144; scholar-critics, 361; stage direction, 1275; stage props, 1276; Thompson, Judith, 1352; tragedy, 1370
- Hedgerow Theater (Moylan, Pennsylvania), 637
- Heflin, Van, 1050
- Hegel, Friedrich, 768, 1054–1055, 1307; Aesthetics, 1041
- Hegemon-King Parts with His Concubine, 889
- Hegewisch, Alvaro, 898–899, 923
- Heggen, Thomas, 1407
- He Had Two Pistols with White and Black Eyes* (Fo), 461
- Heiberg, Gunnar, 601–602, 976
- Heiberg, J. L., 341–342; The Hill of Elves, 357
- Heidegger, Martin, 271, 336, 1057, 1189
- Heideman Award, 978
- Heidenstam, Verner von, 1293
- The Heidi Chronicles* (Wasserstein), 602–603, 1058, 1412, 1442
- Heijermans, Herman, 603, 955; The Wreck of the "Hope", 927
- Heimat (Sudermann), 517
- Heimatschutztheater (Bern), 1316
- Hein, Christoph, 603–605, 1256; The Knights of the Round Table, 524
- Heinar Müller Project, 769
- Heinrich Mann Prize, 937
- The Heirs of Segismundo* (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- He Jingzhi: The White-Haired Girl, 1458–1459
- He Jiping: The First House of Beijing Duck, 455
- He Jipling, 255
- Helburn, Theresa, 371, 1341
- Held by the Enemy* (Gillette), 532, 1397
- Heldenplatz (Bernhard), 86, 151, 605
- Helen Hayes Award, 864, 1263
- Helen Hayes Theatre (New York), 830, 1049
- Helen of Troy*, New York (Connelly), 284
- hell. See the underworld
- Hell Freezes Over* (Patrick), 1039
- He'll Have Himself a Good Time* (Nestroy), 1469
- Hellman, Lillian, 371, 606–607, 687, 1246, 1403; The Children's Hour, 248, 510; The Little Foxes, 825–826, 944; This Is the Army, 1085; Watch on the Rhine, 1085, 1405
- Hello, Again (LaChiusa), 815
- Hello, Dolly! (Stewart), 813
- Hello Dolly! (Wilder), 1469
- Hell's Kitchen (New York), 1182
- Heltai, Jenő, 639
- Helvet's Night (Villqist), 1082
- Henare, George, 963
- Henckell, Karl, 1449
- Henderson, Gary, 962
- Henley, Beth, 234, 444–446, 607–608; Crimes of the Heart, 1058, 1412
- The Hennala Brass Band* (Tuomarila), 454
- Hennings, Emmy, 108
- Henningsen, Poul, 3
- The Henpecked Husband Wife* (Jotuni), 453
- Henri, Adrian, 584
- Henri Christophe (Walcott), 1436
- The Henrietta* (Howard), 630, 892, 1397
- Henriette Maréchal (Goncourt), 475
- Henri III and His Court (Dumas père), 1150
- Henry Box Brown, or The Mirror of Slavery (Kushner), 788
- Henry IV (Pirandello). See Enrico IV (Pirandello)
- Henry Miller Theatre (New York), 297, 354
- Henry's Past* (Churchill), 263
- Hensbergen (Strijards), 957
- Hensen, Herwig, 143
- Hen's Teeth, 964
- A Hen Too Soon* (Onwueme), 1008
- Hepburn, Katherine, 1050, 1381
- He Qiu: Before the New Bureau Director Came, 136
- Heracles 5 (Müller), 937
- Herakles (MacLeish), 850
- Herbert, David, 1263
- Herbert, Zbigniew, 1081
- Hercules (Matković), 304
- Hercules and the Augian Stables* (Dürrenmatt), 380
- Here and Now* (Kee), 862
- HERE Arts Center, 871
- Here Comes a Candle* (Oshodi), 1017
- Here Comes the Nigger* (Bostock), 79
- Here Come the Clowns* (Barry), 124
- Here Lies Henry* (MacIvor), 847
- He Reo Hui, 963
- Heresies (Levy), 416
- Heresy (Berman), 150
- Heresy (Terayama), 49, 639
- Heretics (Terayama), 1334
- Here under Heaven* (Brand), 77
- Here We Are Below* (Rojas), 294
- Heritage (Koltès), 774
- Herkus Mantas (Grušas), 824
- Herman, Jerry, 510
- Herman Voaden National Playwriting Competition (Canada), 1428
- Hermoso, Virginia Gil de. See Gil de Hermoso, Virginia
- Hernádi, Gyula, 640
- Hernández, Gilda, 310
- Hernández, Luiza Josefine, 608–609, 1156
- Hernández, Miguel, 1340
- Hernández de Araújo, Carmen: Ideal Love, 1106
- Hernani (Hugo), 87, 471–472, 1150
- Herndon Prize, 124
- Herne, James A., 609–610, 1398; Margaret Fleming, 598, 634, 870; Shore Acres, 1242–1243
- The Hero* (Cañas), 293
- Hero and Martyr* (Brau), 1106
- Herod (Mazya), 712
- Heroes and Butterflies* (Lord), 834
- Heroic of Buenos Aires* (Dragún), 358
- Heroin (Rame and Fo), 1119
- A Hero's Welcome* (Pinnock), 417
- The Hero Trilogy* (Medoff), 887
- Her Private Life* (Akins), 30
- Herrmann, Karl-Ernst, 153, 1048
- Herr Puntila and His Servant Matti* (Brecht), 1372
- Hervieu, Paul: In Chains, 475–476; Labyrinth, 476; The Law of Man, 476
- Herzberg, Judith, 957
- He Sits at the Melting Pot* (Munk), 939
- heterosexuality. See male-female relationships
- Het Nederlandsch Tooneel, 955
- He Walked into the Fields* (Shamir), 95
- He Was Born Gay* (Williams), 1471
- Hewett, Dorothy, 74, 610–611
- He Who Gets Slapped* (Andreev), 45, 281, 611, 1162
- He Who Says No* (Brecht), 807

- He Who Says Yes* (Brecht), 807
 Hew Lyric Club, 405
Hey Mum, I Own a Factory (Magpie Theatre), 74
Hey Rube! (Luscombe), 840
 Heyward, Dorothy, 611–612;
 Porgy and Bess, 1092
 Heyward, DuBose, 611–612;
 Porgy and Bess, 1092
He Zhu's Marriage—A New Version (Chin), 258
 Hiang-Khng, Russell Heng,
 1248
 Hibberd, Jack, 74, 1151
 Hidalla (Wedekind), 1450
 Hidden Fires (Padmanabhan),
 672
Hide 'n' Seek (Kouka), 777
 Hideyoshi Toyotomi, 1500
 Hi-Fi (Stefanovski), 845
Hi-Fi & The False Bottom
 (Stefanovski), 1278
High as a Kite (Lord), 834
The High Bid (James), 725
 High German language, 1315
 High Places (Vinaver), 1424
The High Road (Sheldon), 1230
High Society (Barry), 124
High Society (Kopit), 776
High Society (Patrick), 1039
High Summer (Rattigan), 1120
The High Summer Sky (Stehlik),
 316
High Tor (Anderson), 43
High Voltage (Platonov), 1165
Highway, Tomson, 612–613;
 Aria, 62; Dry Lips Oughta
 Move to Kapuskasing, 218,
 375; The Rez Sisters, 218
 Hijikata Tatsumi, 99
 Hijikata Yoshi, 727, 1240
 Hikmet, Hazim: The Forgotten
 Man, 1386; The House of Morning, 1386
 Hilar, Karel Hugo, 93, 224
 Hilarión (Ballester), 1106
 Hilbert, Joroslav, 315
 Hildebrand (Campbell), 215
The Hill (Gallegos), 294
The Hill (Mda), 1265
 Hill, Abram, 1406; Liberty
 Deferred, 1086
The Hill Down There (Sánchez),
 1183
 Hill-Land (Voaden), 1427
The Hill of Elves (Heiberg), 357
 Hilst, Hilda, 188
 Him (cummings), 311
 Him, Her, Him (Bracco), 183
 Hin, Mona, 585
 Hindi theater, 505–506, 1028,
 1116–1117
 Hindle Wakes (Houghton), 405,
 613–614, 628
 Hinduism, 753, 1181
 Hindustani Theatre, 1329
 Hinkemann: A Tragedy in Three
 Acts (Toller), 1362
 Hippius, Zinaida, 1163, 1174
 Hippodrome Theatre (New York), 284
 Hirata Oriza, 614, 722, 728;
 Tokyo Notes, 1361
 Hird, Thora, 1327
 Hiro, Dilip: To Anchor a Cloud,
 1029 Hiroshima, My Love (Duras and Renaïs), 379
 Hiroshima atomic bomb,
 393, 1214
 Hiroshi Ono, 49
 Hirschbein, Peretz, 1508
 Hirschbein Troupe/Dramatic Troupe (Odessa, Russia),
 615
 Hirschhorn, Joel, 115
 Hirshbein, Peretz, 614–615
 Hisaita Eijirō, 727
His Brother's Murderer (al-Bahri), 1031
His Cold Air (Piñera), 1062
His House in Order (Piñero),
 1064
 His Majesty's Theatre
 (London), 1109
 Hispanic American theater,
 657
 Hispanic drama, 1051–1052,
 1413
 Hispanic Playwrights Lab
 (New York), 468
His Sister (Mushakōji), 1499
 Histadrut Club of Nazareth,
 Theatre Troupe, 1033
Histoire de rire (Salacrou), 1182
Historia (Janacweska), 80 historical melodrama, 892,
 1161, 1515. See also history plays
 historicization, 424
Histories to Be Counted
 (Dragún), 358
History (Gombrowicz), 541
The History Boys (Bennett),
 615–616
A History of American Film
 (Durang), 378
The History of a Miser
 (Ākhundzādeh), 693
History of a Ring (Hernández),
 608
History of Australia, The Musical
 (Romeril), 1151
History of General Johann August
 Suter (Arx), 1316
The History of Ottoman Empire with Illustrations
 (Özakman), 1387
The History of Thaton (Saya
 Yaw), 208
The History of the Gowardly
 Japanese Man Kamikaze!. See
 Kamikaze!
The History of the Village of Small Huts (Hollingsworth), 622–623
 history plays: Anderson,
 Maxwell, 1403–1404;
 Björnson, Bjørnstjerne,
 162; Cambodia, 212;
 Canada, 216, 219;
 Chandraprabha, Sompop,
 239; China, 222, 257, 465;
 Depression era, 441–443;
 Glover, Sue, 538–539; The Great Rebellion (Dutt), 553;
 Greece, 554–556; Guo
 Qihong, 570; Hungary,
 640; Ibsen, Henrik, 648,
 650; imperial Germany,
 516–517; katsureki geki, 759;
 Kawatake Mokuami, 758;
 Kinoshita Junji, 767; kunqu theater, 451; Norway, 954,
 975–976, 977; Nowra,
 Louis, 979; On the Ruins of Carthage (Kalisky), 749;
 Roman Britain, 1236;
 Russia and the Soviet Union, 1161; Strindberg,
 August, 226, 572; Usigli,
 Rodolfo, 1414; Vietnam,
 1423; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430;
 West Africa, 24
History Plays (Hollingsworth),
 623
 Hitchcock, Alfred, 7
Hitchcocks Pitchfork (Strijards),
 957
The Hitchhiker (Sigrid), 143
 Hll Theatre (Singapore), 1247
 Hitler, Adolf, 787, 844, 1240,
 1266, 1317
 Hitler in His Death-Throes
 (Shulakovski), 844
 HIV/AIDS: Angels in America: A
 Gay Fantasia on National Themes; Part One: Millenium
 Approaches (Kushner), 46,
 787; The Baltimore Waltz
 (Vogel), 119; Central and Southern Africa, 23; impact on gay theater, 511;
 Kramer, Larry, 778;
 Ngema, Mgongeni, 965;
 overview, 1412; political drama, 1087; Saints &
 Apostles (Storey), 1286; The Seven Streams of the River Ota
 (Lepage and Ex Machina),
 1214; South Africa, 102,
 1265; Tanzania, 19; Things
 Related to AIDS (Mou), 91;
 Venezuela, 1419; Vogel,
 Paula, 1428
 Hivnor, Robert, 281
 Hjort, Daniel (Wecksell), 452
 H.M.I. S. Khyber (Dutt), 1445
 H.M.S. Parliament (Fuller), 216
 H.M.S. Pinafore (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
 Hoai Giao, 1422
 Hoar, Stuart, 962
 Hōashi Masami, 970
 Hobart, George V., 448
 Hobbes, John Oliver. See
 Craigie, Pearl hobby horse drama, 697

- The Hobgoblin* (Vilde), 428
Hobson's Choice (Brighouse), 616–617
 Hoch, Danny, 1413
 Höch, Hannah, 108
 Hochhuth, Rolf, 617, 991; The Deputy, 353, 521, 1076; Female Doctors, 521–522; Jurists, 521–522; Men of Law, 430; Soldiers, 521; Wessis in Weimar: Scenes from an Occupied Country, 524
 Hochwälder, Fritz, 86
 Hodge, Merton: The Wind and the Rain, 961
 Hofburg Theater (Vienna), 1109
 Hoffa (Mamet), 863
 Hoffman, William M., 510, 511; As Is, 1087
 Hoffmann (Rozov), 1167
 Hoffmeyer, Klaus, 344
 Hofmannsthal, Hugo von, 617–620; Austrian drama, 82; closet drama, 271; dramatic style, 517; influence on Russian drama, 1173; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Schnitzler, Arthur, 41, 1196; Streeruwitz, Marlene, 1289
 Hofsis, Jack, 1089
 Hoftheater (Munich), 1076
 Hogg, James, 1200
 Höijer, Björn-Erik, 1313, 1314
 Hōjō Hideji, 620–621, 727, 1241
 Holberg, Ludvig, 341, 996
 Hölderlin (Weiss), 1453
 Holding Talks (Rotimi), 24
 The Hold-Up Man (Hart), 588
 Hold Your Horses (Crouse), 821
 A Hole (Yamamoto), 1499
 Holi (Ganguli), 505
 Holiday (Barry), 124, 621–622
 Holiday Inn (Rice), 1137 holidays, Jewish, 1108
 Holla Bol (street play), 590
 Holland. See Netherlands
 Hollingshead, John, 531
 Hollingsworth, Margaret, 622; War Babies, 1441–1442
 Hollingsworth, Michael, 622
 Hollywood, California, 1276
 Hollywood Ten, 805
 Holm, Sven, 344
 Holman, David, 73
 Holme, Celeste, 1358
 Holocaust, Jewish. See also Israel. Bent (Sherman), 146; Bernhard, Thomas, 151; The Card Index (Różewicz), 1157; The Investigation (Weiss), 689; Israeli drama, 95–96, 710; Kalisky, René, 749; Olga's Room (Loher), 830; Tabori, George, 1323; 2 (Linney), 822
 Holy Day (Bovell), 76
 The Holy Experiment (Hochwälder), 86
 The Holy Family (Värnlund), 1312
 Holy Ghosts (Linney), 822
 Holy Week, Philippines, 1051
 Holz, Arno, 83, 517, 592
 The Home (Andersson and Bratt), 1313
 Home (Storey), 1285
 Home, John, 1200, 1202
 Home and Beauty (Maugham), 879
 Home Angel (Dagnino), 1418
 Home at Seven (Sherriff), 1236
 Homebody/Kabul (Kushner), 14, 788, 1088
 Home Boy (Bullins), 207
 Home Chat (Coward), 406
 The Homecoming (Pinter), 412, 414, 623–624, 1068, 1458
 The Homecoming (Wilson), 1479
 Home Cooking Company (Australia), 75
 Home Fires (Kouka), 778
 The Homeland (Kouka), 777
 Homeland (Sardou), 1186
 Homeland, or Boatswain's Pipe (Kemal), 1385 Homeless (Brecht), 543 homelessness, 1182, 1187, 1289
 Homelife (Albee), 33, 1518
 Homero Teatro de Grillos (Lima), 1045
 Homeward (Razumovskaya), 1169
 Home Work (Kroetz), 782
 Homicide (Mamet), 863
 Hommelete for Hamlet (Bene), 719
 homoeroticism, 191, 920
 homosexuality. See entries at gay and lesbian drama
 The Homosexual: or, The Difficulty of Expressing Oneself (Copi), 289
 Homura (Ariyoshi), 63
 The Honest to God Schnozzola (Horovitz), 625
 Honeymoon (Sā'edi), 695
 Honeymoon Suite (Bean), 126
 Honey Spot (Davis), 73
 Honey Spot (Jack), 330
 Hong Bingwen, 251
 Hongi Hika (Mason), 875
 Hong Kong, 256–259, 1510–1511
 Hong Kong Artists' Guild Award, 1359
 Hong Kong Federation of Drama Societies Award, 237
 Hong Kong Festival (London), 237
 Hong Kong Heartbeat (Chan), 237
 Hong Kong Repertory Theatre, 237, 238, 1359
 Hong Shen, 252, 624
 Honor (Sudermann), 517, 1302
 Honorable Glembays (Krléža), 304, 781
 Honored Sir (Hōjō), 620–621
 Honors at Dawn (Miller), 904
 Honour (Murray-Smith), 78
 Honzi, Jindřich, 93
 The Hook (Miller), 905
 Hooks, Robert, 105–106
 Hoolaballoo (Símonarson), 655
 Hooley's Theatre (Pennsylvania), 214
 Hooligans (Manfridi), 719
 Hoops (Arsovski), 845
 Hooters (Tally), 1327, 1409
 Hope (Radrigán), 1114
 Hope Deferred (Davies), 329
 Hope for a Harvest (Treadwell), 1375
 Hopeful Monsters (Mosley), 1284
 The Hope Slide (MacLeod), 850
 Hopgood, Alan: And the Big Men Fly, 73
 Hopkins, Arthur, 365, 846
 Hoppla, We're Alive (Toller), 519
 Hoppla! Such Is Life! (Toller), 1076, 1362
 Hopwood, Avery, 729, 1399
 Hopwood Award, 904
 Horák, Karol, 1254
 The Horatian (Müller), 937
 Horizon (Daly), 322, 1397
 Horizontal Walls (Chalbaud), 1419
 Horn, Panelis, 555–556
 Horniman, Annie, 628
 Horn of Sorrow (Theatre for Africa), 102
 The Horns of Don Friolera (Valle-Inclán), 1270
 Horovitz, Israel, 624–625, 990, 1409
 Horowitz, Danny, 96
 Horror (Goldflam), 317
 Horse and Bamboo Theatre, 625–626
 The Horseman (Branner), 185
 Horváth, Ödön von, 84, 520, 522, 626–627, 782, 959, 1431; The Italian Evening, 519; Tales from the Vienna Woods, 519, 1325
 Hosanna (Tremblay), 220, 510, 627–628
 Hoschna, Karl, 811
 The Hospital (Mou), 91 hospitals, 1187, 1510
 Hossack, Margaret, 1378
 The Hostage (Behan), 138, 704
 Hostages of Life (Sologub), 1174
 Hot Currents Outside (Ma and Jia), 90
 Hotel (Churchill), 265
 Hotel Europa (Stafenovski), 845

- Hotel Paradiso* (Feydeau), 449
Hotel Pro Forma (Denmark), 344, 835
Hotel Sorrento (Rayson), 75, 1122
Hotel Universe (Barry), 124
Hotel Universe (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
The Hothouse (Pinter), 1068
Hothouse (Terry), 1336
HotHouse Theatre (Australia), 73
Hot L Baltimore (Wilson), 1481, 1482
Hot 'n' Throbbing (Vogel), 1429
Hot Peaches, 1273
Hot Rains on Malacca (Hassan), 590
Hotsmakh Play (Manger), 540
Houghton, William Stanley, 628–629; Hindle Wakes, 405, 613
Hound (Oshodi), 1017
The Hour Between Dog and Wolf (Fischerová), 317, 456
The Hour of Dying (Johst), 740
Hour of Love (Topol), 1367
The Hours (Hare), 586
The Hour We Knew Nothing of Each Other (Handke), 581
The House (Díaz Sánchez), 1419
The House (Gallegos), 294
House (MacIvor), 847
The House (Murphy), 942
House and Garden (Ayckbourn), 110
House Arrest (Smith), 1256
House Cleaning (Nádas), 641
The Householder (Tendulkar), 1333
Houseman, John, 1084
A House Not Meant to Stand (Williams), 1477
House of America (Thomas), 629, 760, 1350
The House of Bernarda Alba (García Lorca), 507, 629–630, 1270, 1283, 1284
House of Blue Leaves (Guare), 281, 566, 1409
The House of Bones (Dubillard), 376
The House of Cards (Stoppard), 1125
House of Cards (Zegadlowicz), 1256
The House of Connelly (Green), 563–564, 987
House of Games (Mamet), 863
The House of Morning (Hikmet), 1386
House of the Sun (Bhuchar), 417
The House of Women (Nalkowska), 1080
The House on the Embankment (Trifonov), 841
The House that Swift Built (Gorin), 1168
House Un-American Activities Committee, U.S., 196, 905
Housewives (Page), 1027
Houston, Velina Hasu, 446
Houston Grand Opera: Four Saints in Three Acts (Stein), 471
Howard, Bronson, 630–632, 634; Saratoga, 1185–1186; Shenandoah, 891–892, 1231
Howard, Sidney, 632–633, 1401; They Knew What They Wanted, 1137, 1345
Howard Katz (Marber), 868
How Are You, Mash Rahim? (Khalaj), 696
How Does Your Garden Grow? (McNeil), 74
How Do You Do, Dialect Determinism (Bullins), 207
Howe, Tina, 446, 607, 633, 1412
Howells, William Dean, 609, 634–635, 1208, 1398
How He Lied to Her Husband (Shaw), 1225
How I Ate a Dog (Grishkovets), 1170
How I Learned to Drive (Vogel), 1428
How Mr. Mockingpott Was Cured of His Sufferings (Weiss), 1453
How the Vote Was Won (Hamilton and St. John), 1226
How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (Burrows), 813
How to Talk Music (Tardieu), 1330
How Will Asiye Be Rescued (Öngören), 1387
Hoyt, Charles H., 635, 1398
Hristić, Jovan, 1210
Hrólfun and Narfi (Pétursson), 652
Hrubín, František, 316
Hti Lat Po U (Po Sein), 208
HUAC. See House Un-American Activities Committee, U.S. huajiu, 839
huaju, 251–252
Huangmei opera, 872
Huang Yongcha, 1347
Hubay, Miklós, 640
Hu Chunbing, 257
Hudson Theatre, 879, 1429
Huelsenbeck, Richard, 108, 319
Hughes, Hatcher, 1137
Hughes, Holly, 446, 457, 511, 636, 1087, 1413; Dress Suits for Hire, 1273
Hughes, Langston, 636–638, 1137, 1291, 1403; Little Ham, 826; Mulatto, 936; Mule Bone: A Comedy of Negro Life (with Hurston), 641–642; Simple Speaks His Mind, 249
Hughie (O'Neill), 638, 1004, 1005
Hugo, Victor, 87, 377, 562, 955, 1150–1151, 1371; Cromwell, 472; Hernani, 471–472; Marion Delorme, 473
Hugo Karp (Gombár), 1255
Huidobro, Matía Montes, 309, 310
Hujia (Chen), 223
Hulda of Juurakko (Tervapää), 453
Hull-House Players (Chicago), 282, 1400
Hull Truck Theatre, 1395
Hull-Warriner Award, 865, 968, 974
Humana Festival, 1412
The Human Cathedral (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
The Human Dispute (Radrigán), 1114
Human Face as Peach Blossom (Ouyang), 1024
The Human Factor (Greene), 1284
humanist drama, 43, 185, 726, 1181
Humanity (Hasenclever), 589
Human Wishes (Beckett, unfinished), 130
Humboldt's Current (Chong), 260
Hume, Sam, 1001
The Humming-Bird (Jurkâns), 801 humor. See comedy
Humoresque (Odets), 988
The Hunchback (Mrožek), 934
Hunchback of Aomori (Terayama), 638–639, 1334
The Hunchback of Tanjung Puteri (Husain), 643
Huneker, James, 361, 1301
Hungary, 639–641; American drama, 1380; artistic constraints, 1367; avant-garde drama, 92–93; fin de siècle drama, 917; 1956 revolt, 1038; socialist realism, 1256; Spiró, György, 1272–1273; theater of the grotesque, 1011; 20th century drama, 1011
Hunger and Thirst (Ionesco), 690
The Hungry Earth (Maponya), 101, 1264
Hunlefyng Nghymru Fydd (Miles), 1351
Hunting (Musaphia), 962
Hunting Cockroaches (Glowacki), 1082
Hunting Scenes from Lower Bavaria (Sperr), 522

- Hunting Stuart (Davies), 330
 The Hurdy-Gurdy (Discépolo and Discépolo), 563
 Hürlimann, Thomas, 1317
 Hurlyburly (Rabe), 1113
 Hürmüz with Seven Husbands (Şendil), 1387
 Hurrah, This Is Life! (Toller), 1121
 Hürrem Sultan (Asena), 1387
 Hurricane Katrina, 1037
 Hurston, Zora Neale, 636, 637, 641–642
 Hurwitz, Moyshe, 1506
 Husain, Shaharom, 642–643, 861
 A Husband and Wife Rent an Apartment (Roshchin), 1168
 The Husband Lover of the Wife (Giacosa), 529
 Husbands (Torelli), 714
 Hussein, Ebrahim, 19
 Hussein, Saddam, 1300
 Husserl, Edmund, 1189
 The Hussites (Dvořák), 315
 The Hussy (West), 1455
 Huts and the Moon (Bat-Dori), 95
 Hwang, David Henry, 643–644, 686, 1105, 1412; M. Butterfly, 510; The Silver River, 1006
 Hwang Mei-shu, 644; The Fool Who Wins an Ass, 258
 Hyacinth Halvey (Gregory), 559 hybrid theater, 663, 670, 686
 Hyde, Douglas, 1111, 1321
 Hydriotaphia, or The Death of Dr. Browne (Kushner), 787, 788
 Hyman, Colette, 1403
 Hymn to the Rising Sun (Green), 1083
 Hynes, Garry, 706
 Hypatia (Wellman), 1454
 Hyperion Theatre, 935
 Hyperlynx (McGrath), 884
 hyperrealism, 801
 hypnosis, 1197, 1259, 1296
 The Hypnotist (Erdman), 426 hypocrisy: Granville-Barker, Harley, 1432; Hebrew and Yiddish theater, 709; Rame, Franca, 1118; Reigen (Schnitzler), 1126; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1146; Royal Guests (Hernández), 1156; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1196; The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky), 1202
 The Hypocrites (Jones), 742
 Hysteria (Johnson), 417
 I Am a Camera (Isherwood), 708
 I Am a Camera (Van Druten), 1417, 1429
 I Am Also a Candidate (Ginand), 1418 iambic pentameter, 542
 I Am Guilty (Jotuni), 453
 I Am My Own Wife (Wright), 645, 1491
 I Am Not Dead (Abad), 659
 I Am Not Dead (Cruz), 1052
 I Am Not For Sale (Chifunyise), 22
 I Am the Maestro (Guðmundsdóttir), 655
 I Am the People (Kroetz), 783
 I Am Your Mother, Shakir (al-ʿĀnī), 698
 I Am Yours (Thompson), 1352
 Iassi in Carnival (Alecsandri), 1148
 I Bear Fire (Hubay), 640
 Ibn al ʿIqṭṭaqā, 697
 Ibsen, Árni, 655
 Ibsen, Henrik, plays: A Doll's House, 526; Brand, 184, 363, 648–649, 1054; Catalina, 876; A Doll's House, 353, 363, 366, 402, 715, 1061, 1102; Emperor and Galilean, 396, 1055; Enemy of the People, 350; An Enemy of the People, 399, 1129; Ghosts, 363, 399, 402, 526–527, 715, 1102, 1127, 1370; Hedda Gabler, 360, 402, 600, 651, 990, 1352, 1370; John Gabriel Borkman, 651, 738–739, 791, 1014, 1144; Lady Inger, 647, 650; Little Eyolf, 651, 825, 1144, 1513; The Master Builder, 579, 875–876; Peer Gynt, 271, 363, 649, 650, 702, 1040, 1054, 1144; Pillars of Society, 402, 1061, 1102; The Pretenders, 342, 1098; Rosmersholm, 1153; When We Dead Awaken, 363, 1457–1458; The Wild Duck, 350, 1055, 1465–1466
 Ibsen, Henrik, 645–652; apocalypse, 54; Archer, William, 370; bourgeois themes, 516; Brandes, Georg, 359–360; critics, 359–361, 600; dialogue, 363–364; director's role in interpreting, 350; domination of Danish stage, 357; dramatic cycle, 363; dramatic structure, 366; Freudian theory, 1105; Hamsun, Knut, 579; Herne compared, 610; Howells, William Dean, 634; national theater, 653, 700; naturalism, 377, 618, 659, 950; Ostrovsky compared, 1019; problem play, 353; psychological realism, 353, 357; realism, 1124; Shaw, George Bernard, 359–360, 1224; stage direction, 1275; subtext, 1301; Synge, John Millington, 1321; thesis plays, 1517; Zola, Émile, 1318
 Ibsen, Henrik, influence: on Chinese drama, 251–252; on Danish drama, 342; on Drachmann, 357; on Echegary, 388; on Finnish drama, 452; on French realism, 474; on Gordin, 1507; on Hauptmann, 592; on Indian drama, 667–668; on Irish drama, 699, 707; on Italian drama, 715; on Japanese drama, 422, 1239; on Kelly, 760; on Kouka, 777; on Krleža, 782; on Løveid, 835; on modern drama, 1397; on Netherlandish drama, 955; on Norwegian drama, 975–976; on O'Neill, 1000; on Robins, 1144; on Russian drama, 1173; on Serbian drama, 1209; on Sowerby, 1174; on Strindberg, 1292–1293; on Xenopoulos, 1495
 Ibsen Prize, 949
 Ibsen Society (Japan), 1014
 I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby (Stoppard), 1282
 I Can't Remember Anything (Miller), 906
 Ice Age, 1252
 Ice Cream (Churchill), 265
 Iceland, 647, 652–655, 1243–1244, 1295
 The Iceman Cometh (O'Neill), 359, 361–362, 638, 655–656, 1000, 1004–1005, 1056, 1275, 1368, 1408
 Ichidō Rei, 769
 Ichikawa Ennosuke III, 1241
 Ichikawa Sadanji II, 726
 I Confess (Tabori), 1323
 i.d. (Verdecchia), 1420
 Id, Aziz, 391
 An Ideal Husband (Wilde), 403, 1102, 1468–1469 idealism and disillusion: Dymov, Osip, 1162; Gide, André, 530; Go Away, Go Away (Kolyada), 1169; He Who Gets Slapped (Andreev), 1162; Ivanov (Chekhov), 721–722; Lady Windermere's Fan (Wilde), 793–794; learning plays (Lehrstücke), 807; Liebele (Schnitzler), 815–816; Look Back in Anger (Osborne), 832–833; The Lower Depths (Gorky), 835–836; Murlin Murlo (Kolyada), 1169; Sherwood, Robert E., 1237; Summer of the Seventeenth Doll (Lawler), 802; We Are Riding, Riding to Distant Lands (Kolyada), 1169

- An Idealist (Munk), 342, 939, 1490
- Ideal Love (Hernández), 1106
- The Ideal Wife (Praga), 1097
- the Idea of North, 1427
- Ideas in Masks (Lunacharsky), 838
- Identical Twins (Churchill), 263
- identity: Betsuyaku Minoru, 155; Davies, Robertson, 330; Dike, Fatima, 347; House of America (Thomas), 629; The Infernal Machine (Cocteau), 680–681; Maggie and Pierre (Griffiths and Thompson), 856; Make-up (Inoue), 684; Müller, Heiner, 579; Nagy, Phyllis, 948; Pirandello, Luigi, 342; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 971; Sprachkrise, 618; Terayama Shūji, 639; Verdecchia, Guillermo, 1420
- Identity (Pinget), 1065
- identity politics, 1087
- identity theater, 656–657; File O (Mou), 827; The Hairy Ape (O'Neill), 1136; House of America (Thomas), 629; Hwang, David Henry, 643; The League of Nathans (Sherman), 806; Lion in the Streets (Thompson), 823; Malaysia, 809; Rayson, Hannie, 1122; Renée, 1132; Rivera, José, 1141; Routes and Escape Routes (Bhagat), 1154–1155; Sampek Engtay (Riantiarno), 1136; Sobol, Yehoshua, 711; Some Explicit Polaroids (Ravenhill), 1121; Wasserstein, Wendy, 602
- I Didn't Get Anything out of School (Valdez), 1415
- Idiot's Delight (Sherwood), 657–658, 751, 1048, 1237, 1402
- The Idiots Karamazov (Innaurato), 683
- The Idiots Karamoazov (Durang and Innaurato), 378
- The Idle Inn (Hirschbein), 1508
- The Idler (Rakov), 1507
- I Don't Have to Show You No Stinking Badges! (Valdez), 1415
- I Don't Know Who to Feel Sorry For (Romeril), 1151
- I'd Rather Be Right (Kaufman and Hart), 588, 757, 1402
- I'd Rather Be Right (Rodgers and Hart), 658
- Idris, Yusuf, 391
- If Camille Saw Me . . . (Dubillard), 376
- If It Die . . . (Gide), 530
- If I Were for Real (Sha), 90, 255, 1096
- If Not So (Pirandello), 1070
- If Not Thus (Pirandello), 717
- If There Is No Him (Piper), 1080
- If You Please (Breton and Soupault), 108, 1308
- If You're Glad I'll Be Frank (Stoppard), 1282
- If You Run Away, the Beast Catches You, If You Stay, the Beast Eats You Up (Vianna Filho), 1422
- Ignacio, José Cabrujas, 1419
- The Ignoramus and the Madman (Bernhard), 152
- The Ignorant Ones (Gallegos), 294
- I Have a Date with Spring (To), 1359
- I Have Been Here Before (Priestley), 1099
- Ihimaera, Witi, 963
- I Know Not the Man (Miyoshi), 913
- Iko, Momoko, 446
- Ikwo (Lill), 820
- Ilgan, Bonifacio, 658–659; The Nation's Worship, 1053
- Ilbjerri Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders' Theatre Co-operative (Melbourne, Australia), 79
- I Leave It to You (Coward), 406
- I Licked a Slag's Deodorant (Cartwright), 229
- Iliev, Konstantin, 206
- Iljovski, Vasil, 844
- The Ill-beloved (Benavente), 1269
- The Illegals (Weisenborn), 521
- illegitimacy, 870
- The Illegitimate Son (Dumas fils), 473, 659–660
- The Ill Girl (Vancura), 315
- I'll Leave It with You (Coward), 296
- I'll Marry When I Want (Ngugi and Ngugi), 15, 17, 19, 965
- illness, 151, 170, 730. See also specific illnesses
- Illness, or Modern Women (Jelinek), 730
- The Illusion (Kushner), 787
- Illyés, Gyula, 640
- Ilocano (language), 1052
- I Love So and So (Meng), 91
- I Love You Baby Blue (Theatre Passe Muraille), 660–661
- Image Exhibition Kidnappers (Abe Kōbō Studio), 2
- Image Makers (Enquist), 418
- Image Theater, 172
- The Imaginary Invalid (Molière), 1277
- The Imaginary Life of the Garbage-Collector Auguste-Geai (Gatti), 509
- imaginative ear, 435
- Imago (Kurochkin), 1170
- I Married You for Fun (Ginzburg), 533
- Imbalu Project (Uganda), 21
- The Incomparable Max (Lawrence and Lee), 804
- I Mike What I Like (Magogodi), 102
- Imitations for Saxophone. See For Saxophone (Treadwell)
- Imitha Players (East London, South Africa), 1264
- Immerman, Karl, 368
- The Immigrants (MacKaye), 848
- immigration, 764, 786, 1183, 1398
- The Immortalist (Gide), 530
- The Immortals (Goll), 541
- Imperatrix (Vojnović), 1430
- Imperceptible Mutabilities in the Third Kingdom (Parks), 1037
- Imperial Aleksandrinsky Theater (St. Petersburg), 721
- imperial Germany, 516–517
- imperialism, 776, 971
- The Imperialists at the Club Cave Canem (Mee), 888
- Imperial Japanese Theatrical Company, 757
- Imperial Theatre, 899, 1443
- Imperial Theatre (Japan), 1014, 1499
- Imperial Theatre (Moscow), 1205
- Imperial Theatre (Osaka), 758
- Imperial Theatre Monopoly (Russia), 1171
- Imphal Imphal (Thiyam), 1349
- The Importance of Being Earnest (Wilde), 280, 350, 364, 403, 608, 661, 699, 1121, 1374, 1468–1469
- The Importance of Being Oscar (MacLiammóir), 851
- imposibilismo and posibilismo, 1093–1094
- The Impossible Theater, A Manifesto (Blau), 106
- The Imposter (Usigli), 896, 1414
- The Impostor (Sha), 1229
- The Impostor (Spiró), 1272
- impotence, 1181
- impressionism, 83, 517, 1204
- The Impromptu of San Juan (Casas), 229
- improvization: Africa, 18; Australia, 75, 79; Brooks, Daniel, 202; documentary drama, 353; India, 665, 667; Iran, 692–693; Italy, 713, 1118–1119; Iwamatsu Ryō, 722; Laos, 798; Neilson, Anthony, 953; Raznovich, Diana, 1122; Rendra, 1131; Taiwan, 795; Thailand, 1118
- Impudence (Pinero), 1063
- I'm Talking about Jerusalem (Wesker), 410, 1455

- In Abraham's Bosom (Green), 557, 558, 661–662
- Inadmissible Evidence (Osborne), 1016
- In Agony (Krlježa), 781
- In a Land of Silence (Zong), 255, 662–663
- In a Strong City (Jakobsson), 655
- In August It Will Be Two Years (Cañas), 293
- In a Village (Gnedich), 1161
- INBA. See Instituto Nacional de Bellas Artes
- Inca people, 1046
- incendiary theater, 1426
- incest. See also sexual assault.
On Rafferty's Hill (Carr), 707; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1145; Royal Guests (Hernández), 1156; Shepard, Sam, 1233; The Simoom (Lenormand), 808; Tattoo (Loher), 830; Thirty Days in September (Dattani), 1347; Yerma (García Lorca), 1505
- In Chains (Hervieu), 475–476
- The Inchcape Bell (Fitzball), 890
- Incident at Vichy (Miller), 25, 906
- An Incident with a Paginator (Vampilov), 1167
- In Confidence (Hollingsworth), 622
- In Confidence: Dialogues with Amy Bock (Farrell), 964
- The Incorruptible (Nowra), 979
- The Incorruptible Man (Hofmannsthal), 620
- The Increasing Difficulty of Concentration (Havel), 316, 595
- Independence (Matura), 878
- The Independent Female (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
- Independent Means (Houghton), 628
- Independent Producers (New York), 1084
- independent theater movement, 52, 88–89
- Independent Theatre Society (ITS): Ibsen, Henrik, 402
- In Detached Parts (Tremblay), 869
- Index to Idioms (Margolin), 871
- India, 663–678; 20th century drama, 382, 577, 590, 596, 999; late–20th century drama, 328, 993, 996, 1021; dramaturgy, 596; Hindi theater, 525–526; incest recovery, 1347; indigenous performance, 1329; Janam, 590; jatra, 382–383; kutiyattam, 1021; Manipuri theater, 1348; Marathi theater, 1332; modern theater, 328, 596; post-independence, 387, 993, 1035, 1384; religious theater, 693; street theater, 590
- India, plays and playwrights:
Agra Bazaar (Tanvir), 28; Army Formation (Thiyam), 64; Bhagat, Datta, 158, 1154–1155; Dattani, Mahesh, 328, 996; Dutt, Utpal, 382; Elkunchwar, Mahesh, 993; Ghashiram Kotwal (Tendulkar), 525–526; Halfway House (Rakesh), 577; Hasmi, Safdar, 590; Karnad, Girish, 596, 753–754; Panikkar, Kavalam Narayana, 1021; Rakesh, Mohan, 577, 999, 1116–1117; Routes and Escape Routes (Bhagat), 1154–1155; Rudali (Ganguli), 1157–1158; Sharma, Tripurari, 1220–1221; Sircar, Badal, 1248–1249; Tanvir, Habib, 240; Theyyatheyyam (Panikkar), 1346
- Indiade, or The India of Their Dreams (Cixous), 267
- The Indiade, or the India of Their Dreams (Cixous), 913
- India Ink, 963
- Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Stoppard), 1283
- Indian Ink (Stoppard), 1282, 1284
- Indian Medicine Shows (Moses), 929
- Indian Mime Theatre, 674
- Indian People's Theatre Association (IPTA), 382, 667, 670–671, 673, 1329, 1333
- Indians (Kopit), 776
- Indian Summer (Schneider), 1317
- The Indian Wants the Bronx (Horovitz), 625, 1409
- India Song (Duras), 379, 486
- indigenous people and performance. See also traditional theater
- indigenous people and performance, by country or region: Africa, overview, 17; Australia, 76–80, 330; Cambodia, 212; Canada, 218, 375, 612; Central America, 1100; Central and Southern Africa, 20; East Africa, 18; India, 1329, 1348; Indonesia, 678–679, 1131; Israel, 710; Laos, 797; Malaysia, 591; Mexico, 1146; New Zealand, 960–961, 963; North America, 1100; Peranakan culture (Chinese Malay), 775; Peru, 1046; Philippines, 1050, 1051; South Africa, 101–102; Venezuelan drama, 1418; Vietnam, 1422–1423; West Africa, 23
- indirect action, 1392
- In Direklerarası (Erduran), 1387
- individualism, 187, 1166
- Indonesia, 678–680; avant-garde drama, 103, 104–105; Bengkel Teater, 679, 680, 1131; late–20th century drama, 274; ludruk and ketoprak genres, 275; Moths (Noer), 932; Rendra, 1131; Riantiarno, Nano, 274–275, 1135–1136; Sarumpaet, Ratna, 1190–1191
- Indonesian National Academy of Theatre (Jakarta), 679
- The Indrāns (Blaumanis), 800–801
- Indulis and Āija (Rainis), 1115
- industrialization, 695, 916–917, 1166, 1168
- Inermes (Piñera), 1063
- I Never Said I Was a Good Girl (Ott), 1419
- Inexpressible Island (Young), 1510
- infanticide, 782, 791, 1194, 1297, 1499
- Infanticide (Gorenstein), 1169
- An Infected Family (Tolstoy), 1363
- The Infernal Machine (Cocteau), 275, 480, 680–681, 1369
- Inferno (Lahola), 1254
- infidelity. See also family drama; male-female relationships. The Baker's Wife (Stein), 813; Italian theater, 714, 717; Koheiji Lives (Suzuki), 1310; Lady Windermere's Fan (Wilde), 793–794; Lion in the Streets (Thompson), 823; The Man Next Door (Iwamatsu), 722; Margaret Fleming (Herne), 870; The Real Thing (Stoppard), 1125; Reunion in Vienna (Sherwood), 1237; Rosmersholm (Ibsen), 1153
- Information for Foreigners (Gambaro), 681–682
- Inge, William, 682–683, 787, 959, 1406–1407; The Dark at the Top of the Stairs, 1408; Picnic, 1060
- Ing Magnape (Pablan), 1052
- In Good Hope (Heijermans), 603
- Inheritance (Rayson), 1122
- Inherit the Wind (Lawrence and Lee), 804, 1129, 1408

- In His Image, or Interrogation II* (Noer), 679
- In His Steps: What Would Jesus Do?* (Sheldon), 1128
- In Ibsen Land* (Kambanellis), 557, 750
- Injunction* (Arent), 1084
- Inkhwezi Players* (Grahamstown, South Africa), 1264
- The Inkwell* (Muñiz), 1270
- In Mizoura* (Thomas), 1349, 1398
- The Inn* (al-Ānī), 698
- Innaurato*, Albert, 683–684; Chicago, 510; A Chorus Line, 510; Gemini, 510, 1409; The Idiots Karamozov, 378
- Inner City Cultural Center* (Los Angeles), 1479
- Inner Voices* (De Filippo), 339
- Inner Voices* (Nowra), 979
- In New England Winter* (Bullins), 207
- Innocent Irene* (Betti), 156
- The Innocents Are Innocent* (Rychetski), 317
- In One Single Evening* (Naghiu), 947
- In on It* (MacIvor), 847
- Inoue Hisashi*, 684, 992
- Inoue Masao Company* (Japan), 1499
- Inoue's Theatre Gymnasium* (Japan), 913
- In Our Town* (Jack), 330
- In Perpetuity Throughout the Universe* (Overmyer), 1025
- In Praise of Santa Fe* (Fuentes de Arcos), 61
- Inquest* (Freed), 353
- The Inquiry* (Betti), 156
- Inquisition*, 817, 1180
- insanity*. See mental illness
- In Search of Happiness* (Rozov), 1166
- In Search of Modern China* (Yung), 1510
- In Search of the Cobra Jewels* (Fierstein), 450
- The Insect Comedy* (Čapek and Čapek), 224, 315, 685
- In Self-Defence* (Alrawi), 1029
- The Insensibility* (Saisio), 454
- In Service* (Tajovský), 1254
- Inside a Kid's Head* (Lawrence and Lee), 804
- Inside Story of Chao Yang Village* (Yang), 1501
- Inside the Island* (Nowra), 979
- Inside the Walls* (Nathansen), 342, 950, 1160, 1229
- Inside the Womb* (Miyoshi), 913
- An Inspector Calls* (Priestley), 407, 685–686, 1099
- Instant Café Theatre*, 862
- Institute for Research for Dutch Theatre*, 957
- Institute of Artistic Culture* (InKhuK) (Russia), 765
- Institute of Contemporary Art*, 877
- Instituto de Cultura Puertorriqueña* (Puerto Rico), 1106
- Instituto Nacional de Bellas Artes* (INBA), 897
- Instituto Nacional de Bellas Artes* (INBA) Award, 608
- Instituto Torcauto di Tella* (Argentina), 504
- The Insurance Man* (Bennett), 415
- INTAR, Hispanic Playwrights Lab* (New York), 308, 468, 989
- The Intelligent Belle* (Lerner), 1419
- The Intelligent Homosexual's Guide to Capitalism and Socialism with a Key to the Scriptures* (Kushner), 788
- interculturalism*, 212, 626, 686–687, 730, 1006
- intergenerational conflict*, 113
- Interior* (Maeterlinck), 107, 1513
- interior monologue*, 552, 1287
- intermedia*, 584–585, 622–623
- Intermezzo* (Giraudoux), 534
- intermodernism*, 16
- The International* (Lawson), 805
- International Copyright Act* (1887). See copyright laws
- International Emmy Award*, 1440
- International Festival of Nations* (Paris), 568
- International Fringe Festival* (New York), 924. See also Edinburgh Festival; Fringe First Award (Edinburgh)
- International Gombrowicz Festival* (Poland), 541
- International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union*. See Labor Stage (New York)
- International Theater School of Latin America and the Caribbean*, 924
- International Theatre Festival* (France), 1114
- International Theatre Institute* (ITI), 392
- Interrogating the Nude* (Wright), 1491
- Interrogation* (Noer), 971
- Interrogation I: In God's Image* (Noer), 679
- The Interrupted Act* (Różewicz), 1157
- Interrupted Dream of Red Chamber* (Xu), 1497
- intertextuality*, 762, 1184, 1205, 1289
- Interval* (Schön), 1419
- Interview in Buenos Aires* (Borovik), 1168
- Interwar drama*. See also Depression era. apocalypse, 54; art theater movement, 1001; avant-garde, 108–109; documentary drama, 352; librettists, 811–812; surrealism, 1307; Volksstück, 1431
- Interwar drama, plays and playwrights*: Abell, Kjeld, 3; Back to Methuselah (Shaw), 112; Barnes, Djuna, 123; Barry, Philip, 124; Beckett, Samuel, 130; Betti, Ugo, 156; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Bohemian Lights (Valle-Inclán), 174; Brecht, Bertolt, 190–193; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Čapek, Karel, 315; García Lorca, Federico, 507–508; The Hangman (Lagerkvist), 582, 795; Hasenclever, Walter, 589; Holiday (Barry), 621; Idiot's Delight (Sherwood), 657; Isherwood, Christopher, 708; Land of Volcanic Ash (Kubo), 796; Langer, František, 315, 797; Lenormand, Henri-René, 808–809; Loyalties (Galsworthy), 836; Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 899–900; Millay, Edna St. Vincent, 902; Miyoshi Jūrō, 913; Munk, Kaj, 938–939; O'Casey, Sean, 983; O'Neill, Eugene, 1001–1004; Rain from Heaven (Behrman), 1114–1115; R. U.R. (Čapek), 1159; Saroyan, William, 1187; Street Scene (Rice), 1137; Ten Lost Years (Luscombe), 840; Williams, Tennessee, 1472–1473
- In the Alps* (Jelinek), 730
- In the Bar of a Tokyo Hotel* (Williams), 1476
- In the Blood* (Parks), 1037
- In the Breakers* (Munk), 939
- In the Camp* (Krleža), 781
- In the Company of Men* (LaBute), 791
- In the Family* (Sánchez), 61, 1183
- In the Grip of Life* (Hamsun), 580
- In the Jungle of Cities* (Brecht), 191
- In the Lands of Columbus* (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- In the Lion's Den* (Mitterer), 86
- In the Long Darkness* (Sarumpaet), 1191

- In the Matter of* J. Robert Oppenheimer (Kipphardt), 521, 522, 617, 768
- In the Name of the Father, the Mother, and the Son* (Abu-Salim), 97, 1033
- In the Native State* (Stoppard), 1284
- In the Net* (Kisielewski), 1080
- In the Outskirts of Vitosha* (Yavorov), 206
- In the Plains of the Negev* (Mossinsohn), 95
- In the Porter's Lodge* (Verga), 1421
- In the Presence of a Clown* (Bergman), 149
- In the Retina* (Kurochkin), 1170
- In the Seventh Circle* (Gallegos), 294
- In the Shades of the Golden Palace* (Miciński), 1080
- In the Shadow of Love* (Garnier), 293
- In the Shadow of the Glen* (Synge), 687, 700, 701, 1321
- In the Solitude of the Cotton Fields* (Koltès), 774
- In the Stage-Wings of the Soul* (Evreinov), 431
- In the Summer House* (Bowles), 182, 687–688, 1407
- In the War* (Lanoye), 144
- In the Whirlwind* (Kitzberg), 428
- In the Wine Time* (Bullins), 207
- In the Zone* (O'Neill), 832, 1001
- In Three Colors* (Hassan), 590
- intifada*, Palestine, 1034
- intimacy*, 978
- Intiman Theatre* (Seattle), 837
- Intimate Apparel* (Nottage), 978
- Intimate Exchanges* (Ayckbourn), 110
- Intimate Theater*, 1297
- Intimate Theater* (Stockholm), 236, 527–528, 1298
- In Time o' Strife* (Corrie), 1201, 1213
- Into the Woods* (Lapine), 815
- In Transit Festival*, 1006
- Introduction to Monodrama* (Evreinov), 919
- The Intruder* (Benavente), 145
- The Intruder* (Maeterlinck), 107, 141, 854, 1318
- Inugami: The Dog God* (Terayama), 1334
- The Invaders* (Wolff), 1487
- The Invaluable Ridiculous Ones* (Molière), 1121
- The Invasion* (Adamov), 10, 1057
- The Invasion* (Leonov), 1166
- The Invention of Love* (Stoppard), 688–689, 1284
- The Investigation* (Weiss), 353, 521, 689, 1452
- Investigation and Analysis of Fifteen Divorce Cases* (Liu), 90
- The Investigation of the Murder in El Salvador* (Mee), 888
- Invisible Kids* (Foon), 463
- The Invisible Man* (Sherriff), 1236
- Invisible Sun* (De Groen), 340
- Invisible Theater*, 172
- The Invisible Town* (Saalbach), 1177
- Invitation to Death* (Villaurrutia), 896
- In Which We Serve* (Coward), 297
- In White America* (Duberman), 353
- In Worries and Power* (Hacks), 523
- In-Yer-Face* playwrights, 209, 953, 1058
- Iolanthe* (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
- Iona* (Sorescu), 1150
- Ionesco, Eugène*, 689–691; The Bald Soprano, 117, 483, 1062; The Chairs, 1057; Exit the King, 919; The Lesson, 483, 810, 1057; The Man with the Suitcases, 625; absurdism, 5, 360, 364, 378; Cargiale, Ion Luca, 225; College of
- Pataphysics*, 728; critic, 376; deconstruction, 337; on European avant-garde drama, 92; farce, 438; Goll, Yvan, 364; Horovitz, Israel, 625; Howe, Tina, 633; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; Little Carib Theatre Workshop, 1436; nouveau théâtre, 483; off-Broadway theater, 990; Ørnsbo, Jess, 1012; response to Tynan, 360; Romania, 1149; surrealism, 1308; theatricality, 1343
- Iorio's Daughter* (D'Annunzio), 325
- I Ought to Be in Pictures* (Simon), 1246
- Iphigenia in Orem* (LaBute), 791
- Ipi Zombi* (Bailey), 102
- I Played, I Danced* (Rainis), 1115
- IPTA. See Indian People's Theatre Association*
- Iran*, 691–697
- Iraq*, 697–699
- Iraq War*, 1300
- Iredyński, Ireneusz: An Altar to Himself*, 1082; A Modern Nativity Play, 1082
- Ireland*, 699–708. See also entries at Irish. 19th century drama, 279; 20th century drama, 228, 232, 585; antiwar drama, 981; Catholic democracy, 1108; censorship, 985; comedy, 280; dramaturgy, 370; Easter Rising, 1078; home rule movement, 427, 1078, 1373, 1503; Irish theater revival, 700–701; post-1956 drama, 1049
- Ireland, playwrights: Beckett, Samuel*, 126, 127, 585; Behan, Brendan, 137, 1111; Boucicault, Dionysius, 181, 279, 699; Carr, Marina, 228; Friel, Brian, 490–491, 1130; Gregory, Lady, 232, 558–559, 1274; Kilroy,
- Thomas, 766; McGuinness, Frank, 884, 981; McPherson, Conor, 886; Murphy, Tom, 1458; O'Casey, Sean, 702, 744–745, 985–986; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Shaw, George Bernard, 737, 1222–1228; Synge, John Millington, 687, 1138–1139, 1320–1322; Yeats, William Butler, 1503–1504
- I Remember Mama* (Van Druten), 1429
- Irigaray, Luce*, 1058
- Irish Academy of Letters*, 1223
- Irish Dramatic Revival*, 1111
- Irish language drama*, 1274, 1321
- Irish Literary Theater*, 404
- Irish Literary Theatre*, 559, 700, 1503
- Irish National Dramatic Society*, 1321
- Irish National Theatre Society: history*, 704; Synge, John Millington, 687, 701, 1138–1139; touring, 700; Yeats, William Butler, 1145, 1503
- The Irish Players*, 427
- Irish Players* (Dublin), 1399–1400
- Irish Republican Army*, 1216
- Irish Revival*, 181
- Iron* (Munro), 940
- Iron Age* (Haavikko), 454
- Iron Earth, Copper Sky* (Kemal), 1386
- The Iron Head* (Árnason), 655
- Irving, Henry*, 370, 400, 401, 403, 1063
- Irving, Jules*, 106
- Isaac Sheftl* (Pinski), 1508
- Isabella, Three Caravels and a Con-man* (Fo), 461
- Isak Juntti Had Many Sons* (Höijer), 1313
- Isayeva, Yelena*, 1170
- Isherwood, Christopher*, 70, 495, 708; The Ascent of F6, 68

- Ishimure Michiko, 970
 Isis (el-Saadawi), 392
 Islam, Islamic influence, 691–694, 1051, 1193
 The Island (Fugard), 18, 101, 497, 1252, 1263
 An Island Called Man (Tendulkar), 1333
 The Island of the Mighty (Arden and D'Arcy), 59
 Island Theatre (Limerick), 706
 Isma (Sarraute), 1188
 Ismene (Sato), 1193
 Isn't It Romantic (Wasserstein), 602, 1442 isolationism, 1292. See also Cold War
 Israel, 709–713. See also entries at Jewish; entries at Yiddish; Hebrew drama; Holocaust, Jewish; Judaism.
 alternative theaters, 96;
 Arabic theater, 1032; avant-garde drama, 94–97;
 Habima Theatre, 709;
 Munich (Kushner), 789;
 Reading Hebron (Sherman), 1123–1124, 1234–1235;
 Sorry (Galin), 1169; Yiddish theater, 1508
 Istanbul (Owens), 1026
 Istanbul City Theater (Turkey), 1385
 Istarú, Ana, 294
 The Italian Evening (Horváth), 85, 627
 Italian futurism. See futurism, Italian
 Italian Society of Authors and Publishers, 1097
 An Italian Straw Hat (Labiche), 437
 Italy, 713–720; late–19th century drama, 324; early–20th century drama, 324;
 20th century drama, 337, 373; avant-garde drama, 716; commedia dell'arte, 358; dramatic structure, 365; Fo's political theater and giullare, 282; Ibsen's influence, 648–649; Living Theatre, 829; Neapolitan comedy, 338; Parsina operatic dramas, 325; Playwrights Union, 248; Purimshpil, 1109; street theater, 232; theater of the grotesque, 248, 1338
 Italy, plays and playwrights: Betti, Ugo, 155; Chiarelli, Luigi, 247; D'Annunzio, Gabriele, 324; De Filippo, Eduardo, 337; Maraini, Dacia, 373; Pirandello, Luigi, 1139; Rame, Franca, 1118–1119
 It Can't Happen Here (Sinclair and Moffitt), 1084
 Ithaka (Benn), 108
 It Happened in Irkutsk (Arbuzov), 57, 1168
 It Hurts (Jacob), 1051, 1053
 ITI. See International Theatre Institute (ITI)
 Itim Ensemble (Israel), 96–97
 Itinerant Performer (Wu), 1492
 Itinerant Site-Specific Theater Festival, 898
 It Is Beautiful (Sarraute), 1188
 It Is No Dog (Herzberg), 957
 It Is Not Suicide (Dinsman), 861
 It Is Not Tall Grass Blown by the Wind (Hassan), 590, 720, 861
 It Isn't Cricket (Lord), 834
 It Is There (Sarraute), 484
 It Is Written (Dürrenmatt), 380
 It Pays to Advertise (Megrue and Hackett), 720–721
 It Rains on the Parade (Campas), 310
 ITS. See Independent Theatre Society (ITS)
 It's All Right to Be Woman Theater, 445
 It's All True (Sherman), 1235
 It's Burning (Peretz), 1507
 It Seem's a Lie (Villaurrutia), 896
 It's Only a Play (McNally), 885
 It's Raining (Stumbré), 801
 It's Raining in My House (Willems), 1470
 It Turns Around (Mundi), 95
 Ivanauskaitė, Jurga, 824
 Ivanko (Drumev), 205
 Ivan Mironych (Chirikov), 1162
 Ivanov (Chekhov), 243, 721–722, 1204, 1371
 Ivanov, Vsevolod, 1165; Armored Train No. 14–69, 927, 1164; The Blockade, 927
 Ivanov, Vyacheslav, 1164, 1174
 Ivan Vasil'yevich (Bulgakov), 205
 I've Seen God (Defilippis Novoa), 88
 Ivona (Gombrowicz), 541, 1081
 The Ivory Door (Milne), 406
 Ivšić, Radovan, 304
 Iwamatsu Ryō, 614, 722–723, 728
 I Want a Baby (Tretyakov), 1164, 1377
 I Want to Return (Pavlíček), 316
 Iwata Toyoo, 727
 I Will Fend for My Country (Heiberg), 602
 I Won, I Lost (Tendulkar), 1333
 Izumi Kyōka, 723–724, 1239, 1241
 Izumiya Dye Shop (Kinoshita), 784
 Jaafar, Johan, 861
 Jabberwock (Lawrence and Lee), 804
 Jab Tak Chamkay Sona (Knayetullah), 1028
 Jack Charles Is Up and Fighting (Australian Indigenous collaboration), 79
 Jackie the Jumper (Thomas), 1351
 The Jackpot (Aleichem), 1508
 Jacks and Kings (Oshodi), 1017
 The Jack's Leg (Cossa), 62
 Jackson, Barry, 370
 Jackson, N. Hart: The Two Orphans, 889–890
 Jackson, Peter, 962
 Jack Straw (Maugham), 878
 Jack Winter's Dream (Baxter), 961
 Jacob, Malou, 725; It Hurts, 1051, 1053; Juan Tambo, 1053; Macli-ing, 1053
 Jacobean court masque, 1342
 Jacobean playwrights, language of, 1078
 Jacobowsky and the Colonel (Behrman), 1405
 Jacob's Wake (Cook), 287
 Jacques, or The Submission (Ionesco), 690
 Jacques Damour (Hennique), 53
 Jacques Lecoq school (France), 1135
 Jad, Nihad, 392
 Jae Fleishhacker in Chicago (Brecht), 192
 Ja'far Khān Has Returned from Europe (Mogaddam), 695
 Jakarta Academy Arts Award, 1131
 Jakarta Arts Council Award, 1464
 Jake's Women (Simon), 1246
 Jakobsdóttir, Svava, 655
 Jakobson, August, 429
 Jakobson, Roman, 93, 466
 Jakobsson, Jökull, 654–655
 Jakuchō Setouchi, 970
 Jalal, Ibrahim, 698
 JalianwalBag (Dutt), 383
 Jamaican religious theater, 693
 James, C.L.R., 417
 James, Henry, 725–726, 951, 1397; Guy Domville, 573
 James Buller Memorial Award for Excellence in Aboriginal Theatre, 930
 James I, 1200
 Janáček, Leoš: Kátya Kabanová, 1357
 Janacweska, Noelle, 80
 Janam (Jana Natya Manch), 590
 Janco, Marcel, 108
 Janco, Marco, 319
 Jane Chambers Playwriting Award, 238, 420

- Janeczko, Paul, 1516
- Jane Eyre (Brontë), 1220
- Jane My Love (Shepherd), 77
- Jane Street Theatre (Sydney, Australia), 73, 75
- Jane Zadrógaz (Stefanovski), 845
- Jan Hus (Jirásek), 315
- Jānis, Jānis (Stumbre), 801
- Jánošík (Mahen), 315
- Jánošík (Rázusová-Martáková), 1254
- Jánošík According to Vivaldi (Feldek), 1254
- January (Radichkov), 206
- Janus Is a Girl (Usigli), 1414
- Japan, 726–728. See also angura; nō theater; shōgekijō;
shin kabuki; shingeki; shinpa.
 20th century drama, 599,
 620, 638, 1014; early–20th century drama, 422, 992, 1014; mid–20th century drama, 393; late–20th century drama, 614, 992,
 1020, 1361; all-women theater, 1323; avant-garde
 drama, 2, 97–99;
 censorship, 258; Claudel's influence, 269; dumb type theater, 498–499;
 experimental theater, 638;
 folktale plays, 1389;
 Japanese drama in England, 406; kabuki theater, 440; “little theatre,” 992; postwar avant-garde, 491; post–
 World War II drama, 621;
 proletariat movement, 913;
 puppet play, 614; quiet
 theater movement, 614;
 radio drama, 1014;
shinkokugeki, 620;
 surrealism, 599; talking motion pictures, 1014;
 theatricality, 1342;
 Western influence, 925;
 World War II drama, 621
- Japan, playwrights: Abe
 Kōbō, 2; Akimoto Matsuyo,
 29; Ariyoshi Sawako, 63;
 Betsuyaku Minoru, 155;
 Hōjō Hideji, 620; Hirata
 Oriza, 614; Inoue Hisashi,
 683; Iwamatsu Ryō, 722;
 Izumi Kyōka, 723; Kōkami
 Shōji, 772–773; Kara Jūrō,
 752; Katō Michio, 755;
 Kawakami Otojirō, 757–
 758; Kawatake Mokuami,
 758–759; Kinoshita Junji,
 767–768; Kishida Rio, 769–
 770; Kitamura Sō, 770;
 Kubo Sakae, 783–784, 796;
 Kubota Mantarō, 784–785;
 Mishima Yukio, 851–852;
 Ohashi Yasuhiko, 992;
 Okamoto Kidō, 992;
 Osanai Kaoru, 1014; Ōta
 Shōgo, 1020–1021; Sakate
 Yōji, 1180–1181; Satoh
 Makoto, 1193–1194; Senda
 Koreya, 1208–1209;
 Shimizu Kunio, 1238;
 Suzuki Senzaburō, 1310–
 1311; Suzuki Tadashi,
 1311; Terayama Shūji, 638;
 Weidman, John, 815;
 Yamamoto Yūzō, 1499;
 Yamazaki Masakazu,
 1499–1500
- Japan Foundation Award,
 1088
- Japan Playwrights
 Association, 614
- The Jar (Pirandello), 1070
- Jarrabin Trilogy (Hewett), 610
- Jarry, Alfred, 728–729; Caesar–
Antichrist, 54; The Four
Horsemen of the Apocalypse,
 54; Ubu Roi, 107, 360, 477–
 478, 691, 728, 1391; Ubu's
Almanac, 728; Ubu the Cuckold, 728, 1391; Ubu the
King, 477–478, 691, 716;
Ubu Trilogy, 6, 1391; Ubu
Unchained, 728, 1391;
 absurdism, 6; apocalypse,
 53; “comédie guignolesque,
Ubu Roi,” 360; influence on Artaud, 734; influence on Ghelderode, 526; influence on Gombrowicz, 542;
- Liberated Theatre, 93;
 Living Theatre, 1408;
 performance art, 1042;
 Théâtre Alfred Jarry, 67,
 1427; theatricality, 1343
- Jasieński, Bruno, 94;
 Mannequins' Ball, 1080
- Jasmine Flower (Wang), 1441
- Jasukaitytė, Vidmantė, 824
- jataka, 208, 797
- jatra, 382–383, 669–670
- Java, 799
- Javānmard, 'Abbas, 695
- Jav y Jos (Simón Escalona), 1419
- Jayashree, B., 671
- jazz, 729–730
- jazz revues, 93–94
- J.B.: A Play in Verse (MacLeish),
 849–850, 1130, 1407
- Jealousy (Artsybashev), 1162
- Jean and Richard (Thompson),
 1353
- Jean Cocteau Repertory
 Theatre (New York), 1477
- Jeanne d'Arc (MacKaye), 848
- Jefferson, Joseph, 1140–1141, 1203
- Jehanne of the Witches (Clark),
 268
- Jehovah Again in The Story of Sodom (Millán), 310
- Jelinek, Elfriede, 86, 152, 523,
 730–731, 1048
- Jellicoe, Ann, 370, 731–732;
 The Knack, 1088; The Sport of My Mad Mother, 409
- Jelly's Last Jam (Furth), 814
- Jelly's Last Jam (Wolfe), 1487
- Jenkin, Len, 732–733, 1412
- Jennie Once (Renée), 1132
- Jennie Richee (Wellman), 1454
- Jenofa Juncal, The Red Gipsy of Jaizkibel (Sastre), 1191
- Jensen, Uwe Jens, 370
- Jeprik (Indonesia), 103
- Jepsen, Erling, 342, 344, 733
- Jericho-Jim Crow (Hughes), 637
- Jerome, Jerome, 1130
- Jerome, J. K.: The Passing of the Third Floor Back, 405
- Jerome Fellowship, 1480
- Jerrold, Douglas, 892
- The Jerusalem Syndrome (Sobol),
 96, 711
- Jerusalem Theater Nights,
 1034
- Jessica (Griffiths), 561
- Jessie Award, 1420
- The Jest (Benelli and Sheldon),
 1230
- The Jester (Zíverts), 801
- Jesuit Theatrical Center
 (Fribourg), 1315
- Jesús (Pinero), 309
- Jesus Christ, 770, 1215, 1258,
 1264, 1295
- Jesus Christ Superstar, 1130
- The Jet of Blood (Artaud), 67,
 480, 733–734, 1181, 1308
- Jettatore (Laferrère), 61
- Jeune Scène (Dubé), 220
- Jewel (MacLeod), 734, 850
- The Jeweled Comb-Box and the
 Two Urashimas (Mori), 925,
 1241
- The Jeweler's Shop (Wojtyła),
 1081
- Jewish entries. See also Israel
- The Jewish Anna Karenina
 (Zolotarevsky), 1507
- The Jewish Cowboy (Gallo), 61
- Jewish diaspora: Argentina,
 61; Austria, 85; Fiddler on the Roof (Stein), 814; Małka
Szwarcenkopf (Zapolska),
 1513; Memorial Prayer
 (Gorin), 1168; New York
 City, 1137; Romania, 1149;
 Russia and the Soviet Union, 1162; Sailor's Silence
 (Galich), 1167; Sunset
 (Babel), 1164
- Jewish Enlightenment, 1109, 1506
- Jewish Homeland, 1030
- Jewish identity, 806
- The Jewish King Lear (Brecht),
 543
- The Jewish King Lear (Gordin),
 1507
- Jewish Theatrical Society, 928
- The Jewish Woman (Keith), 441
- The Jews (Chirikov), 1162

- Jews in Palermo (Goldfaden), 540
- Jew Suss, 703
- Jézabel (Boucher and Boulet), 180
- Jhering, Herbert, 359
- Jia Hongyuan, 90, 255
- Jiang Qing, 254–255, 506
- jidaïmono. See history plays
- Jika (Maponya), 1264
- The Jilts (Barry), 124
- Jiménez Rueda, Julio, 896
- Jim Jam Jems, 729
- Jim the Lionhearted (Kalisky), 749
- jingju, 1247
- jingoism, 757, 780
- Jin Yun, 735; Nirvana of Gou'er Ye, 255
- Jirásek, Alois, 315
- Jit, Krishen, 862
- Jitney (Wilson), 1413, 1479, 1480
- Jitters (French), 490, 735–736
- Joan Henry (Milner), 909
- Joan of Arc, 1179
- Joan of Arc (Anderson), 43
- Joan of Arc (Taylor), 1332
- Joan of Arc (Upits), 801
- Joan of the Park (Drábek), 317
- Joaquin, Nick, 736–737; Portrait of the Artist as a Filipino, 1052
- Joaquin, Sarah K., 736
- Joaquina Sánchez (Rengifo), 1418
- Job, 1235
- The Job (Caldwell), 729
- Job (Kokoschka), 773
- Job-Hunters (Vazov), 206
- Job's Books (Araujo), 189
- Jocaste (Fabien), 144
- Jochumsson, Matthías, 652
- Jodorowsky, Alexandro, 485, 584
- Joe Louis Puppet Theatre (Bangkok), 1338
- Joe Turner's Come and Gone (Wilson), 1479, 1480
- Joffré, Sara, 1045
- Joggsville Convention (Anderson), 42
- Johan Ulfstjerna (Hedberg), 1312
- John, Paul, George, Ringo . . . and Bert (Russell), 1159
- John Bull's Other Island (Shaw), 737; Court Theatre, 1225; dramatic cycle, 363; Granville-Barker production, 405; Irish themes, 699; O'Casey, Sean, 982; Royal Court Theatre, 701–702
- John Ferguson (Ervine), 427, 737–738
- John Gabriel Borkman (Ibsen), 738–739; aging, 651; Ibsen's final cycle, 876; New Century Theatre, 1144; Osanai Kaoru, 1014; translation, 925; Yamamoto Yüzō, 1499
- John Gassner Medallion, 974
- John Golden Theatre (New York), 33, 968, 974
- John Llewellyn Rhys Prize, 586
- Johnnie Darkie (Osborne), 1015
- Johnny Johnson (Green), 564
- John Silver, the Beggar of Love (Kara), 48, 752
- Johnson, Denis, 986
- Johnson, Eva, 79
- Johnson, Georgia Douglas, 739
- Johnson, Keith, 731
- Johnson, Stephanie, 964
- Johnson, Terry: Hysteria, 417
- Johnson, Yvonne: Stolen Life: The Journey of a Cree Woman, 1463
- Johnson Over Jordan (Priestley), 1099
- Johnston, Brian, 360
- Johnston, Denis, 703, 1504
- John Whiting Award, 877, 1152, 1282
- Johst, Hanns, 739–740; The Lonely One, 518; Schlageter, 520; Thing-Speil, 520
- Joint Stock Theatre Group, 264–265, 272, 446, 586, 740–741, 1124
- Jokela, Juha, 455
- The Joker of Seville (Walcott), 1436
- Jonah (Romeril), 1151
- Jonah (Sorescu), 741, 1260
- Jón Arason (Jochumsson), 652
- Jónasson, Jón Atli, 655
- Jonathan Bradford, or the Murder at the Roadside Inn (Fitzball), 890, 891
- Jones, Everett LeRoi. See Baraka, Amiri
- Jones, Henry Arthur, 402, 613, 700, 741–742; Mrs. Dane's Defense, 403; Saints and Sinners (Jones), 1129
- Jones, LeRoi. See Baraka, Amiri
- Jones, Margo, 1408
- Jones, Marie, 706
- Jones, Robert Edmond, 282, 284, 346, 742–743, 846, 1002–1004
- Jones, Stella: The Tree, 961
- Jones, Tom, 990
- Jones and Jones (O'Sullivan), 962
- Jonica (Heyward and Hart), 612
- Jonny spielt auf (Krenek), 729
- Jónsson, Bjarni, 655
- José Arreola, Juan, 897
- José de Lavardén, Manuel, 61
- José de Rosa, Rafael, 563
- José Martí Theater (Cuba), 356
- José Nuez Martín Prize, 1114
- Joseph and His Brethren (Odets), 989
- Joseph and His Brothers (Rainis), 1115
- Joseph and His Technicolor Dreamcoat, 1130
- Joseph Jefferson Award, 864
- Joseph Papp's Public Theater, 1087
- The Joss Adams Show (De Groen), 339
- Jotuni, Maria, 453
- joual (Quebec slang), 1249
- The Journalists (Wesker), 1455
- A Journal of the Plague Year, 1334
- Journey (to the East) 99 (Meng), 91
- The Journey of Sisa (Lapeña-Bonifacio), 799, 1053
- Journey's End (Sherriff), 743–744, 1236
- Journey to a War (Auden and Isherwood), 70
- Journey to Buenos Aires (Muskaria), 1082
- Journey to Ninveh (Amichai), 95
- Journey to the East (Yung), 1510
- Journey to the West (Lai), 796
- Journey to the West trilogy, 657
- Jouvet, Louis, 3, 107, 479, 718, 1184, 1379
- Jovanović Marambo, Vojislav. See Marambo, Vojislav
- Jovanović
- Joyce, James, 128, 271, 593, 985, 1226, 1284; Exiles, 915; Ulysses, 1374
- Joyful and Triumphant (Lord), 834
- The Joy of Living (Sudermann), 1303
- Joy to My Soul (Hughes), 637
- Jožko Pučik and His Career (Stodola), 1254
- J. T. Grein Award for Drama, 1027
- Juan Feldman (Richardson), 1138
- Juan Francisco de León (Ignacio Cabrujas), 1419
- Juan José (Dicenta), 1269
- Juan Moreira (Gutiérrez), 61
- Juan Tambar (Jacob), 725, 1051, 1053
- Jubilee (Tabori), 1323
- Judaism, 1109. See also Israel. Fires in the Mirror: Crown Heights, Brooklyn and Other Identities (Smith), 1255; Kushner, Tony, 786; Spiró, György, 1273; Stoppard, Tom, 1283; traditional views on theater, 539; traditions, 1108; Yiddish theater, 1505–1509

- The Judas Kiss (Hare), 414, 586
 Judas of Tirol (Schönherr), 82
 The Judge and His Hangman (Dürrenmatt), 380
 Judgement (Chashule), 844
 The Judge of Mount Athos (Celal), 1386
 The Judges (Wyspiański), 1493
 The Judge's Wife (Churchill), 263
 Judgment (Hernández), 310
 Judgment Day, 1261
 Judgment Day (Rice), 1137
 Judith (Giraudoux), 534
 Judith (Isayevea), 1170
 Judith (Tammsaare), 428
 Judith Anderson Theater (New York), 989
 Judson Church (Greenwich Village), 1411
 Judson Poets' Theatre (New York), 467, 990, 1232, 1409
 Juliet and Her Romeo (Klimenko), 1171
 Julius Caesar (Tolstoy), 926
 Julliard (publisher), 65
 Julliard School (New York), 975
 Jullien, Jean, 366
 Jumpers (Stoppard), 58, 411, 1283
 Jumping Jack (Raznovich), 1122
 Jumping the Gun (Görgey), 640
 Junction Avenue Theatre Company (South Africa), 101–102, 1264
 Junction Theatre Cin (Australia), 73
 Junebug Graduates Tonight (Shepp), 729
 June Moon (Lardner and Kaufman), 744, 800
 June Theatre, 1193
 Jungian psychology, 390, 1105, 1287
 Jungk, Robert: Brighter than a Thousand Suns, 1059
 Jungle Coup (Nelson), 954
 Jungle of Cities (Brecht), 108, 518
 Jung Wien writers, 82, 1196
 Jun'iichirō, Tanizaki, 723
 Junji, Kinoshita: Twilight Crane, 1389
 Juno (Blitzstein), 168
 Juno (Stein), 813
 Juno and the Paycock (O'Casey), 702, 744–745, 983, 985
 Jurists (Hochhuth), 521–522
 Jurkāns, Jānis, 801
 Jūrō, Kara, 1361
 The Jury (Klíma), 316
 The Just (Camus), 482
 Just a Little Simple (Childress), 249
 The Just Assassins (Camus), 216
 Just for Nothing (Sarraute), 484 justice, 947, 1426, 1498
 Just Say No (Kramer), 778
 Kaatje Kekkelbeck, or Life among the Hottentots (Bains), 1262
 kabuki: The First Flowers of Ueno (Kawatake), 759; Izumi Kyōka, 723; Kara Jūrō, 752; Kawakami Otojirō, 757; Kawatake Mokuami, 758; The Kitchen (Wesker), 486; Mayama Seika, 880–881; Mishima Yukio, 910; Mori Ōgai, 925; overview, 440; shingeki, 1238; shin kabuki, 1240–1241; shinpa, 1241; super kabuki, 1241; Tale of Shuzenji, 1324; Tsubouchi Shōyō, 422, 726, 1382
 Kacarov, Trajche, 845
 Kacyzne, Alter, 1507
 Kaddish (Williamson), 76
 Kafka, Franz, 321, 437
 Kafka's Dick (Bennett), 415
 Kafta, Franz, 1323
 kailyard writers (Scotland), 1200
 Kainy, Miriam, 712
 Kairalee Kala Nilayam (Singapore), 1247
 Kaiser, Georg, 520, 747–748, 783; The Burgers of Calais, 518; The Coral, 518; From Morning to Midnight, 108, 433, 494, 518, 575; Gas trilogy, 54, 518
 Kaison the Priest of Hitachi (Akimoto), 29, 48
 Kajzar, Helmut: Pater Noster, 1082
 A Kakamas Greek (Herbert), 1263
 Kakutani, Michiko, 1141
 Kaladharan, K., 671
 Kalidasa, 664
 Kalidas Elphinstone Society (India), 664
 Kalinangan Ensemble, 1050
 Kalinga language, 1051
 Kalisky, René, 144, 487, 749, 749
 Kalldewey, Farce (Strauss), 1288
 Kallidas Samman Award for Theatre, 1036
 Kallman, Chester, 71
 Kamala (Tendulkar), 1333
 Kamāl al Vezāreh, Ahmad Mahmud, 694
 Kamban, Guðmundur, 653–654
 Kambanellis, Iakovos, 556, 750
 Kambar, Chandrasekhar, 671
 Kambyssis, Giannis, 555
 Kamerny Teatr (Russia), 368
 Kamikaze! (de María), 1045
 Kamiriithu Cultural and Community Association (Kenya), 15, 19, 965
 Kamkwatira, Gertrude, 23
 Kammerspiele (Berlin), 960, 1127
 Kammerspiele (Munich), 12, 768
 Kammerspiel-Haus (Berlin), 236
 Ka Mountain (Wilson), 423
 Ka Mountain and Gardenia Terrace (Wilson), 696
 Kamov, Janko Polić, 304
 Kamron Kunadilok (Thailand), 104
 Kanafani, Ghassan, 1032
 Kander, John, 354
 Kandinsky, Wassily, 108
 Kane, Sarah, 219, 409, 750–751, 1058; Blasted, 166, 417
 Kani, John, 101
 Kanin, Garson, 751–752, 1407
 Kanna's Homecoming (Small), 1264
 Kanojo i (Makino), 860
 Kant, Immanuel, 951
 Kan Takayuki, 98
 Kantan (Mishima), 910
 Kantor, Tadeusz, 87, 541, 696
 Kanyuk, Yoram, 97
 Kaprow, Alan, 105, 239, 1411
 Karachi Theater (Pakistan), 1028
 Kara Group (Japan), 752
 karagyozy, 844
 Kara Jūrō, 752; The Virgin's Mask, 1425; angura, 48, 99, 727; avant-garde drama, 723; Kitamura Sō, 770; Noda Hideki, 970; Ōta Shōgo, 1020; Waseda Little Theater, 1311
 Karamu Theater (Cleveland, Ohio), 637
 Karaosmanoğlu, Yakup Kadri: The Downpour, 1386
 Kareno, Ivar, 505
 Kareno trilogy (Hamsun), 505
 Karge, Manfred, 1049
 Karimkuttu (Panikkar), 1036
 Karinthy, Ferenc, 640
 Karinthy, Frigyes, 92, 640
 The Karl Marx Play (Owens), 1026 karma, 1249
 Karnad, Girish, 668, 671, 753–754, 1384; Hayavadana, 596
 Kárpáti, Péter, 641
 Karpov, Yevtikhy, 1161
 Karpowicz, Tymoteusz, 1081
 Kartún, Mauricio, 62
 Karvaš, Peter, 754–755, 1254; Absolute Prohibition, 4
 Karya, Teguh, 1136
 Kashinama (Ganguli), 505
 Kaspar (Handke), 152, 580, 755, 1049
 Kassák, Lajos, 92
 Kaštelan, Lada, 305
 Kastner (Lerner), 96

- Kat and the Kings (Kramer and Peterson), 1262
- Katarína (Lavrík), 1255
- Katatura (Philander), 22
- Katayev, Valentin, 1164, 1166
- kathakali actors, 1036
- Katharina Knie (Zuckmayer), 1518
- Kathleen and Frank (Isherwood), 708
- Katie Roche (Deevy), 704
- Katinka (Harbach), 811
- Katō Michio, 755–756; Naotake, 727
- katsureki geki. See living history plays (katsureki geki)
- Kátya Kabanová (Janáček), 1357
- Katz, Leon, 371
- Katzelmacher (Fassbinder), 438, 522
- Kauffmann, Stanley, 31, 123, 371
- Kaufman, George S., 756–757; The American Way, 279, 944; Beggar on Horseback (with Connelly), 137; Dinner at Eight, 348; I'd Rather Be Right (Rodgers and Hart), 658; June Moon (with Lardner), 744; The Man Who Came to Dinner, 279; Of Thee I Sing, 1085; Once in a Lifetime, 279, 997; Stage Door (with Ferber), 1276; You Can't Take It With You (with Hart), 279, 1509; collaboration with Ferber, 348; comedy, 279; Connelly, Marc, 284; Depression era, 1401–1404; Hart, Moss, 588; librettos, 812; overview, 1400–1401; play doctor, 371
- Kaufman, Moisés, 645
- Kaupēns, My Dear! (Zālīte), 802
- Kawadwa, Byron, 20
- Kawaguchi Matsutarō, 1241
- Kawakami Otojirō, 723, 757–758, 1241
- Kawakami-za (Japan), 757
- Kawatake Mokuami, 726, 758–759, 1240, 1310
- Kawatake Shinshichi II. See Kawatake Mokuami
- Kazablan (Mossinsohn), 710
- Kazan, Elia, 213, 233, 350, 905, 906, 1424
- Kazan, Ella, 1083
- Kazantsev, Aleksei, 1170
- Kazantzakis, Nikos, 556
- Kazembe and the Portuguese (Masiye), 22
- Kean (Dumas fils and Sartre), 1189
- Kean (Stone), 814
- Kean, Charles, 370
- Keane, John B., 707, 1049
- Keatley, Charlotte: My Mother Said I Never Should, 416
- Keaton, Buster, 893
- The Kedrov Sisters (Grigoryev-Istomin), 1162
- Keefe, Barrie, 740
- The Keep (Thomas), 629, 759–760, 1351
- Keep 'Em Laughing (Fischer), 1405
- The Keepers (Maza), 79
- The Keepers of the Lighthouse Cliff (Murdoch), 331
- Keep Everything You Love (Brown), 73
- Keeping a Lion: Rikyū and Hideyoshi (Yamazaki), 1500
- Keep It Flying (Kerr et al.), 764
- Keep Tightly Closed in a Cool Dry Place (Terry), 1336
- keertans, 665
- Kee Thuan Chye, 104, 862
- Kehaidis, Demetris, 556
- Keith, Judith, 441
- Keller, Gottfried, 1315
- Kelly, Gene: The Time of Your Life (Saroyan), 1358
- Kelly, George, 760, 1401
- Kelly, Ray, 79
- The Kelly Dance (Romeril), 1151
- Kelvedon, Marie. See Kane, Sarah
- Kemal, Namik: Homeland, or Boatswain's Pipe, 1385
- Kemal, Orhan: Murtaza the Watchman, 1386; Snowbirds, 1386
- Kemal, Yaşar: Iron Earth, Copper Sky, 1386; Tinplate, 1386
- Kemala, 861
- Kemble, Charles, 370
- Kemp, Jenny, 760–761
- Kemp, Robert, 1201
- Kempton, Murray, 1424
- Keneally, Thomas, 73
- The Kenji Incident (Kitamura), 770
- Kenna, Peter: The Slaughter of St. Teresa's Day, 73
- Kennedy, Adam, 763
- Kennedy, Adrienne, 337, 468, 761–763, 1037, 1087, 1105, 1412, 1454; An Evening with Dead Essex, 164; Funnyhouse of a Negro, 106, 990, 1410; Motherhood 2000, 55
- Kennedy, Charles Rann, 1130
- Kennedy Center Honors, 33, 1246, 1477
- Kente, Gibson, 1264, 1265
- Kent Oyuncuları (Turkish theater company), 1387
- Kentridge, William, 102
- Kenya, 15, 18, 965
- Kerata, Laco, 1255
- Kereishi, Hanif. See Kureishi, Hanif
- Kermes (Krléža), 781
- Kern, Jerome, 811, 812
- Kerr, Alfred, 359
- Kerr, Lois Reynolds, 763–764
- Kerr, Walter, 1111, 1281, 1461
- Kertész, Ákos, 640
- Kėrvė-Mickevič, Vincas, 824
- Kerzhentsev, Platon, 1171
- Kesselring Prize, 390
- The Key (al-Ānī), 698
- The Key (Uslar Pietri), 1418
- Key Largo (Anderson), 43
- Key Searchers (Örkény), 1011
- The Keys to the Animal Room (Murray), 73
- Khadiklar, Krishnaji Prabhakar, 667
- Khaketla, N. M., 21
- Khalaj, Esmā'il, 696
- Khalkhālī, Abdolrahim, 694
- Khan, Hatta Azad, 861
- Khan-Din, Ayub, 764–765; East Is East, 1029
- Khān, Malkām, 693
- Khantshe in America (Rakov), 1507
- Kharms, Daniil Ivanovich, 101, 765–766, 1165, 1172, 1174
- Khasye the Orphan Girl (Gordin), 1507
- khayal, 673, 1221
- Khayyāt, Yūsuf, 693
- Khlebnikov, Velimir, 841, 1163, 1164; Mrs. Lenin, 919
- Khlebnikov, Victor, 500
- Kholstomer (Tolstoy), 1364
- Khrushonich, Aleksei, 99
- Khrushchev, Nikita, 1257
- Kichida Rōchi, 972
- The Kid (Gow), 547
- Kiddush (Hasfari), 711–712
- Kid Stakes (Lawlor), 802
- Kierkegaard, Søren, 975–976, 1054, 1293
- Kihnu Jõnn (Smuul), 429
- Kikuchi Kan, 440–441; The Father Returns, 727; shingeki, 1238
- The Kildeer (Reaney), 1125
- Kilian, or The Yellow Rose (Kornfeld), 777
- The Killer (Ionesco), 690
- Killers (Janam), 590
- Killing Is Too Good for You (Pieczyński), 1082
- The Killing of Blanqui, Spring in Shanghai (Satoh), 1193
- The Killing of Sister George (Marcus), 510
- The Killing of Yablonski (Nelson), 954
- Killy, Walter, 1518
- Kilroy, Thomas, 704–706, 766, 1049, 1504; Double Cross, 450
- Kiltartan language. See Irish language drama

- The Kimberly Train (Sowden), 1263
- Kim Myung-Hwa, 614
- Kimura Taro, 970
- Kinck, Hans E., 976
- Kincora (Gregory), 559
- Kind Ness (Chong), 260
- A Kind of Hades (Norén), 973
- The Kind of the Alps (Raimund), 1431
- The King (Bjørnson), 163
- The King (Johst), 740
- The King (Lagerkvist), 795
- The King (Yushkevich), 1162
- King, Alexander, 177
- King, Rodney: Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992 (Smith), 1255
- King Ahasuerus (Goldfaden), 540
- The King and I (Rodgers and Hammerstein), 813
- The King and Me (Kureishi), 786
- King Baabu (Soyinka), 24
- King Bombance (Marinetti), 716
- King Chulalongkorn. See Rama V
- King David (Sorge), 1261
- The King Dislikes Beef (Blažek), 316
- Kingdom of Earth (Williams), 1475–1476
- The Kingdom of God (Martínez Seirra), 873
- King Emene (Sofola), 24
- The King Feels Cold (Tammsaare), 428
- King Glutton (Marinetti), 107
- King Golgrutha (Sewell), 1215
- King Gopichand (Bhave), 665
- King Gordogan (Ivšić), 304
- King Hedley II (Wilson), 1480
- King Hit (Australian Indigenous collaboration), 79
- King John (Dürrenmatt), 381
- King John (Kemble), 370
- King Kong (African Music and Drama Association), 1262
- King Lear (Shakespeare): Bearskin (Sowerby), 1266; Dentro (Streeruwitz), 1289; The Jewish King Lear (Gordin), 1507; Kishida's adaptation, 769; Lear (TheatreWorks), 1248; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Meet Lear (Stoppard), 1282; The Tale of Lear (Suzuki), 1311
- King Library, Miami University (Oxford, Ohio), 1414
- King Midas (Heiberg), 601, 976
- King Oedipus (Hofmannsthal), 619
- The King of Carelia (Leino), 453
- King of Hearts (Stein), 813
- The King of Salamis (Runeberg), 452
- The King on the Square (Blok), 169
- King Revel (Marinetti), 499, 871
- The King's Henchman (Millay), 902
- King Si Thammasokarat (Chandrabhabha), 240
- Kingsley, Sidney, 334, 766–767; Dead End, 333; Men in White, 564, 895, 987, 1403; The Patriots, 1405–1406
- The King's New Clothes (Aloni), 710
- Kings of the Road (Hirata), 614
- The King's Pillow (Ng'ombe), 22
- The King's Threshold (Yeats), 687, 700
- King Ubaku (Soyinka), 1267
- King Vajiravudh. See Rama VI (King Vajiravudh)
- King Vávra (Uhde), 316
- Kinjeketile (Hussein), 19
- Kinokuniya Drama Award, 1238
- Kinokuniya Hall (Tokyo), 491
- Kinokuniya Theatre Award: Iwamatsu Ryō, 722; Kōkami Shōji, 772; Makino Nozomi, 860; Ōta Shōgo, 1020, 1444; Watanabe Eriko, 1444
- Kinoshita Junji, 727, 767–768, 970, 1240
- Kinoshita Mokutarō, 784
- Kipphardt, Heinar, 768–769, 991, 1076; In the Matter of J. Robert Oppenheimer, 521, 522, 617
- Kirche, Kuchen, und Kinder (Williams), 1477
- Kirkland, Jack, 1404
- Kirloskar, Balwant Krishna, 666
- Kirov-Majski, Nikola, 844
- Kirshner, Sidney. See Kingsley, Sidney
- Kirshon, Aleksandr, 1257
- Kirshon, Vladimir, 1165–1166; Bread, 928
- Kirtane, Vinayak Janardan, 665
- Kirtivilas (Gupta), 668
- Kiru (Noda), 971
- Kısakürek, Necip Fazıl: Money, 1386; Seed, 1386; To Create a Man, 1386
- Kisaragi Koharu, 769
- Kisaragi Koharu the 300, 1443
- Kishida, Tatsuya: Mon Paris, 1324
- Kishida Company, 769
- Kishida Jimusho+Rakuten-dan (Japan), 769
- Kishida Kunio, 727, 924, 1239
- Kishida Kunio Drama Prize: Abe Kōbō, 2; Betsuyaku Minoru, 49, 155; Iwamatsu Ryō, 722; Kōkami Shōji, 772; Kara Jūrō, 752, 1425; Kishida Rio, 769; Ohashi Yasuhiko, 992; Ōta Shōgo, 1020; Sakate Yōji, 1180; Satoh Makoto, 1193; Shimizu Kunio, 1238; Tsuka Kōhei, 69, 1383; Watanabe Eriko, 1443
- Kishida Rio, 769–770; Knock, 1334
- Kishida Rio Company, 769
- Kishida's Literary Theater (Japan), 1328
- Kishida's Modern Theater Institute (Japan), 1328
- Kisielewski, Jan August: In the Net, 1080
- Kissing Christine (Shanley), 1219
- Kissinger, Henry, 1229
- Kiss Me, Kate (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
- Kiss of the Spider Woman (McNally et al.), 815, 885
- Kiss the Boys Goodbye (Boothe), 177
- Kitarō the Ghost Buster (Watanabe), 1443, 1444
- Kitchen (Kurochkin), 1170
- The Kitchen (New York), 991, 1412, 1454
- The Kitchen (Wesker), 486, 913, 1455
- Kitchen Lights (Iwamatsu), 722
- The Kitchen of Laughter (Yevreinov), 1163
- kitchen-sink playwrights, 47, 340, 407
- Kittel, Frederick August. See Wilson, August
- Kitzberg, August, 428
- Kivi, Aleksis, 452, 454
- Kivimaa, Arvi, 454
- Kivirähk, Andrus, 429
- Kivuli and Other Plays (Yirenkyi), 23
- Kjær, Nils, 976
- Kjellström, Axel. See Hasenclever, Walter
- The Klagsman (Dixon), 893
- Klauber, Adolph, 1214
- Klaus, the Lord of Louhikko (Jotuni), 453
- Kleines Theater, 1127
- Kleist, Heinrich von, 1289
- Kleist Prize (Germany), 191, 359, 374, 626, 1261, 1326
- The Kleist Variations (Bentley), 147
- Klíma, Ivan, 316, 317
- Klimáček, Viliam, 1255
- Klimenko, Vladimir (Klim), 1171
- Klompé, Marga, 957
- K. M., Saini, 680
- The Knack (Jellicoe), 731, 771, 1088

- Knäyetullah, Anwar: Jab Tak Chamkay Sona, 1028
- Knickerbocker Holiday (Anderson), 43
- A Knife in the Heart (Yankowitz), 1501
- Knight, G. Wilson, 1267
- Knight, Virginia Coyne, 764
- Kighthood for theater contributions (England), 400, 403, 404
- A Knight Passed By (Fabricius), 955
- The Knights of the Round Table (Cocteau), 275–276
- The Knights of the Round Table (Hein), 524, 604
- Knipper, Olga, 1355, 1392
- Knock (Romains), 281
- Knock (Terayama), 49
- Knock (Terayama and Kishida), 1334
- Knock, or The Triumph of Medicine (Romains), 480
- The Knot of Midas (Dilmen), 1387
- Knots in the Cable (Brink), 1263
- Knowles, Fiona, 939
- Knox, John, 1199, 1200
- Knuckle (Hare), 586
- Knudsen, Erik, 343, 344
- Knutzon, Line, 771–772; Soon the Time Will Come, 344, 1260
- Kobrin, Leon, 615, 1507
- Kodi, I Ketut, 680
- Koestler, Arthur, 767
- Koheiji Lives (Suzuki), 1310
- Kohout, Pavel, 316, 317
- Koidula, Lydia, 428
- Kōiv, Madis, 429
- Kok, Meas, 212
- Kōkami@network (Japan), 772
- Kōkami Shōji, 728, 772–773
- Kokoschka, Oskar, 589, 773; Murderer, Hope of Women, 108, 432, 830, 956; Only Hope for Woman, 432; Sphinx and Strawman, 108; Viennese Trilogy, 83
- Kokovkin, Sergei, 1169
- Kolakowski, Leszek, 1081
- The Kolin Chain (Bronnen), 201
- Kolkata, India, 328, 383, 668–670, 999
- Koltès, Bernard-Marie, 773–774, 809, 1418; The Night Just Before the Forests, 487; Roberto Zucco, 1142–1143
- Kolyada, Nikolai, 1169
- Koma (Manaka), 1265
- Komaba Agora Theatre (Japan), 614
- The Komagata Maru Incident (Pollock), 1088
- Komatsu theater troupe, 684
- Komedy, 1051
- Komissarzhevskaja, Vera, 1355
- Komissarzhevskaja Theater (Russia), 169, 817, 1107, 1174
- Kon, Stella, 775, 1247, 1248
- Kondo le requin (Phiya), 25
- Kongi's Harvest (Soyinka), 1267
- Königstheater (Berlin), 368
- Konstantinov-Djinot, Jovan Hadji, 844
- Kooemba Jdarra (Brisbane, Australia), 79
- Kopit, Arthur, 775–776, 1105, 1409
- Kopkov, Aleksandr, 1165
- Koppel, Herman D., 3
- Korea, Koreans, 614, 1383
- Korkiya, Viktor, 1171
- Kornfeld, Paul, 776–777
- Kornis, Mihály, 641
- Koromilas, Demetrios, 555
- Korsh's Theater (Moscow), 721
- Korsh Theater (Moscow), 242, 243
- Kossuth Prize (Hungary), 1011, 1038
- Kostov, St. L., 206
- Kostov, Vladimir, 845
- Kotler, Oded, 96
- Kott, Jan, 371
- Kotylyova, Olga, 1162
- Kotzebue, August von, 367
- Kouka, Hone, 777–778
- Koun, Karolos, 750
- Koutoukas, H. M., 990
- Kovačević, Dušan, 1211
- Kováčik, Peter, 1254
- Králik, Štefan, 1254
- Kramer, Daniel, 1130
- Kramer, David, 1262
- Kramer, Larry, 778–779, 787, 1412; The Normal Heart, 511, 1087
- Kranz, Herbert, 956
- Krapp's Last Tape (Beckett), 132, 779, 1299, 1367, 1408
- Kraus, Jan, 317
- Kraus, Karel, 1366
- Kraus, Karl, 54, 82, 271, 780
- Krausism, 1042
- Krechinsky's Wedding (Sukhovo-Kobylin), 1160
- Krejča, Otomar, 1366
- Kremlin Chimes (Pogodin), 1166
- Krenek, Ernst, 729
- The Kreutzer Sonata (Mitchell), 913
- Krishna's Dairy (Rajan), 963
- Krisis (Berman), 150
- Kristensen, Sven Møller, 3
- Kristeva, Julia, 1058
- Kristl, Lukas, 627
- Kristofor Kolumbo (Krléža). See Cristoval Colon (Krléža)
- Krizanc, John, 780–781; Tamara, 218, 1328
- Krle, Risto, 844
- Krléža, Miroslav, 781–782; Arethaeus, 304; Honorable Glembays, 304; Vučjak, 304
- Kroetz, Franz Xaver, 458, 782–783, 1431; Mensch Meier: A Play of Everyday Life, 522; Neither Fish nor Fowl, 522; The Nest, 522
- Krog, Helge, 976
- Kron, Aleksandr, 1166
- Kron, Lisa, 457, 511
- Kruchenykh, Alexander: Victory Over the Sun, 500
- Kruchyonykh, Aleksei, 1163
- Kruczkowski, Leon, 1256
- Kruszewska, Felicja: A Dream, 1080
- Krutch, Joseph Wood, 934, 1287
- Kruusvall, Jaan, 429
- Krylov, Viktor, 1161
- Krymova, Natalya, 1172
- Kuala Lumpur, 809
- Kuali Works, 862
- Kubo Sakae, 727, 783–784, 1240; Land of Volcanic Ash, 796
- Kubota Mantarō, 723, 784–785, 1014
- Kubrick, Stanley, 1198
- Kudret, Cevdet: The Living Dead, 1386; The River Flowing in Reverse, 1386; Wolves, 1386
- Kugel, Aleksandr, 1171
- kukla oyunu, 1384
- Ku Klux Klan, 1286
- Kulbak, Moyshe, 1508; Boytire the Bandit, 929
- Kullark (Davis), 79, 330
- Kulundžic, Josip, 1210
- Kundera, Milan, 316
- Kunio Kishida, 1328
- Kunio Kishida Drama Prize, 1361
- Kunio Yanagita: A Compendium of Japanese Legends, 1389
- kuqu theater, 451
- Kunta Theatre, 1479
- Kuo Pao Kun, 104, 785, 1247; The Coffin is Too Big for the Hole, 276; Lao Jiu—Ninth Child, 1006
- Kureishi, Hanif, 785–786; My Beautiful Laundrette, 1029
- Kurochkin, Maksim, 1169, 1170
- Kurtz, Swoosie, 1393
- Kushida Kazuyoshi, 48
- Kushner, Tony, 786–789. See also Angels in America. Homebody/Kabul, 14, 1088; apocalypse, 55; HIV/AIDS, 1412; influenced by O'Neill, 1005; influenced by Williams, 234; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; New Dramatists, 959; off-Broadway theater, 1411;

- political drama, 218;
Public Theater, 1412
- Kusum Agromba (Ghana), 1310
- kutiyattam performance, 1021, 1035
- Kuwait, Iraqi invasion, 1034
- Kuzmin, Mikhail, 1163, 1174
- Kvaran, Einar Hjörleifsson, 653
- Kwei-Armah, Kwame, 219
- Kwigwa Players, 739
- kyōgen theater, 799, 969
- Kyōtarō, Izumi. See Izumi Kyōka
- Labad, Lutgardo, 1051
- La Bamba (Valdez), 1415
- La Barraca (Spain), 369, 507, 1339
- La batalla teatral (Araquistain), 1339
- Labatt Award (Canada), 287
- Laberge, Marie, 221
- Labiche, Eugène, 437; Mr. Perrichon's Trip, 473
- La Boite (Brisbane, Australia), 75
- Laboremus (Björnson), 163
- labor issues, as theme. See also class, class politics; working class. Aristocrats (Pogodin), 1166; Chinese factory life, 811; exploitation of workers, 667, 673; The Holy Family (Värnlund), 1312; Indonesia, 678, 679; Ireland, 702; Luscombe, George, 840; The Nest (Kroetz), 783; Night and Day (Stoppard), 1283; Ohel workers theatre (Israel), 709; R.U.R. (Čapek), 1159; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1168; Sagina Mahato (Sircar), 1248; Sharma, Tripurari, 1221; The Struggle of the Naga Tribe (Rendra), 1299; The Sun Will Rise for the Workers (Junction Avenue Theatre Company), 1264; U.S. Depression era, 1401–1404
- Labor Stage (New York), 1084
- labor unions, 1083
- LaBute, Neil, 791; The Shape of Things, 1219–1220
- Labyrinth (Hervieu), 476
- The Labyrinth* (Smoček), 316
- The Labyrinth of the Heart* (Pavlíček), 316
- La Cage aux Folles* (Fierstein and Herman), 451, 510
- Lacan, Jacques, 267, 1105
- La Capilla* (Mexico City), 1146
- LaChiusa, Michael John, 815
- Lācis, Vilis, 801
- Lackeys (Gnedich), 1161
- Lacomba, José, 1106
- La Comedia Mexicana*, 981
- La compagnia blue*, 866
- La Comune* (Italy), 6, 461
- Lāčplēsis* (Pumpurs), 1115
- La Cubana* (Spain), 232
- Ladders of Fools* (Brenton), 197
- Ladies and Gentleman* (Hecht and MacArthur), 494
- The Ladies and the Senator* (Montano), 1052
- Ladies at the Alamo* (Zindel), 1516
- Ladies Night* (Sinclair and McCarten), 962
- The Ladies Should Be in Bed* (Zindel), 1516
- The Ladies' Tailor* (Feydeau), 449
- la douche écossaise*, 1340
- Laduma* (Kente), 1264
- Lady Amarapa* (Chaimano and Wangthawisap), 1338
- Ladybird, Ladybird* (Munro), 939
- Lady Caroline Lamb* (Bolt), 175
- The Lady Dick* (Hughes), 636
- Lady Frederick* (Maugham), 406, 878
- The Lady from Dubuque* (Albee), 32
- The Lady from Maxim's* (Feydeau), 449
- The Lady from the Sea* (Ibsen), 651, 791–792
- The Lady from Torzhok* (Belyayev), 1163
- Lady Inger* (Ibsen), 647, 650
- Lady in the Dark* (Hart), 588
- Lady Macbeth* (Xu), 1497
- Lady Macbeth Doesn't Wash Her Hands Anymore* (Beutler), 1317
- The Lady Next Door* (Kobrin), 1507
- The Lady of Challant* (Giacosa), 528
- A Lady of Letters*. See Talking Heads (Bennett)
- The Lady of Maxim* (Feydeau), 1214
- The Lady of Soul and Her Untimate "S" Machine* (Tan), 1006
- Lady of the Camellias* (Dumas fils), 473
- The Lady of the Castle* (Goldberg), 95
- Lady of the Drowned* (Rodrigues), 1145
- The Lady on Her Balcony* (Garro), 792–793
- The Lady Philanthropist* (Persiyaninova), 1163
- Lady Precious Stream* (adaptation of traditional Chinese), 254
- The Lady's Not for Burning* (Fry), 280, 408, 495, 793, 1128, 1130
- Lady Windermere's Fan* (Wilde), 403, 624, 699, 793–794, 1467
- A Lady with a Sunflower* (Vojnović), 1430
- Laedza Batanani* project (Botswana), 22
- Lafradio's Adventures* (Gide), 530
- Laferrière, Gregorio de, 61
- La Fiesta* (Triana), 1377
- La Fura dels Baus* (Spain), 232
- Lagerkvist, Pär, 794–795, 1312; The Hangman, 582
- Lagerlöf, Selma, 1313
- Lagronová, Lenka, 317
- la Guardia, Heraclio Martín de. See Martín de la Guardia, Heraclio
- Laguerre, Enrique: The Resentful Woman, 1106
- Lahola, Leopold, 1254
- Lahr, John, 371
- Lai, Stan. See Lai Sheng-ch'uan
- Lai Sheng-ch'uan, 259, 795–796
- Lake Ukereve (Vanćura), 315
- Lakon dukdamban* (Rama V), 1338
- lakon jatri* (Thai drama), 1337
- lakon nok* (Thai drama), 1337
- lakon phantang* (Thai drama), 1338
- lakon phud* (Rama V), 1338
- lakon rong* (Naradhip), 1338
- Lakshin, Vladimir, 1202
- Lalevich, Valentin, 1173
- La Linterna Mágica*, 897
- La MaMa Experimental Theatre Club* (New York): agit-prop, 106; Chin Shih-chieh, 258; gay and lesbian drama, 510; Koltès, Bernard-Marie, 774; off-Broadway, 990, 1409–1410, 1412; Shepard, Sam, 1232; Terry, Megan, 1087; Wilson, Lanford, 1481
- La Mama Theatre* (Melbourne, Australia), 75
- La Marie-Vision* (Terayama), 1334
- Lamartine, Alphonse, 1150
- The Lamb* (Yankowitz), 1501
- Lament* (Suspect Culture), 1309
- The Lament of a Chaste Woman* (Wang), 256, 1440, 1441
- The Lamp and the Bell* (Millay), 902
- Lampel, Peter Martin, 959
- Lampela, Pasi, 455
- Lamp Unto My Feet* (Stavis), 1129
- La muerte del Neque* (Triana), 1377
- Landers, Harald, 3

- The Land is Bright* (Ferber and Kaufman), 448
The Land of a Million Magicians (Abdallah), 1
Land of Dag (Björnson), 163
The Land of Heart's Desire (Yeats), 1225, 1503
The Land of Scoundrels (Yesenin), 1164
The Land of the Moa (Leitch), 961
Land of Volcanic Ash (Kubo), 783, 796–797, 1240
 Landon-Smith, Kristine: Untouchable, 417
 Landsbergis, Algirdas, 824
Landscape with Red Bird (Betsuyaku), 155
Landslide (Betti), 156
The Lane (Viviani), 719
 Lang, Fritz, 67
 Lang, Isaac. See Goll, Yvan
 Langer, František, 797; Camel Through a Needle's Eye, 315
 Langhoff, Matthias, 1049
 Langler, Lawrence, 1341
 Langer, Philip, 1341
 Langner, Ilse, 959
 Langner, Lawrence, 1358
Langrishe, Go Down (Sartre), 1068 language. See also specific languages. acquisition, 755; French-English theater, 117; iambic pentameter, 542; katharevousa, 555; logo-drame, 484; telegram style, 517 language, indigenous, 19, 965, 1111, 1274, 1321 language, use of: Kharmis, Daniil Ivanovich, 765; Krapp's Last Tape (Beckett), 779; Mama Looking for Her Cat (Kuo), 785; Pygmalion (Shaw), 1225; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1198; Sexual Perversity in Chicago (Mamet), 1216; The Skriker (Churchill), 1253; Sternheim, Carl, 1280
A Language of Their Own (Chay), 1006
A Language of Their Own (Yew), 1248
Languages Spoken Here (Nelson), 954
 Languirand, Jacques, 220
The Lanin Estate (Zaitsev), 1163
 Lan-ling Theater Workshop (Taiwan), 808, 827
 Lan Ling Workshop (Taiwan), 258–259
 La nona (Cossa), 62
 Lanoye, Tom, 144
The Lantern (Jirásek), 315
 Lantz, Lou: The Revolt of the Beavers, 1084
 Lanza, Domenico, 715
 The Laocoon Group (Różewicz), 1157
 Lao Jiu, Ninth Child (Kuo), 785, 1006
 Lao National School of the Arts, 798
 Laor, Yitzchak, 96
 Laos, 104, 797–798
 Lao She, 252, 571, 798–799; Teahouse, 254, 455
 Laou, Julius-Amédé, 487
 Lapeña-Bonifacio, Amelia, 799–800; The Journey of Sisa, 1053
 Lapid, Shulamit, 96
 Lapine, James, 814, 815
The Lapua Opera (Arvo), 454
La Qile Se Lalukhet (Moinuddin), 1028
The Laramie Project (Kaufman), 645
 Lardner, Ring, 800; June Moon (with Kaufman), 744
La retour de Melun (Brisebarre and Nus), 1358
Largo Desolato (Havel), 317, 466, 595, 1284
The Lark (Anouilh), 51, 1130
The Lark (Hellman), 606
 Larkin, Delia, 983
La Ronde (Schnitzler), 281
 Larry Thompson, A Youth's Tragedy (Kovačević), 1211
 Larson, Jonathan, 511
 Larsson, Stig, 1313
 Lasalle, Jacques, 1425
 Las Divas collective (Mexico), 1146
Lashings of Whipped Cream: A Session with a Teenage Dominatrix (Samuel), 962
 Lasica, Milan, 1254
 Lassang, Iwan. See Goll, Yvan
 Lassila, Maiju, 453
Last Act (Kambanellis), 750
The Last Bus (Storey), 1286
Last Dance at Dum Dum (Khan-Din), 764
The Last Days (Bulgakov), 205
The Last Days of Humanity (Kraus), 271
The Last Days of Mankind (Kraus), 54, 780
The Last Days of Pompeii (Medina), 891, 892
The Last Link (Kaštelan), 305
The Last Man (Lagerkvist), 794
The Last Night of Socrates (Tzanev), 206
The Last Night of the Last Tsar (Radzinsky), 1167
The Last Obstacle (Králik), 1254
The Last of the Red Hot Lovers (Simon), 1246
The Last Ones (Gorky), 545
Last Operas and Plays (Stein), 915–916
A Last Sacrifice (Ostrovsky), 1019
The Last Sigh (Madsen), 853
Last Summer at Bluefish Cove (Chambers), 510
Last Summer in Chulimsk (Vampilov), 1167
Last Tango in Huahuateno (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
The Last Tycoon (Pinter), 1068
The Last Yankee (Miller), 907
The Late Christopher Bean (Howard), 632
 Lateiner, Joseph, 1506
 Latest News (Arriaga), 294
The Latest News in Menswear (Dragunskaya), 1170
Latest Zrinyiade (Spiró), 1272
La torna (Els Joglars), 232
La Tosca (Sardou), 473, 890
La Turista (Shepard), 1233
 Latvia, 119, 800–802, 1115
The Laughing Maiden (Soya), 1266
Laughing Wild (Durang), 378–379
Laughter on the 23rd Floor (Simon), 1246
 Launay, Pierre, 1335
 Laura Keene's Theatre (New York), 279
 Laura Secord, the Heroine of 1812 (Curzon), 313
 Laurel Award, 1015
 Laurence Olivier Award, 146, 416, 489, 787, 1262
 Lauren's Call (Pedrero), 1040, 1271
 Laurents, Arthur, 814
 Lavedan, Henri, 475
 Lavendar Cellar (Minneapolis), 510
 Lavery, Bryony: Gentlemen Please, 919
La voix humane (Cocteau), 1299
 Lavrenyov, Boris, 1164, 1165
 Lavrřk, Silvester, 1255
 Lawford, Ningali, 79
The Law Is Hard, For Your Hair, Use Only Gumex (Vianna Filho), 1422
 Lawler, Ray, 802–803, 1478; Summer of the Seventeenth Doll, 73
Lawn Dogs (Wallace), 1439
The Law of Man (Hervieu), 476
The Law of the Savage (Artsybashev), 1162
 Lawrence, David Herbert, 233, 329, 803; The Daughter in Law, 328; Inherit the Wind (with Lee), 1129; The Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd, 1462–1463
 Lawrence, Gertrude, 1101
 Lawrence, Jerome, 803–804, 1407, 1408
 Lawrence, T. E., 1224
Lawrence of Arabia (Bolt), 174
 Lawson (Gray), 77
 Lawson, John Howard, 105, 804–805, 1056, 1187;

- Gentlewoman, 1403;
 Marching Song, 1083;
 Processional, 433, 1102,
 1400–1401; Success Story,
 564, 1403
- The Lawsons (Meredith), 77
- Lawyer Dahlan (Husain), 642
- Laxness, Halldór, 654
- Lay-By (Brenton et al.), 197
- Lazarita (Radichkov), 206
- Lazarus (Chong), 260
- Lazarus (Pirandello), 1071
- Lazarus Laughed (O'Neill),
 805–806, 967, 1003–1004,
 1130
- Lea, Marion, 912
- Leader (Horovitz), 625
- The Leaders (Chlumberg), 259
- A Leaf of Paulownia
 (Tsubouchi), 1240
- The League of Nathans
 (Sherman), 806, 1123, 1234
- League of New York Theatre and Producers Award,
 1480
- League of Workers' Theatres.
 See New Theatre League
- The League of Youth (Ibsen), 649
- Lean, David, 297
- Lear (Bond), 175
- Lear (Theatre Works), 104,
 1248
- Lear, Edward, 101
- Learner, Tobsha, 78
- The Learner's Stand (Geary),
 512
- learning plays, 54, 192, 519,
 807, 930–931
- Learning to Live with Personal Growth (Milner), 909
- The Leatherheads (Kaiser), 748
- L'Eau en Poudre (Dubillard),
 376
- Leave It to Me (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
- The Leaves in Vallombrosa
 (Norén), 973
- Leaving Home (French), 490
- Lebanon, 693
- Lebensohn, Adam Hacohen,
 709
- Le Bourgeois Avant-Garde
 (Ludlam), 838
- Lebovič, Đorđe, 1210
- Lecoq, Jacques, 961
- Leda (Krléža), 781
- Ledoux, Paul, 1510
- Lee, Dick, 1006
- Lee, Robert E., 803–804, 1408; Inherit the Wind (with Lawrence), 1129
- Lee, Spike, 1037
- Lee Kuo-hsiu, 259, 807–808
- The Leenane Trilogy
 (McDonagh), 882
- Lee Yun-tek, 769
- Left Bank (Paris), 123
- Left Front of Art (LEF), 1165
- Left Wing Dramatists League
 (China), 1357
- left-wing political groups,
 1083, 1329, 1383
- Left-Wing Theatre (Japan), 913
- Legacies (Onwueme), 1008
- The Legacy (Schnitzler), 1197
- Legacy of Cain (Living
 Theatre), 829
- The Legacy Project, 390
- Le Gallienne, Eva, 36, 1405
- Legal Murder (Donoghue),
 1403
- The Legend (Bergman), 148
- A Legend (Fischerová), 456
- Legend (Krléža), 781
- Legend of a Flying Dragon: And Then a Crow (Tsuka), 1383
- The Legend of Keşanlı Ali
 (Taner), 1387
- The Legend of King O'Malley
 (Boddy and Ellis), 74
- Legend of Lovers. See Eurydice
 (Anouilh)
- The Legend of Old Bawdy Town
 (Ma), 881
- The Legend of the Mad Phoenix
 (To), 1359
- The Legend of the White Snake
 (Chan), 237–238
- Legion of Honor Award, 1379
- Legislative Theater, 172
- Le Gobe-Douille (Dubillard),
 376
- le Gras, Antoine Jean, 955
- Legs Diamond (Fierstein), 451
- Legs on the Wall (Australia), 75
- Lehrstücke. See learning play
- Lehtola, Juha, 455
- Leila's Heart (al-Guzi), 1031
- Leino, Eino, 453
- Leitch, George: The Land of the Moa, 961
- Leivick, H., 1508
- Lejárraga, María O., 873
- Lékai, János, 92–93
- Lekatsas, Nikolaos, 1495
- Lemahieu, Daniel, 487
- Lemetre, Jean, 1335
- Le miserie di Monsú Travet
 (Bersezio), 714
- Lemmings (Terayama and Kishida), 769
- Lemon (Baydur), 1387
- Lemonade (Ensler), 420
- Lemon Sky (Wilson), 1482
- Le Mort de Chaka (Badian), 24
- Lenéru, Marie: The
 Emancipated, 476; Peace, 476;
 Woman Triumphant, 476
- L'Enfance (Sarraute), 1188
- Lengyel, Menyhért, 639
- Lenin, Vladimir, 927, 1256,
 1284, 1374
- Leningrad Blockade, 1243
- Lenormand, Henri-René,
 808–809; Time is a Dream,
 479; White Madness, 479
- Lenya, Lotte, 213
- León, Maria Teresa, 27, 1339,
 1340
- Leonard, Hugh, 1049
- Leonarda (Bjørnson), 163
- Leonora's Dance (Zindika), 417
- Leonov, Leonid, 1165
- Leow Puay Tin, 104, 809–810,
 1248; Three Children, 862
- Lepage, Robert, 1193, 1343;
 Needles and Opium, 221,
 952–953; Polygraph, 1089;
 The Seven Streams of the River
 Ota (at Ex Machina), 221,
 1214–1215
- leprosy, 1221
- Le Quy, Dyong, 80
- Lermontov, Mikhail, 721, 1160
- Lerner, Alan Jay, 588, 813
- Lerner, Elisa, 1419
- Lerner, Motti, 96
- Lerner, Yoysel-Lude, 1507
- Les Atrides (Mnouchkine), 686
- lesbianism. See gay and lesbian drama
- Lesbians Who Kill (Margolin et al.), 871, 1273
- Les Blancs (Hansberry), 584
- Les Canadiens (Salutin), 218
- Les Diablogues (Dubillard), 376
- Les Éditions de Minuit, 131
- Les Fridolines (Gélinas), 220
- Les gen d'R, 1245
- Les Maudits Anglais (Griffiths and Thompson), 561
- Les Paravents (Genet), 514
- Les Parents Terribles (Cocteau),
 275–276, 718
- Lessa, Bia, 188
- Les Shakespeares, 913
- Lessing, Ephraim Gotthold, 97
- Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim,
 367, 617, 700, 1297, 1315
- Lessing Prize, 937
- Lessingtheater, 184
- The Lesson (Ionesco), 350–351,
 483, 690, 810, 1057
- A Lesson from Aloes (Fugard),
 1263, 1264
- A Lesson in Marriage
 (Bjørnson), 163
- Les Tréteux Libres (Geneva,
 Paris), 585
- Let 'Em Eat Cake (Kaufman et al.), 756, 812, 1402
- Let Freedom Ring (Bein), 1403
- Le Théâtre du Quai
 (Strasbourg), 774
- Le Théâtre du Rond-Point
 (Paris), 774
- Let Man Live (Lagerkvist), 795
- Let Me Hear You Whisper
 (Zindel), 1516
- Let's Get out of Here (Uhlár et al.), 1255
- Let's Talk about Women (Rame and Fo), 1119
- Let's Talk Frankly (Gentile), 89
- The Letter (Maugham), 879

- A Letter of Introduction (Howells), 634
- Letters from Cuba (Fornes), 468
- A Letter to My Son (Ryga), 1175
- Let Them Eat Cake (Bolet Peraza), 1418
- Lettice & Lovage (Shaffer), 1217
- Let Us Be Gay (Crothers), 1399
- Levental, Valerii, 1173
- Leviathan (Loher), 830
- Levin, Chanoch, 710
- Levin, Hanoch, 95–96
- Levin, Ira, 510
- Levy, Deborah: Heresies, 416
- Levy, Jette Lundbo, 1177
- Lewis, Edward. See Lawson, John Howard
- Lewis, Justin, 963
- Lewis, Leopold: The Bells, 401–402
- Lewis, Sinclair: It Can't Happen Here, 1084
- Lewis, Wyndham, 54, 108, 271
- L'Exil d'Albouri (Ndao), 24
- Liang Bingkun, 255, 810–811
- Liang Yunda (Li), 819
- Lian Zhongqiu, 256
- The Liar (Sigurjonsson), 1244
- Liars (Foon), 463
- Li Bai the Poet (Guo), 570
- Libby Manaoag Files (Magtoto), 1051
- The Liberated Theatre of V+W (Prague), 93–94
- Liberty Deferred (Hill and Silvera), 1086
- Liberty Hall Players, 983
- Libin, Zalmen, 1507
- Library Theatre in the Round (England), 110
- librettists, 811–815
- The Lie (Sarraute), 1188
- Liebelei (Schnitzler), 815–816, 1196, 1197
- A Lie of the Mind (Shepard), 1233
- The Lieutenant of Inishmore (McDonagh), 882
- Life After George (Rayson), 1122
- The Life and Times of Sigmund Freud (Wilson), 1483
- The Life and Works of Leopold II (Claus), 270
- Life as a Dream (Hofmannsthal), 619
- The Life I Gave You (Pirandello), 1070
- Life in Paris (Halévy and Meilhac), 474
- Life Interrupted (Gray), 550
- Life in the Country (Müller), 524
- The Life Machine (Treadwell). See Machinal (Treadwell)
- Life of Buddha (Hang), 212, 583
- The Life of Edward the Second of England (Brecht and Feuchtwanger), 191
- The Life of Galileo (Brecht), 194, 520, 543, 718, 816–817, 1059, 1085, 1235, 1317
- The Life of Galileo Galilei (Bühner), 1316
- The Life of Horace A. W. Tabor (Zuckmayer), 1519
- The Life of Man (Andreev), 45, 817–818, 1162
- The Life of Muraoka Iheiji (Akimoto), 29
- The Life of the Drama (Bentley), 147
- The Life of the Nation of Cambodia (Chheng), 212
- Life on the Praça Roosevelt (Loher), 525
- Life Principle (Kouka), 777
- Life Sentences (Nelson), 954
- Life with Father (Lindsay), 818, 821
- Life Without Instruction (Clark), 268
- Life X 3 (Reza), 1135
- Light and Dark (Fukuda), 497
- The Light in the Piazza (Lucas), 837
- A Light in the Valley (Rowlands), 1155
- A Light of the Candle (Jakobsson), 655
- The Light Shines in the Darkness (Tolstoy), 1161
- The Light Shineth in Darkness (Tolstoy), 1363
- Light Shining in Buckinghamshire (Churchill), 264–265, 412, 740
- The Lights o' London (Sims), 402, 890, 892
- The Light Under the Bushel (D'Annunzio), 325
- Ligne Petite Ceinture (Paris), 584
- Lihamba, Amandina, 19
- Liives, Ardi, 429
- Li Jianwu, 252, 818–819
- Li Jueben, 257
- likay (Thai drama), 1337
- Like A Bullet in the Head (Kainy), 712
- A Likely Story (Howells), 634
- Like the leaves (Giacosa), 529
- Lilar, Suzanne, 143
- Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest Writers Award, 390
- Lil' Goldmouth (Grass), 549
- Lilies (Bouchard), 179, 819
- Liliom (Molnár), 281, 639, 917
- Lilith, 445
- Lill, Wendy, 819–820; Corker, 290; Fall Down, 290; The Occupation of Heather Rose, 986
- L'illusion comique (Corneille), 787
- Li Longyun, 820–821; Small Well Alley, 255
- Lily Dale (Foote), 464
- Lim, Genny, 446
- Lima, Edy, 60
- Li Man-kui, 258
- Limbo Tales (Jenkin), 732
- Lim Chor Pee, 1247
- limelight, 400
- Limes from Sicily (Pirandello), 1070
- Limitations of Life (Hughes), 637
- Lina Ubani (Muhando), 19
- Linawa, 1051
- Lincoln, Abraham, 41, 1237, 1332
- Lincoln Center Repertory Company (New York), 25
- Lincoln Center Summer Festival, 1006
- Lincoln Center Theater Directors' Lab (New York), 924
- Lincoln Center Theatre (New York), 32, 58, 688, 696, 757
- Lindberg, August, 9
- Lindberg, Per, 582
- The Linden Tree (Bener), 1386
- Lindon, Jérôme, 131
- Lindsay, Howard, 821–822, 958; Life with Father, 818
- Lindsey, David, 1200, 1201, 1202
- Lines to M (Dibble), 961
- Linetski, Ysroel Yitskhok, 1506
- The Lingerin' Hour (Williams), 55, 1477
- Lingering Voices (Shad), 1029
- Linney, Romulus, 822–823, 990, 1409
- Lin Zhao, 90–91, 827
- The Lion and the Jewel (Soyinka), 24, 1267
- The Lion in Love (Delaney), 340
- Lion in the Streets (Thompson), 823, 1352
- The Lion of Bangor (Marchessault), 869
- The Lion's Share (Tapia y Rivera), 1106
- Lips Together, Teeth Apart (McNally), 885
- Lira, Miguel N., 292
- Li Sheng Troupe (China), 1515
- Listen! (Mayakovsky), 841
- Listening: A Chamber Play (Albee), 32
- A List of Assets (Olesha), 995, 1164
- Listowel Drama Group, 707
- Literary Artistic Circle, 1095
- Literary Arts Society (Japan), 422, 726, 1239, 1382
- Literary Award for Drama (Malaysia), 590, 720
- literary drama, 983–985, 1170

- literary manager, 367–370. See also dramaturgy
- Literary Managers and Dramaturgs of the Americas (LMDA), 371
- Literary Revolution (Kenya), 965
- literary salons, 1030–1031
- Literary Theatre (Japan), 48; Hirata Oriza, 614; Katō Michio, 756; Kubota Mantarō, 784; Mishima Yukio, 910; Morimoto Kaoru, 924, 1488; shingeki, 1238–1240; socialist realism, 727
- Literatur am Naschmarkt (Vienna), 85
- Lithuania, 823–825
- Little, Arthur, 970
- A Little Bit About a Woman (Radzinsky), 1167
- Little Brother! A Message to Sakamoto Ryōma from Otome, His Older Sister (Shimizu), 1238
- Little Carib Theatre Workshop (Trinidad), 1436, 1437
- The Little Cherry Orchard (Slapovsky), 1170
- The Little City (Başkut), 1386
- Little Criminal (Foon), 463
- The Little Devils (Peru), 1046
- The Little Elephant Is Dead (Abe), 2
- Little Eyolf (Ibsen), 651, 825, 875–876, 1144, 1513
- Little Footsteps (Tally), 1327
- The Little Foxes (Hellman), 606, 825–826, 944, 1403
- The Little Frog (Zapolska), 1513
- Little Ham (Hughes), 637, 826–827
- The Little Lamb (Ptushkina), 1170
- The Little Match Girl (Andersen), 1177
- The Little Match Girl (Betsuyaku), 49, 155
- The Little Minister (Barrie), 1200
- A Little Night Music (Wheeler), 814
- The Little Organ (Discépolo), 351
- Little Plays for Little People (Sowerby), 1266
- The Little Room (Pitínski), 317
- The Little Saint (Bracco), 183
- Little Sister (MacLeod), 850
- Little Sun (Els Comediantes), 232
- little theater movement, 827; angura, 48; avant-garde drama, 105; Canada, 216; China, 255; Dominion Drama Festival (Canada), 217; Japan, 99, 722, 728, 992; Ma Sen, 874; Noda Hideki, 970; political drama, 1085; Provincetown Playhouse (New York), 989; Satoh Makoto, 1193; Taiwan, 258, 807–808; Tanzania, 18; theater for profit, 1404–1405; The Torch Bearers (Kelly), 760; United States, 282, 1400; Yao Yi-Wei, 1502
- Little Theatre (New York), 1174
- Little Theatre Group (LTG), 382
- Little Theatre of the Green Goose (Galczyński), 1081
- Littleton Theatre (London), 615
- Little Tragedies (Pushkin), 1160
- The Little Trilogy (Vojnović), 1430
- The Little White Bird (Barrie), 1047
- Little Women: The Tragedy (Margolin et al.), 871, 1273
- Littlewood, Joan, 138, 340, 409, 704, 705, 1111; Oh What a Lovely War!, 353, 411
- The Little World Theater, or the Fortunate Ones (Hofmannsthal), 619
- The Little Years (Mighton), 901
- Littoral (Mouawad), 932
- Litvakov, Moyshe: The Sorceress, 928
- Liu Ching-min, 259, 827–828
- Liu Cunren, 257
- Liu Shugang, 90, 255
- Liuzhou Municipal Caidiao Troupe, 1347
- livelihood, 1395
- Live Like Pigs (Arden), 409
- Liverpool Repertory Theatre, 404
- Lives of the Great Poisoners (Churchill), 265
- Live Spelled Backwards (Lawrence), 804
- Live Theatre (Newcastle, Great Britain), 126
- The Living Corpse (Tolstoy), 1161, 1363
- The Living Dead (Kudret), 1386
- living history plays (katsureki geki), 759
- The Living Mask. See Enrico IV (Pirandello)
- living newspapers, 352, 368, 1084, 1102, 1137
- Living on Chicken (Arrufat), 309
- living theater, 68, 89, 258, 1088
- Living Theatre (New York), 828–829; acting style, 990; agit-prop, 27; apocalypse, 55; avant-garde drama, 106; documentary drama, 353; environmental theater, 423; experimental theater, 584, 1408–1410; feminist drama, 445; formalism, 467; Gelber, Jack, 512; Hair (Ragni and Rado), 1409; happenings, 445; inception, 1085; jazz influence, 729; performance art, 1043; Pirandello, Luigi, 1365; political drama, 1410; social change themes, 1057; theatricality, 1343
- The Living Water (Zălite), 802
- Li Xiuzhen, 256
- Li Yuanhua, 257
- The Lizard (Volodin), 1167
- Ljubinko and Desanka (Popović), 1092
- Llareggub. See Under Milk Wood
- Lo! (Wijaya), 679
- Lo and Behold! (Patrick), 1039
- lobotomy, 1179, 1302
- Lobozorov, Stepan, 1170
- The Local Authority (De Filippo), 339
- Lochhead, Liz, 829–830, 1201; Mary Queen of Scots Got Her Head Chopped Off, 873–874
- Lockert, Lucía Fox: The Risk of Living, 1045
- The Lodge (Ringwood), 1140
- Lodgers (Altenberg), 82
- Loesser, Frank: The Most Happy Fella, 1346
- Loewe, Frederick, 588, 813
- Logan, Joshua, 1407
- Lohengrin (Wagner), 1319, 1433
- Loher, Dea, 525, 830
- Lok Rehas (Pakistani theater), 1028
- Lola's Song (Vega), 1178
- Lolita (Albee), 32
- Lombroso, Cesare, 1293, 1296
- Lommonty, Sommay, 798
- London Assurance (Boucicault), 181
- The Londoner (Thomas), 1350
- London Film Critics' Circle Award, 765
- London Fringe, 1220
- London Kills Me (Kureishi), 786
- London Mermaid, 1236
- London Observer Award, 961
- London Stage Society, 1200
- London Standard Award, 198
- London Suite (Simon), 1246
- London Theatre Critics Award, 1263, 1285
- London Theatre Studio, 107
- Loneliness for Four (Halac), 576
- Lonely Lives (Hauptmann), 516, 592
- The Lonely One: A Human Decline (Johst), 518, 740

- Lonely on the Headland (Arné), 1314
 Lonely People (Hauptmann), 1014
 The Loner (Audiberti), 485
 Lonesome West (McDonagh), 706
 The Lonesome West (McDonagh), 882
 The Lone Star (Green), 557
 The Long Christmas Dinner (Wilder), 1469–1470
 The Long Christmas Ride Home (Vogel), 1429
 Long Day's Journey into Night (O'Neill), 351, 362, 364, 447, 830–832, 922, 970, 1004, 1005, 1056, 1276, 1291, 1313
 Longing for Worldly Pleasures (Meng), 91
 The Long Journey of Radiya M. (Vera), 1051
 The Long Life of King Oswald (Lukić), 1210
 Long Lines of Grave Markers (Fukuda), 498
 Long Live the Wafd! (Carioca), 392
 The Long Night (Powell), 564
 Long Play (Stefanovski), 845
 The Long Road (Arbuzov), 57 long runs (stage plays), 400–402
 The Long Sunset (Sherriff), 1236
 Longtime Companion (Lucas), 837
 Long to Rain over Us (Edwards), 389
 The Long Voyage Home (O'Neill), 832, 1001
 The Long War (Karinthy), 92
 Long Wharf Theatre (New Haven, CN), 1408
 Look Back in Anger (Osborne), 47, 340, 407, 704, 793, 832–833, 1016, 1099, 1120, 1372
 Looking for the World (Edwards), 389
 A Look Into the Eyes (Daněk), 316
 Look Ma, I'm Dancin'! (Lawrence and Lee), 804
 Look Who's Cross-Talking Tonight (Lai), 796
 The Loom (al-'Ānī), 698
 Loot (Orton), 510, 833–834, 1013
 Lope de Vega Prize, 203
 López Silva, José, 1178
 Loranger, Françoise, 220
 Lorca, Federico García. See García Lorca, Federico
 The Lorca Play (Albee), 32
 Lord, Dismiss Us . . . (Bland), 961
 Lord, Pauline, 1345
 Lord, Robert, 834, 961
 Lord Edward, or '98 (Whitbread), 699
 Lord Tsunatoyo at His Seaside Estate (Mayama), 881
 Lorensburg Theater (Gothenburg), 1360
 Lorenzo (Richardson), 1138
 Lorenzo's Oil (Enright), 420
 Loretta Strong (Copi), 289
 Lőrinczy, Attila, 641
 Loris (pseud.). See Hofmannsthal, Hugo von
 L'orphelin de la Chine (Voltaire), 251
 Los Alamos Laboratory: Scientific Americans (Mighton), 1199
 Los Angeles Bodacious Buggerilla, 568
 Los Angeles Drama Critics Award, 424, 489, 837, 1264
 Los Angeles theater, 1411
 Losey, Joseph, 353
 A Loss of Roses (Inge), 682
 Lost, Disappearing Eyes (Potiki and He), 963
 Lost and Delirious (Thompson), 1352
 The Lost Colony (Green), 557
 Lost in the Stars (Anderson), 43
 Lost in Yonkers (Simon), 1246
 The Lost Leader (Robinson), 1145
 The Lost Letter (Caragiale), 225, 1149
 The Lost Rights (Aspazjia), 800
 Lost Weekend (Romeril), 1151
 The Lost Women of Troy (Levin), 96
 The Lost World (Mondragón Aguirre), 918
 Loti, Pierre, 1321
 Lottering, Mark, 1265
 Lot 13: The Bone Violin (Wright), 1491
 Lottie Dundass (Bagnold), 113
 Lotus-Pearl's New Match, 808
 Loud Organs (Thomas), 1351
 Loud Speaker (Lawson), 805
 Louisiana Cavalier (Green), 557
 Louvet, Jean, 143
 Love (Petrushevskaya), 1168
 Love and Libel (Davies), 330
 Lovebirds (Thompson), 1353
 Love Child (Murray-Smith), 78
 Love Crazy (Pedrero), 1040
 The Love for Three Oranges (Prokofiev), 1284
 Love for Your Neighbor (Sutherland), 1310
 The Love-Girl and the Innocent (Solzhenitsyn), 1169
 A Love/Hate Story in Black and White (Childress), 249
 Løveid, Cecilie, 834–835, 977; Seagull Eaters, 1205
 Love in Buffalo (Gurney), 572
 Love in Idleness (Rattigan), 1120
 Love in Plastic (Rowlands), 1155
 Love in the Crimea (Mrožek), 934
 Love is a Many-Splendored Thing (Patrick), 1039
 Love Is a Verb (Boothe and King), 177
 Love is Strange (Ledoux and Young), 1510
 Love Letters (Gurney), 572
 Lovelock's Dream Run (Geary), 511
 Lovely Rita (Brasch), 187
 A Lovely Sunday for Creve Coeur (Williams), 1477
 The Love of Don Perlimplin (García Lorca), 507
 The Love of Leonor Rivera (Montano), 1052
 The Lovers (Egloff), 390
 Love's Comedy (Ibsen), 648
 Love's Fateful Play (Čapek and Čapek), 224
 Lovesick (Churchill), 263
 Love's Old Sweet Song (Saroyan), 1187
 The Love Songs of Connaught (Hyde), 1321
 The Love Space Demands (Shange), 417
 Love's Tragedy (Heiberg), 602, 976
 The Love Suicide at Schofield Barracks (Linney), 822
 Love Suicide at Toribeyama (Okamoto), 993
 Love Suicides (Romeril), 1151
 love triangle. See also male-female relationships. After the Dance (Rattigan), 1120; It Happened in Irkutsk (Arbuzov), 1168; Ivanov (Chekhov), 721; The Kildeer (Reaney), 1125; Little Eyolf (Ibsen), 825; My Poor Marat (Arbuzov), 1168; Ngo Pa (Rama V), 1118; Passion (Lapine), 815; The Red Passion (Sorbul), 1149; Rosmersholm (Ibsen), 1153; Sad Loves (Giacosa), 714; Second Youth (Nevezhin), 1161; The Secret of Heaven (Lagerkvist), 794; Street Scene (Rice), 1137
 Love Under Evening Maple Trees (Wang), 1440
 Love! Valour! Compassion! (McNally), 885, 1087, 1130
 Loving Women (Gems), 412, 416
 Low (Williamson), 76
 Lowe, Stephen, 740
 The Lower Depths (Gorky), 341, 350, 544, 835–836, 1014, 1162, 1172, 1277, 1306
 Low in the Dark (Carr), 228, 706
 Loy, Mina, 108

- Loyalties (Galsworthy), 30, 836
The Loyalties of the Arabs
 (Nassâr), 1031
Loyalty of Friends (al-Guzi), 1031
L-Play (Henley), 608
L.S.D. (Wooster Group), 1094
 Lucas, Craig, 511, 837, 1412
 Luce, Clare Boothe. See Boothe, Clare
 Lucille Lortel Award, 572, 1356
 Lucille Lortel Theatre (New York), 974 luck, 1250
 Luck (Aleichem), 929
 Luckham, Claire: Scum: Death, Destruction and Dirty Washing, 919
 Luck Upon the Grand Opening (He), 136
 Lucky Per (Strindberg), 1360
 Lucky Per's Journey (Strindberg), 1295
 Thé Lucky Spot (Henley), 608
A Lucrative Post (Ostrovsky), 1019
 Lucy and Hearing (Page), 1027
 ludic theater, 1184
 Ludlam, Charles, 837–838, 1058, 1087, 1273, 1410, 1412; Camille, 510; The Mystery of Irma Vep, 510
 Ludlum, Charles. See Ludlam, Charles
 Lúðvíksson, Vésteinn, 655
 Lugné-Poë, Aurélien, 67, 701, 718, 728, 854, 1319, 1391
 Lugné-Poë's Théâtre de l'Oeuvre (Paris), 1079
 Lu Hongfei: Married to a Celestial Lady, 872
 Luisa (Giacosa), 529
 Luisa Fernanda (Moreno Torroba), 1514
 Lujbinko and Desanka (Popović), 1211
 Lukács, Georg, 1256
 Luka' the Son of Luka' (Habibi), 97
 Lukić, Velimir, 1210
 Lukosz, Jerzy: Hauptmann, 1082; Mann, 1082
 Lulie the Iceberg (Takamodo), 1286
 Lulu Belle (MacArthur and Sheldon), 1230
 Lumumba, Patrice, 1206
 Lunacharsky, Anatoli Vasilyevich, 425, 838–839, 927, 1164, 1171
 Luna Park Theater (St. Petersburg), 500
 Lund, Me, 1260
 Lundán, Reko, 454
 Lunin, or the Death of Jacques, Written in the Presence of the Master (Radzinsky), 1167
 Lunt, Alfred, 1426
 Lunts, Lev, 100, 1165
 Luo Huaizhen, 839–840; Golden Dragon and Mayfly, 256
 Luscombe, George, 840
 Lüstmord, 108
 Lute Song, 251, 254
 Luther (Osborne), 1016
 Luu Quang Vu, 1423
 Lu Xingchem, 1007
 Lu Xun, 245, 252, 604; Sister Xianglin (with Nan), 1249–1250
 LWT New Plays on Stage Award, 176
 Lyceum (London), 1063
 Lyceum Theatre (London), 370, 849
 Lyceum Theatre School of Acting (London), 849
 Lycos, Tom, 73
 Lydie Breeze (Guare), 567
 The Lying Kind (Neilson), 953
 lynching, 739
 Lyotard, Jean-François, 1058, 1094
 lyric drama. See also poetic theater; verse drama.
 Anderson, Maxwell, 1403–1404; Angels in America (Kushner), 46; Blok, Aleksandr, 169, 1163; Curnow, Allen, 961; The Glass Menagerie's influence on, 536–537; MacLeod, Joan, 734; Moody, William Vaughn, 1397; Spain, 1513–1515
 Lyric Theatre (London), 324, 1120
 Lyric Theatre (New York), 456, 913, 960
 Lysander, Per, 1314
 Lysistrata (Aristophanes), 1131
 Lysistrata and NATO (Hochhuth), 617
 Lysistrata Prize, 866
 Lyssa, Alison, 75
 Lyssiotis, Tes, 80
 Lyttleton Loft, 126
 Lyttleton Theatre, 413, 414
 Lyubimov, Yury Petrovich, 426, 840–841, 1343
 Lyubov Yarovaya (Trenyov), 927, 1164
 MA (Kassák), 92
 Maatschappij Discordia, 957
 Ma'ayan, Dudu, 96
 MacArthur, Charles: The Front Page (with Hecht), 494, 1401; Ladies and Gentleman, 494; The Twentieth Century, 494
 MacArthur Fellowship, 466, 1037
 Macau, 259
 Macbeth (Shakespeare): African American adaptation, 1084; Dogg's Hamlet, Cahoot's Macbeth (Stoppard), 1283; Lady Macbeth Doesn't Wash Her Hands Anymore (Beutler), 1317; Macbett (Ionesco), 691; Müller's adaptation, 937; Rendra's adaptation, 1131; South African adaptation, 1264
 MacBeth, Robert, 729
 Macbett (Ionesco), 691
 Macbird! (Garson), 1087
 MacDiarmid, Hugh, 1200
 MacDonald, Ann-Marie, 218, 843; Goodnight Desdemona (Good Morning Juliet), 542
 MacDonald, Bryden, 843–844; Whale Riding Weather, 1456
 MacDonald, Stephen, 744
 Macedonia, 844–845, 1278
 Macedonian Blood Wedding (Chernodrinski), 844
 Macgowan, Kenneth, 50, 346, 371, 575, 1002, 1003
 MacGreevy, Thomas, 128
 Machado, Eduardo, 468, 845–846, 1413; Broken Eggs, 310
 Mächendrama (Hauptmann), 723
 Machinal (Treadwell), 105, 433, 846–847, 916, 1375, 1399, 1401
 Machine (Hashmi), 673
 Machine (Janam), 590
 Machine Wreckers (Toller), 108
The Machine-Wreckers: A Drama of the English Luddites (Toller), 1362 machismo, 1211
 MacLennan, Elizabeth, 883
 MacIvor, Daniel, 622, 847
 Mack and Mabel (Stewart), 813
 MacKaye, Percy, 848; The Civic Theatre, 1400
 MacKaye, Steele, 848–849, 1398; Hazel Kirke, 598
 MacKenna, Siobhan, 706
 Mackerel (Horovitz), 625
 Mack the Knife, 1354
 MacLeish, Archibald, 849–850, 1407; Air Raid, 435; The Fall of the City, 435; J.B., 1130
 MacLennan, David, 1213, 1464–1465
 MacLennan, Elizabeth, 1213
 MacLeod, Alistair, 1510
 MacLeod, Joan, 218, 850; Jewel, 734
 MacLiammóir, Micheál, 702–703, 851
 MacI-ing (Jacob), 1053
 MacLow, Jackson, 1408
 Macrinici, Radu, 1150
 Macunaíma Group (Brazil), 188
 Macy, William, 862, 863

- Mácsa, János, 92
- Madame Butterfly* (Belasco), 140, 1398
- Madame Death* (Vallette-Eymery), 918–919
- Madame de Sade* (Mishima), 851–852, 910, 1240
- The Madame MacAdam Travelling Theatre* (Kilroy), 766
- Madame Mao* (Radic), 75
- Madame Pepita* (Martínez Seirra), 873
- Madame Sherry* (Harbach and Hoschna), 811
- Madam's Fan* (Hong), 624
- Madani, Ahmed, 487
- The Madcap* (Forssell), 469, 1313
- Mad Dog Blues* (Shepard), 1233
- Made in Wales Stage Company*, 389
- Mademoiselle Award*, 1218
- Mademoiselle Jaire* (Ghelderode), 526
- Mad Forest* (Churchill), 265
- Mad Horse* (Sircar), 1248
- Madhouse for the Sane* (Fo), 461
- Madison Square Theatre* (New York), 140, 456, 598, 635
- The Madman and the Nun* (Witkiewicz), 281, 852–853, 1485
- The Madman Divine* (Echegaray), 388
- Madman or Saint* (Echegaray), 388
- Madmen* (Bracco), 183
- Madmen and Specialists* (Soyinka), 1267
- madness. See mental illness
- The Madness of Esme and Shaz* (Daniels), 416
- The Madness of George III* (Bennett), 146, 415, 853
- The Madness of Lady Bright* (Wilson), 510, 1410, 1482
- Madness's Bread* (Gorostiza), 546
- Madonna Dianora* (Hofmannsthal), 618
- Madras. See Chennai, India
- Madras Players, 596
- Madrid, Spain, 1513–1514
- Madsen, Svend Åge, 344, 853–854
- Madun Orchestra (Noer), 971
- The Madun Orchestra Plays I–IV* (Noer), 679
- The Madwoman of Chaillot* (Giraudoux), 534
- A Mad World, My Masters* (Keefe), 740
- Maeterlinck, Maurice, 854–855; Blind Men, 928; The Blind, 107; The Blue Bird, 919; Interior, 107; The Intruder, 107; Pelleas and Melisande, 359, 477, 916, 1055; Belgian drama, 141; dramas statiques of, 325; influence on Ghelderode, 526; influence on Romanian drama, 1149; influence on Russian drama, 1173; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1277; Théâtre de l'Oeuvre (Paris), 701
- The Mafiosi of the Vicaria* (Mosca and Rizzotto), 715
- Mafune Yutaka, 855–856, 1241
- Mafune Yutaka Library Theatre, 855
- A Magadalen's Husband* (Brown), 31
- Magazine of Luck* (Loher), 830
- magazines and publications, 1171–1172
- Magazzini Criminali (Italy), 719
- Magda* (Sudermann), 366, 517, 1303
- Magdalena* (Guardia), 293
- Magdalena Project* (England), 416
- Magee Monologue* (Beckett), 779
- Magellan, Ferdinand, 1314
- Maggie and Pierre* (Griffiths and Thompson), 218, 561, 856
- Maghrebian Africa, 16
- Magia, 1045
- The Magical City* (Akins), 29
- The Magic Box* (Palestine), 1033
- The Magic Chair* (Karinthy), 92
- Magic Cube* (Tao and Wang), 255
- Magic Hat* (Lapeña-Bonifacio), 799
- magic realism, 445, 1141
- Magic Theatre* (San Francisco), 208, 463, 732, 1232, 1380, 1411
- The Magic Toyshop* (Carter), 1220
- The Magistrate* (Pinero), 402, 856–857, 1064
- Magistrate Leonhard* (Kvaran), 653
- The Magnanimous Cuckold* (Crommelynck), 351
- The Magnanimous Cuckold* (Meyerhold), 1173
- The Magnanimous Lover* (Ervine), 427
- Magnificence* (Brenton), 197
- The Magnificent Cuckold* (Crommelynck), 305
- Magogodi, Kgafela oa, 102
- Magosi Dedicated Artists (Botswana), 23
- Magpie on the Gallows* (Teirlinck), 142
- Magpie Theatre* (Australia), 73
- Magtoto, Liza: Call Libby* Manaoang, 1051; Libby Manaoag Files, 1051
- Maguire's New Theatre* (San Francisco), 609
- Mag-Zine* (Oshodi), 1017
- Mahabharata* (Brook), 665, 667, 673, 676, 686, 1130, 1299, 1343
- Maheu, Gilles, 221, 1428
- Mahjoeddin, Indija, 80
- Mahler, Alma, 773
- Mahmud and Yezida* (Mungan), 1387
- Mahmudi, Ahmad, 694
- Mahon, Derek, 706
- The Mai* (Carr), 228
- The Maiden Stone* (Munro), 857–858, 940
- Maiden Voyage* (Osborn), 1015
- The Maid of Ludomir* (Even-Shoshan), 712
- The Maid of Orleans* (Audiberti), 71
- The Maids* (Genet), 117, 484, 510, 514, 858
- The Maids of Honour* (Buero Vallejo), 1270
- Maillet, Antonine, 858–859
- Mailman, Deborah, 79
- The Maimed* (Smit), 1264
- Mainstream* (Suspect Culture), 1309
- The Main Thing* (Evreinov), 431
- The Main Thing* (Yevreinov), 1163
- Mair, Charles, 216
- Maironis, 824
- Majangwa (Serumaga), 20
- The Majestic Kid* (Medoff), 887
- Major André* (Fitch), 892
- Major Barbara* (Shaw), 363, 405, 859–860, 916, 1128, 1225
- The Major General Will Speak on Theogony* (Triana), 1377
- Major Pendennis* (Mitchell), 913
- Makerere Inter Hall Drama Competition* (Kenya), 18
- The Maker of Ghosts* (Arlt), 88
- makeup, 393
- Make-up* (Inoue), 684
- Making History* (Friel), 491
- The Making of a Saint* (Albee), 31
- The Making of B.–Movie* (Ostermaier), 525
- Makino Nozomi, 860–861
- Makino Office Productions*, 860
- Makishi, Stace, 1273
- The Makropoulos Affair* (Čapek), 224, 315
- Malach, Leib, 1507, 1508
- Maladranzas* (Caballero), 1419
- The Malady of Death* (Duras), 379
- Malaia Bronnaia Theatre*, 928

- Malawi, 21–23
- Malaysia, 861–862; avant-garde drama, 104–105; Hassan, Noordin, 590, 720; Husain, Shaharom, 642; Leow Puay Tin, 809; sandiwara, 642
- Malcolm (Nkosi), 1262
- Maleczek, Ruth, 1146
- male-female relationships. See also family drama; infidelity; love triangle. The Big Funk (Shanley), 1219; Murderer, Hope of Women (Kokoschka), 773; The Philanderer (Shaw), 1223; The Playboy of the Western World (Synge), 1321; Sexual Perversity in Chicago (Mamet), 1216; The Shape of Things (La Bute), 1219; Shawn, Wallace, 1229; Storey, Raymond, 1286; The Story of Butterfly Lovers (Xu), 1286; Strictly Dishonorable (Sturges), 1292; The Stronger (Strindberg), 1298; Summerfolk (Gorky), 1305
- male impersonators. See gender identity; otokoyaku
- male roles, played by women, 392
- Malicious Delight (Herzberg), 957
- Malikopo (Mungoni), 21
- Malina, Judith: jazz influence, 729; Living Theatre, 106, 467, 729, 828, 1085, 1406, 1408, 1410; Paradise Now (Living Theatre), 55; theatricality, 1343
- Malinche, 1100
- Małka Szwarcenkopf (Zapolska), 1513
- Malkovich, John, 1380
- Mallarmé, Stéphane, 476, 530, 918, 1173, 1318; Afternoon of a Faun, 916
- Mallarmé, Stéphanie, 1042
- Malmö City Theater (Sweden), 149, 967
- Malna, Afrizal, 680
- Maltz, Albert, 1403; Black Pit, 1083; Peace on Earth, 1083; Private Hicks, 1083
- Maly Theater (Moscow), 242–243, 839, 1077, 1160, 1161, 1171
- Mama and the Load (Kente), 1264
- Mama Is Eighty Years Old (Martín), 310
- Mama Looking for Her Cat (Kuo), 785
- Mama's Return (Pawlikowska-Jasnorzewska), 1080
- Mamba's Daughters (Heyward), 612
- Mamet, David, 862–863; American Buffalo, 40; Glengarry Glen Ross, 537–538, 995; Oleanna, 994; Sexual Perversity in Chicago, 1215–1216; Three Uses of the Knife, 1085; dramatic dialogue, 364; Group Theatre, 565; influenced by O'Neill, 1005; influence on Irish theater, 707; naturalism, 219; off-Broadway theater, 1411; Steppenwolf Theatre Company, 1411
- Man (Gavlovski), 1419
- Man, Beast and Virtue (Pirandello), 1070
- Manaka, Matsamela, 101, 1265
- Manana: The Jazz Prophet (Kente), 1264
- Man and Gentleman (De Filippo), 338
- A Man and Some Women (Sowerby), 1265
- Man and Superman (Shaw), 363, 364, 405, 863–864, 916, 967, 1056, 1225
- Man and the Masses (Toller), 432
- A Man between Wars (Horák), 1254
- The Man Born to Be King (Sayers), 1130
- A Man Breaking Down (Iwamatsu), 722
- Manchester Playgoers Society, 404
- The Manchester School, 404
- The Mandarin (Azevedo), 187
- The Mandate. See The Warrant (Erdman)
- Man Doesn't Die by Bread Alone (Thiyam), 1349
- Maneses, Guillermo, 1418
- Manet, Eduardo, 309, 310, 484
- A Man for All Seasons (Bolt), 174, 1130
- Manfridi, Giuseppe, 719
- The Man from Mukinupin (Hewett), 610
- manga, 1180
- Mangai, A., 671, 673
- Manger, Itsik, 540
- A Man Has His Pride (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086
- Manhattan Medea (Loher), 830
- Manhattan Project, 1229
- Manhattan Supper Club, 356
- Manhattan's Vast Silence (Lerner), 1419
- Manhattan Theatre Club, 885, 1412
- Manhattan Theatre Club Award, 978
- Maniam, K. S., 104, 862
- The Manifesto of Futurist Playwrights (Marinetti), 871
- The Manifesto of Futurist Synthetic Theatre (Marinetti), 871
- The Manifesto of the Dynamic and Synoptic Declamation (Marinetti), 871
- The Manipulator (Bhagat), 158
- Man Is Man (Brecht), 1089
- Manitoba Association of Playwrights, 909
- Mankiewicz, Herman, 285
- Mann (Lukosz), 1082
- Mann, Emily, 353, 864–865, 959; Still Life, 1087
- Mann, Erika, 70
- Mann, Heinrich, 1394
- Mannequins' Ball (Jasieński), 94, 1080
- Manner, Eeva-Liisa, 454
- Manners, Hartley, 597
- The Man Next Door (Iwamatsu), 722
- Mann Kosal, 212
- The Man of Destiny (Shaw), 1225
- A Man of Honour (Maugham), 878
- A Man of No Importance (McNally), 815
- A Man of the People (Tsegaye), 1382
- Manojlović, Todor, 1210
- Manon (Massenet), 474
- Manon Lescaut (Nezval), 316
- manora, 1337
- The Man Outside (Borchert), 178, 521
- Man-Powered Plane Solomon (Terayama), 1334
- Man Ray, 320
- A Man's a Man (Brecht), 191, 518, 1372
- A Man Says Goodbye to His Mother (Schumann), 1086
- Mansfield Park (Pinter), 1068
- Mansion of Owls (Wolff), 1487
- The Man's Rib (Jotuni), 453
- A Man's World (Crothers), 1399
- A Man's World and Ourselves (Crothers), 306
- Mantarō, Kubota, 1361
- A Manual of Trench Warfare (Gorman), 75
- Manuelote (Rengifo), 1418
- Manuel Riva, Víctor, 1418
- Manusha, 1221
- Man Wearing National Emblem (Ma and Jia), 881
- The Man Who Asked for Permission to Be on Earth (Jepsen), 733
- The Man Who Came to Dinner (Kaufman and Hart), 279, 757, 1402
- The Man Who Had All the Luck (Miller), 904

- The Man Who Had the Sun in His Pocket (Louvett), 143
 The Man Who Had Three Arms (Albee), 32
 The Man Who Lived His Life Over (Lagerkvist), 795
 The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife (France), 742
 The Man Who Met Himself (Antonelli), 717, 1338
 The Man Who Shot the Albatross (Lawlor), 802
 The Man Who Stoked the Dragon (Fukuda), 497
 The Man Who Turned Into a Stick (Abe), 2
 The Man Who Was Thursday (Chesterton), 1173
 Man with Bags (Horovitz), 625
 Man without a Body (Teirlinck), 142
 The Man Without a Soul (Lagerkvist), 795
 Man with Portfolio (Faiko), 1164
 The Man with the Flower in his Mouth (Pirandello), 1070
 The Man with the Suitcases (Ionesco), 625
 Many Happy Returns (Bjørneboe), 162
 Manzoni, Pierre, 585
 Manzoni Theater (Milan), 418, 1097
 Maori drama (New Zealand), 547–548, 777, 963, 1353
 Maori Theatre Trust, 963
 Mao Tse Tung, 1230, 1256
 Mao Tse Tung (Dutt), 383
 A Map of the World (Hare), 686
 Maponya, Maishe, 101, 1264
 Ma Rainey's Black Bottom (Wilson), 729, 865, 1479, 1480
 Maraini, Dacia, 865–866; The Dreams of Clytemnestra, 373
 Marambo, Vojislav Jovanović: Our Sons, 1209
 Maranga Mai (theater troupe), 963
 Mara's Room: Full (Zālīte), 802
 Mara's Wedding (Kostov), 845
 Marathi language theater (Mumbai): Bhagat, Datta, 158; Elkunchwar trilogy, 993; political climate, 666–668; Routes and Escape Routes (Bhagat), 1154–1155; Tendulkar, Vijay, 1332; Tughlaq (Karnad), 1384
 Marathon (Horovitz), 625
 Marathon (Monti), 62
 Marathon Runners Run the Lap of Honour (Kovačević), 1211
 Marat-Sade (Weiss), 412, 522, 591, 841, 867, 1057, 1193, 1452
 Marber, Patrick, 219, 867–868, 1058; Closer, 270
 Marble (Brodsky), 1168
 Marble (Kamban), 653
 Marble Girls (Barrière), 1101
 Marceau, Félicien, 143
 Marcello the Repairman (Raznovich), 1122–1123
 Marcel Pursued by Hounds (Tremblay), 868–869
 The March (Koltès), 774
 Marchand, Félix, 219
 Marchessault, Jovette, 221, 869–870; Saga of the Wet Hens, 1177–1178
 Marching Song (Lawson), 1083
 Marching Song (Whiting), 1460
 March of the Falsettos (Finn), 815
 Marcinkevičius, Justinas, 824
 Marco Millions (O'Neill), 1003, 1005, 1400
 Marcos, Ferdinand, 1051, 1052
 Marco Severi (Pairó), 61
 Marcus, Frank, 510
 Marekaiatē, Gražina, 824
 Margarēta (Zālīte), 802
 Margaret Fleming (Herne), 598, 609, 634, 870, 1398
 Margin for Error (Boothe), 177
 Margo Jones Theatre (Dallas), 682
 Margolin, Deb, 511, 870–871, 1273
 Margueritte Gautier Travels Tonight (Demou), 557
 Margulies, Donald, 959
 Maria (Babel), 1164
 María Antonio (Espinosa), 310
 Maria Doxapatri (Vernardakis), 555
 María Lionza (Gramcko), 1419
 Mariana (Echegaray), 388, 1144
 Mariana Pineda (García Lorca), 349, 507
 Maria Q (Loveid), 835
 Mária Sabína (Klimáček), 1255
 Maribel and the Strange Family (Mihura), 902
 Marichal, Teresa: The Biggest Park in the City, 1107; Evening Walk, 1107; Midnight Love, 1107
 Marie and Bruce (Shawn), 1229
 Marie Christine (LaChiusa), 815
 Marie und Robert (Haller), 1316
 Marina (Arrieta), 1514
 The Mariner's Compass (Herne), 609
 Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso, 248, 281, 476–477, 871–872; Decision . . ., 717; Electric Dolls, 107, 716; King Bombance, 716; King Glutton, 107; King Revel, 499; Poesia, 107; Variety Theatre, 1042; Vita Futurista, 500
 Marinković, Ranko, 304
 Marino, Umberto, 719
 Marion Bridge (MacIvor), 847
 Marion Delorme (Hugo), 473
 Marionette Plays (Bergman), 148, 1312
 marionettes, 916–917
 Marionettes, What Passion! (di San Secondo), 1338
 Marion Place Dramatic Club (St. Louis), 1349
 Marisol (Rivera), 55, 1141
 Market Forces (Hall), 578
 Market Theatre (Johannesburg), 1264, 1265
 Markov, Pavel, 1171
 Markovitch, Joseph, 1508
 Marks, Rudolph, 1507
 Mark Taper Forum (Los Angeles), 46, 213, 732, 787, 974, 1408, 1415
 Markurells of Wadköping (Bergman), 148
 Maro Akaji, 48, 99
 Marowitz, Charles, 1043
 Marques, René: The Cart, 1106; The Fanlights, 1106
 Marquez, José, 1107
 The Marquise (Coward), 299–300
 Marquise Dezes (Khlebnikov), 1163
 The Marquis of Keith (Wedekind), 517, 1450
 The Marquis of Talamanco (Gagini), 293
 Marranca, Bonnie, 102, 471 marriage. See also family drama. Craig's Wife (Kelly), 760; Hassan Agha's Wife (Simović), 1211; Sakharam Binder (Tendulkar), 1181; Saratoga (Howard), 1185; A Scrap of Paper (Sardou), 1203; The Seven Streams of the River Ota (Lepage and Ex Machina), 1214; Sphinx and Strawman (Kokoschka), 773; The Story of Butterfly Lovers (Xu), 1287; You Can't Take It With You (Kaufman and Hart), 1509
 The Marriage (Gogol), 1304
 The Marriage (Gombrowicz), 281, 541, 1081 marriage and sex comedy, 814, 1125, 1150, 1513
 The Marriage of Anansewa (Sutherland), 23, 1309
 The Marriage of Bette and Boo (Durang), 378–379
 Marriage of Convenience (Rowlands), 1156
 The Marriage of Figaro (Beaumarchais), 1277
 The Marriage of Mary Bryant (Enright), 420
 The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi (Dürrenmatt), 380

- The Marriage Play* (Albee), 32
Marriages Are Made in Heaven (Hasenclever), 589
Marriages Are Made in Heaven (Maugham), 878
Married by Proxy (Fabricius), 955
Married to a Celestial Lady (Lu), 872
The Marrying of Ann Leete (Granville-Barker), 548
 Mars, 1185
 Marshall, Armina, 1341
 Marshall, Frank, 1185
Marsh Hay (Denison), 217, 218, 341
Marsinah Accuses (Sarumpaet), 1191
Marsinah: Songs from the Underworld (Sarumpaet), 1191
 Marta Gruni (Sánchez), 1183
 Martellian verse, 528
 Martens, Adémar Adlphe Louis. See Ghelderode, Michel de Martha Cohen Theater, 943
 Martín, Manuel, 311
 Martín, Mario, 310
 Martin Beck Theatre (New York), 32, 213, 307, 1429
 Martín de la Guardia, Heraclio, 1418
 Martínez, Carlota, 1419
 Martínez, Leoncio, 1418
 Martínez Seirra, Gregorio, 872–873
 Martín Fierro, 88
 Martinique, 235
 Martinson, Harry, 1314
 Martoglio, Nino, 715
 Márton, László, 641
 Martyn, Edward, 700 martyr complex, 1287
 martyrdom, 941
The Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian (D'Annunzio), 326, 716
The Martyrdom of the Shepherd (Rovinski), 294
Marvellous Melbourne (Hibberd and Romeril), 74, 1151
 Marx, Karl, 1054, 1191, 1223, 1230, 1256, 1307
 Marx Brothers, 756, 770, 1391
 Marxism: Bond, Edward, 175; Brecht, Bertolt, 190, 1354; influence on drama, 448, 460–462, 484, 519, 523; Jelinek, Elfriede, 730; Kipphardt, Heiner, 768; Kubo Sakae, 783; Lawson, John Howard, 804–805, 1102; Puerto Rico, 1106; Sastre, Alfonso, 1093; Sweden, 1313
 Mary (Rayson), 1122
 Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary (Ervine), 427
 Mary, Mother of Jesus (Bergman), 148
 Mary and Lizzie (McGuinness), 884
 Mary Baker Eddy (Toller), 1362
 Mary Lou (Forssell), 469
 Mary of Scotland (Anderson), 43, 1403
 Mary Queen of Scots Got Her Head Chopped Off (Lochhead), 829, 873–874, 1201
 Mary Stuart (Maraini), 866
 Mary Stuart (Schiller), 714
 Mary the Third (Crothers), 306
 Máša, Antonín, 317
 Masaaki Dōmoto, 970
 Masada (Milner), 909
 Mascagni, Pietro, 714
 Masefield, John: The Coming of Christ, 495
 Masefield, John Edward, 1130
 Ma Sen, 874–875; Flower and Sword, 258
 Ma Sen xiju luen ji (Ma), 874
 Ma Shaobo, 256
 Mashetani (Hussein), 19
 Masiye, Andrey, 22
 The Mask (Crnjanski), 1210
 The Mask and the Face (Chiarelli), 247–248, 562, 717, 1338
 Mask and Wig Professor of Playwriting, 913
 Masked-Faced Terrorists (Hatzor), 96
 Maske tetralogy (Sternheim), 1394
 The Masks (Bracco), 183
 Masks (Hassan), 591
 The Masks (Leino), 453
 Masks (Mori), 925
 masks, use of: Cabaret Voltaire and dadaism, 319; Horse and Bamboo Theatre, 625; Islamic, 697; Italy, 1118; Laos, 798; Lazarus Laughed (O'Neill), 805; Lithuania, 823; O'Neill, Eugene, 1003, 1005; Romania, 1148
 Mason, Bruce, 875, 961
 Mason, James, 703
 Mason, Patrick, 706, 884
 The Masque of Judgment (Moody), 922
 Masquerade (Krléža), 781
 The Masquerade (Lermontov), 1160, 1172
 Masquerades in the Attic (Vojnović), 1430
 Masrah Astar (Palestinian theater), 1034
 Mass, Vladimir, 425
 The Massage Table (Fischerová), 317, 456
 Massalitinov, N. O., 206
 Mass Arts Research Association (China), 465
 Massenet, Jules: Manon, 474
 Masses and Man: A Fragment of the Social Revolution of the Twentieth Century (Toller), 518, 1362
 Massey, Vincent, 216 mass spectacle in Soviet drama, 100 mastectomy, 1027
 The Master (Antonelli), 717
 The Master (Osanai), 1014
 The Master and Margarita (Bulgakov), 841
 The Master Builder (Ibsen), 579, 651, 875–876, 1144, 1318, 1319
 Master Class (McNally), 885
 “Master Harold” . . . and the Boys (Fugard), 876–877, 1263, 1264
 Master Nowruz, the Cobbler (Kamāl al Vezāreh), 694
 The Master of the Hauce (Martínez Seirra), 873
 The Master of the World (Storni), 1185
 Master Olof (Strindberg), 362, 426, 572, 877, 1295, 1298, 1312
 A Masterpiece of Dining (Howells), 634
 Masterpieces (Daniels), 416
 Masters (Stoyanov), 206
 The Mastodon and the Condors (Rendra), 103, 679, 1131
 Mastrosimone, William: The Afghan Women, 14 masturbation, 782, 1274
 Mata, Julio, 309
 Matasaburō of the Winds: Kara Version (Kara), 752
 The Matchmaker (Wilder), 1469
 Mate (Kenna), 75
 Mateo (Discépolo), 61, 88, 351, 563
 materialism, 710, 777, 1121, 1134
 The Maternal Tetralogy (Vojnović), 1430 matinees, 402, 404
 Matišić, Mate, 305
 Matka (Barč-Ivan), 1254
 Matković, Marijan, 304
 Matmor, Yoram, 710
 patriarchy as social structure, 439–440
 The Matriz Household (Raznovich), 1123
 The Matron of Ephesus (Sion), 143
 Matsuda Masataka, 614
 Matsui Shōyō, 1241
 Matsui Sumako, 422
 A Matter of the Soul (Bergman), 149
 Matthews, Brander, 138
 Matura, Mustapha, 877–878
 Matyushin, Mikhail: Victory Over the Sun, 500

- Maudy Thursday, 1051
- Maugham, William
Somerset, 7, 405, 878–879, 1259; The Circle, 266; The Constant Wife, 286; For Services Rendered, 406; Lady Frederick, 406; Mrs. Dot, 406; Rain, 249; The Sacred Flame, 406; Sheppey, 1234
- Maunder, Paul, 961
- Maura, Julia, 1270
- Maurey, Max, 1340
- Maurice Harte (Murray), 702
- Mauser (Müller), 937
- Mausoleum (Nagy), 641
- Mavis Goes to Timor (Thomson), 78
- Mavo (troupe), 98
- Mavor, Osborne Henry. See Bridie, James
- mawlum luong (Thai drama), 1337
- Max, A Play (Grass), 522, 549
- Maxine Elliot's Theatre, 879
- Maya (Ringwood), 1140
- Mayakovsky, Vladimir, 880, 1082, 1163, 1174, 1376; The Bathhouse, 125, 1164; The Bedbug, 135, 1164; Mystery-Bouffé, 54, 108, 369, 500, 945, 1164; Vladimir Mayakovsky, A Tragedy, 99, 500, 919
- Mayama Miho, 881
- Mayama Seika, 727, 880–881, 992, 1241
- May Blossom (Belasco), 140
- Maydays (Edgar), 414
- Mayepu, Mondí, 1265
- Mayer, Louis B., 1227
- Mayo, Frank, 331
- Mayonnaise (Ørnsbo), 1012
- Mayor Chen Yi (Sha), 255, 1230
- The Mayor's Wife (Chen), 223
- Maza, Bob, 79
- Mazarkis, Athena, 102
- Mazedonische Zustände (Plevnes), 845
- Ma Zhongjun, 90, 881–882; Trendy Red Skirts, 255
- Mazilu, Theodor, 1150
- Mazl-tov (Aleichem), 1507
- Mazya, Edna, 712
- Māzyār (Hedayat), 695
- Mbasem, 28
- Mbowa, Rose, 20
- Mbumba (Manaka), 1265
- M. Butterfly (Hwang), 510, 643, 686
- McAnuff, Des, 218
- McCarten, Anthony, 962
- McCarter Theatre (Princeton, NJ), 864, 1023
- McCarthy era, 1406–1407, 1424
- McCauley, Robbie, 446
- McClelland Glass, Joanna, 218
- McCowen, Alec, 1130
- McCullers, Carson, 1407
- McDonagh, Martin, 706, 882; The Beauty Queen of Leenane, 417; The Pillowman, 1062
- McGee, Greg, 882–883, 962
- McGlone, Carmel, 964
- McGrath, John, 219, 883–884, 1213; The Cheviot, the Stag and the Black, Black Oil (McGrath), 247, 1201
- McGuinness, Frank, 706, 707, 884–885; Observe the Sons of Ulster Marching Towards the Somme, 981
- McKee, Robert, 1411
- McKnight Fellowship, 865
- McLeay Report, 75
- McLellan, Robert, 1201
- McMillan, Nancy, 77
- McNally, Terrence, 511, 815, 885–886, 1409; Love! Valour! Compassion!, 1087, 1130; A Perfect Ganesh, 1130
- McNeil, Jim, 74
- McNeilly, Leonora, 764
- McPherson, Conor, 706–707, 886
- McVicker's Theatre (Chicago), 1242
- MD (Larsson), 1314
- Mda, Zanemvula “Zakes,” 1264, 1265
- Mea Culpa (Duncan, librettist), 377–378
- Mea Culpa (Solórzano), 1258
- The Measures Taken (Brecht), 54, 192, 807, 886–887, 917
- Meat Joy (Schneemann), 1411
- Meat Party (Le Quy), 80
- Mechanics of the Spirit (Bray), 79
- Medal of Honor Rag (Cole), 1087
- Medal of the Presidency of the Italian Cabinet, 966
- meddah (storyteller), 1384
- Medea (Euripides), 1314
- Medea (Razumovskaya), 1169
- Medea in the Mirror (Triana), 309, 1377
- Medea myth, 1177, 1507
- Medea Redux (LaBute), 791
- Medea's Children (Lysander and Osten), 1314
- Media (Anouilh), 429
- medicine, 766, 895, 1147
- medieval drama, 1342
- Medina, Louisa, 891, 892
- Medoff, Mark, 887–888, 1409
- Mee, Charles, 888, 1094, 1412
- Meehan, Thomas, 815
- Meeting Place (Lord), 834
- Meetings (Matura), 878
- Meet the Playwrights, Brown University, 978
- Megali Idea (Greece), 554–555
- Meged, Aharon, 95, 710
- Megrue, Roi Cooper, 720, 757
- Mehmed II: The Third Stake (Sorescu), 1260
- Mehta, Vijaya, 671
- Meier, Herbert, 1317
- Meiji Restoration (Japan), 757, 758
- Mei Lanfang, 253–254, 889
- Meilhac, Henri, 474
- Meilleur, Daniel, 1325
- Meiningen Company (Brussels), 474
- Meiningen Players (Germany), 368
- Meiningen troupe, 1276
- Meisner, Sanford, 862
- Melas, Spiros, 555–556
- Melbourne Theatre Company (Australia), 73, 119, 1478
- Melfi, Leonard, 990
- Melisa and the Self (Schön), 1419
- Melloney Holtspur (Masefield), 31
- melodrama, 889–893; African American religious theater, 1129; avant-garde drama, 87; Black Arts Movement, 164; dramatic structure, 366; realism, 1124; shinpa, 1241; social, 892, 1161, 1436; Théâtre du Grand-Guignol, 1340; theatricality, 1342; tragicomedy, 1371
- melodrama, plays and playwrights: Belasco, David, 140; Bene, Carmelo, 719; The Boss (Sheldon), 179; Boucicault, Dionysius, 181, 699; Brieux, Eugène, 200; Camille (Ludlam), 838; Čapek, Karel, 93; Caste (Robertson), 230; The Count of Monte Cristo (Dumas), 295; Daly, Augustin, 322, 1394; Davy Crockett (Murdoch), 331; D'Erzell, Catalina, 345; Drachmann, Holger, 357; Dyachenko, Viktor, 1161; East Lynne (Wood), 386; Echegaray, José, 388; Ervine, St. John, 738; The Green Ring (Gippius), 1164; Hayes, Kate Simpson, 597; Hazel Kirke (MacKaye), 598; Hellman, Lillian, 607; Heyward, Dorothy and Dubose, 612; Izumi Kyōka, 723; Jones, Henry Arthur, 741; The Lady of the Camellias (Dumas fils), 715; The Little Foxes (Hellman), 825–826; The Magical City (Akins), 29; Marvellous Melbourne (Romeril and Hibberd), 1151; Neilson, Anthony, 953; O'Casey, Sean, 702; Pirandello, Luigi, 280; Poison (Lunacharsky), 839; The Prodigal Son (Caine),

- 1134; Ptushkina, Nadezhda, 1170; R.U.R. (Čapek), 224; Sherriff, Robert Cedric, 744; Sherwood, Robert E., 1237; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Valentin and Valentine (Roshchin), 1168; Waiting for Lefty (Odets), 1436; Wake Up Jonathan (Rice and Hughes), 1137
- melodrama, by country or region: Argentina, 88; Australia, 72; Belgium, 141; Burma, 208; England, 399–403; France, 349, 472; Italy, 338; Latvia, 800, 801; Netherlands, 954–956; New Zealand, 961; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1161; United States, 1397–1401, 1403; Venezuela, 1418; Vietnam, 1422; Western Europe, 535, 892
- Melodrama Play (Shepard), 1233
- melody-dramas, 889
- The Melody That Disappeared (Abell), 342
- The Melody That Got Lost (Abell et al.), 3, 1266
- Melons (Pomerance), 1089
- Member of Parliament (Nušić), 1209
- The Member of the Wedding (McCullers), 1407
- Memet of the Blackness (Atay), 1387
- memoir. See autobiography
- Memoir (Murrell), 893–894, 943
- The Memorandum (Havel), 316, 595, 894–895
- Memorial Prayer (Gorin), 1168
- memory, 547, 906
- A Memory of Two Mondays (Miller), 904, 906, 1423
- Menander, 1509
- Men and Women (Belasco and DeMille), 1397
- Men Getting a Divorce? (Urdaneta), 1419
- Meng Jinghui, 91, 827
- Meng Lijun (Li), 257
- Men-Hater (Kostov), 206
- Men in Marinade (Istarú), 294
- Men in White (Kingsley), 564, 766, 895, 987, 1403
- Men of Law (Hochhuth), 430
- Menopausal Gentleman (Shaw), 1273
- Men Should Weep (Stewart), 1213
- mental illness. See also insanity. Anyone Can Whistle (Laurents), 814; Checkmate (Francheschi), 719; Dismorphomania (Sorokin), 1170; A Dream of Swallows (Zindel), 1516; Egloff, Elizabeth, 390; Home (Storey), 1285; King of Hearts (Stein), 813–814; The Lady from the Sea (Ibsen), 792; Long Day's Journey into Night (O'Neill), 830–831; The Madman and the Nun (Witkiewicz), 852; The Madness of George III (Bennett), 853; Right You Are (Pirandello), 1139; Schreber's Nervous Illness (Churchill), 263; Sheppey (Maugham), 1234; A Streetcar Named Desire (Williams), 1290; Suddenly Last Summer (Williams), 1302; Wedding Gown (Rodrigues), 188, 1145, 1448–1449; The Woman Without Sin (Rodrigues), 1145
- The Mentalists (Bean), 126
- mental retardation, 782
- Men Without Wives (Drake-Brockman), 77
- Mephistopheles, 1222–1223
- Mercado, Antonieta Rivas, 896
- Mercedes (Brasch), 187
- The Merchant Class (Gorky), 1277
- The Merchant of Yonkers (Wilder), 1469
- Mercury Theatre, 1405
- Mercury Theatre (Auckland), 1132
- Mercury Theatre (New York), 302, 1084
- The Mercy Seat (LaBute), 791
- Meredith, Gwen, 77
- Mereki (Maza), 79
- Merezhkovsky, Dmitry, 1164
- Meri, Veijo, 454
- Meridián (Slovovič), 1254
- Merrily We Roll Along (Furth), 814
- Merrily We Roll Along (Kaufman and Hart), 588
- Merrily We Roll Along (Sondheim), 354
- Merritt, Robert, 79
- A Merry Death (Evreinov), 431
- A Merry Death (Yevreinov), 1163
- The Merry Vineyard (Zuckmayer), 518–519, 959, 1518
- Merton of the Movies (Connelly and Kaufman), 284, 756
- Merz movement, 319, 320
- Mesopotamia trilogy (Mungan), 1387
- The Messenger (Dyk), 315
- The Messianic Era?! (Goldfaden), 540
- Mészöly, Miklós, 640
- Metamora (Stone), 891
- Metamorphosis (Cao), 223
- Metamorphosis Under the Stars (Chan), 237
- A Metaphor (Feldek), 1254
- metaphysical drama, 32, 916, 961, 1267
- Metaphysics of a Two-Headed Calf (Witkiewicz), 1485
- Metastasio, 555
- metatheater: iAy, Carmela! (Sanchis Sinisterra), 1184; Blood Relations (Pollock), 171; Casas, Myrna, 229; Cocteau, Jean, 275; Epitaph for the Whales (Sakate), 1180; Kaštelan, Lada, 305; Pirandello, Luigi, 916, 1251; The Seagull (Chekhov), 1204, 1205; Taiwan, 796
- Méténier, Oscar, 1340
- The Meteor (Dürrenmatt), 381
- Meteor (Karvaš), 1254
- Methethwe Lucky Stars (South Africa), 1262
- Method Acting, 9, 206, 403–404, 406, 563–565
- Method and Madness, 1220
- Methuselah (Goll), 364
- Metropolitan New Huajiu (China), 839
- Metropolitan Theater, 903
- Mexican Revolution, 1414
- Mexico, 895–898; Berman, Sabina, 149; carpa, 227; D'Erzell, Catalina, 344; development, 292; Hernández, Luisa Josefina, 1156; Hernández, Luiza Josefina, 608; nuevo teatro popular, 227; Ocampo, María Luisa, 981; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1146–1147; Schmidhuber de la Mora, Guillermo, 1194–1195; 20th century drama, 291, 344, 608, 981; Usigli, Rodolfo, 291, 1414; Yiddish theater, 1508; zarzuela, 227
- Me xi he co Teatro, 898–899, 923
- Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 899–900; The Magnanimous Cuckold, 305, 1173; Tarelkin's Death, 1173; acting, 9, 243; Alpers, Boris, 1171; Andreev, Leonid, 45, 817, 1163; arrest and execution, 369; Belgian drama, 141; biomechanics, 916; Blok, Aleksandr, 1107; censored, 92; Chekhov, Anton, 369, 1204, 1355; Chinese influences, 254; directing philosophy, 351; Golovin, Aleksandr, 1172; influence on Hughes, 637; influence on Living Theatre, 1085; Interwar drama, 718; Komissarzhevskaja

- Meyerhold (continued)
 Theater, 1174; Mayakovsky, Vladimir, 125, 880; Olesha, Yury, 995; Rudnitsky, Konstantin, 1172; Russian symbolism, 476, 1163, 1174; Senda Koreya, 1209; theatricality, 1342; Tretyakov, Sergei, 1376; Tsentreteatr, 368
 Meyerhold Theater, 1303
 Meyerowitz, Jan, 637
 Mhlanga, Cont, 22
 Miami Circle of Critics Award, 229
 Miami Light Project (Florida), 1250
 Michael and His Lost Angel (Jones), 742
 Michael James Manaia (Broughton), 963
 Michael Kramer (Hauptmann), 593
 Michelangelo Buonarroti (Giacometti), 714
 Michelangelo Buonarroti (Krléža), 781
 Michhil (Sircar), 1248
 Miciński, Tadeusz: In the Shades of the Golden Palace, 1080; The Revolt of Potemkin, 1080
 Mickee Faust Club, 283
 Midas trilogy (Dilmen), 1387
 Mid-Channel (Pinero), 900, 1064
 The Middle Ages (Gurney), 572
 Middle-Age Spread (Hall), 578 middle class. See bourgeois class
 The Middle One (Bhasa), 676
 Midnight Express (Hayes), 597
 Midnight Hotel (Osofisan), 1018
 Midnight Love (Marichal), 1107
 Midnight Mass (Karvaš), 754
 Midnight's Desire (Pedrero), 1040
 Midnight Wind (Topol), 316, 1366
 A Midsummer Night's Dream (Shakespeare), 913, 1288, 1329, 1343
 Midsummer Night's Dream in the Workhouse (Lagerkvist), 795
 Midwest Play Bureau, 536
 Miejski (theater), 1079
 Mielziner, Jo, 1003
 Mighton, John, 900–901; Scientific Americans, 1199
 Migliaccio, Flávio, 60 migrant workers, 1187. See also labor issues, as theme migration, 778
 Migrations (Alrawi), 1029
 Mihiz, Borislav Mihajlović, 1211
 Mihura, Miguel, 901–902, 1270
 The Mikado (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
 Mikulénaité, Ema, 824
 Mikumärdi (Raudsepp), 428
 The Mildew (Shepard), 1232
 Miles, Gareth: Hunllef yng Nghymru Fydd, 1351
 Milgate, Rodney, 73
 Milica Nikolića (VHV), 1254
 military life, militarism: The Captain of Köpenick (Zuckmayer), 1518; Comenius (Kokoschka), 773; Demise of the Okinawa Milk Plant (Sakate), 1180; Flare Path (Rattigan), 1120; In the Matter of J. Robert Oppenheimer (Kipphardt), 768; Kaiser, Georg, 747; Kambanellis, Iakovos, 750; On Guard Beneath the Neon Lights (Shen et al.), 1007
 The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore (Williams), 1475, 1477
 Millado, Chris, et al.: Oath to Freedom, 1051, 1053
 Millán, José, 310
 Millay, Edna St. Vincent, 902–903
 Millenium Teahouse (Lai), 796
 Miller, Arthur, 903–908; After the Fall, 25; All My Sons, 37, 1129, 1370; The Crucible, 307, 1129, 1370; Death of a Salesman, 335, 447, 1370; The Price, 1098–1099; Timebends, 1098; A View from the Bridge, 1370, 1423–1424; Broadway theater, 989; Cold War drama, 1406–1407; Freudian theory, 1105; influenced by O'Casey, 986; influenced by O'Neill, 1005; influence on Horovitz, 625; influence on Kinoshita, 767; mothers and sons, 687; naturalism, 950; presaged by Odets, 1403; produced abroad, 1411; Signature Theatre, 1412; socialist realism, 1257
 Miller, George, 420
 Miller, Joaquin, 214, 908, 1397
 Miller, Susan, 510
 Miller, Tim, 585, 636, 1043, 1087
 Miller, Tom, 511
 The Millionairess (Shaw), 1227
 The Mill on the Floss (Eliot), 1220
 Milne, Alan Alexander, 908–909; The Dover Road, 406; The Fourth Wall, 406; The Ivory Door, 406; Mr. Pim Passes By, 405, 406; Mr. Toad of Toad Hill, 406; Success, 406; The Truth about Blayds, 406, 1381; Winnie the Pooh, 406
 Milner, Arthur, 909–910
 Milner, Roy, 164
 Milroy, Jadah, 79
 mime, 133
 Mimodrama (Els Joglars), 232
 Minamoto Sanetomo, 1500
 The "Mind the Paint" Girl (Pinero), 1064
 Mineola Twins, 1058
 The Mineola Twins (Vogel), 1429
 Minerva Theatre (India), 382
 Mines, Mabou, 1146
 mines and mining, 1264, 1499
 Minh Koa, 1422
 Minick (Ferber and Kaufman), 448
 minimalism, 104, 977 minimal word piece, 679
 Minion (Illyés), 640
 The Minister's Wife (Nušić), 1209
 Ministry of Culture Award, 881
 The Minor (Fonvizin), 1160
 Minshall, Peter, 878
 A Minstrel Show (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1086 minstrel shows, 204, 1405
 Mint Theater Company, 36
 Minuit. See Les Éditions de Minuit minwageki. See folktales, folklore
 Mirabeau (Upits), 801
 The Miracle (Vollmoeller), 1127
 Miracle at Verdun (Chlumberg, Hans), 259
 A Miracle in 'Šargan' (Simović), 1211
 Miracle in the Old Market (Dragún), 358
 The Miracle of Saint Uliva (Copeau), 288
 The Miracle of the Golden Bread (Copeau), 288 miracle plays: Days Without End (O'Neill), 333; Easter (Strindberg), 386; Farmers Die (Kroetz), 783; Motherhood 2000 (Kennedy), 763; Oro Pro Nobis (Duncan), 378; Switzerland, 1315; To Damascus (Strindberg), 1320; Valdez, Luis, 1415; The Well of the Saints (Synge), 1321
 The Miracle Worker (Gibson), 1407
 The Mirage (Rodenbach), 141
 Mircevska, Zanina, 845
 Mirele Efras (Brecht), 543
 Mirele Efras (Gordin), 1507
 Miriam (Hirschbein), 614

- Miroshnichenko, Nikolai, 1168
- Mirror for Campus (Onwueme), 1008
- Mirror Game (Foon), 463
- The Mirror of Indigo Planters, 666
- Mirror Polishing Chamberlains (Sā'edi), 696
- The Mirror Wardrobe One Fine Evening (Aragon), 1308
- Misalliance (Shaw), 1225, 1226
- The Misandrist (Betts), 964
- Misanthropy and Remorse (von Kotzebue), 890
- miscegenation, 1281. See also race and race relations
- The Mischievous Lass (López Silva et al.), 1178
- mise-en-scène, 65, 67, 1419
- The Miser (al-Naqqāsh), 390, 692, 698
- Miserere (Yushkevich), 1162
- Misery and Nobility (Scarpetta), 719
- The Misfits (Miller), 905
- "M" is for Moon Among Other Things (Stoppard), 1282
- Misharin, Aleksandr, 1168
- Misha's Party (Nelson and Gelman), 954
- Mishima Yukio, 727, 910, 1240, 1241; Madame de Sade, 851–852
- Mishra, Monica, 1329
- misogyny. See also feminism and feminist themes.
Barrie, J. M., 123; Blithe Spirit (Coward), 167; Craig's Wife (Kelly), 760; Sha Yexin, 1230; Strindberg, August, 439–440, 1293; Western Europe avant-garde, 108
- Miss Bullberg's Marriage (Fonson and Wicheler), 141
- Miss Firecracker Contest (Henley), 608
- Miss Horniman's Gaiety Theatre (England), 404
- The Missing Face (Onwueme), 1008
- Missing Persons (Lucas), 837
- The Missing Teaspoon (Ragnarsson), 655
- The Mission (Bolt), 175
- Missionary Position (Renée), 1132
- missionary schools, 1029
- Miss Julie (Strindberg), 237, 303, 365, 910–912, 951, 1276, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1312, 1370, 1517
- Miss Liberty (Berlin), 588
- Miss Liberty (Berlin and Sherwood), 1237
- Miss Lulu Bett (Gale), 503, 912
- Miss Mabel (Sherriff), 1236
- Miss Maliczewska (Zapolska), 1513
- Miss Quashie and the Tiger's Tail (Harris), 417
- Miss Trévéléz (Arniches), 1269
- Mister, Mister (Grass), 549
- Mister Pitt (Gale), 503
- Mister Roberts (Heggen and Logan), 1407
- The Mistress of the House (Betti), 156
- The Mistress of the Inn (Goldoni), 1277
- The Misunderstanding (Camus), 216
- Mitchell, Gary, 706
- Mitchell, Langdon, 634, 912–913, 1397; The New York Idea, 960
- Mitsukoshi Award, 1310
- Mittelpunkt, Hillel, 96, 710
- Mitterer, Fritz, 86, 1431
- Mixed Marriage (Ervine), 427, 702
- Miyazawa Kenji, 770
- Miyoshi Jūrō, 29, 913–914, 1241
- Mizlansky/Zilinsky (Baitz), 115
- MKhat. See Moscow Art Theatre and Studios
- M. M. Abramova Theater (Moscow), 243
- Mnouchkine, Ariane, 267, 353, 369, 423, 486–487, 686, 914, 1090, 1193, 1335, 1343
- Moberg, Vilhelm, 1312
- Mobile Horror (Jokela), 455
- Mobile Theatre (Philippines), 658
- Moch, Cheryl, 446
- The Mock Parliaments, 914–915
- Model Andorra. See Andorra (Frisch)
- A Model for Rosaura (Rovinski), 294
- The Model Jail Chronicles (Santana), 1419
- model operas, 90
- model plays, 392
- Modena, Gustavo, 713
- Modern Breakthrough, 163
- modern drama vs. modernist drama, 915
- A Modern Filipina (Araullo and Castillejo), 1052
- modernism. See also postmodernism
- modernism, modernity, 915–917. See also avant-garde drama. Africa, 14, 16–17; apocalypse, 53; Argentina, 62; Artaud, Antonin, 67; Austria, 83; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; Brazil, 188, 221–222; Bridie, James, 327; Chekhov, Anton, 1161–1162; closet drama, 271; Coward, Noël, 345; France, 471; Glaspell, Susan, 535–536; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von, 618; India, 668, 670–671; Indonesia, 678–680; Ørnsbo, Jess, 1012; Romania, 1149; Russia and the Soviet Union, 926–927, 1163, 1172; Schnitzler, Arthur, 618; Serbia, 1210; United States, 105–106
- Modern Man's Theatre (Japan), 1238
- Modern Nō Plays (Mishima), 1240
- A Modern Nativity Play (Iredyński), 1082
- Modern Screen (magazine), 763
- The Modern Theatre (Israel), 1033
- A Modern Woman Called Ang Tau Mui (Leow), 809
- Modred (Campbell), 215
- Moeller, Philip, 1102, 1341
- Moffitt, John C.: It Can't Happen Here, 1084
- Mofid, Bizhan, 696
- Mogin, Jean, 143
- Moinuddin, Khwaja: La Qile Se Lalukhet, 1028; Zawal-e-Hydrabad, 1028
- Mojica, Monique: Princess Pocahontas and the Blue Spots, 1100
- Mojo (Pinter), 1068
- Mol, Pauline, 957
- Mold (Mafune), 855
- Molière (Berman), 150, 897
- Molière (Bulgakov), 927–928, 1277
- Molière, Jean-Baptiste, 419, 555
- Molière Award, 67
- Mollie Bailey's Traveling Family Circus (Terry), 1336
- Molly's Dream (Fornes), 468
- Molnár, Ferenc, 92–93, 639, 917–918; Liliom, 281
- The Moment of Labor Pain (Liang), 811
- Monday–Thursday (Celal), 1386
- Mondragón Aguirre, Magdalena, 344, 918
- Mondrish. See Mordecai
- Money (Bulwer-Lytton), 758
- Money (Kisakürek), 1386
- Money (Vi), 1423
- Money and Friends (Williamson), 1478
- Money is Everything in This World (Kawatake), 758
- The Money-Spinner (Pinero), 1063
- Mongrels (Enright), 420
- Monica and the Florentine (Chocrón), 1419
- Monika's Case (Morozowicz-Szczepkowska), 1080
- Monist Society, 535

- Monk, Meredith, 260, 423, 584, 1043, 1413
- The Monkey Mother (Bin), 80
- Monkey's Gold (Sowande), 24
- Monkey's Wedding Theatre Company (South Africa), 102
- monodrama, 918–919; Afrika Solo (Sears), 1206; Andreev, Leonid, 45; Australia, 74; Before Breakfast (O'Neill), 1299; Bennett, Alan, 146; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Evreinov, Nikolai, 430; expressionism, 432; Gray, Spaulding, 550–551; Learner, Tobsha, 78; Leow Puay Tin, 809; Marriage of Convenience (Rowlands), 1156; The Stronger (Strindberg), 1298
- Monodramas (Uhlár et al.), 1255
- Monodramas of New Form (von Meerheimb), 918
- monologue: Confusion (Raznovich), 1123; Dreadnoughts (Grishkovets), 1170; Fabien, Michèle, 144; Female Parts (Rame and Fo), 1119; feminist drama, 444; How I Ate a Dog (Grishkovets), 1170; Irish theater, 707; Jonah (Sorescu), 741; Loher, Dea, 830; Puppa, Paolo, 719; Road (Cartwright), 1142; Sex? Thanks, Don't Mind If I Do! (Rame and Fo), 1118; Simultaneously (Grishkovets), 1170; solo performances, 1087; Talking Heads (Bennett), 1326; The Unexpected Man (Reza), 1135; Vauthier, Jean, 1417; Waltz Number 6 (Rodrigues), 1146; The Zoo Story (Albee), 1518
- Mon Paris (Kishida), 1324
- Monroe, Marilyn, 905
- Monsieur Jordan the Botanist (Ākhundzādeh), 693
- Monsieur Perrichon's Trip (Labiche), 437
- Monsoon (Chowdhry), 417
- The Monster (Bahr), 82
- Monster (Cruz), 1051
- Monstrous (Planchon), 485
- Monstrous Regiment (England), 264, 919–920, 1440, 1502
- Montañés, Mónica, 1419
- Montano, Severino, 1052
- Monte Carlo Version. See The Atami Murder Case (Tsuka)
- Monterde, Francisco: Proteo, 896
- Montherlant, Henry de, 920–921; The Dead Queen, 480
- A Month in the Country (Turgenev), 921, 1160, 1162, 1172, 1277
- Monti, Ricardo, 62, 89, 1009
- Montienthong Theatre (Bangkok), 1338
- Montigny, A. A. L., 349
- Montreal Playwrights Workshop, 909
- Montserrat (Hellman), 606
- Monty Python's Flying Circus, 1391
- Moo (Clark), 268
- Moody, William Vaughn, 921–922, 1397–1398; The Great Divide, 551
- The Moon Above the River (Šrámek), 315
- Moon and Dead Indians (Moses), 929–930
- The Moon Flower (Akins), 30
- A Moon for the Misbegotten (O'Neill), 362, 922–923, 1004, 1005
- Moonlight (Pinter), 1066, 1068
- The Moonlit Flight (Apollinaire), 56
- The Moon of the Caribbees (O'Neill), 832, 1001
- Moonstruck (Shanley), 1218
- Moore, George, 700
- Moori and the Leprechan (Jack), 330
- The Moorings (al-Ānī), 698
- Moqaddam, Hasan, 695
- Morād, Gohār, 695
- Moraga, Cherríe, 446, 468, 510
- morality: Arbuzov, Aleksei Nikolayevich, 57; Blaumanis, Rūdolfs, 801; Brieux, Eugène, 200; Copenhagen, 1059; Daphne Laureola (Bridie), 327; Dumas fils, 659–660; Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 1426; Gide, André, 529–530; Ibsen, Henrik, 649; Kamban, Guðmundur, 653; The Master Builder (Ibsen), 875–876; Nietzsche, Friedrich, 966; reform melodrama, 892; Sheppey (Maugham), 1234; To Damascus (Strindberg), 1360; Tolstoy, Lyov, 1161
- The Morality of Mrs. Dulska (Zapolska), 1079
- Morality Plays (Bergman), 149
- Moraly, 487
- Mordecai, 1108
- More, More (Matura), 878
- More Labyrinths (Morett), 898, 923
- Moreno, Xiomara, 1419
- Moreno, Zora, 1107
- Moreno Torroba, Federico, 1514
- More Stately Mansions (O'Neill), 362, 1004, 1005
- Morett, María, 898–899, 923–924
- Moriarty, Jim, 963
- Morimoto Kaoru, 727, 924, 1239; A Woman's Life, 1488
- Mori Ōgai, 925, 1014, 1239, 1240, 1241
- Moritz Tassow (Hacks), 523
- Mormons, 787, 791
- Morning (Campbell), 215
- Morning, Noon, and Night (Gray), 550
- The Morning After Optimism (Murphy), 942
- Morning and Evening (Saalbach), 1177
- Morning Glory (Akins), 30
- Morning Sacrifice (Cusack), 313
- Morning's at Seven (Osborn), 925–926, 1015
- Morocco, 261
- Morosco Theatre (New York), 157, 233, 335, 1098, 1305, 1429
- Morountodun (Osofisan), 24, 1018
- Morozov, Mikhail, 1171–1172
- Morozowicz-Szczepkowska, Maria: Monika's Case, 1080
- Morris, Mary, 73
- Morris, William, 1223
- Le Mort de Chaka (Badian), 25
- Mortimer, Lillian, 1399
- Morton, Martha, 1399
- Morton Not Dead (Pinget), 1065
- Mosca, Gaspare, 715
- Moscato, Enzo, 719
- Moscow Art Theatre (MAT) and Studios, 926–928; dramaturgy, 368; founding, 368; Interwar drama, 101; nationalization of, 368; poetic theater, 1163; socialist realism, 1257; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 244, 350, 368, 384, 404, 406, 1276; theatricality, 1343
- Moscow Art Theatre (MAT) and Studios, playwrights: Andreev, Leonid, 45, 611, 817; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; Briusov, Valery, 107; Bulgakov, Mikhail, 205, 332; Chekhov, Anton, 244, 246, 369, 1162, 1204, 1355, 1392; Chirikov, Yevgeny, 1162; Efros, Nikolai, 1171; Erdman, Nikolai, 1303; Gorky, Maksim, 544, 835–836, 1162, 1305; Hughes, Langston, 637; Markov, Pavel, 1171; Nemirovich-Danchenko, Vladimir, 1161; Olesha, Yuri, 995; Simov, Viktor, 1172;

- Smelyansky, Anatoly, 1172;
Yushkevich, Semyon, 1162
- Moscow Choir
(Petrushevskaya), 928
- Moscow Linguistic Circle,
466
- Moscow Observer (Russia), 1172
- Moscow-Petushki (Yerofeyev), 1168
- Moscow State Yiddish
Theatre, 928–929, 1507
- Moscow Taganka Theatre,
1343
- Moses, Daniel David, 929–
930; Almighty Voice and His Wife, 39
- Moses and the Wandering Dervish
(Ghaffari), 696
- Mossinsohn, Yigal, 95, 710
- The Most Happy Fella (Loesser),
1346
- Moteram's Satyagraha (Hashmi and Tanvir), 590
- The Moth (Gladilin), 1170
- The Mother (Čapek), 94, 225,
315
- Mother (Black Mime Theatre
Women's Troupe), 417
- The Mother (Brecht), 54, 193,
369, 807, 930–931, 1083,
1086, 1257
- Mother (Martínez Seirra), 873
- The Mother (Piłński), 317
- The Mother (Popescu), 1091
- Mother (Tanaka), 1328
- The Mother (Witkiewicz), 1485
- Mother, Do not Laugh (Makino),
860
- Mother Clap's Molly House
(Ravenhill), 1121
- The Mother Country (Kureishi),
786
- Mother Courage (Brecht), 106
- Mother Courage (Ganguli), 505
- Mother Courage and Her Children
(Brecht), 194, 358, 483,
520, 543, 673, 789, 930,
931, 1218, 1317
- Mother Earth (Berruti), 61
- Motherhood 2000 (Kennedy),
55, 763
- Mother Hubbard (Edwards), 389
- Mother-of-Pearl Vesicle
(Chalraud), 1419
- Mother of Us All (Stein), 916
- mothers and daughters, 687,
1169
- Mothers and Fathers
(Musaphia), 962
- Mother Uganda and Her Children
(Mbowa), 20
- Moths (Noer), 103, 679, 932,
971
- MOTÍN. See Movimiento de
Teatro Independiente
- Motokiyo Zeami, 970
- The Motor (Gallego), 1418
- Mouawad, Wajdi, 221, 932–
933; Wedding Day at the Cro-
Magnons', 1447–1448
- The Mound Builders (Wilson),
1482
- The Mountain Giants
(Pirandello), 718
- The Mountain Goats
(Pirandello), 1071
- Mountain Hotel (Havel), 595
- Mountain Language (Pinter),
414, 1066
- The Mounted Patrol (Langer),
315, 797
- Mourning Becomes Electra
(O'Neill), 362, 363, 364,
933–934, 984, 1003, 1275,
1370, 1400
- Mourning Clothes (Akimoto), 29
- The Mourning Family (Nušić),
1209
- Mourning Furies (Kroetz), 783
- Mou Sen, 91, 827
- The Mouse Trap (Howells), 634
- movies. See film
- A Movie Star Has to Star in Black and White (Kennedy), 762
- Movimiento de Teatro
Independiente (MOTÍN),
1045
- Moving Out (Behan), 138
- Mo Yan, 1007
- Mozambique, 21
- Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus,
864, 1217
- Mozart and the Elves (Morett),
898, 923
- Mozarteum Conservatory
(Salzburg), 151
- The M.P. (Robertson), 1143
- Mpashi, Stephen, 21
- Mrožek, Sławomir, 934–935,
1011; Emigrés, 1081; Exiles,
281; Tango, 281, 1081;
Vatzlav, 281
- Mr. and Mrs. Macbeth, 676
- Mr. Bolfray: A Play in Four Scenes
(Bridie), 199, 1199
- Mr. Bones (Luscombe), 840
- Mr. England (Bean), 126
- Mr. Livermore's Dream (Pinero), 1065
- Mr. Nuche's Fine Wine
(Willems), 1470
- Mr. Perrichon's Trip (Labiche),
473
- Mr. Peters' Connections (Miller),
907
- Mr. Pim Passes By (Milne), 405,
406
- Mr. Poirier's Son-in-Law
(Augier), 473
- Mr. Puntilla and His Man Matti
(Brecht), 194, 521
- Mr. Shefi's Night of Independence
(Raz), 96
- Mr. Sleeman Is Coming
(Bergman), 148, 1312
- Mr. Toad of Toad Hill (Milne),
406
- Mrs. Dane's Defense (Jones),
403, 742
- Mrs. Dot (Maugham), 406, 878
- Mrs. Dulska's Morality
(Zapolska), 1513
- Mrs. Flowerpot (Khalaj), 696
- Mrs. Harris (Nagy), 948
- Mrs. Lenin (Khlebnikov), 919
- Mrs. Matos's Unbelievable Funeral
(Gabriel Núñez), 1419
- Mrs. Morli, One and Two
(Pirandello), 1070
- Mrs. Porter and the Angel
(Hewett), 610
- Mrs. Thally F (Romeril), 1151
- Mrs. Warren's Profession (Shaw),
377, 403, 405, 935–936,
1102, 1224
- MsFits company, 939
- Msomi, Welcome, 1264
- MTV generation, 772
- Mtwa, Percy, 15, 101, 964, 1264
- mua roi nuoc, 1422–1423
- Much Ado about Nothing
(Shakespeare and Brink),
1263
- Mud (Fornes), 468
- Mud, River, Stone (Nottage),
978
- Mudrooroo, 79
- Muehl, Otto, 584
- Muestras de Teatro Peruan
(festival), 1044
- Mug (Oshodi), 1017
- Mugo, Micere, 965
- Muhammad Ali Never Lets You
Down (Jepsen), 733
- Muhando, Penina, 19
- Mühsam, Erich, 959
- Mujahid—The Holy Warrior
(Nadeem), 947
- Mujičuč, Tahie, 304
- Mukhina, Olga, 1169, 1170
- Mulatto (Hughes), 637, 826,
936
- The Mulatto's Orgy
(Hernández), 609
- Mule Bone: A Comedy of Negro
Life (Hurston and Hughes),
637, 641
- Mülheimer Dramatist Award,
937
- Mulheron, Danny, 962
- Mulian's Mother (Xu), 1497
- Mulisch, Harry, 957
- Mullah Ibrāhīm the Alchemist
(Ākhundzādeh), 693
- Müller, Heiner, 936–938;
Hamletmachine, 524, 578,
1094; Life in the Country,
524; The Resettled Woman,
524; The Scab, 524; The Task,
102; apocalypse, 55;
deconstruction, 337; epic theater, 424; influence on Shvarts, 1243; learning plays (Lehrstücke), 807;
Peymann collaborator,
1048; socialist realism,
1256; Wilson, Robert, 1483

- The Mulligan Guard Ball (Harrigan and Hart), 587 multicultural drama, 80, 785, 1206 multimedia performance: intermedia, 584–585; Kennedy, Adrienne, 762; Krapp's Last Tape (Beckett), 779; The Seven Streams of the River Ota (Lepage and Ex Machina), 1214; shinpa, 1241; Simard, Andre, 1245; Suspect Culture, 1309; Yung, Danny N. T., 1510 multiple identities, 762
 Mumba, Norah, 23
 Mumbai, India, 328, 663–668, 993, 996
 Mumbo Jumbo (Bailey), 102
 Mummies (St. Louis), 1472
 The Mummified Deer (Valdez), 1415
 Mumps (Tsegaye), 1382
 Mum's Marijuana Is the Best (Fo), 462
 Münchhausen's Wedding (Ziverts), 801
 Mundi, Yosef, 95
 Mungan, Murathan, 1387
 Mungiu-Pippidi, Alina, 1150
 Mungoni, Edward, 21
 Munich (Kushner), 789
 Munich—Athens (Norén), 973
 Munich Kammerspiel, 369
 Munich's Children (Kroetz), 782
 Munich trilogy (Ibsen), 651
 Municipal Theater Award (Chile), 1114
 Muñiz, Carlos, 1270
 Munjong (Walley), 79
 Munk, Erika, 962
 Munk, Kaj, 3, 938–939; An Idealist, 342; The Word, 1490–1491
 Munro, Rona, 939–940; The Maiden Stone, 857–858
 Muramatsu Katsumi, 48
 Murat IV (Ofazoğlu), 1387
 Murayama Tomoyoshi, 98, 727, 940–941
 murder: Artsybashev, Mikhail, 1162; Assassins (Weidman), 815; Bluebeard—Hope of Women (Loher), 830; Chickenhead (Spiró), 1272; East Lynne (Wood), 386; A Gaggle of Saints (LaBute), 791; The Investigation (Weiss), 689; Kazablan (Mossinsohn), 710; A Knife in the Heart (Yankowitz), 1501; The Lady's Not for Burning (Fry), 793; The League of Nathans (Sherman), 806; The Lesson (Ionesco), 810; Liang Yunda (Li), 819; Lilies (Bouchard), 819; Lion in the Streets (Thompson), 823; On Trial (Rice), 1136; The Prodigal (Richardson), 1138; Roberto Zucco (Koltès), 1142–1143; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard), 1152; Shepard, Sam, 1233; Street Scene (Rice), 1291; Sweeney Todd (Wheeler), 815; The Tour Guide (Strauss), 1288; An Umbrella and Sandals (Iwamatsu), 722; The Valley's Depths (Suzuki), 1310; Well Hung (Lord), 834; A Whistle in the Dark (Murphy), 705; Yerma (García Lorca), 1504 Murder (Levin), 96, 710–711
 Murder, Hope of the Women (Kokoschka), 108, 432, 773, 830, 956
 The Murderer and the Murderer (Stumbre), 801
 A Murder Has Been Arranged (Williams), 1471
 Murder In the Cathedral (Eliot), 378, 395, 407, 442, 915, 941, 1084, 1179
 The Murderous Ravine (Stehlik), 316
 Murder Pattern (Voaden), 217, 1427
 Murdoch, Frank Hitchcock, 331, 891, 892, 1397
 Murdoch, Iris, 1188
 Murlin Murlo (Kolyada), 1169
 Murmuring Judges (Hare), 414, 586
 Murphet, Richard, 760
 Murphy, Tom, 704–706, 941–942, 1049; A Whistle in the Dark, 1458
 Murras (Johnson), 79
 Murray, Anne, 1510
 Murray, Peta, 73
 Murray, T. C., 702, 1145, 1503
 Murray-Smith, Joanna, 78
 Murrell, John, 218, 942–943; Memoir, 893–894
 Murtaza the Watchman (Kemal), 1386
 Muru, Selwyn, 963
 Musaphia, Joseph, 962
 Musco, Angelo, 715, 717
 Museum (Howe), 633
 Mushakōji Saneatsu, 1239
 Mushroom Hunting (Shigeyama), 970
 The Mushrooms Smell Fresh (Priede), 801 music, 164, 889, 1335
 The Music (Horák), 1254 musical theater, 811–815, 1130, 1464–1465 musical theater, plays and playwrights: Anderson, Maxwell, 43; Auntie Mame (Lawrence and Lee), 804; Blood Brothers (Russell), 1160; Caberet (Isherwood), 708; Cocteau, Jean, 275; Gilbert and Sullivan, 531; I'd Rather Be Right (Rodgers and Hart), 658; The Investigation (Weiss), 689; John, Paul, George, Ringo . . . and Bert (Russell), 1159; June Moon (Lardner and Kaufman), 744; The Light in the Piazza (Lucas), 837; Look Ma, I'm Dancin'! (Lawrence and Lee), 804; Marry Me a Little (Lucas and Rene), 837; Ngema, Mgongeni, 964; Raisin (Hansberry), 1116; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1146; Romeril, John, 151; Shangri-La (Lawrence and Lee), 804; Three Postcards (Lucas), 837; Wagner, Richard, 1433; Wang Renjie, 1440–1441; Yeats, William Butler, 703 musical theater, by country or region: Canada, 840; China, 839; England, 1159–1160; Iceland, 655; India, 665, 666, 670; Italy, 719; Laos, 798; United States, 1398–1404
 Music Box Theatre (New York), 270, 348, 1276
 The Music Hall Artists' Association, 402 music halls, 400, 401, 409
 Music Lessons (Petrushevskaya), 1168
 The Music Tree (Berman), v
 Muskaria, Amanita: Journey to Buenos Aires, 1082
 Muslim actresses, 1385
 Musset, Alfred de: Lorenzaccio, 472
 Mussolini, Benito, 1266
 Mustafá (Discépolo), 351
 musumeyaku (female leads), 1324
 Mutabilitie (McGuinness), 884
 The Mute Canary (Ribemont-Dessaignes), 108
 Mwansa, Dickson, 22
 Mwa Shimwamba Kopolo (Mpashi), 21
 Mwy na Phapur Newydd (Thomas), 1351
 My Adored Juan (Mihura), 902
 Myanmar. See Burma
 My Beatles (Satoh), 1193
 My Beautiful Laundrette (Kureishi), 786, 1029
 My Blackie (Sierens and Platel), 144
 My Children! My Africa! (Fugard), 1264
 My Dagger and I (Dragún), 358
 My Dinner with Andre (Gregory and Shawn), 1229
 Myers, Rose, 73

- My Fair Lady* (Lerner and Loewe), 588, 813, 1225
My Fair Lady (Shaw), 1110
My Family (De Filippo), 339
My Father's Father (Balodis), 119
My Father's House (Coscolluela and Coscolluela), 1053
My Favorite Wife (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
My Foot My Tutor (Handke), 580–581
My Friend Hitler (Mishima), 910, 1240
My God Have Her in Heaven (Martínez), 1419
My Heart's in the Highlands (Saroyan), 565, 943–944, 1187, 1359
My House Is No Longer My House (Cañas), 293
Mykolaitis-Putinas, Vincas, 824
My Little Quail Has Flown Away (Žeromski), 1080
My Mother, My Father and Me (Hellman), 607
My Mother is All in Clocks (Dharmas and Vvedensky), 765
My Mother Said I Never Should (Keatley), 416
My Mother's Courage (Tabori), 1323
My Name is Lisbeth (Pollock), 1088. See also Blood Relations (Pollock)
My One and Only (Stone), 814
My Partner (Campbell), 214, 944, 1397
My Poor Marat (Arbuzov), 1168
My Sister Eileen (McKenney and Fields), 757
My Son, the Doctor (Sánchez), 61, 1183
My Son the Fanatic (Kureishi), 786
Mysteries and Smaller Pieces (Living Theatre), 423, 828, 1043
The Mysteries of Love (Vitrac), 108, 1308, 1427
Mystery-Bouffe (Mayakovsky), 54, 93, 100, 108, 369, 500, 880, 945, 1163, 1164
The Mystery Man, or I Am Poor Soso Dzhughashvili (Korkiya), 1171
The Mystery of Charles Dickens (Callow), 851
The Mystery of Hamlet, King of Denmark (MacKaye), 848
The Mystery of Irma Vep (Ludlam), 510, 838
The Mystery of Natalie Wood (Egloff), 390 mystery play. See religion and religious drama
The Mystery Spot (Hughes), 636
Myth, Disaster and Propaganda in Nazi Germany and Contemporary America (Sewell), 1215
Mythen-Play (Meier), 1317
The Myth of Michael Roderick (Thomas), 1351 mythological themes: Aspazjia, 800; The Invention of Love (Stoppard), 688; Korkiya, Viktor, 1171; Lapeña-Bonifacio, Amelia, 799; On Rafferty's Hill (Carr), 707; Puppa, Paolo, 719; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1146
My Three Angels (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
My Uncle Sam (Jenkin), 732
My Youth in Vienna (Schnitzler), 1198
My Zinc Bed (Hare), 586
NAACP Award, 739, 978
NAACP Award (Greater Los Angeles), 864
Nabokov, Vladimir, 1165
nacha drama, 1329
Nádas, Péter, 641
Nadeem, Shahid, 947; The Suffering One, 1029
Nagasaki survivors, 1193
Nagata Hideo, 726
Naghiu, Iosif, 947–948, 1150
Nagy, András, 641
Nagy, Lajos Parti, 641
Nagy, Phyllis, 948–949; Butterfly Kiss, 209
Naidyonov, Sergei, 1162
Naipaul, V. S., 786
Najib Rihani Company, 391
Nakahashi Household (Mafune), 855
Nakamura Kichizō, 726
Naked Angels (theater company), 115
The Naked City (Mafune), 855
The Naked King (Shvarts), 1166, 1243
Naked Masks (Madsen), 853–854
Naked on a Goat (Orlin), 102
“the naked soul,” 1079 naked treatise, 482
naked trestle, 479
Na'lbandiān, Abbās, 696
Nalkowska, Zofia: The House of Women, 1080
The Name (Fosse), 470, 949
The Names of Power (Broszkiewicz), 1081
Namibia, 22
Namibian Bricks Theatre Collective, 22
Nam June Paik, 585
Nam Xyong, 1423
Nancy Ann (Heyward), 612
Nandikar (Kolkata), 674
Nang Sueng (Chandraprabha), 239 nang talung, 1337
Nan guo she (South China Society), 1357, 1459 nang yai, 1338
Nankai New Drama Troupe, 223
Nantsou, Stefo, 73
Nan Wei: Sister Xianglin (Lu and Nan), 1249–1250
Naotake (Katō), 727
Naoto, Takenaka, 722
Naples, 719
Naples Gets Rich (De Filippo), 338
Napoleon, Napoleonic Wars, 1197, 1225, 1236
Napoleon Crossing the Rockies (MacKaye), 848
Napoleon Intercedes (Hasenclever), 589
Napoli milionaria! (De Filippo), 719
Naqqāsh, Salīm, 693
Ñaque o de pijos y actores (Sanchis Sinisterra), 1184
Naradhip, Prince, 1338
Narayanbhatta, 665
narcissism, 1391
narrative, nonlinear, 679 narrative drama, 691–694, 697
Narrow Road to the Deep North (Bond), 1194
Nasev, Sashko, 845
Nash, N. Richard, 1407
Nasiriān, 'Alī, 695
Nassār, Nagib: The Loyalties of the Arabs, 1031
Nastasijević, Momčilo, 1210
Nathan, George Jean, 638, 984, 1000, 1001, 1003
Nathan Hale (Fitch), 456, 892
Nathansen, Henri, 949–950; Inside the Walls, 342
Nathan the Wise (Lessing), 97, 807, 1297
National Academy of Music, Dance, and Drama (Delhi), 671, 674, 675
National Art Group (Iran), 695
National Arts Centre (Canada): Albertine in Five Times (Tremblay), 34
National Arts Club Award, 1476
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. See NAACP Award
National Award (Spain), 1184
National Award for Theatre (Mexico), 150
National Black Theatre (New York), 164, 1086
National Black Theatre Festival Living Legend Award, 207
National Book Award, 725
National Centre for Drama (Spain), 1271
National Circus School (Montreal), 1245

- National Conference of Latino Artists (New York), 924
- National Dramaturgy Award, 554
- National Endowment for the Arts (Argentina), 504
- National Endowment for the Arts (NEA, United States): censorship, 1087; Bogart, Anne, 173; Fornes, Maria Irene, 469; Gurney, A. R., 572; Jenkin, Len, 732; Ludlam, Charles, 838; Machado, Eduardo, 845; Nelson, Richard, 954; Norman, Marsha, 974; Nottage, Lynn, 978
- National Institute of Arts and Letters, 1002, 1476
- National Institute of Dramatic Art (Australia), 73, 785
- National Iranian Radio-Television, 695, 696
- nationalism. See also patriotism. Army Formation (Thiyam), 65; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Edwards, Dic, 389; Final Chorus (Strauss), 1288; John Bull's Other Island (Shaw), 737; Srbijanović, Biljana, 1211; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430
- nationalist drama: Africa, 15; Egypt, 390; India, 665–667; Indonesia, 678; Israel, 709–711; Macedonia, 844–845; Philippines, 799; Scotland, 1201
- National Literacy Award, 902
- National Madness (Whyte), 102
- National Medal for Literature, 71
- National Medal of Arts, 32
- National Mobile Theater (France), 482
- The National Monument (Hedberg), 1312
- National People's Theater (France), 482, 483
- National Playwriting Competition (Singapore), 775
- National Prize for Theater (Spain), 1191
- National Salvation Corporation Ltd. (Lee), 807
- National School for the Dramatic Arts (Argentina), 62
- National School of Drama (India), 674, 676, 999, 1117, 1220, 1384
- National School of Theatre (Canada), 932
- National Socialism. See Nazism, Third Reich
- national theater. See government sponsorship; individual countries; subsequent entries
- National Theater (Romania), 1148–1149
- National Theater (South Africa), 1262
- National Theater (Tehran), 694
- National Theater (Warsaw), 541
- National Theater Company of China, 571
- National Theater Conference Award (United States), 557
- National Theater Troup (Egypt), 35
- National Theatre (Bucharest), 225
- National Theatre (Cambodia), 212
- National Theatre (Czechoslovakia), 1366
- National Theatre (England), 110, 125, 274, 297, 370, 411, 586
- The National Theatre (Ghana), 1310
- National Theatre (London): Arcadia (Stoppard), 1284; Bent (Sherman), 146; Betrayal (Pinter), 154, 1068; Brenton, Howard, 413; The (15 Minute) Dogg's Troupe Hamlet (Stoppard), 1283; Glengarry Glen Ross (Mamet), 537; An Inspector Calls (Priestley), 686; Jumpers (Stoppard), 1283; The Pillowman (McDonagh), 1062; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard), 1152, 1282; Shaffer, Peter, 411; Stuff Happens (Hare), 1300
- National Theatre (Malaysia), 862
- National Theatre (New York), 825, 868, 906
- National Theatre (Oslo), 582
- National Theatre (Prague), 93–94
- National Theatre (Taipei), 1502
- National Theatre (Thailand), 1338
- National Theatre (Uganda), 19
- National Theatre (Washington, DC), 297
- National Theatre Academy of Indonesia, 1136
- National Theatre Award, 901–902
- National Theatre Council (Spain), 27
- National Theatre Festival (India), 676
- National Theatre Mannheim, 1470
- National Theatre of Egypt, 392
- National Theatre of Israel, 95
- National Theatre School (Canada), 1352
- National Theatre School (Montreal), 1245, 1286
- National Theatre Society (Dublin), 1077
- National Theatre Society (Ireland), 559
- National Touring Company (Sweden), 972
- The National Touring Company (Sweden), 1314
- National Velvet (Bagnold), 113
- National Writer Laureate Award (Malaysia), 590
- The Nation's Worship (Ilagan), 1053
- Native Canadian Centre (Toronto), 62
- Native Daughter (Kroetz), 783
- Native Earth Performing Arts, 612, 929
- Native Earth Performing Arts (Toronto), 62, 1331
- native people. See indigenous people and performance
- Native Playwrights Award, 112
- Native Son (Wright and Green), 1406
- Native Speech (Overmyer), 1025
- A Nativity Play (Ball), 108
- Natrang Jammu (Jammu), 674
- Natural Affection (Inge), 682
- Natural Governance in Shambala (Shipenko), 1168
- naturalism, 950–952; Abbey Theatre, 983; antinaturalism, 1342; Antoine's Théâtre-Libre, 359; dramatic dialogue, 598; dramatic structure, 366; early—20th century drama, 467; expressionism compared, 431; heightened, 629; influence on drama, 1055; Open Theater, 1009–1010; precursor, 377; problem play, 1102; set design, 1172; shingeki, 726; the subhuman, 342; symbolism, 1318; Théâtre du Grand-Guignol, 1340; theatricality, 1342; Yiddish theater, 614
- naturalism, plays and playwrights: The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12; Andreev, Leonid, 45; Anouilh, Jean, 429; Antoine, André, 377; Barrie, J. M., 1047; Becque, Henry, 133; Before Daybreak (Hauptmann), 136; Bhagat, Datta, 158; Brahm, Otto, 184; Bridie, James, 327; The Brig (Brown), 353;

- Buysse, Cyriel, 141; Claus, Hugo, 269; The Connection (Gelber), 353; Dubillard, Roland, 376; Dumas fils, 659–660; Giacosa, Giuseppe, 529; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 618; Horovitz, Israel, 625; Ibsen, Henrik, 377, 618; Izumi Kyōka, 723; Lagerkvist, Pär, 794; Lawrence, D. H., 329; The Long Voyage Home (O'Neill), 832; Look Back in Anger (Osborne), 832–833; The Lower Depths (Gorky), 835–836; Mayama Seika, 880; Miss Julie (Strindberg), 910–912; O'Casey, Sean, 745; O'Neill, Eugene, 552, 1005; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Return of the Prodigal (Hankin), 1134; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; Sardou, Victorien, 1186; The Seduction (Kornfeld), 777; Shaw, George Bernard, 377, 1227; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 431; Street Scene (Rice), 1137, 1291; Strindberg, August, 237, 1296; Sudermann, Hermann, 1302; Trofimov, Aleksandr, 1161; Upīts, Adrejs, 801; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430; The Weavers (Hauptmann), 1446–1447; Wednesday to Come (Renée), 1132; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513; Zola, Émile, 366, 377, 1344, 1517
- naturalism, by country or region: Austria, 82, 83; Belgium, 142; Canada, 217, 219; Croatia, 304; Cuba, 310; Denmark, 342; France, 359, 475–476; Germany, 516–517, 592–594; Hungary, 640; India, 668; Japan, 1014; Netherlands, 603, 955; New Zealand, 962; Poland, 1079; Puerto Rico, 1106; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1171, 1172, 1173; Serbia, 1209; United States, 1398; Western Europe, 107–108
- Naturalism in the Theater (Zola), 951
- The Naturalistic Theater and the Theater of Mood (Meyerhold), 899
- The Natural Son (Dumas fils), 377, 1102
- Natya Darpan Award (India), 159
- Natyamanwantar, 668
- Natya Sangha Award (India), 754
- Natyasastra, 1035
- Naughty Anthony (Belasco), 140
- Naughty Jimmy (Felipe), 309
- Naumann, Bruce, 585
- nausea, 966
- nautanki, 673, 1221
- nautical melodrama, 892
- Naval Battle (Goering), 518
- Naya Theatre (India), 1329
- Nayatt School (Gray), 550
- Nayotake (Katō), 756
- Nazism, Third Reich: Abell, Kjeld, 3; Aunt Dan and Lemon (Shawn), 1229; Belgian drama, 143; Bernhard, Thomas, 151; book burning, 589; Borchert, Wolfgang, 177; A Bright Room Called Day (Kushner), 787; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; censorship, 369, 626; The Collaborator (Dürrenmatt), 381; The Condemned of Altona (Sartre), 1190; Czechoslovakia, 315; exile, writers in, 519–520; Flight to the West (Rice), 1137; Follow My Leader (Rattigan), 1120; Grey Farm (Rattigan and Bolith), 1120; The Hangman (Lagerkvist), 1312; Heldenplatz (Bernhard), 605; Horváth, Ödön von, 626; Jim the Lionhearted (Kalisky), 749; Johst, Hanns, 739; Kaiser, Georg, 747; late-20th century drama, 430; Müller, Heiner, 937–938; Munk, Kaj, 938–939; Myth, Disaster and Propaganda in Nazi Germany and Contemporary America (Sewell), 1215; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht), 1133–1134; Ride This Night! (Moberg), 1312; Seagull Eaters (Løveid), 1205; The Seven Streams of the River Ota (Lepage and Ex Machina), 1214; 2 (Linney), 822; Welcome the Bright World (Sewell), 1215
- Ndao, Cheikh, 24
- Ndebeka, Maxime, 24
- NEA. See National Endowment for the Arts
- The Neapolitan Disease (Steigerwald), 1278
- Neaptide (Daniels), 416
- Near East Broadcasting Station, 1031
- Necessary Angel Theatre Company, 202, 1510
- The Necessary Stage (Singapore), 104, 1247
- Necessary Targets (Ensler), 420
- Nederlandse Comedie (theater company), 957
- Ned Kelly (Stewart), 73
- Ned McCobb's Daughter (Howard), 632
- Needles and Opium (Lepage), 221, 952–953
- The Negative Pole (Calcaño), 1418
- Negativists (Olekšák), 1255
- Negritude, 16, 1058, 1267
- Negro Ensemble Company (United States), 105–106, 371, 989
- “Negro plays,” 1405–1406
- Negruzzi, Costache, 1148
- Neighborhood of the Jews (Vaccarezza), 61
- Neighborhood Playhouse (New York), 371, 862
- Neighborhood Theatre, 282
- Neil Simon of Native Theatre, 1331
- Neilson, Anthony, 953–954, 1058; Normal, 973–974
- Neither Fish nor Fowl (Kroetz), 783
- Neither Lost nor Found (Williamson), 76
- Neither Poor Nor Rich, But All the Opposite (Mihura and Tono), 901
- Nekrassov (Sartre), 1189
- Nelega, Alina, 1150
- Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model (Davis), 891
- Nellie McNabb (Kerr), 764
- Nelson, Richard, 372, 954
- Németh, Ákos, 641
- Németh, László, 640
- Nemiroff, Robert, 583–584
- Nemirovich-Danchenko, Vladimir, 45, 368, 926–928, 1161, 1163
- neoclassicism, 142
- neoconservatism, 787
- neogrotesco, 563
- neo-Hellenic drama, 555
- neo-melodrama, 473–475
- Neopolitan Disease (Steigerwald), 317
- neo-Romanticism, 54, 517, 523, 653, 1115
- NEP. See New Economic Policy (Soviet Union)
- Neptune Theatre (Halifax), 290, 1456
- Nero in a Skirt (Murayama), 940
- nervous Romanticism, 517
- Nesin, Aziz: Çiçi, 1387; You Aren't Black, 1387
- Ness, Margaret, 764
- The Nest (Howe), 633
- The Nest (Kroetz), 783
- Nestroy, Johann, 152, 780, 1197, 1431, 1469
- The Nether City (Gao), 506
- Netherlands, 954–958; absurdism, 269; Claus, Hugo, 269; dadaism,

- Netherlands (continued)
 319–320; Happenings, 584;
 Heijermans, Herman, 603;
 naturalism, 269, 603; 20th
 century drama, 269, 603
 Neues Theater, 1127
 Neutral Ground (Stoppard),
 1282
 Never Land (Nagy), 948
 Never Swim Alone (MacIvor), 847
 Nevezhin, Pyotr, 1161
 New Ambassadors Theatre
 (London), 566
 New and Old Holidays (Blue Blood), 87
 New Blood (Thomas), 1349,
 1398
 The New Born (Mangai), 673
 A New Brain (Finn), 815
 A New Business (Nemirovich-Danchenko), 1161
 New Canadian Kid (Foon), 463
 New Century Theatre, 1144
 The New Colony (Pirandello),
 1070, 1075
 New Cooperative Troupe
 (Japan), 796
 New Day (Fatima), 347
 The New Deal, 1084. See also
 Federal Theatre Project
 (United States)
 The New Deliverance
 (Witkiewicz), 55
 New Dramatists, 958–959;
 Blessing, Lee, 167;
 England, 407; Granville-
 Barker, Harley, 548;
 Hankin, St. John, 1134;
 Lord, Robert, 834;
 Nottage, Lynn, 978;
 Overmyer, Eric, 1025
 New Economic Policy (Soviet Union), 425, 1164
 New England (Nelson), 954
 New England Theatre
 Conference Award, 572
 New Faces of 1956 (Simon and Simon), 1246
 New German Cinema, 438
 New Group (New York), 126
 New Harvest (Bhattacharya),
 671
 The New House (Sardou), 1186
 The New Idol (Curel), 476
 New Lafayette Players (New York), 106, 207, 729
 The New Lafayette Theatre,
 164
 A New Land (Werewere-Liking), 25
 New Life (Tajovský), 1254
 New Literary Theatre, 851
 The Newly Married Couple
 (Björnson), 975
 New Lyric Club, 935
 The New Man (Pane), 678
 The New Marriage (Mitchell),
 913
 New National Theater
 (Japan), 99, 756
 New Negro Theater, 637
 new objectivity, 191, 432, 518,
 959–960, 1104, 1280
 The New Oresteia (Dvořák),
 315
 New Play Centre (Vancouver,
 Canada), 1088
 The New Play Centre Award,
 930
 New Playhouse Theater
 (Kolkata, India), 668
 New Playwrights' Theatre
 (New York), 805
 New Poetic Theater, 71
 New Poetry movement, 1423
 New Puerto Rican
 Dramaturgy, 1107
 new realism, 1121
 New Residence (Liang), 811
 New School for Social Research, 105, 1076
 new sentimentalism, 1170
 new sobriety, 959
 New South Wales Premier's
 Literary Award, 420, 547
 Newspaper Guild of New York
 Page One Award. See Page
 One Award
 newspaper publishing, 764, 1283
 The Newspaper "Russian Invalid,"
 Dated July 18 . . . (Ugarov), 1170 new stagecraft, 1400
 New Stage Society (New York), 1400
 new subjectivity, 1288
 The New Sufferings of Young W.
 (Plenzdorf), 524
 The New System (Björnson),
 163
 A New Tell Play (Bühner), 1316
 The New Tenant (Ionesco), 690
 New Theater (Stockholm),
 877
 New Theatre (London), 1179,
 1266
 New Theatre (New York), 371
 New Theatre League, 1083
 New Theatre movement, 5,
 77, 89, 368, 481
 New Voices: A Writer's
 Theatre, 959
 new war, 654
 New Wave drama, 47, 74–75,
 610, 1151, 1478–1479
 The New Woman (Parren-Siganou), 555
 New Women (Vu), 1423
 New Year's Eve (Einarsson), 652
 New Year's Eve (Manner), 454
 New York, New York
 (Streeruwitz), 1289
 New York Africa Studies
 Association Award, 966
 New York Armory Show,
 105–106
 New York City: censorship,
 1086; fin de siècle drama,
 385; Street Scene (Rice),
 1137; West Pier (Koltès),
 774; Yiddish theater, 1507–
 1508; The Zoo Story (Albee),
 1517–1518
 New York City Dramatic
 Workshop, 520
 New York Dance and Performance Award, 173
 New York Drama Critics' Circle Award: off-Broadway productions, 990; Albee,
 Edward, 32, 1356;
 Anderson, Maxwell, 43,
 1484; Bullins, Ed, 207;
 Dürrenmatt, Friedrich,
 1426; Frayn, Michael, 489;
 Fugard, Athol, 1263;
 Hansberry, Lorraine, 584,
 1116; Hellman, Lillian,
 606, 607; Henley, Beth,
 607; Howe, Tina, 633; Inge,
 William, 682; Kingsley,
 Sidney, 767; Mamet, David,
 40; Marber, Patrick, 270;
 Miller, Arthur, 335;
 Nottage, Lynn, 978; Page,
 Louise, 1027; Patrick, John,
 1039; Pomerance, Bernard,
 1089; Rabe, David, 1113;
 Radrigán, Juan, 1114;
 Saroyan, William, 1187,
 1359; Shaffer, Peter, 424;
 Shepard, Sam, 1232;
 Storey, David, 1285;
 Williams, Tennessee, 1473,
 1474, 1475; Wilson,
 August, 1060, 1480
 New York Drama League, 1002
 New York Foundation for the Arts Award, 978
 The New York Idea (Mitchell),
 912–913, 960, 1397
 New York Landmarks
 Conservancy Award, 1487
 New York Playwrights Lab,
 625
 New York Press Award, 457
 New York Shakespeare
 Festival: Havel, Václav, 466;
 Jenkin, Len, 732; Kennedy,
 Adrienne and Adam, 763;
 off-Broadway movement,
 989; Ong Keng Sen, 1006;
 Papp, Joseph, 1409;
 Shepard, Sam, 312, 1380;
 Treadwell, Sophie, 847
 New York Theater Festival,
 554
 New York Theater Workshop,
 457, 567
 New York Theatre, 1394
 New York Theatre Strategy,
 1026
 New York Theatre Workshop,
 390, 1412
 New Zealand, 960–964. See also Maori drama. Hall,
 Roger, 578; Kouka, Hone,

- 777–778; Lord, Robert, 834; Mason, Bruce, 875; McGee, Greg, 882–883; Renée, 1131–1132; 20th century drama, 578
- New Zealand Drama School, 511
- New Zealand Players, 961
- New Zealand Playwrights' Workshop, 964
- Nezumi Kozō: The Rat (Satoh), 49, 1193
- Nezval, Vitězslav, 93, 316
- Ngema, Mbongeni, 15, 101, 964–965, 1264
- Ng'ombe, James, 22
- Ngo Pa (Rama V), 1118, 1338
- Ngugi wa Mirii, 17, 19
- Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 15, 16–17, 19, 965–966
- Nguyen Huy Tuong, 1423
- Nguyen Xuan Khoa, 1423
- Nichiren's Street Sermon (Mori), 925
- Nicholas Nickleby (Dickens), 1220
- Nicholas Nickleby (Edgar), 414
- Nicholl, Allardyce, 370
- Nichols, Anne: Abie's Irish Rose, 4, 1399
- Nichols, Peter, 331
- Nicholson, J. Kenyon, 138
- Nickel Stuff (Koltès), 774
- Nickerson, Harold, 1401
- Nickname: Goncagül (Arayıcı), 1387
- Nick of the Woods (Medina), 891
- Niels Ebbsen (Munk), 939
- Nietzsche, Friedrich, 966–967; chance, 239; deconstruction, 336; "God is dead," 516; Hasenclever, Walter, 1258; Ibsen, Henrik, 651; influenced by Darwin, 951; influence on drama, 530, 976, 1055; O'Neill, Eugene, 346, 655–656, 1000, 1005; Shaffer, Peter, 1217; Shaw, George Bernard, 1225; Sorge, Reinhard Johannes, 1261; Strindberg, August, 1293, 1296; value skepticism, 618
- Nieves Marmol's Husband (Maneses), 1418
- Nigeria, 24; Harvest of Ghosts (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 626; Onwueme, Tess, 1008; Osofisan, Femi, 1017–1018; Soyinka, Wole, 1267–1269
- The Nigger* (Sheldon), 1230, 1398
- Night, a Wall, Two Men (Williamson), 76
- Night, Night of My Youth that Raises My Hackles with Screams and Anger (Shimizu), 1238
- Night and Day (Stoppard), 1282, 1283, 1284
- Night Assault (Sastre), 1270
- The Night at the Edge of the Forest* (Koltès), 774
- A Night at the Opera* (Kaufman), 756
- A Night at the Races* (Thompson), 1353
- The Night Before* (Sowande), 24
- The Night Before Christmas* (Howells), 634
- The Night Before the Trial* (Chekhov), 243
- Night Blooming Cereus (Reaney and Beckwith), 1126
- Night Cows (Marchessault), 869
- Nightfall (Murray-Smith), 78
- Night Group (Japan), 2
- A Night in a Café* (Tian), 1357
- Nightingale for Supper (Topol), 1367
- A Night in May* (Yehoshua), 95–96
- A Night in the Old Marketplace* (Peretz and Granovsky), 929, 1508
- A Night in the Rich Man's House* (Betti), 156
- The Night in Which the Lantern Should Not Go Off* (Kacarov), 845
- The Night is Mother to the Day* (Norén), 967, 973, 1313
- The Night Just Before the Forests* (Koltès), 487
- A Night Longer than the Sea* (Hirata), 614
- Nightmare (Yankowitz), 1501
- Nightmare-City (Dutt), 383
- 'Night Mother (Norman), 446, 967–968, 974, 1412
- Night Music (Odets), 564, 988
- Night Must Fall (Williams), 1471
- The Night of Madame Lucienne* (Copi), 289
- Night of the Assassins (Triana), 310, 1377
- The Night of the Iguana* (Williams), 968–969, 1371, 1475
- The Night of the Tribades* (Enquist), 418, 969, 1299, 1313
- Night of the Twentieth (Sobol), 711
- Night of Wrath (Salacrou), 1182
- A Night Out* (Pinter), 1068
- Night Over Taos (Anderson), 564
- Night Rehearsal (Máša), 317
- Night Sky (Yankowitz), 1501
- Nights of Passing Love (Pedrero), 1040
- The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail* (Lawrence and Lee), 804
- Nightwalk (Chaikin et al.), 1232
- Nightwalk (Shepard), 1409
- Nightwalk (Terry et al.), 1336
- The Night We Became Xiangsheng Comedians* (Lai), 795
- Night with Guests (Weiss), 1452–1453
- Nightwood Theatre (Toronto), 1100
- nihilism, 111, 166
- The Nihilist* (Tolstoy), 1363
- The Nihilists* (Wilde), 1467
- Nihon Engeki Kyōjau (Japan), 621
- Nijinsky (Albee), 33
- Nijinsky (Burykin), 1169
- Nikolai Stavrogin (Nemirovich and Dostoevsky), 927
- Nimmo, Heather, 78
- Nimrod Theatre (Sydney, Australia), 75
- Ninagawa, Yukio, 723
- Ninagawa Yukio, 727, 1238
- Nindethana (Melbourne), 79
- Nine (Furth), 814
- Nine (Kopit), 776
- Nine Forces, Nine Muses. See Devetsil (Prague)
- 1941 (Chan), 237
- 1967 War (Middle East), 1032
- 1969 Terminal 1996 (Yankowitz), 1502
- 1984: Here and Now (Kee), 104
- 19th century. See also fin de siècle drama. apocalypse, 53; bufa theater, 203; middle-class life depicted in, 377; philosophical drama, 1054–1057; realism, 349, 1124; social gospel, 1127–1128
- Ninette and a Gentleman from Murcia (Mihura), 902
- 92nd Street YMCA (New York), 261
- Ninety-three (Przybyszewska), 1104
- Níngali (Lawford), 79
- Nirvana (Iliev), 206
- The Nirvana of Gou'er Ye* (Jin), 255, 735
- Nirvanas, Paulos, 555–556
- Nirvana: The Story of Wen Tianxiang (Liu), 257
- Nitro. See Black Theatre Co-Operative
- Nitsch, Hermann, 584
- Niu Xiu: Third Sister Liu, 1347
- Njals Saga (Sigurjonsson), 1244
- Nkosi, Lewis, 1262
- Nkrumah, Kwame, 1
- Nkrumah—Ni!—Africa—Ni! (Osofisan), 1018
- No. 2 (Fraser), 962
- Noah (Hein, librettist), 604

- Noam Chomsky Lectures (Brooks), 202
- The Noam Chomsky Lectures (Verdecchia), 1420
- nō and kyōgen theater, 969–970; Ariyoshi Sawako, 63; At the Hawk's Well (Yeats), 70; Earth Spider (Kawatake), 759; Epitaph for the Whales (Sakate), 1180; influence on Irish theater, 704; influence on Lapeña-Bonifacio, 799; influence on Yeats, 1503; Izumi Kyōka, 723; Modern Nō Plays (Mishima), 1240; Ōta Shōgo, 1020; Zeami (Yamazaki), 1500
- Nobel (Steigerwald), 317, 1278
- Nobel Prize (Sweden): Beckett, Samuel, 132; Benavente, Jacinto, 145, 1269; Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 976; Camus, Albert, 216; Echegaray, José, 388, 1269; Eliot, Thomas Stearns, 394; Fo, Dario, 462, 719, 1118; Galsworthy, John, 504; Gao Xingjian, 90, 255, 506; Hamsun, Knut, 579; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 591; Jelinek, Elfriede, 731; Lagerkvist, Pär, 794; Martinson, Harry, 1314; O'Neill, Eugene, 359, 1004, 1370; Pinter, Harold, 1066; Pirandello, Luigi, 1071; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 1190; Shaw, George Bernard, 405, 1179, 1226; Soyinka, Wole, 24, 1267; Yeats, William Butler, 1370, 1504
- Noble Hearts (Su), 255
- Nobodaddy (MacLeish), 849
- Nobody Even Met Her (Eichelbaum), 61
- Nóbrega, Antônio, 189
- Nobunaga in His Young Days (Osaragi), 1241
- Nocturnal Search (Khlebnikov), 1163
- Noda Hideki, 728, 772, 970–971, 1180
- Noda Map, 970
- Noer, Arifin C., 103, 679–680, 971–972; Moths, 932
- No Exit (Sartre), 283, 481, 510, 972, 1056, 1068, 1189
- No for an Answer (Blitzstein), 168
- No Going Back (Balodis), 119
- No-Good Friday (Fugard), 496, 1263
- No Great Mischief (MacLeod and Young), 1510
- Noise of Broken Chains (Halac), 576
- Noises Off (Frayn), 415, 489
- The Noisy Celebration (Dorr), 356
- No Lies (Piemme), 144
- No Man's Land (Pinter), 412, 1068
- No More a-Roving (Whiting), 1460
- "No More Masterpieces" (Artaud), 87
- No More Peace! A Thoughtful Comedy (Toller), 1362
- The Noncombatant (Osanai), 1014
- None But the Lonely Heart (Odets), 988
- Nono (Guitry), 476
- Non plus plis (Els Comedians), 232
- nonrealism, 45
- The Non-Stop Connolly Show (Arden), 59
- No One (Borberg), 342
- No One Goes Free (Dagerman), 322
- No One Was Saved (Barker), 122
- The Noose (Aspenström), 1314
- The Noose (Smoček), 317
- Nooteboom, Cees, 957
- No Parking on Odd Days (Kuo), 104, 785, 1247
- No Performance (Picabia), 108
- Nordal, Sigurður, 654
- Norén, Lars, 972–973, 1313; The Night is Mother to the Day, 967
- No Reporters Please! (Kerr), 764
- No Return Ending (Hassan), 590
- Norge, Géo, 142
- Norma (Bellini), 646
- Normal (Neilson), 953, 973–974
- The Normal Conquests (Ayckbourn), 110
- The Normal Heart (Kramer), 511, 778, 1087, 1412
- normality, 733
- Normalization era (Czechoslovakia), 1278
- Norman, Marc, 1284
- Norman, Marsha, 974–975, 1409, 1412; 'Night Mother, 445, 967–968
- Norman, Xoli, 102, 729, 1265
- Norm and Ahmed (Buzo), 74
- Norodom Sihanouk, Prince of Cambodia, 212
- north, the idea of, 1427
- Northam, John, 360
- North Carolina Dramatist Laureate, 557
- Northern Kunqu Troupe, 570
- Northern Rivers Theatre Company (Australia), 119
- North of Sixty (Taylor), 1331
- Norton, Elliot, 359
- Norway, 975–977; Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald, 161; Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 162, 342, 601; Civil War, 648; Depression era, 575, 1022; dramatic dialogue, 365; Grieg, Nordahl, 1022; Hamsun, Knut, 579; Heiberg, Gunnar, 601; Ibsen, Henrik, 185, 342, 353, 600, 645–651, 791, 1153; Lagerkvist, Pär, 582; late—19th century drama, 353, 579, 600, 601; Løveid, Cecilie, 834–835; problem play, 353; 13th century, 1098
- Norwood (Daly), 1397
- The Nose (Egloff), 390
- No Sugar (Jack), 330
- Not About Nightingales (Williams), 1472
- Not All of Them Have One, 554
- The Notebook of Trigorin (Williams), 1477
- Notenberg, Eleonora Genrikhovna von. See Guro, Elena
- Notes from Quebec (Thompson), 1354
- The Notes of a Russian Traveler (Grishkovets), 1170
- Notes on Falling Leaves (Khandin), 764
- not-for-profit theaters, 776
- Not Guilty (Lardner), 800
- Nothing but a Man (Deauville), 142
- Nothing Sacred (Walker), 1438
- Nothing to Lose (Fennario), 1008
- Nothing Unusual (Tarn), 1256
- Nothing Without Tripholio (Bogdanovski), 845
- Not I (Beckett), 133
- No Time for Comedy (Behrman), 139, 944, 977–978
- Not in My Name (Living Theatre), 829
- Not . . . not . . . not . . . not . . . not enough oxygen (Churchill), 263
- The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith (Pintero), 403, 1064, 1224
- No to the Sale of Land (al-Guzi), 1031
- Nottage, Lynn, 978–979
- Nottingham Playhouse, 413
- Not Waiting for Godot (Lasica and Satinský), 1254
- Not Without My Gun (Sekhabi), 102
- Nougé, Paul, 142
- Noun (La Fura dels Baus), 232
- Novarina, Valère, 487
- November Night (Wyspiński), 1493
- No Villian (Miller), 903
- Novión, Alberto, 563
- Novo, Salvador, 292, 896
- Novoa, Filippis, 563

- Nowaczyński, Adolf: War for War, 1080
- Now He Doesn't Want to Play (Treadwell), 1375
- Nowhere (Hewett), 610
- No Worries (Holman), 73
- Nowra, Louis, 979
- Now That the Town Doesn't Exist (Brulin), 143
- Now They're Singing Again (Frisch), 492
- Ntshona, Winston, 101
- Nucléa (Pichette and Philipe), 484
- Nuclear (Tamban), 1051, 1053
- nuclear weapons, 770, 772, 776, 1214
- Nudo Theater (Buenos Aires), 356
- Nue (Dymov), 1162
- nueva dramaturgia, 1194
- Nueva Escena, 1340
- Nugent, Elliott, 1429
- Numancia (Cervantes), 1340
- A Number (Churchill), 263, 265
- Nunez, Alejandra, 1100
- Nunn, Trevor, 411
- The Nunnies (Skourtis), 556
- The Nuns (Manett), 310
- The Nun's Romantic Story (Mda), 1265
- Nuova Scena (Italy), 6, 282, 461, 719
- The Nurse (Maponya), 101
- Nurston, Zora Neale, 164
- Nus, Eugène: La retour de Melun, 1358
- Nušić, Branislav, 1209
- Nuttall, Jeff, 584
- Nuwa Mends the Sky (Chan), 237–238
- The Nyola Tree (Whaley), 22
- Oaha (Wedekind), 1450
- Oak Leaves and Lavender (O'Casey), 984
- Oaks (Bimko), 1508
- Oath to Freedom (Millado et al.), 1051, 1053
- Oberammergau, 1130
- OBERIU (Soviet Union), 101, 765, 1174
- obesity, 683
- OBIE Award: Baraka, Amiri, 106, 381; Bogart, Anne, 173; Bullins, Ed, 207; Childress, Alice, 249; Chong, Ping, 261; Churchill, Caryl, 1365; Durang, Christopher, 378; Ensler, Eve, 420; Five Lesbian Brothers, 457; Foreman, Richard, 466; Fornes, Maria Irene, 442, 467–468, 469; Fugard, Athol, 1263; Gelber, Jack, 512; Gray, Spaulding, 550; Gurney, A. R., 572; Horowitz, Israel, 625; Howe, Tina, 633; Hwang, David Henry, 643; Innaurato, Albert, 683; Jenkin, Len, 732; Kennedy, Adrienne, 106, 761; Kushner, Tony, 788; Linney, Romulus, 822; Ludlam, Charles, 838; MacIvor, Daniel, 847; Mamet, David, 40, 862, 1215; Mann, Emily, 864, 865; Margolin, Deb, 1273; Medoff, Mark, 887; Mee, Charles, 888; Mtwá, Percy, 1264; Ngema, Mbongeni, 1264; Owens, Rochelle, 1026; Parks, Suzan-Lori, 1037; Pomerance, Bernard, 1089; Richardson, Jack, 1138; Rivera, José, 1141; Rodríguez, Jesusa, 1146; Shange, Ntozake, 1218; Shawn, Wallace, 1229; Shepard, Sam, 208, 312, 463, 1232; Smith, Anna Deavere, 1255; Spears, Steve J., 75; Split Britches, 1273; Tally, Ted, 1327; Terry, Megan, 1336; Valdez, Luis, 1415; Vogel, Paula, 119, 1429; Wasserstein, Wendy, 1393, 1442; Waters, Les, 888; Wellman, Mac, 1454; Zindel, Paul, 1516
- Obituary (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- Object (Levin), 95
- Objection Overruled (Burns), 964
- The Object of My Affection (Wasserstein), 1442
- Oblomov (Ugarov), 1170
- Obraztsova, Anna, 1172
- Obrenović, Aleksandar, 1210
- O'Brien, Eugene, 707
- O'Brien, Julianne, 73
- O'Brien, Richard, 962
- obscurity, 1229, 1249
- The Observer (Shipenko), 1168
- Observe the Sons of Ulster Marching Towards the Somme (McGuinness), 884, 981
- Obsidian Theatre Company, 12
- Obyedineniye Realnogo Isskustva (OBERIU), 1165
- Ocampo, María Luisa, 344, 981–982
- O'Casey, Sean, 982–986; Junó and the Paycock, 744–745; The Plough and the Stars, 1078; The Shadow of a Gunman, 1216–1217; The Silver Tassie, 1244–1245; Behan, Brendan, 1111; critics, 359; Lawrence, David Herbert, 1462; literary revival, 1049; Marx, Karl, 1056; modernism, 916; off-Broadway theater, 990; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1281; Royal Court Theatre, 1145; socialism, 702; Synge, John Millington, 1322
- The Occupant (Albee), 93
- occupation, military: Belgium, 142; censorship, 1032; Cold War drama, 1407; The Flies (Sartre), 1189; French Resistance, 131, 1182; Japan, 727; Netherlands, 956; No Exit (Sartre), 972; Norwegian drama, 977; suppression, 1031
- The Occupation of Heather Rose (Lill), 820, 986
- Ocean Drive (Streeruwitz), 1289
- October (Murrell), 943
- October Revolution of 1918, 100
- October Revolution of 1956, 1081
- October War of 1973, 1033
- Octopus (Weöres), 640
- Octopus's Garden (Shipenko), 1168
- The Octoroon (Boucicault), 181, 214, 893, 1397
- Oda Nobunaga: Nobunaga in His Young Days (Osaragi), 1241
- Oda-Oak Oracle (Tsegaye), 1381
- The Oddball (Afinogenov), 1164
- The Odd Couple (Simon), 359, 987, 1246, 1408
- The Odd Couple II (Simon), 987
- Odd Man Out (Sherriff), 1236
- The Ode of the Wind (Chen), 245
- Odéon-Théâtre de France (Paris), 514, 565, 1203
- The Odera School (Kubota), 784
- Ode to Joy (Kitamura), 770
- Odets, Clifford, 637, 986, 987–989, 1023, 1101, 1137, 1401–1404; Awake and Sing!, 109, 564, 1085; Golden Boy, 539, 564; Night Music, 564; Rocket to the Moon, 564; Till the Day I Die, 564; Waiting for Lefty, 564, 1083, 1435–1436
- Odin Theatre (Holstebro, Denmark), 160, 343
- Ododo (Walker), 164
- O.D. on Paradise (Griffiths and Brymer), 561
- Odysseus Return Home (Kambanellis), 750
- The Odyssey (Els Joglars), 232
- The Odyssey (Homer), 1185
- Oedipe (Gide), 530
- Oedipus (Sophocles and Suzuki), 1311

- Oedipus and the Sphinx (Hofmannsthal), 619
- Oedipus at Palm Springs (Five Lesbian Brothers), 457
- Oedipus myth: Chekhov, Anton, 1392; Hristić, Jovan, 1210; Jepsen, Erling, 733; Norén, Lars, 972; The Seagull (Chekhov), 1204; The Shoe (Solórzano), 1258
- Oedipus Rex (Müller), 937
- Oedipus Rex (Sophocles), 680, 837, 1127, 1131
- Oehenschläger, Adam Gottlob, 341, 342, 646, 647
- O Evening Star! (Akins), 30
- Of All the Nerve: Deb Margolin (Margolin), 1273
- off-Broadway theater, 106, 371, 989–991, 1405–1411. See also Broadway theater; OBIE Award
- Offenbach, Jacques, 780
- Offending the Audience (Handke), 580, 585, 807, 991, 1049
- Off Festival (Avignon), 774
- Officer of the Order of Canada, 1352
- Office Theater (Brazil), 188
- The Official Honorees (Stehlik), 316
- An Official's Demotion (Chen et al), 256
- The Official Story (Bortnik), 62
- Off Limits (Adamov), 486
- off-off-Broadway theater, 509–511, 990–991, 1025, 1405–1411, 1516
- O'Flaherty, V.C (Shaw), 699
- Ofazoğlu, Turan: Murat IV, 1387
- Of Love, Poetry, and Governmental Service (Blok), 169
- Of Mice and Men (Steinbeck), 757
- Of Old, the Morningstar (Heijermans), 603
- Of Rats and Men (Bean), 126
- Of Sturdy Stock (Fleißer), 458
- Of Thee I Sing (Kaufman), 812
- Of Thee I Sing (Kaufman and Ryskind), 756, 1085, 1402
- Of the Fields, Lately (French), 490
- Of the Unjust Sleep (Werewere-Liking), 25
- The Oginski Polonaise (Kolyada), 1169
- Ogrizović, Milan, 304
- O'Harra, Michaela, 958
- Ōhashi Yasuhiko, 728
- Ohashi Yasuhiko, 992
- Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad (Kopit), 775, 1409
- Ohel Theatre (Tel Aviv), 95, 709
- Ohio Impromptu (Beckett), 416
- The Ohio State Murders (Kennedy), 763
- Oh What a Lovely War! (Littlewood), 411
- O Jerusalem (Gurney), 572
- Okamoto Kidō, 620, 992–993, 1241; Tale of Shuzenji, 1324
- Okamoto Kidō: Tale of Shuzenji, 727
- Oklahoma! (Rodgers and Hammerstein), 813
- Olaf Liljekrans (Ibsen), 647, 648
- Oldemar and the Colonels (Cañas), 293
- Oldenburg, Claes, 584
- The Oldest Profession (Vogel), 1429
- An Old Friend Returning on a Stormy Night (Bai), 114
- Old Home (Kazantsev), 1170
- The Old Home Town (Kaufman), 757
- The Old House (Estorino), 309
- The Old Lady Says, "No!" (Johnston), 703, 851, 1504
- Old Macedonio (Valdelomar), 294
- The Old Maid (Akins), 30
- The Old Man (Gorky), 545
- Old Man Joseph and His Family (Linney), 822
- Old Masters (Bernhard), 153
- Old Money (Wasserstein), 1442
- The Old New Year (Roshchin), 1168
- The Old Ones (Wesker), 1455
- Old Rock-a-Bye (Yankowitz), 1501
- The Old Servant (Cossa), 62
- Old Stone Mansion (Elkunchwar), 396, 993
- An Old Time Ladies' Aid Business Meeting at Mohawk Crossroads (Anderson), 42
- Old Times (Pinter), 412, 994, 1068
- Old Tote Theatre (Australia), 73
- Old Toys (Kishida), 1239
- The Old Tune (Beckett), 1065
- Old Vic (London), 116, 411, 1066, 1329
- The Old Woman Broods (Różewicz), 1157
- Oleanna (Mamet), 863, 994–995
- Olesha, Yuri, 995–996; A Conspiracy of Feelings (Olesha), 285, 1164; A List of Assets (Olesha), 1164
- Olga (Ruohonen), 455
- Olga's Room (Loher), 830
- Oli Jompan (Florentino), 1052
- Olekšák, Roman, 1255
- Oliver, Edith, 371
- Oliver, Oliver (Osborn), 1015
- Oliver Award, 270, 586
- Oliver Cromwell (Lunacharsky), 839
- Oliver Goldsmith (Thomas), 1349
- Olivier, Laurence, 370, 404, 421, 743, 1101, 1343
- Olivier Award. See Laurence Olivier Award
- Olivier-Sampson, Laurinda, 23
- Olmo, Lauro, 1270
- Olsen, Ernst Bruun, 996
- Olson, Charles, 584
- Olsson, Hagar (Olsson), 453
- Olympe's Marriage (Augier), 1101
- Olympia Theater (Milan), 1139
- Olympic Games, 789, 1289
- Olympic Theatre (London), 230, 1358
- Omaha Magic Theater (OMT), 1336
- Omar Khayyam Café (New York), 1501
- Omotoso, Kole, 24
- OMT. See Omaha Magic Theater
- On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (Lerner), 813
- Onafhankelijk Toneel (Netherlands), 957
- On Alexis, Man of God (Kuzmin), 1174
- On All Fours (Różewicz), 1157
- On a Muggy Night in Mumbai (Dattani), 328, 996–997
- Onassis Award for Theatre, 672
- On Baile's Strand (Yeats), 1274, 1370
- On Borrowed Time (Osborn), 1015
- Once Again Woe (Vetemaa), 429
- Once a Lady (Akins), 30
- Once in a Lifetime (Hart and Kaufman), 279, 588, 757, 997–998, 1509
- Once Upon a Time (Drachmann), 342, 357
- Once Upon Four Robbers (Osofisan), 24, 1018
- Ondaatje, Michael, 998, 1510
- Ondine (Giraudoux), 534, 998–999
- Ondine (Praga), 1097
- On Directing Film (Mamet), 863
- Ondřej and the Dragon (Dyk), 315
- The One (Jaafar), 861
- one-act plays. See short plays
- The One and Only (Xu), 1498
- One Blood (Kok), 212
- One-Day Creatures (Norén), 973
- One Day in Asadh (Rakesh), 999–1000, 1117
- The One Day of the Year (Seymour), 73
- One Doesn't Know How (Pirandello), 1071

- OneFamilyOneChildOneDoor (Chan), 238
- One for the Road (Pinter), 1066
- 104 Pages About Love (Radzinsky), 1167
- One Hundred Years of Solitude (Yung), 1510
- O'Neill, Eugene, plays. See also subsequent entries. Ah, Wilderness, 1370; All God's Chillun Got Wings, 37, 558; Anna Christie, 49, 1056; Beyond the Horizon, 157, 364; By Way of Obit, 638; Days Without End, 333, 362; Desire Under the Elms, 346, 363, 1370; Dynamo, 333, 362; The Emperor Jones, 105, 397, 433, 558, 575, 997; The Great God Brown, 552–553, 1056; The Hairy Ape, 105, 359, 433, 575, 916; Hughie, 638; The Iceman Cometh, 361, 362, 638, 655–656, 1056, 1368; Lazarus Laughed, 805–806, 1130; Long Day's Journey into Night, 351, 362, 364, 447, 830–831, 922, 1056; The Long Voyage Home, 832; A Moon for the Misbegotten, 362, 922–923; More Stately Mansions, 362; Mourning Becomes Electra, 362–364, 933–934, 1370; Strange Interlude, 367, 1056, 1287–1288, 1370; A Touch of the Poet, 362, 1368
- O'Neill, Eugene, 1000–1006; Anderson, Maxwell, 1484; black culture, 285, 637; Chinese adaptations, 256; Circle in the Square Theatre, 1408; critical reception, 359, 363; Depression era, 1023; dramatic cycles, 333, 362, 638; dramatic dialogue, 363–364; dramatic structure, 367; Eugene O'Neill Center, 167; experimental theater, 87; expressionism, 575, 624, 1002, 1005; Kaiser, Georg, 575; mothers and sons, 687; Nobel Prize, 359, 1004; O'Casey, Sean, 984; off-Broadway theater, 990; O'Neill Playwright Conference, 959; Provincetown Players, 282, 371, 575, 1001, 1400; scholar-critics, 361; Sheldon, Edward, 1182, 1230; stage direction, 1275; Theater Guild, 1341; Theatre Guild, 1400
- O'Neill, Eugene, influence: by Freudian theory, 1105; by Nietzsche, 346, 967, 1000, 1005; by Strindberg, 1298; on Glaspell, 536; on Hong Shen, 624; on Kennedy, 763; on Norén, 967, 972; on Voaden, 1427; on Xu, 1497
- O'Neill, Maire, 1077
- O'Neill Playwright Conference, 959
- O'Neill Theatre, 447, 1480
- One Man's House (Ringwood), 1140
- One Night (Shvarts), 1243
- One of Our Girls (Howard), 630
- One Red Stage, 1190
- One Rule (Matura), 878
- One Small Step (Nimmo), 78
- One Suitcase (Yao), 258
- One-Third of a Nation (Arent), 27, 1084, 1102
- One Under (Horovitz), 625
- One-Way Street (Suspect Culture), 1309
- The One with the Horse's Head (Karnad). See Hayavadana (Karnad)
- One Woman Song (Murray), 73
- One Word for Another (Tardieu), 1330
- One Year Back Home (Yeo), 1247
- On Fire (Blaumanis), 801
- On Foot (Mrožek), 934
- Ong Keng Sen, 104, 1006, 1247; The Continuum—Beyond the Killing Fields, 212
- Öngören, Vasif: German Notebook, 1387; How Will Asiye Be Rescued, 1387
- On Guard Beneath the Neon Lights (Shen et al.), 1007
- O'Nightingale (Treadwell), 1375
- Only a Jew (Murdoch), 331
- Only Drunks and Children Tell the Truth (Taylor), 1331
- Only Hope for Woman (Kokoschka), 432
- Only in America (Lawrence and Lee), 804
- Only Jealousy of Emer (Yeats), 703
- The Only Jealousy of Emer (Yeats), 1503
- Only Ten Minutes to Buffalo (Grass), 549
- Only the Heart (Foote), 464
- Only We Who Guard the Mystery Shall Be Unhappy (Kushner), 788
- Only You (Castro), 231
- On My Birthday (Sekhabi), 102
- onnagata, 726
- Onoe and Idahachi (Okamoto), 993
- Ono Hiroshi, 99
- Ono Seki, 155
- On Raftery's Hill (Carr), 228, 707
- On Social Plays (Miller), 903
- On Stage Vietnam (Brand and Barnett), 77
- On the Brink of the Precipice (Vazov), 205
- On the Docks (anon.), 1256
- On the Dramatic Passions I (Suzuki), 49, 1311
- On the Eve (Turgenev), 390
- On the Highway (Chekhov), 242
- On the Injurious Effects of Tobacco (Chekhov), 243
- On the Job (Fennario), 217, 448, 1007–1008
- On the Line (Lill), 820
- On the Open Road (Tesich), 1337
- On the Razzle (Nestroy), 1284
- On the Rim of the Curve (Cook), 287
- On the Road (Pinter), 414
- On the Road: A Search for American Characters (Smith), 1255
- On the Rocks (Shaw), 1226–1227
- On the Ruins of Carthage (Kalisky), 749
- On the Terrace (Vojnović), 1430
- On the Town (Comden and Green), 813
- On the Twentieth Century (Comden and Green), 813
- On the Verge (Overmyer), 1025
- On the Wallaby (Enright), 420
- Ontological-Hysteric Theater (New York), 990, 1057, 1413
- On Top of the World (Gow), 547
- On Trial (Rice), 1136, 1400
- Onwueme, Tess, 24, 1008–1009
- Oogadee Boogadees (Australia), 79
- Oosthoek, Peter, 957
- Oost-Nederland Toneel (Netherlands), 956
- Open Door Policy (Egypt), 392
- Open Doors (Kerr), 763
- Open Secret (Vollmer), 1419
- Open Theater (Argentina), 62, 504, 1009–1010, 1123
- Open Theater (New York): Cold War drama, 1409; feminist drama, 445; formalism, 467; Fornes, Maria Irene, 467–468; jazz influence, 729; off-off-Broadway theater, 990; performance art, 1043; The Serpent, 106; Shepard, Sam, 1232; Terry, Megan, 1336; Vietnam, as a theme, 1087; Yankowitz, Susan, 1501
- opera. See also operetta. al-Naqqāsh, Marūn Mikhāil, 698; Beijing operas, 222, 250–255, 575, 1024, 1497–1498; China, 90; comic, 1514; drama emerging

- opera (continued) from, 393; Four Saints in Three Acts (Stein), 471;
 Gombrowicz's librettis,
 541; Greece, 555; Halévy
 and Meilhac's librettis,
 474; Italy, 714; McNally,
 Terrence, 885; Mei
 Lanfang, 889; The Mother of Us All (Thomson), 471;
Parade (Cocteau), 478–479;
 Reaney, James, 1126; The Ring of the Nibelung
 (Wagner), 516; Savoy
 Operas, 531; Sichuan
 Opera, 1451; Snow in August
 (Gao), 506; Spain, 1513–
 1514; Strawberry Fields
 (Gurney, A. R.), 572; The Trial of Lucullus (Brecht and Dessau), 523; The White-
Haired Girl (He et al.),
 1458–1459
- opéra comique. See under opera
- The Opera of the World*
 (Audiberti), 71
- Opera Studio, 927
- The Operating Room* (Lardner), 800
- Operation Shield Rock
 (Árnason), 655
- Operation Sidewinder
 (Shepard), 1233
- Operation TN . . . T (Cañas),
 293
- Opera Wonyosi (Soyinka), 1267
- operetta: Brazilian drama,
 188; The Daughter of Jerusalem (Goldfaden), 540;
 Donnelly, Dorothy, 812;
 Gilbert and Sullivan, 661;
 Greece, 556; Halévy and
 Meilhac's librettis, 474;
 Hammerstein and Harbach, 811; A Little Night
Music (Wheeler), 815
- Operetta (Gombrowicz), 541, 1081
- Operette (Šannū), 698
- Ophelia Thinks Harder* (Betts),
 964
- Opinião Teatro (Brazil), 1421
- Opium Den (Zhong), 251
- Opium War (Yung), 1510
- Oppekepe- (Fukuda), 498
- Oppekepebushi (Kawakami),
 757
- Oppenheimer, J. Robert, 768
- Oppenheimer Award, 390,
 974
- Opperman, Deon, 1264
- Opportunity Award, 739
- oppression, 674, 690. See also individual countries
- oppression of women. See feminism and feminist themes
- Oppressive Air (Rfat), 1386
- The Oppressive Emperor*
 (Elkunchwar), 396
- Opressions (Ding), 347
- The Optimist* (Habibi), 96
- optimism: The Heavenly Squad
 (Lebović and Obrenović),
 1210; Kitamura Sō, 770;
 Russian drama, 1163;
 Saroyan, William, 1187
- An Optimistic Tragedy*
 (Vishnevsky), 1010–1011,
 1165
- Optimists' Troupe (Japan),
 769
- Oraciones (Villanueva et al.),
 1053
- Ora et labora* (Heijermans), 603
- Orange (Haarhoff), 22
- Orange Dog Theatre
 (Canada), 806, 1234
- oratorio, 689
- orchestras as accompaniment, 393
- Order of Australia, 330
- Order of Dannebrog, 649
- Order of Marko Marulic
 (Croatia), 66
- The Order of the Factors*
 (Hernández), 608
- An Ordinary Play* (Matmor),
 710
- Orenstein, Gloria Feman, 1178
- The Oresteia* (Aeschylus), 1127
- Orestes myth, 1189, 1210
- Orestia (Mnouchkine), 686
- The Organ Grinder* (Platonov), 1165
- Organization for Dutch
 Dramatists, 956
- The Organizer* (Hughes), 637
- Orghast (Brook), 696
- Orgien Mysterien (Nitsch), 584
- The Origin* (Sorescu), 1260
- The Origin of the Blood of a* Certain Family (Terayama), 1334
- Orisa-Nla, 1267
- Örkény, István, 1011; Stevie in the Bloodbath, 640; The Toth
Family, 640, 1367
- Orlan, 1043
- Orlando Boys' Club Dramatic Society (South Africa),
 1262
- Orlin, Robyn, 102
- Ørnsbo, Jess, 343–344, 1011–
 1012; The Club, 273
- Oro Pro Nobis* (Duncan), 378
- O'Rowe, Mark, 706
- The Orphan* (Rabe), 1113
- The Orphan Muses* (Bouchard),
 179
- The Orphan of Zhao* (Li), 251, 257
- Orphans' Home Cycle (Foote),
 464
- Orpheum Theatre (New York), 994
- Orpheus (Cocteau), 275, 1012–
 1013, 1036, 1369
- Orpheus and Eurydice
 (Kokoschka), 773
- Orpheus Descending* (Williams),
 1474
- Orpheus in the Underworld*
 (Halévy and Meilhac), 474
- orta oyunu, 1384
- Orton, Joe, 264, 378, 438,
 1013–1014, 1016;
Entertaining Mr Sloane, 421,
 510; Loot, 510, 833; What the Butler Saw, 411
- OS (Bronnen), 201
- Osanai Kaoru, 98–99, 422,
 726, 727, 783, 1014, 1239,
 1241
- Osaragi Jirō, 1241
- Osborn, Paul, 1014–1015; A Bell for Adano, 1405;
Morning's at Seven,
 925–926
- Osborne, Alan, 760,
 1015–1016
- Osborne, John, 47, 340, 586,
 985, 1016–1017; The
Entertainer, 409, 421;
Inadmissible Evidence, 421;
Look Back in Anger, 407, 421,
 704, 832–833, 1099, 1120,
 1372; Luther, 421; A Patriot
for Me, 412
- Oscar and Felix (Simon), 987
- Oscar Award. See Academy
 Award
- Os Comediantes (Brazil),
 1145
- Ōshima Nagisa, 48
- Oshodi, Maria, 1017; Blood,
Sweat and Fears, 169
- Oslo Peace Accords, 1034
- Osmania University Old Boys
 (Pakistan), 1028
- Osofisan, Femi, 14, 24,
 1017–1019
- Osorio Lovera, David, 1419
- Osten, Suzanne, 1314
- Ostermaier, Albert, 525
- Ostrauskas, Kostas, 824
- An Ostrich Party* (Bukovčan), 1254
- Ostrovsky, Aleksandr, 8, 241,
 1019–1020, 1161; Enough
Stupidity in Every Wise Man,
 1376; The Forest, 351, 1342;
The Scoundrel, 1202; The Thunderstorm, 1356
- O'Sullivan, Vincent, 962
- Oswald, Debra, 73
- Ōta Shōgo, 614, 727, 1020–
 1021; The Water Station,
 1444–1445
- O! Temperance!* (Thompson),
 1353
- Othello* (Shakespeare), 758,
 769, 1206, 1248, 1405,
 1422
- Othello* (Welles), 851
- The Othello Gig* (Lehtola), 455

- Othello in Wonderland* (Sā'edi), 696
- The Other Death of Jean of Arc* (Tzanev), 206
- The Other Messiah* (Soumagne), 142
- The Others* (Gorostiza), 546
- The Other Shore* (Gao), 90, 506
- The Other Shore* (Hilbert), 315
- The Other Side of Silence* (TOSOS), 510
- The Other Side of the Cards* (Nougé), 142
- The Other Side of the Dark* (Thompson), 1352
- Others' Reason* (Pirandello), 1097
- Other Times* (Lawlor), 802
- The Other Woman* (Nimmo), 78
- The Other World* (Lardner), 800
- Otojiro Kawkami's Battlefield Report* (Kawakami), 757
- otokoyaku*, 1324
- Otong, Budi S., 680
- Otrabanda Theatre (United States), 143
- Ott, Gustavo, 1419
- Ottawa Capital Critics Circle Award, 844
- Ottayan (Panikkar), 1021–1022, 1035
- Ottoman Empire, 691, 1029, 1385
- Ottoman Theater (Turkey), 1384
- Otway, Thomas, 668
- Ouch (Wijaya), 679, 1464
- Our American Cousin* (Taylor), 41, 560, 1332
- Our Betters* (Maugham), 879
- Our Big Circus* (Kambanellis), 750
- Our Boys* (Byron), 402
- Our Children* (Sánchez), 1183
- Our Country's Good* (Wertenbaker), 1022
- Our Father, Ma's Got the Blues* (Norman), 102, 730
- Our Father the War* (Kambanellis), 750
- Our God's Brother* (Wojtyla), 1081
- Our Guilt for the World's Evil* (Miller), 906
- Our Husband Has Gone Mad Again* (Rotimi), 24
- Our Lady of Troy* (MacLeish), 849
- Our Late Night* (Shawn), 1229
- Our Life in the Family* (Vianna Filho), 1422
- Our Mother, Who Art on Earth* (Istarú), 294
- Our Mrs. McChesney* (Ferber and Hobart), 448
- Our Power and Our Glory* (Grieg), 976, 1022–1023
- Ours* (Robertson), 401, 1143
- Ourselves* (Crothers), 1399
- Our Sons* (Marambo), 1209
- Our Struggle* (Fatima), 347
- Our Town* (Wilder), 254, 285, 944, 1023–1024, 1130, 1404, 1469
- Out and About* (Minneapolis), 510
- Out at Sea* (Mrozek), 934
- Out Cry* (Williams), 1476
- Outer Critics Circle Award*: Albee, Edward, 32, 1356; Howe, Tina, 633; Hwang, David Henry, 643; Nottage, Lynn, 978; Shaffer, Peter, 424; Shange, Ntozake, 1218; Tally, Ted, 1327
- Out in the Cold* (McGee), 883
- The Outlaw* (Strindberg), 1295
- Outlawed: Comedy in One Act* (Hein), 604
- outlaws, 1244
- The Outlaws* (Jochumsson), 652
- Out of a Blue Sky* (Chlumberg), 260
- Out of Commission* (Brand), 77
- Out of My House* (Foote), 464
- Out of Step*, 729
- Out of the Question* (Howells), 634
- Outside In* (Beaton), 962, 964
- Outside the Law* (Lunts), 1165
- Outskirts* (Kureishi), 786
- Outstanding Theatre for Young Audience Award*, 1420
- Ouyang Yuqian, 252, 1024, 1497
- Oval House Theatre (England), 417
- Ovanesian, Arby, 696
- Overboard* (Vinaver), 487, 1424
- The Overcoat* (Gogol), 390
- Overlie, Mary, 173
- Overmyer, Eric, 371, 959, 1024–1025, 1412
- Oveysi, Ali Mohammad Khān, 694
- Owens, Rochelle, 106, 959, 990, 1025–1026, 1087, 1410
- The Owl* (Mafune), 855
- The Owl Answers* (Kennedy), 762
- Owners* (Churchill), 263–264
- The Owners of the Keys* (Kundera), 316
- O Woman!* (Kerr), 764
- Owusu, Martin, 23
- Oxenford, John, 1469
- Oxford Playhouse, 878, 1471
- Oxford Playhouse (England), 263
- Oxygen* (Vyrpae), 1170
- Oyedepo, Stella, 24
- Oyono-Mbia, Guillaume, 24
- Ozaki Kōyō, 1241
- Özakman, Turgut, 1386–1387
- Ozidi (Clark-Bekederemo), 24
- Ozu Yasujiro: Tokyo Story, 1361
- Pablan, Mariano Proceso: Ing Magnape, 1052
- Pabst, Georg Wilhelm, 67
- Pacheco, Carlos Mauricio, 61
- Pachero, Carlos M., 562
- Pacific 1860* (Coward), 297
- Pacific Overtures* (Weidman), 815
- Pacific Paradise* (Cusack), 77, 313
- Pacific Writers Conference* (Seattle), 764
- pacifism, 203, 747, 1212, 1237. See also antiwar drama
- Pack of Girls* (Geary), 511
- The Pack of Women* (Archer), 75
- Padamsee, Alyque, 328, 1384
- Padmanabhan, Manjula, 672
- Padma Shri, 1349
- Padua Hills Festival (Los Angeles), 468
- paganism, 823
- Pagano, José León, 61
- Page, Louise, 1027
- Page One Award, 1067
- Page to Stage Studio (Singapore), 1247
- Paid on Both Sides* (Auden), 70
- Paines Plough Theatre Company, 939
- The Painful History of the Secret Love of José* (Estorino), 310
- The Painter* (McMillan), 77
- Painting Churches* (Howe), 633
- Paint Your Wagon* (Lerner and Loewe), 813
- Pairó, Roberto J., 61
- Pakistan, 14, 693, 764–765, 785–786, 1027–1029
- Pakistani Arts Council, 1028
- Palace of Culture. See National Theatre (Malaysia)
- The Palace of Truth* (Gilbert), 531
- Palais de Chaillot (Paris), 482
- Palamas, Costis, 556
- Palasovszky, Odon, 92
- Palencia, Elio, 1419
- Palencia, Maritza, 1419
- Palestine, 94–97, 391, 1029–1035, 1123–1124
- Palestine, We Shall Not Forget Thee* (al-Guzi), 1031
- Palestine Broadcasting Station, 1031
- Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), 1032, 1034
- Palestinian consciousness, 1029, 1030
- Palestinian Festival, 1034
- Palestinian National Theatre (PNT), 97, 1034
- The Palestinian Woman* (Sobol), 96
- Pallenberg, Max, 620
- Pallotini, Renata, 188

- Palmé, or The Offended One* (Kornfeld), 777
 Palmerston North's Centrepont Theatre (New Zealand), 512
The Palm Wine Drinkard (Tutuola), 1058
 Pálsson, Sigurður, 655
Pampangan (language), 1052
Pan (Van Lerberghe), 141
pandavani, 1221
Pandering to the Masses (Foreman), 1057
Pandora's Box (Wedekind), 385, 517, 1449, 1450
Panduro, Leif, 733
Pane, Armijn, 678
Pane, Gina, 1043
Pane, Sanusi, 678
The Panhandler (Sorge), 956
Panic (MacLeish), 849
Panic Theatre (Paris), 58, 584, 1271
Panic to Two Voices (Radrigán), 1114
Panikkar, Kavalam Narayana, 671, 675–676, 1035–1036; Ottayan, 1021; Theyyatheyyam, 1346
Panizza, Oskar, 53
Pan Jinlian (Minglun), 256
Pan Jinlian (Wei), 90, 1451
Panov, Anton, 844
Pansaers, Clément, 142
pantomime: Androcles and the Lion (Shaw), 1225, 1227; Australia, 72; England, 400, 401; 7:84, 1213; Sumurun, 1127
Pantomime (Walcott), 18
Paolo Paoli (Adamov), 10
Papa (Akins), 29
Papa Hamlet (Holz and Schlaf), 592
Papargopoulos, Demetrios, 555
Paparude, 1148
Paper Flowers (Wolff), 1487
Papergirl (Sánchez), 61
Paper House (Riantiarino), 679
The Paper Tiger (Brasch), 186
Paper Wheat (Griffiths et al.), 561
Papp, Joseph, 643, 989, 1113, 1380, 1409, 1410, 1412
Paquet, Alfons: Flags, 1076
The Parable of Wealth (Valdelomar), 294 parables, 934
Parables for a Season (Onwueme), 1008
Parabola of the Drunk Ghosts (Radrigán), 1114
Paracelsus (Schnitzler), 1196, 1197
Parade (Cocteau), 108, 276–277, 478–479, 1308
The Paradise (Baran), 455
Paradise (Wolfe), 1487
Paradise Found (Paz), 310
Paradise Is Closing Down (Dirk Uys), 102
Paradise is Closing Down (Ulys), 1264
Paradise Lost (Araujo), 189
Paradise Lost (Milton), 1219
Paradise Lost (Odets), 539, 564, 988
Paradise Now (Living Theatre), 55, 106, 423, 828, 1086
Paradise Theatre (Japan), 1323
The Paradox of Diogenes (Arsovski), 845
A Paragraph for Mr. Blake (Stoppard), 1282
Paraguay, 88
The Parakeets (Dorr), 309
Parallel Theater (Pakistan), 1028
The Parasites (Soya), 342, 1036–1037, 1266
pardeh-dari, 691–692
parenting, 771, 853. See also family drama
Pariah (Strindberg), 1296
Paris Bound (Barry), 124
Paris by Night (Hare), 586
Paris Commune, 560
Parisette (Shirai), 1324
The Parish House of Vaikuse (Kruusvall), 429
The Parish Priest of Kirchfeld (Anzengruber), 82
Parisina (Bergman), 148
The Paris Letter (Baitz), 115
The Park (Pitínski), 317
The Park (Strauss), 523, 1288
Park Avenue Armory, 1328
Parker, Dean, 962
Parker, Dorothy, 1137, 1441
Parker, Eleanor, 1429
Parker, Lottie Blair, 1399
Parker, Stewart, 706; Pentacost, 450
Parker, Theodore, 1293
Parks, Suzan-Lori, 218, 367, 959, 1037–1038, 1087, 1105, 1412–1413; The American Play, 41, 1094
The Parlor Car (Howells), 634
The Parlour and the Streets (Bannerjee), 669 parody, 117, 683, 1118, 1253
The Parody (Adamov), 10, 1057
Parren-Siganou, Kalliroi, 555 parricide, 1259
Parry, Lorae, 964
Parsifal (Wagner), 1433
Parsi theater (Pakistan), 1028
The Parson's Family (Canth), 453 participation, audience. See audience participation
Parting at Calomba (Montano), 1052
A Partiture for One Miron (Chashule), 845
A Party for Boris (Bernhard), 153
Parulskis, Sigita, 824
Parvin, the Daughter of Sāsān (Hedayat), 695
Pasadena Community Players (California), 282, 805, 1003
Pásándi, Géza, 640, 1038
Pascual, Itziar, 1271
Paso, Alfonso, 1093
Pasque Flower (Ringwood), 1140
Passage (Hein), 604
A Passage to India (Forster), 1220
Passers-By (Chambers), 405
Passing By (Sherman), 1235
The Passing of Chow-Chow (Rice), 1136
The Passing of the Third Floor Back (Jerome), 405, 1130
The Passing Show (Hoyt), 635
Passing Through (Thompson), 1353
Passion (Lapine), 815
The Passion According to Antígona Pérez (Sanchez), 1106
The Passion According to Pier Paolo Pasolini (Kalisky), 749
The Passion Flower (Benavente), 145
Passion Machine (Dublin), 706
The Passion of General Franco (Gatti), 509
Passion Play of the Nation (Vitug), 1053 passion plays. See miracle plays
Pass It On (Renée), 1132
Pasternak, Boris, 1165
The Pastoral (Valdez), 1415
Pastorale (Mafune), 855
The Pastoral Symphony (Gide), 530
Pastor Hall (Toller), 1362
Past Perfect (MacIvor), 847
Pastrone, Giovanni, 326
Pat and Mike (Gordon and Kanin), 751
Patches (Suat), 1385
Patch Theatre (Australian), 73
paternity, 1287, 1395. See also entries at father; Platonov (Chekhov)
Pater Noster (Kajzar), 1082
Patience (Gilbert and Sullivan), 400, 531, 1466
Patience (Sherman), 1235
Patients (Audiberti), 71
Patravadi Theatre (Thailand), 1338
patriarchy. See also feminism and feminist themes. Babatha (Kainy), 712; India, 672–673; Ireland, 687;

- Mexico, 792, 1156;
Rutherford and Son
(Sowerby), 1174–1175
- Patricide (Bronnen), 201, 518
- Patrick, John, 1039, 1407
- Patrick, Robert, 510
- A Patriot for Me (Osborne),
412, 1016
- patriotism. See also nationalism. Israel, 709–
712; Italy, 718;
Kambanellis, Iakovos, 750;
Lithuania, 823; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1165;
There Shall Be No Night
(Sherwood), 1237; The Way to the Pond (Schnitzler),
1197; Xiong Foxi, 1497
- A Patriot of Me (Osborne),
1194
- The Patriots (Kingsley), 767,
1405, 1406
- Patriots (Robinson), 1145
- Patriot's Café (Piemme), 144
- patron saints, 1046, 1051
- Paturusi, Aspar, 680
- Pauduma (U Pon Nya), 208
- Paul Green Foundation, 557
- Paulin, Tom, 706
- Paul Kauvar, or Anarchy
(MacKaye), 1398
- Paul Lange and Tora Parsberg
(Bjørnson), 163
- A Paulownia Leaf (Tsubouchi),
1382
- Paul Schippel, Esq. (Sternheim),
517, 1280
- Paul Southan (Whiting), 1460
- Pavane (Brink), 1263
- Pavel I (Merezhkovsky), 1164
- The Pavement (Jad), 392
- Pavillion, 915
- Pavlíček, František, 316
- Pavlovsky, Eduardo, 62, 89,
563, 1009
- Pawlikowska-Jasnorzewska,
Maria: Egyptian Wheat,
1080; Heavenly Lovers, 1080;
Mama's Return, 1080
- The Pawned Wife (Luo), 839
- Paz, Alibio, 310
- Paz, Octavio, 897
- Paz y Mateos, Alberto de,
1419
- Peabody, Josephine Preston,
1399
- Peabody Award, 865
- Peace (Lenéru), 476
- The Peaceable (Olsen), 996
- Peace and Forgiveness
(Maponya), 1264
- The Peace at Brest-Litovsk
(Shatrov), 1168
- Peace in Our Time (Coward), 297
- Peace on Earth (Maltz and Sklar), 1083
- Peacock Flies Southeastward
(Ouyang), 1024
- The Peacock's Ring (Rojas), 294
- Peacock Theatre (Dublin),
128
- Peanut Gallery. See Tenjō
Sajiki (Japan)
- Pearl (Arden), 59
- Pearly Zinaida (Roshchin),
1168
- peasants. See rural and village life
- Peasant Theater (Kroetz), 783
- Pedestrians (Cunillé), 1271
- Pedrero, Paloma, 1040, 1271
- Pedro, Calderón de la Barca,
1317
- Pedro López García (Aub), 1340
- Peer Gynt (Ibsen), 271, 363,
649, 650, 702, 975, 1040–
1041, 1054, 1144, 1295
- Pega, Elena, 557
- Peggy Ann (Fields), 812
- Peggy Ramsay Award, 857
- Peimer, David, 102
- Peking Man (Cao), 223
- The Pelican (Strindberg), 236, 1297
- Pell, Kelton, 79
- Pelleas and Melisande
(Maeterlinck), 141, 359,
477, 854, 916, 1055, 1319
- Pel'meny (Sorokin), 1170
- Pemán, José María, 1270
- Pemberton, T. Edgar, 589
- Peña, Edilio, 1419
- Pendovski, Branko, 845
- Penelope (Maugham), 879
- Penelope No Longer Knits
(Sándor), 1185
- Penetrator (Neilson), 953
- A Penny (Sha), 1229
- A Penny for a Song (Whiting), 1460
- Pentacost (Parker), 450
- Pentecost (Edgar), 414
- Peony Pavilion (Wang), 251,
1441, 1511
- People (Aleichem), 1507
- People from Our Street (Karvaš), 754
- People Like Us (Crowley), 307
- The People of the Cave (al-Hakim), 35
- People on the Roof (Kitamura),
770
- People's Art Theater (Beijing),
820, 827, 907
- People's Art Theatre (Japan),
48, 1240
- People's Center of Culture
(Brazil), 188
- People's Commissariat of Enlightenment (Soviet Union), 1171
- The People's Council (Heiberg), 602
- People's Drama Society
(China), 1496
- People Show, 584, 1343
- People's Little Theatre
(Kolkata), 383, 1445
- people's theater movement,
670, 673
- People's Theatre (Buenos Aires), 88
- The People's Theatre (Israel),
1033
- The People's Worship (Ilagan),
659
- Peranakan culture (Chinese-Malay), 775
- Perchance to Dream
(Grumberg), 565
- The Peregrine cherubnic
(Marchessault), 869
- Perestroika (Kushner), 787. See also Angels in America
(Kushner)
- Peretz, Isaac Leib, 1507; A
Night in the Old Marketplace, 929
- Peretz, Y. L., 614
- Pereval (Mountain Pass), 1165
- Pérez, Lupe, 294
- Pérez Galdós, Benito, 1041–
1042, 1269
- The Perfect Cure (Houghton),
628
- A Perfect Ganesh (McNally),
1130
- The Perfectionist (Williamson),
1478
- Perfectly All Right (De Groen), 339
- Perfect Pie (Thompson), 1352
- Perfect Shot (Díez), 1418
- "The Perfect Wagnerite"
(Shaw), 1224
- performance, indigenous. See also indigenous people and performance
- performance and its uses, 807
- performance art, 1042–1043;
The Collected Works of Billy the Kid (Ondaatje), 278; community performance,
283; Denmark, 344;
happenings, 585; Horse
and Bamboo Theatre, 625;
Hughes, Holly, 636; Italy, 719; jazz influence, 730;
modernism, 1411; New York City venues, 1412;
Norway, 835; off-off-
Broadway, 990–991;
theatricality, 1343;
Undesirable Elements
(Chong), 260–261;
Witkiewicz, Stanisław
Ignacy, 1485
- The Performance Group (New York), 68, 106, 445, 585,
990, 1409, 1412
- Performance in Iran (Bezā'i), 695
- performance studies, 686,
1043–1044
- Performance Syndicate
(Australia), 75
- performance vs. drama, 87

- Performance Workshop (Iran), 695
- Performance Workshop (Taiwan), 259, 795, 808
- performer respectability, 400
- Performing Garage, 423
- The Pericás (Dorr), 355
- Period Dances (Steigerwald), 317, 1278
- Period of Adjustment (Williams), 1475
- Period of Desire (Elkunchwar), 396
- The Perjured City, or The Awakening of the Furies, 267
- Perlini, Memè, 719
- The Permanent Way (Hare), 586
- Péron, Alfred, 128, 130
- persecution. See censorship; exile, writers in
- The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by The Inmates of the Asylum of Charenton Under the Direction of the Marquis de Sade (Weiss), 867
- Persian drama, 693, 696
- Persiyaninova, Natalya, 1163
- Persona (Bergman), 1299
- Persona (Netherlands), 957
- Personal Circle 3:1 (Norén), 973
- Persse, Isabella Augusta. See Gregory, Lady Augusta
- Peru, 88, 1044–1047
- Perzyński, Włodzimierz: Frano's Luck, 1080
- Peshkov, Aleksei. See Gorky, Maksim
- pessimism, 1162, 1210
- PETA. See Philippine Educational Theater Association (PETA)
- Peter and Jerry (Albee), 33, 1518
- Peter Ibbetson (Du Maurier and Sheldon), 1230
- Peter Pan (Barrie), 123, 296, 335, 405, 1047–1048
- Peter Pan (Comden and Green), 813
- Peters, Paul: Stevedore (with Sklar), 1083, 1403
- Petersburg (Bely), 927
- Petersburg Theatrical Journal (Russia), 1172
- Petersen, Clemens, 360
- Petersen, Oscar, 1265
- Peterson, Eric, 159
- Peterson, Taliep, 1262
- Pētersons, Jūlijs, 801
- Pētersons, Pēteris, 801–802
- Petito, Antonio, 718–719
- Petit Théâtre de Paris (Paris), 211
- Petrescu, Camil, 1149
- The Petrified Forest (Sherwood), 1237, 1402
- Petrov, Valeri, 206
- Petrushevskaya, Lyudmila, 1168; Moscow Choir, 928
- Petrvski, Jugoslav, 845
- Petticoat Osen: A Tale of Forgetfulness (Kara), 48
- Pétursson, Sigurður, 652
- Peymann, Claus, 153, 370, 430, 580, 1048–1049
- Phaedra (Tsvetayeva), 1163, 1173
- Phaedra in Delirium (Yankowitz), 1502
- Phaedra's Love (Kane), 751
- Phaethon (Unt), 429
- Pham Ngoc Khoi, 1423
- Phan Boi Chau, 1422
- Phantom (Kopit), 776
- The Phantom and the Cinema (Satoh), 1193
- Pharmacy on a Rotating Shift (De Filippo), 338
- Phelan, Peggy, 457
- Philadelphia, Here I Come! (Friel), 490, 705, 1049–1050, 1458
- The Philadelphia Story (Barry), 124, 944, 1039, 1050
- Philander, Frederick, 22
- The Philanderer (Shaw), 1223, 1225
- The Philanthopist (Piñera), 309
- The Philanthopist (Pinero), 1062
- Philippe, Gérard, 482; The Epiphanies, 484; Nucléa, 484
- Philippine Educational Theater Association (PETA), 725, 1050–1051, 1053
- Philippines, 103–105, 658–659, 799, 1051–1054
- The Philippines Never Surrendered (Miller), 904
- Philistine (Gorky), 544, 1306
- Philistines and Summerfolk (Gorky), 835
- Philoctetes (Müller), 937
- Philosopher Fox (Mrożek), 934
- A Philosopher's Day* (Köiv), 429
- Philosopher's Stone*, 1258
- The Philosopher's Stone (Lagerkvist), 795
- philosophical drama: Anderson, Maxwell, 43; Andreev, Leonid, 45, 1162; Camus, Albert, 211; deconstruction, 336; Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 380; existentialism, 481; Group Theatre, 987; Ibsen, Henrik, 363; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 283–284; Shaw, George Bernard, 362; Strindberg, August, 372–373
- philosophy and drama, 1054–1058
- Phiri (Phoenix Players), 1264
- Phiri, Mawautso, 22
- Phoenix City (Wu), 1492
- Phoenix Players (South Africa), 1264
- Phoenix Theatre, 878
- Phoenix Theatre (London), 202
- Phoenix Theatre (New York), 989, 1208, 1393
- A Phoenix Too Frequent* (Fry), 408
- Phosphorescence Troupe, 1180
- photography, 1252
- physical theater: Australia, 75–76; Jellicoe, Ann, 731; Jitters (French), 736; Løveid, Cecilie, 835; Noda Map, 970; Taiwan, 828
- The Physicists (Dürrenmatt), 380, 1059, 1317
- Piano (Smith), 1256
- The Piano Lesson (Wilson), 1059–1060, 1479, 1480
- Picabia, Francis, 108, 319, 320
- Picard, Edmond, 918
- picaresque tradition, 732, 979
- Picasso, Pablo, 763
- The Piccadilly Bushman (Lawlor), 802
- Piccadilly Theatre (London), 167; The Keep (Thomas), 760
- Piccolo Teatro (Milan), 715, 718
- Pichette, Henri: The Epiphanies, 484; Nucléa, 484
- Pich Tum Kravel, 212
- The Picket Makers (Bührer), 1316
- The Pickle King (Rajan), 963
- A Pick or a Shovel?* (Piñera), 1063
- Pickthall, Marjorie, 1060; The Wood Carver's Wife, 1490
- Picnic (Inge), 682, 683, 1060–1061
- The Picnic of Claretta (Kalisky), 749
- Picnic on the Battlefield (Arrabal), 65
- Pico, Pedro E., 61
- Picón, Briceño, 1418
- Pictures (Amamus), 961
- Pictures from Baghdad* (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 625
- pièce à thése*, 975
- pièce bien faite*. See well-made play
- A Piece of Monologue* (Beckett), 133
- The Piece of Stone (Bhagat), 158
- A Piece on Sports* (Jelinek), 730
- Pieces of a Pattern* (Soya), 1267
- Piechev, Ivan, 206
- Piecznyński, Andrzej: Killing Is Too Good for You, 1082
- Piemme, Jean-Marie, 144
- Pierette's Veil (Schnitzler), 1198
- The Pigeon (Galsworthy), 405
- The Piggy Bank (Labiche), 437
- Piiipppp (Rendra), 1131

- Pike Theatre (Dublin), 138, 704, 705, 1111
- Pilcher, Winnifred, 764
- pilgrimage, 1152
- The Pilgrimage to Kerbalā of Shāh Qolī Mirzā (Āqā), 693
- Pillars of Society (Ibsen), 402, 650, 1061–1062, 1102
- The Pillowman (McDonagh), 882, 1062
- Pilot from the Moluccas (Martinson), 1314
- Pimp, Skunk and Profiteer (Duncan), 378
- Pinball (Lyssa), 75
- Pineau, Leon, 1244
- Piñera, Virgilio, 309–310, 1062–1063
- Pinero, Arthur, 613, 700, 1063–1065; Dandy, 857; The Magistrate, 402, 856–857; Mid-Channel, 900; The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith, 403; The Schoolmistress, 402, 857; The Second Mrs. Tanqueray, 366, 400, 403, 900, 935, 1000, 1102, 1207–1208; Trelawny of the “Wells”, 401
- Ping Chong and Company drama troupe, 260
- Pinget, Robert, 484, 1065–1066
- Ping-Fong Acting Troupe (Taiwan), 259, 807, 808
- Pingju Opera (China), 1492
- Ping Pong (Adamov), 10
- The Pink Room (Ackland), 7
- Pink Rose (Boucher), 180
- Pinnock, Winsome: A Hero's Welcome, 417
- Pins and Needles (Audiberti), 71
- Pins and Needles (Labor Stage), 1084
- Pinski, David, 615, 1508
- Pinter, Harold, 1066–1069; Betrayal, 154; The Birthday Party, 106, 161, 408, 414, 421, 1057; The Caretaker, 226, 1057; The Collection, 412; The Dumb Waiter, 438; The Homecoming, 412, 414, 623, 1458; Mountain Language, 414; No Man's Land, 412; Old Times, 412, 994; On the Road, 414; The Room, 421; Abe Kōbō, 1240; absurdism, 5; Coward, Noël, 407; dramatic dialogue, 280; forerunners, 1101; influence on Orton, 1013; influence on Overmyer, 1025; influence on Sinisterra, 1184; innovative formats, 1017; McDonagh, Martin, 1062; Murphy, Tom, 705; post–World War II drama, 586; symbolism, 1320
- Pio, Anna, 969
- Pio Manzu International Research Centre Award, 966
- Pioneer Players, 30
- Piotrovsky, Adrian, 1171
- Piotrowska, Gabriela Korwin. See Zapolska, Gabriela
- Pipa Song (Wang), 1441
- The Piper (Peabody), 1399
- Piper, Adrian, 1043
- Piper, Tadeusz: If There Is No Him, 1080; Six O'clock! Six O'clock!, 1080
- Piper's Cave (Munro), 939
- Pippa Passes (Browning), 926
- Pirandellismo, 717
- Pirandello, Luigi, 1069–1076; Each in His Own Way, 1364; Enrico IV, 418; Others' Reason, 1097; Right You Are, 1139, 1339; Six Characters in Search of an Author, 107, 281, 304, 418, 1251–1252, 1364; Tonight We Improvise, 281, 1364; Abell, Kjeld, 342; actor-centered theater, 717; censored, 92; collaboration with De Filippo, 338; comedy, 280; Croatian drama, 304; deconstruction, 337; European theater, 715; Evreinov, Nikolai, 431; Giacosa, Giuseppe, 529; Icelandic theater, 653; identity theater, 342; Interwar drama, 479; Italian theater, 717–718; Living Theatre, 1408; madness, 338; Madsen, Svend Åge, 344; metatheater, 916; off-Broadway theater, 990; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; Shaw, George Bernard, 1179, 1226; theater of the grotesque, 248, 562
- The Pirate Princess (Gloudon), 417
- The Pirates of Penzance (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
- Pir Sultan Abdal (Toy), 1387
- Piscator, Erwin, 1076–1077; Rasputin, 352; apocalypse, 55; Belgian drama, 142; documentary drama, 352–353; Dramatic Workshop, 1085, 1406, 1408; dramaturgy, 369; epic theater, 350, 423; exile, 520; Hebrew drama, 709; influence on drama, 1354; intendant, 369; Marx, Karl, 1056; Pirandello, Luigi, 1075; Senda Koreya, 1208; theatricality, 1342; Unión General de Trabajadores, 1339; Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo, 1421
- Piscator Bühne, 1076
- Pisemsky, Aleksei, 1160
- Pitínski, Jan Antonín, 317
- Pitoëff, Georges, 67, 107, 479, 718
- Pixerécourt, Guilbert de, 349
- Pixerécourt, René Charles Guilbert de, 473, 955; Coelina, or the Child of Mystery, 472; A Tale of Mystery, 472
- Pizarro, Francisco, 1217
- Place des Arts (Montreal), 116
- Place Theatre (England), 417
- A Place with the Pigs (Fugard), 1264
- plagiarism, 400–401, 1375
- plague, 647
- The Plague Comes from Melos (Dragún), 358
- Plain and Fancy (Stein), 813
- Planchart, Julio, 1418
- Planché, J. R., 370
- Planchon, Roger, 368, 1354, 1425; Monstros, 485
- Planet (Grishkovets), 1170
- Plants on the Roof of the World (Dorr), 356
- Plasticene (Sigarev), 1169
- The Plate Breaker (Salacrou), 1181
- Platel, Alain, 144
- Platform (Cornelius), 78
- Platonov (Chekhov), 242, 243, 1077, 1162, 1204
- Platonov, Andrei, 1165, 1172
- Play (Beckett), 133
- Play (Robertson), 1143
- The Play about the Baby (Albee), 33
- playacting, as a theme, 1197
- Play at the Castle (Molnar), 1284
- Playbill (Rattigan), 202, 1120
- Playbox Theatre Company (Melbourne), 75, 1151
- The Playboy of the Western World (Synge), 701, 707, 983, 1077–1078, 1274, 1321
- Playboy of the West Indies (Matura), 878
- Play Comedy (Steigerwald), 317, 1278
- Play Dirty (Myers and Sewell), 73
- player with ideas. See Denkspieler
- The Playhouse (London), 1266
- The Playhouse (New York), 1291
- Playhouse of the Ridiculous (New York), 510, 837
- Playhouse Theater (Kolkata), 668
- Playhouse Theatre (New Brunswick, Canada), 1088

- Playhouse Theatre (New York), 688
- Playing Dead Man's Bluff (Volokhov), 1170
- Playing for Time (Miller), 906
- Playing with Fire: Comedy in One Act (Strindberg), 1296
- Playland (Fugard), 1264
- Playmarket (script service), 961
- Play Mas (Mutura), 877–878
- Play Murder (Gilbert), 530
- Play of Giants (Soyinka), 24, 1267
- Play of Prince Inao (Rama V), 1117
- Play of Saint Michael, 1051
- Play of the Year Award (Germany), 783
- A Play on Love and Death (Branner), 186
- plays, one-act. See short plays
- Plays and Players Award, 198, 1263
- Plays for Living, 1129
- Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant (Shaw), 271
- The Play's the Thing (Molnár), 639, 917
- Play Strindberg (Dürrenmatt), 381
- Plays with the Devil (Drda), 316
- Play with a Cobra (Karnad), 753
- play within a play: The Crucified: A Tragic Farce (Solórzano), 1258; Fanny's First Play (Shaw), 1225; The Impostor (Sha), 1229; The Impostor (Spiró), 1272; Kiss Me, Kate (Spewack and Spewack), 1272; Seven Keys to Baldpate (Cohan), 1214
- Play Without a Title. See also Platonov (Chekhov)
- Play without a Title (García Lorca), 109
- A Play Without Love (Králik), 1254
- Playwright and Director Center (Russia), 1170
- The Playwright as Thinker (Bentley), 147
- playwrights, African American. See Black Arts Movement
- playwrights, indigenous. See under individual countries and cultures
- playwrights and playwriting. See subsequent entries; writers and writing
- The Playwright's Center (Minneapolis, USA), 167, 959
- Playwrights' Company (New York), 2, 371, 632, 1084, 1137
- Playwrights' Conference (Connecticut), 146
- Playwrights' Cooperative, 1501
- Playwrights' Festival (Baltimore), 959
- Playwrights Horizons (New York): experimental theater, 1409, 1412; off-Broadway, 989; Overmyer, Eric, 1025; Wasserstein, Wendy, 602, 1442; Wolfe, George C., 1487; Wright, Doug, 645
- Playwrights' Platform, 959
- Playwrights' Studio Group (Toronto), 764
- playwright's theater, 53
- Playwrights' Theatre (New York), 397, 832
- Playwrights Union (Canada), 217
- Playwrights Union (Italy), 248
- Playwrights' Unit Workshop, 32
- Playwrights Workshop (New Zealand), 964
- Plaza (Unruh), 364
- Plaza Delores (Nagy), 948
- Plaza Suite (Simon), 1246
- Pleasance Theatre, 974
- Pleasure Life (Furuhashi), 498
- The Pleasure of Being Boored (Marinetti). See The Manifesto of Futurist Playwrights (Marinetti)
- The Pleasure of Honesty (Pirandello), 1070
- The Plebians Rehearse the Uprising (Grass), 549
- Pleijel, Agneta, 1313
- Plenty (Hare), 586
- Plenzdorf, Ulrich, 524
- Plessis, P. G. du, 1264
- Plevnes, Jordan, 845
- Pliekšāns, Jānis. See Rainis
- Pliya, Jean, 24
- PLO. See Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO)
- The Plough and the Stars (O'Casey), 702, 706, 982–983, 985, 1078–1079, 1504
- Plovers of the Island (Kawatake), 758
- Plumes (Johnson), 739
- Plumes in the Dust (Treadwell), 1375
- The Plume's Seed Blows Far (Van Wyke Louw), 1262
- Plymouth Theatre (New York), 2, 621, 846, 1252
- PNT. See Palestinian National Theatre
- Poached (Wilson), 983
- Pocahontas, 1100
- Pocket Theatre (Egypt), 391
- Podbrey, Maurice, 1007
- Podestá, Pablo, 351
- Poe, Edgar Allan, 1296
- Poems to be Played. See A Voice Without Anyone (Tardieu)
- Poesia (Marinetti), 107
- Poesía en Voz Alta (Mexico), 897
- The Poet as Pig (Kroetz), 783
- The Poetic Frenzy (Olsen), 996
- poetic theater, 828–829, 1157. See also lyric drama; verse drama
- poetic theater, plays and playwrights: Anderson, Maxwell, 43; Auden, Wystan Hugh, 984; Bridie, James, 327; Duncan, Ronald, 377; Eliot, Thomas Stearns, 327, 377, 984; Fry, Christopher, 327, 359; Heiberg, J. L., 342; Hughes, Langston, 637; Ibsen, Henrik, 647, 651; In the Shadow of the Glen (Synge), 687; In the Summer House (Bowles), 687; Judith (Isayeva), 1170; Korkiya, Viktor, 1171; The Lady's Not for Burning (Fry), 793; Løveid, Cecilie, 834–835; Lyubimov, Yuri Petrovich, 841; Marble (Brodsky), 1168; O'Casey, Sean, 984; Rainis, 1115; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht), 1133–1134; Rostand, Edmond, 1154; Vinaver, Michel, 1424; Vitrac, Roger, 1427
- poetic theater, by country or region: England, 377; Iceland, 652, 653; Indonesia, 679; Ireland, 701; Israel, 710; Italy, 715, 716; Laos, 797–798; Latvia, 801–802, 1115; Norway, 975; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1163–1164, 1168; United States, 1401–1404
- poet laureate of Ethiopia, 1381
- poetry: Brau, Salvador, 1106; dramatic, 1040; Duncan, Ronald, 408; Egyptian drama, 391; Eliot's drama, 395; England, 407–408, 415–416; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; kabuki plays, 1325; Page, Louise, 1027; Palestine, 1032; Polish drama, 1079; satiric, 1108; Spanish drama, 388; Tanvir, Habib, 1330; Tardieu, Jean, 1330; Thomas, Dylan, 1350; Whiting, John, 408; Yeats, William Butler, 1370; Yeats' tetrameter, 1108
- The Poet's Marriage (Şinasi), 1385

- Pogodin, Nikolai, 1165, 1166, 1257
- The Pohutukawa Tree (Mason), 875
- Point of Departure. See Eurydice (Anouilh)
- Point of Departure (Guarnieri), 568
- Point of No Return (Osborn), 1015
- Poison (Lunacharsky), 839
- Pojagi (Chong), 260
- A Poke in the Eye (Fo), 461
- Pokorn, Jiří, 317
- Pokrovskiy Gates (Zorin), 1167
- Poland, 1079–1083. See also
 Eastern Europe. Cold War drama, 1081; dramaturgy, 370; late–20th century drama, 1082; 19th century drama, 326; pre–World War I drama, 1079; Przybyszewska, Stanisława, 326; Różewicz, Tadeusz, 1157; satire, 281; socialist realism, 1256; World War I drama, 1080; Yiddish theater, 1506, 1507; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513
- Polar Bears (Gardell), 1314
- The Poles (Jarry et al.), 728
- The Policeman's Whistle (Sowerby), 1265
- Polish Theater Laboratorium, 1090
- political corruption, 1215, 1221, 1230, 1303
- political drama. See also agitation-propaganda; anarchism; subsequent entries
- political drama: Arena Theater of São Paulo, 60; Black Arts Movement, 164; dadism, 319; documentary drama, 352; epic theater, 423; Fo's political theater and giullare, 282; The Group Theatre, 563–565; guerilla theater, 568–569; identity theater, 656–657; The Mock Parliaments, 914–915; new objectivity, 959; off-off-Broadway, 1409–1410; Open Theater, 1009–1010; performance art, 1043; protest drama, 411; realism, 1124; satire, 378, 381, 733; theater of the grotesque, 562–563
- political drama, plays and playwrights: Accidental Death of an Anarchist (Fo), 6; Adoration of the Old Woman (Rivera), 1141; The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12; Anderson, Maxwell, 43; Angels in America (Kushner), 46; Anna Sophie Hedvig (Abell), 50; Antigone (Anouilh), 52; The Apple Cart (Shaw), 1226; Arden, John, 59; Ariyoshi Sawako, 63; Arriaga, Guillermo, 294; Balconville (Fennario), 116; Baldwin, James, 118; Baraka, Amiri, 121, 381; Barker, Howard, 122; Bentley, Eric, 147; Betti, Ugo, 1111; Bhagat, Datta, 158; Bjørneboe, Jens Ingvald, 162; Blessing, Lee, 166; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Boal, Augusto, 172; Bond, Edward, 175; The Boss (Sheldon), 1230; Bouchard, Michel Marc, 291; Brasch, Thomas, 186; Break the Heart (Vianna Filho), 189; Brecht, Bertolt, 191, 374, 1057; Brenton, Howard, 197; Brooks, Daniel, 202; The Candle King (Andrade), 221–222; Caragiale, Ion Luca, 225; Castro, Consuelo de, 231; Césaire, Aimé, 235; The Cheviot, the Stag and the Black, Black Oil (McGrath), 247; Durang, Christopher, 378; Duras, Margurite, 379; Dutt, Utpal, 382; Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (Stoppard), 1283; Exit the King (Ionesco), 690; fareWel (Ross), 1153; Fennario, David, 1007; The Flies (Sartre), 459; Gatti, Armand, 509; Geneva (Shaw), 1227; Ghashiram Kotwal (Tendulkar), 525–526; Gorky, Maksim, 544–546; The Great Rebellion (Dutt), 553; Grieg, Nordahl, 560; Guantanamo: “Honor Bound to Defend Freedom” (Brittain and Slovo), 566; Halac, Ricardo, 576; Hamsun, Knut, 579; Handke, Peter, 581; Heiberg, Gunnar, 602; Hein, Christoph, 604; Hochhuth, Rolf, 617; House Arrest (Smith), 1256; Hughes, Langston, 636; Idiot's Delight (Sherwood), 657–658; I'd Rather Be Right (Rodgers and Hart), 658; Ilagan, Bonifacio, 658–659; In a Land of Silence (Zong), 662–663; It Is Not Tall Grass Blown by the Wind (Hassan), 720; Jelinek, Elfriede, 730; Jepsen, Erling, 733; Jin Yun, 735; John Bull's Other Island (Shaw), 699, 701–702; Just Say No (Kramer), 778; Kuo Pao Kun, 1247; Land of Volcanic Ash (Kubo), 796; Langer, František, 797; Lapeña-Bonifacio, Amelia, 799; Lawson, John Howard, 804–805; Li Longyun, 820; Lochhead, Liz, 829; Luscombe, George, 840; Lyubimov, Yury Petrovich, 841; Marat/Sade (Weiss), 867; McGuinness, Frank, 981; Miller, Arthur, 904–906; Murayama Tomoyoshi, 940–941; Nadeem, Shahid, 947; Neilson, Anthony, 974; Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 965; Noda Hideki, 970; O'Casey, Sean, 984; Odets, Clifford, 987–989; One Year Back Home (Yeo), 1247; Only We Who Guard the Mystery Shall Be Unhappy (Kushner), 788; Osofisan, Femi, 1017–1018; Ostrovsky, Aleksandr, 1019; Our Power and Our Glory (Grieg), 1022–1023; Pinter, Harold, 226, 1066; Prague (Krizanc), 781; Professional Foul (Stoppard), 1283; Rain from Heaven (Behrman), 1114–1115; Rame, Franca, 1118; Rendra, 1131; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht), 1133–1134; Romeril, John, 1151; Rowlands, Ian, 1155–1156; Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich, 1243; Sorescu, Marin, 741; Soyinka, Wole, 1267; Stauffer-Bern (Meier), 1317; Three in the Back, Two in the Head (Sherman), 1235; Toller, Ernst, 1362; Turrini, Peter, 1388; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Valdez, Luis, 1415; Verdecchia, Guillermo, 1420; Who Is the Strongest of Us All (Liang), 811
- political drama, by country or region: Africa, 14 passim; Argentina, 88–89, 576; Australia, 74, 77, 330, 339; Austria, 82; Belgium, 141; Brazil, 188, 221–222, 231; Canada, 218, 291, 447–448, 1007; Chile, 335; China, 89–91, 250–259, 372; Cuba, 310–311; Denmark, 343, 344, 996; Eastern Europe, 370; Egypt, 390; England, 405–406; Estonia, 428; France, 379, 475, 485; Germany, 319, 521–522, 581, 991, 1048; Greece, 555, 556; India, 382, 666, 670–671, 673;

- political drama (continued)
 Indonesia, 103, 679, 1136;
 Iran, 695; Ireland, 427,
 700, 981, 984; Israel, 94–
 97; Italy, 282, 719; Japan,
 727; Latvia, 802;
 Martinique, 235; Mexico,
 896; New Zealand, 962;
 Nigeria, 1017–1018;
 Norway, 579; Pakistan,
 1028; Peru, 1044, 1046;
 Philippines, 1050;
 Romania, 225; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1010,
 1022–1023, 1161, 1162,
 1164–1166; South Africa,
 101–102; Spain, 1042;
 Sweden, 582; Taiwan, 795;
 United States, 218, 1083–
 1088, 1401–1404;
 Venezuela, 1419
- The Politics of Waste (Adamov), 10
- Polle-Boy Comes Home (Jepsen), 733
- Polli, Andrea, 585
- Pollock, Sharon, 218, 219,
 1088–1089; Blood Relations,
 171
- Polyakova, Yelena, 1172
- Polygraph (Lepage and Brassard), 1089
- Pomerance, Bernard, 1089–
 1090, 1409
- Pomo Afro Homos, 511
- Poncelet, Serge, 1335
- Poof! (Nottage), 978
- Poof (Salacrou), 1182
- The Pool of the Jellyfish (Wolff),
 1487
- The Poor Bride (Ostrovsky),
 1019
- Poor Conrad (Wolf), 1486
- Poor Murderer (Kohout), 317
- The Poor of New York
 (Boucicault), 891
- Poor Soul (Fo), 460
- Poor Super Man (Fraser), 488, 1396
- poor theater, 15, 827, 1043, 1090–1091
- Popa, Victor Ion, 1149
- Pope John Paul II. See Wojtyła,
 Karol
- Popescu, Dumitru Radu,
 1091, 1150
- Pope Theatre (St. Louis),
 1349
- Poplars on the Terrace (Wolff),
 1488
- Popova, Lyubov, 1172
- Popović, Aleksandar, 1092,
 1211
- Poppycok (Hollingsworth), 622
- popular drama: Álvarez
 Quintero, Joaquín and Serafin, 40; England, 405–
 406; Germany, 518–519,
 522–523; Inoue Hisashi,
 683; Italy, 718–719;
 Rattigan, Terence, 1119–
 1120; Rugbyendo,
 Mukotani, 1158; Volksstück,
 1431
- Popul Vuh (Hernández), 609
- Porcelain (Yew), 1248
- The Porcelain Vase (Petrvski), 845
- Porgy and Bess (Heyward and Heyward), 611–612,
 1092–1093
- Pornographic Heart (Ott), 1419
- pornography, soft-core, 660
- Portable Theatre (England), 586
- Port Authority (McPherson), 886
- Porter, Cole, 812, 1272
- Porter, Hal: The Tower, 73
- Portia Coughlan (Carr), 228
- Portland Institute of Contemporary Art
 (Oregon), 1250
- Port of Limón (Gutiérrez), 293
- Portrait (Mrožek), 934
- Portrait of a Planet
 (Dürrenmatt), 381
- Portrait of a Woman (Vinaver), 1424
- Portrait of Dora (Cixous), 267
- Portrait of the Artist as a Filipino:
 An Elegy in Three Scenes
 (Joaquin), 736, 1052
- Port-Royal (Montherlant), 920
- Po Sein, 208
- posibilismo and imposibilismo,
 1093–1094
- Positions (Yankowitz), 1501
- positivism, 163
- The Possessed (Camus), 216
- Possible Worlds (Mighton), 901
- post-apocalyptic drama, 55.
 See also apocalypse
- Postcard from the Sea (Pascual), 1271
- postcolonial drama. See colonialism and colonization
- The Postman Always Rings Twice
 (Mamet), 863
- The Post Man Only Rings Once
 (Gilbert), 530
- postmodernism, 1094. See also avant-garde drama; modernism. avant-garde
 drama, 87, 106; Belgium,
 144; Boucher, Denise, 180;
 Brazil, 188; dadism, 320;
 Denmark, 344; dramatic criticism, 361; Germany,
 581; Greece, 557; Handke,
 Peter, 581; Jelinek,
 Elfriede, 86; roots, 1057;
 South Africa, 102;
 Southeast Asia, 103
- Post-Mortem (Coward), 300
- Potapenko, Ignaty, 1163
- Potekhin, Aleksei, 1161
- Potgieter, Everhardus, 955
- Potiki, Roma, 963
- Potiki's Memory of Stone (Grace-Smith), 547
- Pound, Ezra, 394
- A Pound on Demand (O'Casey),
 984
- Pour Lucrèce (Giraudoux), 534
- poverty. See also rural and village life. Canillita (Sánchez), 1183; False
 Money (Sánchez), 1183; Li
 Jianwu, 818–819; Linney,
 Romulus, 822; Long Day's Journey into Night (O'Neill),
 830–831; The Lower Depths
 (Gorky), 835–836;
- Marambo, Vojislav
 Jovanović, 1209; Marta
 Gruni (Sánchez), 1183;
 Moths (Noer), 932; Mrs.
 Warren's Profession (Shaw),
 1224; Ngema, Mgongeni,
 964; Rame, Franca, 1118;
 Riantiarino, Nano, 1136;
 Road (Cartwright), 1142;
 Ross, Cree Ian, 1153–1154;
 Rudali (Ganguli), 1157–
 1158; Saved (Bond), 1194;
 Sisters in Law (Tremblay),
 1249; Widowers' Houses
 (Shaw), 1224
- Poverty Is No Crime
 (Ostrovsky), 1019
- The Powder Keg (Dukovski), 845
- Powell, Colin, 1300
- Powell, Dawn, 564
- power: Bjørneboe, Jens
 Ingvald, 162; Brieux,
 Eugène, 200; identity
 theater, 656; The Lesson
 (Ionesco), 810; The Life of Galileo (Brecht), 816; Lion in the Streets (Thompson),
 823; Lunacharsky, Anatoly
 Vasilyevich, 838; The Madness of George III
 (Bennett), 853; Ma Rainey's
 Black Bottom (Wilson),
 865; Mrožek, Sławomir,
 934; Müller, Heiner, 937–
 938; Resino, Carmen,
 1132–1133; The Resistible
 Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht),
 1133–1134; Shvarts,
 Yevgeny Lvovich, 1166; Xu Jiuqing's Promotion (Guo and Xi), 1498; Zastrozzi:
 The Master of Discipline
 (Walker), 1514
- Power (Arent), 1084
- Power (Ziverts), 801
- Power in the Blood (Murrell), 943
- The Power of Darkness (Tolstoy),
 367, 951, 1094–1095, 1161,
 1277, 1363, 1370
- The Power of Hair (Sadur), 1169

- The Power of Um* (Werewere-Liking), 25
- The Power Plays* (Walker), 1095–1096
- Power Versus Law* (Xing), 255, 1096–1097
- Prabowo, Jujuk, 680
- A Practical Person* (Tolstoy), 1363
- Practice Performing Arts School (Singapore), 104, 785, 1247
- Praga, Marco, 1097–1098; The Virgins, 714
- Prague (Krizanc), 780
- Prague National Theatre, 685, 1159
- Prairie Theatre Exchange (Canada), 820
- Prampolini, Enrico, 93
- Pratibimba (Elkunchwar), 396
- Pratt, William, 892
- Pravda* (Brenton and Hare), 198, 414
- Prayer Meeting, or The First Militant Minister* (Caldwell), 164
- Pra Yod of Muang Kwang* (Chandraprabha), 239
- Preaching to the Perverted* (Hughes), 636
- The Precious Woman* (Nowra), 979
- The Predator* (Kotylyova), 1162
- predestination. See fate, fatalism
- Prefaces to Shakespeare* (Granville-Barker), 548, 954
- Preger, Jacob, 1507
- pregnancy, 1287
- Prelude to a Kiss* (Lucas), 837, 1412
- Premiers' Literary Award for Drama (Australia), 339
- Premio de la Sociedad de Escritores de México, 1195
- Premio "Letras de Oro," 1195
- Premio Literario del Gobierno de Zacatecas, 1195
- Premio Nacional de Bellas Artes de Literatura (Mexico), 1195
- Premio Nacional de Cultura (Argentina), 546, 1185
- Premio Nacional María Lavalle Urbina (Mexico), 150
- Premios Max Award, 1040
- Pre-Paradise Sorry Now* (Fassbinder), 438
- Preparations for Immortality: A Royal Drama* (Handke), 581
- Presbyterianism, 1199
- The Presentation of Self in Everyday Life* (Goffman), 1044
- Present Laughter* (Coward), 407
- The President* (Resino), 1132
- The President and the Ideal* (Usigli), 1414
- President of the Brave* (Guarnieri), 567–568
- Presnyakov, Oleg, 1170
- Presnyakov, Vladimir, 1170
- Press Cuttings* (Shaw), 1226
- Pressley, Nelson, 1281
- The Pretenders* (Ibsen), 342, 648, 975, 1098
- Preterteris, Kostas, 556
- The Pretty Girl* (Naidyonov), 1162
- Previn, Andre, 1283
- The Price* (Miller), 903, 906, 1098–1099
- Price, Gareth Tudor, 1395
- Price, Marjorie, 764
- Price of Francophone Award, 932
- Price of the General Governor of Canada Award, 932
- Prichard, Katharine Susannah, 77
- Prichard, Rebecca: Essex Girls, 427
- Prides Crossing* (Howe), 633
- Priede, Gunärs, 801
- Priestley, John Boynton, 1099–1100; Dangerous Corner, 324; An Inspector Calls, 407, 685
- Prilutski, Noyekh, 1507
- Prim, Duck, Mama and Frank (Hollingsworth), 622
- Primary Colors (Mishima), 910
- Primer Festival Cultural Centroamericano, 293
- The Prince* (Dvořák), 315
- Prince Karu and His Sister* (Akimoto), 29
- Prince of Naples* (Walker), 1437
- Prince of Wales Theatre* (England), 231, 400, 401, 935
- Prince Reso* (Rendra), 679, 1131
- Prince Reuveni* (Bergelson), 1508
- The Prince's Bootlicker* (Norén), 973
- Princess Maleine* (Maeterlinck), 854
- The Princess Marries the Page* (Millay), 902
- Princess of Burgundia* (Gombrowicz), 541, 1081
- Princess Pocahontas and the Blue Spots* (Mojica), 1100–1101
- Princess Supankalya* (Chandraprabha), 239
- Princess T* (Fischerová), 317, 456
- Princess Theatre* (England), 181, 400, 811
- Princess Theatre* (New York), 551, 922, 1251
- Princess Turandot* (Gozzi), 927
- Princess Wencheng* (Tian), 1357
- Principia Scriptoriae* (Nelson), 954
- Principles of Playwriting* (Xiong), 1496
- Priority Projects* (Soyinka), 1267
- prison drama, 767, 1258
- The Prisoner* (Behan), 138
- Prisoner* (Lékai), 93
- Prisoner Number Seventy-Seven* (Langer), 797
- The Prisoner of Second Avenue* (Simon), 1246
- The Prisoner of Zenda Castle* (Noda), 970
- Prithvi Theatre* (Mumbai), 1347
- privacy, 856
- Private Hicks* (Maltz), 1083
- Private Lives* (Coward), 235, 270, 296–297, 406, 407, 598, 1101
- The Private Secretary* (Gillette), 532
- Private Tanaka* (Kaiser), 748, 1317
- Private Viewing* (Havel), 595
- Prix du Jury (Canada), 268
- Prix Italia, 149, 834, 1205
- Prix Mallarmé, 71
- Proa Grupo, 897
- problem play, 353, 376, 601, 634, 1101–1102
- Processional* (Lawson), 433, 805, 1102–1103, 1400–1401
- Procession of Man* (Thiyam), 1349
- The Prodigal* (Richardson), 281, 1138
- The Prodigal Son* (Blaumanis), 801
- The Prodigal Son* (Caine), 1134
- The Prodigal Son* (Hughes), 637
- Producciones Cisne* (Puerto Rico), 1106
- The Producers* (Meehan), 815
- production aesthetics, 400
- Profane Morality Plays* (Villaurrutia), 896
- The Professional* (Kovačević), 1211
- Professional Association of Canadian Theatre, 909
- Professional Foul* (Stoppard), 1283
- The Professor* (Gillette), 532
- Professor Bernhadi (Schnitzler), 1103–1104, 1196
- Professor Mamlock* (Wolf), 520, 1486
- The Professor's Love Story* (Barrie), 1200
- Professor Taranne* (Adamov), 10, 437
- Professor Tsumura* (Yamamoto), 1499
- A Profitable Post* (Ostrovsky), 1161
- Profit and Loss* (O'Casey), 983

- The Profligate* (Pinero), 1064
Profound Research
 (Na'ibandiān), 696
Profulla (Ghosh), 666–667 progressive drama, 404–407
 Progressive Dramatic Association (India), 525
 Progressive Writers'
 Association (India), 1329
 Project Arts Centre (Dublin),
 706
 Proletarian Culture movement (Soviet Union),
 1171
 Proletarian Theater (Berlin),
 369, 423, 1076
 proletariat movement, 201,
 727, 913, 937, 940–941,
 1208, 1495
 Proletkult Theater (Moscow),
 1376
 A Prologue to an Unwritten Play
 (Vojnović), 1430
Proloog (Netherlands), 957
Promenade (Fornes), 467–468
Prometheus (Ivanov), 1164, 1174
Prometheus (Müller), 937
 promiscuity, 1290, 1429
The Promise (Rivera), 1141
Promised Land (Alrawi), 1029
Promise Not to Tell (Scott), 964 promises, 944
Promises, Promises (Simon),
 1246
Promotion (Chen), 245
Proof of Honor (Arlt), 88
 propaganda, 1127–1128, 1149
A Property of the Clan (Enright),
 419
Prophecy (Handke), 580
The Prophet (Kouka), 778
Prophet Ilya (Slobodzianek),
 1082
Prophets (Johst), 740
Prophet's birthday
 (Palestine), 1030
The Proposal (Chekhov), 243
Proposals (Simon), 1246 proscenium. See fourth wall
Proserpina (Goethe), 918
 Prospect Theatre Company, 793 prostitution: Honor
 (Sudermann), 1303; Mrs.
 Warren's Profession (Shaw),
 935–936; The Respectful
Prostitute (Sartre), 1190; Six Characters in Search of an Author (Pirandello), 1251;
The Son (Hasenclever),
 1259; Thread Hell (Kishida),
 769; Zapolska, Gabriela,
 1513
The Protagonist (Kaiser and Weill), 748
Protect Your Faces
 (Voznesensky), 841
Proteo (Monterde), 896
Protest (Havel), 595
 Protestants (Székely), 640 protest drama. See also individual countries; political drama. Enquist's fictive portraits, 418; Radrigán,
 Juan, 1113–1114; Rainis,
 1115; Rendra, 1131; René,
 1131–1132; Rodríguez,
 Jesusa, 1146–1147;
 Romeril, John, 1151
The Protestors (Hapipi), 962
Protocol of a Conference
 (Gelman), 1168
 proto-crepuscularism, 529
The Proud Son of Heaven (Guo), 570 proverbs, dramatic, 528–529
Provincetown Players:
 Barnes, Djuna, 123;
 community theater, 282;
 creative collaboration, 371;
 Cummings, e. e., 311;
 founding, 371, 1001, 1400;
 Glaspell, Susan, 1378;
 Jones, Robert Edmond,
 742; O'Neill, Eugene, 371,
 397, 575, 832, 1001–1002;
 Theatre Guild, 1341
Provincetown Playhouse:
 Albee, Edward, 31; Green,
 Paul, 661; little theater movement, 989; New York
 scene, 1408; O'Neill,
 Eugene, 37, 105, 1001–
 1002; The Zoo Story, 1517
Provincial Anecdotes
 (Vampilov), 1167 Provisional Theatre (Los Angeles), 1501
Proyecto Ariadna, 924
 Prutkov, Kozma, 1161, 1163,
 1165, 1173–1174
Prymate (Medoff), 887
Przybyszewska, Stanisława,
 1104, 1173; The Danton Case,
 326, 1080; For the Sake of Happiness, 1079; The Golden
Fleece, 1079; Snow, 1079
P.S. 122 (New York), 871, 991, 1412
Psyche (Vojnović), 1430 psychiatry, 1105; Beckett,
 Samuel, 129; Equus
 (Shaffer), 1217; Kalldewey,
Farce (Strauss), 1288;
Psychopathia Sexualis
 (Shanley), 1219; Reunion in Vienna (Sherwood), 1237;
Saint Frances of Hollywood
 (Clark), 1179; Shanley,
 John Patrick, 1219; Soya,
 Carl Erik, 1266;
 Strindberg, August, 1293
Psycho Beach Party (Busch), 510
 psychodrama, 25, 124, 206, 476, 1414 psychological realism. See realism, psychological
Psychopathia Sexualis
 (Shanley), 1219
 psychophysical theater, 445
Ptákovina (Kundera), 316
Ptushkina, Nadezhda, 1170
The Public (García Lorca), 109, 507 publication of plays, 954
 Public Broadcasting System,
 1380
The Public Prosecutor
 (Hochwälder), 86
Public Theater (New York):
 Black Arts Movement,
 1410; Brecht, Bertolt, 1218;
 Egloff, Elizabeth, 390; Hair
 (Ragni and Rado), 1409;
 Hwang, David Henry, 643;
 Kramer, Larry, 1412;
 Kushner, Tony, 789; Parks,
 Suzan-Lori, 1413; Rabe,
 David, 1113, 1280
 Pu Boying, 1497
A Pub under the Green Tree
 (Kováčik), 1254
 Puccini, Giacomo, 758
Puchai Naya (Wongmontha),
 1338
 Puck (troupe), 957
Puerto Rican Traveling
Theatre, 1406
Puerto Rico, 229, 553–554,
 1106–1107, 1141
Pugachyov Rebellion
 (Trenyov), 927
Pugachyov (Yesenin), 1164
púja, 753
Pula (Manaka), 1265
 Pulitzer Prize: Albee,
 Edward, 32, 1356;
 Anderson, Maxwell, 43,
 1404; Connelly, Marc, 558;
 Crouse, Russel, 821; Cruz,
 Nilo, 310; Foote, Horton,
 464; Gale, Zona, 503, 912;
 Glaspell, Susan, 36, 536,
 1378; Green, Paul, 557,
 661; Hart, Moss, 1509;
 Henley, Beth, 607; Howard,
 Sidney, 632, 1345, 1401;
 Inge, William, 682, 1060;
 Kaufman, George S., 756,
 812, 1509; Kelly, George,
 760; Kingsley, Sidney, 767;
 Kushner, Tony, 46, 787,
 1411; Lindsay, Howard,
 821; MacLeish, Archibald,
 849; Mamet, David, 537,
 862, 1411; McNally,
 Terrence, 885; Miller,
 Arthur, 335, 905, 1407;
 Moss and Kaufman, 588;
 Norman, Marsha, 968, 974;
 O'Neill, Eugene, 157, 1002,
 1003, 1287; Parks, Suzan-
 Lori, 41, 1037; Patrick,
 John, 1039; Rice, Elmer,
 1137; Ryskind, Morrie,
 756; Saroyan, William,
 1187, 1359; Shanley, John
 Patrick, 356; Shepard, Sam,

- 208, 1232, 1411; Sherwood, Robert, 2; Sherwood, Robert E., 657, 1237; Simon, Neil, 1246; Vogel, Paula, 1428; Wasserstein, Wendy, 602, 1442; Wilder, Thornton, 1252; Williams, Jesse Lynch, 1461; Williams, Tennessee, 233, 1290, 1472, 1474; Wilson, August, 447, 1060, 1480; Wilson, Lanford, 1481; Wright, Doug, 645; Zindel, Paul, 1516
- Pullman porters, 397
- Pulver, Lev, 929
- The Pumpkin Eater (Pinter), 1068
- Pumpurs, Andrejs, 1115
- pung cholom (Indian drum dance), 1348
- Punjabi (language), 1027
- Pupa and Butterfly (Drachmann), 357
- Puppa, Paolo, 719
- puppet plays, 625, 1340
- puppet plays, plays and playwrights: Ariyoshi Sawako, 63; Bowles, Jane, 182; Coram Populo! (Strindberg), 53; The Fall of Constance Wilde (Kilroy), 705; Feldek, L'udomír, 1254; Ibsen, Henrik, 645; Jarry, Alfred, 728, 1391; Lao Jiu (Kuo), 785; Love Suicides (Romeril), 1151; Marionettes (Bezā'i), 695; Native Daughter (Kroetz), 783; The Puppets: A Mime-Drama for Marionettes (Solórzano), 1258; Shakes Versus Shaw (Shaw), 1227; The Shardam Circus (Dharm), 765; Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich, 1243; The Struggle of the Naga Tribe (Rendra), 1131; Vogel, Paula, 1429
- puppet plays, by country or region: Burma, 208; Cambodia, 211, 212; Egypt, 697; Indonesia, 678, 1131, 1136; Iraq, 697; Italy, 713; Japan, 614; Mexico, 227; Palestine, 1034; Philippines, 799; Taiwan, 258; Thailand, 1338; Vietnam, 1422–1423
- The Puppets: A Mime-Drama for Marionettes (Solórzano), 1258
- A Puppet Show (Blok), 169, 611, 1107–1108, 1163, 1174
- A Puppet Show (Meyerhold), 899
- Puppets with a Dark Gaze (Pedrero), 1040
- Purcell, Leah, 79
- Pure Form, 852
- Purgatory (Yeats), 703, 1108, 1504
- Purgatory in Ingolstadt (Fleißer), 458, 519, 959
- Purimshpil, 1108–1109, 1505–1506
- Puritanism, 1200, 1225, 1313, 1315
- Purple Dust (O'Casey), 984
- Purroy, Marcos, 1419
- Purumula (Mori), 925
- Pushkin, Aleksandr, 721, 841, 1160, 1256
- Pushkin and Gogol (Kharms), 765
- Put Down Your Whip, Woyzeck (Meng), 91
- Putniņš, Pauls, 801
- Puttanesca Sunday (Alvarez), 1419
- The Puve Farm (Kitzberg), 428
- puxianxi, 1515
- pya zat, 209
- Pygmalion (Rousseau), 918
- Pygmalion (Shaw), 405, 751, 813, 1109–1110, 1170, 1225
- Pygmalion and Galatea (Gilbert), 531
- Qaraqas (al-Qasim), 1032
- Qiang Qing and Her Husbands (Sha), 1230
- Qing, Jiang, 392
- Quad (Beckett), 133
- Quality Street (Barrie), 405
- Quantrill in lawrence (Pomerance), 1089
- quantum physics, 1282
- The Quare Fellow (Behan), 138, 704, 1111
- A Quarreling Pair (Bowles), 182
- The Quarry (Dürrenmatt), 380
- Quartermaine's Terms (Gray), 415
- Quartet (Müller), 938
- Quartet (Spiró), 1272
- Quartet of My People (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- Quartucci, Carlo, 719
- Quat'Sous (Montreal), 488
- Québécois drama, 1178, 1375
- Quechua (language), 1046
- The Queen and the Rebels (Betti), 156, 1111–1112
- Queen Christina (Strindberg), 1297
- Queen C. Kuningatar K. (Ruohonen), 455
- The Queen of Spades (Ackland), 7
- Queen of the Bathtub (Levin), 95, 710
- Queen on Tour (Abell), 3
- The Queen's Comedy (Bridie), 199, 327
- Queensland Theatre Company (Australia), 119
- Queen's Royal Theatre (Dublin), 699, 706
- Queen's Theatre (London), 1259
- queer theater. See gay and lesbian drama
- Queer theory. See gay and lesbian drama
- A Question of Attribution (Bennett), 415
- The Question of Money (Dumas fils), 473
- Questors Theatre (Ealing, England), 263
- Quetzalcoatl (Hernández), 609
- Quicksands. See Pillars of Society (Ibsen)
- Qui est Anna Marks? (Yankowitz), 1501
- quiet theater, 722, 728
- QUIJOTES: Wandering Visions (Morett), 898, 923
- Quillard, Pierre, 1319
- The Quiller Memorandum (Pinter), 1068
- Quinn, Anthony, 1426
- Quintero, Héctor, 309
- Quintero, José, 213, 346, 638, 922, 1005, 1368
- The Quintessence of Ibsenism (Shaw), 1224, 1225
- Quinzaine International Festival Award, 561
- Quoat-Quoat (Audiberti), 71
- Quodlibet (Handke), 580
- Quotations from a Ruined City, 1088
- Quotations from Chairman Mao (Albee), 32
- Quraishi, Ibrahim: Five Streams, 1029
- Qu Yuan (Guo), 569
- R (Plevnes), 845
- The Rabbit Race (Walser), 521
- The Rabble (Bergman), 148
- Rabe, David, 1058, 1113, 1409; Sticks and Bones, 1087, 1280–1281; Streamers, 510, 1087
- Rabinovich, Isaak, 928
- Rabinovich, José, 61
- Rabkin, Gerald, 337, 1404
- Raby, Gyllian, 1089
- race and race relations: African American actors, 1086; apartheid, 101–102, 1252, 1262–1264; Australia, 74, 79; Black Arts Movement, 1058; bufo theater, 204; in colonial Africa, 17; Maori drama, 963; Pakistani drama, 1029; United States, 1396
- race and race relations, plays and playwrights: All God's Chillun Got Wings (O'Neill), 37; Almighty Voice and His Wife (Moses), 39; Amala, Kamala (Norén), 1314; The American Play (Parks), 41; race and race relations

- (continued)
- Anderson, Maxwell, 43;
Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes; Part One: Millennium Approaches (Kushner), 787;
Aria (Highway), 62;
 Baldwin, James, 118;
 Baraka, Amiri, 121;
Bastardy (Romeril), 1151;
The Blacks (Genet), 165;
Blessing, Lee, 167; The Blood Knot (Fugard), 170;
 Brink, Andre, 1263; Brulin, Tone, 143; Bullins, Ed, 207;
Fires in the Mirror: Crown Heights, Brooklyn and Other Identities (Smith), 1255;
 Fugard, Athol, 1263;
 Hansberry, Lorraine, 1407;
Harlem Duet (Sears), 1206;
 Harrigan, Edward G., 962;
In Abraham's Bosom (Green), 661–662; Johnson, Georgia Douglas, 739; A Kakamas Greek (Herbert), 1263;
 Kennedy, Adrienne, 761;
The Kimberly Train (Sowden), 1263; Ma Rainey's Black Bottom (Wilson), 865; "Master Harold" . . . and the Boys (Fugard), 876–877; Moses, Daniel David, 929–930;
 Mulatto (Hughes), 936;
 Nagy, Phyllis, 948; The Nigger (Sheldon), 1230; O'Sullivan, Vincent, 962; A Raisin in the Sun (Hansberry), 1116; The Respectful Prostitute (Sartre), 1190; The Sacrifice of Krelli (Dike), 1264; Sticks and Bones (Rabe), 1281;
 Strindberg, August, 1296;
 Tabori, George, 1323;
 Tapia y Rivera, Alejandro, 1106; Try for White (Warner), 1263; Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992 (Smith), 1255
- Rachel and the Cinema Doorman* (Bergman), 149
Rachilde: Madame Death, 476
Racing Demon (Hare), 414, 586, 1130
Racket (Spiró), 1272
 RADA. See Royal Academy of Dramatic Art
 Radcliffe University, 115
Radiance (Nowra), 979
 Radic, Thérèse, 75
 radical theater collectives, 828–829
Radichkov, Yordan, 206
 radio plays: Australia, 77; Canada, 220; East Africa, 21; Adamov, Arthur, 10; Air Raid (MacLeish), 435; Albee, Edward, 30; All That Fall (Beckett), 38; Anderson, Maxwell, 43; Arden, John, 59; Artaud, Antonin, 68; Barker, Howard, 122; Baxter, James K., 961; Bean, Richard, 125; Beckett, Samuel, 133, 484; Behan, Brendan, 138; Bergman, Hjalmar, 148; Bergman, Ingmar, 149; Bolt, Robert, 174; Bond, Edward, 176; Borchert, Wolfgang, 178; Branner, Hans Christian, 186; Brecht, Bertolt, 196; Choukri, Mohamed, 261; Churchill, Caryl, 263; Connelly, Marc, 285; Cook, Michael, 287; Dagerman, Stig, 322; De Groen, Alma, 340; Delaney, Shelagh, 340; Dibble, Warren, 961; The Doll's Tea Set (Glover), 538; Dubillard, Roland, 376; Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 381; The Fall of the City (MacLeish), 435; Frisch, Max, 492; Jepsen, Erling, 733; Kopit, Arthur, 776; Nelson, Richard, 954; Norén, Lars, 972; Olsen, Ernst Bruun, 996; Poor Soul (Fo), 460
- Raditladi*, Leetsile, 21
 Radoev, Ivan, 206
 Radok, Alfred, 595
Radošina Naïve Theater (Slovakia), 1254
Radovan III (Kovačević), 1211
 Radrigán, Juan, 1113–1114
 Radulescu, I. Eliade, 1148
 Radzinsky, Edvard, 1167
 Raf'at, Taqi, 694
The Raft (Andersson), 1313
The Raft of the Medusa (Kaiser), 748
A Rag Baby (Hoyt), 635
Rag Ballad (Voskovec and Werich), 315 rage, 730
The Ragged Trousered Philanthropists (Lowe), 740
Raging Tides in the Sea of Desire (Xu), 1497
 Ragnarsson, Kjartan, 655
Rags (Leivick), 1508
Ragtime (McNally), 815
 Raguer, Elisea, 1052
The Ragusan Trilogy (Vojnović), 1430
Raha Sulayman theater (Ft. Santiago), 1050
 RAHI (Recovery and Healing from Incest). See incest
 Rahman, Aishah, 729
 Rahnev, Elin, 206
 Raichev, G., 206
 railroads, 1200
The Railroad Station Man (Delaney), 340
The Rails Are Humming (Kirshon), 1166
 Raimund, Ferdinand, 780, 1431
 Rain (Maugham), 249
The Rain (Williamson), 76
 Raina, Arjun, 671
The Rainbow Measles (Were-were-Liking), 25
Rain Dance (Wilson), 1482
Rain Dogs (Thomas), 1351
Rain from Heaven (Behrman), 139, 1114–1115
 Rainis, 801, 1115
The Rainmaker (Chimombo), 22
- The Rainmaker* (Nash), 1407
Rain of Angels Over Paris (Sastre), 1192
Rainsnakes (Enquist), 418, 1313
Rainy Skies (Kinoshita), 784
"The Raising of Lazarus" (Fo), 282
A Raisin in the Sun (Hansberry), 164, 584, 625, 1086, 1116, 1407, 1410
 Rajan, Jacob, 962–963
Rajatabla (Venezuela), 1419
 Rakesh, Mohan, 1116–1117; Halfway House, 577
 Rakov, Nokhem, 1507
The Rally. See How Do You Do, Dialect Determinism (Bullins)
 Ramadan, 1030
 Rama V (King Chulalongkorn), 1117–1118, 1338
 Rama VI (King Vajiravudh), 104, 1338
The Ramayana, 664, 665, 1337
 Rambat (Rendra), 1131
 Rame, Franca, 282, 444, 713, 719, 919, 1118–1119; collaboration with Fo, Dario, 460–462
Ramona and the White Slaves (Walker), 1437
 Ramon Magsaysay Award, 736
 Ramon Obusan Folkloric Group, 1053
 Rampolokeng, Lesego, 1265
 Ramsay, Alan, 1200
 Ramsis Company, 391
Rancid Aluminum (Thomas), 1351
 Randall, Tony, 1406
Randlords and Rotgut (Junction Avenue), 101–102, 1264
Randow: A Comedy (Hein), 604
 Rangacharya, Adya, 668
 Rangakarmee (India), 505
 Rankin, McKee, 216
 Rannet, Egon, 429
 Rao, Maya, 671
 Raos, Ivan, 304
Rapaccini's Daughter (Paz), 897 rape. See also sexual assault
The Rape (Rame), 1118

- The Rape of Lucrece* (Wilder), 1469
- The Rape of Lucretia* (Duncan, librettist), 377
- Rappoport, Shloyme Zanvi, 94, 383
- Rapture (Murray-Smith), 78
- rasa, 1035
- The Raspberry Picker* (Hochwälder), 86
- Rasputin (Piscator), 352
- Rate Rata (Rendra), 1131
- The Rat Race* (Kanin), 751
- The Rats* (Hauptmann), 594
- Rattigan, Terence, 340, 1119–1121; The Browning Version, 202; The Deep Blue Sea, 337; Deep Blue Sea, 409; Separate Tables, 408; Variations on a Theme, 409; The Winslow Boy, 409
- Raudsepp, Hugo, 428
- Rauschenberg, 584
- Ravenhill, Mark, 219, 1058, 1121–1122; Shopping and Fucking, 417, 1170
- The Ravens* (Jurkåns), 801
- Ravindran Drama Group (Singapore), 1247
- Ray, R. J., 1145
- Rayson, Hannie, 75, 76, 1122
- Raz, Avraham, 96
- Raznovich, Diana, 1122–1123
- Razumovskaya, Lyudmila, 1168
- Rázusová-Martáková, Mária, 1254
- Rea, Stephen, 1373
- Reader (Dorfman), 355
- Reading Hebron (Sherman), 806, 1123–1124, 1234–1235
- Reagan, Ronald, 787, 1429
- The Reagents* (Egloff), 390
- Real Academia de la Lengua, 40
- Real Compagnia Sarda (Italy), 713
- Real Estate (Page), 1027
- real estate speculation, 1242
- The Real Inspector Hound* (Stoppard), 1282, 1283
- realism, 1124. See also socialist realism; subsequent entries. antirealism, 90, 1427, 1454; apocalypse, 54; costumes, 239, 364; critical realism, 255; cup and saucer drama, 230; documentary drama, 353; dramatic dialogue, 363, 364; dramatic structure, 366; expressionism compared, 432; feminist drama, 445–446; hyperrealism, 801; lyric realism, 46; magic realism, 445, 622; melodrama compared, 472; mystical realism, 523; naturalism compared, 950; new realism, 580; problem plays, 1102; Provincetown Players, 1400; reflective, 198; shingeki, 726; slice-of-life, 614; theatricality, 1049; wartime dramas, 1405
- realism, plays and playwrights: Albee, Edward, 1460–1461; Andreev, Leonid, 817; Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes; Part One: Millennium Approaches (Kushner), 787; Anna Sophie Hedvig (Abell), 51; Becque, Henry, 133; Benavente, Jacinto, 145; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; The Boss (Sheldon), 179; Buried Child (Shepard), 207; Chekhov, Anton, 364, 721; Childress, Alice, 249; Daly, Augustin, 322; D'Annunzio, Gabriele, 325; Denison, Merrill, 341; Dumas fils, 473; Ervine, St. John, 738; Fitch, Clyde, 634; Ganguli, Usha, 505–506; Gillette, William, 598; Gorostiza, Carlos, 546; Harrigan, Edward G., 587, 634; Hassan, Noordin, 590; Hellman, Lillian, 607; Hernández, Luiza Josefina, 608; Herne, James A., 598, 609, 1398; Hewett, Dorothy, 610; Hirata Oriza, 614, 1361; Howard, Bronson, 630, 634; Howells, William Dean, 634–635; Ibsen, Henrik, 353, 364; Jones, Henry Arthur, 742; Knutson, Line, 771; Kroetz, Franz Xaver, 782; Kubota Mantarō, 784; Li Jianwu, 818–819; Li Longyun, 820; O'Casey, Sean, 985; O'Neill, Eugene, 363; Peter Pan (Barrie), 1047; Peymann, Claus, 1049; The Piano Lesson (Wilson), 1059; Picnic (Inge), 1061; The Plough and the Stars (O'Casey), 1079; The Power Plays (Walker), 1095; Rakesh, Mohan, 1116–1117; Resino, Carmen, 1132–1133; Rivera, José, 1141; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Rutherford and Son (Sowerby), 1174–1175; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; Salvation Nell (Sheldon), 1182; Sánchez, Florencio, 1183; The Seduction (Kornfeld), 777; Sheldon, Edward, 1230; Shore Acres (Herne), 1242; subversion of, Davis, Jack, 330; They Don't Wear Black Tie (Guarnieri), 1344; Vinaver, Michel, 1424; Xenopoulos, Grigorios, 1495; Zola, Émile, 363
- realism, by country or region: Africa, 18; Argentina, 61, 1009–1010; Australia, 610; Brazil, 187; Canada, 216, 217; China, 251, 255; Cuba, 309; Denmark, 341–343; Eastern Europe, 92; England, 377, 399–403, 983; Estonia, 428; France, 377; Greece, 555–556; Hungary, 1038; India, 670, 1346; Ireland, 702, 707; Israel, 95–96; Italy, 714, 716; Japan, 614; Lithuania, 824; Malaysia, 590, 861; Netherlands, 955–956; Norway, 976; Philippines, 1052; Puerto Rico, 1106; Russia and the Soviet Union, 99–100, 1019, 1166, 1174; South Africa, 101–102; United States, 106, 598, 609, 634, 1397–1401; West Africa, 23; Western Europe, 107–108, 1124; western tradition, 588
- realism, contemporary: acting, 8; Albee, Edward, 31–32; American Buffalo (Mamet), 40; Antoine, André, 53; Arena Theater of São Paulo, 60; Australia, 73, 74, 78; A Bankruptcy (Bjørnson), 120; Beggar on Horseback (Connelly and Kaufman), 137; Betrayal (Pinter), 154; Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 163; Brooks, Daniel, 202; Ginzburg, Natalia, 532–533
- realism, psychological: Andreev, Leonid, 45; Branner, Hans Christian, 186; Croatia, 304; documentary drama, 353; Hernández, Luiza Josefina, 608; Noer, Arifin C., 971; Tolstoy, Lyov, 1161
- Reality (Pérez Galdós), 1270
- reality theater. See documentary drama
- The Real Thing* (Stoppard), 354, 415, 1125, 1282, 1284
- Reandean, 31, 836
- Reaney, James, 219, 613, 1125–1126, 1428; The Donnellys, 217–218
- Re-Arrangements (Chaikin et al.), 1232
- The Reason for the Offense* (D'Erzell), 345

- The Rebel (Camus), 482
 Rebels (Bilginer), 1386
 The Rebels (Brink), 1263
 The Rebels (Ignacio Cabrujas), 1419
 Reb Henokh, or What Can Be Done With It? (Euchel), 1506
 The Recantation of Galileo Galilei (Bentley), 147
 The Reception (Gorky), 545
 recitation, heroic, 1158
 Reckless (Lucas), 837
 Record No. 1 (Fukuda), 498
 Record of a Gang of Thugs (Murayama), 940
 Recruits (Aksenfeld). See The First Jewish Recruit in Russia (Aksenfeld)
 Recuerda, José Martín, 1270, 1271
 Recut (Boucher and Gagnon), 180
 Recycle (Wilson), 1479
 The Red Bastion (Dutt), 383
 The Red Bird Has Fleed . . . (Ohasi), 992
 Red Blouses (Germany), 27
 The Red Demon Akaoni (Noda), 971
 The Red Devil Battery Sign (Williams), 55, 1476
 Reddish Lances (Gallegos), 1419
 The Red Dress (Brieux), 200
 Red Dyke Theatre (Atlanta), 510 redemption, 793
 Redemption (Murray-Smith), 78
 The Redemption Song (Osborne), 1015
 The Red-Haired Servant (Stumbre), 801
 The Red Heart (Reaney), 1125
 Red Herring (Mou), 91
 Red Kettle Theatre (Waterford), 706
 The Red Lantern (China), 393, 1256
 Red Light (Larsson), 1314
 The Red Lotus Society (Lai), 796
 Red Magic (Ghelderode), 526
 Red Megaphone (Germany), 27
 Red Mole (New Zealand), 962
 Red Nose (Yao), 1502
 The Red Passion (Sorbul), 1149
 The Red Robe (Brieux), 475
 Red Room, White Room, Black Room (Ma and Qin), 881
 Red Roses (Barnes), 414
 Red Roses for Me (O'Casey), 984, 985
 The Red Scarf (Daly), 891, 1397
 Red Shirt (Makino), 860
 The Red Shoes (Norman), 974
 Red Sky at Morning (Cusack), 314
 The Red Tavern (Belyayev), 1163
 Reed, John, 371
 Rees, Roland, 1089
 Reetsenang Group of Community Theatres (Botswana), 22
 Reeves, Melissa, 78
 Reference Point (Gallegos), 294
 References to Salvador Dalí Make Me Hot (Rivera), 1141
 Reflections in a Mirror (Olsen), 996 reflective realism, 198 reform melodrama, 892
 Reformsi (Indonesia), 1191
 Regina (Blitzstein), 168
 Regional Secretary (Rendra), 103 regional theater. See also community theater. Brazil, 189; China, 839, 1515; Indonesia, 678; Norway, 977; overview, 371, 1408–1409; South African township theater, 101–102, 1263; United States, 106, 803–804, 1411 regional theater, as a theme, 735
 Regional Theatre: The Revolutionary Stage (Zeigler), 1408
 Regret of the Father and Son (traditional Chinese), 26
 Rehab (Munro), 939
 A Rehearsal (Feldek), 1254
 Reid, Alexander, 1201
 Reid, Christina, 706
 Reigen (Schnitzler), 83, 586, 1121, 1126–1127, 1196
 The Reign of Wazobia (Onwueme), 24, 1008
 Reilly and the Four Hundred (Harrigan), 587
 Reimann, Hans: Adventures of the Good Soldier Schweik, 1076
 Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Sumurun, 1400; Austrian drama, 83; Ball, Hugo, 319; Deutsches Theater, 701, 718; directing philosophy, 368; exiled, 520; God, Emperor, Peasant (Háy), 640; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von, 618; influence on Pirandello, 1075; Kammerspiele, 960; Kammerspiel-Haus, 236; The Miracle (Vollmoeller), 1130; Strindberg, August, 1298; theatricality, 1342
 Reinshagen, Gerlind, 1048
 Reisenhofer, Heinrich, 1265
 Reizenstein, Elmer Leopold. See Rice, Elmer
 Relatively Speaking (Ayckbourn), 110
 Relative Values (Coward), 299, 407 relativism in African drama, 16 religion and religious drama, 1127–1131. See also Roman Catholicism. apocalypse, 53; Islamic, 691–694, 697; laughter, role in, 1128; learning plays (Lehrstücke), 807; ta'ziyeh, 692–694, 696–697 religion and religious drama, plays and playwrights: The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God (Sears), 12; Alarms (Yankowitz), 1502; Bash; Latterday Plays (LaBute), 791; Beyond Human Power I and II (Björnson), 156; Boothe, Clare, 177; Brand (Ibsen), 185; Claudel, Paul, 268; The Green Pastures (Connelly), 558; Heaven and Hell (Kornfeld), 777; Isherwood, Christopher, 708; John Bull's Other Island (Shaw), 737; Kiddush (Hasfari), 711–712; The League of Nathans (Sherman), 806; Lilies (Bouchard), 819; Linney, Romulus, 822; Loot (Orton), 833; Marisol (Rivera), 1141; Master Olof (Strindberg), 877; Ngema, Mgongeni, 964; Rainis, 1115; Rame, Franca, 1118; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Saga of the Wet Hens (Marchessault), 1178; Shaw, George Bernard, 1128; Shi'a, 693–694; Shore Acres (Herne), 1242; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1515 religion and religious drama, by country or region: Burma, 208; India, 663, 671, 674, 693; Indonesia, 678; Iran, 692–694; Iraq, 693, 697; Israel, 709, 711–712; Jamaica, 693; Japan, 684; Latvia, 802; Lebanon, 693; Lithuania, 823; Pakistan, 693, 1028; Peru, 1046–1047; Philippines, 1051; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1174 religion-based performances, 423 religious buildings as theaters, 1032
 Remaining History (Sircar), 1248
 Remember (Kemp), 761
 Remenyik, Zsigmond, 92
 Remigio, Tomas: Free, 1052
 Reminiscences of the Southern Tang (Guo), 256, 570
 Remizov, Aleksei, 1164, 1174

- The Remodeling Job* (Roshchin), 1168
- The Removalists* (Williamson), 74, 1478
- Renais, Alain, 379
- Renaissance (Drachmann), 357
- Renaissance Italy, 1197
- Renata Theatre (New York), 989
- Renato, José, 60
- Renaud and Armide (Cocteau), 481
- Rencontres internationales théâtre et jeunes spectateurs, 1325
- Rendra, W. S., 103, 679, 971, 1131, 1190; The Struggle of the Naga Tribe, 1299–1300
- Rene, Norman, 837
- Renée, 1131–1132
- Renga Moi (Serumaga), 20, 1213
- Rengifo, César, 1418, 1419
- Rent (Larson), 511
- Renits (Wilcox), 510
- Repentance (Sobol), 711
- repertory theater movement, 403–404, 1149
- Repertory Theatre (Perth, Australia), 313
- Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center (New York), 906
- reportage, 954
- representational theater, 991, 1001
- reproductive engineering, 775
- Republican National Convention, New York, 1088
- The Republic of Bagong* (Riantiarno), 1136
- The Republic of Labor* (Solzhenitsyn), 1169
- reputation, 1259
- Requiem for a Futurologist* (Soyinka), 1267
- Requiem for an Eclipse* (Chalbaud), 1419
- Requiem for Yarini* (Felipe), 309
- The Resentful Woman* (Laguerrre), 1106
- The Resettled Woman* (Müller), 524
- The Resettle Woman, or Life in the Country* (Müller), 937
- Residencias Mexico—Columbia, 923
- Resino, Carmen, 1132–1133, 1271
- Resistance (Oshodi), 1017
- Resistance (Peña), 1419
- Resistance, French, 131, 1182. See also occupation, military
- The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui* (Brecht), 194, 524, 1133–1134, 1372
- A Resounding Tinkle* (Simpson), 438
- Respected Citizen (Zoshchenko), 1165
- The Respectful Prostitute* (Sartre), 1189, 1190
- Rest in Peace* (Pokorn), 317
- A Restless Run of Locusts* (Osofisan), 1018
- Restoration (Bond), 175, 414
- The Restoration of Arnold Middletown* (Storey), 1285
- Result (Heijermans), 603
- resurrection, 805–806
- Resurrection (Tolstoy), 928, 1364
- Resurrection Blues* (Miller), 903, 907
- Resurrection in April* (Martín), 310
- The Resurrection of Christ* (Kichida), 970
- The Resurrection of Iranian Kings* (Eshqi), 694
- The Resurrection of Lazarus* (Vojnović), 1430
- The Resurrection of the Dead* (Marvin X), 164
- The Retable of Wonders* (Els Joglars), 232
- Retro* (Galin), 1169
- The Return* (Kainy), 712
- The Return Home* (Brau), 1106
- Return Home on a Snowy Night* (Wu), 1492
- Returning to Father* (Kõiv), 429
- Return Journey* (Thomas), 1350
- The Return of King Lear* (Romero), 1419
- The Return of Odysseus* (Wyspiański), 1493
- The Return of Pinocchio* (Nelson), 954
- Return of the Prodigal* (Hankin), 1134–1135
- Return of the Voice of Justice*, 798
- Return to Life* (Karvaš), 1254
- Return to the Apple* (Ariza), 310
- Return to the Barracks* (Tao and Hoai), 1422
- Return to the Desert* (Koltès), 774
- Reuben Reuben (Blitzstein), 168
- The Reunion* (Rozov), 1166
- Reunion in Vienna* (Sherwood), 1237
- Reve, Gerard, 957
- revenge, 1210, 1514
- Revenge* (Brenton), 197
- Revenge Aria* (Norén), 973
- Revenge of the Amazons* (Betts), 964
- Revenger's Tragedy* (Claus), 269
- Reverend Billy, 27
- The Reverend Griffith Davenport* (Herne), 1398
- A Revival! Change! Love! Organize!* (National Black Theatre), 164
- Revolico en el Campo de Marte* (Triana), 1377
- The Revolt of Potemkin* (Miciński), 1080
- The Revolt of the Beavers* (Lantz and Saul), 1084
- revolution, 100, 368, 1423, 1446–1447
- Revolution* (Ilagan), 659
- Revolution* (Lékai), 93
- Revolution* (Van Maele), 143
- Revolution 101: Legend of the Hero* (Tsuka), 1383
- Revolutionaries* (Vazov), 205
- A Revolutionary Trilogy* (Dyk), 315
- The Revolutionist's Handbook* (Shaw), 863–864
- revue, 188
- Rexroth, Kenneth, 1408
- Reyes, Alfonso: Cruel Figures, 896
- Reyes, Severino: RIP, 1052; Without a Wound, 1052
- Reykjavík Theater Company, 652–653, 654
- Reza, Yasmina, 487, 1135; Art, 66
- Reznikov, Hanon, 829, 1086
- The Rez Sisters* (Highway), 62, 218, 612
- Rfat, Oktay: Oppressive Air, 1386
- Rhapsodic Theatre* (Poland), 1081
- The Rhine Daughters* (Løveid), 835
- Rhineland Rebels* (Bronnen), 201
- Rhinocéros* (Ionesco), 690
- Rhinoceros in Love* (Meng), 827
- Rhoda in Potatoland* (Foreman), 1057
- The Rhythm of Violence* (Nkosi), 1262
- Riantiarno, Nano, 103, 679–680, 1135–1136; The Cockroach Opera, 274–275
- Ribeiro, Aldo Miyashiro: Theatrica Wake Función velorio, 1045
- Ribemont-Dessaignes, Georges, 93, 108, 320
- Riccione Prize (Italy), 373
- Rice (Soyinka), 1267
- Rice, Elmer, 105, 632, 1085, 1101, 1136–1138, 1402; The Adding Machine, 10, 433, 916, 1400; On Trial, 1400; Street Scene, 1291
- Rich, Frank, 1481
- Richard Cork's Leg* (Behan, unfinished), 138
- Richards, Lloyd, 371, 1059
- Richardson, Gary, 1399
- Richardson, Jack, 1138, 1408; Gallows Humor, 281; The Prodigal, 281; Xmas in Las Vegas, 281
- Richardson, Tony, 421
- Richardson, Willis, 637

- The Rich Lawyers of Tabriz* (Ākhundzādeh), 693
 Richter, Hans, 319
 Richter, Moyshe, 1507
 Riddersalen theater (Denmark), 342
 Riddles (Hassan), 591
 The Ride Across Lake Constance (Handke), 580
 The Ride Down Mount Morgan (Miller), 907
 Ride On (Sadur), 1169
 Riders to the Sea (Synge), 280, 701, 1138–1139, 1321
 Ride This Night! (Moberg), 1312
 Ridge Theater (New York), 1454
 Ridiculous Theatrical Company (New York), 510, 837–838, 990–991, 1058, 1273, 1410
 Rifat, Oktay: Speckled Rooster, 1386
 Riffbjerg, Klaus, 343
 Rifle (Dutt), 383
 The Rights of Man (Dutt), 382
 Rights of the soul (Giacosa), 529
 Right You Are (Pirandello), 718, 1070, 1139, 1251, 1339
 Rijnders, Gerardjan, 957
 Rimbaud, Arthur, 774, 1042
 The Rimers of Eldritch (Wilson), 1481
 Rinehart, Mary Roberts, 1399
 The Ring of the Nibelung (Wagner), 362, 516, 1433
 Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 220, 1139–1140; Dark Harvest, 217; Still Stands the House, 1281
 The Rink (Piñera), 1063
 Río de la Plata Theatre (Buenos Aires), 88
 Riot (Tharoor), 676
 Riot in Heaven (Onwueme), 24, 1008 riots, 701
 RIP (Reyes), 1052
 Rip Van Winkle (Boucicault), 1140–1141
 Rip Van Winkle, or The Works (Nelson), 954
 Ri Reisen, 48, 99
 The Rise and Fall of Little Voice (Cartwright), 229
 The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny (Brecht and Weill), 192, 1266
 The Rise and Shine of Comrade Fiasco (Whaley), 22
 Rise Up! Awaken (Maranga Mai), 963
 The Rising of the Moon (Gregory), 559
 The Rising Theatre (Israel), 1033
 The Risk of Living (Lockert), 1045
 Ristori, Adelaide, 713–714
 The Rite (Bergman), 1314
 Ritter, Dene, Voss (Bernhard), 152
 Rittner, Tadeusz: Silly Jacob, 1080
 “Ritualistic Revivals” (Teer), 1087
 The Ritual of Solomon’s Children (Rendra), 679 ritual performances, 423
 The Ritz (McNally), 885, 1409
 The Rivals (Sheridan), 1405
 Rivera, Diego, 981
 Rivera, Jose, 55
 Rivera, José, 1141–1142, 1413
 River Arts Repertory Company (New York State), 732
 The River Flowing in Reverse (Kudret), 1386
 The River Ikuta (Mori), 925
 Riverside Drive (Kobrin), 1507
 Riverside studio (London), 786
 The Rivers of China (De Groen), 339
 Rizal, José, 659
 Rizzotto, Guiseppe, 715
 Road (Cartwright), 134, 1142
 Road (Ma and Jia), 881
 The Road (Mda), 1265
 The Road (Soyinka), 24, 417, 1267
 A Road for the Barefooted Ones (Čahojová), 1254
 Road Movie (Reeves), 78
 Roadside Theater Company, 283
 Road to a Revolution (Medoff), 887
 The Road to Heaven (Krlęža), 781
 The Road to Mecca (Fugard), 1264
 Road to Nirvana (Kopit), 776
 The Road to Rome (Sherwood), 1237, 1401
 Road to the North (Takahama), 970
 Roar (Wijaya), 679
 Roar China! (Tretjakov), 1164, 1377
 Roaring Thunder (Grace-Smith), 547
 Robards, Jason, 1368 robbery, 1254
 Robbins, Tim: Embedded, 1088
 Roberto D’Eureux (Tapia y Rivera), 1106
 Roberto Zucco (Koltès), 774, 1142–1143
 Robertson, Thomas William, 280, 349, 377, 400, 1063, 1124, 1143–1144, 1342; Caste, 230, 401; Ours, 401; School, 401; Society, 401
 Robert the Bruce (Davidson), 1200
 Robeson, Paul, 583, 612, 1002, 1405
 Robespierre (Sardou), 1186
 Robins, Elizabeth, 1144; Alan’s Wife, 402; Votes for Women, 404
 Robinson, Bertrand, 821
 Robinson, Lennox, 702, 983, 1144–1145, 1503
 Robot (Pavlovsky), 89
 The Rock (Eliot), 1129
 Rockaby (Beckett), 133, 416
 Rockefeller Award: Foreman, Richard, 466; Fornes, Maria Irene, 469; Gurney, A. R., 572; Jenkin, Len, 732; Nelson, Richard, 954; Nottage, Lynn, 978; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Walcott, Derek, 1436; Williams, Tennessee, 1473; Wilson, August, 1481; Wilson, Robert, 1483
 Rockefeller Fellowship, 845, 897
 Rocket to the Moon (Odets), 564, 988
 The Rock Garden (Shepard), 1232
 Rock ‘n’ Roll Circus (Australia), 75 rock stars, 1233
 The Rocky Horror Picture Show (O’Brien), 962
 Rodak, Alfred, 894
 Rodenbach, Georges, 141
 Rodgers, Richard, 658, 812, 813
 Roditi, Edouard, 261
 Rodrigues, Nelson, 188, 1145–1146; Wedding Gown, 1448–1449
 Rodríguez, Jesusa, 897, 1146–1147
 Rodwell, Sally, 962
 Roger Bloomer (Lawson), 805
 Rogers, Richard, 959
 Rogers III, Samuel Shepard. See Shepard, Sam
 Rogue Male (Sartre), 1068
 Rohde, Jokum, 344
 Rojas, Miguel, 294
 Rokumeikan (Mishima), 910
 Roland, Betty, 72, 77
 The Role of Kali (Panikkar), 1036
 Rolland, Romain, 252, 541
 The Roll Call (MacKaye), 848
 Romans, Jules, 1147–1148; Knock, or The Triumph of Medicine, 281, 480 roman à clef, 151
 Roman Bath (Stratiev), 206
 Roman Catholicism. See also religion and religious drama. The Countess Kathleen (Yeats), 1503; Doubt (Shanley), 1219; influence on drama, 1046; Inoue

- Hisashi, 684; Philippine drama, 1051; The Satin Slipper (Caudel), 1192; Synge, John Millington, 687; Tanaka Chikao, 1328; The Well of the Saints (Synge), 1321
- Romance (Sheldon), 1230
- Romance is Banned (Iwamatsu), 722
- The Romanesques (Rostand), 1151, 1154
- Romania, 225, 690, 1091, 1148–1150, 1260–1261, 1505
- Romanian Academy of Letters, 1091
- Romanian Theatre Union, 1150
- Romanian Writers Union, 947, 1091
- The Romans in Britain (Brenton), 197, 413, 414
- Roman theater, influence on Iraqi theater, 697
- romantic drama, 141, 647
- The Romantic Englishwoman (Stoppard and Wiseman), 1283
- romanticism, 1150–1151; Denmark, 341, 357; family drama, 734; France, 377; Hugo, Victor, 472, 1371; The Lady from the Sea (Ibsen), 792; realism, 1124; Romania, 1148; Rostand, Edmond, 1154; Sumbatov-Yuzhin, Aleksandr, 1161; Zola, Émile, 1517
- The Romany Rye (Sims), 890
- Romashov, Boris, 1164
- Rome, Harold, 1257; Pins and Needles, 1084
- Romeo and Jeannette (Anouilh), 1369
- Romeo and Juliet (Shakespeare), 814, 1171, 1173
- Romeril, John, 74, 1151–1152
- Romero, Concha, 1271
- Romero, Mariela, 1419
- Romulus the Great (Dürrenmatt), 380
- Rooftop Productions (Zimbabwe), 22
- Room (Clarke), 1250
- The Room (Pinter), 421, 1066
- Room 213 (Jakobsson), 655
- Room to Move (Rayson), 1122
- Roosevelt, Franklin Delano, 1084, 1237
- Root, Lynne: Cabin in the Sky, 1405
- Roots (Wesker), 410, 1455
- Roots in a Parched Ground (Foote), 464
- roots movement. See Theater of Roots
- Rope of Fog (Rengifo), 1419
- Roper, Tony, 1201
- Rosales, Julio, 1418
- Rose (Žeromski), 1080
- The Rose (Blok), 1277
- Rose (Sherman), 1235
- The Rose and the Cross (Blok), 169, 611, 1174
- Rose Bernd (Hauptmann), 594
- Rose-Marie (Hammerstein and Harbach), 812
- Rosenbauch, Ulrike, 585
- Rosenberg, Ethel, 787, 788
- Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard), 58, 239, 280, 411, 415, 1057, 1152–1153, 1282–1283, 1285
- Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Meet Lear (Stoppard), 1282
- The Rose of the Rancho (Belasco), 1398
- A Rose of Two Scents (Carballido), 897
- Roses (Echagüe), 61
- Rose's Dilemma (Simon), 1246
- Roses in Autumn (Zälite), 801
- The Rose Tattoo (Williams), 1371, 1474, 1475
- Roshchin, Mikhail, 1168, 1169, 1170
- Rosina is Fragile (Martínez Seirra), 873
- Rosmersholm (Ibsen), 350, 592, 601, 651, 1153, 1275, 1301
- Ross, Cree Ian, 1153–1154
- Ross, Kathleen: The Trap, 961
- Roßbach (Bronnen), 201
- Rosselli, Amelia, 446
- Rossellini, Roberto, 1345
- Rossi, Ernesto, 713
- Rosso di San Secondo, Pier Maria, 248, 717
- Rossum's Universal Robots. See R.U.R. (Čapek)
- Rostand, Edmond, 1149, 1154; Cyrano de Bergerac, 314, 476, 1151; The Eaglet, 117; The Romanesques, 1151; The Young Eagle, 1151
- Rostworowski, Karol Hubert: The Surprise, 1080
- Rotherwood Plan, 75
- Rotimi, Ola, 15, 24
- Rotter (Brasch), 187, 524
- Rough Crossing (Stoppard), 1284
- Roundabout Theatre Company, 50, 757
- Roundheads and Pointed Heads (Brecht), 193, 520
- Round Table. See Algonquin Round Table
- Rousseau, Jean Jacques, 1293, 1316; Pygmalion, 918
- Routes and Escape Routes (Bhagat), 158, 674, 1154–1155
- Routledge, Patricia, 1327
- Rovinski, Samuel, 293–294
- Rovner, Eduardo, 62
- Rowlands, Ian, 1155–1156
- Royal Academy of Dramatic Art (RADA, England), 30, 860, 1066, 1329
- The Royal Barber (Lunacharsky), 838
- Royal Court Theatre (London). See also Downstairs at the Royal Court (London); Upstairs at the Royal Court (London). censorship fines, 412; dramaturgy at, 370; English Stage Company, 370, 407, 411; Young Writers Festival, 1017
- Royal Court Theatre (London), playwrights: Arden, John, 409, 1212; Bean, Richard, 125; Bond, Edward, 175, 1194; Brenton, Howard, 197, 414; Cartwright, Jim, 1142; Churchill, Caryl, 264, 436, 1365; Daniels, Sarah, 416; Hankin, St. John, 1134; Jellicoe, Ann, 731, 771; LaBute, Neil, 791; Matura, Mustapha, 878; McPherson, Conor, 707; Nagy, Phyllis, 948; O'Casey, Sean, 985; Osborne, John, 47, 421, 1016; Page, Louise, 1027; Pinter, Harold, 1067; Prichard, Rebecca, 427; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Shaw, George Bernard, 599, 701, 737; Shepard, Sam, 312, 1233; Sherman, Martin, 146; Thomas, Gwyn, 760; Wertenbaker, Timberlake, 1022
- Royal Dramatic Theatre (Stockholm): Barnes, Djuna, 123; Enquist, Per Olov, 418, 969; Forssell, Lars, 1306; Gombrowicz, Witold, 541; Larsson, Stig, 1314; Strindberg, August, 226, 303, 1360
- Royale Theatre (New York), 865, 968
- The Royal Family (Ferber and Kaufman), 448
- The Royal Family (Kaufman), 757
- Royal Guests (Hernández), 608, 1156–1157
- The Royal Hunt of the Sun (Shaffer), 411
- Royal Hunt of the Sun (Shaffer), 1217
- Royal National Theatre (London): Cartwright, Jim, 134; Churchill, Caryl, 1253; Hare, David, 414; Kushner, Tony, 46, 787;

- Royal National Theatre
(continued)
Marber, Patrick, 270;
McDonagh, Martin, 882;
McGuinness, Frank, 884;
Sowerby, Githa, 1174;
Stoppard, Tom, 58, 688;
Treadwell, Sophie, 847;
Wandor, Micheline, 1440
- The Royal Pardon (Arden), 59
- Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama, 1201
- Royal Shakespeare Company,
411; Donmar Warehouse,
354; dramaturgy, 370;
Horovitz, Israel, 625; US,
353
- Royal Shakespeare Company, playwrights: Brook, Peter,
1057; Daniels, Sarah, 416;
Dickens, Charles, 1220;
Edgar, David, 414; Hall,
Peter, 411; Howard,
Bronson, 1186; Kopit,
Arthur, 776; McDonagh,
Martin, 882; McGuinness,
Frank, 884; Nelson,
Richard, 954; Page, Louise,
1027; Pinter, Harold, 623,
994; Russell, Willy, 1159;
Stoppard, Tom, 1283;
Williams, Tennessee, 213
- Royal Television Society Best
Regional Drama Award
(Great Britain), 1155
- Royal Theatre (Copenhagen):
Abell, Kjeld, 3, 50, 343;
Danish theater, 341–342;
first expressionist
performance, 342;
Heiberg, Gunnar, 601;
Ibsen, Henrik, 342, 350,
646; Kamban, Guðmundur,
653; Munk, Kaj, 343;
Nathansen, Henri, 950;
Olsen, Ernst Bruun, 343,
996; Soya, Carl Erik, 343,
1037, 1266
- royalties, playwright,
400–401
- Royalty Theatre (London),
240, 297, 1224
- Royal Welsh College of Music and Drama (Cardiff), 1155
- Roy Cohn and Jack Smith
(Vawter), 1087
- Rozenberga, Elza. See Aspaszia
- Rozenmacher, Germán, 61, 89
- Rózewicz, Tadeusz, 1157;
Card File, 1081; White
Marriage, 1081
- Rozov, Viktor, 1166
- Rubayat (Khayyam and Sarumpaet), 1190
- Rubber Ball (Chubak), 695
- Rubik's Cube (Tao), 90
- The Ruby Ring (West), 1455
- Rudali (Ganguli), 505, 673,
1157–1158
- Rudkin, David: *Afore Night
Came*, 412; The Triumph of Death, 416
- Rudnick, Paul, 511
- Rudnitsky, Konstantin, 1172
- The Ruffian on the Stair* (Orton), 1013
- rugby, 1285
- The Rugged Path* (Sherwood),
1237, 1405
- Rugyendo, Mukotani,
1158–1159
- ruhōzi, 693, 695–696
- The Ruin* (al-ʿĀnī), 698
- The Ruins* (Miyoshi), 913
- Ruíz, José Martínez. See
Azorín
- The Rule of Zamān Khān* (Āqā), 693
- The Rules of the Game*
(Pirandello), 1070
- Rum an' Coca Cola (Matura), 878
- Rummo, Paul-Eerik, 429
- The Rumor Monger's Fate*
(Sutherland), 1310
- Rumsfeld, Donald, 1300
- Rumstick Road (Gray), 550
- A Runaway Colt* (Hoyt), 635
- Runeberg, J. L., 452
- Running Up a Dress* (Home Cooking Company), 75
- Ruohonen, Laura, 454–455
- R.U.R. (Čapek), 93, 224, 315,
685, 1159
- rural and village life,
1150–1151
- rural and village life, plays and playwrights: The Eccentric Woman (Sadur),
1169; Elephant (Kopkov),
1165; Fiddler on the Roof
(Stein), 814; The Fruits of Enlightenment (Tolstoy),
1161; Grain (Kirshon),
1166; In Abraham's Bosom
(Green), 661–662;
Inheritance (Rayson), 1122;
In the Shadow of the Glen (Synge), 687; It Is Not Tall
Grass Blown by the Wind
(Hassan), 720; The Kildeer
(Reaney), 1125; The People's Worship (Ilagan), 659; Picnic
(Inge), 682; The Power of Darkness (Tolstoy), 1161;
Ringwood, Gwen Pharis,
1139–1140; Rip Van Winkle
(Boucicault), 1140–1141;
Rivera, José, 1141;
Robinson, Lennox, 1145;
Rudali (Ganguli), 1157–
1158; Ryga, George, 1175;
Sailor's Silence (Galich),
1167; Sebastian, Michael,
1149; Zorba (Stein), 813
- rural and village life, by country or region:
Australia, 1122; China,
819; Iceland, 652–653;
India, 663, 666, 669–670,
674, 676, 679; Iran, 692,
694–695, 696; Ireland,
700–701, 702, 705, 707;
Israel, 711; Japan, 796;
Latvia, 800, 801; Lithuania,
823–824; Romania, 1148;
Russia and the Soviet Union, 1161
- Rushdi, Fatimaha, 391
- Rush Hour* (Stawinski), 1173
- Rusnák, Igor, 1254
- Russell, George, 700
- Russell, Willy, 1159–1160
- Russev, Nikola, 206
- Russia and the Soviet Union,
1160–1174; 19th century drama, 241–244, 1019; 20th century drama, 995; early–
20th century drama, 332,
383, 611; agit-prop, 1022–
1023; amateur theater movement, 241; avant-
garde drama, 99–101, 611;
Blue Blouse troupes, 352;
Depression era drama,
1010; dramatic structure,
366–367; dramaturgy, 368–
369; futurism, 99; Habima
Theatre, 709; influence on Hughes, 637; literature
adapted for the stage, 841;
“living newspaper,” 352;
Maly Theater, 839, 1160,
1161; Moscow Art Theatre and Studios, 926–928;
persecution of writers, 824;
playwrights' lack of income, 242; post-revolution, 1056; post-
World War I drama, 285; prolekt, 368; revolutionary theater, 368; Russian national theater, 368,
1019–1020; satire, 281;
socialist realism, 285,
1257; symbolism, 1107;
theatricality, 1343; Yiddish
theater, 383, 614, 1507, 1508
- Russia and the Soviet Union,
plays and playwrights:
Andreev, Leonid, 45, 611;
The Bathhouse
(Mayakovsky), 125; The Bedbug (Mayakovsky), 135;
Blok, Aleksandr, 168;
Bulgakov, Mikhail, 204,
332; Chekhov, Anton, 241–
244, 246; Fiddler on the Roof
(Stein), 814; Kharms,
Daniil Ivanovich, 765–766;
The Lower Depths (Gorky),
835–836; Lunacharsky,
Anatoly Vasilyevich, 838–
839; Lyubimov, Yuri Petrovich, 840–841;
Machinal (Treadwell), 847;
Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 899–

- 900; Olesha, Yury, 285, 995; Ostrovsky, Aleksandr, 1019–1020; A Puppet Show (Blok), 1107; The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky), 1202; Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich, 1243; Slavs! Thinking About the Longstanding Problems of Virtue and Happiness (Kushner), 788; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1276–1277; Vishnevsky, Vsevolod, 1010; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513
- The Russia House* (le Carre), 1284
- Russian Anti-Booker Award, 1170
- Russian Association of Proletarian Writers (RAPP), 1165
- The Russian National Postal Service* (Bogayev), 1169
- The Russian People* (Odets), 988
- The Russian People* (Simonov), 1166
- The Russian Question* (Simonov), 1166
- Russian Revolution of 1917, 431, 432, 1277
- Rustaveli Theater (Georgia), 1343
- Rustic Chivalry (Verga), 1420
- Rusty Bugles (Locke), 72
- Rutherford (Hoar), 962
- Rutherford and Son (Sowerby), 405, 1174–1175
- Rwanda (Groupov), 144
- Ryan's Daughter (Bolt), 175
- Rychetski, Tomás, 317
- Ryga, George, 1175–1176; The Ecstasy of Rita Joe, 217, 220
- Ryshkov, Viktor, 1163
- Ryskind, Morrie, 756, 812, 1402; Of Thee I Sing, 1085
- Ryum, Ulla, 344
- Ryzheil, Pyotr, 1166
- Saalbach, Astrid, 344, 1177
- Sabina (Montano), 1052
- The Sabine Woman* (Moody), 551, 922
- Sabuncu, Başar: Goodwill, 1386
- Sackler, Harry, 1507
- Sackler, Howard, 1408
- The Sacrament* (Claus), 269
- Sacred and Obscene* (Chalbaud), 1419
- Sacred Blood* (Gippius), 1163
- The Sacred Flame* (Maugham), 406
- Sacred Waters* (Grace-Smith), 548
- sacrifice, 1426
- The Sacrifice* (Dilmen), 1386
- Sacrifice* (Lu), 1496
- The Sacrifice of Kreli* (Dike), 347, 1264
- Sadangi, Ichikawa, II, 1324
- Sad Loves* (Giacosa), 529, 714
- Sadness (Yang), 80
- sadomasochism, 1274
- The Sad Tale of a Woman, the Story of Chink Okichi* (Yamamoto), 1499
- Sadur, Nina, 1168
- Sā'edi, Gholam Hosein, 695, 696
- Saeki Ryūkō, 48, 99
- Sáenz, Guido, 294
- Safar—The Journey (Alam), 1029
- Safe (Johnson), 739
- Safe Sex* (Fierstein), 451
- The Saga of the Folkungs* (Strindberg), 362, 1296
- Saga of West Hens* (Marchessault), 869, 1177–1178
- sagas, as dramatic source, 647, 652
- Sag Harbor (Herne), 610
- Sagina Mahato (Sircar), 1248
- Sahara (Lawson), 805
- Sahitya Akademi Award, 328
- Said, Yunus: The Thing, 1028
- Saigō and Ōkuba (Yamamoto), 1499
- The Sailing City* (Willems), 1470
- The Sailors of Cattaro* (Wolf), 1083, 1486
- Sailor's Silence* (Galich), 1167
- A Sailor's Song* (Shanley), 1219
- sainete*, 1178–1179; Benavente, Jacinto, 1269; bufo theater, 204; Discépolo, Armando, 351, 562; Dragún, Osvaldo, 358; Halac, Ricardo, 576
- sainete griollo*, 88
- Saint Frances of Hollywood* (Clark), 268, 1179
- Saint Joan* (Shaw), 405, 1128, 1179–1180, 1223, 1226
- Saint Joan of the Stockyards* (Brecht), 193, 519
- Saint Mark's Gospel* (McCowen), 1130
- The Saint of the Isidra* (Arniches), 1269
- Saint-Pol-Roux: Characters of the Individual*, 919; Epilogue of the Human Seasons, 919
- Saints & Apostles (Storey), 1286
- Saints and Sinners (Jones), 742, 1129
- Saint's Day* (Whiting), 408, 1460
- Saint-Simon, Henri de, 107
- St. Clements Theatre (New York), 40, 863, 1215
- St. Denis, Michael, 107
- St. James Theatre (London), 573, 793, 900, 1064, 1266
- St. John's Night (Ibsen), 646
- St. John's Night Play* (Oehlenschläger), 646
- St. Mark's Playhouse (New York), 105–106, 165, 989
- St. Mark's Poetry Project (New York), 1026
- St. Martin's Theater, 836
- The St. Nicholas Hotel*, Wm. Donnelly, Prop. (Reaney), 1125
- St. Nicholas Theater Company, 862
- St. Patrick's Dramatic Society (Pakistan), 1028
- St. Vladimir Square (Razumovskaya), 1169
- Saisio, Pirkko, 454
- Saitō Ren, 48
- Saja, Kazys, 824
- Sakamoto Ryōma (Mayama), 881
- Sakate Yōji, 1180–1181
- Sakazaki, Lord of Dewa (Yamamoto), 1499
- Sakelarios, Alekos, 556
- The Sakhalin Wife* (Gremina), 1170
- Sakharam Binder (Tendulkar), 1181, 1333
- Sakonnet Point (Gray and LaCompte), 550
- Sakyi, Kobina, 23
- Salacrou, Armand, 479, 734, 1181–1182, 1308
- Salad of the Bad Café* (Makishi), 1273
- Salamanca Theatre (Australia), 73
- Salesman in Beijing (Miller), 907
- Salieri, Antonio, 1217
- Salim, Francois Abu, 1033
- Salle Fred-Berry (Montreal), 819
- Salleh, Awang Had, 861
- Salle Pierre-Mercure, Centre Pierre-Péladeau (Montreal), 291
- Sallinger (Koltès), 774
- Sallinger, J. D., 774
- Salmakar, T. K., 671
- Salo, Arvo, 454
- Salom, Jaime, 1270
- Saloma (Krléža), 781
- Salomé (Vidal), 1419
- Salomé (Wilde), 107, 271, 703, 1173, 1467
- salon culture, 777
- Salonika (Page), 1027
- The Saloon (James), 725
- Salt (Murray), 73
- Salten, Felix, 82
- Šaltenis, Saulius, 824
- Saltwater (McPherson), 886
- Salt-Water Moon (French), 490
- Saltykov-Shchedrin, Mikhail, 1160, 1202; The Golovlyovs, 928
- Saluri, Rein, 429
- Salutin, Rick, 219; Les Canadiens, 218
- Salvage* (Stoppard), 1284
- Salvation (Lékai), 93

- Salvation Nell (Sheldon), 1182–1183, 1230, 1398
- Salve Regina (Bowman), 961
- Salvini, Guido, 1364
- Salvini, Tommaso, 713–714
- Salynsky, Afanasy, 1168
- Salzburg Festival (Austria), 153, 580, 618, 1127
- Salzmann, Siegmund. See Salten, Felix
- Samad Goes to War (Sayyād), 696
- Sammy and Rosie Get Laid (Kureishi), 786
- Sampek Engtay (Riantiarno), 679, 1136
- Samritechak (Shapiro), 212
- Samuel, Fiona, 962
- Samuel Beckett Theater (New York), 989
- Samurai (Loher), 830
- Sánchez, Florencio, 61, 88, 1183–1184
- Sanchez, Luis Rafael: The Passion According to Antigona Pérez, 1106
- Sanchez, Sonia, 106
- Sánchez de Fuentes y Peláez, Eugenio: Cousin Basilio, 1106
- Sanchez-Scott, Milcha, 468
- Sanchis Sinisterra, José, 1184
- Sancta Susanna (Stramm), 108
- Sanctification (Hasfari), 96
- The Sanctuary Lamp (Murphy), 942
- Sand (Cruz), 308
- Sand (Goldflam), 317
- Sand, George, 1150
- The Sandbox (Albee), 31
- The Sandbox (Andersson), 1313
- San Diego Repertory Theatre, 1415, 1454
- Sandinista! (Milner), 909
- sandiwara plays, 861
- Sand Mountain (Linney), 822
- The Sand of Youth, How Quickly (Shimizu), 1238
- Sándor, Malena, 1184–1185
- The Sand Station (Ōta), 1444
- Sanetomo Sets Sail (Yamazaki), 1500
- San Francisco Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle Award, 1264
- San Francisco Mime Troupe: agit-prop, 27, 87, 106; commedia dell'arte, 1410; documentary drama, 353; epic theater, 424; guerilla theater, 568; happenings, 584–585; political drama, 1086; Valdez, Luis, 1415
- sangeetnatak, 666
- Sangeet Natak Akademi Award (India), 754, 1349
- Sanka (Loher), 830
- Sankai Juku (troupe, Japan), 99
- şannū, Ya'qub, 692, 698
- Sanskrit drama, 664–671, 1035
- Sans Souci theatre (Kolkata), 668
- Santa Claus (cummings), 311
- Santa Cruz (Frisch), 492
- Santaliz, Pedro, 1107
- Santana, Rodolfo, 1419
- Santeiro, Luis, 311
- Sanu, Yaqub, 391
- Sanua, James, see Şannū, Ya'qub
- The Sanza Players, 1206
- Sap (Thomas), 1351
- Sappho (Kawakami), 758
- Sappho and Phaon (MacKaye), 848
- Sapporo (Streeruwitz), 1289
- Saraband (Bergman), 149
- Sarachaga, Ignacio, 204
- Sarafina (Ngema), 964
- Sarafina 2 (Ngema), 965
- Sarah (Murrell), 943
- Sarah and Son (Akins), 30
- Sarajevo, Tales from a City (Stefanovski), 845, 1278
- Saratoga (Howard), 630, 1185–1186
- Saratoga International Theatre Institute. See SITI Company
- Sarcey, Francisque, 359
- Sarcy, Françoise, 573
- Sardanapalus (Byron), 370
- "Sardoodledum," 1203, 1224
- Sardou, Victorien, 377, 437, 955, 1020, 1186–1187, 1224, 1517; La Tosca, 473, 890; A Scrap of Paper, 366, 1203
- Sarfina (Ngema), 1264
- Sargeson, Frank, 961
- Sarita (Fornes), 468
- Sarkadi, Imre, 640
- Sarment, Jean, 479
- the Sarnia Idea, 1428
- Saroyan, William, 1187–1188, 1404; My Heart's in the Highlands, 565, 943–944, 1359; The Time of Your Life, 1358
- Sarraute, Nathalie, 483, 1188; It Is There, 484; Just for Nothing, 484; Silence, 484
- sarsuwela, 1052
- Sartre, Jean-Paul, 1188–1190; The Condemned of Altona, 283–284; Death Without Burial, 481; Dirty Hands, 481; The Flies, 459, 481, 1056, 1369; No Exit, 283, 481, 510, 972, 1056; Who Shall Die?, 481; absurdism, 5, 1408; antitheater, 483; Camus, Albert, 215, 482; Dagerman, Stig, 322; existentialism, 481; Genet, Jean, 513, 858; Nietzsche, Friedrich, 967; Salacrou, Armand, 1181; Sastre, Alfonso, 1191; Serbian drama, 1210
- Sarumpaet, Ratna, 680, 1190–1191
- Sastre, Alfonso, 1093, 1191–1192, 1270
- Sasunov, Nikolai, 1173
- Satan. See the Devil
- Satan in Scottish drama, 1200
- Sater (Netherlands), 957
- Satinský, Július, 1254
- The Satin Slipper (Claudel), 269, 477, 1192–1193
- Satire (Lindsey), 1201
- satire, plays and playwrights: Absolute Prohibition (Karvaš), 4; Aksyonov, Vasily, 1167; Arms and the Man (Shaw), 64; Art (Reza), 66; Bahr, Hermann, 82; The Baltimore Waltz (Vogel), 119; Barrie, J. M., 123; The Bedbug (Mayakovsky), 135; Before the New Bureau Director Came (He), 136; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; Bohemian Lights (Valle-Inclán), 174; Boothe, Clare, 177; Brieux, Eugène, 200; Bulgakov, Mikhail, 205; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; Frou-Frou (Halévy and Meilhac), 474; Ibsen, Henrik, 648, 649; The Inspector General (Gogol), 1160; Kamban, Guðmundur, 653; Kopkov, Aleksandr, 1165; Kraus, Karl, 780; Lao She, 798; Levin, Chanoch, 710; Lord, Robert, 834; Mitchell, Langdon, 960; The National Monument (Hedberg), 1312; Nowra, Louis, 979; Of Thee I Sing (Kaufman), 812; Papa (Akins), 29; Pearly Zinaida (Roshchin), 1168; Platonov, Andrei, 1165; Respected Citizen (Zoshchenko), 1165; Romeril, John, 1151; Sherwood, Robert, 1402; Strike Up the Band (Kaufman), 812; The Terrible Trial (Shkvarkin), 1166; The Treasure (Pinski), 1508; Trofimov, Aleksandr, 1161; Usigli, Rodolfo, 1414; Valdez, Luis, 1415; Valle-Inclán, Ramón María del, 1416; Xiong Foxi, 1497
- satire, by country or region: Australia, 72, 76; Bulgaria, 206; Iceland, 654; Iran, 695, 696; Israel, 711; New Zealand, 961; Nigeria, 24; Zambian drama, 21
- Satire Theater (Moscow), 1303

- "satisfactory" drama, 631
 Satoh Makoto, 48, 99, 727,
 1193–1194, 1329
 Satoshi, Miyagi, 723
 A Saturday Evening
 (Blaumanis), 801
 Saturday Night at the Palace
 (Slabolepszy), 1264
 Saturday's Evensong (Rovinski),
 294
 Saturday Sunday and Monday
 (De Filippo), 339
 Saul, Oscar: The Revolt of the Beavers, 1084
 Saura, Antonio: Antonieta,
 896
 The Savage Comedies (Valle-Inclán), 1270
 Savage in Limbo (Shanley),
 1219
 Savage/Love (Chaikin and Shepard), 1233
 The Savages in Puente San Gil
 (Recuerda), 1270
 Savannah Bay (Duras), 379,
 486
 Saved (Bond), 175, 412, 428,
 1194
 Saverio the Cruel (Arlt), 62, 88
 Savery, Finn, 996
 Savonarola (Copeau), 288
 Savoy Operas, 531
 Savoy Theatre (London), 370,
 400, 402, 743, 1236
 Savran, David, 115
 Sawada Shōjirō, 880
 Sawdust (Skukálek), 1254
 Saw Pha and Saw May (Saya Hau Thaw), 208
 Sayın, Hidayet: *A Woman
 Called Rosy*, 1386
 Sayaate, a Duel (Kawakami), 758
 Saya Hau Thaw, 208
 Saya Yaw, 208
 Sayers, Dorothy L., 1130
 Sayler, Oliver, 1406
 Sayonara (Osborn), 1015
 Sayyād, Perviz, 696
 The "S" Bend (Oshodi), 1017
 The Scab (Müller and Müller),
 524, 937
 Scandinavia, 120, 162, 1124.
 See also individual countries
 Scandinavian Experimental
 Theater, 911
 A Scar (Karvaš), 754
 The Scarecrow (MacKaye), 848
 Scarlet Letter (Parks), 1037
 Scarpetta, Eduardo, 718
 Scattering Flowers, 889
 Scavenger's Dream (Monkey's Wedding), 102
 Scavone, Antonio, 719
 Scenes from Munich, Drawn from Life (Wedekind), 1450
 Scenes from a Marriage
 (Bergman), 149
 Scenes from an American Life
 (Gurney), 572, 1409
 Scenes from an Execution
 (Barker), 122
 Scenes from a Separation (Bovell and Rayson), 76
 Scenes from the Heroic Life of the Middle Classes (Sternheim),
 517, 1279, 1394
 Scenitorium, 849
 scenography: Abell, Kjeld, 3;
 Hume gallery exhibition,
 1915, 1001; Ibsen, Henrik,
 650; Jones, Robert
 Edmond, 1002–1004; Laos,
 798; Mielziner, Jo, 1003;
 Rivera, Diego, 981
 A Scent of Amber (Romero),
 1271
 Schacter, Steven, 862
 Schaeffer, Louis, 1084
 Schafer, R. Murray, 423
 Schall und Rauch cabaret,
 1127
 Schaubühne (Berlin), 369,
 774, 1049, 1142–1143
 Schauspielhaus (Düsseldorf),
 690
 Schauspielhaus (Hamburg),
 153
 Schauspielhaus (Zurich), 520,
 1317
 Schechner, Richard, 106, 585,
 686, 990, 1043, 1090, 1412,
 1413; Commune, 423;
 Dionysus, 423
 Schéhadé, Georges, 484;
 Evening of the Proverbs, 484;
 nouveau théâtre, 483
 Schenkar, Joan, 510
 Schildt, Runar, 453
 Schiller, Friedrich (von), 367,
 441, 617, 700, 991, 1098;
 Mary Stuart, 714; William
 Tell, 1315
 Schiller Theater (Berlin), 31,
 524, 1517
 Schimmel, H. J., 955
 Schinderhannes (Zuckmayer),
 1518
 Schism (Albee), 31
 Schlaf, Johannes, 517, 592
 Schlager (Johst), 520, 740
 Schmidhuber de la Mora,
 Guillermo, 1194–1195
 Schmidt, Harvey, 990
 Schneemann, Carolee, 584,
 1411
 Schneider, Anne Kaufman,
 744
 Schneider, Hansjörg, 1317
 Schnetz, Diemut, 1298
 Schnitzler, Arthur, 1195–
 1199; Anatol, 41; Liebeleil,
 815–816; Reigen, 1126;
 Austrian drama, 82, 83,
 517; Chicago Little Theater,
 1001; comedy, 281; Hare's adaptation, 586; modernist drama, 618; off-Broadway theater, 989; Sherman's adaptation, 1235
 scholar-critics, 361
 Scholar from Ba Mountain
 (Wei), 1451
 Schön, Elizabeth, 1419
 Schönherr, Karl, 82
 School (Robertson), 401, 1143
 School for the Blind
 (Natyamanwantar), 668
 The School for Wives (Gide), 530
 The Schoolmistress (Pinero),
 402, 857, 1064
 School of Drama, University of Calicut (Kerala), 674, 676
 School of Dramatic Arts
 (Iran), 695
 The School of Masters
 (Vetemaa), 429
 School of Theatre (University of Houston), 33
 school plays, 652
 Schopenhauer, Arthur, 1055–
 1056, 1225, 1293, 1318,
 1319
 Schrank, Joseph: Pins and Needles, 1084
 Schreber's Nervous Illness
 (Churchill), 263
 Schreyvogel, Joseph, 367
 Schroeder, Patricia, 446
 Schulman, Sarah, 511
 Schulner, David, 837
 Schumann, Peter, 27, 106,
 423, 696, 1085, 1411; A Man
 Says Goodbye to His Mother, 1086
 Schwajda, György, 641
 Schwartz, Jerome Lawrence.
 See Lawrence, Jerome
 Schwartz, Maurice, 1508
 Schwarzkogler, Rudolf, 584
 Schwitters, Kurt, 108, 319
 Schwyzerdüütsch language,
 1315, 1318. See also German language drama
 Sicilian Limes (Pirandello),
 717 science and science fiction:
 Back to Methuselah (Shaw),
 1227; Bulgakov, Mikhail,
 205; Čapek, Karel, 93; Dr.
 Rung (Sigurjonsson),
 1244; Japanese drama,
 728; The Life of Galileo
 (Brecht), 816–817; Zola,
 Émile, 1517
 Scientific Americans (Mighton),
 901, 1199
 Scirocco (Coward), 406
 The Scissors (Loher), 830
 Scissors (Wandor), 1440
 The Scorched-Wood People
 (Wiebe), 1463
 Score (Clarke), 1250
 The Scorned Lover's Revenge:
 Gallant Puppet Play After a Story by Cardinal Bandello
 (Toller), 1362

- The Scorpion of Numancia (Pallotini), 188
- SCOT. See Suzuki Company of Toga
- Scot-Free: New Scottish Plays (Cameron), 1201
- Scotland, 1199–1202; Bridie, James, 199; Glover, Sue, 176; history plays, 538–539; Lochhead, Liz, 829; McGrath, John, 247; Reformation, 1199–1200, 1202; 7:84, 247, 1213; Suspect Culture, 1308–1309; Wildcat Stage Productions, 1464–1465
- Scott, Helen Hope Montgomery, 1050
- Scott, Norelle, 964
- Scott, Robert, 1510
- Scott, Walter, 1200
- Scottish Arts Council (SAC), 1464–1465
- Scottish Community Drama Association, 1201
- Scottish language, 1200–1201
- Scottish National Players, 1201
- Scottish Repertory Theatre (Glasgow), 404, 1201
- Scott of the Antarctic (Brenton), 197
- Scottsboro, Limited (Hughes), 637
- The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky), 1202
- A Scrap of Paper (Sardou), 366, 1186, 1203
- Scratch (Herzberg), 957
- Scratch (MacLeish), 850
- Screams (Antonio Ettedgui), 1419
- Screenplay (Örkény), 1011
- The Screens (Genet), 484, 514, 1203–1204
- Screen Writers' Guild, 805
- The Screwball (Fo), 461
- Scribe, Eugène: comédie-vaudeville, 473; Dumas fils, 376–377; Ibsen, Henrik, 647; James, Henry, 573; Netherlandish drama, 955; Sardou, Victorien, 437, 1020, 1203; Shaw, George Bernard, 1224; zarzuela, 1514
- Scullion, Andrienne, 176
- Scum: Death, Destruction and Dirty Washing (Bond and Luckham), 919
- The Sea (Símonarson), 655
- seafaring, 832
- The Sea God's Villa (Kyōka), 723
- The Seagull (Chekhov), 1204–1205; apocalypse, 54; director's role, 350; dramatic structure, 242, 243–244; Efros, Anatolii, 1173; influence on Brecht, 1355; masterpiece, 721; stage props, 1276; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1162, 1277; Stoppard's adaptation, 1284; subtext, 1301; symbolism, 926; tragedy, 1371; Uncle Vanya compared, 1392; Williamss' adaptation, 1477
- Seagull Eaters (Løveid), 834, 977, 1205
- The Seal Wife (Glover), 538
- séances, 1504
- Search: Hamlet (Ong), 1006
- The Searching Wind (Hellman), 606
- Sears, Djanet, 218, 1206; The Adventures of a Black Girl in Search of God, 12
- Sears, Samuel P., 1237
- Seasaw (Foon), 463
- Seascape (Albee), 32
- Seaside Summer (Xuan), 1423
- The Season at Sarsaparilla (White), 73
- A Season in the Congo (Césaire), 236, 1206–1207
- Sea Town (Ginzburg), 533
- Seats (Chang), 258
- Seattle Repertory Theatre, 602, 1336
- Sebastian, Michael, 1149
- Sebastian, Saint, 1302
- Seboni, Michael, 21
- A Secluded Corner (Hirschbein), 615
- The Second Army Commander (Selvinsky), 1165
- Secondary Education (Diosdado), 348
- Second Experimental Theatre Festival (Shanghai), 237
- The Second Life of the Tatenberg Camp (Gatti), 486
- The Second Man (Behrman), 138
- Second Moscow Art Theatre, 927
- The Second Mrs. Tanqueray (Pinero), 366, 400, 403, 900, 935, 1000, 1064, 1102, 1207–1208, 1224
- Second Studio, 927
- Second Youth (Nevezhin), 1161
- The Secret Affairs of Mildred Wild (Zindel), 1516
- The Secretaries (Five Lesbian Brothers), 457
- The Secret Fall of Constance Wilde (Kilroy), 766
- The Secret Friendship of Juana and Dorothy (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- The Secret Garden (MacLeod), 850
- The Secret Garden (Norman), 974
- The Secret History of Marx (Sha), 1230
- The Secret Lives of Dentists (Lucas and Smiley), 837
- Secret Love for the Peach Blossom Spring (Lai), 796
- The Secret of Heaven (Lagerkvist), 794
- The Secret of Skiz (Zapolska), 1513
- The Secret of the Guild (Strindberg), 1295
- Secret Rapture (Hare), 414
- secrets, 856–857
- Secrets (Renée), 964
- Secret Service (Gillette), 366, 532, 598, 891, 1208, 1208, 1397
- Secrets of Women (Bergman), 149
- Secrets: Three Short Plays for Two Women (Renée), 1132
- The Secret Struggle of Maria da Encarnação (Guarnieri), 568
- secular vs. religious, 709, 711–712
- The Seducer Kolobashkin (Radzinsky), 1167
- The Seduction (Kornfeld), 777
- The Seed (Guarnieri), 568
- Seed (Kisakürek), 1386
- The Seed Is Like the Pod (Valdelomar), 294
- segregation. See race and race relations
- Seibidan, 1241
- Seibikan, 1241
- Seikō, Itō, 722
- Seinenden (Youth Group), 614
- Sekhabi, Aubrey, 102
- Selenic, Slobodan, 1210
- Self-Accusation (Handke), 580
- self-deception, 1122
- self-discovery, 792, 814–815, 1112
- Self-Sacrificer (Mofid), 696
- The Selicke Family (Holz and Schalf), 517
- Selincourt, Dorothy Daphne de, 908
- Sellas, Peter, 251
- Selling Hitler (Bennett), 415
- Selvinsky, Ilya, 1165
- Selwyn, Don, 963
- Semar Fights Back (Riantiaro), 679
- Semenovsky, Valery, 1172
- Semi-Monde (Coward), 300
- Semmelweis (Bjørneboe), 162
- Sémola Teatre (Spain), 232
- Senda Koreya, 98, 1208–1209
- Sender, Ramón J., 1339
- Şendil, Sadık: Hürmüz with Seven Husbands, 1387
- Senghor, Leopold, 1058
- senior citizens, 1177, 1313
- Senker, Boris, 304
- Señora Carrar's Rifles (Brecht), 193, 520

- The Sensation of a Beard (Dragunskaya), 1170
- A Sensitive Man (Arlt), 62
- sentimentality, 472, 1187
- A Sentimental Journey (To), 1359
- A Separate Peace (Stoppard), 1282
- Separate Tables (Rattigan), 408, 1120
- September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, 791, 1193
- September Nights (Kohout), 316
- Serapion Brothers, 100, 1165
- Serbia, 1092, 1209–1211
- The Serebriisky Family (Rozov), 1167
- Serenade (Claus), 269
- Serenading Louie (Wilson), 1482
- serial dramas, 77
- Serious Money (Churchill), 265, 446
- Serjeant Musgrave's Dance (Arden), 59, 409, 1212
- Serkele (Ettinger), 1506
- Serling, Rod, 1407
- Serp, 454
- The Serpent (Open Theater), 106
- Serpent Players (South Africa), 1252
- Serpent's Mate (Peimer), 102
- Serrano, José, 39, 1514
- Serreau, Jean-Marie, 65, 236
- Serumaga, Robert Ballamino, 19, 1212–1213
- The Servant (Pinter), 1068
- Servant-Master-Lover (Lawson), 804
- A Servant of Two Masters, 1343
- set design. See also entries at stage. avant-garde drama, 105–106; Bel Geddes, Normal, 334; “box set,” 230; Cabaret Voltaire, 319; Čapek, Josef, 224; The Circle (Maugham), 266; Duras, Margurite, 376; Herrmann, Karl-Ernst, 153; Hume gallery exhibition, 1915, 1002; India, 667; Jones, Robert Edmond, 284, 742, 1002–1004; Laos, 798; Munch, Edvard, 1127; Murayama Tomoyoshi, 940–941; realism, 239, 322, 350, 1124; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1172–1173; stage direction, 1275–1276
- Set My People Free (Heyward), 612
- Settimelli, Emilio, 108
- Setting the Table (Renée), 1132
- Settlement Theater (Buenos Aires), 61
- Seuphor, Michael, 142
- Sevastikoglou, Giorgos, 556
- The 7 Stages of Grieving (Mailman), 79
- Seven Against Thebes (Arrufat), 310
- The Seven Ages of Man (Wilder), 1470
- The Seven Deadly Sins (Brecht), 1372
- The Seven Deadly Sins (Wilder), 1470
- The Seven Descents of Myrtle (Williams), 1476
- Seven Different Plays (Wellman), 1454
- Seven Doors (Strauss), 1288
- 7:84 Theatre Company, 247, 883, 1201, 1213, 1464
- Seven Guitars (Wilson), 1479, 1480
- Seven Keys to Baldpate (Cohan), 1213–1214
- Seven Meditations on Political Sado-Masochism (Living Theatre), 1086
- Seven Stages Theatre (Atlanta), 1502
- Seven Steps Around the Fire (Dattani), 328
- The Seven Streams of the River Ota (Lepage), 221, 1214–1215
- 1776 (Stone), 814
- 1789 (Théâtre du Soleil), 913
- 17th century drama, 1514
- The Seventh Day of Creation (Kambanellis), 750
- The Seventh Seal (Bergman), 149
- The Seventh Sick Ward (Japan), 752
- Seven Variations on Stonehenge (Noda), 970
- Sever Lears (Barker), 122
- sewamono. See domestic drama
- Sewell, Stephen, 73, 1215
- The Sewing Factory the “Sun” (Laxness), 654
- Sex (West), 1455
- Sex and Death to the Age 14 (Gray), 550
- Sex and Longing (Durang), 378
- The Sex Fiend (Sinclair and Mulheron), 962
- sexism. See feminism and feminist themes
- Sex? Thanks, Don't Mind If I Do! (Rame and Fo), 1118
- sexual assault. See also incest. Barnes, Djuna, 122; Dentro (Streeruwitz), 1289; Funnyhouse of a Negro (Kennedy), 761; The Knack (Jellicoe), 771; Murderer, Hope of Women (Kokoschka), 773; Remember (Kemp), 761; Sharma, Tripurari, 1221; A Streetcar Named Desire (Williams), 1290
- sexual identity: Gemini (Innaurato), 683
- sexuality in drama. See also entries at gay and lesbian drama; eroticism; HIV/AIDS. Australia, 75–76; female, 385; homoeroticism, 191, 920; prostitution, 385; Russian mores, 1356; Venezuela, 1419
- sexuality in drama, plays and playwrights: Artsybashev, Mikhail, 1162; At “The Eternal Tap” (Nastasijević), 1210; The Burning Bush (Kokoschka), 773; Cartwright, Jim, 228–229; Churchill, Caryl, 265–266; Claus, Hugo, 269; Closer (Marber), 270; The Cockroach Opera (Riantiarno), 274–275; Copi, 289; Coward, Noël, 598; Dryland, Gordon, 962; Dymov, Osip, 1162; Fraser, Brad, 1395; Hassan Agha's Wife (Simović), 1211; Hello, Again (LaChiusa), 815; Howe, Tina, 633; Hughes, Holly, 636; I Love You Baby Blue (Theatre Passe Muraille), 660; Inge, William, 682; Jake's Women (Simon), 1246; Jelinek, Elfriede, 730; The Knack (Jellicoe), 771; Kroetz, Franz Xaver, 782; Lenormand, Henri-René, 808–809; Linney, Romulus, 822; Molnár, Ferenc, 639; O'Casey, Sean, 985; Oleanna (Mamet), 994; Rain from Heaven (Behrman), 1114–1115; Rame, Franca, 1118; Ravenhill, Mark, 1121; Reigen (Schnitzler), 1126; Rivera, José, 1141; Royal Guests (Hernández), 1156; Sakharam Binder (Tendulkar), 1181; Schneemann, Carolee, 1411; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1196; The Second Mrs. Tanqueray (Pinero), 1207; Shawn, Wallace, 1229; Shipenko, Aleksei, 1168; Spring Awakening (Wedekind), 1274; Summer and Smoke (Williams), 1304; Tanya-Tanya (Mukhina), 1170; Vogel, Paula, 1428; Wasserstein, Wendy, 602, 1393; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513
- Sexual Offenses Act (1966), 410, 413

- Sexual Perversity in Chicago (Mamet), 862–863, 1215–1216
 sexual politics, 771 sexual stereotypes, 919–920
 Seyfulina, Lyudmila, 1164
 Seymour, Alan: The One Day of the Year, 73
 Sgript Cymru (Wales), 389
 The Shabby Prize (Quintero), 309
 Shacham, Nathan, 95, 710
 Shad, Saman: Lingering Voices, 1029
 Shades of Babel (Stefanovski), 845
 A Shadow (Bergman), 148
 The Shadow (Shvarts), 281, 1166, 1243
 The Shadow of a Doubt (Wilder), 1469
 The Shadow of a Gunman (O'Casey), 702, 982–983, 985, 1216–1217
 The Shadow of Mart (Dagerman), 321
 The Shadow of the Father (Martínez Seirra), 872 shadow plays, 1030
 shadow puppetry. See puppet plays
 The Shadows (Dranas), 1386
 Shadows (Saltykov-Shchedrin), 1160
 Shadows of the Evening (Coward), 1259
 Shadows of the Night—A Gentle Ghost Story (Watanabe), 1444
 Shadowy Waters (Yeats), 916
 Shaffer, Peter, 1105, 1217;
Equus, 411, 424; Five Finger Exercise, 411; The Royal Hunt of the Sun, 411; Shrivings, 416; Yonadab, 416
 Shaga (Duras), 379
 Shah, Imran: Bunch of Lies, 1029
 Shahrazad (Al-Hakim), 391
 Shah Theatre Academy (Durban), 1264
 Shairp, Mordaunt, 510
 Shakara: The Dance Hall Queen (Onwueme), 24, 1008
 Shakdao (Thailand), 104
 Shakespeare in the Park Festival (New York), 789
 Shakes (Sears), 1206
 Shakespeare, William. See also individual Shakespeare plays; Royal Shakespeare Company. African (colonial) productions, 17; After Shakespeare (Césaire), 236; Asian influence, 1335; Barker, Howard, 122; British acting deputs, 404; censorship, 1260; confusion with, 419; Ekster, Aleksandra, 1173; Experimental Shakespeare: King Lear (Meng), 91; Ibsen compared, 1098; Indian adaptations, 664–665, 1329; influence on Japanese drama, 422; Italian performances, 714, 718, 719; Juliet and Her Romeo (Klimenko), 1171; Kraus, Karl, 780; kyōgen theater, 970; language, 1078; Les Shakespeares, 913; Malaysian drama, 862; Pakistani translations, 1028; Prefaces to Shakespeare (Granville-Barker), 548; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard), 1152; Senda Koreya, 1209; Shakespeare's Cousin (Sorescu), 1260; Shakes Versus Shaw (Shaw), 1227; Singapore productions, 1248; Soviet productions, 1171–1173; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1277; Streeruwitz, Marlene, 1289; Tabori, George, 1323; translations, 1383; Tsubouchi Shōyō, 1383; West Side Story (Laurents), 814
 Shakespeare in Love (Norman and Stoppard), 1284
 Shakespeare Memorial Theatre (England), 402, 411
 Shakespeare's Cousin (Sorescu), 1260
 Shakespeare Sister (Théâtre de l'Aquarium), 919
 Shakes Versus Shaw (Shaw), 1227
 Shakuntala (Kirkoskar), 666
 Shakuntala Recognized (Kalidasa), 664
 Shalhat, Antwan, 97
 Shame (Wijaya), 679
 Shameless (Augier), 473
 Shamir, Moshe, 95, 710
 Shamlet (Lee), 808
 Shange, Ntozake, 164, 446, 1037, 1087, 1218, 1410; The Love Space Demands, 417
 Shangguan Wan'er (Zheng), 1515
 Shanghai Drama Academy, 839, 1229, 1497
 Shanghai Film Studio, 1460
 Shanghai Kunqu Opera Troupe, 570, 1441
 Shanghai New China Drama Troupe, 258
 Shanghai People's Art Theatre, 1229
 Shanghai Yue Opera House, 1250
 Shangri-La (Lawrence and Lee), 804
 Shanhai Jingju Company, 222
 Shanhai Yueju Company, 372
 Shanley, John Patrick, 959, 1218–1219, 1412; Doubt, 356
 The Shape of a Girl (MacLeod), 850
 The Shape of Metal (Kilroy), 766
 The Shape of Things (LaBute), 791, 1219–1220
 Shapiro, Sophiline Cheam, 212
 The Shardam Circus (Dharmas), 765
 The Share Club (Hall), 578
 Shared Anxiety (Walker), 1438
 Shared Experience Theatre (England), 1220
 Sharif, Bina: Afghan Woman, 14, 1029; Democracy in Islam, 14
 Sharma, Haresh, 104, 1247, 1248
 Sharma, Tripurari, 673, 676, 1220–1221
 Sharmistha (Dutta), 668
 Sharon's Grave (Keane), 708
 Sharp, William, 1200
 Shatabdi, 673, 1248
 Shatrov, Mikhail, 1168
 The Shaughraun (Boucicault), 181
 Shauqi, Ahmed, 698
 Shaw, George Bernard, plays. See also subsequent entries.
Arms and the Man, 64, 403, 1457; Back to Methuselah, 112, 362, 1056, 1109; The Devil's Disciple, 403; The Doctor's Dilemma, 405; Fanny's First Play, 548; Heartbreak House, 599, 860; John Bull's Other Island, 363, 405, 699, 701–702, 737, 982; Major Barbara, 363, 405, 859–860, 916; Man and Superman, 363, 364, 405, 863–864, 916, 1056; Mrs. Warren's Profession, 403, 405, 935–936, 1102; My Fair Lady, 1110; Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant, 271; Pygmalion, 405, 1109; Saint Joan, 405, 1179–1180; Widowers' Houses, 1102; You Never Can Tell, 403
 Shaw, George Bernard, 1222–1228; censored, 271, 634; comedy, 280; critic, 359, 366; critical reception, 599; Delaney, Shelagh, 340; dialogue, 364, 600; drama of discussion, 634; dramatic cycle, 362; dramatic structure, 366, 600, 613; emergence as playwright, 405; emotional

- effect, 1055; Howells, William Dean, 634; Ibsen, Henrik, 359, 360; James, Henry, 726; in London, 699; Malvern Festival, 370; naturalism, 377; Obratzsova, Anna, 1172; O'Casey, Sean, 982, 983, 1244; off-Broadway, 990; problem play, 634; religious theater, 1127–1129; Sardou, Victorien, 1203; stage direction, 1275; subtext, 1301; Usigli, Rodolfo, 292; Wilde, Oscar, 661
- Shaw, George Bernard, influence: by Nietzsche, 967; on Chinese drama, 252; on Husain, Shaharom, 642; on Kanin, Garson, 751; on Mihiz, 1211; on O'Neill, 1000; on Sears, 12
- Shaw, Irwin, 564
- Shaw, Peggy, 446, 511, 871, 1273
- Shaw Festival, Ontario, 324
- Shawn, Wallace, 1228–1229, 1412
- Sha Yexin, 90, 1229–1230; If I Were for Real, 1096; If I Were Real, 255; Mayor Chen Yi, 255
- Shchepkin, Mikhail, 1257
- She and Satan* (Sándor), 1185
- Shearer, Jill, 78
- She Confused Sleeping and Dying* (Willems), 1471
- The Sheep Well* (de Vega), 369
- Sheila (Sowerby), 1265
- Sheinin, Lev, 1166
- Sheldon, Charles M., 1128
- Sheldon, Edward, 285, 634, 1230–1231, 1398; The Boss, 178; Salvation Nell, 1182–1183
- Shelley (Jellicoe), 731
- Shelley, Percy Bysshe, 1224, 1227; The Cenci, 935
- Shenandoah (Howard), 631, 891, 892, 1231, 1397
- Shen-Arts Playwright Retreat (Virginia), 237
- Sheng, Bright, 1006
- Shen Naixi. See Xia Yan
- Shen Ximeng, 1007
- She of the Electrolux* (Hardy), 78
- Shepard, Sam, 1231–1234; Buried Child, 207, 312; Chicago, 990; Curse of the Starving Class, 312; Fool For Love, 312, 462–463; Nightwalk, 1336, 1409; True West, 312, 1379; absurdism, 6; avant-garde, 1411; dramatic structure, 367; epic theater, 1454; jazz influence, 729; naturalism, 219; off- and off-off Broadway, 990, 1411; O'Neill, Eugene, 1005; Owens, Rochelle, 1026; philosophy, 1058; regional theater, 1411; Signature Theatre, 1412
- Shepherd, Catherine, 72
- Shepherd of Death: Drama in Four Acts* (Hernández), 1340
- Shepp, Archie, 164, 729
- Sheppey (Maugham), 879, 1234
- Sheridan, Philip, 1231
- Sheridan, Richard Brinsley, 668, 699
- Sherlock Holmes, 1358
- Sherlock Holmes* (Gillette), 532, 891
- Sherman, Jason, 1234–1235; The League of Nathans, 806; Reading Hebron, 806, 1123–1124
- Sherman, Martin, 219, 1235–1236; Bent, 146, 510
- Sherriff, Robert Cedric, 1236–1237; Journey's End, 743–744
- Sherwood, Robert E., 632, 1085, 1137, 1230, 1237–1238, 1401–1402; Abe Lincoln in Illinois, 2, 944; Idiot's Delight, 657; The Idiot's Delight, 1048; The Petrified Forest, 1048; The Rugged Path, 1405
- She Talks to Beethoven* (Kennedy), 763
- Shetland Saga* (Glover), 538
- Shevelove, Burt, 814
- The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet* (Shaw), 1223
- The She-Wolf* (Verga), 714, 1420
- Sheykevitch, Nokhem-Meyer “Shomer,” 1507
- Shiauliai Dramatic Theater Festival (Lithuania), 824
- The Shifting Heart* (Beynon), 73
- Shigeyama Sennojō, 970
- Shiksa Goddess (Wasserstein), 1442
- Shimada (Shearer), 78
- Shimamura Hōgetsu, 1239
- Shimizu Kunio, 1238
- shingeki*, 1238–1240; Abe Kōbō, 2; Akimoto Matsuyo, 29; Ariyoshi Sawako, 63; avant-garde drama, 98–99; emergence, 726; Kara Jūrō, 752; Katō Michio, 755, 756; Kawatake Mokuami, 758; Kinoshita Junji, 767; Kubo Sakae, 783, 796; Kubota Mantarō, 784; Literary Theatre (Japan), 784; playwrights breaking from, 1020; Satoh Makoto, 1193; Senda Koreya, 1208, 1209; Suzuki Senzaburō, 1310; Tanaka Chikao, 1328; Tsubouchi Shōyō, 1382; Yamamoto Yūzō, 1499; Yamazaki Masakazu, 1499
- Shinja the Great* (Kyōka), 723
- shin kabuki*, 1240–1241; Claudel, Paul, 269; emergence, 726; Hōjō Hideji, 620–621; Hirata Oriza, 614; Kawatake Mokuami, 758; kyōgen theater, 970; Mayama Seika, 880–881; Okamoto Kidō, 992–993; Osanai Kaoru, 1014; Suzuki Senzaburō, 1310; Takarazuka Revue Company, 1324; Tsubouchi Shōyō, 1382
- Shinkikugeki (Japan), 727
- shinkokugeki*, 620–621, 880, 1310
- shinpa*, 1014, 1241–1242; in China, 252; emergence, 726; Hōjō Hideji, 620–621; Kawakami Otojirō, 723, 757; Kawatake Mokuami, 758; Kubota Mantarō, 784; Suzuki Senzaburō, 1310; Yamamoto Yūzō, 1499
- SHINPA theater, 784
- Shinpa Triangular League*, 1499
- Shin Thu Dain* (Po Sein), 208
- Shintokumaru: Poison Boy* (Terayama and Kishida), 769
- Shinto shrines, 752
- The Ship* (D'Annunzio), 326
- Shipenko, Aleksei, 1168, 1169
- The Ship Goes Down* (Einarsson), 653
- Ship of Fools* (Bovell), 76
- The Ship of the Righteous* (Evreinov), 431
- Shipwreck* (Stoppard), 1284
- Shirai, Tetsuzō: Parisette, 1324
- Shiraishi Kayoko, 49
- shiranami mono*. See bandit plays (shiranami mono)
- Shiranui (Ishimure), 970
- Shiraz Festival, 423
- Shirley Valentine (Russell), 1160
- The Shirt* (Olmo), 1270
- Shitz (Levin), 95
- The Shivaree* (Reaney and Beckwith), 1126
- Shizuka (Mori), 925
- Shizuoka Performing Arts Center (Japan), 1311
- Shklovsky, Viktor, 466–467
- Shkvarkin, Vasily, 1166
- Shmendrik, The Two Kuni-Lemls (Goldfaden), 1506
- shock theater, 71, 102, 953, 974
- Shock Troupe (New York), 27

- The Shoe (Solórzano), 1258
 The Shoemaker (Witkiewicz), 55, 1485
 The Shoemaker's Wonderful Wife (García Lorca), 507
 The Shoes of the Fisherman (Patrick), 1039 shōgekijō (Japan), 684, 752, 992, 1020, 1180. See also little theater movement shōgekō (Japan), 1193
 Shoot (Burden), 585
 Shooting Rats (Turrini), 1388
 Shop (Leivick), 1508
 The Shop of the Lin Family (Mao), 1496
 Shopping and Fucking (Ravenhill), 417, 1121
 Shopping and Fucking (Ravenhill), 1170
 Shor, Anshl, 1507
 Shor, Moyshe, 1507
 Shore Acres (Herne), 610, 1242–1243, 1398
 A Short History of Night (Mighton), 901 short plays: agit-prop, 27; Australia, 76; Bulgaria, 206; género chico, 895, 1269; Hungary, 92–93; Iceland, 654; kabuki theater, 440; sainete griollo, 88; Spain, 1514 short plays, plays and playwrights: At the Hawk's Well (Yeats), 70; Balance of Payments (Lord), 834; The Bald Soprano (Ionesco), 117; Beckett, Samuel, 133; Before the New Bureau Director Came (He), 136; Bhagat, Datta, 158; Brecht, Bertolt, 191; Brenton, Howard, 197; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; The Burial Mound (Ibsen), 646–647; Coram Populo! (Strindberg), 53; Decision; Tragedy in fifty-eight Acts, of Which the First fifty-seven Have Been Cut (Marinetti), 717; Deirdre (Russell), 700; Five Farces for Amateurs (Lunacharsky), 838; Furth, George, 814; Johnson, Georgia Douglas, 739; Johst, Hanns, 740; Lady Gregory (Russell), 700; Lagerkvist, Pär, 794; Li Jianwu, 818–819; Live Spelled Backwards (Lawrence), 804; Miller, Arthur, 1423; Night Mother (Norman), 967; Nottage, Lynn, 978; Nowra, Louis, 979; Petrushevskaya, Lyudmila, 1168; Provincial Anecdotes (Vampilov), 1167; Rattigan, Terence, 1120; Riders to the Sea (Synge), 1138–1139; Slavkin, Viktor, 1168; S.S. Glencairn (O'Neill), 832; Still Stands the House (Ringwood), 1140; Valdez, Luis, 1415; Verga, Giovanni, 1421; Vogel, Paula, 1428; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430; Wasserstein, Wendy, 1393; Where Dead Dogs Are Thrown (Serumaga), 20; Williams, Tennessee, 55; Xu Fen, 1497; The Zoo Story (Albee), 1517–1518
 The Short Tree (Foon), 463
 The Shot (Bezmyensky), 1164
 Shotgun Wedding (Musaphia), 962
 Shotlander, Sandra, 75
 A Shout Caught in the Air (Guarnieri), 568
 Shout of Lares (Torrens), 1106
 Showaby Up (Mircevskaya), 845
 Show Boat (Hammerstein and Kern), 812
 The Showcase (Paz), 310
 Showdown at Crawford Gulch (San Francisco Mime Troupe), 1088
 The Show Isn't Over Until . . . (Hangula), 22
 The Show-Off (Kelly), 760, 1401
 The Showoffs (Rovner), 62
 Shpazhinsky, Ippolit, 1161, 1163
 A Shred of Evidence (Sherriff), 1236
 Shrewish Zarife (Taner), 1387
 Shrivings (Shaffer), 416
 The Shrunk Head of Pancho Villa (Valdez), 1415
 Shtein, Aleksandr, 1166
 Shteyman, Beynush, 1508
 Shubert brothers, 1396–1399
 Shubert Theatre (New York), 1050, 1187
 Shuffle Along (Sissle and Blake), 637
 Shuffle Along (Sissle and Blake), 729
 Shūji, Terayama, 1361
 Shulamis (Halkin and Goldfaden), 929
 Shuriken (O'Sullivan), 962
 Shu Sheyu. See Lao She
 Shvarts, Yevgeny Lvovich, 1166, 1174, 1243; The Dragon, 281; The Shadow, 281
 Shylock (Kawakami), 758
 Shyre, Paul, 984
 The Siamese Twins (Gambaro), 89
 The Siamese Twins (Piñera), 1063
 Siberia (Brecht), 543
 Siberia (Gordin), 1507
 Siberian exile, 426
 The Siblings (Branner), 186
 Sichuan Opera, 1497
 Sichuan Provincial Drama School, 1496
 Sicilian Dialect Theater (Italy), 715
 The Sick Room (Sewell), 1215
 The Sick Tree (Rojas), 294
 Sidja, 680
 Siegfried (Giraudoux), 534
 Siener in die Suburbs (Plessis), 1264
 Sierens, Arne, 144
 Si Fan (Meng), 827
 Sifton, Claire and Paul, 564
 Sigarev, Vasily, 1169, 1170
 Sigmund Freud in Search of Chinese Matter and Mind (Yung), 1510
 Signature (Henley), 608
 Signature Theatre (New York): Albee, Edward, 33, 1412; Blessing, Lee, 167, 1412; Foote, Horton, 464, 1412; Fornes, Maria Irene, 469, 1412; Guare, John, 1412; Kennedy, Adrienne, 1412; Linney, Romulus, 822; Miller, Arthur, 1412; Shepard, Sam, 1232, 1412; Vogel, Paula, 1412; Wilson, Lanford, 1412; Wilson, Robert, 1482
 The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window (Hansberry), 584
 Sigrid, Jean, 143
 Sigurðardóttir, Þórunn, 655
 Sigurd Slembe (Bjørnson), 163, 975
 Sigurðsson, Birgir, 655
 Sigurjónsson, Hávar, 655
 Sigurjónsson, Johann, 653–654, 1243–1244
 Sikalo (Kente), 1264
 Sikelianos, Aggelos, 556
 Sik Sik, the Magician (De Filippo), 338
 Silbert, Roxana, 427
 The Silence (Sarraute), 484, 1188
 Silence of the Lambs (Tally), 1327
 Silence! The Court is in Session (Tendulkar), 1333
 Silentium Film of Milan, 1097
 Silent Voices (Koltès), 774
 Silkeborg (Abell), 3
 Silk Stockings (Burrows), 813
 Silly Jacob (Rittner), 1080
 Silver, Nicky, 511
 Silvera, John: Liberty Deferred, 1086
 Silver Age, 1163
 The Silver Age (Roshchin), 1168
 The Silver Box (Galsworthy), 406
 Silver Box (Galsworthy), 504
 The Silver Cord (Howard), 632

- The Silver King (Jones), 402, 742
- Silver Lake (Kaiser and Weill), 748
- Silver Linings (Tally), 1327
- The Silver Pearl (Halac), 576
- The Silver River (Hwang), 1006
- The Silver Tassie (O'Casey), 702, 982–995, 1244–1245, 1504
- The Silver Veil (Aspazjia), 800
- The Silvery Mood (Laxness), 654
- Simamura Hōgetsu, 726
- Simard, Andre, 1245–1246
- Sima Ziangru (Guo), 570
- Simeon Stylites (Sarkadi), 640
- Simon, Barney, 15, 101, 1264
- Simon, John, 1196, 1198
- Simon, Neil, 578, 1039, 1246–1247, 1411; Barefoot in the Park, 987, 1408; Come Blow Your Horn, 281, 987, 1408; The Odd Couple, 359, 987, 1408; Oscar and Felix, 987
- Simon, Paul, 1437
- Símonarson, Ólafur Haukur, 655
- Simón Escalona, José, 1419
- Simonov, Konstantin, 1166
- Simons, Leo, 955
- Simons-Mees, Josine, 955
- Simonson, Lee, 1341
- The Simoom (Lenormand), 808
- Simov, Viktor, 1172
- Simović, Ljubomir, 1211
- A Simple Girl (Shkvarkin), 1166
- Simple Speaks His Mind (Hughes), 249
- The Simpleton (Kokovkin), 1169
- Simply Heaven (Hughes), 637
- Simpson, N. F., 370; A Resounding Tinkle, 438
- Sims, George Robert, 402, 890, 892
- Simultaneously (Grishkovets), 1170
- Sin (Tajovský), 1254
- Šinasi, İbrahim: The Poet's Marriage, 1385
- Sinbad the Sailor (MacKaye), 848
- Sinclair, Stephen, 962
- Singapore, 1247–1248; avant-garde drama, 104–105; Chinese language drama (huawen xiju), 259; interculturalism, 1006; Kon, Stella, 775; Kuo Pao Kun, 785; Leow Puay Tin, 809; Ong Keng Sen, 212, 1006
- Singapore Performing Arts School, 785
- Singapore Repertory Theatre (Singapore), 1247
- Singapore Writers' Lab, 1248
- Singer, Milton, 1043
- The Singing Lesson (Karinthy), 92
- The Single Man (Halac), 576
- A Single Man (Isherwood), 708
- Single People (Altenberg), 82
- Single Room for a Lonely Man (Palencia), 1419
- Sinise, Gary, 1380
- Sink the Pink (Alrawi), 1029
- The Sin of Women (D'Erzell), 345
- Sino-Japanese War, 1496
- sintesi, 108
- Sinuhe the Aegyptian (Waltari), 454
- Sion, Georges, 143
- A Sip of Water (Gajvi), 674
- Sir Bengt's Wife (Strindberg), 1295
- Sircar, Badal, 673, 1248–1249; Ebong Indrajit, 387
- Sircar, Sudhindra. See Sircar, Badal
- The Siren Who Carried the Sea (Mondragón Aguirre), 918
- Siripo (José de Lavardén), 61
- Sissie's Scrapbook (Kramer), 778
- Sissle, Noble, 637, 729
- Sisterly Feelings (Ayckbourn), 110
- Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All to You (Durang), 378
- Sisters (Lill), 820
- Sisters (Peretz), 1507
- Sisters (Sewell), 1215
- Sisters in Law (Tremblay), 34, 220, 221, 628, 868, 1249, 1376
- The Sisters Rosensweig (Wasserstein), 1442
- The Sisters Who Keep Doves (Iwamatsu), 722
- Sister Tian and Zhuang Zi (Xu), 256, 1497
- Sister Xianglin (Lu and Nan), 1249–1250
- Sita Chooses a Husband (Bhave), 664–665
- Sithebe, Zondwa, 23
- SITI Company, 173, 1250–1251
- Situationalist movement, 239, 584
- Situation Group (Japan), 752
- Situation Normal (Miller), 904
- Situation Theatre (Japan), 48, 99, 752, 1180
- Sitwell, Edith, 729
- Sive (Keane), 707–708
- Six Characters in Search of an Author (Pirandello), 107, 281, 304, 418, 717, 718, 1070, 1251–1252, 1364
- Six Degrees of Separation (Guare), 281, 567
- Six O'clock! Six O'clock! (Piper), 1080
- The Sixth Commandment (Buchanan), 1200
- 60s Generation, 89, 771
- Six Viewpoints method, 173
- Siyasanga Cape Town Theatre Company, 347
- Size (Manaka), 1265
- Sizwe Bansi Is Dead (Fugard), 497, 1252, 1263
- Skandalon (Kalisky), 749
- Skeleton (Haarhoff), 22
- Škéma, Antanas, 824
- Skin (Foon), 463
- Skin (Kane), 751
- Skin Deep (Castro), 231
- The Skin Game (Galsworthy), 30, 406
- Skinner, Richard Dana, 553
- The Skinny Guy and the Fat Guy (Pínero), 309
- The Skin of Our Teeth (Wilder), 1252–1253, 1406, 1407, 1469
- Skintight (Henderson), 962
- Skin Trilogy (Maniam), 862
- Sklar, George, 1403; Peace on Earth, 1083; Stevedore, 1083
- Skourtis, Giorgos, 556
- Škrabe, Nino, 304
- Skram, Amalie, 976
- The Skriker (Churchill), 265, 416, 1253–1254
- Skugga-Sveinn (Jochumsson), 652, 654
- Skukálek, Rudolf, 1254
- The Skull (Hikmet), 1386
- A Skull in Connemara (McDonagh), 706, 882
- The Skylight (Buero Vallejo), 1270
- Skylight (Hare), 414
- Skyloft Players (Chicago), 637
- Skyscraper (Stone), 814
- Sky Stage, 1325
- Slabolepszy, Paul, 1264
- The Slackers (Turrini), 1389
- Slade, Bernard, 218
- Sladek, or The Black Army (Horváth), 84
- Slag (Hare), 586
- Slant 6 (Wellman), 1454
- Slapovsky, Aleksei, 1170
- The Slattern (Maillet), 859
- The Slaughter (Müller), 55, 937–938
- The Slaughterhouse (Mrožek), 934
- Slaughterhouse Play (Yankowitz), 1501
- The Slaughter of St. Teresa's Day (Kenna), 73
- The Slave (Baraka), 121
- Slave Hunting (Abe), 2
- slavery, 28, 661–662, 947, 1106, 1398. See also race and race relations
- The Slaves (Abdallah), 1
- Slaves (Theatre Guild), 1341
- Slave Ship (Baraka), 164, 729
- Slavkin, Viktor, 1168

- Slavs! Thinking About the Longstanding Problems of Virtue and Happiness (Kushner), 788
- The Slaying of Keechaka (Khadiklar), 667
- Sledgehammer Theatre (San Diego), 1501, 1502
- Sleep (Gelber), 512
- Sleep-Awakening (Rama V), 1117
- Sleep Deprivation Chamber (Kennedy and Kennedy), 763
- The Sleepers in the Cave (Al-Hakim), 391
- Sleeping Around (Ravenhill), 1121
- The Sleeping Car (Howells), 634
- The Sleeping Cat (Mafune), 855
- Sleeping Gulliver (Rovinski), 294
- A Sleep of Prisoners (Fry), 408, 495, 1130
- The Sleep of Reason (Buero Vallejo), 1270
- Sleep Reversal (Shigeyama), 970
- Sleepwalker (Gao), 506
- Sleep with Me (Kureishi), 786
- A Slight Ache (Pinter), 1067
- The Slingshot (Kolyada), 1169
- Sloane Square (Streeruwitz), 1289
- Sloboda, Rudolf, 1254
- Slobodzianek, Tadeusz: Comrade Christ, 1082; Czar Nicholas, 1082; Dream of a Bedbug, 1082; Prophet Ilya, 1082
- The Slough (Wilson), 983
- Slovakia, 4, 754–755, 1254–1255
- Slovak National Theatre, 4
- Slovo, Gillian, 566
- Slovović, Ján, 1254
- Slow Motion Movie (Teirlinck), 142
- The Sluggard (Raudsepp), 428
- Slumberland Shadows (Hayes), 597
- Sly (Chubak), 695
- Smack (Parker), 962
- Smack Family Robinson (Bean), 126
- Small, Adam, 1264
- Small Aim (Thijs), 957
- Small Craft Warnings (Williams), 1476
- A Small Family Business (Ayckbourn), 110
- Small Lives/Big Dreams (Bogart and SITT), 1250
- The Small Poppies (Holman), 73
- small theater. See little theater movement
- Small Tragedy (Lucas), 837
- Small War on Murray Hill (Sherwood), 1237
- Small Well Alley (Li), 255
- Small Well Lane (Li), 820
- The Small Woman (Kotlyova), 1162
- Smell the Wind (Jack), 330
- Smelyansky, Anatoly, 1172
- Smile, You Are a Palestinian, 1035
- A Smile in the Middle of Summer (Popescu), 1091
- The Smile of the World (Kanin), 751
- Smit, Bartho, 1264
- Smith (Maugham), 879
- Smith, Anna Deavere, 1087, 1255–1256, 1413; Twilight: Los Angeles, 353
- Smith, Art: Dimitroff, 1083
- Smith, Jack, 1087, 1411
- Smith, Maggie, 1326
- Smith, Michael, 1232
- Smith, Michel, 1409
- Smith, William, 892
- Smith, Zadie: White Teeth, 417
- Smoček, Ladislav, 316, 317
- The Smoke Tree (Berman), 150
- The Smoking Car (Howells), 634
- The Smoking Fish (Chalbaud), 1419
- Smuul, Juhan, 429
- S/N—(Furuhashi), 498–499
- S.N.A.G. (Learner), 78
- Šnajder, Slobodan, 304
- Snake (Munro), 940
- The Sniper (O'Neill), 1001
- The Snob (Sternheim), 1279, 1394
- Šnjore, Egils, 802
- Snow (Mafune), 855
- Snow (Przybyszewska), 1079
- The Snowball War (Olsson), 453
- Snowbirds (Kemal), 1386
- The Snow-Covered Mountains (Priede), 801
- Snowdrifts (VHV), 1254
- The Snowflake and the Eyeball (Jepsen), 733
- Snow in August (Gao), 506
- Snow in December (Piemme), 144
- Snufkin's Letter (Kökami), 772
- Soaking the Heat (Kureishi), 786
- Soap Bubbles (Piñera), 1063
- Soap Opera (Spiró), 1273
- Sobeide's Wedding (Hofmannsthal), 618
- Sobol, Yehoshua, 96, 710, 711
- Social Climbers (Hall), 578
- social commentary: The Admirable Crichton (Barrie), 11; Albertine in Five Times (Tremblay), 34; The Atami Murder Case (Tsuka), 69; Awake and Sing! (Odets), 109; Bagnold, Enid, 113; A Bankruptcy (Björnson), 120; Benavente, Jacinto, 145; The Bird Lovers (Bjørneboe), 160; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; The Boss (Sheldon), 178; Brieux, Eugène, 200; Brooks, Daniel, 202; Buero Vallejo, Antonio, 203; Butterfly Kiss (Nagy), 209; Dumas fils, 659–660; Granville-Barker, Harley, 1432; Jacob, Malou, 725; James, Henry, 726; Jones, Henry Arthur, 741; Li Jianwu, 818–819; Loyalties (Galsworthy), 836; The Measures Taken (Brecht), 886–887; The Mother (Brecht), 930–931; Nadeem, Shahid, 947; Noda Hideki, 971; Noer, Arifin C., 971; Reigen (Schnitzler), 1126; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1146; The Scoundrel (Ostrovsky), 1202; Society (Robertson), 1143; Summerfolk (Gorky), 1305; They Don't Wear Black Tie (Guarnieri), 1344; The Turnabout of Ferdyš Pištora (Langer), 797; Wilde, Oscar, 699–700; Wolff, Egon, 1487–1488; Xenopoulos, Grigorios, 1495; Yankowitz, Susan, 1501; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513
- The Social Director (Rozov), 1166
- social drama: Depression era, 1403; England, 403–405; Greece, 555–556; India, 668–671; Indonesia, 680; Italy, 714–715; Latvia, 801; Maori people, 963; melodrama, 892–893
- social gospel, 1127–1128
- Social Gospel movement, 42
- social injustice, 725, 1305, 1344, 1501
- socialism: Kara Jürö, 752; Kushner, Tony, 786, 788; Müller, Heiner, 936–938; Senda Koreya, 1208, 1209; Shaw, George Bernard, 701, 1223, 1224
- socialist realism, 1256–1257; agit-prop, 27; Arbuzov, Aleksei Nikolayevich, 57; avant-garde, 109; Brecht, Bertolt, 194, 523; China, 90, 827; communism, 1256; Croatia, 304; Gorky, Maksim, 544–546; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 593; Japan, 98–99, 727; Kubo Sakae, 784, 796; Latvia, 801; Liang Bingkun, 810; Lithuania, 824; Mayakovsky, Vladimir, 100; Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 899; Olesha, Yury, 285;

- Poland, 1081; Romania, 1150; Soviet Union, 1165, 1168, 1173, 1257; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1277; United States, 1083; Vietnam, 1423; Weiss, Peter, 1452; Witkiewicz, Stanislaw Ignacy, 1485; Yugoslavia, 1256
- social melodrama, 892, 1161, 1436
- social realism: Denmark, 343; England, 414; France, 377; Halac, Ricardo, 576; Ibsen, Henrik, 377; India, 668; Lyubimov, Yuri Petrovich, 841; Poland, 1080; Shaw, George Bernard, 377; Sheldon, Edward, 1398; Tynan, Kenneth, 360; Venezuela, 1418
- Society (Robertson), 401, 1143
- Society for the Study of Poetic Language (Soviet Union), 466
- Society of 22nd December, 647
- Society of Dramatic Authors, 306
- Society of Shanghai Dramatists, 1495
- Society of West End Theatres Award, 489, 1159, 1160
- Söderberg, Hjalmar, 1312
- So Does the Nightingale (Delaney), 340
- Sodome et Gomorrhe (Giraudoux), 534
- Soeharto, President, 1299
- Sofola, Zulu, 24
- Softboiled Egg (Kraus), 317
- Softcops (Churchill), 264
- Soho Poly studio (London), 786
- Soho Rep (New York), 732
- Soirée (Lasica and Satinsky), 1254
- Sojourn (Páskándi), 640, 1038
- Solano, Bernardo, 468
- Soldier Dreams (MacIvor), 847
- Soldiering On, Muriel. See Talking Heads (Bennett)
- Soldier Jokinen's Wedding Permission (Meri), 454
- The Soldier Postman and Rachel (Sierens and Platel), 144
- Soldiers (Hochhuth), 521, 617
- Soldiers Heart (French), 490
- Soldiers in Ingolstadt (Fleißer), 458, 519, 959
- Soldiers of Augustus (Páskándi), 1038
- Soldier Soldier (Arden), 59
- The Solemn Communion (Arrabal), 66
- Solid (Lawford and Pell), 79
- Solidarity movement (Poland), 1082, 1283
- soliloquy, 707. See also monologue
- A Solitary Thing (Sherman), 1235
- Solo (Sobol), 711
- A Solo for Striking Clock (Zahradník), 1254
- Sologub, Fyodor, 99, 1164, 1174; The Theatre of One Will, 919
- Solomon, Dumitru, 1150
- So Long at the Fair (Wilson), 1481
- solo performance, 218, 636, 990, 1087
- Solórzano, Carlos, 1257–1258; The Hands of God, 581
- Solov'ev, Vladimir, 1173–1174
- Solov'yova, Inna, 1172
- Sol Prize (Californai), 924
- Solstice Day (Schönherr), 82
- Soltanpur, Sa'id, 696
- Solzhenitsyn, Aleksandr, 1169
- Some Americans Abroad (Nelson), 954
- Some Came Running (Patrick), 1039
- Someday (Chlumberg), 259
- Someday (Taylor), 1331
- Some Explicit Polaroids (Ravenhill), 1121
- Some Kind of Love Story (Miller), 906
- Some of My People (Goldfaden), 540
- Someone at the Door (Pálsson), 655
- Someone in the House (Kaufman), 756
- Someone Is Going to Come (Fosse), 470
- Someone Who'll Watch Over Me (McGuinness), 884
- Something Cloudy, Something Clear (Williams), 1473, 1477
- Something Far Above (Makino), 860
- Something More Than Two Dreams (Cañas), 293
- Something Unspoken (Williams), 1302
- Somewhere in the Darkness (Kelly), 79
- Somigliana, Carlos, 89
- Sommo, Judah ben: An Eloquent Marriage Farce, 1109
- Somov and the Others (Gorky), 545
- The Son (Hasenclever), 108, 432, 518, 589, 1258–1259
- The Son (Osanai), 1014
- Sonata (Elkunchwar), 396
- The Sonata (Tardieu), 1330
- Sønderby, Knud, 343
- Sondheim, Stephen, 814–815, 837; Assassins, 354; Company, 354; Merrily We Roll Along, 354
- A Song at Twilight (Coward), 297, 1259–1260
- song drama, 1347
- Song for a Sanctuary (Ahrnad), 1028
- Song from a Forgotten City (Thomas), 1350
- Song of a Goat (Clark-Bekederemo), 24
- Song of a Maiden (Sofola), 24
- Song of Destiny (Blok), 1277
- Song of Fate (Blok), 169, 1174
- The Song of Mylai (Jakobsson), 655
- The Song of Oblivion (Serrano), 1514
- Song of Righteousness (Ma), 256
- The Song of Righteousness (Wu), 1492
- Song of Songs (Bible), 1319
- Song of the Cock (Kawadwa), 19
- The Song of the Fiery Furnace (Zuckmayer), 1519
- Song of the Flame (Hammerstein and Harbach), 812
- Song of the Lusitanian Bogey (Weiss), 1453
- Song of the Pharaohs (Abdallah), 1
- Song of the Seals (Hewett), 610
- Songs to Uncle Scrim (Thompson), 1353
- The Son of Don Juan (Echegaray), 388, 1269
- Son of Helios (Unt), 429
- The Son of Punchinello (De Filippo), 339
- Son of the Stars (Goldfaden), 540
- The Sons Die Before the Fathers (Brasch), 186
- Sons of Cain (Williamson), 1478
- Sons of the Morning (Duncan), 77
- The Son's Return (Weng), 257
- Sontag, Susan, 467
- Sony Award, 126
- The Soongs: By Dreams Betrayed (Chan), 238
- Soon the Time Will Come (Knutzon), 344, 772, 1260
- The Šopaliivić Traveling Company (Simović), 1211
- Sopanam (India), 675, 676, 1035, 1346
- Sophia (Buchanan), 1200
- Sophiatown (Junction Avenue), 102
- Sophiatown, South Africa, 1262
- Sophie, My Love (Szakonyi), 640
- Sophocles, 1369
- Sorbul, Mihail, 1149

- The Sorcerer (Solórzano), 1258
 The Sorceress (Goldfaden), 540, 928, 1506, 1507
 Sorescu, Marin, 1011, 1150, 1260–1261; Jonah, 741
 Sorge, Reinhard Johannes, 108, 432, 956, 1261–1262; The Beggar, 518
 Soria, Ezequiel, 61
 Sorokin, Vladimir, 1170
 Sorrow, Sorrow, Fear, the Noose and the Pit (Steigerwald), 317, 1278
 The Sorrows of Frederick (Linney), 822
 The Sorrows of Job (Levin), 96
 Sorrows of the Youth (Xiong), 1496
 Sorry (Galin), 1169
 Sory Lambre (Zaourou), 24
 So Shall It Be (Simonov), 1166
 Sotelo, Joaquín Calvo, 1270
 The Soufflé (Romashov), 1164
 A Soul in Transit (Topol), 1367
 The Soul of a Jew (Sobol), 96, 711
 Soulpepper Theatre, 202
 Soumagne, Henri, 142
 The Sound from an Old Pond (Tian), 1357
 The Sound of Music (Lindsay and Crouse), 821
 The Sound of the Ocean (Liu), 828
 The Sound of Your Steps (Sigrid), 143
 Soupault, Philippe, 108
 South Africa, 20, 101–102, 346–347, 1262–1265, 1508
 South Asian theater. See individual countries
 Southathamma, Ouane, 798
 South China Fortnightly (Tian), 1459
 South China Society, 1459
 Southeast Asia. See individual countries
 Southern Africa. See individual countries
 Southern African drama, 20–22
 South Pacific (Heyward), 612
 South Pacific (Rodgers and Hammerstein), 813
 Sovanna Phum troupe (Cambodia), 212
 Soviet Union. See Russia and the Soviet Union
 Sovremennik studio, 928
 Sowande, Bode, 24
 Sowden, Lewis, 1263
 Sowerby, Githa, 1265–1266; Rutherford and Son, 405, 1174–1175
 Soweto Flowers Will Grow (Phiri), 21
 So What's New? (Fatima), 347
 Soya, Carl Erik, 1266–1267; The Parasites, 342, 1036
 Soyfer, Jura, 85
 Soyinka, Wole, 1267–1269; Death and the King's Horseman, 1058; The Road, 417; interculturalism, 686; Kureishi, Hanif, 786; Lacan's psychoanalysis, 1105; Little Carib Theatre Workshop, 1436; Nigerian drama, 16, 23, 24, 1018
 Space Theatre (Capetown), 347, 1264
 Spain, 1269–1271. See also subsequent entries. 20th century drama, 348, 1092; avant-garde drama, 507–508; Catalan Experimental Theater, 232; dadism, 319; Depression era drama, 629; dramaturgy, 369; female dramatists, 348, 349; lyric theater, 1513–1514; post-Franco drama, 1040; sainete, 1178; Teatro de Arte, 873; Unión General de Trabajadores (UGT), 1339
 Spain, playwrights: Álvarez Quintero, Joaquín and Serafín, 39; Arrabal, Fernando, 65; Benavente, Jacinto, 145; Buero Vallejo, Antonio, 203; Echegaray, José, 388; García Lorca, Federico, 629; Raznovich, Diana, 1122–1123; Resino, Carmen, 1132–1133; Sanchis Sinisterra, José, 1184; Sastre, Alfonso, 1191–1192
 Spanish-American War: Piano (Smith), 1256
 Spanish Civil War: agit-prop, 27; Álvarez Quintero, Joaquín and Serafín, 39; Behrman, S. N., 139; Benavente, Jacinto, 145; Brecht, Bertolt, 193; Buero Vallejo, Antonio, 203; Western Europe avant-garde, 109; years after, 1269–1270; years before, 1270–1271; zarzuela, 1514
 The Spanish Prisoner (Mamet), 863
 Spanish Women Playwrights' Guild, 1132
 Spared (Horovitz), 625
 Spartacus (Sircar), 1248
 Spartacus (Upts), 801
 Spartan (Mamet), 863
 The Speakers (Joint Stock), 740
 Speaking Well of the Dead (Horovitz), 625
 Spears, Steve J., 75
 The Special Hospital (Naghiu), 947
 Speckled Rooster (Rifat), 1386 spectacle, 103, 135, 971. See also melodrama Spectacle Theatre (Wales), 389
 Spectatorium, 849
 The Speed of Darkness (Tesich), 1337
 Speed-the-Plow (Mamet), 862, 863
 Speranza, 1466, 1468
 Sperr, Martin, 458, 522, 1431
 Spewack, Bella: Boy Meets Girl, 182
 Spewack, Sam, 1271–1272; Boy Meets Girl, 182
 Sphinx and Strawman: A Curiosity (Kokoschka), 108, 773
 Sphinx Theatre, 417
 Spicer, Edward, 686
 Spiderwebs (Pavlovsky), 62
 Spiderwoman, 1273
 Spiderwoman Theater, 445
 Spiegeltheater, 957
 Spink, Ian, 265
 Spinning Tales (Eftimiu), 1149 spirit plays, 70. See also nô theater
 The Spirits (Hernández), 608
 Spiró, György, 1272–1273; Chickenhead, 641
 Spitteler, Carl, 1316
 Spitting Chips (Murray), 73
 Splendid's (Genet), 514
 The Splendid Voyage of Emily Carr (Marchessault), 869
 Splendor (Crothers), 306
 Splendor in the Grass (Inge), 682
 The Splinter in the Heart (Knutzon), 771
 Split Britches (Margolin et al.), 871
 Split Britches (Shaw and Weaver), 1273
 Split Britches Theater Company, 445, 636, 870, 948, 1273 spoken drama, 506–507, 1117, 1459
 Spoken Opera (Audibert), 71 spoken poetry, 484
 Spoleto Festival, 1006
 Spolin, Viola, 239, 729
 Spookhouse (Fierstein), 451
 Spooks (Brenton), 197
 The Sport of My Mad Mother (Jellicoe), 409, 731
 sports, 730, 800, 1421
 Spots on the Sun (Lahola), 1254
 Spot that Cleans (Echegaray), 388
 Spreading Out (Hall), 578
 Spreading the News (Gregory), 559, 1274
 Sprechstück (language play), 991
 Spreguelburd, Rafael, 62
 Sprinchorn, Evert, 911
 Spring Awakening (Wedekind), 432, 805, 1274–1275, 1371, 1449–1450

- A Spring Morning's Dream (D'Annunzio), 325
 Spring of '71 (Adamov), 10
 Spring Review (Shkvarkin), 1166
 Spring's Awakening (Wedekind), 517
 Springs Eternal (Glaspell), 536
 Spring Storm (Williams), 1472
 Spring Thunder (Stehlik), 316
 Springtime Production (Hong Kong), 1359
 Spring Willow Society, 1024
 Sprinkle, Annie, 1043
 Spunk (Wolfe), 1487
 Spinner, Suzanne, 75
 The Spurt of Blood (Artaud), 54, 108
 Squads Toward Death (Sastre), 1191
 The Square (Duras), 379
 The Squaring of the Circle (Katayev), 1164
 Squaring the Circle (Stoppard), 1283
 Squarzina, Luigi, 718
 Squash (Caballero), 1271
 Squatter (Hoar), 962
 Squatter Sovereignty (Harrigan), 1398
 The Squire (Pinero), 1063
 Šrámek, Dráňa, 315
 Srbljanović, Biljana, 1211
 Srijan (Jodhpur), 674
 Sri Lanka, 998
 Sriwana (Singapore), 1247
 Sruoga, Balys, 824
 S.S. Glencairn (O'Neill), 50, 832, 1001
 Staatsaktionnen, 1109
 The Stab (Müller), 1256
 The Stabbed Senta (Miyoshi), 913
 Stable Theatre (Durban), 1264
 Städtische Bühne (Oberhausen), 755
 Stafford-Clark, Max, 264–265, 740 stagecraft: avant-garde drama, 105–106; Beckett, Samuel, 133; Belasco, David, 139, 1398; Bernhard, Thomas, 153; Bogart, Anne, 173; A Dream Play (Strindberg), 372–373; Jones, Robert Edmond, 742; MacKaye, Steele, 598, 1398; Peymann, Claus, 153; shin kabuki, 993; unorthodox, 639 stage design. See also set design. elevator stage, 598; experimental, 1099; flexibility, 425; glass walls and platforms, 1061, 1076; Grotowski, Jerzy, 1090; lighting, 397, 400, 402, 433, 1342, 1354; realism, 386; Russia and the Soviet Union, 1163; scenery design, 400, 401; Tamara (Krizanc), 1328; technological advances, 1043; theater space usage, 423; transformations, 1100; The Truth about Blayds (Milne), 1381 stage direction, 1275–1276. See also directing plays. The Lesson (Ionesco), 350–351; Peter Pan (Barrie), 1047; Pinero, Arthur, 1063; realism, 350; Robertson, Thomas William, 349; Vauthier, Jean, 1417; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430
 Stage Door (Kaufman and Ferber), 448, 1276, 1402
 Stage Door Canteen, 306
 Stage Fright (Tulloch), 73 stage management, 401
 Stage Relief Fund, 306
 Stage Society (London), 548, 742–743, 1236 Stage Women's War Relief, 306 staging: Bloch, William, 350; Cambodian traditional theater, 212; Chinese influences, 254; The Danton Case (Przybyszewska), 327; Indonesian theater, 679; The Interrupted Act (Różewicz), 1157; Ionesco, Eugène, 690; Irish theater, 700; Kazan, Elia, 350; Robertson, Thomas William, 1143–1144; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 332
 Staging Strikes (Hyman), 1403
 Stairs to the Roof (Williams), 1473
 A Stake (Dimitrov), 845
 The Stake and the Cross (Echegaray), 388
 Stalev, Georgi, 845
 Stalin, Stalinism, 460, 1080, 1215, 1256, 1257
 Stalinland (Suspect Culture), 1309
 Stalling, Laurence, 43, 1400; What Price Glory?, 1457
 Stalowa Wola (Kurochkin), 1170
 Stampede (Ringwood), 1140
 Stan (theater company), 957
 Standards (Lawson), 804
 Standby People (Drachmann), 357
 The Stand-Ins (Stoppard), 1282
 Stanescu, Saviana, 1150
 Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1276–1277; Byron's Cave, 927; acting teacher, 8, 350, 563; Bulgakov, Mikhail, 205; characterization, 990; Chekhov, Anton, 1371; The Cherry Orchard (Chekhov), 246; Days of the Turbins (Bulgakov), 332; director, 350; dramaturgy, 368; influenced by Chinese drama, 254; influenced by Salvini, 713; influence on Hughes, 637; influence on Indonesian drama, 678; influence on Lithuanian drama, 824; influence on Venezuelan drama, 1419; influence on Vietnamese drama, 1423; The Life of Man (Andreev), 817; The Lower Depths (Gorky), 835; Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 351; Moscow Art Theatre, 45, 404, 406, 926–928, 1392; naturalism, 431; Osanai Kaoru, 1014; Rappoport, Shloyme Zanvi, 384; The Seagull (Chekhov), 244, 1162, 1204; Senda Koreya, 1209; set design, 1172; socialist realism, 1256; subtext, 1300–1301; Three Sisters (Chekhov), 350, 367, 1355
 Star at the Stake (Sütö), 640
 Star of Dawn (Halac), 576
 Star of Erin Music Hall (Ireland), 699
 Starr, Frances, 386
 Stars (Grace-Smith), 547
 Stars in the Morning Sky (Galin), 1169
 The Star Turns Red (O'Casey), 984
 A Star Without a Name (Sebastian), 1149
 State and Main (Mamet), 863
 State Conservatory (Turkey), 1385
 State Moscow Art Theatre of the USSR. See Moscow Art Theatre (MAT) and Studios
 State of Revolution (Bolt), 175
 State of Secrecy (Usigli), 1414
 State of Siege (Camus), 216, 482
 State of the Play (Hall), 578
 State of the Union (Lindsay and Crouse), 821
 The States Talking (MacLeish), 849
 State Theater and Opera, Law (Turkey), 1386
 State Theater of Stuttgart (Germany), 430
 The Station (Marino), 719 station drama, 1373
 Status Quo Vadis (Sobol), 711
 Stauffer-Bern (Meier), 1317
 Stavis, Barrie, 1129
 Stawinsky, Jerzy, 1173
 St. Cecilia, or The Power of Music (Kushner), 788
 stealth bombers, 1199
 The Steamie (Roper), 1201

- Steel (Frisch), 492
 Steel (Wexley), 1403
 Stefano (Discépolo), 88, 563
 Stefanovski, Goran, 845, 1278
 Stefánsson, Davíð, 654
 Steffin, Margarete, 192
 Stehlik, Miloslav, 316
 Steigerwald, Karel, 1278–1279; Neopolitan Disease, 317; Nobel, 317; Period Dances, 317; Play Comedy, 317; Sorrow, Sorrow . . ., 317
 Stein, Gertrude, 1279; Dr. Faustus Lights the Lights, 828; Four Saints in Three Acts, 471, 916; Geography and Plays, 915–916; Mother of Us All, 916; antirealism, 1454; closet drama, 239, 271; deconstruction, 337; Foreman, Richard, 465–466; Last Operas and Plays, 915–916; Living Theatre, 1408; nonlinear narrative, 278; Thomson, Virgil, 471
 Stein, Joseph, 813
 Stein, Peter, 369, 424, 522–523, 1049
 Steinbeck, John, 989
 Steinberg New Play Award, 978
 Steinsson, Guðmundur, 654
 Stelarc, 585, 1043
 Stella (Goethe and Kushner), 788
 Stella Violanti (Xenopoulos), 1495
 Stenberg, Georgii, 1172, 1173
 Stenberg, Vladimir, 1172, 1173
 Stepanova, Varvara, 1172, 1173
 Stephen (Discépolo), 351
 The Stephen Foster Story (Green), 557
 Stephen Foster: The Musical (Green), 557
 Stephen Joseph Theatre (England), 110
 A Step Into Autumn (Arsovski), 845
 Šteпка, Stanislav, 1254
 The Stepmother (Sowerby), 1266
 Steppenwolf Theatre Company (Chicago), 208, 788, 1380, 1411
 The Steps of Sacré Coeur (Copi), 289 stereotypes and identity theater, 656–657
 Sterling Award, 1286
 Sternheim, Carl, 520, 747, 1279–1280; Paul Schippel Esq., 517; Scenes from the Heroic Life of the Middle Classes, 517; The Underpants, 517, 1393–1394
 Stevedore (Peters and Sklar), 1083, 1403
 Stevenson, Robert Louis, 1200
 Stevie in the Bloodbath (Örkény), 640, 1011
 Stewart, Donald Ogden, 1050; Ned Kelly, 73, 961
 Stewart, Ellen, 106, 990, 1409
 Stewart, Ena Lamont, 1213
 Stewart, J.I.M., 1179
 Stewart, Jimmy, 1050
 Stewart, Michael, 813
 St. Helena (Sheriff), 1236
 Stick (Abe), 2
 Sticks and Bones (Rabe), 1087, 1113, 1280–1281
 Sticks and Stones (Reaney), 1125
 The Sticks of the Mikado (Anday), 1386
 Stieglitz, Alfred, 320
 Still Angela (Kemp), 761
 Still Life (Mann), 864, 1087
 The Stillness (Norén), 967, 973
 Still Stands the House (Ringwood), 1140, 1281
 Stitching (Neilson), 953
 Stitt, Milan, 371
 St. James Infirmary (Enright), 420
 St Nicholas (McPherson), 886 stock characters, 693
 The Stock Exchange Man (Grieg), 1022
 Stockholm City Theater, 1314
 Stodola, Ivan, 1254
 Stoka Theatre (Slovakia), 1255
 Stolen (Harrison), 79
 Stolen Life: The Journey of a Cree Woman (Wiebe and Johnson), 1463
 Stolen Mourning (Cañas), 293
 Stone, John Augustus, 891
 Stone, Peter, 814
 The Stones (Lycos and Nantsou), 73
 Stones and Saints (Benavente), 145
 The Stonewater Rapture (Wright), 1491
 Stoppard, Tom, 1281–1285; Arcadia, 57, 411; The Coast of Utopia, 274, 411; Hapgood, 415; The Invention of Love, 688–689; Jumpers, 411; The Real Thing, 354, 415, 1125; Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, 280, 411, 415, 1057, 1152; Travesties, 280, 411, 1374; absurdism, 6; chance, 239; comedy, 280; dramatic dialogue, 364; innovative formats, 1017; Rattigan comparison, 408; Tony Award, 354
 Storey, David, 1285–1286
 Storey, Raymond, 1286
 Stories of Mulberry Village (Chen et al.), 90
 Stories Under Occupation, 1035
 The Storm (Bill-Belotserkovsky), 1164
 The Storm (Ostrovsky), 1161
 The Storming of the Winter Palace (Evreinov), 368
 A Stormy Night (Caragiale), 225, 1149
 Storni, Alfonsina, 1185
 Story (McKee), 1411
 The Story Ananse Told (Owusu), 23
 The Story of a Horse (Tolstoy), 1364
 The Story of a Staircase (Buero Vallejo), 203, 1270
 Story of a Tiger (Fo), 462
 The Story of Butterfly Lovers (Xu), 1286–1287
 The Story of GI Joe (Miller), 904
 The Story of Mary Surratt (Patrick), 1039
 The Story of the Eye and the Tooth, 1034
 The Story of the Gentle Rain Food Co-op (Reaney), 1126
 The Story of the Hidden Moon (Bezā'i), 695
 The Story of the Lute (naxi/chuanqi drama), 251
 The Story of the Ugly Duck (Zheng), 1515
 The Story of Yi Danda (Wei), 1451
 The Story of Yuhuan (Chan), 238
 The Story on Page One (Odets), 989 storytellers and storytelling: Iran, 691–692, 696; Ireland, 707–708; Laos, 797; Lao She, 798; Laurents, Arthur, 814; Leow Puay Tin, 809; Lerner, Alan Jay, 813; The Lower Depths (Gorky), 835–836; Palestine, 1030; religious theater, 1130; Ruyendo, Mukotani, 1158; Thompson, Judith, 823
 Stössel, Marleen, 370
 Stoyanov, Racho, 206
 Straits Theatre Company, 862
 Stramm, August, 108
 Strand Theatre (London), 1471
 A Strange (and Unexpected!) Event (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 626
 Strange (Kawakami), 757
 Strange Birds (Maša), 317
 Strange Crimes (Sastre), 1192

- Strange Interlude* (O'Neill), 367, 1003, 1005, 1056, 1287–1288, 1370, 1400
Strange Orchestra (Ackland), 7
The Stranger (Blok), 99
Stranger (Lucas), 837
The Stranger (Mafune), 855
The Stranger (Ringwood), 1140
The Stranger (von Kotzebue), 890
Stranger's House (Loher), 830
Strangers in the Land (Brand), 77
Strange Tales of Taiwan, 796
The Strange Voyage of Simon the Wicked (Ignacio Cabrujas), 1419
Strapless (Hare), 586
Strasberg, Lee, 8, 1323, 1406
Strashimirov, Anton, 206
Strategms of the DTC (Janam), 590
Stratford East Theatre, 138, 1458
Stratford Festival, 217, 894, 998
Stratiev, Stanislav, 206
Stratton (Duncan), 377
Strauss, Botho, 273, 1177, 1288–1289; Big and Little, 523; Final Chorus, 524; The Park, 523; Three Acts of Recognition, 522–523; Unexpected Return, 524; Violation, 524–525
Strauss, Johann, 1326
Strauss, Oscar: The Chocolate Soldier, 64
Strauss, Richard, 617, 1127
Straussler, Tomas. See Stoppard, Tom
Straw (Johst), 740
Strawberries and Cream (Ginzburg), 533
The Straw Chair (Glover), 538
The Stray Kitten (Petersons), 801
Streamers (Rabe), 1087, 1113, 1409 stream-of-consciousness, 186, 762, 1314
Streep, Meryl, 1393
Streeruwitz, Marlene, 1289–1290
A Streetcar Named Desire (Williams), 213, 350, 359, 364, 510, 608, 950, 1290–1291, 1302, 1304, 1371, 1472–1473
A Street of Bad Talk (Guo), 571
The Street of Grand Occasion (Hernández), 608
Street Players Union (Boston), 568
Street Scene (Rice), 637, 1136, 1137, 1291
Streets of New York (Boucicault), 891 street theater, 590. See also Happenings. Australia, 74; Belgium, 584; Catalan Experimental Theater, 232; France, 584; Gatti, Armand, 509; guerilla theater, 568–569; India, 673, 1248; interventionist, 584; Living Theatre, 1085, 1088; Me xihc co Teatro, 898–899, 923; Romeril, John, 1151; Sharma, Tripurari, 1221; Singapore, 1247; Soyinka, Wole, 1267; Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo, 1422
Street Theater (Wilson), 510
Street Walking and Company Valet Service (Fatima), 347
Strehler, Giorgio, 718
Strepponi, Blanca, 1419
A Stretch of the Imagination (Hibberd), 74
Strictly Dishonorable (Sturges), 1291–1292
Strife (Galsworthy), 406, 504
Strijards, Frans, 957
Strikers (Valdez), 1415
Strike! Strike (Ilagan), 659
Strike Up the Band (Kaufman and Ryskind), 756, 812
Strindberg, August, plays: Advent, 12, 303; The Black Glove, 236–237; The Burned House, 236–237; Carl XII, 226; Creditors, 302, 1370; Crimes and Crimes, 303, 528, 1370; The Dance of Death, 323, 379, 381, 1370; A Dream Play, 107, 372, 517, 527, 916, 919; Easter, 386; Erik XIV, 426, 927; The Father, 303, 439–440, 1370; The Ghost Sonata, 107, 236–237, 527–528, 1370; Gustav Vasa, 426, 572–573; Lucky Per, 1360; Master Olof, 362, 426, 572, 877; Miss Julie, 237, 303, 365, 910–912, 1370; Occult Diary, 372; The Pelican, 236–237; The Saga of the Folkungs, 362; The Stronger, 367, 1298–1299; Thunder in the Air, 236–237; To Damascus (trilogy), 107, 362, 432, 494, 527, 919, 1130, 1360
Strindberg, August, 1292–1298; about, 418; chamber plays, 236, 1012; Chicago Little Theater, 1001; Dagerman, Stig compared, 322; dramatic cycle, 362; dramatic structure, 365, 367; Duras's adaptation, 379; Dürrenmatt's adaptation, 381; Freudian theory, 1105; on history plays, 572; Intimate Theater, 236; naturalism, 237, 951, 1055; The Night of the Tribades (Enquist), 1313; Pirandello, Luigi, 717; post-Inferno dramas, 303, 323; Swedenborgian elements, 323; symbolism, 1319; theatricality, 1343
Strindberg, August, influence: by Kierkegaard, 373; by Plato, 372; by Schopenhauer, 372; by Zola, 1517; on Chinese drama, 252; on Echegary, 388; on Enquist, 969; on Finnish drama, 452; on French realism, 474; on Italian drama, 715; on Kelly, 760; on Kornfeld, 777; on Krleža, 782; on modern drama, 1397; on Netherlandish drama, 955; on O'Neill, 1000; on Russian drama, 1173; on Salacrou, 1182
The Strip (Nagy), 948
Strip (Parry), 964
A Stripper's Tale (Tsuka), 1383
Striptease (Mrožek), 934
Stroman, Ben, 957
The Strong Breed (Soyinka), 1267
The Stronger (Strindberg), 367, 1296, 1298–1299
Stroyeva, Marianna, 1172 structuralism, 467
structure, dramatic, 38, 111, 365–367 structure, episodic, 28, 135, 732
The Struggle of the Naga Tribe (Rendra), 103, 679, 1131, 1299–1300
St. Susanna (Vetemaa), 429
Stubborn (Kroetz), 782
The Student Prince (Donnelly), 812 student protest, 1048
The Students (Xenopoulos), 1495
The Student's Tavern (Sardou), 1186
Student Theatre (Denmark), 343, 1012
Studiklub Teater Bandung, 679, 680
Studio (theater troupe), 957
Studio 54, 354
Studio de Creation les Gen d'R, 1245
Studio Ypsilon (Czechoslovakia), 316
A Stuffed Dog (Göthe), 1313
Stuff Happens (Hare), 1300
Stumbre, Lelde, 801
Stupica, Bojan, 1256
stupid theater, 679, 1464
Sturges, Preston: Strictly Dishonorable, 1291–1292
Sturlunga saga, 652
Sturm, Dieter, 370

- Sturm und Drang, 1258, 1261
 Suat, Hüseyin: Patches, 1385
 Subaru, 925
 subconscious, in the drama, 505, 733
 Subh Honay Tak (Ahmed), 1028
 subsidized theatre. See government sponsorship
 The Substance of Fire (Baitz), 115
 subtext, 1300–1301, 1417
 The Suburbanite (Minh), 1422 suburbs, 1233
 Subversion (Rizal), 659
 Success (Milne), 406
 The Successful Life of Three (Fornes), 467, 1409
 Succession (Riantiaro), 679, 1136
 Successor to Revolution (China), 393
 Success Story (Lawson), 564, 1403
 Such a Bumpkin (Koidula), 428
 Such a Love (Kohout), 316
 Such a Serious Frivolity (Shimizu), 1238
 Sudden Death (Berman), 150
 Suddenly (Na'lbandiān), 696
 Suddenly Last Summer (Williams), 510, 1301–1302, 1475
 Sudden Misfortune (Fischerová), 456
 Sudermann, Hermann, 366, 653, 1302–1303; Heimat, 517; Honor, 517; Magda, 366, 517
 Sudō Sadanori, 757, 1241
 Sue (Harte and Pemberton), 589
 Suede Jacket (Stratiev), 206
 Suez Crisis, 421
 The Suffering One (Nadeem), 1029
 suffragettes. See also feminism and feminist themes. How the Vote Was Won (Hamilton and St. John), 1226; Saint Joan (Shaw), 1179; Shaw, George Bernard, 1225–1226; Strindberg, August, 1293–1294
 Sugar (Claus), 269
 Sugarcane Fire Water (Hernández), 608
 Suharno, Fajar, 680
 Suharto, T. N. J., 1191 suicide: After the Dance (Rattigan), 1120; Beatrice's Veil (Schnitzler), 1197; Chatterton (de Vigny), 1150; The Condemned of Altona (Sartre), 1190; Dear Yelena Sergeevna (Razumovskaya), 1169; The Deep Blue Sea (Rattigan), 1120; Deirdre of the Sorrows (Synge), 1322; Faust is Dead (Ravenhill), 1121; An Inspector Calls (Priestley), 685; Iona (Sorescu), 1150; Ivanov (Chekhov), 722; Jonah (Sorescu), 1260; The Lady on Her Balcony (Garro), 792–793; Liebele (Schnitzler), 815–816, 1197; Man with Portfolio (Faiko), 1164; The Mask (Crnjanski), 1210; Norman, Marsha, 967, 974; Ride On (Sadur), 1169; Rosmersholm (Ibsen), 1153; Royal Guests (Hernández), 1156; Scientific Americans (Mighton), 1199; The Seagull (Chekhov), 1204; The Seven Streams of the River Ota (Lepage and Ex Machina), 1214; Six Characters in Search of an Author (Pirandello), 1251; The Son (Hasenclever), 1259; Spring Awakening (Wedekind), 1274; Stage Door (Kaufman and Ferber), 1276; Sticks and Bones (Rabe), 1281; Summerfolk (Gorky), 1305; The Third Stake (Sorescu), 1260; The Unknown Woman of Arras (Salacrou), 1182; The Valley's Depths (Suzuki), 1310; Wednesday to Come (Renée), 1132; Well Hung (Lord), 834
 The Suicide (Erdman), 425, 838, 928, 1164, 1303–1304
 Suicide in B-flat (Shepard), 729
 Suite in Three Keys (Coward), 297, 1259
 Sujo, Juana, 1419
 Sukhovo-Kobylin, Aleksandr, 1160
 Sulerzhitsky, Leopold, 927
 Sullavan, Margaret, 1429
 Sullivan, Arthur, 661; Patience, 400
 Sullivan Opera House (Chicago), 471
 Sullivan, Daniel, 602
 Sultan Bride (Atay), 1386
 Sumarokov, Aleksandr, 1160
 Sumbatov-Yuzhin, Aleksandr, 1161, 1163
 Sümer, Güner: The Corrupt Order, 1386
 Summer and Smoke (Williams), 1304–1305, 1408, 1473, 1474, 1476
 Summer Brave. See Picnic (Inge)
 Summer Day's Dream (Priestley), 1099
 Summerfolk (Gorky), 545, 1162, 1305–1306
 Summerland (Balodis), 119
 Summer Night (Usigli), 1414
 Summer Nights (Pleijel), 1313
 Summer of the Aliens (Nowra), 979
 Summer of the Seventeenth Doll (Lawler), 73, 802, 1478
 Summer of the Younger Brother (Priede), 801
 Summer School (Vahing), 429
 A Summer's Day (Mrożek), 934
 Summersoft (James), 726
 Sumurun (Reinhardt), 1127, 1400
 Sundance Institute, 167
 Sundance Playwrights' Lab, 791
 Sundance Theatre Laboratory, 959

- The Surgery (Kyōka), 723
 Surguchyov, Ilya, 1162
 The Surplus Value Is Going to Finish, Mr. Edgar (Vianna Filho), 1421
 The Surprise (Rostworowski), 1080
 surrealism, 1307–1308;
 absurdism, 5; avant-garde drama, 108–109; chance, 239; collage aesthetic, 278; Czechoslovakia, 93; dadaism, 319–320; France, 281; futurism, 500; identity theater, 656; Japan, 599; origin of term, 275; performance art, 1042; Romania, 1150; theatricality, 1343; Venezuela, 1418
 surrealism, plays and playwrights: al-Hakim, Tawfiq, 15; Apollinaire, Guillaume, 56; Apollinaire, Guillaume and, 916; Artaud, Antonin, 67; Bed (Cartwright), 134; Bond, Edward, 176; The Breasts of Tiresias (Apollinaire), 189; Césaire, Aimé, 235; Claudel, Paul, 477; Cocteau, Jean, 275–276; Farmers Die (Kroetz), 783; Funnyhouse of a Negro (Kennedy), 762; Hassan, Noordin, 590; Ionesco, Eugène, 483; Jarry, Alfred, 478; Jenkin, Len, 732; Kerata, Laco, 1255; The Knack (Jellicoe), 771; Noer, Arifin C., 971; Ørnsbo, Jess, 343; Orpheus (Cocteau), 1012–1013; Profound Research (Naʼibandiān), 696; A Sailor's Song (Shanley), 1219; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; Strauss, Botho, 1288; Stumbre, Lelde, 801; Vitrac, Roger, 1426; Zaourou, Bernard Zadi, 24; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1514 Surrealist Group of Brussels, 142 surrogate motherhood, 775
 Surur, Naguib, 391
 Surveillance Camera Players, 27
 Survival (Workshop 71), 101
 Susan and God (Crothers), 306
 Susan Smith Blackburn Prize, 968, 974
 Su Shuyang, 255
 The Suspect (Nušić), 1209
 Suspect Culture, 559, 1308–1309
 suspense, 889–890
 Sütő, András, 640
 Sutherland, Efua Theodora, 23, 1309–1310
 Sutro, Alfred, 405
 Suvorin, Aleksei, 1095
 Suzi Goo: Private Secretary (Gilbert), 530
 Suz'o/Suz (La Fura dels Baus), 232
 Suzue Toshirō, 614
 Suzuki Company of Toga (SCOT), 49, 99, 1250, 1311
 Suzuki method, 49, 99, 173
 Suzuki Senzaburō, 1310–1311
 Suzuki Tadashi, 49, 99, 155, 173, 723, 727, 1020, 1250, 1311
 Svanhild (Ibsen), 648
 Svejik in the Third World War (Madsen), 853
 Svenska teatern (Stockholm), 372, 426
 Svich, Caridad, 468
 Svoboda, Josef, 370
 The Swallows (Dubillard), 376
 Swamp Gravy, 283
 The Swan (Egloff), 390, 1412
 Swan, Susan: The Wives of Bath, 1352
 The Swans of the Thames (Nooteboom), 957
 Swan Song (Chekhov), 242
 Swan Song (Mason), 875
 Swaziland, 21
 Sweden, 1311–1315. See also Strindberg, August. 19th century drama, 302–303, 591; 20th century drama, 226, 236, 321, 323, 372–373; Bergman, Hjalmar, 148; Bergman, Ingmar, 149; Dagerman, Stig, 321; Lagerkvist, Pär, 582; pre–World War II drama, 323, 372, 582; Wheeler, Hugh, 815
 Swedenborg, Emanuel, 777, 1293, 1318
 Swedenhielms (Bergman), 148, 1312
 Swedish Academy, 469
 Sweeney Agonistes (Eliot), 729
 Sweeney Todd (Wheeler), 815
 Sweet Bird of Youth (Williams), 1475, 1476
 The Sweet Burden of Faithfulness (Putniņš), 801
 Sweet Charity (Simon), 1246
 The Sweet Girl Graduate (Corzon), 313
 Sweet Jew (Kornfeld), 777
 Sweet Lavender (Pinero), 1064
 Sweet Road (Oswald), 73
 Sweet Theresienstadt (Goldflam), 317
 The Sweet Trap (Sofola), 24
 Swift, Jonathan, 1504
 Swimming to Cambodia (Gray), 550, 1087
 Swine (Turrini), 86, 1388, 1431
 The Switchback (Bridie), 199
 Switzerland, 239, 319, 380, 747, 1315–1318
 Switzerland Without an Army? Small Talk (Frisch), 493
 Swoop (Wellman), 1454
 Sword and Crozier (Einarsson), 652
 The Sword of Dandelion (Liu), 828
 The Sword's Handle (Echegaray), 388
 The Sword Sung (Duncan), 77
 Sworn (Picard), 918
 Sydney Theatre Critics Circle Award, 547
 Sýkora, Vladimír. See Zvon, Peter
 Sylvia (Gurney), 572
 Sylvia in the 'Star' (Hofmannsthal), 620
 symbolism, 1318–1320;
 apocalypse, 53; closet drama, 271; critical reception, 359–360; expressionism compared, 432; theatricality, 1343; Wagner's influence, 1434 symbolism, plays and playwrights: Advent (Strindberg), 12; Andreev, Leonid, 45; Anna Sophie Hedvig (Abell), 51; Balázs, Béla, 639; The Baltimore Waltz (Vogel), 120; Bergman, Hjalmar, 148; Betti, Ugo, 1111; Blok, Aleksandr, 168; A Dream Play (Strindberg), 372–373; Gide, André, 530; He Who Gets Slapped (Andreev), 611; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von, 271, 618; Jarry, Alfred, 360, 728; Kennedy, Adrienne, 762; Kugel, Aleksandr, 1171; Maeterlinck, Maurice, 359; A Miracle in 'Šargan' (Simović), 1211; O'Casey, Sean, 985; Rainis, 1115; Reaney, James, 1125; Sastre, Alfonso, 1191; The Seagull (Chekhov), 1205; Shanley, John Patrick, 1218; Stanislavsky, Konstantin, 1277; Thread Hell (Kishida), 769; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430; Zaourou, Bernard Zadi, 24 symbolism, by country or region: Belgium, 141; Croatia, 304; France, 269, 281, 475–478, 1173; Japan, 726; Poland, 1079; Puerto Rico, 1106; Russia, 99–100; Russian drama, 926–927, 1163, 1173–1174; Western Europe, 107–109 symphonic expressionism, 1427

- Symphonic Outdoor Drama (North Carolina), 557
- Symphony (Voaden and Warriner), 1427
- Synge, John Millington, 1320–1322; In the Shadow of the Glen, 687, 700; The Playboy of the Western World, 983, 1077; Riders to the Sea, 1138–1139; Abbey Theatre, 701, 1145; comedy, 280; Gregory, Lady, 559, 1274; Lawrence, David Herbert, 1462; literary revival, 1049; modernism, 916; O'Neill, Eugene, 1000; Ringwood, Gwen Pharis, 1281
- syphilis, 1289
- Syrup Peach (Mihura), 902
- the System (Stanislavsky), 8, 1277
- Szabó, Magda, 640
- Szakonyi, Károly, 640
- Szaniawski, Jerzy: The Two Theatres, 1081
- Székely, János, 640
- Szép, Ernő, 639
- Szomory, Dezső, 639
- Szondi, Peter, 360
- Tabakov, Oleg, 928
- Tabarís theater (Argentina), 1009
- tableau vivant, 51
- tableaux, 817, 835
- Taboo (Noda), 971
- Tabori, George, 523, 1048, 1323
- Tabraizī, Mirza Aqa, 693–694
- Tabula Rasa (Sternheim), 1280
- Tadashi, Suzuki, 1361
- Tadasu Iizawa, 970
- Tada Toshio, 970
- Tagalog (language), 1052
- Taganka Theater (Russia), 426, 840–841, 1173
- Tagopoulos, Demetrios, 555
- Tahinta: Two Rhythm Plays for Children (Sutherland), 1310
- Tahm Tam, 1423
- An Taibhdhearc, 851
- The Tailor (Mrozek), 934
- The Tailor of Panama (Pinter), 1068
- The Tailor's Days in Silmači (Blaumanis), 801
- Taine, Hippolyte, 950
- Tairov, Aleksandr, 1173
- Tairov, Alexander, 476
- Tairov, Alexandr, 368
- Taishō era (Japan), 1310–1311, 1499
- Taiwan, 256–259, 644, 795–796, 807–808
- Tajovský, Jozef Gregor, 1254
- Takahama Kyōshi, 970
- Takamodo, Princess, 1286
- Takarazuka Grand Theater (Japan), 1324
- Takarazuka Revue Company (Japan), 727, 1323–1324, 1425
- Takatoki (Kawatake), 759
- Takayasa Gekkō, 1241
- Take Up Arms (Rojas), 294
- The Taking of Havana by the British (Millán), 310
- The Taking of Miss Janie (Bullins), 207
- Taking Steps (Ayckbourn), 110
- Taking Tiger Mountain by Strategy (anon.), 1256
- Taki no Shiraito (Kyōka), 723
- Taki Rua-Depot Theatre (Wellington), 963
- Taki Rua Theatre (Wellington), 777, 963
- Talawa Theatre (England), 417
- Talbot's Box (Kilroy), 705
- A Tale after Chikamatsu (Akimoto), 29
- The Talented Mr. Ripley (Nagy), 948
- Talents and Admirers (Ostrovsky), 1020, 1161, 1277
- The Tale of Genji, 970
- Tale of Genji (Funahashi), 1241
- Tale of Hikoichi (Kinoshita), 970
- The Tale of Komachi Told by the Wind (Ōta), 1444
- The Tale of Lear (Suzuki), 1311
- A Tale of Mystery (Pixérécourt), 472
- A Tale of Possessors Self-Dispossessed (O'Neill), 1004
- Tale of Shuzenji (Okamoto), 727, 992, 993, 1324–1325
- The Tale of Teeka (Bouchard), 179, 1325
- Tale of the Genji (Hōjō and Funahashi), 621
- The Tale of the Mah-Meri (Brulin), 143
- A Tale of Two Cities, 1332
- Tales from Hollywood (Hampton), 413
- Tales from the Arabian Nights, 1127
- Tales from the Vienna Woods (Horváth), 519, 627, 1325–1326
- Talesnik, Ricardo, 89
- Tales of the Slums (Santana), 1419
- Talking Heads I and II (Bennett), 146, 415, 1326–1327
- Talking Off (Hall), 578
- Taller Nacional de Teatro (Costa Rica), 294
- Talley and Son (Wilson), 452, 1482
- Talley's Folly (Wilson), 452, 1410, 1412, 1481, 1482
- Talli, Virgilio, 715
- Tally, Ted, 1327–1328, 1409
- Taman Ismail Marzuki (Jakarta), 103, 679
- Tamara (Krizanc), 218, 780, 1328
- tamasha (India), 158, 417, 665, 667, 669, 670, 674, 1221
- Tambourines to Glory (Hughes), 637
- The Tamed Wolf (Eichelbaum), 61
- The Taming of the Shrew (Shakespeare), 970, 1272
- Tammsaare, A. H., 428
- Tam O'Shanter (Burns), 1200
- Tanaka Chikao, 1239, 1328–1329; Head of Mary, 599, 727
- Tanaka Sumie, 1328
- Tanchelijn (Mulisch), 957
- The Tanentsap Troupe (Weichert), 540
- Taner, Haldun: The Cunning Wife of the Stupid Husband, 1387; Fazilet Pharmacy, 1386; The Legend of Keşanlı Ali, 1387; Shrewish Zarife, 1387
- Tanganyika Textile Drama Group, 18
- Tanghalang Pilippino (theater), 725
- Tango (Fornes), 106
- Tango (Mrozek), 281, 934, 1081, 1282, 1284
- Tango Palace (Fornes), 310, 467
- Tanizaki Junichirō, 1239, 1310
- Tanizaki Jun'ichirō Prize, 492
- Tanna Tunnel (Hōjō), 621
- Tannhäuser (Wagner), 1319, 1433
- Tantal (Ivanov), 1164, 1174
- Tantanian, Alejandro, 62
- Tan Tarn How, 1006, 1248
- Tanvir, Habib, 590, 671, 1329–1330; Agra Bazaar, 28; Charandas the Thief, 240
- Tanya (Arbuzov), 57, 1165
- Tanya-Tanya (Mukhina), 1170
- Tanzania, 18, 21
- Tanzimat Edict, 1384
- Tao Jun, 90, 255
- Tao Mat, 1422
- Tapia y Rivera, Alejandro, 1106
- Tara (Dattani), 328
- Tara Arts (London), 657
- Tarantela (Cañas), 293
- Tardieu, Jean, 6, 483, 484, 1330–1331
- Tarekin's Death (Meyerhold), 1173
- Tarn, Adam, 1256
- Tarragon Theatre (Toronto): alternative theater

- movement, 217; Brooks, Daniel, 202; MacLeod, Joan, 734, 850; Marchessault, Jovette, 869, 1177; Sears, Djanet, 1206; Sherman, Jason, 1235; Thompson, Judith, 1352; Tremblay, Michel, 33, 628
Tartar Fair (Steigerwald), 1278
Tartuffe (Molière), 709
Tartuffe (Molière), 1272, 1277
The Task (Müller), 55, 102, 938
 Tasnádi, István, 641
A Taste of Honey (Delaney), 340, 409
Tatarin (Joaquin), 736
Tata Theatre (Mumbai, India), 996
Tatiana Repina (Chekhov), 243
 Tätte, Jaab, 429
TAT Theater (Frankfurt), 1049
Tattoo (Loher), 830
Tattooed Souls (Stefanovskii), 845
The Tatty Hollow Story (Hewett), 610
Tavori, Doron, 97
The Tax (Abramovitch), 1506
Taxi from Hell (Tally), 1327
 Taylor, Apirana, 963
 Taylor, Drew Harden, 218, 1331–1332
 Taylor, Drew Hayden: The Baby Blues, 111
 Taylor, Thomas, 890, 1332;
The Ticket-of-Leave Man, 401, 1358
 ta'ziyeh, 692–694, 696, 697
 TBC. See Brazilian Comedic Theatrical Company
 Tcherniak, Nathalie. See Sarraute, Nathalie
Tea and a Lecture (Iwamatsu), 722
Tea and Sympathy (Anderson), 510, 1407
The Teacher (Garborg), 976
Teacher and Public (Vanúcura), 315
Teachers' Room (Wouters), 143 teaching plays. See learning plays
The Teahouse (Lao), 254, 455, 799, 820
Teahouse of the August Moon (Patrick), 1039, 1407
The Tea Planter's Mirror (Chattopadhyay), 666
Tears at New Pavilion (Zheng), 256, 1515
 teater, 679
 Teater Artistik (Singapore), 1247
 Teater Ekamatra (Singapore), 1247
 Teater Kami (Singapore), 1247
 Teater Ketjil (Jakarta), 679, 971
 Teater Koma (Jakarta), 103, 274, 679, 1136
 Teater Kubur, 680
 Teater Mandiri (Jakarta), 103, 679
 Teater Populer, 679, 1136
 Teater Sae, 680
 teater tanpa batas. See theater without limits
 Teatoro Theatre Award, 941, 1238
 Teatr.doc (Russia), 1170
 Teatre Lliure (Spain), 232
 Teatr magazine (Russia), 1171–1172
 Teatr Miejski (Cracow), 1493
 Teatro Abierto (Argentina), 358, 576
 Teatro Argentina (Rome), 247
 Teatro Brasileiro de Comédia. See Brazilian Comedy Theater
teatro chicano. See Chicano theater teatro colectivo/de grupo (Peru), 1045
 Teatro d'Arte (Turin), 715, 717, 1364
 Teatro d'Arte di Roma, 1070
 Teatro d'Arte Italiano, 718
 Teatro de Ahora, 896
 Teatro de Arte, 873
 Teatro de Art y Propaganda, 1340
 Teatro de Bellas Artes (Madrid), 1040
teatro de carpa, 896
 Teatro de la Reforma, 897
 Teatro del Arte Moderno, 897
 Teatro de la Universidad Católica (Lima), 1044
 Teatro de la Universidad de San Marcos (Lima), 1044
 Teatro della Maddalena, 866
 Teatro del Picadero (Argentina), 1009
 Teatro del Pueblo (Spain), 369, 1339
 Teatro Del Sol, 1045
Teatro de masas (Sender), 1339
 Teatro de Orientación, 896
teatro de revista, 896
 Teatro de Ulises, 896
 Teatro di Eduardo (Italy), 338–339
 Teatro el Gran Quince (Puerto Rico), 1107
 Teatro Español (Madrid), 551
 Teatro Estudiantil Autónomo, 897
 Teatro Fiorentino (Naples), 183
 Teatro Fronterizo, 1184
 Teatroggi, 866
 Teatro la Capilla, 897
 Teatro La Máscara, 198
 Teatro Manzoni, 1070
 Teatro Metastasio (Rome), 1070
 Teatro Municipal (Costa Rica), 293
 Teatro Municipal (Rio de Janeiro), 1448–1449
 Teatro Murciélagos, 896
 Teatro Nacional (Costa Rica), 293
 Teatro Nacional (Lima), 1044
 Teatrong Mulat (Philippines), 799
 Teatro Oficina (Brazil), 222
 Teatro Peruano Norteamericano, 1044
 Teatro Popular Fray Mocho (Argentina), 358
teatro por horas. See theater by hours
 Teatro Rodante (Puerto Rico), 1106
 Teatro Sintetico Futurista, 93
teatro stabile, 715, 718
 Teatro Trébol (Costa Rica), 293
 Teatro Umoristico I De Filippi (Italy), 338
 Teatro Veriedades (Costa Rica), 293
 Teatrul Evreiesc de Stat (Romania), 1149
 Tecer, Ahmet Kudsi: Corner, 1386 technology, 747, 783
 Tecumseh (Mair), 216
Teenagerlove (Olsen), 343, 996
 Teer, Barbara Ann, 1086–1087
Teth (Stoppard), 1282
Tegonni, An African Antigone (Osofisan), 18, 1018
 Teichmann, Howard, 448
 Te-Ika-a-Maui Players (New Zealand), 963
 Teirlinck, Herman, 142
 Teledeum (Els Joglars), 232
Telegrams on Wheels (Vitězslav), 93 television, 1028, 1246, 1253, 1325 television dramas: China, 256; Churchill, Caryl, 263; Cook, Michael, 287; Crowley, Mart, 307; Delaney, Shelagh, 340; Diosdado, Ana, 348; Jepsen, Erling, 733; Nadeem, Shahid, 947; Nichols, Peter, 331; Osborne, John, 1016
The Television Program (Vinaver), 1424
 Tell, William, 1315–1317
 Tell Him Always Yes (De Filippo), 338
 Tell It to Women (Onwueme), 1008

- Temba, 417
 temperance movement (New Zealand), 1353
 A Temperance Town (Hoyt), 635
 The Tempest (Césaire), 18
 A Tempest (Césaire), 236
 Tempest, Marie, 1380
 The Tempestuous Rain (Elkunchwar), 396
 The Temple (Nowra), 799
 Temple of Fine Arts, 862
 Templeton, Fiona: You—The City, 423
 Tempo (Pogodin), 1166
 TEMPO (Watanabe), 1444
 The Temporary Husband (Hedayat), 695
 The Temptation (Claus), 270
 Temptation (Havel), 317, 595
 The Temptations of Big Bear (Wiebe), 1463
 Tenant (Arriaga), 294
 Ten Days That Shook the World (Lee), 804
 Ten Days That Shook the World (Reed), 841
 Tender Mercies (Foote), 464
 Tendulkar, Vijay, 671, 674, 1332–1334; Ghashiram Kotwal, 525–526; Sakharan Binder, 1181 tenement houses, 1291
 Tenement of the Pigeons (Vaccarezza), 61
 Tenishevsky school, 1107
 Tenjō Sajiki (Japan), 49, 99, 638, 769
 Ten Lost Years (Luscombe), 840
 Ten Minutes Older (Horovitz), 625
 Tennessee (Linney), 822
 Tennessee Laughs (Williams), 1477
 Ten Nights in a Barroom (Pratt), 892 tent shows, 896
 Ten Unknowns (Baitz), 115
 Ten Ways to Abuse an Old Woman (Clark), 268
 Teo, William, 1247
 Te Ohu Whakaari (theater troupe), 963
 Te Pouaka Karae; The Glass Box (Renée), 1132
 Te Raukura (Dansey), 963
 Terayama Shūji, 49, 99, 723, 727, 769, 1020, 1334–1335; Hunchback of Aomori, 638
 Terblanche, Tania, 23
 Terezka (Lagronová), 317
 Teriyama, Shuji, 696
 Terminal (Chaikin et al.), 1232, 1501
 Terminal (Yankowitz), 1409
 Terminal Hip (Wellman), 1454
 Termites on Wood (Ilagan), 659
 Te Roopu Whakaari (New Zealand), 777
 Terpstra, Koos, 957
 Terraces (Osborne), 1015
 Terracini, Lyndon, 119
 Terra Nova (Tally), 1327
 The Terrible Angels (Chalraud), 1419
 The Terrible but Unfinished Story of Norodom Sihanouk, King of Cambodia (Cixous), 267, 486, 913, 1335
 The Terrible Meek (Kennedy), 1130
 The Terrible Trial (Shkvarkin), 1166
 Terrorism (Presnyakov), 1170
 Terry, Megan, 371, 510, 959, 990, 1087, 1335–1336; Approaching Simone, 445; Viet Rock, 1087, 1409
 Tervapää, Juhani, 453
 Terza, María Elena James de. See Sándor, Malena
 Tesich, Steve, 1336–1337, 1411–1412
 Test (theater troupe), 957
 The Testament (Vahing), 429
 Testimonies of the Deaths of Sabrina (Radrigán), 1114
 Test of Fire (Castro), 231
 Te Toi Whakaari (New Zealand), 777
 Tevye the Dairyman (Aleichem), 1508
 Tewodros (Tsegaye), 1382
 The Texas Nightingale (Akins), 30
 A Texas Steer (Hoyt), 635, 1398
 Tfd. See Theatre for Development
 Thai Cultural Center, 1338
 Thailand, 104, 239, 798, 1117–1118, 1337–1338
 Thalia Theatre (Hamburg), 830
 Thamyris Kitharodos (Annensky), 1163, 1174
 Thang Long Theater (Hanoi), 1423
 thang-ta (India), 1348
 Thanks for the Favors (Santana), 1419
 Thatcher, Margaret, 411, 416, 1365
 That Something That Dávalos Has (Gallegos), 294
 That Thing (Boytchev), 206
 That Which Only a Man Can Suffer (D'Erzell), 345
 THAW. See Theaters Against War (THAW)
 Thawanplueng (Thailand), 104 theater: business or art?, 727, 1396–1401, 1404–1405; design, 663–665; educational, 673; influence of Western theater, 692–698 passim, 820, 824, 1136, 1171; reform, 122; space usage, 423, 763; as teacher, 205; as a theme, 1022, 1197, 1326; wartime damage, 1081
 Theater '80, 957
 Theater am Nollendorfsplatz (Berlin), 1076
 Theater am Schiffbauerdamm (East Berlin), 196
 Theater am Thurm (Frankfurt), 755
 The Theater and Its Double (Artaud), 68, 106, 108
 Theater Archa (Prague), 1250 theater by hours, 1178, 1269
 Theater Critics' Circle of San Juan, 554
 Theater der Dichtung (Vienna), 780
 Theater Edouard VII (Paris), 943
 The Theater Essays of Arthur Miller (Miller), 904
 Theater Genesis (New York), 1232
 Theater Hall of Fame, 588
 Theater heute Play of the Year Award, 755
 Theater in the Times of Nero and Seneca (Radzinsky), 1167
 Theater Mandiri (Indonesia), 1463
 Theater Manzoni (Milan), 1251
 Theater of Catastrophe, 122, 773, 791
 Theater of Cruelty: absurdism, 6; Artaud, Antonin, 68, 108, 480, 734, 1057; Brook, Peter, 412; Genet, Jean, 484; Izumi Kyōka, 723; Lithuanian drama, 824; Müller, Heiner, 524; Ravenhill, Mark, 1121; Taiwanese drama, 258; Theater of Panic, 485; Walker, George F., 1514 theater of daily life, 487 Theater of Derision, 6 theater of ideas, 475, 476 theater of illusion, 90
 Theater of Panic, 485
 Theater of Roots, 663, 671–672, 1035
 Theater of Sabina Berman, 150 theater of situation, 48, 1056 theater of synthesis, 841
 Theater of the Absurd. See also absurdism. Abe Kōbō, 2; absurdism, 5; acting in, 9; Arrabal, Fernando, 58; Belgium, 143; Cuba, 1062; Dragún, Osvaldo, 358; Eastern European drama, 92; existentialism, 1057; Gao Xingjian, 506–507; Genet, Jean, 512–515; Greek drama, 556; Halac,

- Ricardo, 576; Ionesco, Eugène, 117, 351; Jenkin, Len, 732; Kane, Sarah, 166; Maeterlinck, Maurice, 855; Mihura, Miguel, 901; modernist drama, 917; off-Broadway theater, 990; origins, 1101, 1408; Pendovski, Branko, 845; Polish drama, 1081; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 481–483; Serumaga, Robert Ballamino, 20; Slovak drama, 1254; Sorescu, Marin, 1260; Taiwanese drama, 258; Wedekind, Frank, 1449–1451
- Theater of the Five Thousand, 1127
- theater of the grotesque, 1338–1339; Aksyonov, Vasily, 1167; Arena Theater of São Paulo, 61; Argentinian drama, 88; Blok, Aleksandr, 169, 1107; creole grotesque, 351; D'Annunzio, Gabriele, 325; Discépolo, Armando, 351; grotesco criollo, 562–563, 576; Halac, Ricardo, 576; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 594; Hungarian drama, 640, 1011; Italian drama, 248, 717; Jarry, Alfred, 1391; Jepsen, Erling, 344; Meyerhold, Vsevolod, 899; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1145–1146; Różewicz, Tadeusz, 1157; Russian drama, 1160; Valle-Inclán, Ramón María, 1416; Venezuelan drama, 1418; Williams, Tennessee, 1302
- theater of the last chance, 486
- Theater of the Oppressed, 172, 188
- theater of the scientific age, 196
- Theater of the Third World in Europe (TIEDRIE), 143
- Theater of the University of Mexico, 508
- Theater of Transformation (Japan), 1020, 1444–1445
- theater of urgency, 1339–1340
- Theater on the Balustrade (Czechoslovakia), 370, 595
- Theater Research Studio (China), 91
- Theaters Against War (THAW), 1088
- Theater Valle (Rome), 1251
- theater without limits, 971
- Theatr Bara Caws (Wales), 1155
- Theatre '47 (Dallas), 1408
- Theatre Academy (India), 525, 1155
- Theatre Across Borders series, 769
- Theatre Action (New Zealand), 961, 1353
- Théâtre Alfred Jarry, 67, 1427
- Theatre Alliance, 1137
- Théâtre Antoine (Paris), 53, 474
- Theatre Apart (Poland), 1081
- Theatre Arts Magazine, 1001
- Theatre Beyond the Gate (Czechoslovakia), 1367
- Theatre Calgary, 1088
- Theatre Canada Award, 930
- Theatre Center 68/69 (Japan), 48, 99, 1193
- Theatre Circle (Japan), 614
- Theatre Communications Group Award, 173, 978
- The Theatre Company (Nasiriān), 695
- Theatre Dada (Prague), 94
- Théâtre d'Art, 477, 854, 1318
- Théâtre d'Aujourd'hui (Canada), 180, 869
- Théâtre de Babylone (Paris), 483–484, 1434
- Théâtre de Complicité, 1220, 1343
- Théâtre de France, 1188
- Théâtre de la Bruyère, 71
- Théâtre de l'Acelier (Paris), 52
- Théâtre de la Chaudron, 486
- Théâtre de la Cité-Sarah Bernhardt (Paris), 459, 1189
- Théâtre de la Huchette (Paris), 118, 690, 810
- Théâtre de l'Aquarium, 486, 919
- Théâtre de la Renaissance, 1344
- Théâtre de la Salamandre, 485
- Théâtre de la Tempête, 486
- Théâtre de l'Athénée (Paris), 1212
- Théâtre de l'Épée de Bois, 486
- Théâtre de l'Équipe (France), 211, 215
- Théâtre de L'Est Parisien, 1207
- Théâtre de l'Odéon, 53
- Théâtre de l'Odéon (Paris), 474, 484, 485
- Théâtre de l'Oeuvre (Paris): Anouilh, Jean, 51; Claudel, Paul, 269, 477; founding of, 477; Jarry, Alfred, 107, 478, 728, 1391; Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso, 499; Murrell, John, 894; Quillard, Pierre, 1319; Song of Songs, 1319; symbolism, 1319; Synge, John Millington, 701; Wilde, Oscar, 1467; Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513
- Théâtre de Lutèce, 165
- Theatre de Lys (New York), 989
- Théâtre de Quat'Sous (Montreal), 628
- Théâtre des Ambassadeurs, 51
- Theatre des Arts (Paris), 551
- Théâtre des Menus Plaisirs, 53
- Théâtre des Noctambules (Paris), 118, 690
- Théâtre des Nouveautés (Paris), 458, 483
- Théâtre du Grand-Guignol, 1340–1341
- Théâtre du Nouveau Monde (Montreal), 180, 220, 869, 1177
- Théâtre du Rideau Vert (Montreal), 220
- Théâtre du Soleil (France), 267, 369, 485, 486, 913, 1335
- Théâtre du Vieux-Colombier (Paris), 107, 287, 369, 479, 971, 1189, 1239, 1400
- Théâtre Experimental des Femmes, 869
- Theatre Factory (Toronto), 1123
- Theatre Festival (Delhi), 671–672
- Theatre for Africa Company (South Africa), 102
- Theatre for Development (TfD, Tanzania), 19, 22
- Theatre for the New City (New York), 208, 468, 990
- Théâtre-Française, 471–472
- Theatre Genesis (New York), 990, 1409
- Théâtre Gérard Philippe (Saint Denis, France), 578
- Theatre Guild (New York), 371, 1084, 1400–1401, 1405
- Theatre Guild (New York), playwrights: Barnes, Djuna, 123; Behrman, S. N., 138, 159, 1114; Ervine, St. John, 738; Heyward, Dorothy and DuBose, 1092; Howard, Sidney, 632; Inge, William, 682; Jones, Robert Edmond, 742; O'Neill, Eugene, 655, 922–923, 933–934, 1003, 1005, 1287; Rice, Elmer, 10, 1137; Saroyan, William, 1358; Williams, Tennessee, 1406, 1473
- Theatre Guild on the Air, 904, 1341

- Théâtre Hébertot (Paris), 211
- Theatre in Education productions, 389
- Theatre in Wales Award, 389
- Théâtre L'Aire de Jeu, 869
- Théâtre l'Est Parisien (Paris), 1501
- Théâtre Libre (Paris):
Antoine, André, 53, 474, 1340; influence on Irish drama, 700; naturalism, 359; Strindberg, August, 911, 1295; Tolstoy, Lyov, 1095; Zapsolska, Gabriela, 1513; Zola, Émile, 1517
- Theatre Limited (Uganda), 1212
- Théâtre National (Belgium), 143
- Théâtre National de Suresnes, 483
- Théâtre National Populaire of Villeurbanne (France), 1142–1143
- Theatre New Brunswick, 1088
- Theatre of Black Women (England), 417
- The Theatre of Eternal War (Evreinov), 431
- theatre of excess, 1453–1454
- Theatre of Images, 102
- theatre of occasion, 568
- The Theatre of One Will (Sologub), 919
- Theatre of Panic, 65
- Theatre of Quat', 932
- theatre of roots, 596
- The Theatre of Surprise (Marinetti), 871–872
- The Theatre of the Absurd (Esslin), 106
- Theatre of the Oppressed, 283
- Theatre of the Revolution (Soviet Union), 1171
- Theatre of Wonders (Wellman), 1454
- Theatre on a String (Czechoslovakia), 316
- Theatre on the Balustrade, 894
- Theatre OX (Singapore), 1247
- Theatre Passe Muraille (Toronto): alternative theater movement, 217; Bouchard, Michel Marc, 819; Clark, Sally, 268; creative collaboration, 218–219, 660; The Farm Show, 218–219; Griffiths, Linda, 561, 856; I Love You Baby Blue, 660; Ondaatje, Michael at, 998; Sherman, Jason, 806, 1234; Thompson, Paul, 856
- Theatre Pass Muraille Backspace (Toronto), 1100, 1353
- Théâtre Quatre-Sous (Montreal), 220
- Theatre Rhinoceros (San Francisco), 457, 510
- "Theatre Row" (New York), 989
- Theatre Royal (Dublin), 737
- Theatre Royal (Edinburgh), 1200
- Theatre Royal (London), 235, 340, 409, 548
- Theatre Royal Haymarket (London), 1460
- Theatres Act of 1968, 411–412
- Theatre Studio, 984
- Theatre Training and Research Programme (Singapore), 1247
- Theatre Troupe (Egypt), 391
- Theatre Union (New York), 105, 1083, 1257
- Theatre Week (Palestine), 1034
- Theatre West Writers' Workshop, 959
- Theatreworks (Australia), 1122
- TheatreWorks (Singapore), 104, 1006, 1247
- Theatre Workshop (London), 353, 409, 704, 840
- Theatre Workshop (Stratford East), 1111
- Theatre Workshop Company (Durban), 1264
- theatricality, 1342–1344
- The Theatrical Reform Association (England), 402
- Theatrical Syndicate (United States), 1396–1401
- Theatrica Wake Función velorio (Ribeiro), 1045
- Theatron Technis (Athens), 750
- Theatr Powys (Wales), 389
- Theatr y Byd (Wales), 1155
- Thebans (Lochhead), 829
- Thebes (Guo), 570
- The Theft of Moctezuma's Headdress (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
- Theft of the Pig (Estorino), 309
- Their Day (Topol), 316, 1366
- Then She Said It (Onwueme), 1008
- There is Nothing Bad Which Could Not Turn Into Something Worse. See The Madman and the Nun (Witkiewicz)
- There is Warmth Outside the House (Ma et al.), 881
- There Must Be a Pony (Crowley), 307
- Therese (Keller), 1315
- Thérèse Raquin (Zola), 475, 951, 1275, 1344, 1517
- There Shall Be No Night (Sherwood), 1237
- There's Not a Finer Country (Mitterer), 86
- There's Only One Playa (Raznovich), 1122
- There Was a Prisoner (Anouilh), 51
- There! You Died (Fornes), 106
- Thermidor (Przybyszewska), 1104
- Thermopylae (Branner), 186
- thesis plays, 473, 481, 659, 1517
- Thespis (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
- They (Witkiewicz), 1485
- They Are Dying Out (Handke), 580
- They Don't Wear Black Tie (Guarnieri), 60, 567–568, 1344–1345
- They Knew What They Wanted (Howard), 632, 1137, 1345–1346, 1401
- They'll Arrive Tomorrow (Shacham), 95, 710
- They Shall Not Die (Wexley), 1403
- They Signed with Three Crosses (Anzengruber), 82
- They Too Arise (Miller), 903, 904
- Theyyatheyyam (Panikkar), 1346
- The Thief-Catching Bear (Äkhundzādeh), 693
- Thieves (Bimko), 1508
- Thieves, Mannequins and Naked Women (Fo), 461
- Thijs, Ger, 957
- Thi Kinh, the Goddess of Mercy (traditional), 1422
- The Thing (Said), 1028
- Things of Dry Hours (Wallace), 1439
- Thing-Speil (Johst), 520
- Things Related to AIDS (Mou), 91
- Think It Over, Giacomino! (Pirandello), 1070
- Thiong'o, Ngugi wa. See Ngugi wa Thiong'o
- Third (Wasserstein), 1442
- The Third Man (Xenopoulos), 1495
- Third Reich. See Nazism, Third Reich
- The Third Richard (Noda), 971
- The Third Sector (Loher), 830
- Third Sister Liu (Niu et al.), 1347

- Third Stage (Tokyo), 772
 The Third Stake (Sorescu), 1260
 Third Street Theatre (New York), 829
 Third Studio, 927
 Third Theater (India), 673
 Third Theatre (India), 1248
 The Third Woman (Danquah), 23
 Third World nations, 1229
 Thirst (Salamanca Theatre), 73
 Thirteen Chances on Theater (Schmidhuber de la Mora), 1195
 Thirteen Dead (Duncan), 77
 The Thirteenth (Priede), 801
 The 13th Crusade (Björnsson), 654
 Thirteenth Night (Brenton), 414
 Thirtieth Century (Sircar), 1248
 Thirty Days in September (Dattani), 1347–1348
 Thirty-Two Teeth (Grass), 549
 Thirty Years Respite (Soya), 1267
 This Boat is a Sailboat (Yamazaki), 1500
 This Country Does Not Exist (Casas), 229, 554
 This Fine Pretty World (MacKaye), 848
 This Happy Breed (Coward), 297
 This Is (An Entertainment) (Williams), 1476
 This Is a Chair (Churchill), 265
 This is Also the Frontline (Liang), 810
 This Is the Army (Hellman), 1085
 This Lime Tree Bower (McPherson), 707, 886
 This Love Thing (Carr), 228
 This Music Crept by Me Upon the Waters (MacLeish), 850
 This Old Man Came Rolling Home (Hewett), 610
 This Property Is Condemned (Williams), 607, 1475
 This Side of the Door (McNally), 885
 This Thing of Darkness (Lucas and Schulner), 837
 This Time It Will Be Different (Pirandello), 1070
 This Train I'm On (McGee), 883
 This Was a Man (Coward), 300
 This Way Out with Samuel Boot (Stoppard), 1282
 This Way to the Tomb (Duncan), 378
 This Year of Grace (Coward), 406
 Thiyam, Ratan, 671, 675–676, 1348–1349; Army Formation, 64
 Thody, Philip, 972
 Thomas, Augustus, 634, 1349–1350, 1397–1398; As a Man Thinks, 1399
 Thomas, Brandon, 240
 Thomas, Dylan, 1350
 Thomas, Edward, 1350–1351; House of America, 629
 Thomas, Gwyn, 1351–1352; The Keep, 629, 759–760
 Thomas, Mitch Tawhi, 963
 Thomas Paine (Johst), 740
 Thompson, Chris, 73
 Thompson, Judith, 218, 219, 622, 1352; The Crackwalker, 301; Lion in the Streets, 823
 Thompson, Mervyn, 962, 1353
 Thompson, Paul, 561, 1353–1354; I Love You Baby Blue, 660; Maggie and Pierre, 218, 856
 Thomson, Katherine, 78
 Thomson, Virgil: The Mother of Us All, 471
 Thor, Johannes. See Goll, Yvan
 Thor, Tristan. See Goll, Yvan
 Þórðarson, Agnar, 654
 Thoreson, Magdalene, 647
 The Thorn Bush (Aizman), 1162
 Þorsteinsson, Þorvaldur, 655
 Those Damned Ghosts (De Filippo), 339
 Those Days (Shimizu), 1238
 Those Men! (D'Erzell), 345
 Those of Little Wisdom (Cañas), 293
 Those Who Committed Crimes (Miyoshi), 913
 A Thought in Three Parts (Shawn), 1229
 Thoughts on Our Lady of Scabs (Akimoto), 29
 A Thousand and One Nights of a Stone Thrower, 1034
 A Thousand and One Nights of the Nights of a Stone (Abu-Salim), 97
 Thou Shall Not Drink Your Neighbor (Dubillard), 376
 Thread Hell (Kishida), 769
 Three (Casas), 1107
 3 Weeks after Paradise (Horovitz), 625
 Three Acts of Recognition (Strauss), 522–523
 Three Children (Leow), 104, 809, 862
 Three Coins in a Fountain (Patrick), 1039
 The Three Daughters of Monsieur Dupont (Brieux), 200
 The Three Fat Men (Olesha), 995
 Three Gentlemen (Tardieu), 1330
 Three Girls in Blue (Petrushevskaya), 1168
 The Three Gods and the Butterflies (Riantiaro), 679
 Three Hotels (Baitz), 115
 300 Million (Arlt), 88
 Three in the Back, Two in the Head (Sherman), 1235
 Three Men in a Boat (Jerome), 1283
 391 journal, 319
 Three of Us (Crothers), 1399
 The Threepenny Opera (Brecht and Weill), 190, 519, 718, 989, 1121, 1133, 1193, 1209, 1343, 1354–1355
 Three Places in Rhode Island (Gray), 550
 Three Plays for a Negro Theatre (Torrence), 558
 Three Poets (Linney), 822
 Three Postcards (Lucas), 837
 Three Quarters of the Moon (Squarzina), 718
 Three Rats (Guerrero), 1052
 Three Seconds in the Key (Margolin), 871
 Three Sisters (Bond), 176
 Three Sisters (Chekhov), 244, 350, 364, 367, 369, 578, 721, 928, 1162, 1173, 1301, 1313, 1355–1356, 1371, 1405
 Three Smiles (Bao), 257
 Three Social Tableaus (Díez), 1418
 Three Tall Women (Albee), 32, 1356
 Three Top Hats (Mihura), 901–902, 1270
 Three Twins (Harbach and Hoschna), 811
 Three Uses of the Knife (Mamet), 863, 1085 threshing-house theater (Lithuania), 824
 Through Hell and Highwater for You (Gorostiza), 895 through-line, 350
 Through the Breakers (Davis), 891
 Throw Away Your Books (Terayama), 1334
 Throws Like a Girl (festival), 1273
 Thu Ly, 1423
 The Thunderbolt (Pinero), 1064
 Thunder in the Air (Strindberg), 236–237, 1297
 Thunder Rock (Ardrey), 565
 Thunderstorm (Cao), 223
 The Thunderstorm (Ostrovsky), 1019, 1356–1357
 Thury, Zoltán, 639
 Thus Shall We Win! (Shatrov), 1168
 Thus Spake Zarathustra (Nietzsche), 967

- Thy Condom Come (Magogodi), 102
- Thyestes (Claus), 269
- Tian Han, 252, 347, 1250, 1357–1358; Guan Hanquig, 254; The White Snake, 254, 1459–1460; Xie Yaohuan, 254
- Tian Shouchang. See Tian Han
- The Ticket-of-Leave Man* (Taylor), 401, 890, 1332, 1358
- The Tichlich Acrobat* (Hivnor), 281
- Tidal Wave (Paquet), 1076
- The Tide of the 1911 Revolution* (Xu), 1498
- The Tidings Brought to Mary* (Claudel), 269, 477
- Tieck, Ludwig, 368
- TIEDRIE. See Theater of the Third World in Europe
- Tiempo, César, 61
- Tier Mon (La Fura dels Baus), 232
- Tierno Bokar (Brook), 1130
- Tierranegro (Costa Rica), 294
- Tiezzi, Federico, 719
- Tiger, Tiger (Osborne), 1015
- The Tiger and the Horse* (Bolt), 174
- Tiger at the Gates*. See The Trojan War Will Not Take Place (Giraudoux)
- Tiger at the Gates* (Cocteau), 480
- The Tiger of Johor* (Husain), 642
- Tiger Tail* (Williams), 1476
- Ti-Jean and His Brothers (Walcott), 417, 1436
- Tikwiza Theatre (Zambia), 22
- Til (Gorin), 1168
- Tiled Roof, Thatched Roof* (Yassin), 861
- Till the Day I Die* (Odets), 564, 1436
- TIM. See Taman Ismail Marzuki (Jakarta)
- time, treatment of: Adamov, Arthur, 10; Albertine in Five Times (Tremblay), 34; Anatol (Schnitzler), 41; Andorra (Frisch), 44; Anna Sophie Hedvig (Abell), 50; Apollinaire, Guillaume, 56; Arcadia (Stoppard), 58; The Bathhouse (Mayakovsky), 125; Beckett, Samuel, 128; Betrayal (Pinter), 154; Blood Relations (Pollock), 171; Break the Heart (Vianna Filho), 189; Butterfly Kiss (Nagy), 209
- Timeache* (Kroetz), 783
- Time and the Conways* (Priestley), 1099
- Time and the Room* (Strauss), 1288
- Timebends* (Miller), 903, 904, 1098
- Time Best Play of the Year*, 166
- Time Bomb* (Riantiarino), 679
- Time is a Dream* (Lenormand), 479
- Time Is Our Home* (Norén), 973
- Timeless* (Suspect Culture), 1309
- Time of My Life* (Ayckbourn), 110
- The Time of Your Life* (Saroyan), 1187, 1358–1359, 1404
- A Time on Earth* (Moberg), 1312
- Time Plays* (Priestley), 1099
- Times Square Theatre* (New York), 494–495
- A Time to Die* (Bentley), 147
- A Time to Live* (Bentley), 147
- The Tinker's Wedding* (Synge), 1321
- Tin Pan Alley, 744
- Tinplate (Kemal), 1386
- The Tin Sword* (Dutt), 383
- Tiny Alice (Albee), 32
- Tiny Small Brushwood Rods* (Putniņš), 801
- Tiongson, Nicanor, 1051
- 'Tis a Pity She's a Whore (Ford), 1125
- Tisch School of the Arts (New York), 786
- Tishrope Lady* (Løveid), 835
- Tissue* (Page), 1027
- Titanic (Stone), 814
- Tit-Coq (Gélinas), 220
- The Title* (Galin), 1169
- Titus Andronicus (Dürrenmatt), 381
- To (Two)* (Cartwright), 229
- To, Raymond*, 1359–1360; Where Love Abides, 238
- Toadshow* (Australian theater), 73
- To Anchor a Cloud* (Hiro), 1029
- Toast* (Bean), 126
- Tobacco Road* (Kirkland), 1404
- To Be or Not to Be* (al-Ānī), 698
- To Bet Not to Be Angry* (Rama V), 1118
- To Create a Man* (Kısakürek), 1386
- To Damascus I, II, and III* (Strindberg), 107, 362, 432, 527, 919, 1130, 1296, 1319, 1360–1361
- Today They Eat the Skinny One* (Dragún), 358
- Todorov, P. Y., 206
- To Each According to His Hunger* (Mogin), 143
- To Each His Own Flower* (Rojas), 294
- To Find Oneself* (Pirandello), 1071
- Toga Festival, 49
- To Gian*, 1423
- To Hatch a Swan* (Kon), 775
- To Have Done with the Judgement of God* (Artaud), 68
- Toings on the Long Road* (Brink), 1263
- The Toilet* (Baraka), 121
- Toilet* (Guo), 571
- Toklas, Alice B., 1279
- Tokugawa shogunate (Japan), 758
- Tokutomi Roka, 1241
- Tokyo Atomic Club (Makino), 860
- Tokyo Battery Theater, 722
- Tokyo Notes* (Oriza), 614, 1361
- Tokyo School of Actors, 1499
- Tokyo Story* (Yasujiro), 1361
- Tokyo Takarazuka Theater (Japan), 1324
- Tokyo Trial (Sakate), 1180
- Tolentino, Aurelio: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow, 1052
- Tolins, Jonathan, 511
- To Live in Santa Fe* (Dorr), 356
- Toller (Dorst), 1361
- Toller, Ernst, 54, 92, 108, 520, 1361–1363, 1427; Hoppla, Such Is Life!, 1076; Hoppla, We're Alive, 519; Hurrah, This Is Life!, 1121; Man and the Masses, 432; Masses and Man, 518; Transfiguration, 432, 1373
- Tolmezzo (Streeruwitz), 1289
- Tolnai, Ottó, 641
- Tolstoy, Aleksei Konstantinovich, 368, 1161, 1163, 1173; Tsar Fyodor Ioannovich, 926
- Tolstoy, Lyov, 1363–1364; A Contaminated Family, 1160; The Power of Darkness, 367, 1094, 1370; Chekhov, Anton, 243; critical realism, 1161; dramatic structure, 367; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 592; naturalism, 951; O'Neill, Eugene, 1000; Ostrovsky, Aleksandr, 1019; Shaw, George Bernard, 1227
- Tom and Viv (Hastings), 394
- Tomás Angola, José, 1419
- Tombstone and Cocoa* (Eörsi), 640
- Tomei, Marisa, 420
- Tomer, Ben-Zion, 95
- Tom Jones (Osborne), 1016
- Tommy (Lindsay and Robinson), 821
- Tomorrow at Another Meadow* (Anday), 1387
- Tomorrow Will Be a Lovely Day* (Harrison), 962
- Tom Thumb (Brigadere), 800
- Tom-Tom (Norge), 142
- To My Terror . . .* (Bergman), 149
- Tong Huu Dinh, 1422
- Tong Phuoc Pho, 1422

- Tongues (Chaikin and Shepard), 1233
- Tonight Is a Moonlit Night (Bàbella), 696
- Tonight the Turtle Cries (Hassan), 591
- Tonight We Improvise (Pirandello), 281, 1071, 1251, 1364–1365
- tonil, 678
- Tony and Tina's Wedding (Corcoran and Corcoran), 423
- Tony Award: Albee, Edward, 32; Bennett, Alan, 146; Crouse, Russel, 821; Ebb, Fred, 354; Fierstein, Harvey, 450, 451, 510, 1410; Frayn, Michael, 489; Hansberry, Lorraine, 1116; Hwang, David Henry, 643; Kander, John, 354; Kaufman, George S., 757; Kushner, Tony, 46, 787; Lindsay, Howard, 821; McDonagh, Martin, 706; McNally, Terrence, 885; Medoff, Mark, 887; Norman, Marsha, 974; Osborn, Paul, 925, 1015; Osborne, John, 1016; Patrick, John, 1039; Pinter, Harold, 1068; Pomerance, Bernard, 1089; Rabe, David, 1113, 1280; Reza, Yasmina, 67; Shaffer, Peter, 424, 1217; Shanley, John Patrick, 356; Simon, Neil, 1246; Spewack, Bella, 1272; Spewack, Sam, 1272; Stoppard, Tom, 354, 1125, 1152, 1282, 1283; Wasserstein, Wendy, 602, 1442; Williams, Tennessee, 1474; Wilson, August, 447, 1060, 1480; Wright, Doug, 645
- Too Good to be True (Shaw), 1227
- Too Many Thumbs (Hivnor), 281
- Too Much Johnson (Gillette), 532
- Tooth and Claw (McGee), 883
- Tooth and Nail (Junction Avenue), 102, 1264
- The Tooth of Crime (Shepard), 1233
- Too Young for Ghosts (Balodis), 119
- Topacio, Soxie, 1051
- Topdog/Underdog (Parks), 41, 1413
- Top End (Romeril), 1151
- Top Girls (Churchill), 264, 417, 446, 919, 1365
- To Phaedra (Enquist), 418
- To Pick Up the Rose (Trzebiński), 1081
- To Play with Fire (Cespedes), 1052
- Topography of a Nude (Díaz), 1365–1366
- Topol, Josef, 1366–1367; The End of the Carnival, 316; Farewell, Socrates, 317; Midnight Wind, 316; Their Day, 316
- Topor, Roland, 485
- Tör, Vedat Nadim: Between Three People, 1386; The Unemployed, 1386; Without Roots, 1386
- The Torchbearers (Kelly), 760, 1401
- Torch Song Trilogy (Fierstein), 450, 510, 1410
- Torcuato Di Tella Institute (Buenos Aires), 89, 729
- Torelli, Achille, 714
- The Torgersen Case (Bjørneboe), 162
- Tornadoes Full of Dreams (Sowande), 24
- Toro (Manaka), 1265
- Toronto, Mississippi (MacLeod), 850
- Toronto at Dreamer's Rock (Taylor), 1331
- Toronto Co-Operative Commonwealth Drama Club, 840
- Toronto Free Theatre, 1437–1438
- Toronto Little Playhouse, 764
- Toronto Workshop Productions, 840
- Torrence, Ridgely, 285; Three Plays for a Negro Theatre, 558
- Torrens, Luis Llorens: Shout of Lares, 1106
- The Torrents (Gray), 77
- Torsi, Tristan. See Goll, Yvan
- torture, 681
- The Torture of Pleasure (Berman), 150
- To Russia with Love (Mason), 875
- totalitarianism: Flight to the West (Rice), 1137; Kaiser, Georg, 747; Lithuania, 824; Rhinocéros (Ionesco), 690; Sawdust (Skukálek), 1254; Sorrow, Sorrow, Fear, the Noose and the Pit (Steigerwald), 1278
- Totally Over You (Ravenhill), 1121
- Total Rethink (Black Mime Theatre Women's Troupe), 417
- total theater, 18, 506–507, 516, 1076
- "Total Theatre" (Mácza), 92
- Totenauberg (Jelinek), 730
- To the Ladies (Connelly), 284
- To the Rapist (Dragún), 1009
- To the Sign at the End of the Road (Abe), 2
- The Toth Family (Örkény), 640, 1011, 1367–1368
- Touareg (Werewere-Liking), 25
- The Touch of Silk (Roland), 77
- A Touch of the Poet (O'Neill), 362, 1004, 1005, 1368–1369
- Touch of the Sun (Renée), 1132
- Touchstone Theatre (Vancouver), 1456
- Toulouse-Lautrec, Henri, 728
- The Tour Guide (Strauss), 1288
- The Tower (Hofmannsthal), 619
- The Tower (Porter), 73
- The Tower of Nesle (Dumas fils), 472
- Town Hall Theatre (Galway), 707
- township theater (South Africa), 101–102, 1263. See also community theater; regional theater
- Toy, Erol: Pir Sultan Abdal, 1387
- Toy Factory Ensemble (Singapore), 1247
- Toys in the Attic (Hellman), 607
- Tractor (Müller), 937–938
- trade unions, 1344
- traditional theater, by country or region. See also indigenous people and performance. Afghanistan, 13; Africa, 15; China, 90; India, 158, 663, 670–671; Indonesia, 679–680, 1136; Iran, 691–692, 695–696; Iraq, 697–698; Malaysia, 861; Southeast Asia, 102–104; Spain, 1133; Taiwan, 795; Thailand, 1117–1118; Uganda, 1158
- A Tragedian in Spite of Himself (Chekhov), 242–243
- A Tragedy (Mayakovsky), 880, 1163
- tragedy, 18, 555–556, 1267, 1369–1371
- tragedy, plays and playwrights: After the Reunion (Chen), 26; All God's Chillun Got Wings (O'Neill), 37; Almighty Voice and His Wife (Moses), 39; Anderson, Maxwell, 43; Ariadne (Tsvetayeva), 1163; Beyond Human Power I and II (Bjørnson), 157; Blok, Aleksandr, 169; Blood Wedding (García Lorca), 172; Buero Vallejo, Antonio, 203; Death of a Salesman (Miller), 335; Earth Spirit (Wedekind), 385; Echegaray, José, 388; Elizabeth the Queen (Anderson), 395; Erdman, Nikolai, 425; Ibsen, Henrik, 647, 649; tragedy (continued)

- In Abraham's Bosom (Green), 661–662; The Infernal Machine (Cocteau), 681; Kirtivilas (Gupta), 668; Liebelei (Schnitzler), 815–816; The Masquerade (Lermontov), 1160; Nietzsche, Friedrich, 966; Ondine (Giraudoux), 998; Pavel I (Merezhkovsky), 1164; Phaedra (Tsvetayeva), 1163; Rain from Heaven (Behrman), 1114–1115; Razumovskaya, Lyudmila, 1169; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht), 1133–1134; Riders to the Sea (Synge), 701, 1138–1139; Royal Guests (Hernández), 1156; Tsarevich Aleksei (Merezhkovsky), 1164; Upits, Adrejs, 801; Vinaver, Michel, 1425; West Side Story (Laurents), 814; Xi Shi Returns to the Kingdom of Yue (Luo), 839
- The Tragedy of Judas, Prince of Iscariot* (Remizov), 1164, 1174
- The Tragedy of King Christophe* (Césaire), 236, 1206
- The Tragedy of Lanzhi and Zhongqing* (Xiong), 1496
- The Tragedy of the Confidantes* (Genet). See The Maids (Genet)
- Tragedy on the Lake* (Tian), 1357
- tragicomedy, 1371–1372; Anouilh, Jean, 51; Art (Reza), 67; Becque, Henry, 134; Behrman, S. N., 977; The Big Funk (Shanley), 1219; By the Light of Others' Candles (Ptushkina), 1170; The Collected Works of Billy the Kid (Ondaatje), 278; Creditors (Strindberg), 302; Daphne Laureola (Bridie), 327; Dürrenmatt, Friedrich, 380; Gallows Humor (Richardson), 1138; The Homecoming (Pinter), 623; The Moth (Gladilin), 1170; O'Casey, Sean, 745, 986, 1079, 1216; The Red Passion (Sorbul), 1149; The Zoo Story (Albee), 1517–1518
- The Tragic Wait* (Pavlovsky), 89
- tragifarce. See farce
- tragi-farce, 1513
- The Trail of Lucullus* (Brecht), 196
- Trainspotting (Welsh; Gibson; Boyle), 1201, 1372–1373
- Traitors (Sewell), 1215
- Transfiguration (Toller), 54, 432, 1362, 1373
- The Transfiguration of Benno Blimpie* (Innaurato), 683
- transformation, 857–858
- The Transitional Society* (Braun), 524
- Translations (Friel), 450, 491, 706, 1274, 1373–1374
- Transposition 21, 1180
- Transylvanian Triptych (Páskándi), 1038
- The Trap* (Casas), 229
- The Trap* (Ørnsbo), 1012
- The Trap* (Rózewicz), 1157
- The Trap* (Ross), 961
- Trapped (Nadeem), 947
- The Trapped Prometheus* (Olsen), 996
- Traps (Dürrenmatt), 380, 381
- A Travel Adventure* (Bracco), 183
- Traveler Without Luggage* (Anouilh), 51
- Travelling (Pendovski), 845
- Travelling North (Williamson), 1478
- The Travels of Benjamin III* (Abramovitsh and Granovsky), 929, 1508
- Traverse Theatre (Edinburgh), 176, 559, 939
- Travesties (Stoppard), 58, 280, 411, 1283, 1284, 1374–1375
- Treadwell, Sophie, 105, 445, 1375; Machinal, 433, 846–847, 916, 1399, 1401
- The Treason of Novara* (Arx), 1316
- The Treasure* (Pinski), 1508
- Treaty of Versailles*, 1080
- The Tree* (Jones), 961
- Tree, Herbert Beerbohm, 404, 713
- Trehet, Jacqueline, 9
- Trejo, Nemesio, 61
- Trelawny of the "Wells" (Pinero), 1064
- Trelawny of the "Wells" (Robertson), 401
- Tremblay, Larry, 221
- Tremblay, Michel, 217, 487, 613, 1375–1376; Albertine in Five Times, 34; Hosanna, 220, 510, 627–628; In Detached Parts, 869; La duchesse de Langeais, 220; Marcel Pursued by Hounds, 868–869; Sisters-in-Law, 220, 221, 628, 868, 1249
- Tremor (Domínguez), 1418
- trench warfare, 1236
- Trendy Red Skirts (Jia and Ma), 255, 881
- Trenyov, Konstantin, 1164; Lyubov Yarovaya, 927; Pugachovoy Rebellion, 927
- Tretyakov, Sergei, 1164, 1376–1377
- The Trial* (Kafka), 437
- Trial* (Kon), 775
- The Trial* (Kureishi), 786
- The Trial* (Pinter), 1068
- The Trial* (Zālīte), 802
- Trial by Jury* (Gilbert and Sullivan), 531
- The Trial of Baron Wrangel* (documentary drama), 368
- The Trial of Dedan Kimathi* (Ngugi and Mugo), 965
- The Trial of Gaekwar*, 666
- The Trial of Judith K.* (Clark), 268
- The Trial of Mallam Ilya* (Abdallah), 1, 24
- The Trial of Mary Dugan* (Vieller), 891
- The Trial of the Catonsville Nine* (Berrigan), 353, 1087, 1130
- The Trial of the Kronstadt Insurrectionists* (Vishnevsky), 1010
- Trials and Tribulations* (Soyinka), 1267
- The Trials of Brother Jero* (Soyinka), 24, 1267
- Triana, José, 1377–1378; Brotherhood Park, 309; Common Words, 310; Medea in the Mirror, 309
- Triangle (Martínez Seirra), 873
- Trianon Theater (Vienna), 1450
- Tribunal of Conscience (Vu), 1423
- Tricycle (Spain), 232
- trickster characters, 1415
- The Tricycle* (Arrabal), 65
- Tricycle Theatre (London), 566, 878, 1027
- The Tridget of Greva* (Lardner), 800
- Triennial Award for Theatre (Netherlands), 269
- Triennial Award Prize (Belgium), 749
- Trifles (Glaspell), 36, 105, 536, 1378–1379, 1400
- Trilogy of Dilettantes* (Guo), 571
- Trinidad Sisters (Matura), 878
- Trinity Repertory Theater (Providence), 173, 1429
- Trilogy of the Countryside* (Hong), 624
- The Trip* (Piñera), 1063
- Triple-A Plowed Under* (Arent), 1084
- Triple-Sec (Blitzstein), 168
- triplication of the actor, 90
- The Trip to Bountiful* (Foote), 464
- A Trip to Chinatown* (Hoyt), 635, 1398
- Trip to Paradise* (Soyfer), 85
- The Trip to the Mental Hospital* Sankt Hans (Jepsen), 733

- Triptych of the House of Arpád (Páskándi), 1038
 Triptych: Three Scenic Panels (Frisch), 493
 Triptycht Lesbian (Marchessault), 869
 Triseugeni (Palamas), 556
 Tristan and Isolde (Wagner), 1055, 1319, 1433
 The Triumph of Death (Rudkin), 416
 The Triumph of Death (Sologub), 99, 1164, 1174
 Trofimov, Aleksandr, 1161
 The Trojan Horse (MacLeish), 849–850
 The Trojan War Will Not Take Place (Giraudoux), 480, 534, 1369, 1379
 The Trojan Women (Euripides), 1189, 1311
 The Tropical Tree (Mishima), 910
 Tropicana, Carmelita, 511
 tropism, 1188
 Trostsky in Exile (Weiss), 1452, 1453
 Trotsky, Etc. (Kalisky), 749
 Troubled Island (Hughes), 637
 Trouble in Mind (Childress), 249–250
 Troubles in Mind (Childress), 1086
 Troupe Theatre (Adelaide, Australia), 75
 Troyano, Ela, 468
 True and False: Heresy and Common Sense for the Actor (Mamet), 863
 True Envy (Gambaro), 62
 True Hero: Melodrama (Howells), 634–635
 The True Story of Ah Q (Chen), 245
 The True Story of Ah Q (Hein), 604
 The True Story of Itagaki's Misfortunes (Kawakami), 757
 True West (Shepard), 312, 1233, 1379–1380
 The Trumpet Shall Sound (Wilder), 1469
 The Trung Queens (Phan and Tong), 1422
 Truong Ba's Spirit in a Butcher's Body (Luu), 1423 Trust the People (Houghton), 628 truth, 1139
 The Truth (Fitch), 456, 1380–1381, 1398
 The Truth about Blayds (Milne), 406, 1381
 Truth and Faith (Lebensohn), 709
 Truth Prevails (al-Guzi), 1031
 Try for White (Warner), 1263
 Trying to Fly (Radichkov), 206
 Trzebinski, Andrzej: To Pick Up the Rose, 1081
 Tsar Boris (Tolstoy), 1161
 Tsarevich Aleksei (Merezhkovsky), 1164
 Tsarevitch (Zapolska), 1513
 Tsar Fyodor Ioannovich (Tolstoy), 368, 926, 1161
 Tsar Hunger (Andreev), 45, 817
 Tsar Potap (Kopkov), 1165
 The Tsar's Hunt (Zorin), 1167
 Tsegaye Gabre-Medhin, 1381–1382
 Tseng, Muna, 261
 T-Shirts (Patrick), 510
 Tsubouchi Memorial Theatre Museum (Japan), 1383
 Tsubouchi Shōyō, 726, 757, 1014, 1239–1241, 1382–1383; En the Ascetic, 422
 Tsuka Kōhei, 728, 992, 1180, 1383–1384; The Atami Murder Case, 69
 Tsuka Kōhei Company, 69
 Tsukiji Little Theatre (Japan), 913; commercial theater, 727; Kubo Sakae, 783; Kubota Mantarō, 784; Murayama Tomoyoshi, 940; Osanai Kaoru, 1014; Senda Koreya, 1208; shingeki, 1238; Tanaka Chikao, 1328; Tsubouchi Shōyō, 422; Yamamoto Yūzō, 1499
 Tsukijiza Theater Company, 784
 Tsuno Kaitarō, 48, 98, 99
 Tsuruya Nanboku Drama Award, 860
 Tsuruya Nanboku IV, 1310
 Tsvetayeva, Marina, 841, 1163, 1174
 Tubelsky, Leonid, 1166
 Tughlaq (Karnad), 596, 753, 1384
 Tulloch, Richard, 73
 tulut (Turkey), 1385
 Tum Teav (Chheng), 212
 Tun Fatimah, or the Secret of the Fall of Malacca (Husain), 642
 Tuomarila, Ilpo, 454
 tuong theater, 1422–1423
 Tupac-Amaru (Dragún), 358
 Turandot (Brecht), 195
 Turandot (Wei), 1451
 A Turban Has Fallen (Celal), 1386
 Turbulent Times (Kinoshita), 1240
 Turgenev, Ivan, 721, 1160, 1162; A Month in the Country, 921; On the Eve, 390
 Turja, Ilmari, 454
 Turkey, 693, 1384–1388
 Turkka, Jouko, 454
 The Turnabout of Ferdyš Pištora (Langer), 797
 Turnage, Mark Antony, 1244
 Turner, Douglas, 105
 Turner, Victor, 686; From Ritual to Drama, 1044
 Turrini, Peter, 86, 1388–1389, 1431
 Turtle Diary (Pinter), 1068
 Tutor Dong and Widow Li (Wang), 1440, 1441
 Tutuola, Amos: The Palm Wine Drinkard, 1058
 TV Days (Iwamatsu), 722
 Twain, Mark, 214, 589
 Twelfth Night (Shakespeare), 970, 1405
 20th Century (Yamazaki), 1500
 20th century, 1518–1519; comedy vs. tragedy in, 380; documentary drama, 352; dramatic monologue, 550–551; female playwrights, 113; kitchen sink drama, 340; librettists, 813–815; philosophical drama, 1054–1058; Yiddish theater, 614
 The Twentieth Century (Hecht and MacArthur), 494
 Twenty Minutes with an Angel (Vampilov), 1167
 Twenty Thousand Pesos from a Fan (Fortoul), 1418
 25th of Shahrivar Hall (Iran), 695
 Twenty-Fifth Street House Theatre (Canada), 561
 A Twig in the Wind (Chashule), 844
 Twilight (Vojnović), 1430
 Twilight Crane (Kinoshita), 727, 767, 1389–1390
 Twilight: Los Angeles (Mann), 864
 Twilight: Los Angeles (Smith), 353
 Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992 (Smith), 1255
 Twinkle Twinkle Little Fish (Tulloch), 73
 The Twisting of the Rope (Hyde), 1111
 200E a Year (Pinero), 1063
 2 (Linney), 822
 2-2-Tango (MacIvor), 847
 Two Acts for Five Women (Vik), 977
 Two Amerindians Visit (Fusco and Gómez-Peña), 686
 The Two-Character Play (Williams), 1475
 Two Crystal Glasses (Raos), 304
 The Two Executioners (Arrabal), 65
 The Two Faces of the Owner (Valdez), 1415
 Two Grandmothers (Leow), 809
 Two Hearts (Mushakōji), 1499
 200,000 (Aleichem), 1508. See also The Big Win (Aleichem)

- The Two Kuni-Lemls (Goldfaden), 540
 Two-Legged Torben (Knutzon), 772
 Two Men of Sandy Bar (Harte), 588, 1397
 The Two Orphans (Hart et al.), 889–890
 Two or Three Things About Hong Kong (Yung), 1510
 Two Panicky Old Folks (Piñera), 309–310, 1063
 Two Rooms (Blessing), 166
 Two Shakespearean Actors (Nelson), 954
 Two Slaterns and a King (Millay), 902
 The Two Theatres (Szaniawski), 1081
 Two Threads (Soya), 1267
 Two Trains Running (Wilson), 1479, 1480
 Two Undiscovered Amerindians Visit . . . (Fusco and Gomez-Peña), 87
 Two-Way Mirror (Miller), 906
 Two Weeks with the Queen (Morris), 73
 Two Widows (Suzuki), 1310
 Two Women (Kara), 752
 Tynan, Kenneth, 147, 337, 360, 370, 990
 Tynyanov, Jurij, 466
 Typhoon (Lengyel), 639
 Typhoon Kitty (Fukuda), 497 tyrants. See dictators
 Tzanev, Stefan, 206
 Tzara, Tristan, 108, 239, 319–320, 476, 1149, 1284, 1308, 1374
 UBE423 (Botswana), 23
 Ubu and the Truth Commission (Kentridge), 102
 Ubu Roi (Jarry), 107, 360, 477–478, 691, 728, 1391. See also Ubu Trilogy (Jarry)
 Ubu's Almanac (Jarry), 728. See also Ubu Trilogy (Jarry)
 Ubu the Cuckold (Jarry), 728, 1391. See also Ubu Trilogy (Jarry)
 Ubu Trilogy (Jarry), 6, 1391
 Ubu Unchained (Jarry), 728, 1391. See also Ubu Trilogy (Jarry)
 Uchimura Naoya, 1239
 UCLA Performing Arts Center (Los Angeles), 1250
 Udnæs, Sverre, 977
 Uganda, 18, 1158, 1212–1213
 Ugarov, Mikhail, 1169, 1170
 Ugarte, Eduardo, 1339
 The Ugly Girl (Tsegaye), 1382
 The Ugly Man (Fraser), 488
 UGT. See Unión General de Trabajadores (UGT)
 Uhde, Milan, 316
 Uhlár, Blaho, 1255
 Ukala, Sam, 626
 U Ku, 208
 U Kyin U, 208
 Ulaloo (Carr), 228
 Ulf (Gene), 62
 Ulvedalene open-air theater (Denmark), 357
 Ulys, Pieter-Dirk, 1264
 Ulysees from Vrâ (Ørnsbo), 1012
 Ulysses (Joyce), 985, 1350, 1374
 Umabatha (Msomi), 1264
 Umbabumba (Soya), 1266
 An Umbrella and Sandals (Iwamatsu), 722
 Umongikazi (Maponya), 1264
 Unamuno, Miguel de, 109, 1270
 The Unattainable (Maugham), 879
 The Unburied Dead (Duncan), 378
 Uncle Jimmy (Gale), 503
 Uncle Nat (Herne), 1242
 An Uncle's Blessing (Tolstoy), 1363
 Uncle Tom's Cabin (Aiken), 891, 892
 Uncle Tom's Cabin (Taylor), 1332
 Uncle Vanya (Chekhov), 243–244, 721, 1162, 1355, 1371, 1392
 Uncommon Women and Others (Wasserstein), 602, 1393, 1442
 The Underground Man (Boychev), 206 underground playwriting, 1081 underground theater. See angura; censorship
 The Underpants (Sternheim), 517, 1279, 1280, 1393–1394
 Under the Eaves of Shanghai (Xia), 1496
 Under the Gaslight (Daly), 322, 891, 892, 1394–1395, 1397
 Under the Whaleback (Bean), 126, 1395
 Under the Yoke (Vazov), 205
 Under Two Flags (Belasco), 140
 Underwood (Shvarts), 1243
 the underworld, 761, 1189
 Undesirable Elements (Chong), 260–261
 Undiscovered Country (Schnitzler), 84, 1284
 The Unemployed (Tör), 1386
 The Unexpected Guests (Howells), 634
 The Unexpected Man (Reza), 1135
 An Unexpected Mulatto Child (Martínez), 1418
 Unexpected Return (Strauss), 524
 The Unfair Fight (Rozov), 1166
 Unfinished Women Die in a No-Man's Land While a Bird Dies in a Gilded Cage (Rahman), 729
 Unforgettable (Vishnevsky), 1165
 The Unfortunate is Lucky (Hamidy), 861
 Unga Klara (Stockholm), 1314
 The Unheroic North (Denison), 1427
 Unicorn Arts Theatre (England), 125
 Unidentified Human Remains and the True Nature of Love (Fraser), 488, 1395–1396
 The Uniform (Abe), 2
 Unión de Autores Dramáticos, 896
 Unión General de Trabajadores (UGT), 1339 union movement, 92, 1401–1404
 Union of South African Artists, 1262
 Union of Writers and Artists of Cuba, 309, 310
 Union Pacific (MacLeish), 849
 Union Repertory Theatre Company (Melbourne, Australia), 73
 Union Square Theatre, 944
 Union Theatre Repertory Company (Melbourne), 802
 United States, 1396–1414. See also O'Neill, Eugene; political drama; realism; United States Civil War.
 19th century drama, 322, 331, 587, 609; late-19th century drama, 214, 630; 20th century drama, 213, 233, 248, 249, 306–308, 311, 606, 624, 633, 1014; early-20th century drama, 284, 575, 632; late-20th century drama, 602, 607, 633; 21st century drama, 261, 356; African American contributions, 446–447, 471, 558, 561–562, 1129; alternative theaters, 568; antiwar drama, 353; art theater movement, 1001; Asian American theater, 238, 260, 643; avant-garde drama, 105–106, 1025; Black Arts Movement, 381, 583; black performers, 1002; censorship, 634, 984, 1002–1003; Civic Theater movement, 282; comedy, 279, 281, 587; community theater, 282–283; copyright

- laws, 631; criticism, 359, 634; culture wars, 636; dadism, 319–320; Depression era drama, 302, 348, 441–443, 563–565, 588, 632, 987–989; documentary drama, 352–353; dramaturgy, 370–371; exiles from Nazi invasions, 520; experimental theater, 1024–1025; feminist drama, 444–446; frontier drama, 1397; gay and lesbian themes, 509–511; Gilded Age, 631, 635; guerilla theater, 568–569; Happenings, 584; Harlem Renaissance, 558, 636, 641–642; House Un-American Activities Committee, 442; industrialization, effects of, 1396–1397; influence in the Philippines, 1052–1053; Interwar drama, 285, 346, 611, 621, 1001; literary manager, 371; Living Theatre, 828–829; musical theater, 811–815; National Endowment for the Arts v. Finley, 636; Native American drama, 218; Negro folk comedy, 637; new American realism, 598; New York City, 989–991, 994, 1025; New York Drama League, 1002; play doctors, 371; regional theater, 371; religious theater, 1129; reviews, 635; satire, 378–379; “satisfactory” drama, 631; SITI Company, 1250–1251; social activism and drama, 333–334; social gospel, 1127–1128; socialist realism, 1256; social plays, 632; social thesis plays, 632; Southern gothic school, 608; Split Britches, 1273; World War II drama, 637
- United States, playwrights: Baraka, Amiri, 381; Barry, Philip, 621; Berrigan, Daniel, 1130; Boucicault, Dionysius, 1140–1141; Bronson, Howard, 630; Campbell, Bartley, 213; Childress, Alice, 249; Daly, Augustin, 322; Durang, Christopher, 378; Ferber, Edna, 348; Hansberry, Lorraine, 583, 1116; Hare, David, 586; Harrigan, Edward G., 587; Hart, Moss, 588, 997; Harte, Bret, 588; Hellman, Lillian, 248, 606; Henley, Beth, 607; Herne, James A., 609; Heyward, Dorothy and Dubose, 611; Howard, Sidney, 632; Howe, Tina, 633; Howells, William Dean, 634; Hoyt, Charles H., 634; Hughes, Holly, 636; Hughes, Langston, 636; Hurston, Zora Neale, 636; Kanin, Garson, 751–752; Kaufman, George S., 348, 756–757, 997; Kelly, George, 760; Kennedy, Adrienne, 761–763; Kingsley, Sidney, 333, 766–767; Kopit, Arthur, 775–776; Kramer, Larry, 778–779; Kushner, Tony, 786–789, 1130; Mamet, David, 994; Miller, Arthur, 335; Odets, Clifford, 987; O'Neill, Eugene, 805–806; Osborn, Paul, 1014; Overmyer, Eric, 1024; Owens, Rochelle, 1025; Rabe, David, 1113; Reinhardt, Max, 1127; Rice, Elmer, 1136–1137; Richardson, Jack, 1138; Rivera, José, 1141; Robins, Elizabeth, 1144; Saroyan, William, 1187–1188; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 1190; Shange, Ntozake, 1218; Shanley, John Patrick, 356, 1218–1219; Shawn, Wallace, 1228–1229; Sheldon, Edward, 1230–1231; Shepard, Sam, 1231–1234; Sherman, Martin, 1235–1236; Sherwood, Robert E., 1237; Simon, Neil, 987, 1246–1247; Smith, Anna Deavere, 1255–1256; Spewack, Bella, 1271–1272; Spewack, Sam, 1271–1272; Stein, Gertrude, 1279; Wales Padlock Law, 510; Wasserstein, Wendy, 602; Wilder, Thornton, 1023; Williams, Tennessee, 213, 233; Yankowitz, Susan, 1501–1502; Zuckmayer, Carl, 1519
- United States Civil War, 1396–1401; Gillette, William, 532; Secret Service (Gillette), 1208; Shenandoah (Howard), 1231
- The United States Versus Cruz, Abad, and Tolentino (Ilgan), 659
- Unity Theatre (Wellington), 875, 961, 1201
- University of Houston, School of Theatre, 33
- University of Saskatchewan Award, 894
- University of the Philippines, 1052
- University Women's Club (Vancouver, Canada), 764
- The Unknown Woman (Blok), 169, 611, 1107, 1163, 1174
- The Unknown Woman of Arras (Salacrou), 1182
- Unlikely Places (Dryland), 962
- Unlimited Liability Company (Soyinka), 1267
- Uno Nobuo, 1241
- Unruh, Fritz von, 364, 518
- An Unseasonable Fall of Snow (Henderson), 962
- The Unseen Hand (Shepard), 1233
- Unsinkable (Bean), 126
- Unt, Mati, 429
- Untilouisk (Leonov), 1277
- An Untimely Visit (Copi), 289
- Untitled Monologue (Williamson), 76
- Untouchable (Landon-Smith), 417
- The Untouchables (Mamet), 863
- Untraceable Path (Rosales), 1418
- Unwrap Your Candy (Wright), 1491
- Up for Grabs (Wolfe), 1487
- Up from Paradise (Miller), 906
- Upits, Adrejs, 801
- U Pon Nya, 208
- Upper Austria (Kroetz), 782
- Uprising (Gibson), 79
- Upstairs at the Royal Court (London), 126, 166, 263, 335, 786, 1395. See also Royal Court Theatre (London)
- Up the Ladder (Bennett), 79
- Up the Road (Harding), 79
- Upwardly Mobile Home (Margolin et al.), 871, 1273
- Urban Arts Corps, 1087
- Urban Blight (Tally), 1327
- Urban League's Opportunity Award, 739
- Urban Renewal (Havel), 317, 595
- urban theater, 669–671, 986, 1007
- Urdaneta, Orlando, 1419
- Urdu (language), 1027
- Urfaust (Dürrenmatt), 381
- Uriel Acosta (Gutzkow), 928
- Uruguay, 88, 1183–1184, 1508
- Urvantsov, Lev, 1163
- US, 412
- Us (Five Arts Center), 862
- Useless People (Lundán), 454
- Usigli, Rodolfo, 608, 1414; Corona Trilogy, 291; Crown of Fire, 896; Crown of Light, 896; Crown of Shadow, 896–897; The Imposter, 896
- Uslar Pietri, Arturo, 1418

- U.S./Mexico Fund for Culture Award, 923
- U.S.S.R.. See Russia and the Soviet Union
- U.S. Steel, 1341
- Utah Blue (Edwards), 389
- U'Tamsi, Tchicaya, 24
- U Theatre Troupe (Taiwan), 259, 828
- utopia, 1227
- Utopia Trilogy (Brenton), 414
- Uvarov Prize, 1357
- Uvieta (Cafias), 293
- Uznach School (Sternheim), 1280
- V+W's Liberated Theatre (Czechoslovakia), 315
- Vacation Games (Sebastian), 1149
- Vaccarezza, Alberto, 61
- Vaccaro, John, 837
- Vagabonds (Parry), 964
- The Vagina Monologues (Ensler), 420
- Vahing, Vaino, 429
- Vaičiūnas, Petras, 824
- Vakhtangov, Eugene, 9
- Vakhtangov, Yevgeny, 368
- Vakhtangov Theatre, 927
- Valdelomar, Victor, 294
- Valdez, Luis, 1105, 1415–1416; El Teatro Campesino (California), 106, 1086, 1410; Zoot Suit, 686
- Valency, Maurice, 1426
- Valentin and Valentine (Roshchin), 1168
- Valentine's Day (Foote), 464
- Valk, Kate, 106
- Valle-Inclán, Ramón María del, 1191, 1308, 1416–1417; Bohemian Lights, 174, 1270; The Horns of Don Friolera, 1270; The Savage Comedies, 1270; Spanish Civil War, 108–109, 1270–1271
- Vallejo, Antonio Buero, 1093
- Vallette-Eymery, Marguerite: Madame Death, 918–919
- Valley Forge (Anderson), 1404
- The Valley of the Blind (Maponya), 1264
- The Valley's Depths (Suzuki), 1310
- Vampilov, Aleksandr, 1167
- Vampire (Strashimiriov), 206
- Vampire Lesbians of Sodom (Busch), 510
- The Vampire Princess (Kara), 752
- Van Belle, Anita, 143
- Vančura, Vladislav, 315
- van Dalsum, Albert, 956
- van den Berg, Jeroen, 957
- Van Den Broeck, Walter, 144
- Vanderbilt Theatre (New York), 49, 936
- van Doesburg, Theo, 319–320
- Van Druten, John, 1417; The Voice of the Turtle, 1405, 1429–1430
- Van Gogh, Vincent, 1319
- vanguardia, vanguardismo, 88–89, 1191
- van Iersel, Kees, 957
- van Itallie, Jean-Claude, 106, 990, 1409; Nightwalk, 1336
- Vanka the Steward and Jehan the Page (Sologub), 1174
- Van Lerberghe, Charles, 141
- van Lohuizen, Suzanne, 957
- Van Maele, Marcel, 143
- The Van Paemel Clan (Buysse), 141
- van Schaik, Jeanne, 956
- van Veldhuizen, Matin, 957
- Van Volkenberg, Ellen, 1001
- van Woensel, Oscar, 957
- Van Wyke Louw, N. P., 1262
- Vanyushin's Children (Naidyonov), 1162
- Varela, Victor, 310
- Variations (Enright), 420
- Variations on a Theme (Rattigan), 409
- Variety Club of Great Britain, Writer of the Year Award, 1285
- Variety Theatre (Marinetti), 1042
- The Variety Theatre Manifesto (Marinetti), 871
- Värnlund, Rudolf, 1312
- The Varying Shore (Akins), 30
- Vasa Order, 649
- Vasa trilogy (Strindberg), 426
- Vasco Nuñez de Balboa (Tapia y Rivera), 1106
- Vassar College Experimental Theatre (Poughkeepsie, NY), 1084, 1365
- Vassar Experimental Theatre, 442
- Vassa Zheleznova (Gorky), 545, 1162
- Vassiliadis, Spyridon, 555
- Vatel (Stoppard), 1284
- Vatzlav (Mrožek), 281, 934
- vaudeville: Argentina, 351; Denmark, 341–342; Philippines, 1052; Salacrou, Armand, 1182; Saroyan, William, 1359; United States, 302
- Vauthier, Jean, 483, 1417–1418; Blood, 485
- Vawter, Ron: Roy Cohn and Jack Smith, 1087
- Vazov, Ivan, 205
- Vega, Ricardo de la, 1178
- Vegi-Giants (Arrivi), 1106
- The Veil (Rodenbach), 141
- Veiller, Bayard, 757
- Velloso, Enrique García, 61
- The Venetian Madcaps (Kuzmin), 1163, 1174
- Venetian Twins (Enright), 419
- Venezuela, 1418–1420
- Venezuelan Theater Society, 1419
- Vengeance (Kharms), 765
- Venice Biennale (Italy), 462
- Venice Biennial Drama Prize, 207
- Venice Preserv'd (Hofmannsthal), 619
- Venisamhar (Narayanbhatta), 665
- Venus (Parks), 1037
- Venus Observed (Fry), 408, 495, 793
- Vera (Wilde), 1467
- Vera, Rody, 1051
- Vera Baxter, or the Atlantic Beaches (Duras), 379
- Vera Mirtsev (Urvantsov), 1163
- Verburg, Heleen, 957
- Verdecchia, Guillermo, 1420
- Verdial, Fausto, 1419
- The Verdict (Mamet), 862
- The Verdict (Mason), 875
- Verdict of the Cobra (Abdallah), 1
- Vereeniging Het Nederlandsch Tooneel (theater company), 955
- Verga, Giovanni, 529, 714, 1420–1421
- The Verge (Glaspell), 536, 1400
- The Verger (Soreescu), 1260
- Verhaeren, Emile, 141
- Verhelst, Peter, 144
- verisimilitude, 90
- verísimo. See realism
- Verkündigungsdrama (Kaiser), 518
- Vernardakis, Demetrios, 555
- Veronese, Daniel, 62
- verse drama. See also lyric drama; poetic theater. Auden, Wystan Hugh, 495; Campbell, William Wilfred, 215; Copi, 289; Cyrano de Bergerac (Rostand), 314; Duncan, Ronald, 377; Fry, Christopher, 280; Greece, 555; Hauptmann, Gerhart, 593; Heavysege, Charles, 216; Hofmannsthal, Hugo von, 618; Kohout, Pavel, 316; MacKaye, Percy, 848; Topol, Josef, 316; Usigli, Rodolfo, 291
- Vesnín, Aleksandr, 1172, 1173
- Vessantara Jataka (U Pon Nya), 208
- The Vestal (Aspazjia), 800
- Vest-Pocket Revue (Prague), 93–94
- Vetemaa, Enn, 429
- Vetsera Does Not Blossom for Everybody, 3
- VHV, 1254

- Via Dolorosa* (Hare), 414, 586
 Vian, Boris, 5, 438
Vianinha. See Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo
Vianna, Márcel, 188
Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo, 60, 188, 1421–1422; Break the Heart, 189
Via Theater (United States), 173
The Vibrant Claim Between an Author and an Angel (Dorr), 356
Vichy France, 1189
Victim of the Pantheon (Pendovski), 845
Victims (Musaphia), 962
Victims (Wilson), 983
Victims of Duty (Ionesco), 690
Victor, or The Children Take Over (Vitrac), 108, 1427
Victor Frankenstein theme, 1109
Victorian-era drama, 399–403
Victorian Premier's Literary Award, 1122
Victorian realism, 403, 1358
Victoria Theatre (England), 110
The Victors (Sartre), 1189
The Victors' Feast (Solzhenitsyn), 1169
The Victory (Anagnostaki), 556
Victory (Barker), 740
The Victory (Munk), 939
Victory in the Darkness (Lagerkvist), 795
Victory Over the Sun (Kruchenykh), 99, 500, 1163
Victory Theater (Buenos Aires), 61
Victory Theatre (New York), 1454
Vidal, Javier, 1419
VideoCabaret International, 623
Vidrac, Charles, 1328
Vieller, Bernard, 891
Vienna Circle, 1323
Viennese Burgtheater, 1049
Viennese Trilogy (Kokoschka), 83
The Vietnamization of New Jersey (Durang), 378
Vietnam, 104, 1422–1423
Vietnam, Vietnam War, 412
A Vietnamese Wedding (Fornes), 468
Vietnam War, 655, 1086, 1113, 1229, 1336, 1409
Viet Rock (Terry), 1087, 1336, 1409
Vieux Carré (Williams), 1476
A View from the Bridge (Miller), 307, 903, 906, 1370, 1423–1424
Viewpoints method, 173
The Vigil's Tale (Kyōka), 723
Vigny, Alfred de, 472
Vi Huyen Dac, 1423
Vik, Bjørg, 977
The Vikings at Helgeland (Ibsen), 647
The Vikings in Miklagard (Oehlenschläger), 647
Vilde, Eduard, 428
Villa, Pancho, 1307
The Village (Schön), 1419
Village (Sobol), 97, 711 village life. See rural and village life
The Village of Eguchi (Ariyoshi), 63
Villager Award, 173
Villanueva, Rene et al.: Oraciones, 1053
Villar, Jean, 1184
Villareal, Edit, 468
Villaurreutia, Xavier: Invitation to Death, 896; It Seem's a Lie, 896; Profane Morality Plays, 896; What are you Think?, 896
Villela, Gabriel, 188
Villiers de l'Isle Adam, P.A.M., 1319
Villon, François, 1078
Villqist, Ingmar: Helver's Night, 1082
Vilna Troupe, 929, 1507
Vinaver, Michel, 369, 1424–1425; Overboard, 487
Vinegar Tom (Churchill), 264, 919
The Vinegar Tree (Osborn), 1015
Vineta (Soyfer), 85
Vineyard Theatre (New York), 1429
Violation (Strauss), 524–525 violence: against women, 672, 704, 712; Fraser, Brad, 1395; Neapolitan drama, 719; On Rafferty's Hill (Carr), 707; Rodrigues, Nelson, 1146; South African drama, 102; Terrorism (Presnyakov), 1170; Volokhov, Mikhail, 1170; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1514–1515 violence on stage: Blasted (Kane), 166; Bond, Edward, 175; Bronnen, Arnolt, 201; Soviet drama, 101; Western Europe avant-garde, 108
Violet (Kandinsky), 108
The Violin (Williamson), 76
Virago (Ouyang), 1024
Virginia Minstrels, 72
Virgin Mary, 1505
The Virgin of Tepeyac (Valdez), 1415
The Virgins (Praga), 714, 1097
The Virgin's Mask (Kara), 1425–1426
Virineya (Seyfulina), 1164
Virta, Nikolai, 1257
Virtuss (Jurkāns), 801
Visage Retrouve (Mouawad), 932
Visconti, Luchino, 718
The Vise (Pirandello), 1070
Vishnevsky, Vsevelod, 1010, 1165, 1257
Visions (Nowra), 979
Visions of Hildegard (Horse and Bamboo Theatre), 626
The Visions of Simone Machard (Brecht and Feuchtwanger), 195
The Visit (Dürrenmatt), 380
Visit Hours (Udnæs), 977
The Visit of the Old Lady (Dürrenmatt), 1317, 1372, 1426
The Visitors (Orton), 1013
The Vjsitors (Strauss), 1288
Visitors at Kenny Hill (Awang), 861
Visniec, Matei, 1150
Vita!—A Fantasy (Hardy), 78
Vitae Foundation Fellowship, 568
Vita Futurista (Marinetti), 500
Vitalstatistix (Australia), 75
Vitrac, Roger, 67, 483, 1308, 1426–1427; The Mysteries of Love, 108; Victor, or The Children Take Over, 108
Vitug, Virgilio: Passion Play of the Nation, 1053
Viva España! (Steinsson), 654
Vivat! Vivat Regina! (Bolt), 175
Vives, Amadeo, 1514
Vivian Beaumont Theatre (New York), 32, 213, 471, 1233
Viviani, Raffaele, 718
Vivisection (Máša), 317
The Vizier of the Khān of Sarab (Ākhundzādeh), 693
Vizki, Morti, 344
Vladimir Mayakovsky, a Tragedy (Mayakovsky), 99, 500, 919
Vladimirov, Vladimir Hurban. See VHV
Vlad the Impaler, 1260
Voaden, Herman, 218, 220, 1427–1428; Murder Pattern, 217
Vocations (De Groen), 339
Vogel, Paula, 446, 511, 959, 1412, 1428–1429; The Baltimore Waltz, 119, 1087
Voice & Vision Award, 924
Voiceband (Burian), 94
The Voice Imitator (Bernhard), 153
The Voice of the Turtle (Van Druten), 1405, 1417, 1429–1430
Voices (Casas), 229
Voices of Birds (Topol), 317, 1367

- Voices Off* (Frayn), 280
A Voice Without Anyone (Tardieu), 1330
 Voinikov, Dobri, 206
 Vojnović, Ivo, 304, 1430–1431
 volcanoes, 1258
 Völker, Klaus, 192
 Volksbühne Theater (Berlin), 369, 423, 1076
 Volksstück, 1431; Austria, 82; Germany, 626–627; Horváth, Ödön von, 1325; Kroetz, Franz Xaver, 782; Latvia, 800; The Treason of Novara (Arx), 1316; Zuckmayer, Carl, 1518
 Volkstheater (Vienna), 1388
 Vollmer, Toti, 1419
 Vollmoeller, Karl, 1127
 Volodin, Aleksandr, 1166
 Volokhov, Mikhail, 1170
 Volpone (Jonson), 1264
 Voltaire, 251, 555
 Volund Smith (Drachmann), 357
 von Kotzebue, August, 890 von Meerheimb, Richard: Monodramas of New Form, 918
 Vorstenbosch, Ton, 957
The Vortex (Coward), 296, 297, 299, 406
 Vorticism circle (England), 54
 Voskovec, Jiří, 93–94, 315
 Vostell, Wolf, 584
 Vostrá, Alena, 316
Votes for Women (Robins), 404, 1144, 1174
The Vow (Hirschbein), 615
Voyage (Stoppard), 1284
Voyage in the Dugout, or The Play about the Film about the War (Handke), 581
The Voyager of Forceloup (Sion), 143
Voyage to Lesbos (Five Lesbian Brothers), 457
Voyage to the Sonorous Land, or The Art of Asking (Handke), 581
The Voysey Inheritance (Granville-Barker), 1432
 Vrajalez (Kostov), 206
 Vrebos, Pascal, 144
 Vucjak (Krlježa), 304, 781
 Vu Dinh Long, 1423
 Vuka (Manaka), 1265
The Vultures (Becque), 133, 475
The Vultures (Tendulkar), 1333
Vulture! Vulture! (Sutherland), 1310
 Vu Nhu To (Nguyen), 1423
 Vvedensky, Aleksandr, 101, 765, 1165
 Vyrypaev, Ivan, 1170
 Wadsworth Atheneum (United States), 471
 Wagner, Jane, 446
 Wagner, Richard, 1433–1434; The Ring of the Nibelungs, 362; Tristan and Isolde, 1055; dramatic cycle, 362; Gesamtkunstwerk, 1127; influence on Irish drama, 699; influence on Italian drama, 715; influence on Shaw, 1223, 1224; set design, 1172; surrealism, 478; symbolism, 1318, 1319
Wag the Dog (Mamet), 862
Wahnigin Country (Jack), 330
waiata (Maori), 777
Waikiki-Beach (Streeruwitz), 1289
 Wainwright, Ronald, 1400
Waiora. See The Homeland (Kouka)
Wait, Rama's Reign Is on Its Way (Gaekwad), 674
Wait for Me (Simonov), 1166
Waiting for Godot (Beckett), 1434–1435; absurdism, 106, 155; anticipated The Iceman Cometh (O'Neill), 656; apocalypse, 55; Beckett, Samuel, 131; on critics, 360; deconstruction, 336–337; Endgame compared, 398; existentialism, 1408; influence on Popović, 1211; influence on Shepard, 1232; modernism, 87; Not Waiting for Godot (Lasica and Satinský), 1254; O'Casey's influence, 984; Pakistani adaptation, 1028; The Palace, 585; Panic to Two Voices (Radrigán), 1114; Pike Theatre, 704–705; religious theater, 1130; Rendra's adaptation, 1131; set design, 1275; symbolism, 1320; theater of situation, 1056; Théâtre des Nouveautés, 483–484
Waiting for Lefty (Odets), 27, 564, 1083, 1257, 1402, 1435–1436
Waiting for the Parade (Murrell), 943
 Wajda, Andrzej, 327
The Wake (Murphy), 942
The Wake of Jamey Foster (Henley), 608
Wake Up Jonathan (Rice and Hughes), 1137
 Walch, Garnet, 72
 Walcott, Derek, 18, 1436–1437; Ti-Jean and His Brothers, 417
 Waldorf Theatre (New York), 324
 Wales: Hollingsworth, Michael, 623; Osborne, Alan, 1015; Rowlands, Ian, 1155–1156; Thomas, Edward, 629; Thomas, Gwyn, 760; Welsh National Drama Company, 404; Williams, Emlyn, 290
 Walesa, Lech, 1284
 Wales Padlock Law (United States), 510
Walk Alone (Dutt), 383
 Walker, George F., 218, 622, 1437–1438; The Art of War, 1095; Beautiful City, 1095; East End Plays, 219; Filthy Rich, 1095; Gossip, 1095; The Power Plays, 1095; Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline, 1514
 Walker, Joseph, 164
 Walker, London (Barrie), 1200
 Walker Arts Center (Minneapolis), 1250
 Walker Theatre, 915
Walking Happy (Brighouse), 616
A Walk in the Woods (Blessing), 166, 1412
A Walk on the Water (Stoppard), 1282
A Walk Through the Villages (Handke), 580
The Wall (Sotelo), 1270
 Wallace, Naomi, 1438–1439
 Wallace, William, 1200
 Walley, Richard, 79
Wallflowering (Murray), 73
A Wall in Havana (Dorr), 356
The Wall Street Banks in London Have Closed (Amamus), 961
Walpurgis Night, or, the Steps of the Commodore (Yerofeyev), 1168
 Walser, Martin, 521
 Walsser, Theresia, 525
 Waltari, Mika, 454
 Walter, Bruno, 1127
 Walter, Eugene, 1398; The Easiest Way, 385
 Walter Carsen Prize for Excellence in the Performing Arts, 943
 Walterdale Playhouse (Edmonton), 1179
 Walter Kerr Theatre (New York), 46, 356, 787, 1059
 Walters, Julia, 1327
Waltz Number 6 (Rodrigues), 1146
The Waltz of the Toreadors (Anouilh), 1439–1440
The Wanderers (Van Lerberghe), 141
The Wandering Jew (Wandor), 1440
The Wandering Nightingale (Nasirīān), 695
Wanderings, the Interior Voyage of Patrice Lumumba (Van Belle), 143
 Wandor, Michelene, 1440
 Wand Peigong, 90

- Wandurski, Witold: Death on a Pear Tree, 1080
- Wang Demin, 257
- Wang Gui: We, 1445–1446
- Wang Jianshe Becomes an Official (Liang), 811
- Wang Peigong, 255; We, 1445–1446
- Wang Renjie, 1440–1441; The Lament of a Chaste Woman, 256
- Wangthawisap, Apidol: Lady Amarapa, 1338
- Wang Zhaojun (Cao), 223
- Wang Zhaojun (Zheng), 1515
- Wang Zhedong, 255
- Wannsee (Bentley), 147
- Want-Ad (Page), 1027
- Wanted (Wandor), 1440
- Wanted: A Chaperone (Guerrero), 1052
- war. See also specific wars.
Amamus, 962; Hamilton, Ian, 961; Ismene (Satoh), 1193; Israeli drama, 95–96; Lorenzo (Richardson), 1138; Mother Courage and Her Children (Brecht), 931; Schnitzler, Arthur, 1197; Serjeant Musgrave's Dance (Arden), 1212; The Skin of Our Teeth (Wilderness), 1252; United States, pre-Depression, 1400; Vietnamese drama, 1422; World War II, 1405–1406
- War (Artsybashev), 1162
- War (Burian), 94
- War (Foon), 463
- War (Wijaya), 679
- War and Peace (Tolstoy), 1076, 1220, 1364
- War as a Consequence (Arriaga), 294
- War: A Te Deum (Hauptmann), 54
- War Babies (Hollingsworth), 622, 1441–1442
- The War Carnival (Arden), 59
- war crimes, 768
- Ward, Theodore, 442, 1405–1406
- Ware, Thornton M., 115
- Warekar, Bhargavram Vitthal, 667
- War for War (Nowaczyński), 1080
- wari leeba (India), 1348
- The War in Heaven (Chaikin and Shepard), 1233
- warmongering, 812
- Warner, Basil, 1263
- The War of Light (Leino), 453
- War Plays (Bond), 414
- The Warrant (Erdman), 425, 1164
- Warriner, Loren, 1427
- The Warrior People (Kouka), 777
- A Warsaw Melody (Zorin), 1167
- Warsaw Yiddish Art Theatre, 929, 1507
- Wars of the Jews (Sobol), 711
- Warszawianka (Wyspiański), 1493
- War Without Slaughter: Life in Two Dictatorships (Müller), 938
- War Zone (Loher), 830
- Waseda Little Theatre (Japan), 99, 155, 393, 1311
- The Washing River (Tadasu), 970
- Washington (MacKaye), 848
- Washington Square Players (New York), 29, 282, 371, 1001, 1341, 1400
- A Wasp (Ding), 347
- Wasserstein, Wendy, 446, 607, 1087, 1409, 1412, 1442–1443; The Heidi Chronicles, 602, 1058; Uncommon Women and Others, 1393; Uncommon Women and Others (Wasserstein), 602
- Waste (Granville-Barker), 1443
- The Waste Land (Eliot), 729
- Waste Not Our Youth (Wu), 1492
- Watanabe Eriko, 728, 769, 1443–1444
- Watbanaland (Wright), 1491
- The Watchmaker (Discépolo), 351, 563
- Watch on the Rhine (Hellman), 606, 1085, 1403, 1405
- Water Carriers (Bouchard), 179
- The Water Engine (Mamet), 41
- The Water Hen (Witkiewicz), 1485
- The Water Mirror (Liu), 828
- Waters, Les, 888
- The Water Seller (U Pon Nya), 208
- The Waters of Babylon (Arden), 59
- The Water Station (Ōta), 1020, 1444–1445
- wa Thiong'o, Ngugi. See Ngugi wa Thiong'o
- The Wave (Dutt), 382, 1445
- wayang, 1299
- wayang kulit, 103
- The Wayfarer (Briusov), 107
- A Way of Life (Hall), 578
- Ways of Dying (Foot-Newton), 102
- The Way the Crow Flies (MacDonald), 843
- The Way to the Pond (Schnitzler), 1197
- Way Upstream (Ayckbourn), 110
- We (Wang and Wang), 255, 1445–1446
- We (Zamyatin), 135
- We, the People (Rice), 1402
- We, the Undersigned (Gelman), 1168
- We All Love You So Much, Aurelia (Valdelomar), 294
- The Weaning (Halac), 576
- Weapons of Happiness (Brenton), 198, 413, 414
- weapons research, 768, 1199, 1214, 1215
- We Are from Kronstadt (Vishnevsky), 1010
- We Are Playing Comedy (Zinsou), 25
- We Are Riding, Riding to Distant Lands (Kolyada), 1169
- The Weasel (Mafune), 855
- The Weather in Japan (Kubo), 784
- Weaver, Lois, 446, 511, 871, 948, 1273
- The Weaver of Bagdad (Bergman), 148
- The Weavers (Hauptmann), 516, 592, 1446–1447, 1517
- Webb, Beatrice, 1223, 1224, 1228
- Webb, Sidney, 1223, 1224
- Wecksell, Josef Julius, 452
- The Wedding (Brecht), 191
- The Wedding (Chekhov), 243
- The Wedding (Wyspiański), 1079, 1447, 1493
- The Wedding at the Third Studio (Chekhov), 927
- Wedding Band (Childress), 249
- Wedding Day at the Cro-Magnons' (Mouawad), 932, 1447–1448
- Wedding Gown (Rodrigues), 188, 1145, 1448–1449
- The Wedding on the Eiffel Tower (Cocteau), 108, 479–480, 1308
- The Wedding Party (Samuel), 962
- Wedding Rings (Diosdado), 348
- Wedekind, Benjamin Franklin. See Wedekind, Frank
- Wedekind, Frank, 592, 747, 1173, 1449–1451; Earth Spirit, 385, 517; The Marquis of Keith, 517; Pandora's Box, 385, 517; Spring Awakening, 432, 517, 1274–1275, 1371
- Wedlock of the Gods (Sofola), 24
- Wednesday to Come (Renée), 1132
- Weekend at the Waldorf (Spewack and Spewack), 1272
- Weekend Healer (MacDonald), 843
- Weekend Quartets (Gao), 506
- The Weeping Satyr (Šrámek), 315
- The Weeping Woman (Morett), 898, 923

- Weichert, Mikhl, 540
 Weichert, Richard, 433
 Weidman, John, 354, 814, 815
 Weigand, Hermann J., 360
 Weigel, Helene, 9
 The Weighing Scale is Tilted (Jacob), 725
 The Weight of the Snow (Willems), 1470–1471
 Weill, Kurt: The Threepenny Opera, 1354; exiled, 520; Group Theatre, 564; Kaiser, Georg, 748; off-Broadway theater, 989; Rice, Elmer, 1137, 1291
 Weimar Höftheater (Germany), 367
 Weimar Republic, 191, 517–519
 Wei Minglun, 90, 1451, 1497; Pan Jinlian, 256
 Weingarten, Romain, 289, 483, 484
 Weinstein, Arnold, 1424
 The Weir (McPherson), 707, 886
 Weisenborn, Günther, 521, 959
 Weiss, Jeff, 510; Discourse on the Progress of the Prolonged War of Liberation in Viet Nam, 522; Marat/Sade, 522
 Weiss, Peter, 591, 617, 991, 1076, 1366, 1451–1453; The Investigation, 353, 689; Marat/Sade, 412, 841, 867, 1057
 Weissberger Prize, 390
 Weissman, Reuben, 1507
 Weissman and Copperface (Tabori), 1323
 Welcome Home Jacko (Matura), 878
 Welcome Mr. Marshal (Mihura), 901
 Welcome the Bright World (Sewell), 1215
 Welcome to Germany (Brasch), 187
 Welcome to Life (al-Ānī), 698
 Welded (O'Neill), 1005
 Weldon Rising (Nagy), 948 welfare state, 625, 1313
 Welfare State International (England), 1343
 A Well (Čahojová), 1254
 Well, Of All Things (Kerr et al.), 764
 The Well Being (Buckland), 102
 Welles, Orson, 703, 1084, 1235
 Well Hung (Lord), 834
 Wellington International Festival of the Arts, 834
 Well-Known People (Benavente), 145 well-made play, 473; Alison's House (Glaspell), 36; Australia, 74; Belgium, 141, 142; Buried Child (Shepard), 207; Chekhov, Anton, 1204; deconstruction, 366; Depression era, 1403; direct action, 242; Dumas fils, 376; Dutt, Utpal, 382; Gustav III (Strindberg), 1297; Howells, William Dean, 634; Ibsen, Henrik, 975–976; Jones, Henry Arthur, 742; New Zealand, 961; realism, 472–473; scène à faire (obligatory scene), 366; A Scrap of Paper (Sardou), 1203; Shaw, George Bernard, 1224, 1227; Vojnović, Ivo, 1430; Western Europe, 107
 Wellman, Mac, 959, 990, 1412, 1453–1454
 Well of Darkness (Tada), 970
 The Well of Horniness (Hughes), 636
 The Well of the Saints (Synge), 701, 1321
 Wells, Orson, 1405
 Welsh, Irvine: Headstate, 1373; Trainspotting, 1372
 Welsh National Drama Company, 404
 We Murderers (Kamban), 653
 We must eat our suckers with the wrappers on (Orlin), 102
 Weng Jintian, 257
 Wentworth, Marion Craig, 445
 Wenzel, Jean-Paul, 487
 Weöres, Sándor, 640
 We're All Riding on a Circus Elephant (Terayama), 1334
 Werewere-Liking, Nicole, 25
 The Werewolf (Kitzberg), 428
 Werich, Jan, 93–94, 315, 595, 894
 We Righteous Bombers (Bullins), 207
 Werkteater (Netherlands), 957
 Wertenbaker, Timberlake, 1022
 Wertheim, Maurice, 1341
 We Saw Rome (Yamazaki), 1500
 We Shall Sing for the Fatherland (Mda), 1265
 Wesker, Arnold, 362, 986, 1017, 1455, 1458; Chicken Soup with Barley, 410; I'm Talking About Jerusalem, 410; The Kitchen, 486; Roots, 410
 Wesley (Brenton), 197
 Wessis in Weimar: Scenes from an Occupied Country (Hochhuth), 524
 West, Mae, 509, 1455–1456
 West, Michael, 707
 West Africa, 23–25, 320. See also individual countries
 West Bank. See occupation, military
 Westbeth Playwrights' Feminist Cooperative, 1501
 West End (London), 411
 West End Award (London), 1159
 West End Lyric Theatre (London), 270
 Western Australia Drama Festivals Award, 313
 Western culture, changes in. See philosophical drama
 Western Deep Levels (Maponya), 1264 western drama, United States. See frontier drama
 Western Europe, 107–109, 1343. See also individual countries
 West Germany, 430, 521–523
 Westley, Helen, 1341
 West Pier (Koltès), 774
 West Side Story (Laurents), 814
 West Yorkshire Playhouse, 324
 Wet and Dry (Balodis), 119
 We the People (Rice), 1137
 Wetherby (Hare), 586
 Wetsundwn, 797
 Wexley, John, 1403
 Wexner Center for the Arts (Columbus, Ohio), 1250
 Whaea Kairau (Taylor), 963
 Whale, James, 743
 whalehunting, 1180
 Whale Riding Weather (MacDonald), 843, 1456
 Whaley, Andrew, 22
 whanau (Maori), 777
 Wharton, John, 959
 What a Lovely Sight! (Arbuzov), 57
 What Are You Having for Breakfast? (Déry), 93
 What are you Think? (Villaurrutia), 896
 What Happened After Nora Left Her Husband (Jelinek), 86, 730
 What of the Night? (Fornes), 468
 What Price Glory? (Anderson and Stallings), 43, 1400, 1457
 What's Yours Is Mine (Verga), 1421
 What the Butler Saw (Orton), 411, 1013
 What Use Are Flowers? (Hansberry), 584
 What Where (Beckett), 416
 Wheeler, Hugh, 814, 815
 When Eve Becomes Adam (Mondragón Aguirre), 918
 When I Call My Voices (Ensler), 420

- When Ladies Meet (Crothers), 306
- When She Danced (Sherman), 1235
- When Sun and Moon Collide (Grace-Smith), 548
- When the Bough Breaks (Campbell), 961
- When the Jack Hollers (Hughes and Bontemps), 637
- When the Moon Has Set (Synge), 1321
- When the New Wine Blooms (Bjørnson), 163
- When the War Was Over (Frisch), 493
- When the World Was on Fire (Bread and Puppet Theater), 1088
- When Thunder Strikes, How the Echo Dies Down (Yavorov), 206
- When We Are Married (Priestley), 1099
- When We Dead Awaken (Ibsen), 54, 363, 651, 875–876, 1457–1458
- When We Go Down that Heartless River (Shimizu), 1238
- When You Are Somebody (Pirandello), 1071
- When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder? (Medoff), 887, 1409
- When Your Number Comes Up (Vostrá), 316
- Where Are They Now? (Stoppard), 1282
- Where Are You, Sammy Rebenksi? (Blasband), 144
- Where are you, Ulalume, where are you? (Sastre), 1192
- Where Dead Dogs Are Thrown (Serumaga), 20
- Where Is Longing in Autumn (Baī), 114
- Where Love Abides (To), 238, 1359
- Where's Daddy? (Inge), 682
- Where's Hakamadare (Fukuda), 498
- Where's There's a Will (Dattani), 328
- Where the Cross Is Made (O'Neill), 1002
- Where the Sea Sings (Rojas), 294
- While the Sun Shines (Rattigan), 1120
- While We Are Waiting (Borgen), 977
- Whirlpool (Chashule), 844
- Whisky & Cocafina (Erminy), 1419
- Whisper in the Mind (Lawrence and Lee), 804
- A Whistle in the Dark (Murphy), 705, 942, 1458
- Whitbread, J. W., 699
- White, Patrick, 73
- White Baptist Abba Fan (Cheetham), 79
- White Biting Dog (Thompson), 1352
- The White Carnation (Sherriff), 1236
- White Chains (Matura), 878
- White Desert (Anderson), 43
- The White Devil (Bond), 176
- The White Disease (Čapek), 224, 315
- The White Guard (Bulgakov), 101
- White-Haired Girl (He et al.), 251, 253, 393, 1458–1459
- The White-Headed Boy (Robinson), 1145
- The White Heron (Kyōka), 723
- Whiteman (McGee), 883
- White Marriage (Różewicz), 1081, 1157
- Whitemore, Hugh, 510
- White Pearl with Senorita's Ring (Moreno), 1419
- White Plague (Čapek), 94
- The White Slave (Campbell), 214
- The White Slave (Zolotarevsky), 1507
- The White Snake (Tian), 254, 1459–1460
- A White Sports Coat (Lyssiotis), 80
- White Teeth (Smith), 417
- White with Wire Wheels (Hibberd), 74
- Whiting, John, 985, 1460; Conditions of Agreement, 408; Saint's Day, 408
- Whiting Writers' Award, 1480
- Whitman, Robert DeForest, 584
- Who (van Woensel), 957
- Who Am I? (Soya), 1267
- Who Are You Looking At? (Thomas), 1351
- whodunit. See crime and criminals
- Who Has Seen It? (Chimombo), 22
- Who Is Sylvia? (Rattigan), 1120
- Who Is the Strongest of Us All (Liang), 811
- Who Killed Katie Ross (Sears), 1206
- Whores (Blessing), 166
- Whores D'Oeuvres (Wandor), 1440
- The Whore's Revenge (Gilbert), 530
- Who's Afraid of Solarin? (Osofisan), 1018
- Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Albee), 32, 307, 359, 1057, 1409, 1460–1461, 1518
- Whose Are You (Nasev), 845
- Who's Got His Own (Milner), 164
- Who Shall Die? (Sartre), 481
- Who's Paying for the Party? (Csurka), 640
- Who Was That Killer? (To), 1423
- Why, James, 102
- Why Marry? (Williams), 1461–1462
- Why Not (Williams), 1461
- Why She Would Not (Shaw), 1227
- Wicheler, Fernand, 141
- The Wicked Cooks (Grass), 549
- Wicked Sisters (De Groen), 340
- The Wicked Women Review, 1501
- The Wide Open Cage (Baxter), 961
- Wide Sargasso Sea (Delaney), 340
- Widger's Way (Ringwood), 1140
- Widmer, Urs, 1317
- Widowers' Houses (Shaw), 699, 702, 1102, 1224
- The Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd (Lawrence), 1462–1463
- The Widow in the Mirror (Abell and Landers), 3
- Widows (Dorfman), 355
- Widows (Mrozek), 934
- Widoyo, Kenthut Bambang, 680
- Wiebe, Rudy, 1463
- Wied, Gustav, 342
- The Wife (Moberg), 1312
- A Wife of the River (Cañas), 293
- The Wife's Friend (Pirandello), 1075
- Wife to James Whelan (Deevy), 704
- The Wig (Ginzburg), 533
- Wijaya, Putu, 103, 679–680, 1463–1464
- Wilcox, Michael, 510
- Wild Abandon (MacIvor), 847
- Wildcat, 1201
- Wildcat Stage Productions, 1464–1465
- The Wild Duck (Ibsen), 350, 601, 650, 656, 1055, 1465–1466
- Wilde, Jane Francesca. See Speranza
- Wilde, Oscar, 1466–1469; An Ideal Husband, 403, 1102; The Importance of Being Earnest, 280, 350, 364, 403, 608, 661, 1374; Lady Windermere's Fan, 403, 624, 793–794; Salomé, 107, 271, 1173; A Woman of No Importance, 403, 935; censored, 271; comedy, 280, 598; Delaney, Shelagh, 340; dramatic dialogue, 364; homosexuality trial, 403; influence on Chinese drama, 252; influence on O'Neill, 1000; The Invention of Love (Stoppard), 688; Irish drama, 699–700; Obraztsova, Anna, 1172;

- Wilde, Oscar (continued) philosophical dialogue, 271; The Secret Fall of Constance Wilde (Kilroy), 766; Sternheim, Carl, 1280; symbolism, 530
- Wildenbruch, Ernst von, 516
- Wilder, Thornton, 1469–1470; Our Town, 254, 285, 550, 944, 1023–1024, 1130; The Skin of Our Teeth, 1252–1253; American myths, 1404; censored, 92; Horowitz, Israel, 625; influenced by Chinese drama, 254; lyric drama, 1407; Sheldon, Edward, 1230; wartime dramas, 1406; The Woman of Andros, 1023
- The Wilderness (Cao), 223
- Wilderness and Man (Li), 820–821
- Wilderness Road (Green), 557
- Wild Flesh (Stefanovski), 845
- Wild Man (Gao), 90, 255, 506
- The Wild Man of Borneo (Connelly and Mankiewicz), 285
- The Wild Party (LaChiusa), 815
- The Wild Rose (Kyōka), 723
- Wilhelm Tell (anon.), 1315
- Wilhelm Tell: A School Text (Frisch), 1317
- Wilhelm Tell—A Tragedy (Zimmermann), 1315
- Willems, Paul, 143, 1470–1471
- William Flanagan Center for Creative Persons (Montauk, New York), 33
- Williams, Emlyn, 1471–1472; The Corn is Green, 290, 629
- Williams, Jesse Lynch: Why Marry?, 1461–1462; Why Not, 1461
- Williams, Paulette. See Shange, Ntozake
- Williams, Roy, 219
- Williams, Tennessee, plays: Camino Real, 213; Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, 233, 350, 510, 1371; The Glass Menagerie, 213, 354, 536–537, 1371; The Night of the Iguana, 968–969, 1371; The Rose Tattoo, 1371; A Streetcar Named Desire, 213, 350, 364, 510, 608, 1290–1291, 1371; Suddenly Last Summer, 510, 1301–1302; Summer and Smoke, 1304–1305; This Property Is Condemned, 607
- Williams, Tennessee, 1472–1478; acting student, 1406; apocalypse, 55; Choukri, Mohamed, 261; Circle in the Square Theatre, 1408; Cold War drama, 1406–1407; critical reception, 213; dramatic dialogue, 364; Durang take-off, 379; experimental theater, 213, 1409; influenced by O'Neill, 1005; influence on contemporary Greek drama, 556; influence on Kennedy, 763; influence on Kushner, 787; influence on Shimizu, 1238; Inge compared, 682; In the Summer House (Bowles), 687; Kazan, Elia, 233, 350; lyrical realism, 213, 1061; naturalism, 950; off-Broadway theater, 989; presaged by Odets, 1403; regional theater, 1408; subconscious, 1105; Zindell compared, 1516
- Williams, Thomas Lanier. See Williams, Tennessee
- Williamson, David, 74, 76, 1478–1479
- William Tell (Schiller), 1315, 1316
- Will Mr. Merriwether Return from Memphis? (Williams), 1477
- The Willow and I (Patrick), 1039
- The Will Rogers Follies (Stone), 814
- Wills, Fingal O'Flahertie. See Wilde, Oscar
- Willy Protagoras Locked Up in the Toilets (Mouawad), 932
- Wilson, A. P., 983
- Wilson, August, 1479–1481; Fences, 447; Ma Rainey's Black Bottom, 865; The Piano Lesson, 1059; Black Arts Movement, 164, 1087, 1413; dramatic cycle, 362; jazz influence, 729; New Dramatists, 959; political drama, 218
- Wilson, Doric, 510
- Wilson, Edmund, 37
- Wilson, Lanford, 510, 1411–1412, 1481–1483; The Fifth of July, 1087; The Madness of Lady Bright, 990, 1410; Talley and Son, 452; Talley's Folly, 452
- Wilson, Richard, 1395
- Wilson, Robert, 1483; Civil Wars, 1058; Einstein on the Beach, 1058; avant-garde drama, 1411, 1413; Clarke, Jocelyn, 1250; environmental theater, 423; Festival of the Arts, 696; performance art, 1043; Peymann collaborator, 1049; political drama, 1088; socialist realism, 524; theatricality, 1343
- Wilton, Marie. See Bancroft, Marie (nee Wilton)
- The Wind and the Rain (Hodge), 961
- The Window (Naghiu), 948
- Windows (Galsworthy), 406
- The Window Washer (Mészöly), 640
- Windsor Palace productions, 400
- The Wind Station (Ōta), 1444
- Wine in the Wilderness (Childress), 249
- Wing-Davey, Mark, 265
- Winged Victory (Hart), 588
- Wings (Kopit), 776
- Winnie the Pooh (Milne), 406, 908
- The Winslow Boy (Rattigan), 202, 409, 1120
- Winter (Grishkovets), 1170
- Winter Chats (Mafune), 855
- Winter Crossing (Reza), 1135
- Winter Light (Bergman), 149
- Winterset (Anderson), 43, 1404, 1483–1484
- Winter Tree Troupe, 1238
- Winton, Tim, 419
- Wiper, David William. See Fennario, David
- The Wisdom of Children (Tolstoy), 1364
- The Wisdom of the Judge (al-Guzi), 1031
- The Wisdom Tooth (Connelly), 285
- wisecracks, 744
- The Wish (Sigurjonsson), 1244
- Wit (Beckett), 1068
- witchcraft, 793
- The Witching Hour (Thomas), 1349, 1398
- The Witch of Mopti (Abdallah), 1
- With (Uncle) Vanya (Barker), 122
- With a Sunset Like the Morning Sun (Kōkami), 772
- With Honor on the Wire (Arroyo), 294
- Within the Gates (O'Casey), 984
- Without a Dowry (Ostrovsky), 1019
- Without a Wound (Reyes), 1052
- Without Roots (Tör), 1386
- Without the Third Party (Begović), 304
- With the Help of My Big Brother Theatre (Japan), 769
- With You, Bread, and Onions (Quintero), 309

- Witkacy. See Witkiewicz, Stanisław Ignacy
- Witkiewicz, Stanisław Ignacy, 54, 916, 1012, 1080, 1308, 1484–1486; The Beelzebub Sonata, 281; The Crazy Locomotive, 281; The Madman and the Nun, 281, 852–853
- Witness (McNally), 885
- Wittenbols, Peer, 957
- Wittgenstein's Daughter (Edwards), 389
- Wittgenstein's Nephew (Bernhard), 152
- Wives Have Their Uses (Meredith), 77
- The Wives of Bath (Swan), 1352
- Wizaya (U Pon Nya), 208
- WLT. See Workers' Laboratory Theatre
- WM (Wand), 90
- The Wobbly (Luscombe), 840
- Woe from Wit (Griboyedov), 1077, 1160
- Woe to Be Vanquished (Sā'edi), 695
- Wojtyła, Karol (the future Pope John Paul II): The Jeweler's Shop, 1081; Our God's Brother, 1081
- Wolf (Learner), 78
- Wolf, Friedrich, 520, 523, 959, 1486; Cyanide, 519; The Sailors of Cattaro, 1083
- Wolf Boy (Charlton), 73
- Wolfe, George C., 1412, 1486–1487
- Wolff, Egon, 1487–1488
- The Wolf Hunt (Verga), 1421
- Wolf Kisses (Pedrero), 1040
- Wolf-man (Freud; Egloff), 390
- Wolfson, Victor: Bitter Stream, 1083
- Wolkers, Jan, 957
- Wollcott, Alexander, 1457
- Wolves (Kudret), 1386
- Wolves and Sheep (Ostrovsky), 1019
- A Woman (Bracco), 183
- Woman (Janam), 590
- The Woman and Her Shadow (Claudel), 269
- A Woman Called Rosy (Sayın), 1386
- Woman in the Window (De Groen), 340
- The Woman is Fickle (Marinetti). See Electric Dolls (Marinetti)
- The Woman of Andros (Wilder), 1023, 1469
- A Woman of No Importance (Bennett), 146
- A Woman of No Importance (Wilde), 403, 935, 1467
- The Woman of the Year (Stone), 814
- Woman's Experimental Theater, 445
- A Woman's Honor (Dominici), 1418
- A Woman's Life (Morimoto), 727, 924, 1488
- A Woman's Pedigree (Kyōka), 723
- Woman Station (Baydur), 1387
- Woman Triumphant (Lenéru), 476
- The Woman Without a Shadow (Hofmannsthal), 619
- The Woman Without Sin (Rodrigues), 1145
- women. See entries at female and feminism and feminist themes
- The Women (Boothe), 177, 1489
- Women and Shadow (Kimura), 970
- Women Far Walking (Ihimaera), 963
- The Women from the Gully (Laferrière), 61
- Women in Confinement (Morett), 898, 923
- Women in the Mill (Cavellini and Pérez), 294
- Women of Summer. See Picnic (Inge)
- Women of the Dust (Carter), 417
- Women's Christian Temperance Union, 915
- women's folktales, 753
- Women's Interart Theater, 871
- Women's Playhouse Trust (England), 416
- Women's Playwright International Festival (Manila), 725
- Women's Project and Productions, 1502
- Women's Project Company (New York), 468, 1440
- Women's Theater Group (England), 416
- Women's Theatre Council, 1026, 1087
- Women's Theatre Group (Australia), 75
- Women's Work Project, 959
- Women's World (Yang), 251
- The Women Trilogy (Bai), 114
- Women: War: Comedy (Brasch), 187
- Women Writers' Suffrage League, 405
- Wonder, Ernst, 1049
- Wonderful Inertia (Dorr), 355
- A Wonderful Job (Halac), 576
- Wonderful Town (Comden and Green), 813
- Wonderful Wild Animals (Garaczi), 641
- The Wonderful World of Dissocia (Neilson), 953
- Wonders of Cervantes (Els Comediants), 232
- Wong, Eleanor, 1248
- Wong, Elizabeth, 446
- Wongmontha, Seri: Puchai Naya, 1338
- Wong Tawarat (Rama V), 1118
- Wood, Ellen, 386, 890, 1489–1490; East Lynne, 402
- Wood, Mrs. Henry. See Wood, Ellen
- The Woodcarvers (Schönherr), 82
- The Woodcarver Story (Firth), 265
- The Wood Carver's Wife (Pickthall), 1060, 1490
- Woodcutting (Bernhard), 151
- The Wood Demon (Chekhov), 243–244, 1392
- The Wooden Cart (Sharma), 1221
- Wooden Horses (Abramov), 841
- Wood Painting (Bergman), 149
- Woodruff, Robert, 1380
- Woods, Vincent, 706, 707
- Woolf, Virginia, 1250
- Woofishness (Kerata), 1255
- Woollcott, Alexander, 157
- The Wooster Group (New York), 87, 106, 337, 550, 990–991, 1057, 1087, 1343, 1413; L.S.D., 1094
- The Word (Munk), 939, 1490–1491
- The Word (Schnitzler), 1198
- Words4Work, 1027
- The Words Upon the Window Pane (Yeats), 703, 1504
- Work (Five Arts Center), 862
- The Work (Jelinek), 86
- Workaholics in the Trenches (Sā'edi), 695
- Workaholic Slovotekov (Gorky), 545
- Workers' Brigade Drama Group (Ghana), 1310
- Workers' Laboratory Theatre (New York), 1083
- Workers Theater Council (Japan), 98
- Workers' Theatre Collective. See Artef
- Worker's Theatre League (Germany), 27
- Workers' Theatre Movement (England), 27
- The Worker's Wife (Canth), 453
- The Workhouse Donkey (Arden), 59
- working class. See also class, class politics; labor issues, as theme. Bean, Richard,

- working class (continued)
 126; Belgium, 143; India, 673; Italy, 719; Jelinek, Elfriede, 730; Jin Yun, 735; Olmo, Lauro, 1270; Romeril, John, 1151; Sisters in Law (Tremblay), 1249; Storey, David, 1285; Vianna Filho, Oduvaldo, 1421
 Working Class Hero (Govender), 1264 working conditions. See labor issues
 The Workshop (Grumberg), 486, 565
 Workshop 47 (Harvard University), 115, 124, 138
 Workshop 71 (South Africa), 101
 Workshop Negative (Mhlanga), 22
 The World According to Garp (Tesch), 1336
 The World Finder (MacKaye), 849
 The World in the Evening (Isherwood), 708
 The World Is a Farce (Al-Hakim), 391
 The World Is an Apple (Florentino), 1052
 World of Art Group (Soviet Union), 1172
 The World of Shōwa: A Comedy (Sato), 49, 1193
 The World of Susie Wong (Patrick), 1039
 World Rampant (Tretyakov), 1377
 World's Fair (Páskándi), 1038
 World Trade Center attacks, 791, 1193
 World War I, years before:
 avant-garde, 107–109;
 Barnes, Djuna, 122;
 Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso, 871–872;
 Miyoshi Jūrō, 913; Shaw, George Bernard, 1225;
 Sternheim, Carl, 1393;
 Williams, Tennessee, 1472–1473
 World War I: apocalypse, 54;
 expressionism, 432;
 Benavente, Jacinto, 145; He Who Gets Slapped (Andreev), 611; Hobson's Choice (Brighouse), 616; Journey's End (Sherriff), 1236; Moscow Art Theatre and Studios, 926–928; O'Casey, Sean, 983; O'Neill, Eugene, 1001–1003; Shaw, George Bernard, 1226; Sherriff, Robert Cedric, 743; The Silver Tassie (O'Casey), 1244; Williams, Tennessee, 1472–1473
 World War I, years after. See Interwar drama
 World War II, years before. See Interwar drama
 World War II: impact on drama, 1056; post-apocalypse, 55; V-Day, 420;
 Adamov, Arthur, 10;
 Akimoto Matsuyo, 29;
 American Theatre Wing War Service, 306; Andorra (Frisch), 44; Anna Sophie Hedvig (Abell), 50; Antigone (Anouilh), 52; Apple Orchard Diary (Kubo), 784; Beckett, Samuel, 130; Behrman, S. N., 139; Bernhard, Thomas, 151; Blithe Spirit (Coward), 167; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Branner, Hans Christian, 185; Brecht, Bertolt, 193–196; Double Cross (Kilroy), 766; Episode: A Tropical Fantasy (Katō), 756; Flight to the West (Rice), 1137; Flowers in the Dark (Inoue), 684; Follow My Leader (Rattigan), 1120; Grey Farm (Rattigan and Bolith), 1120; Grumberg, Jean-Claude, 565–566; Hōjō Hideji, 621; Hughes, Langston, 637; Husain, Shaharom, 642; The Investigation (Weiss), 689; Kalisky, René, 749;
 MacLeish, Archibald, 849–850; The Madame MacAdam Travelling Theatre (Kilroy), 766; Mafune Yutaka, 855; Morimoto Kaoru, 924; Mother Courage and Her Children (Brecht), 931; My Heart's in the Highlands (Saroyan), 943–944; O'Neill, Eugene, 1003–1004; One Night (Shvarts), 1243; The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (Brecht), 1133–1134; Sartre, Jean-Paul, 972; Seagull Eaters (Løveid), 1205; The Šopalivić Traveling Company (Simović), 1211; 2 (Linney), 822; Van Druten, John, 1429; Williams, Tennessee, 1472–1473; Zuckmayer, Carl, 1518–1519
 World War II, years after. See also Cold War. apocalypse, 55; avant-garde, 108–109; documentary drama, 352; dramatic dialogue, 364–365; Volksstück, 1431; Albee, Edward, 31; All My Sons (Miller), 37; Anouilh, Jean, 51; Artaud, Antonin, 67; Beckett, Samuel, 131, 704–705; Bernhard, Thomas, 151; Betsuyaku Minoru, 155; Betti, Ugo, 156; The Birthday Party (Pinter), 161; Bjerneboe, Jens Ingvald, 161; Blitzstein, Marc, 168; Branner, Hans Christian, 185; Brecht, Bertolt, 193, 196–197; Brenton, Howard, 197; Bridie, James, 327; Delaney, Shelagh, 340; Inge, William, 682; Look Back in Anger (Osborne), 832–833; The Maids (Genet), 858; Miller, Arthur, 904–906; Mishima Yukio, 910;
 Montherlant, Henry de, 920; O'Neill, Eugene, 1005; Osborne, John, 340, 1016–1017; Rattigan, Terence, 337; Williams, Tennessee, 1473–1475
 World Without End (Hughes), 636
 The Worm of Conscience (Anzengruber), 82
 Worshipers of the Naira (Oyedepo), 24
 Worthen, John, 1463
 Wotan Unleashed: A Comedy (Toller), 1362
 Wouk, Herman, 1407
 The Wounded Hero (Stalev), 845 wounded theater, 1464
 Wouters, Liliane, 143
 WOW Café (New York), 457, 511, 636, 1043
 Woyzeck (Büchner), 1274
 Woyzeck (Dürrenmatt), 381
 Woyzeck on the Highveld (Kentridge), 102
 Woza Albert! (Ngema et al.), 101, 964, 1264
 The Wreck of the "Hope" (Heijermans), 927
 The Wrestling of the Kings (Kamban), 653
 The Wrestling School, 122
 Wright, Doug, 1491–1492; I Am My Own Wife, 645
 Wright, Garland, 390
 Wright, Richard, 786, 1406
 The Writ (Hayes), 597
 writers and writing, 783, 977, 1214, 1216, 1259
 Writers Guild Award (England), 125
 Writer's Guild of Canada Award, 463
 Writers Union, 1165
 Writers' Workshop (London), 731
 Written and Sealed (Chocrón), 1419
 The Wrong Door (Ginzburg), 533

- The Wrong Ones (Ørnsbo), 1012
- The Wrong Side of the Tracks (Langer), 315, 797
- Wu Aojun, 256
- Wu Han: Hai Rui's Dismissal, 575
- Wukui Bridge (Hong), 624
- Wuolijoki, Hella. See Tervapää, Juhani
- Wu Zuguang, 252, 1492
- Wyndham, Charles, 404
- Wyndham's Theatre (London), 327, 334, 879, 1234
- Wyspiański, Stanisław, 1492–1494; The Wedding, 1079, 1447
- X (Davis), 729
- X, Marvin, 164
- Xarxa Teatre (Spain), 232
- xenophobia, 783, 970, 1151, 1317
- Xenopoulos, Grigorios, 555, 1495
- Xhosa people, 1264
- Xianglin's Wife. See Sister Xianglin (Lu and Nan)
- Xia Yan, 252, 1495–1496
- Xie Yaohuan (Tian), 254, 1357
- Xiliancheng Theatrical Company, 889
- Xing Yixun: Power Versus Law, 255, 1096
- Xiong Foxi, 252, 1496–1497
- Xiong Shiyi, 257
- xiqu drama, 251–252, 839, 1441, 1497
- xiqu xiandaixi, 1500
- Xi Shi (Yao), 257
- Xi Shi Returns to the Kingdom of Yue (Luo), 839
- Xi Zhigan, 256; Xu Jiujiang's Promotion (with Guo), 1498
- Xmas in Las Vegas (Richardson), 281, 1138
- Xuan Trinh, 1423
- Xu Fen, 1497–1498; Sister Tian and Zhuang Zi, 256
- Xu Jin: Dream of the Red Chamber, 371; The Story of Butterfly Lovers, 1286–1287
- Xu Jiujiang's Promotion (Guo and Xi), 256, 1498
- Xu Pinli, 255
- Xu Xiaozhong, 262
- X.Y.Z. (Kerr), 764
- Y2K (Kopit), 776
- Yakov Bogomolov (Gorky), 545
- Yale Repertory Theatre (New Haven, CN): dramaturgy, 371; Durang, Christopher, 378; Egloff, Elizabeth, 390; Innaurato, Albert, 378; Kopit, Arthur, 776; Norén, Lars, 967; Overmyer, Eric, 1025; Parks, Suzan-Lori, 41; Tally, Ted, 1327; Wilson, August, 447, 865, 1059, 1480
- Yale School of Drama, 115, 978, 1393, 1501
- Yamamoto Kiyokazu, 48, 99
- Yamamoto Yūzō, 1239, 1241, 1499
- Yamato Takeru (Ichikawa), 1241
- Yamauchi, Wakako, 446
- Yamazaki Masakazu, 1499–1500
- Yamazaki Tetsu, 1180
- Yama Zhao (Hong), 624
- Yamin, Mohammad, 678
- Yamina (Manaka), 1265
- Yang, William, 80
- Yang Jian, 255, 262
- Yang Lanchun, 254, 1500–1501
- Yang Limin, 255
- Yang Shaozuan: Forced Up Mount Liang, 465
- Yangtze Repertory Theatre of America, 238
- Yang Ziyuan, 251
- Yankee (Berman), 150
- Yankl Boyle (Kobrin), 1507
- Yankl the Blacksmith (Pinski), 1508
- Yankowitz, Susan, 990, 1409, 1501–1502
- Yanyan (Xu), 1497
- Yao Ke, 257
- Yao Yi-Wei, 1502–1503; One Suitcase, 258
- A Yard of Sun (Fry), 793
- Yassin, Mustapha Kamil, 861
- Yasuda, Kenneth, 970
- Yasue, Yamamoto, 1390
- Yavorov, Peio, 206
- Yawar, 1045
- Yayati (Karnad), 753
- Y Cwmni. See Fiction Factory (Wales)
- Year 9 Are Animals (Tulloch), 73
- The Year's Miracle (Gallego), 1418
- Years of Wandering (Arbuzov), 57
- Yeats, William Butler, 1503–1504; At the Hawk's Well, 70, 970; On Baile's Strand, 1370; Purgatory, 1108; Shadowy Waters, 916; The King's Threshold, 687; Abbey Theatre, 916, 1079; censorship, 1226; Chicago Little Theater, 1001; closet drama, 703; Ervine, St. John, 427; Freudian theory, 1105; Gregory, Lady, 233, 558–559, 1078; interculturalism, 686; Irish Literary Theatre, 404, 700; literary revival, 1049; national theater, 700; O'Casey, Sean, 983, 985, 1244; Robinson, Lennox, 1145; Shaw, George Bernard, 1223, 1227–1228; symbolism, 1318; Synge, John Millington, 1320; theatricality, 1342
- Yefremov, Oleg, 928
- Yegor Bulychyov and the Others (Gorky), 545, 1162
- Yehoshua, A. B., 95–96
- Yehuda, 487
- Yekaterina Ivanovna (Andreev), 1162
- Yelizaveta Bam (Kharms), 765, 1165
- The Yell (Fontana), 719
- YELL (Wijaya), 679, 1464
- Yellow Jack (Howard), 632
- The Yellow Jacket (Hazleton and Benrimo), 892
- The Yellow Jacket (traditional), 254
- The Yellow Room (Mafune), 855
- Yellow Sound (Kandinsky), 108
- Yen, Anna, 80
- Yeo, Robert, 1247
- Yerma (García Lorca), 507, 1270, 1504–1505
- Yerofeyev, Venedikt, 1168
- Yerushalmi, Rina, 96–97
- Yes, Perhaps (Duras), 379
- Yesenin, Sergei, 1164
- The Yeshiva Boy (Zolotarevsky), 1507
- Yesterday (Hofmannsthal), 618
- Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow (Tolentino), 1052
- Yesterday, When You Told Me That You Loved Me (Arroyo), 294
- Yeugraf, Seeker of Adventures (Faiko), 1164
- Yew, Chay, 511, 1248
- Ye Yiqing, 256
- Yiddish entries. See also Israel
- Yiddish Art Theatre (New York), 1507, 1508
- Yiddish Chamber Theater, 928
- Yiddish theater, 1505–1509; Babel, Isaac, 281; The Dybbuk (Rappoport), 383; God of Vengeance (Asch), 509; Goldfaden, Avrom, 539–540; Gordin, Jacob, 543–544; Hirshbein, Peretz, 614; Moscow State Yiddish Theatre, 928–929; Purimshpil, 1109;

- Yiddish theater (continued)
 Romania, 1149; Tartuffe (Molière), 709; troupes and companies, 615; Yiddish language, 1505
- Yin Qinguyan, 257
- Yirenkyi, Asiedu, 23
- Yirra Yaakin (Perth, Australia), 79
- YMCA theater (Palestine), 1031
- Yo Banfa (Hoar), 962
- Yoda Gakkai, 1241
- Yōjirō Takita, 970
- Yokomichi Mario, 970
- Yolk Life (Björnsson), 654
- Yomiuri Literary Award, 497, 499, 722, 860
- Yonadab (Shaffer), 416
- Yordanov, Nedialko, 206
- Yorkshire Television's Fellow in Drama and Television, 1027
- York Theatre (New York), 1302
- Yoruba. See Nigeria
- Yoshe Kalb (Singer and Schwartz), 1508
- Yoshida Hideko, 48
- Yoshke the Musician (Dimov), 1508
- YoU (Mukhina), 1170
- You, Me, He, Him (Lai), 796
- You and I (Barry), 124
- You and Me and the Next War (Levin), 95
- You are Here (MacIvor), 847
- You Are Jan (Daněk), 317
- You Aren't Black (Nesin), 1387
- You Can't Go Home (Kureishi), 786
- You Can't Just Live As You Like (Ostrovsky), 1019
- You Can't Take It With You (Kaufman and Hart), 279, 757, 1402, 1509
- You Did Not Have Names (Lundán), 454
- You Never Can Tell (Shaw), 403, 1225
- Young, David, 1510
- Young, Rida Johnson, 1399
- Young, Stark, 254, 553
- Young Boy Hunting: Groping in the Pitch Dark (Noda), 971
- Young Cassidy (Whiting), 985
- The Young Eagle (Rostand), 1151
- Young Elizabethan Players (Australia), 73
- The Younger Generation (Houghton), 628
- The Young Idea (Coward), 406
- The Young Man (Johst), 740
- The Young Man from Atlanta (Foote), 464
- A Young Man's Grown-Up Daughter (Slavkin), 1168
- The Young Medardu (Schnitzler), 1197
- Young Mrs. Winthrop (Howard), 630, 1397
- young people, theater for, 73–74, 674, 1151, 1167. See also children's theater
- The Young Stage (theater troupe), 201
- Young Sweden, 1293
- Young Varde'le (Levin), 95
- Young Woodley (Van Druten), 1417
- Your Arms Are Too Short to Box with God, 1130
- You're Gonna Be Alright, Jamie-Boy (Freeman), 489
- You Remember Jörundur (Árnason), 655
- Your Murderer (Aksyonov), 1167
- Yours for the Asking (Diosdado), 1271
- Your Sister and Captive (Razumovskaya), 1169
- Your Turn to Clean the Stairs (Munro), 940
- Your Venezuela (Britto García), 1419
- Youth (Halbe), 517
- Youth (Zorin), 1167
- Youth Art Theatre (China), 136
- Youth Art Theatre (Japan), 48
- You—The City (Templeton), 423
- You've No Need to Be Frightened (Churchill), 263
- You Will Forget Me (Breton and Soupault), 1308
- Yu, Ovidia, 1248
- Yueju Opera, 1286
- Yue Opera, 1250
- Yugoslav Drama Theatre (Belgrade), 1256
- Yugoslavia. See Eastern Europe
- yuju, 1500
- Yukio Ninagawaa, 1343
- Yuma (Rengifo), 1418
- Yung, Danny N. T., 258, 1510–1511
- Yung Teater (Warsaw), 929, 1507
- Yushkevich, Semyon, 1162
- Yuvachyov, D. I.. See Kharms, Daniil Ivanovich
- Yuya (Mishima), 910
- Yuyachkani, 1045
- Yuzovsky, Iosif, 1171
- Zacconi, Ermete, 713, 715
- Zadek, Peter, 1049
- Zahradník, Osvald, 1254
- Zaire. See Congo
- Zaitsev, Boris, 1163
- zaju drama, 1497
- Zālīte, Elīna, 801
- Zālīte, Māra, 802
- Zaloom, Paul, 1087, 1413
- Zambia, 20
- Zambuko-Izibuko (Zimbabwe collective), 22
- Zamyatin, Yevgeny, 101, 135, 1164
- Zangesi (Khlebnikov), 1164
- zangiri mono. See cropped-hair plays (zangiri mono)
- Zaourou, Bernard Zadi, 25
- Zapolska, Gabriela, 1513; The Morality of Mrs. Dulska, 1079
- Zarathustra (Sorge), 1261
- zarzuela, 1513–1514; carpa, 227; Costa Rica, 293; Cuba, 309; Mexico, 895; sainete, 1178; Unión General de Trabajadores, 1339
- zarzuela libretti, 39
- Zastrozzi: The Master of Discipline (Walker), 1437, 1514–1515
- zat pwe (Burma), 208
- Zawal-e-Hydrabad (Moinuddin), 1028
- Zawieyski, Jerzy, 1081
- Zaza (Akins), 30
- Z Cars (McGrath), 883
- Zeal Theatre (Australia), 73
- Zeami (Yamazaki), 1500
- Zedong, Mao, 393
- Zegadlowicz, Emil, 1256
- Zeigler, Joseph, 1408
- Zeng Zhaowen, 1347
- Zen theater, 506–507
- Zero Inn (Mason), 875
- Žeromski, Stefan: Rose, 1080
- Zhang Mingyuan, 255
- Zhang Xian, 255
- Zhemchuzhnikov brothers, 1173
- Zheng Huaixing, 1515–1516; Tears at New Pavilion, 256
- Zhong Zufen, 251
- Zhuang, 1347
- Zhu Xiaoping, 255, 262
- Ziembinski, Zbigniew, 188
- Zimbabwe, 21
- Zimbabwe Association of Community Theatres, 22
- Zimdahl, Catherine, 78
- Zimmermann, Josef Ignaz, 1315
- Zindel, Paul, 1409, 1516
- Zindika: Leonora's Dance, 417
- Zingeris, Markas, 824
- Zinsou, Senouvo, 25
- Zionism, 709–712, 806, 1030
- Z is for Zygoté (Kon), 775
- Zīverts, Mārtiņš, 801
- Znanie (publisher), 45
- Zograf, Vlad, 1150
- Zola, Émile, 1517; The Dreyfus Affair, 475; The Drinking Hole, 475; Thérèse Raquin, 475, 1344; on acting, 8; bourgeois themes, 516; dramatic dialogue, 363; Dumas fils, 659; influence on Antoine, 474–475; influence on Hauptmann,

- 592; naturalism, 366, 377,
950, 1055; realism, 363;
symbolism, 1318
- Zolotarevsky, Isidore, 1507
- Zone (Dubé), 220
- Zone Zero (Arrufat), 309
- Zong Fuxian, 255, 662–663
- The Zoo Story* (Albee), 31, 990,
1356, 1408, 1517–1518
- Zoot Suit (Valdez), 686, 1415
- Zoot Suits (El Teatro Campesino), 1086
- Zora Neale Hurston–Paul
Robeson Award, 966
- Zorba (Stein), 813
- Zorin, Leonid, 1166, 1167
- Zoshchenko, Mikhail,
1165
- Zoya's Apartment (Bulgakov),
205, 1164
- Zucco, Roberto, 487
- Zuckmayer, Carl, 520, 626,
959, 1431, 1518–1519;
The Devil's General, 521;
The Merry Vineyard,
518–519
- Zulu folktales, 1262
- Zuni Icosahedron (Taipei),
91, 1510
- Zunser, Eliakum, 1506
- Zuzana Vojtřvů (Bor), 316
- Zvon, Peter, 1254
- Zweig, Arnold, 1394
- Zwingli, Huldrych, 1315
- The Zykous* (Gorky), 545, 1162

809.2 C671c v.2

The Columbia encyclopedia of modern drama

DATE DUE

Cressman Library
Cedar Crest College
Allentown, PA 18104

CEDAR CREST COLLEGE LIBRARY

3 1543 50169 1119